The forward movement of Sherman's army in May called the Kentucky Brigade into action. It was stationed to the right of Buzzard Roost Gap, and, while the Fourth Corps occupied the opposite slope, the brigade moved about from point to point, skirmishing and sharpshooting, until the night of the 12th of May, when it marched to Resaca and took part in the battle on the 15th. The brigade suffered a loss of forty in killed and wounded during this battle, having borne the brunt of the attack upon Bates' division. At New Hope Church, on the 27th, Gen. Lewis, in command of two regiments of his brigade, supported by two Tennessee regiments, charged a heavy line of Union skirmishers on the right of the Atlanta road and defeated them with slight loss. On the following day the Kentuckians made a desperate charge, in which many of the most gallant officers and soldiers in the command were killed, while a large number of wounded were taken prisoners.

On the 20th of June, in front of Kenesaw, an attack was made upon the line occupied by Gens. Lewis and Gist, which resulted in driving them back, when both commanders made a counter charge to recapture the works, but failed to carry them. The brigade participated in the fight at Peachtree Creek, but met its severest loss on the 22d of July, when 135 of its best and bravest men were killed and wounded. The brigade was constantly on duty in the various battles and skirmishes between the contending forces until the last of August, when Sherman's movement around Atlanta caused Bates' division to be ordered to East Point. The Kentucky Brigade was detached and sent to Jonesboro, where it participated in the attack and bloody repulse of Hood's army, on the 30th of August. In this action the loss in the brigade was severe in killed, wounded and missing. On the 1st of September, the brigade suffered a loss of 200 in prisoners, and on the next day formed a part of the line drawn up by Gen. Hood at Lovejoy's Station, which Sherman declined to attack.

The campaign had been very severe upon the Army of the Tennessee, and probably few brigades suffered heavier losses in killed, wounded and missing than the Kentucky Brigade. The 5,000 with which the regiments of the brigade entered the service, had dwindled to 120 officers and 1,120 enlisted men in May, 1864. The Atlanta campaign closed with but 278 men in the ranks.

In conformity with an often expressed wish by the men of the brigade, an order was issued at department headquarters authorizing Gen. Lewis to mount his brigade, and, in accordance with this order, the command marched to Barnesville, where 200 horses were obtained. The brigade began at once to increase in numbers; 200 captured at Jonesboro were exchanged and joined the brigade; wounded men came hobbling into camp and by the 19th the aggregate swelled to about 900, 200 of whom, however, were never mounted. The next two months were spent in constant scouting, and on the advance of Sherman's army in November, the brigade joined Gen. Wheeler in harassing the army of Gen. Sherman, as, under the lead of the great commander, it marched down to the sea.

At Savannah the brigade was dismounted by order of Gen. Hardee and placed in the works, where spurs and sabers were thrown aside, and, with their trusty Enfields, the men resumed their infantry tactics. On the evacuation of the city the brigade was again mounted, and performed arduous service in South Carolina until the surrender of the two main armies of Lee and Johnston.

Edward Porter Thompson, from whose interesting "History of the First Kentucky Brigade," much of the foregoing sketch has been compiled, says: "After it was definitely ascertained that the armies under Lee and Johnston had surrendered, Gen. Lewis proceeded to Washington, Ga., where he was met by Gen. Wilson's provost-marshal, prepared to receive surrender of such troops as should report at that point. The arms were laid by on the afternoon of Saturday, May 6, 1865. Paroles were received, the survivors of many trials and many conflicts separated, and the First Kentucky Brigade as an organization was no more."

CHAPTER XIX.

PEACE PROBLEMS, RECONSTRUCTION, ETC., ETC.

THE surrender at Appomattox was the beginning of the end, and the surrender of Gen. Johnston, which followed shortly after, virtually closed the war. The dawn of peace found Kentucky in a less deplorable condition than most of the Southern States. Affairs here, however, were bad enough. The State was overrun with guerrillas, whose depredations were confined to no particular class of victims, but who preyed upon all coming in their way with the same relentless cruelty. These robber bands were independent of any military organization, and acknowledged allegiance to neither Federal nor Confederate government. Many of them had never seen regular military service, but had banded together for the purposes of pillage and the gratification of revenge upon actual or imagined enemies. Toward the close of 1864, there was scarcely a county in Kentucky wholly free from their predatory incursions, and to such an extent did they carry their outrages, as to evoke summary action on the part of the State government, and arouse in the army a bitter spirit of revenge. Known guerrillas captured by regular soldiers, in a majority of cases, met with a short shrift. If honest soldiers were sometimes mistaken for these outlaws, and caused to suffer as such, it was one of the misfortunes of war, and directly attributable to guerrilla indignities. The condition of the State at that time may be compared with that which came with the "Thirty years' war in Germany," and the latter stages of the war between king and parliament in England. The ravages of these outlaw bands continued until the establishment of peace. But with the final suppression of guerrilla warfare, the general state of society still was anything but tranquil. Says a writer of that period:

By the 1st of July, 1865, the State was so secured in its position that with perfect safety the Federal troops could have been withdrawn, and the civil government left to go its appointed way. This was, unhappily, not to be. The armies came home, and went again to their fields and firesides, or, where these were no more, began again to create for themselves places in the world. There were no better and more peaceful citizens than the veterans of the two armies, and no relations were ever more friendly than those between the men who learned to respect each other's manliness in a war that tried them well. Yet it suited the purposes of a political body that had fattened on the system of passes and permits, and the other profitable complications of the civil war, to maintain in time of peace a system that had its only justification in the hard conditions of war, if it can find any justification at all.

If Lincoln had survived, we may well believe that his admirable good sense, which enabled him to help his native State wherever he could see her trouble, would have removed these barriers to the tide of peace and good will that came like a flood upon the people. His death and his replacement by a cheap and small-minded man brought on the last and most painful stage of the struggle, that in which a disarmed and war-worn people were driven to fight for the elementary rights of good government against the tyrannous exactions of a political junta which was insensible to the nobility of the victory.

Fortunately for Kentucky it was not possible for the party in power to sink the State to the depths of degradation into which all the rebellious States were at once plunged. There was no valid pretense at hand for overthrowing the machinery of the State government, though there was every evidence of a desire to do so. Her sufferings were trifling compared with those of the States in that hell on earth, the reconstructed South; still, as we shall see, even Kentucky had a time of purgatorial existence, which delayed the period of quiet, and left a mass of painful memories that will hardly ever be forgotten.

The August election of 1865 showed something of the existing state of affairs. The election was for congressmen, members of the legislature and State treasurer. To the latter office James H. Garrard was elected over his opponent, William L. Neale, by a small majority. Garrard represented the Conservative party, and Neale the Radical party. Five Conservative and four Radical members of congress were elected; twenty Conservatives and eighteen Radicals were elected to the State senate, and sixty Conservatives and forty Radicals to the house of representatives. There was "very serious interference in many counties with the election by the military. In some cases soldiers prevented voters from going near the polls, and in others arrested and took them off to prison. In Lexington 'citizens stood in front of the polls, and indicated to the soldiers those who were not entitled to vote, and all thus pointed out were not allowed to present themselves to the judges,' so telegraphed the sheriff, W. W. Dowden, to Gov. Bramlette. Negro soldiers were sent as guardians of the polls in several precincts in Mercer County. * * * In Campbell County the board of contested elections decided that on August 7th 'there was such an interference at the different voting places, by armed soldiers, who so governed and controlled the elections as to render it invalid, null and void,' they judged Thomas Jones, the incumbent, not lawfully elected clerk of the circuit court, and declared the office vacant. * * * * The grand jury of Powell County indicted Henry C. Lilly, senator-elect, and John N. B. Hardwick, county judge, for obstructing the freedom of elections."*

The vote for State treasurer stood: for Mr. Garrard, the Conservative candidate, 42,187 to 42,082 for the Radical candidate, a vote, the smallness of which shows that the ex-Confederate element did not vote. Interference with elections were not the only indignities the people of the State suffered. Nearly every form of civil life was more or less disturbed. An example is found in the case of Rev. Lorenzo D. Huston, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church (South) in Newport. He was imprisoned because he had opposed the proposition of the Kentucky conference withdrawing from the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in order to join the Methodist Episcopal Church of the United States. He was detained in confinement until October, 1865, without trial, and was finally liberated by order of Gen. Grant, "requiring his immediate and unconditional release." The war was over and peace established, but martial law still prevailed in Kentucky. "Every petty officer commanding a post," says a writer, "had summary jurisdiction over the persons of the people, which he could exercise to gratify private malice or to increase his sense of personal importance." The long continuation of martial law in Kentucky is thus explained in the political history of that stormy time:

> The Republican party secured substantial control of the other border States, while Kentucky, though she had been the only one of the slave-holding States that had shown a very decided loyalty to the Federal cause, had eluded all efforts of the Republican leaders to cajole or coerce her into its fold. They chose to assume that Kentucky was at this time disloyal, hostility to their party and disloyalty being then, to their minds, synonymous terms. At this time he Republican party was principally in the control of men who had no knowledge of the war, no sympathy with its sufferings or its nobler emotions. They had received great political, and often great pecuniary, profit from its events. Unhesitatingly they stigmatized as disloyal the commonwealth which had given as large a share of its life and treasure to maintain the Union as any other State, which had borne patiently and unflinchingly the most grevious burdens of the struggle, and had in fact clung more closely to the traditions of the Union than any other part of the country.

All this is quite true. While Kentucky was not desolated like some of the more extreme southern States, yet lying as it did, on the dividing line between North and South, it was exposed to the fire of both sides, and suffered from the indignities of both armies. Not the least of its troubles and perils were in the numerous raids made through every part of the State, as already noticed, by the squads of guerrillas who claimed to belong either to the Federal or Confederate cause, but, who, in reality, were only robbers and freebooters, subject to no military laws or control. Both governments disowned these lawless gangs, but that did not put a stop to their outrages, which were perpetrated almost daily during the last year or two of the war.

The Freedman's Bureau, one of the most offensive engines of reconstruction to the white people of Kentucky, and of the whole south, and, as it eventually proved, a curse to the colored people, developed new evils, and that too, of a most exasperating type. There never was any necessity for the Freedman's Bureau in Kentucky, however much its operation, may have been needed in those States that had been in rebellion. Its organization here was but another of the indignities heaped upon a loyal State that "had given as large a share of its life and treasure to maintain the Union as any other State." Its first indignity was committed under a recent act of congress, which provided that the wives and children of negro soldiers should be free. As this was prior to the adoption of the constitutional amendments upon the subject of slavery, or the freedom of the slaves, its gross injustice is seen at a glance—the injustice of depriving people of their property without due process of law. The families of Kentucky colored soldiers comprised thousands of women and childen, and the Freedman's Bureau undertook to compel their owners to pay them wages for all the time that had elapsed since the enlistment of their fathers and husbands. Of course this brought confusion, and produced serious difficulties; it caused numerous suits to be filed against slave owners, and entailed upon them endless annoyances. The Hon. Garrett Davis, United States senator from Kentucky, and one of the most unconditional and unswerving Union men of the State during the war, was the first victim of this species of prosecution. A suit was brought against him for wages of former slaves, and many other suits of a similar character were instituted against other citizens of the commonwealth. These suits, however, amounted to nothing, except to still further exasperate the people, and indeed, this seems to have been the original intention of them. The following upon negro testimony in the courts is to the point:

> The last important problem left by the war was the question of negro testimony in the courts. The old slavery laws of Kentucky limited the testimony of the negro in many ways; white men could not be convicted of grave crime by their evidence. These laws should have been at once repealed, and it is to the discredit of the State that they remained upon the statute books until 1872. There is, however, some excuse for this delay. The Freedman's Bureau had constituted itself the keepers of the whole negro population, and had in an unfortunate way removed them from the control of the ordinary civil law of the State. To the appeal for the abrogation of the statute the people answered: "Do away with this interference with the negroes, and we will give them equal position before the law." When, in 1872, the end of this system of supervision of the negro population by the Freedman's Bureau was abandoned, the resistance to the complete assimilation of the negro with the white race in all matters of the law came about. The negro has been found to be a very trustworthy witness, and none regret his full admission to the courts.

The negro, it is an indisputable fact, was the great question involved in the civil war. His emancipation from slavery entailed a heavy pecuniary loss to the people of the State, and yet, when his freedom was brought about, society felt the relief of a patient, whose life is saved at the expense of a limb. Slavery had become somewhat unprofitable, and was yearly growing more so, to an extent more marked in Kentucky than in the far South. The institution was hedged about by humanizing conditions and laws of Kentucky that were unknown in the cotton and sugar-growing States; black labor, considering the total capital involved and the small returns received, was growing unprofitable in a rapid ratio, while the vast irreducible expense of the institution, the growing impoverished condition of the land, and its utter lack of adaptability to other pursuits, rendered ruin near and inevitable. And so, while the opposition to emancipation was unanimous and determined, when once it was effected the relief was immediately apparent and rejoiced in. The agricultural system has been greatly improved under the new order of things, farm labor is more profitable, the dominant class is more enterprising and vigorous, and the old slave caste is now broken down and the last vestiges of it fast disappearing. The conditions effected by this radical change have been met with a creditable spirit by both races. Freedom found the negroes destitute of everything but the meager clothing in their possession. A number anticipated the final abolition of slavery in the border States by going into the army, but those who remained found themselves wholly improvided and without resources. In this condition the greatest misery might have followed had the masters cherished a vindictive spirit. A few of the liberated slaves tried their new found wings only to fail utterly in their first flight, and begged to be taken back on the old place. It is undoubtedly true that the physical condition of the freedmen for the first year or two was worse than during the period of slavery (and with many it is still worse), but the masters, partly through sympathy and partly because they needed them, allowed their former slaves to remain. There was no necessity for so great a number, however, and many found it to their interest to emigrate to Kansas and elsewhere. Those who remained found ready employment and considerate treatment generally. Many are doing well, making a good living and educating their children, many are doing but little better than under the old regime, and some are doing worse.

The freeing of a large number of ignorant negroes, whose whole training taught them to lie, pilfer, to live improvidently and unchaste, has imposed upon society a heavy burden of responsibility. Twenty years have passed since the war which set them free, but society has not yet adjusted itself completely to the new order of things. Neither race adequately appreciate the full extent of the change that has been wrought, and the responsibilities which it imposes upon each. The negroes, trained to an utter disregard of personal character in themselves, have not yet learned that this must now be cultivated. The whites fail in the same respect. Negroes convicted of felony lose caste with neither race, and find employment at the hands of the whites as readily as the honest black. Women notoriously unchaste are employed by the whites as cooks or servants, and lose no standing in colored society. This fatal lack of self-respect is encouraged by the heedless action of the whites, and so long as it exists is a menace against society, and a successful hindrance to the elevation of the race. Education to such a people is a dangerous power, and religion a sham, and yet, nothing but education, liberal, practical education, will ever raise the colored people to the standard of respectable citizenship. It is the duty of every good citizen to heartily co-operate with well-directed effort to this end, and with better methods, backed by such co-operation, much may be done for the betterment of this helpless ward of the nation.

The indignities perpetrated upon the people by the Freedman's Bureau, as might naturally have been expected, produced results inimical to good order. It bred a spirit of lawlessness that culminated in 1866 in the disburbances of the Ku Klux Klan. This secret tribunal, whose name became as terrible almost as that of the Spanish Inquisition or the Holy Vehme of Germany in the middle ages, was common to the whole South, but its acts were fewer and less serious in Kentucky. The motives for its organization and the results of its existence, have been discussed by a prominent author,* as follows:

> The sudden closing of the war left a considerable amount of social rubbish within the State, both white and black. The negroes, as a rule, behaved exceedingly well in their unaccustomed condition, accepting their new lot of citizenship in an excellent spirit; but a portion of them, especially those who had been employed in the army as teamsters and as camp servants, proved very troublesome. Nearly the whole of this part of the negro people had gathered into small separate settlements away from their original homes, and were under the influence of a bad class of white leaders. This demoralized condition of the lower classes of blacks led to a large amount of stealing; no farmer could keep his sheep or pigs from their furtive hands; usually the thieving was not accompanied by violence, but in some cases the trouble was more serious. In many counties the negroes organized themselves into marauding bands; there were a number of outrages upon women, an offense that had always been particularly abhorrent to the people of Kentucky, and which they have always visited with condign punishment when the perpetrators could be found. In its beginning, at least in Kentucky, the Ku Klux Klan was probably designed to restrain and punish these transgressions. It doubtless did in the outset certain rude acts of justice. Its cheap mystic accompaniments were certainly well designed to strike terror to the superstitious blacks. When it had accomplished the little good that was possible to a system so fundamentally evil, it fell into the hands of the most wretched class of the population, the very element it was designed to overthrow, and became a great curse to society. For a time the organization defied the civil law; the secrecy of its action and the terrorism exercised on witnesses, made it impossible to apply adequate punishment through the courts.

Beginning in 1866, this evil system continued in intermittent action until 1873. Like most social evils in a vigorous State, this system finally brought about its own remedy. For years the country folk tolerated the outrages for the profit they brought to them; their pigs were safer even if the common people of the realm did suffer a bit. The old dislike of lawlessness, common to well organized societies, was lessened by the long time of strife. For several years the Ku Klux vented its outrages upon the essentially criminal class; the rough justice of many of their actions made the mass of the people pardon their worst crimes. Finally, there came a general sense that they were going too far, and that they should no longer be tolerated. When this feeling became general they were speedily crushed out. With the Ku Klux disappeared the last remnant of the greater ills that came in the train of the war. Regarding, then, the Ku Klux system and the Freedmen's Bureau as the closing evils of the war, we may accept 1873 as the last year of that great revolution which began in 1860, moved swiftly to the state of war, raged for four years with a fury of thought, words and actions unequaled in any struggle of the race, and then for eight years left its wreckage to trouble men weary with the nobler part of their great abor.

That part of the development of Kentucky, which can be in any proper sense termed historic, ended in 1873 with the sweeping away of the last cloud left by the war; all the rest of its life is still in the process of evolution. Before we turn to consider the present condition of the State, let us bring before our minds the outline of these years of rapid change through which this people had just passed. In 1860, when, after infinite debate, Kentucky slowly came to the remarkable resolution that she would bar her doors to the great storm that was about to move heaven and earth about her, the commonwealth was still a mediæval society in all its essential qualities; the institution of slavery had acted like a pickle to preserve unchanged much of the notions that belonged in other centuries of the race's life. Her very resolution to stand aloof in a war in which the nineteenth century fought against the seventeenth, shows that the people, despite an intense interest in politics, had not come to a point of view whence they could see where their social life stood in the world. They were as much out of the world of their day as if they had been shut in on every side by mountain heights; a clean-blooded, land-loving, fairly thrifty lot, they had, through their activities, not suffered any of the degradation that comes to other races from their connection with slaves.

Kentucky suffered less, as stated, than her sister States of the south, but the "shock to the commonwealth, arising from the conjoined loss of life and property, defies expression in words, nor do the ordinary accidents of society supply any analogy." Her loss of property was proportionately as great as the loss of life among her soldiers. In 1860 the slave property of Kentucky was estimated at over $100,000,000. This, in 1865, had disappeared, and other elements of wealth had greatly diminished. Describing the condition of the State at the close of the war, it was said that, "although the war as carried on in Kentucky had been, on the whole, a singularly decent struggle, the actual destruction of property was very large. Nearly all the live stock was swept away. A considerable part of the houses had been burned; fences were gone, and the forest, quick to recover its grasp on the rich soil, had changed vast districts of fertile fields into thickets that had to be re-won to the plow. * * * * * * When a city is burned its men remain; a commercial crisis destroys neither the men nor the productive power of a State; a pestilence leaves the real property untouched; but the destruction of a long continued civil war is a thing by itself combining all the evils which an ordinary society can suffer, and adds to those a new element of ruin in the overthrow of the precious trust in civil government."

After the close of the war political parties in Kentucky were reorganized on new lines. The extreme to which the "civil rights" had been carried, disgust at the emancipation of the slaves, the irritation resulting from the acts of the Freedmen's Bureau, and other proceedings "hostile to the governmental integrity of the State," all combined to make Kentucky an overwhelmingly Democratic State. Pertinent to the subject is the following:

Perhaps the most satisfactory feature in the close of the civil war was the really quick restoration of the civil order in the State and the perfect reunion of the divided people. The prompt and complete abrogation of the severe penalties laid upon the Confederate soldiers and sympathizers, greatly contributed to this speedy return to the conditions of peace. In this course the people of Kentucky set an excellent but unheeded example to the Federal government. By this action they avoided all risks of having a large part of their citizens parted in spirit from the life and work of the commonwealth. This reconciliation was helped by the fact that both Federals and Confederates had played a manly part in the struggle. Not only had the soldiers in both parties shown themselves to be brave and manly men in the field, but the Kentucky troops on both sides had done all in their power to make war decent and honorable, and to lighten its burdens on non-combatants. They could wear their laurels and live their lives together without shame. What was left of the 40,000 who went away into the southern service, came back to their place in the State sadder and wiser men, yet the better citizens for their dearly bought experience. We search in vain for any evidence of hatred or even dislike among these men who were lately in arms against each other. In all the walks of life, in the courts and in the legislature, as well as in the relations of kindred, we find these old enemies going together to their work of repairing the ruin that war had brought on the State—fighting at times their battles over again in good-natured talk, but each dearer to the other for the fearful parting of the war.

The session of the legislature of 1865–66 repealed the laws that disfranchised Confederate soldiers. An act had been passed, during the war, consigning to the penitentiary those Confederate soldiers who had invaded the State. This act was repealed by a vote of twenty-one to fifteen in the senate, and sixty-two to thirty-three in the house. By a similar vote the expatriation act was repealed, as were all other laws which had been passed to "disqualify or punish persons for sympathy with the rebellion." The returned Confederate soldiers comprised a large and valuable portion of the male population of the State, and their restoration to citizenship was an act of wisdom on the part of the legislature. "The dangers arising from the animosities of the war," says one versed in the politics of the time, "were at once done away with, and the breaches that were made in the society of the rebellious States by the continued disfranchisement of its citizens were avoided. It was an absolutely safe measure, considered even from the point of view of Federal politics. The experience of the Confederate soldiers in the years gone by had destroyed all desire of resistance to the Federal authority. It is doubtful if these men had been polled after their return to Kentucky whether they would have voted for a peaceable secession of the Confederate States. The problem of secession had been worked out to the end; the result was generally accepted by the soldiers of the Confederacy as final. To have maintained the isolation of these returned Confederates would have been an act of political madness, and in receiving them in friendliness, the State of Kentucky did an act that unfortunately was not imitated by the Federal government. When, in the centuries to come, the historian looks over the graves of all those who took part in the civil war, and sees their acts cleared of the cloud of prejudice that even now envelops them, we must believe that these acts of reconciliation will stand forth as the noblest features in the history of this commonwealth. He will see in them the best possible evidence of the civil strength, of the State making and State preserving power, of this people. He will certainly note the fact that the Union party in a border State, where passions were infuriated in the presence of immediate war, had a higher element of reason in their action than was found in the whole Federal Union, the greater and dominant part of which saw nothing of war except in the mind's eye."

At the August election in 1867 there were three tickets presented to the voters of the commonwealth, viz.: "Democratic," "Conservative Union," and "Union" or "Republican." John L. Helm, the Democratic candidate for governor, and John W. Stevenson, the Democratic candidate for lieutenant-governor, were elected, by an overwhelming majority, over William B. Kinkead and Harrison Taylor, Conservative Union, and Sidney M. Barnes and R. T. Baker, Union Republican. John Rodman, Democrat, was elected attorney-general over Gen. John M. Harlan (now of the Supreme Court of the United States) and Col. John Mason Brown; Col. D. Howard Smith, Democrat, was elected auditor, over Col. J. S. Hurtt and Silas Adams; James W. Tate, Democrat, was elected treasurer over Alford Allen and M. J. Roark; James A. Dawson, Democrat, was elected register of the land office over Col. J. J. Craddock and J. M. Fidler; Z. F. Smith, Democrat, was elected superintendent of public instruction over Benjamin M. Harney and Rev. Daniel Stevenson. The legislature bore the following complexion: Senate, twenty-eight Democrats, three Union Democrats, and seven Union Republicans; house of representatives, eighty-five Democrats, five Union Democrats, and ten Union Republicans. This shows pretty conclusively how strongly Democratic the State had become under the policy of reconstruction. Gov. Helm was lying very ill at his home in Elizabethtown when the election came off. He never recovered, but died on the 8th of September following. He had been inaugurated governor on the 3d, at Elizabethtown, being too ill to go to Frankfort. Lieut.-Gov. Stevenson was inaugurated governor, as the successor of Mr. Helm, on the 13th of September. In August, 1868, Mr. Stevenson was duly elected governor, a special election having been called, over R. T. Baker, receiving 115,560 votes, to 26,605 for Baker, Republican.

In the presidential election this year Horatio Seymour carried Kentucky by a vote of 115,889 to 39,566 for Gen. U. S. Grant, the Republican candidate. Gen. Grant was elected president by a majority of 134 electoral votes. Nine Democratic congressmen were elected in Kentucky. The Eighth Congressional District gave Gen. Grant 1,259 popular majority, but notwithstanding elected a democratic congressmen. Four years later (1872), the presidential candidates were Horace Greeley and Gen. Grant, with a fifth wheel to the political wagon, entitled Charles O'Conor. The vote of Kentucky was as follows: Horace Greeley, nominee of the Democratic party, 100,212; Gen. Grant, Republican, 88,816; Charles O'Conor, Bourbon Democrat, 2,374; Greeley over Grant, 11,396 majority. A full Democratic delegation was elected to congress. Two years previously (in 1870), Kentucky elected a Democratic delegation to congress. With the exception of one or two districts, Kentucky has ever since elected Democrats to congress; also to State offices.

In the State election of 1871, Preston H. Leslie, the Democratic candidate, was elected governor over Gen. John M. Harlan, by a vote of 126,455 to 89,299. By similar majorities the Democrats elected John Rodman, attorney-general; D. Howard Smith, auditor; James W. Tate, treasurer; J. A. Grant, register of the land office; Rev. H. A. M. Henderson, superintendent of public instruction. To the State senate thirty-five Democrats and three Republicans were elected, and eighty-two Democrats and eighteen Republicans to the house of representatives. In 1875 James B. McCreery was elected governor by the Democrats; in 1879, Dr. Luke P. Blackburn was elected governor, and in 1883, J. Proctor Knott, the present executive, was elected by the usual Democratic majority.

The presidential election of 1876 will long be remembered in Kentucky, as well as in national history. The cry of fraud attaching to it, and the excitement aroused, will not be forgotten for generations to come. From a Democratic standpoint, the popular vote stood: Samuel J. Tilden, 4,300,590; Rutherford B. Hayes, 4,036,298, a popular Democratic majority of 264,292. The elections of South Carolina, Louisiana and Florida were contested, and in the final settlement of the contest the result arrived at presented some novel facts, the most important of which were majorities for the Republican national ticket, and for the Democratic State ticket. Years hence it may be a matter of interest to know how this (notorious) election was finally settled. As both parties claimed South Carolina, Louisiana and Florida, congress passed an act providing for an electoral commission to pass upon all matters in dispute, the decision to be final. This commission was composed of five senators, five representatives and five justices of the supreme court. The senate selected George F. Edmunds, Oliver P. Morton, Frederick T. Frelinghuysen (Republicans), Allen G. Thurman and Thomas F. Bayard (Democrats). The house of representatives chose Eppa Hunton, Henry B. Payne, Josiah E. Abbott (Democrats), James A. Garfield and George F. Hoar (Republicans). Four justices of the supreme court designated by the act, were Nathan Clifford and Stephen J. Field (Democrats), and William Strong and Samuel F. Miller (Republicans). They chose as the fifth justice Joseph P. Bradley, a Republican. The natural choice would have been David Davis, but he had been elected a senator from Illinois only five days before. The commission divided in voting on the main issues on a party line, the eight Republicans overruling the seven Democrats, and the result was the admission of the Republican electoral votes from the States in contest and the seating of the Republican candidates.*

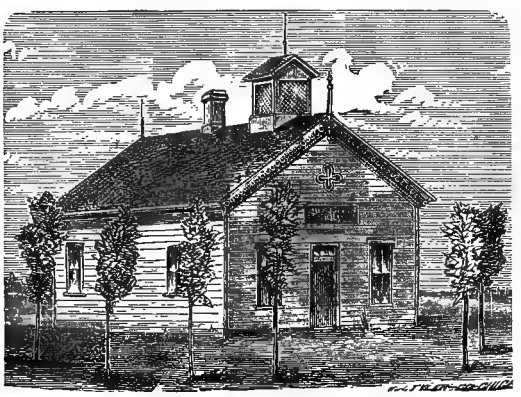
As finally counted, the electoral vote was as follows: Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Texas, Arkansas, Missouri, Tennessee, Kentucky, Indiana—184 votes for Tilden and Hendricks. Main, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Florida, Louisiana, Ohio, Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, Nevada, California, Oregon—185 votes for Hayes and Wheeler, a majority of one electoral vote. Had the three States, South Carolina, Florida and Louisiana, claimed for Tilden, been given him, he would have had a majority of thirty-nine votes in the electoral college.

The presidential campaign of 1880 placed four tickets before the voters of the country, viz.: James A. Garfield and Chester A. Arthur, Republicans; Gen. Winfield S. Hancock and William E. English, Democrats; James B. Weaver, Greenbacker; and Gen. Neal Dow, Prohibitionist. The vote in the electoral college was 214 for Garfield and Arthur, and 155 for Hancock and English. In 1884 the Democratic party triumphed, and elected Grover Cleveland and Thomas A. Hendricks, president and vice-president, over James G. Blaine and John A. Logan, Republicans.



The progress of public education in Kentucky since the close of the war far exceeds that of any other period in the history of the State. But its system of public schools, as compared with those of the northern and western States, is still lamentably deficient. One reason for this has been the unfortunate pride of caste which prevailed among the southern people—to a greater extent prior to the war than now—and which led to the organization and support of hundreds of seminaries, academies, and other high grade schools. These educational institutions were established mainly by private enterprise, and for pecuniary advantages to the projectors. They have greatly retarded the growth of the public schools and the cause of public education, and the majority of them, though rejoicing in the high-sounding name of "colleges," are as incapable of giving the pupil a collegiate education as the ordinary graded school of a country village—more so than the graded public school of a northern or western village of 1,000 inhabitants. Since the war, however, the people are growing out of this foolish idea of caste, and it is to their credit that it is so. The late superintendent of public instruction, Rev. Mr. Henderson, very pertinently said:

> Ten years ago, a man in the blue grass country, worth $10,000, would as soon have thought of sending his children to the poor-house as to the public school. The public school was generally regarded as a charity, devised for the education of paupers, but not to be countenanced by the rich, save as a benefaction to the poor. The schools were common in the sense of low, vulgar and inferior. The very accent with which the adjective was pronounced, indicated the contempt in which men of means regarded it. But our citizens have now learned to regard it as common, in the sense of a community of interest, as the laws are common, the common land; as the State is common, the commonwealth, etc. Now the idea of conferring a benefit upon the indigent has given place to the true one, namely, to prepare citizens for the intelligent exercise of their suffrages, and to protect society from the penalties of ignorance.

The public schools, form the true foundation of our educational system. Colleges and universities are proper in their place, and should be carefully fostered and liberally endowed. They are essential to a higher education, and we could no more dispense with them than with any other branch of education, or of the government. But the public schools, schools for the education of the masses, should be equally fostered. "With what scrupulous care," says a zealous friend of public education, "does England foster her great universities for the training of the sons of the nobility, for their places in the house of lords, in the army, navy and church. What, then, should be the character of citizenship in a country where every man is born a king and sovereign, heir to all the franchises and trusts of the State and republic? An ignorant people can be governed, but only an intelligent and educated people can govern themselves."

MODERN COUNTRY SCHOOLHOUSE.

The interest being manifested of late years, in the public schools, is ample proof of the intellectual developement of the State, under the new order of things brought about by the war. Illustrative of their increasing popularity, is the following extract from the State superintendent's report, a few years ago:

The wealthiest counties are becoming the best friends of the public schools, and tax payers are voting levies upon themselves to improve their quality, and extend their terms. Half a million dollars are annually raised, by the election of the people, to supplement the public bonus. Tasteful and comfortable schoolhouses are fast taking the places of those old shams and shames, in which the children of the poor erstwhile were corraled. Eighteen hundred have been built within the last eight years. A home supply of teachers, furnished from our best young men and women, are taking the place of impecunious tramps and shiftless natives. The system is no longer an infirmary for the lame and halt and feeble, incompetents to be provided for, no more are pensioned upon the bounty afforded by the school fund. It is not now a "stepping stone" to professions, a temporary expedient, accepted until something better turns up or is turned up. Men and women among us are choosing it for their life work, and emulating each other in their aspirations and achievements of a profession which confers honor, and whose prizes are to be coveted, and whose badges are to be worn with pride. Cities and towns vie with each other in maintaining graded schools better than our average western colleges, with their half-starved faculties. School examinations and teachers' institutes have become occasions looked forward to with anticipations of pleasure, and enjoyed as feasts of soul. Communities bid for these convocations, and rival each other in the tender of hospitalities to their members. At these sessions teachers take on power and inspiration for practical work, when they return to their school-rooms, loaded with valuable suggestions and methods. Discriminating patrons witness the exercises, to determine who among the instructors is best fitted for the post of district teacher. Citizens crowd to the polls to elect the officers of the system, and men are aspiring for the dignities of the trustees office. Aspirants for the county commissionership are as eager for its honors as candidates for county judgeships. Calls for the superintendent are loud and frequent from every part of the State.

He who fails to see these tokens of interest is wilfully and wantonly blind. These and other signs of the times argue that an auspicious period is at hand, when the benefits of education will crush out ignorance, and intelligence hold the ballots that fall in the nation's urn of fate. The importance of our common school system is apparent, when it is remembered that there are only 35,000 pupils in all the universities, colleges, seminaries and private academies of our State, while a quarter of a million of children flock to our 7,000 public schools. In half the counties no schools are taught but common schools. In some of our counties of wealth and refinement, the public schools have absorbed all private educational enterprises, because co-operative effort furnishes a superior quality of education. If our colleges decline in the number of matriculates, the cause is not to be found in diminished interest in education, but in the fact that our public schools are affording at home advantages formerly sought abroad.

This is but proof of the advance made by the State in educational development since the close of the war. This intellectual advancement is still increasing and improving every year. And there is still room for further improvements. Education alone will stop the lawlessness that stalks abroad in some portions of the State. The refining influence of a good school upon the society of any neighborhood, hitherto without one, has never failed to show happy effects. But a few years ago official statistics showed that Kentucky had 40,000 white voters who could not read. Add to this the negro voters, estimated at 55,000, but few of whom can read, and the majority of whom are far more ignorant than the illiterate whites, and we have 95,000, nearly one-third of the entire electoral population of the State, who are "ignorant of the very means by which to acquaint themselves with the merits of the questions submitted for their decision at the polls." Let this mass of ignorance increase until it rises into a majority, and what will be the result? It requires no prophet to foretell the doom of the State in such an event. This ignorance must and will increase if left to itself, without State encouragement for its own improvement. Citizenship can only be improved, lawlessness lessened, and intemperance driven from the community by education, and the sooner the people awake to this fact, the better it will be for the credit and prosperity of the commonwealth. Competent legislation is required, and, if need be, a reorganization of the entire school system. "It is a singular phenomenon," says Mr. Collins, "of the history of the internal economy of our State for seventy years, that our main attempts at internal improvement and public education, at State expense, and under State superintendence, have been embarrassed or defeated, almost wholly by the misdirection and mismanagement of incompetent legislation." There is too much truth in this to gainsay. If the average legislator has not been criminally neglectful, he has certainly been lamentably indifferent to legislation for the benefit and improvement of public education.

The colored schools are increasing in importance each year. It is highly commendable in the colored people that they evince so great an interest and enthusiasm in the cause of education, and proves that they are desirous of improving themselves, and of becoming good and respectable citizens. In some sections of the State they are taking really more interest in the public schools than the whites. Said Mr. Henderson, in one of his annual reports as State superintendent: "Their system has more than met the expectation of its projectors and friends, and is rapidly, by gratifying development, disappointing the prophesies and hopes of its enemies. The colored people are now taking hold of it with that enthusiasm and earnestness so characteristic of the race, when their interests are at stake, and their claims to notice recognized by authority. They are exhibiting a most commendable zeal in supplementing the fund, and are really doing more to make the most of the opportunities tendered them by the State, than the whites."

The colored people receive a school fund direct from the State, to which is added the taxes paid by themselves. In some localities they have built comfortable houses; in the city of Louisville, and in some of the other larger cities of the State, their school buildings compare favorably with those of the whites, and they are supplied with teachers well qualified for the stations they fill. A gratifying fact, in connection with the education of the colored people, is the interest in the matter, "manifested by representative white men throughout the State, and their earnest disapproval of the policy of bitter antagonism of those who still cherish hereditary prejudice, instead of rising to the level of an intelligence which respects the issues that the changed relations of this race have introduced into the policies of the State." The negroes are now all freemen, but their future, without education, would be little better than actual slavery. The older ones, who were brought up and educated to work, are rapidly passing away, while a new generation is coming on—reared without restraints, and to look upon work as one of the relics of slavery. For these there is no hope but in education. The following may be a little severe, but is not wholly without truth:

The greatest crime of the century was the sudden enfranchisement of 4,000,000 of unlettered Africans. Those who perpetrated this outrage upon our republican institutions, did it in the face of all the social science they had propagated. The North had emphasized the doctrine, that "virtue and intelligence are essential to the perpetuity of the republic;" and yet, in an ill advised hour of heated passion, rendered hot by the fires of civil war, they made a horde of ignorant slaves the peers of their intelligent masters, and thus provided the condition that prostrated the South, and subjected its people to the most destroying despotism that ever ground into the dust a free citizenship. The only indemnity for this stupendous wrong is their education at the national expense. To require the people they impoverished by this act of folly to bear the burden of their education, would be a continued piece of injustice, which no political casuistry can justify, no species of sophistry disguise, and no maudlin philanthrophy dignify with a decent apology.

LADIES' HALL—BEREA COLLEGE.

Berea College is a liberal educational institution located in Madison County, and is open to the education of the colored people on equal terms with the whites. It dates its origin back to 1855—a time when it required an indomitable will and unbounded courage to establish such a school in a slave-holding State. It may, in some degree, be termed an offshoot of Oberlin College, Ohio, as the first teachers, employed in the Berea School, William E. Lincoln and Otis B. Waters, were students who had been educated at that institution. It was the cause of much excitement throughout the surrounding country, and more or less mob violence was exercised against the zealous founders of the school, and also the church which had been established in the same vicinity. Rev. John G. Fee, who was the originator of the school, has been pastor of the church at Berea for nearly a third of a century, and is a native Kentuckian, received many indignities during his early ministrations in this and the adjoining counties, from the rough elements of society, spurred on by those who opposed "abolitionism."

The third teacher of the Berea school was Prof. J. A. R. Rogers. The second term of the school under his administration was opened in September, 1859, with two additional teachers —John G. Hanson and his wife. It was during this term that the question of admitting colored pupils was discussed in the young men's literary society of the school. After considerable discussion it was decided that, "if any one made in God's image comes to get knowledge which will enable him to understand the revelation of God in Jesus Christ, he can not be rejected." This sentiment was obnoxious to the slave-holding families, and many of them withdrew their children from the school.

Efforts were made, in 1858, to transform the school into a college, by the adoption of a constitution, at a meeting held on September 7th, of that year, at the residence of Rev. Mr. Fee. The following clauses from the document will show the grand object of Berea College:

> This college shall be under an influence strictly christian, and, as such, opposed to sectarianism, slave-holding, caste, and every other wrong institution or practice.
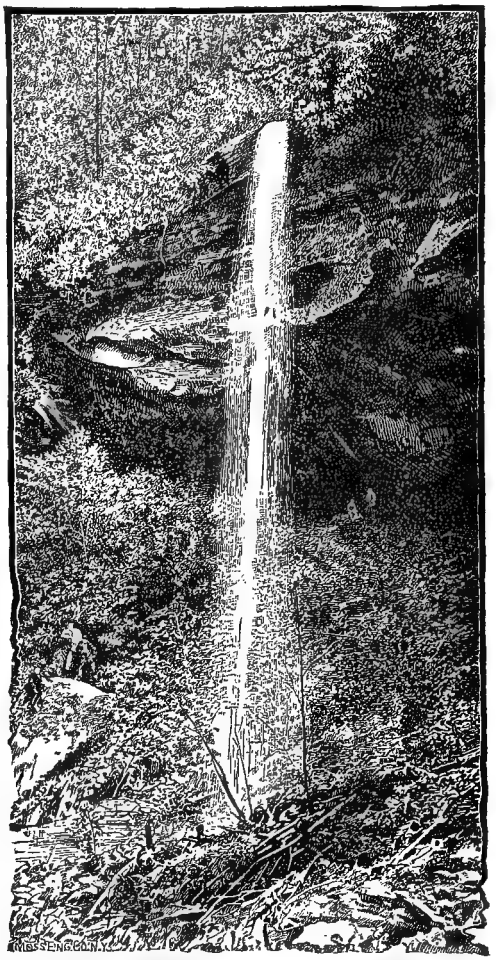
> The object of this college shall be to furnish the facilities for a thorough education to all persons of good moral character, at the least possible expense to the same, and all the inducements and facilities for manual labor which can reasonably be supplied by the board of trustees shall be offered its students.

Many difficulties still remained to be surmounted by the friends of the institution, but they persevered. A tract of land containing something over a hundred acres was purchased for $1,800, and Mr. Fee went east to raise funds for the college. But political influences disturbed its peace, and on the 23d of December, 1859, a "committee of safety" visited Berea, and delivered notice to some dozen of those most zealous in the school to leave the county within ten days. They petitioned the governor for protection, but he informed them he could not afford them protection, owing to the excitement caused by the John Brown raid in Virginia, which had just occurred. The families who were forced to leave the place numbered about forty persons. The war soon opened, and with the beginning of hostilities the institution closed temporarily.

In 1865 the school was reopened. A charter for a college was obtained under a general law of the State, the board of trustees reorganized, and other lands were purchased. The admission of colored pupils caused considerable excitement, and half the white pupils deserted the institution. But their places were soon filled, and the requisite qualifications for admission into the institution still remained—"a good moral character." Temporary buildings for the accomodation of the increased attendance were erected in 1866–67. Howard Hall was erected in 1869 by the Freedman's Bureau at a cost of $18,000. It is a three-story wood building with a tin roof. In 1870–71, "Ladies' Hall," was erected. It is a superb building, three stories high, built of brick, and has two fronts of 120 feet each. The Ladies' Hall at Oberlin, Ohio, was taken as a pattern, and "its excellencies, if possible, were improved, and its defects remedied." It is furnished with every modern convenience, and is a very model of excellence in every respect. "All other college buildings, including Howard Hall, Recitation Hall, Office Building, Grammar School, Intermediate School, Primary School, very good buildings, and the chapel, a very fine building, costing $9,000, are situated in the college campus, consisting of two large and beautiful groves of forest trees embracing about forty-five acres. The larger grove, in which the buildings are, is on the high land, and the other in the plain, fifty feet below."

The college owns, besides the buildings, which are estimated at $82,000, 300 acres of land, not including the grounds about the buildings, and worth about $15,000; it owns about twenty-five good business lots, 25x125 feet, and worth $125 per lot. The college has an endowment of $95,000, not including the land.



The following extract, from an article by Prof. A. P. Peabody, of Harvard, on the co-education of the races, will present an appropriate conclusion to this sketch of Berea:

> Of all the experiments in co-education that have been instituted, we regard Berea College, in Kentucky, as the most important in its sphere of influence and in its prophecy of enduring benefit to the colored race. It has carried the war into the enemy's camp, and has brought its whole Christian panoply and armament into the immediate encounter with the surviving spirit of slavery—a spirit made all the more virulent by the destruction of its body. At other institutions, black students are admitted to an equality with the white; at Berea, white students are admitted to an equality with the black. The trustees and professors at Berea can not invite their white neighbors to unite with them in throwing the doors of their institutions wide open to all that choose to come. They must first gather their little flock of black pupils, with a very few white youths from their own or friendly families, and then they must make their light shine bright enough and far enough to win the regard and confidence of a distrustful and scornful public; and to demonstrate to that unwilling public that it is for their own and their childrens' interest that they patronize this institution. This has been effected. The college has shown its large educational capacity. Its public exercises have been attended in successive years by persons of established reputation as educationists and literary men, and have received their unqualified commendation and praise. There is, for many miles around, no institution of learning that does nearly so much or so well for its pupils. The consequence is that those at first vehemently opposed to it are fast falling into the ranks of neutrals or friends. Many who deemed it a nuisance have already sent their children to it. Its sterling value as a seminary of education is now recognized on all hands. But it is of much more worth for its silent, yet most efficient propagandism of the due relation between the races; for co-education includes within itself or involves as its necessary consequence, equality in all civic and social rights, immunities, duties and obligations.

Kentucky has never encouraged foreign immigration as some other portions of the republic have done. But, on the contrary, the State has opposed it more or less, until within the past few years. The tide of immigration, however, flowing by her northern border to the west and north, enriching the great Northwest, has aroused her to action, and brought the question of foreign immigration to the consideration and attention of the people, and also of the legislature. Within the last five years, a bureau of immigration has been established and facts and statistics and other important intelligence concerning the material resources of the State, have been profusely distributed far and wide. The result of this judicious dissemination of knowledge of Kentucky's material wealth has been the planting of a number of colonies of English, German and Swiss people in the State. Their prosperity shows conclusively that the State affords fine opportunities for immigrants.

The accumulation of aliens from all lands and countries, within a new American State, has been considered by many to be somewhat perilous. Upon this subject a late writer says: "Kentucky has had the good fortune to inherit a nearly pure English blood. Aside from the diminishing negro population, the blood of the people is of a singularly unmixed origin. Her success in meeting the strains of the civil war could not have been secured if its people had not had this singular unity of race and the solidarity of motive that it brought with it. While there are, doubtless, evils that come from this predominance of English stock and the consequent uniformity of the motives of the people, leading as it does to a certain acceptance of existing conditions, there are other dangers, and graver, which come from the confusion of motives in the States that have a large foreign population, that are much more menacing to society."

There have been several influences that have retarded foreign immigration to Kentucky. The strongest of these influences, perhaps, is the competition with negro labor. The European immigrant is not willing to enter into competition with this species of labor, and the result is they seek those States where slavery never existed. Kentucky has but a small negro population, and it is diminishing in numbers, and there are large tracts of country within the State where there are no negroes, yet the name of a "slave State" clings to it as a plague, driving immigration to other and less fertile regions. This objection to Kentucky must soon pass away, and when it does, and the fine climate and fertile lands of Kentucky become better known to immigrants, then will the tide of immigration turn within her borders. The advantages of Kentucky only need to become well known to induce immigration. The Swiss colonies in Laurel and Lincoln Counties, with the air of prosperity that prevails about them, demonstrate unmistakably the fine field Kentucky presents to the colonist.

CHAPTER XX.

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT OF THE STATE.

THE late war developed a new phase in every form of life as well in the political history of Kentucky. Everything has changed—much for the better—and a new era has been inaugurated that in intellectual advancement bids fair to surpass the hopes and expectations of the most sanguine friends of the commonwealth. While it cannot be claimed that the scriptural dispensation, when "old things are to pass away," and "all things become new," has dawned, yet the vast changes and improvements seem to indicate an approach to that period. The people emerged from the horrors of war purified "like gold tried in the fire," and at once entered into the work of improving their social and literary institutions, and in restoring peace and tranquility to their State. The press has borne no inconsiderable part in achieving this triumph, and has done more, actual education perhaps excepted, than any other influence brought to bear to reach this grand result.

The press, as an institution, when it happens to fall into the hands of men competent to make it discharge its duty fully and properly, is a most important factor in the advancement of any community. One of the best things that can be said of our nation is, that it has a free press. No man has to be licensed or selected by the government either to print a book or publish a newspaper. It has been circumscribed by no law except natural selection. Any one who wished could start a paper at any time, say almost anything he desired to say, and if he chose not to be suppressed, there was no power to suppress him—except a "military necessity," and once in a great while mob violence. The government foresaw the eventual wants of mankind, and committed the wisest act in all its history in unbridling the press. It was the seed planted in good ground for its own perpetuity, and the happiness and welfare of its people. Says a late writer: "To make the press absolutely free, especially after the centuries of vile censorship over it, was an act of wisdom transcending in importance the original invention of movable types. This enjoyment of a free press, means free speech, free schools, free religion, and, supremest and best of all, free thought. If our government endure, and the people continue free, here will be much of the reason thereof, for freedom, though well established, will not maintain and perpetuate itself, because by the laws of heredity that lurks in every man, more or less, the latter customs or habits or mental convictions of a barbarous ancestry, leave the seeds of monarchy and despotism. The Americans have this (speaking in reference to a Republican form of government) less than any other people in the world; they are further removed from an ancestry that worshiped under kingly rulers: and yet even here it is as true now as when uttered, that 'eternal vigilance is the price of liberty.' The press is, therefore, essential to the perpetuation of free institutions in America."

That the press can do no wrong, it would be idle to assert. So great an institution, so varied its interests, so numerous its controllers and guides—he would be a foolish man, indeed, who would even hope that it would ever become infallible. It has committed wrongs against the public quite as often as wrongs have been perpetrated against it. The averages, say, are even. Then, if two wrongs can make a right, a reasonable justice has been done, and the "great palladium" remains to us as the drudge and pack-horse, and at the same time "the crowned king of all mankind." Another, and an able authority,* says of the press: "The grandest temporal blessing God has given to the nineteenth century is the newspaper. We would have a better appreciation of this blessing if we knew the money, the brain, the losses, the anxieties, the wear and tear involved in its production. Under the impression that almost anybody can make a newspaper, scores of inexperienced capitalists every year enter the lists, and, consequently, during the last few years a newspaper has died almost every day. With more than 6,000 dailies in the United States and Canadas, there are but thirty-six a half century old. Newspapers do not average more than five years' existence. * * * Newspapers make knowledge democratic and for the multitudes. The public library is a hay-mow so high up that few can reach it, while the newspaper throws down the forage to our feet. Public libraries are the reservoirs where the great floods are stored high up and a great way off. The newspaper is the tunnel that brings them down to the pitchers of all the people. The chief use of great libraries is to make newspapers out of. Great libraries make a few men and women wise; newspapers lift whole nations into the sunlight. Better have 50,000,000 people moderately intelligent than 100,000 Solons. A false impression is abroad that newspaper knowledge is ephemeral, because periodicals are thrown aside, and not one out of 10,000 people files them for future reference. Such knowledge, so far from being ephemeral, goes into the very structure of the world's heart and brain, and decides the destiny of churches and nations. Nearly all the best minds and hearts have their hands on the printing-press to-day, and have had since its emancipation. Adams and Hancock used to go to the Boston Gazette, and compose articles on the rights of the people. Benjamin Franklin, De Witt Clinton, Hamilton, Jefferson, were strong in newspaperdom. Many of the immortal things that have been published in book form, first appeared in what may be called the ephemeral periodical. All Macaulay's essays first appeared in a review; all Carlyle's, all Ruskin's, all Sidney Smith's, all Thackeray's, all the elevated works of fiction in our day are reprints from periodicals, in which they appeared as serials. The poems of Tennyson, Longfellow, Emerson, Burns, Lowell, Whittier, were once fugitive pieces. You cannot find ten literary men in Christendom with strong minds and great hearts but are, or have been, somehow connected with the printing-press. * * * It is sometimes complained that newspapers report the evil when they ought only to report the good. They must report the evil as well as the good, or how shall we know what is to be reformed, what guarded against, what brought down? A newspaper that pictures only the honesty and virtue of society is a misrepresentation. That family is best prepared for the duties of life, which, knowing the evil, is taught to select the good. Keep children under the impression that all is fair and right in the world, and when they go out into it they will be as poorly prepared to struggle with it as a child who is thrown into the middle of the Atlantic and told to learn to swim. * * * Another blessing of the newspaper is the foundation it lays for accurate history of the time in which we live. We, for the most part, blindly guess about the ages that ante-date the newspaper, and are dependent on the prejudices of this or that historian. But after a hundred or two years what splendid opportunity the historian will have to teach the people the lesson of this day. Our Bancroft got from the early newspapers of this country, from the Boston News Letter, the New York Gazette, and the American Rag Bag, and Royal Gazetteer, and Independent Chronicle, and Massachusetts Spy and Philadelphia Aurora, accounts of Perry's victory, and Hamilton's duel, and Washington's death, and the oppresive foreign tax on luxuries which turned Boston harbor into a tea-pot, and Paul Revere's midnight ride, and Rhode Island's rebellion and South Carolina's nullification.

*Rev. T. De Witt Talmage.

But what a field for the chronicler of the great future when he opens the files of a hundred standard American newspapers, giving the minutiæ of all things occurring under the social, political, international, ecclesiastical, hemispherical. Five hundred years from now, if the world lasts so long, the student looking for stirring and decisive history will pass by the misty corridors of other centuries, and say to the librarian: 'Find me the volume that gives the century in which American presidents were assassinated, the civil war enacted, and the cotton-gin, the steam locomotive, the telegraph and telephone, and Hoe's cylinder presses were invented.' It is not more what newspapers do for to-day, than the fact that they make a storehouse of history. * * * More than all, the blessings of a good newspaper is in its evangelistic influence. The secular press of this country discusses all religious questions, scatters abroad religious intelligence and multiplies sermons until the gospel comes every week within reach of every intelligent man and woman in America. The good newspaper is to be the right wing of the apocalyptic angel. On the Sabbath the minister preaches to a few hundred or thousand people, and on Monday morning and evening, through the printing-press, preaches to millions. The telegraph gathers for it matter on one side, and the express railway train waits to be loaded with the tons of folded sheets on the other. I set it down as the mightiest force for the world's evangelization."

These lengthy extracts require no apology. Like everything emanating from the great preacher, though couched in his peculiar style, they are full of wisdom. The press is the great power of the present age. This is indisputable. In any community it is an influence for good, admitting of not a single doubt. Thomas Jefferson, who penned the Declaration of Independence, one of the grandest documents that ever fell from the pen of mortal man, wrote also: "If I had to choose between a government without newspapers, or newspapers without a government, I should prefer the latter." Another sage remarks: "If man should, from childhood to old age, see only his Bible, Webster's dictionary and his newspaper, he could be prepared for all the duties of this life, or all the happiness of the next." Daniel Webster said: "I care not how unpretending a newspaper may be, every issue contains something that is worth the subscription price." Of all the blessings that man can have in this world, the newspaper is the one "whose rose need have no thorn, whose sweet need have no bitter." Thanks, then, a million thanks, to our revolutionary sires for giving us the great boon of a free press.

When the war closed there had been completed a revolution in the newspaper publishing business. The telegraph had been utilized, and men had been taught to look for news, and not for the opinions and fine writings of certain individuals. The business of writing for the paper had to adjust itself to circumstances, and short, crisp editorials, and the news of the hour; and instead of the long "thundering leader," came the wit, that largely consists of slang and bad spelling. The metropolitan press, through the telegraph, and the perfected Hoe press began to absorb from the country, first its talent among writers, and then to monopolize the business itself, until the country paper found no other avenue to walk in except the purely local news, gossip and chit-chat of its immediate locality. But notwithstanding this the local press is not to be despised, nor denied credit for its part in elevating the standard of civilization. Far from it. It contributes as much, in its humble way, as the more pretentious city daily. The improvement in the art of making newspapers is not surpassed by that made in any institution, or other branch of business, of the present century. The Courier-Journal, with its corps of editors and reporters and correspondents, and its attaches and employes, its improved printing presses and magnificent building, the pride of Kentucky's metropolis, is a sample of the modern daily newspaper, and strikingly illustrates its great power and influence. Compared to the Kentucke Gazette, the first newspaper in the west, it shows the wonderful advancement made by the press within the past hundred years.

The first newspaper published west of the Alleghany Mountains, with a single exception,* was established at Lexington. It is not intended to go back to the beginning of the newspaper history of Kentucky, and follow it through all its vicissitudes to the present time. A few words, however, of some of the early newspapers of the State, and some of the leading ones, cannot very well be avoided. The first paper was established in 1787, almost 100 years ago, by John Bradford. It was christened the Kentucke Gazette. The final e of Kentucky was afterward changed to y, in consequence of the Virginia Legislature requiring certain advertisements to be "inserted in the Kentucky Gazette." The efforts to separate Kentucky from Virginia and form it into a distinct State, necessitated the establishment of this paper. The convention that met at Danville, in 1785, to discuss the subject of separation, adopted the following resolution: "That to insure unanimity in the opinion of the people respecting the propriety of separating the district of Kentucky from Virginia, and forming a distinct State government, and to give publicity to the proceedings of the convention, it is deemed essential to the interests of the country to have a printing press." Arrangements were finally made with John Bradford to establish a paper at Lexington, then the principal town in the district, and in 1786 he sent to Philadelphia for the necessary outfit. It did not arrive until late in the summer of 1787, and on the 11th of August he issued the first number of the Gazette, the pioneer newspaper of the western country. His editorial surroundings would contrast strangely with the princely style of the great metropolitan journals of the present day. His steamboat, railroad, telegraph and mail-carrier was a pack-mule; his office a log-cabin. His rude and unwieldy hand-press was of the old-fashioned style, that for years and years had not been improved; and, in addition, it was a second-hand one. He daubed on the ink by hand with two ancient dog-skin inking balls, and probably managed to get sixty or seventy copies printed on one side in an hour. If he wrote at night it was by the light of a rousing fire, a bear-grease lamp, or a buffalo-tallow candle. An editorial desk, made of a smooth slab, supported by two pairs of cross-legs, a three-legged stool, ink-horn and a rifle, composed the rest of his office furniture.*

John Bradford, the pioneer editor of Kentucky, was a native of Virginia, and was born in Fauquier County, in 1749. He came to Kentucky in 1785, and settled on Cane Run, but the next year located in Lexington. He was a practical printer, as was his father before him, and he brought up his sons to the same business. The next year after starting the Gazette, he published the Kentucky Almanac, the first pamphlet printed west of the mountains, and the annual publication of which he continued for twenty years. From all the biographical record left of Mr. Bradford, it is evident that he was not especially brilliant as an editor, but, what was better for the times in which he lived, he was a man of sound practical sense and sterling honesty. He was chairman of the board of village trustees, and delivered the address of welcome to Gov. Shelby in 1792, upon his arrival in Lexington, then the capital of the new-made State. He was the first State printer, and received from the State government £100 sterling, as the emoluments of the office. He printed books as early as 1794, and some of his early publications are still to be seen in the Lexington public library. He served for a time as chairman of the board of trustees of Transylvania University, and held other positions of honor and trust. His mind was so well stored with useful and valuable information that he was considered the town oracle, and from his decisions on local topics there was no appeal. So great was the confidence of the people in his judgment that he won the sobriquet of "Old Wisdom." He was high sheriff of Fayette County at the time of his death, which occured in March, 1830. Circuit court was in session, and the distinguished Jesse Bledsoe, who was the presiding judge, alluded to his death in eloquent terms, and adjourned court in respect to his memory.

The Kentucky Gazette was conducted by Mr. Bradford with great energy and success until early in 1802, when he turned it over to his son, Daniel Bradford, and took charge of the Kentucky Herald, the first rival paper in the State. He kept up a watchful supervision, however, of the Gazette, and, after seven years, he again assumed editorial charge of it. In 1814, his son, Fielding Bradford, Jr., became its proprietor and continued his connection with it until 1825, when it again passed into the hands of the senior Bradford. In 1835, it again reverted to Daniel Bradford, who, in March, 1840, sold it to Joshua Cunningham of Louisville, foreman of the Advertiser, a paper edited by Shadrach Penn, the brilliant rival of George D. Prentice. Under the management of Mr. Cunningham, who was in bad health, the paper declined, and in 1848 its publication ceased. So ended the first paper published west of Pittsburgh.

The second newspaper in Kentucky was also established at Lexington. It will be borne in mind that for a number of years after settlements began to be made in Kentucky, Lexington was the metropolis of the State. It was the first capital, and being the leading town, not only of Kentucky but all the western country, it drew within its limits the majority of the wealth, intelligence and business of the entire community. Thus it became the seat of learning and business enterprise. Its second newspaper was started in 1793, the next year after the admission of Kentucky as a State into the Federal Union. It was called Stewart's Kentucky Herald, and was established by James H. Stewart. Its publication was continued for about ten years, when it was absorbed by the Bradfords and the Kentucky Gazette. Mr. F. L. McChesney, editor of the Western Citizen, in a sketch of Paris written a few years ago, mentioned a paper—the Kentucky Herald—as started in that town in 1797, by James Stewart, and which existed for about a year. In the same year, William Hunter established the Kentucky Mirror, at Washington, a town situated about four miles from the present city of Maysville. In 1798, Hunter established a paper in Frankfort called the Palladium, and was annually elected State printer for ten years. In 1803, the Western Messenger, and in 1806, the Republican Auxiliary were established at Washington. The first paper in Louisville was called the Farmer's Library, and dates back to 1807. Its history is comprised in an act of the legislature requiring certain laws to be published in its columns. Not even the names of its owners or publishers are known. The next year (1808) another paper—the Gazette—made its appearance in Louisville, but its record, like that of the Farmer's Library, is obscure. In this year also was established the Western Citizen, at Paris. Mr. McChesney in his sketch of Paris, says the Citizen was started by Grimes Johnson; Collins in his history of Kentucky, says by Joel R. Lyle. The Lyles (Joel R. and William C.) were long connected with it, but it was purchased, Mr. McChesney says, by Joel R. Lyle early in 1809. It is one of the early papers of Kentucky that has survived the storms of adversity and is still flourishing and prosperous. It opposed the old Federalist party and warmly advocated the war of 1812. In the great conflict between the old and new court parties, it adopted the side of the former, and supported Mr. Adams and Mr. Clay in opposition to Gen. Jackson. When politics divided, under the name of Whigs and Democrats, it espoused the cause of the Whigs, and ever continued a zealous advocate of that party. F. L. McChesney became the owner of it after the war, and during the reconstruction period it changed its politics to the Democratic faith, and has since remained true to those principles.

The Lexington Observer and Reporter, originally the Lexington Reporter, was established in 1807, by William W. Worsley and Samuel R. Overton. It was continued uninterruptedly as the Reporter until 1832, when it was purchased by Bryant & Finnell and consolidated with the Observer. The Observer and Reporter existed until 1873, when its publication ceased. During its long career it had many able and brilliant editors and contributors, among whom were Edwin Bryant, Robert N. Wickliffe, William A. Dudley, Daniel C. Wickliffe, William C. P. Breckinridge, Thomas E. Pickett and others. No paper in central Kentucky, perhaps, wielded a greater influence than the Observer and Reporter, and when discontinued it was the oldest paper in the State, having been established the year before the Western Citizen.

The first paper in Louisville that attained to any prominence, and of which there is any authentic history, was established in 1810 by Nicholas Clark. It was called the Western Courier, and was conducted with considerable ability. Mann Butler, the historian, and an able writer, was connected with it as associate editor in 1814, but he did not remain long in the position. S. H. Bullen and A. G. Meriwether became interested in the paper in 1821, and the name was changed to the Emporium and Commercial Advertiser, and from a weekly, it became a semi-weekly. Clark and Meriwether retired in February, 1822, transfering their interest to S. H. Bullen and F. E. Goddard, and the latter gentleman finally became the sole owner. While under his management (in 1832) the paper was discontinued. The Louisville Correspondent, a weekly paper, was started in the same year as the Western Courier. Its owner and publisher was E. C. Barry, who continued it until 1817, when it passed from the public gaze.

The Advertiser, the first daily paper published in Kentucky, was established in 1818, and soon became a formidable opponent to the Western Courier. It was founded by Shadrach Penn, the ablest editor ever in Louisville until the appearance of George D. Prentice. Mr. Ben Casseday, in a sketch of the Louisville press, says: "Mr. Penn was an experienced politician, a forcible writer, and a man of extraordinary tact. His paper soon took the position of political leader, not merely in its local circle, but all over the west. It was the acknowledged Jackson organ, and both city and State recognized its power and influence. It was without a rival, and if it did not create, it represented, the dominant party for over twelve years. Until 1830 (the birth of the Journal) Penn found 'no foeman worthy of his steel.' His adversaries had, one by one, fallen before him. He was supreme in his position, and a few years previous to the date above referred to was confirmed in it by a great victory over the old court or anti-relief party, and his acknowledged championship of a party victorious in a political struggle as bitter as had ever agitated the State."

Shadrach Penn was a native of Kentucky, and had been a soldier in the war of 1812. He was a large man, a fine specimen of the typical Kentuckian, six feet high, weighing over 200 pounds, and one of the best hearted men that ever lived. He was well educated, was a statesman and a leader naturally, and a politician from choice. Although rival editors for many years, and often on bad terms and indulging in bitter controversy, yet a warm friendship grew up between him and Prentice, that continued until the death of Penn in 1853. Mr. Penn left Louisville in 1842, went to St. Louis, and took editorial charge of the Missouri Democrat, which position he filled until the close of his life.

In 1826 the Focus was established in Louisville by W. W. Worsley and Dr. Buchanan. Worsley was an experienced newspaper man, and had been one of the original owners of the Lexington Reporter, and was a man of some ability. The Focus opposed Gen. Jackson, the Advertiser and Shadrach Penn, but being more of a literary and scientific journal than a partisan organ, it was unable to stand before the political projectiles hurled at it by Penn. After a fitful existence of a little more than three years it was purchased by Cavins & Robinson, and shortly after was merged into the Louisville Journal.

The Kentuckian was a newspaper established at Lancaster in 1821, and was published by Albert G. Hodges, who afterward became widely known as a newspaper publisher throughout the State. He published the Kentuckian only about three months, when he left Lancaster, and went back to Lexington. There he became foreman of the Reporter office, a place he filled acceptably for several years. He next went to Louisville, and, in 1824, in connection with D. C. Pinkham, purchased from S. H. Bullen the Louisville Morning Post. Pinkham proved an unprofitable partner, as he got away with most of the profits of the paper, and in about a year, William Tanner, who had attained some prominence as an editor, succeeded him. Hodges and Tanner did not agree well on politics, the latter advocating, on one side of the paper, the fallacies of the new court, while Hodges on the other side championed the old court party. It was literally "a house divided against itself," and to prevent its fall, the proprietors "threw heads and tails" for its ownership. Tanner won, and Hodges sold out to him on favorable terms, returned to Lexington, and started the Kentucky Whig. This paper had a brief existence, less than a year. He then went to Frankfort, and together with James G. Dana published the Commentator, and served as State printer until 1832, when he sold out to Dana. In 1833, Hodges was elected State printer, and shortly after started the Frankfort Commonwealth. It was thoroughly a Whig paper, and when that party became extinct, it came to the support of the Know-nothing, and then of the American party. During the late war, it was for the Union unconditionally, and after the war Republican in politics, until its suspension in April, 1872, at the age of thirty-nine years. Col. Hodges, although a stanch Union man, and later an ardent Republican, discontinued the publication of his paper, which he had established more than a third of a century before, rather than to support President Grant for renomination, in 1872, to a second term as chief magistrate. In refusing to support the hero of Appomattox, he found his "occupation gone," and retired permanently from the newspaper business.

Col. Hodges was a true type of the old Kentucky gentleman, a race that is rapidly passing away. He was born in Virginia, in 1802, and when but eight years old, his mother (his father having died) brought him to Fayette County. At the age of twelve he was apprenticed to the printing business with Worsley & Smith, the proprietors of the Lexington Reporter. After the suspension of the Commonwealth in 1872, Col. Hodges removed to Louisville, and accepted the position of secretary and treasurer of the Masonic Temple Company. He was one of the most prominent Masons of Kentucky, and from 1845 to the time of his death was grand treasurer of the Grand Lodge. When he died (a few years ago) he was the last officer of the Grand Lodge, who, in 1845, witnessed his election as grand treasurer of that body.

The Louisville Journal, whose influence for more than a third of a century was equaled by few American newspapers, was established on the 24th of November, 1830, by George D. Prentice. His business partner was A. S. Buxton, a practical printer of Cincinnati, who had a joint interest in the paper, but Prentice was sole editor. The success of the Journal was assured from the circulation of its first issue, and in four weeks from its birth it was the most extensively read paper that had ever been published in the State. Prentice immediately crossed swords with Shadrach Penn, and the contest between these rival editors, often sharp and bitter, is still vividly remembered by the older citizens of Louisville and Kentucky. Prentice's pen bristled like the "fretful porcupine," and he shot the pointed quills in every direction, regardless of who might stand in the way. In his writings he frequently made people laugh, sometimes stare and often squirm, and he seemed ever equally indifferent as to which result flowed out from his pen. The Journal soon obtained political ascendency, but the editorial warfare between Prentice and Penn was kept up as long as Penn remained in Louisville.

The Journal was born of the exigencies of the time. Political excitement, growing out of one of the most bitter party conflicts that had occurred in the State, was violent, and partisan strife was raging at white heat. Parties were dividing on the questions of the time, and to the bitterness of conflicting interests was added the enthusiasm which the rival claims of two great party chieftains everywhere excited. An historical sketch of the Courier-Journal, published in 1876, says: "Henry Clay and Gen. Jackson were the opposing candidates for the succession, and Kentucky having voted two years before for Jackson, the Journal threw all its energies into the conflict in favor of Mr. Clay, whose political friends were then known as national Republicans. Its appearance was cordially and even enthusiastically greeted by its party, another national Republican paper, the Louisville Focus, having failed, although skillfully edited, to satisfy the party's demands for vehemence and spirit."

A history of the Journal is a history of George D. Prentice. From the origin of the paper, Mr. Buxton continued his business relation with Mr. Prentice in its publication, until 1833, when he sold his interest to John N. Johnson, and two years later Mr. Johnson sold to George W. Weissinger. The latter continued his connection with the paper until his death in 1849, when his interest was purchased by Isham Henderson, long a well known citizen of Louisville, and but recently dead. During all these years, Mr. Prentice had been editor of the Journal, and had given it a world wide reputation, but about this time he called to his editorial aid Paul R. Shipman, a writer of unusual force and brilliance, and who remained with the paper many years. In a short time after purchasing Weissinger's interest, Mr. Henderson sold one-half of it (a quarter interest in the paper) to his kinsman, John D. Osborne, and the firm became Prentice, Henderson & Osborne — the last named gentleman the business manager. This arrangement continued until after the close of the war, when the firm changed into a stock corporation, under the title of the "Louisville Journal Company." In the winter of 1867–68, Mr. Henderson purchased the stock of Mr. Osborne, who retired from the business management of the paper. A few months later, Mr. Henderson bought Mr. Prentice's interest, and during the summer sold an interest in the paper to Mr. Henry Watterson, the present brilliant editor of the Courier-Journal. Thus the editorial and also the business control of the Journal passed from the hands of its founder. From its origin in 1830, to its purchase by Mr. Henderson in 1868, a few months prior to its consolidation with the Courier, its history and that of its editor had been inseparable. Dr. Theodore S. Bell, the life-long friend of Mr. Prentice, said: "Mr. Prentice impressed the conviction on the public mind that he and the daily Journal were one and the same thing, and I am not sure that he was not himself impressed with that conviction. He regarded the Journal as a part and parcel of his own being. An insult thrown at the Journal was promptly accepted as a personal insult, and as such punished in his own way —a way well known to many to their sorrow. It is, indeed, questionable whether he would have regarded with complacency any personal triumph in which the Journal was not a participant.

Mr. Prentice was a native of Connecticut, and was born in New London County, December 18, 1802. After preparing for college, he entered Brown University at the age of eighteen, and in 1823 graduated with honors. Upon completing his education, he spent some time in teaching, and wrote occasional articles for the local press. His writings attracted considerable attention, and in 1828 he was offered the position of editor of the New England Review, which he accepted. He came to Kentucky in 1830, at the instance of the Whigs of Connecticut, for the purpose of writing the life of Henry Clay. When John Quincy Adams, in 1828, failed in his re-election to the presidency, Mr. Clay, who held the first place in his cabinet, retired (the following March) from public life, and to bring him again prominently before his party was the object of the biography. It more than accomplished its purpose, for it led to the establishment of the Louisville Journal, and served to make Mr. Prentice a citizen of Kentucky. His biography of Clay was written from the standpoint of strong partisanship, and scarcely had he finished it than he was persuaded by prominent party leaders in Kentucky to establish a new daily paper at Louisville, in opposition to the Jackson Democracy.

Few men have attained fame as editors equal to that of Prentice. In a memorial address on the great journalist, Hon. Henry Watterson* said: "From 1830 to 1861 the influence of Prentice was perhaps greater than the influence of any political writer who ever lived; it was an influence directly positive and personal. It owed its origin to the union in his person of gifts which no one had combined before him. He had to build upon an intellect naturally strong and practical, and this was trained by rigid scholarly culture. He was brave and aggressive, and though by no means quarrelsome, he was as ready to fight as to write, and his lot was cast in a region where he had to do a good deal of both. By turns a statesman, a wit, a poet, a man of the world, and always a journalist, he gave the press of his country its most brilliant illustration, and has left to the State and to his progeny by odds the largest reputation ever achieved by a newspaper writer."

During the late civil war Mr. Prentice was an unswerving Union man, and all his great energies were enlisted to avert the calamities of war and preserve the government. He failed in his efforts, but there can be no doubt that the vast influence he wielded through the Journal prevented the secession of Kentucky. In all the long and desperate struggle that ensued between the North and South his fidelity to the cause of the Union never once faltered. Notwithstanding his two sons, his only children, had entered the Confederate army, and numbers of his life-long friends were arrayed under the "Southern Cross," he stood firmly by the old flag and made a gallant fight. When the war closed he was pretty well broken down; his health and spirits were gone, and the great battle he had fought had left him a feeble old man. His wife, the companion of his youth, died in 1868, and shortly after her decease the Journal passed into other hands, and in November following it was consolidated with the Courier, the name changed to the Courier-Journal, on which Mr. Prentice did excellent editorial work on a salary up to the time of his death. His work now seemed done; he stood alone; he had outlived his day and generation. He died on the 22d of January, 1870, at the country residence of his son, Col. Clarence J. Prentice, ten miles below Louisville, on the Ohio River, whither he had gone to spend the Christmas holidays. Upon the announcement of his death great respect was paid to his memory throughout the country. The legislatures of Kentucky and Tennessee, in session at the time, adopted appropriate resolutions, pronouncing his death a "public bereavement." He was buried with Masonic honors in Cave Hill Cemetery.

No newspaper published in Kentucky, perhaps none published south of the Ohio River, ever wielded an influence equal to that of the Louisville Journal. It built the city of Louisville, and gave an importance to the whole State it had never before known. When the Journal was established Louisville was a straggling village of a few thousand inhabitants. In describing it at a time when the Journal was in the full tide of its glory, the correspondent of a New York journal said: "Louisville is situated on the south bank of the Ohio River, at the falls, but it is significant for nothing except as the place where the Louisville Journal is published." Its consolidation with the Courier formed a new era in journalism in Kentucky and the South.

The history of the Journal would not be complete without an extended notice of the Courier and also of the Democrat. The Courier was established, in 1844, by Mr. W. N. Haldeman, now president of the Courier-Journal Company. A paper had been started in March, 1843, by a company of practical printers, called the Daily Dime. This enterprise was not a financial success, and on the 11th of February, 1844, the Dime passed into the hands of Mr. Haldeman, who demonstrated the fact that the right man had taken hold of it. He changed it on the 3d of June following, into the Morning Courier. Casseday's sketch, already quoted from, says: "Haldeman brought to his task inflexible will and indomitable energy. In the hands of almost any other man, the paper would soon have emulated the example of so many of its immediate predecessors. Haldeman did not know the meaning of failure; adversity only fixed his determination more firmly, and urged him to increased effort. He fairly conquered success in the face of all difficulties. He started out with the idea of making a newspaper, and his enterprise in this direction soon woke up the sleepy old journalists, not only in Louisville, but all over the West. As there were few railroads reaching his city, and as the telegraph was yet unborn, the securing of news at the earliest possible moment was a matter of energy, enterprise and expense. Haldeman spared none of these, and from the very start his paper was what is now called a 'live institution.' As an instance of his determination to spare no expense for the benefit of his readers he sent (in 1849) H. M. McCarty to Frankfort, as resident correspondent, to remain during the constitutional convention, which framed the present constitution of Kentucky. No paper in the State had ever before incurred the expense of a daily correspondent during the whole session of a legislative body."

In January, 1852, Mr. Haldeman sold a small interest in the Courier to F. B. French, but it soon passed back to him. The next year William D. Gallagher purchased a half interest, but in June, 1854, Mr. Haldeman again became sole owner. In October, 1857, he sold a half interest to Reuben T. Durrett, who continued his connection with the paper until in September, 1859, when he sold out to Walter G. Overton. Haldeman & Overton published the Courier until the commencement of the civil war in 1861, when it was suppressed by the United States military authorities for "disloyalty." Mr. Haldeman made his escape to the Confederate lines, and during the war he continued to publish the Courier, whenever time, opportunity and the "fortunes of war" would permit. At Bowling Green he was requested by Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston to resume its publication; such being considered a necessity at that time. Kentucky was trembling in the political balance, and it was still a little uncertain upon which side of Mason and Dixon's line she would fall. In order to influence her decision, and to retain its own Kentucky identity, the Courier was dated at Bowling Green, but the typesetting and printing were done in Nashville, owing to the impossibility of securing the proper mechanical facilities at the former place. Col. Robert McKee was stationed at Bowling Green as editor, while Mr. Haldeman took up his headquarters in Nashville to superintend publication. When the Confederate army fell back to Nashville, the Courier fell back with it, and continued to make its regular appearance. "The Louisville-Bowling-Green-Nashville Courier," as it was facetiously called by the papers in the Federal lines, was probably as brilliant a success as journalistic annals afford. It at once became the favorite of the army and of the people of the South, and immediately attained a circulation limited only by its mechanical ability to supply the demand. Extraordinary efforts were made to procure northern papers, which were not then easily accessible, and voluminous extracts were made from them daily. No outlay was considered too great to secure these papers, and, so perfect were the arrangements, that up to the evacuation of Nashville scarcely a day but full files of papers from all the northern cities were received at the Courier office. Several active men were constantly employed in this service, and their adventures in running through the military lines to secure papers and news were often exciting and dangerous. So perfect was the system that the military relied on the Courier for the most important intelligence outside of their lines. Mr. Haldeman had been for many years a most indefatigable and laborious newspaper man, and was considered perfectly familiar with the business, even to the minutest details, but during the four months he published the Courier in Nashville he acquired a knowledge of the business, and an insight into its workings, of which he previously had no conception. To this experience may be largely attributed his remarkable success as the business manager of a great newspaper.* Upon the restoration of peace Mr. Haldeman returned to Louisville, and at the urgent request of many of his old friends and prominent citizens of the city and State, he, on the 4th of December, 1865, recommenced the publication of the Courier. Its success was almost unparalleled from its revival to its consolidation with the Journal.

The Louisville Democrat was established, in 1843, by Phineas M. Kent, of New Albany, Ind. He was aided by subscriptions from James Guthrie and other leading Democrats of Louisville, Ky. The object of the paper was to advocate the claims of the democracy in the presidential campaign of 1844, then opening, and it went vigorously into the contest. Mr. Kent did not fulfill all the requirements of the party leaders, and in a short time the paper was purchased by John H. Harney, who remained its editor until his death, which occurred soon after the close of the war. Shortly after the purchase of the paper, Mr. Harney took into partnership William E. and Thomas P. Hughes. The latter soon retired, but William Hughes remained with the paper, and, under the firm title of Harney & Hughes, published it until absorbed by the Courier-Journal combination.

Mr. Harney was a man of fine scholarly attainments, and broad and statesman-like views. He had no experience in journalism when he took charge of the Democrat, but he soon became a prominent politician and recognized leader of his party. His style was strong, forcible, and correct, and he wrote to convince, and went about it in the most direct manner. His party acknowledged his services, and he held his leading position without any attempt at rivalry from any source. A wordy warfare sometimes prevailed between him and Prentice, but it was more good-natured than otherwise, and never characterized by extreme bitter partisan feeling, and when Mr. Harney died (in 1868) Mr. Prentice wrote a beautifully touching and generous eulogy of him.

Such is a brief sketch of the three papers comprised in the Louisville Courier-Journal, a newspaper recognized as the ablest south of the Ohio River, and as one of the most influential published in the United States. It probably controls the general sentiment throughout a larger extent of country than any other newspaper in existence. In the South and Southwest it wields a power never before reached in the history of the press, except by Prentice's Journal. The limits of this article will not permit a sketch of all the gentlemen who have filled editorial chairs on these three newspapers, and who are now dead, or have retired from the field of journalism. A just tribute to each would comprise a volume of itself. Of the names that should not be forgotten, are those of the accomplished Edwin Bryant; the fair-minded politician, Thomas H. Shreve; the poet-editors, William D. Gallagher and Will Wallace Harney; the talented Reuben T. Durrett, the witty "Wat" Overton, the brilliant and scholarly Paul R. Shipman, the sparkling correspondent, Charles D. Kirke ("Se De Kay"); the able Charles O. Faxon, the humorous and tenderly pathetic John E. Hatcher, and many others of talent and genius.

No event in the newspaper history of Louisville or Kentucky created the surprise and interest involved in the consolidation of the Journal and the Courier. These papers, although of the same political faith, were apparently bitterly hostile, and each was striving for party leadership. The consolidation took place, without any preliminary notice, on the 8th of November, a few days after the presidential election of 1868. A brief extract from the sketch already quoted from, will more fully explain the matter: "Each paper was sustained by a large and influential class, but the business of the city did not justify the outlays which both were forced to make, in order to sustain a rivalry so ambitious. It was not until the presidential campaign was well-nigh ended that the matter was seriously canvassed. There could hardly be a doubt of its expediency in the minds of any experienced journalist cognizant of all the facts, and the only points difficult to be settled, because complicated, related to details. These were, however, finally adjusted in a manner much to the satisfaction and advantage of all parties."

The history of the Courier-Journal, under its present title, is well known. It has had a brilliant existence, and a long career of usefulness is before it. Its editor, Mr. Watterson, is one of the ablest in the South or West, and he is a worthy successor of the talented Prentice. Mr. Haldeman, the president of the Courier-Journal Company, has few equals in the business management of newspapers. Few men living, perhaps, except himself, could have taken the Courier-Journal at the time of the consolidation, and carried it through the many difficulties that surrounded it, and made it the successful newspaper it is to-day. He is a writer of more than ordinary ability, but it is as a financier, and a practical business man, that he has been most useful to the Courier-Journal in obtaining for it the prosperity it enjoys, and the prominent position it occupies among the great newspapers of the country.

The only paper or periodical ever published in the West that attained any renown as a literary paper exclusively, was issued by Prentice & Weissinger, from the office of the Louisville Journal. It was called the Literary News-Letter, and was established in December, 1838, and its publication continued until in November, 1840. Dr. E. S. Crosier, in a sketch of it, written a few years ago, says: "It was under the editorial control of Edmund Flagg until December 14, 1839, when it went into the hands of the lamented Leonard Bliss. It may safely be said that no periodical at the West, professing to be exclusively literary, has ever proved so successful, or around which have so many delightful associations clustered. The aim was not entire originality, but the contributions and selections exhibited a degree of excellence rarely found in older and more pretentious periodicals."

Many who attained fame and renown in the world of letters furnished original articles for the Literary News-Letter, or was represented in its columns by selections from their best productions. Of the number were Bryant and Longfellow, whose writings will live as long as pure literature is admired; and Albert Pike, the poet and scholar, and Francis S. Osgood, and Washington Irving, and George P. Morris, and N. P. Willis, and John G. Whittier, "the good Quaker poet of Amesbury," and others well known in the fields of literature, among whom were Mrs. Laura J. Thurston ("Viola"), Amelia B. Welby ("Amelia"), Mrs. R. S. Nichols ("Ellen"), Mrs. S. J. Howe ("Egeria"). There was also an occasional contribution from J. Ross Browne, the "artist traveler," as he is sometimes called. But with all the genius and brilliancy that sparkled in its columns, the News-Letter enjoyed but a brief existence, and in a little less than two years it became extinct.

A number of other newspapers were started in Louisville, previous to the war, but most of them were short-lived and none attained any great importance. The Times was established about 1851, and existed for three or four years. In 1852 a paper called the Union was established, but like the Times, its existence was brief. About the same time the Evening Bulletin made its appearance, and the Anzeiger, the leading German paper ever published in Louisville or in the State. The latter is still in existence, and is a live and enterprising journal.

The Daily Commercial is the only English morning paper—in addition to the Courier-Journal—published in Louisville. It was established soon after the close of the war as a Republican paper, and was conducted several years as such. Recently, however, it has changed into an independent organ. It has been greatly improved and enlarged, and is an able, first-class popular newspaper, but still too young for an extended notice. The Post and the Times are evening papers, and are much superior to the average of that class of journals in ability and importance. Several religious and secular weekly papers are published in Louisville, and form no inconsiderable part of the city press.

The country press of Kentucky is equal in merit and ability perhaps to that of any other State. Nearly every county has one or more newspapers. The large majority of them are ably conducted, and wield a large influence for good in their respective counties. While the great dailies furnish national and foreign news, the country press, equally important in its particular sphere, gathers up and preserves the local news. The papers of Frankfort, Lexington, Paris, Covington, Cynthiana, Maysville, Newport, Richmond, Danville, Bowling Green, Russellville, Hopkinsville, Owensboro, Henderson, Paducah, etc., are excellent samples of the State and country press.

An era in the newspaper history of Kentucky was the establishment of an abolition or anti-slavery paper at Lexington. The author of what was then considered a very questionable enterprise was Cassius M. Clay, and he published the first number of his paper, which was called the True American, on the 14th of June, 1845. It was devoted to the "overthrow of slavery," and was bold and defiant, and even aggressive in the advocacy of that then unpopular doctrine. Mr. Clay published his paper until in August, when public indignation was aroused, and the people arose in their might, and from all parts of central Kentucky assembled in a great mass meeting in Lexington. A resolution was adopted which will show the temper of the meeting: "Resolved, that the press and materials of the True American, an anti-slavery newspaper conducted by Mr. Cassius M. Clay, shall be sent beyond the confines of the State." A committee consisting of sixty prominent citizens was appointed by the meeting to carry out the spirit of the resolution. They quietly proceeded to the office, took possession, boxed up the material and presses, had them conveyed to the depot, and shipped to a responsible house in Cincinnati, subject to the order of Mr. Clay. Nothing was destroyed or even injured, nor was there the least mob violence displayed, but there was a calm determination to rid the town and State of the obnoxious journal.

Mr. Clay was a man of courage—was brave even to rashness—and had he been present when his office was invaded there doubtless would have been bloodshed. But he was confined to a sick bed at the time, and was thus prevented from defending his property. The establishment of an anti-slavery paper at that time in a Southern or slave State was little less than the act of a madman, notwithstanding the venture was made in a free country, priding itself upon having and fostering a free press. The time had not come to tolerate the free expression of such political sentiments, and this was the first and last effort made to establish a paper of that cast of politics in Kentucky until an administration came into power of similar principles, and thereby rendered the enterprise a safe investment.

Kentucky has produced many persons, both male and female, of high literary talent. Additional to those whose names have been mentioned in connection with the press, some of the most distinguished are William Ross Wallace, Fortunatus Cosby, Jr., James Birney Marshall, Theodore O'Hara, Mrs. Mary R. McAboy, James R. Barrick, Mrs. Sarah T. Bolton and Joel T. Hart, the "poet sculptor." Others of less extended fame are Mrs. Sophia H. Oliver, Mrs. Mary E. Nealy, Granville M. Ballard, Mrs. Mary E. T. Shannon, Mrs. Alice McC. Griffin, Mrs. Nellie Marshall McAfee, Ben Casseday, Mrs. Annie C. Ketchum, Miss Laura C. Ford, Mrs. Sallie M. B. Piatt, Mrs. Helen Truesdell, Miss Lila Va. Johnston, etc. The following, though not natives of Kentucky, were and have been citizens, some of them for many years, of the State: Noble Butler (the author of a popular English grammar), James G. Drake, George W. Cutter, Mrs. Catherine Ann Warfield, Lewis F. Thomas, William W. Fosdick, Mrs. Rosa Vertner Jeffrey, Henry T. Stanton, Mrs. Florence A. Clark and Mrs. Alice Smith Winston.

Education in Kentucky, in the last decade or two, has reached a degree of perfection never before attained in the history of the State. Kentucky has not the well organized system of common schools prevailing in the Northern and Western States — in those known as the "non-slaveholding States," but of the higher grade of schools she stands side by side with the foremost States of the Union. The majority of her seminaries and academies and colleges and universities are of no mean order, but will compare favorably with the best in the land. Since the close of the civil war they have greatly improved and their facilities been enlarged in order to adapt them to the new state of affairs inaugurated in what may be termed the "new commonwealth." The power and influence of these institutions form one of the greatest sources of moral and intellectual development of the State.

Transylvania University, whose history extends back more than a hundred years, was the first public institution of learning established west of the Alleghanies. It is scarcely possible to sketch all the schools and colleges of the State, but only to glance at some of the earliest and also of the most important of these institutions of learning, by way of contrasting the old with the new order of things; and a history of Kentucky would hardly be complete without considerable notice of Transylvania University.

The general assembly of Virginia in May, 1780, passed the following act:

An act to vest certain Escheated Lands in the County of Kentucke* in Trustees for a Public School:

Whereas it is represented to this General Assembly that there are certain lands within the County of Kentucke formerly belonging to the British Subjects, not yet sold under the Law of Escheats and Forfeitures, which might at a future day be a valuable fund for the maintenance and education of youth, and it being the interest of this commonwealth always to promote and encourage every design which may tend to the improvement of the mind and the diffusion of knowledge, even among the most remote citizens, whose situation in a barbarous neighborhood and a savage intercourse might otherwise render unfriendly to science. Therefore,

Be it enacted that eight thousand acres of Land within the said County of Kentucke, late the property of Robert McKenzie, Henry Collins and Alexander McKee, be, and the same is hereby vested in William Hemming, William Christian, John Todd, John Cowan, Stephen Trigg, Benjamin Logan, John Floyd, John May, Levi Todd, George Meriwether, John Cobb, George Thompson, and Edmund Taylor, Trustees, as a free donation from the Commonwealth for the purpose of a public school or seminary of learning, to be erected in said County as soon as the circumstances of the County and the state of the funds will admit, and for no other purpose whatever, saving and reserving to the said Henry Collins, Robert McKenzie and Alexander McKee, and every one of them and every person claiming under them, all right and interest in the above mentioned Lands, to which they may be by law entitled, and of which they shall in due time avail themselves, anything herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

This was the original charter of Transylvania University. The general assembly of Virginia in 1783 passed another act formally chartering the school under the name and title of "Transylvania Seminary." This act gave the school all the powers and privileges of a university. It required that the officers of the institution should take a special oath before a judge of the supreme court; invested in a new board of trustees 12,000 additional acres of escheated lands in the district of Kentucky, exempting the whole from taxation; empowered the trustees to receive land and other property from various sources and donors, and providing in its last clause "that no land or other property that may hereafter be vested in said trustees as an inalienable endowment to said seminary, shall ever be sold or otherwise transferred from the special purpose to which it was appropriated by the donor." *

No institution was ever founded from nobler impulses than Transylvania, but its early career was clouded with adversities. On the 10th of November, 1783, the trustees elected Rev. David Rice, a Presbyterian clergyman, chairman. The outlook was not encouraging. But by way of cheering the friends of the institution, the Rev. John Todd donated to the school a small library. This formed the nucleus of what became one of the most extensive public libraries of Kentucky—a library still in existence in Lexington. When Mr. Rice was elected chairman of the board of trustees, the indications for a flourishing school were unpromising in the extreme. The pioneers, surrounded by difficulties and dangers, with prowling bands of hostile Indians roaming through the country, could devote little time to classical education. But amid these discouraging circumstances, the trustees persevered, and in spite of all obstacles the seminary was opened in February, 1785, for pupils. The first term was taught in the house of Mr. Rice near Danville, and he was the first teacher. The endowment at the time was so small as to afford a scanty salary for one professor.

The original acts pertaining to Transylvania were passed while Kentucky was a county of Virginia, but soon after its admission as a State into the Union, the legislature enacted laws exempting lands from escheat. This legislation served to deprive Transylvania of all the escheated lands with which it had been endowed by the State of Virginia, except 8,000 acres, from the sale of which the sum of $30,000 was realized. This transaction proved unfortunate. The money was invested in stock of the Bank of Kentucky, and shortly after the investment was made, the legislature repealed the bank's charter, by which, it is alleged, the seminary lost $20,000. This misfortune not only discouraged the friends, but seriously crippled the resources of the institution. It, however, continued to struggle on.

Transylvania was not originally intended to be denominational, yet it was opened under the auspices of the Presbyterians, and, indeed, it was mainly owing to a few prominent members of that church that it was established. The Rev. Mr. Rice, the first principal of the school, was perhaps the first Presbyterian minister to cross the mountains into the wilderness of Kentucky. He took an active part in building up the institution. The school was opened near Danville, but the arrangement was temporary, and its permanent location was left to future considertions. The matter provoked considerable discussion, and, in the fall of 1788, it was removed to Lexington, but it was not until 1793, that the question of location was definitely settled. The Transylvania Land Company pledged a donation of a lot of ground for the buildings on condition that the school be permanently located at Lexington. The trustees accepted the offer in the following resolution: "Resolved, that the permanent seat of the seminary be established on the lot of ground in the town of Lexington, adjoining Messrs. January's, and which is the same mentioned by the company of gentlemen calling themselves the Transylvania Company." On this lot was erected, about 1794, the first building used by the Transylvania Seminary in Lexington, a plain, two story brick edifice.

Upon the removal of the school to Lexington, Elias Jones was elected principal, in place of Rev. Mr. Rice, resigned. The terms of this pioneer institution would present a rather amusing contrast to some of our great colleges and universities of the present. They were, as published in the Kentucky Gazette, as follows: "Five pounds a year, one-half cash, the other in property. Boarding nine pounds a year, in property, pork, corn, tobacco, etc." The grammar school department was added in 1789, and Isaac Wilson appointed "professor" at a salary of "£100 sterling per anumn."

In the early history of Transylvania, its career was often disturbed by the yell of the Indian, and the crack of his rifle. Troops were almost constantly needed for defense, and even the women and children had to bear their part in defending the settlements against the savages. The roll of the drum called many a youth from the quiet of the schoolhouse, and the turbulence of the times forced them to exchange books for rifle and tomahawk. The unsettled state of the country was a serious drawback to the school, and from thirteen pupils in attendance at the beginning of the session, in 1790, the number was reduced next year to five. Its finances were correspondingly low. The trustees, however, did not despair, but set about raising £500 for current expenses. The fees from the county surveyors* had not been sufficient to support it, and landed property was still too nearly valueless to be available. So low was the treasury that the Rev. James Moore, who had succeeded Mr. Wilson as principal, was forced to carry on the school in his own house, and received but £25 for his year's service, with permission from the trustees to charge an extra fee for the "Roman and Greek classics." The school seems to have prospered under all these difficulties, for, in December, 1793, the Lexington Gazette announced that "Transylvania Seminary was well supplied with teachers of Natural and Moral Philosophy, of the Mathematics and of the learned Languages." Quite a serious dissatisfaction arose in 1794. The board of trustees elected Rev. Harry Toulmin†, a Baptist minister, principal. Sectarian jealously was at once aroused, and the usefulness of the institution for a time seemed in a fair way to be destroyed. The Baptists claimed equal rights in the seminary as a State institution; the Presbyterians claimed control, on the ground that its endowment was due to their exertions. Jealousy and bitterness increased. Rev. Mr. Moore, principal of the grammar department, who belonged to the Presbyterians, resigned his position, and his church finally withdrew its patronage of the institution. In 1796, they established the Kentucky Academy at Pisgah, eight miles southwest of Lexington. The trustees of the new academy comprised some of the leading men of the State, and they went vigorously to work to raise funds for its support. They soon had an endowment of $14,000, an amount liberal for that early period. About $10,000 of this sum had been contributed by the friends of popular education in the older States of the east, among whom were George Washington, then president; and John Adams, vice-president; and Aaron Burr, and Robert Morris. The Rev. Dr. Gordon, of London, contributed £80 sterling, toward purchasing books and apparatus. An active rivalry sprang up between the two schools. But fortunately for their influence as educational institutions, good sense and moderation prevailed, and finally led to a consolidation on terms consistent with honor and justice, A petition was presented to the legislature in 1798, in which it was proposed that "the Transylvania Seminary and Kentucky Academy, together with their respective trusts and funds, shall be united, and compose one general institution for the promotion of learning, to be styled and known by the name of the 'Transylvania University.'" The petition was granted, and Transylvania was chartered as a university December 22, 1798. The Rev. James Moore was the first president of the new institution. The next year (1799) it was given the appearance of a regular university, by the addition of law and medical departments.

Transylvania University for two-thirds of a century was the most famous educational institution ever chartered in the west. Its record is as proud as any similar institution within the limits of the Republic, and its roll of graduates show names of men distinguished throughout the country. Among them are Jefferson Davis, the whilom president of the southern Confederacy; Thomas F. Marshall, the "silver-tongued" orator; Dr. Benjamin W. Dudley, one of the most noted surgeons the State has known; Richard H. Menifee, John Boyle, Rev. James McChord, Dr. Joseph Buchanan, Richard M. Johnson (a vice-president of the United States), John Rowan, Charles S. Morehead (a governor of Kentucky), William T. Barry, Jesse Bledsoe, Charles A. Wickliffe (a governor of Kentucky), Elijah Hise and many others equally pre-eminent. Among its alumni are presidents, vice-presidents, cabinet officers, foreign ministers, governors, generals, physicians, merchants, lawyers, divines, and men of every profession and business of life. There are few towns in the south and west of any note that does not contain one or more graduates of this once renowned institution. It is a matter to be regretted, that its career could not be prolonged and a sufficient endowment secured to insure its perpetuation.

The first president of Transylvania was Rev. James Moore. He was succeeded, in 1804, by Rev. James Blythe, and he, in 1818, by Dr. Horace Holley, one of the most distinguished of all its presidents. In 1828 Dr. Holley was succeeded by the Rev. Alva Woods as president; in 1830 he was succeeded by Rev. Benjamin O. Peers, and he, in 1832, by Rev. Thomas W. Coit, who, in 1840, was succeeded by Rev. Robert Davidson. In 1840 the institutions passed into the control of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Rev. Henry B. Bascom (afterward a bishop of that church) chosen president. He resigned in 1849, and the school reverted back to the State. It was wholly reorganized in 1856 and a normal department added under State patronage, with an appropriation of $12,000 per annum for its support. About this time the Rev. Lewis W. Green was called to the presidency, and was the ninth and last president of Transylvania. He held the position two years, and then resigned it to accept the position of president of Centre College, at Danville. From the time of his resignation, the prosperity of Transylvania waned, and in 1865, it was merged into Kentucky University.

The law and medical departments of Transylvania were ably conducted, and furnished many eminent lawyers and physicians to the country. Among the professors of the law department, was Col. George Nicholas, one of the most profound jurists of Kentucky. Among his pupils, who afterward became distinguished lawyers, statesmen and politicians, were Joseph Hamilton Daviess, John Rowan, Martin D. Hardin, Robert Wickliffe, William T. Barry, Isham Talbott, John Green, etc., etc. He died in Lexington in July, 1799, while still in the prime of life. He was succeeded as professor of law in Transylvania University by Henry Clay. After Mr. Clay, the chair was filled by James Brown, John Pope, William T. Barry, Jesse Bledsoe, John Boyle, Charles Humphreys, George Robertson, Thomas A. Marshall, and A. K. Wooley, all men distinguished in their profession.

The medical department was equally distinguished. Among its professors may be mentioned James Fishback, Benjamin W. Dudley, Elisha Warfield, Joseph Buchanan, James Overton, William A. Richardson, Daniel Drake, Charles Caldwell, Constantine F. Rafinesque, John Esten Cooke, Lunsford P. Yandell, H. H. Eaton, Charles W. Short, etc.

The Kentucky Academy owed its existence, as we have seen, to a spirit of jealousy that sprang up in Transylvania in its early years. It was established in 1796, and soon attained a high reputation. The trustees of the institution comprised some of the leading men of the State, such as James Blythe, James Moore, Andrew Steele, Robert Steele, Andrew McCalla, Samuel and John McDowell, Caleb Watson and James Johnson. But the institution was short-lived, as a separate and distinct school, and a conservative influence led to its consolidation, in the course of a few years, with Transylvania.

Centre College at Danville is the oldest educational institution in Kentucky. It is denominational (Presbyterian) and has had an uninterrupted existence since 1819. The historical sketch here given was prepared for this work by Prof. Beatty, president of the college. He prefaces his sketch with a synopsis of the facts that led to its establishment as follows:

The Presbyterians were dissatisfied with the course of Transylvania University, and took steps to secure a charter for a school which should be under their own control. Their zeal was quickened by their hostility to the celebrated Dr. Horace Holley, who had been chosen president, and whose theological views they deemed unsound. They were so far successful, as to secure a charter for "The Centre College of Kentucky, at Danville," approved January 21, 1819. But the legislature, jealous of anything looking like a union of church and state, refused to put the school under denominational control, and chartered it as a State college. But while, from the first the Presbyterian influence was predominant in the college, they were unwilling to endow it, unless their control was assured for the future. As the school could not permanently succeed without an endowment, the legislature was induced to amend the charter, and place it exclusively under Presbyterian control, upon condition that they would donate to its funds the sum of $20,000. The amended charter was approved January 27, 1824. The synod of Kentucky agreed to pay into the treasury of the college $5,000 a year until the whole sum of $20,000 was paid. Upon the payment of the first installment of $5,000 the synod would be entitled to appoint one-fourth of the members of the board of trustees, and a like additional number for each additional payment of the like sum. The full payment was completed, and the right to elect the entire body of trustees was vested in the synod, in 1830. Thus, after fifty years of effort, from 1780 to 1830, the Presbyterians secured the exclusive control of a college of their own. Immediately after the original charter was obtained in 1819, contributions were made by the citizens of the town and vicinity, and a modest building was erected in Danville. The first president elected was the eloquent and distinguished Presbyterian preacher, the Rev. James McChord, D. D., who was pastor of the church to which he gave his own name in Lexington. He died in the year of his election, 1820; but it is believed, though not certainly known, that before his death, he had declined the appointment. The office having been temporarily filled by Rev. Samuel Finley, the board of trustees, in 1822, elected the Rev. Jeremiah Chamberlain, D. D., the fragrance of whose memory lingers with a few old people about Danville, who remember him as a man of learning, ability and piety. He resigned in 1826, and the office was filled temporarily by the Rev. David C. Proctor, until the Rev. Gideon Blackburn, D. D., was elected in 1827. Dr. Blackburn was distinguished rather for his popular eloquence than for profound scholarship. He resigned in 1830, and was succeeded the same year by the Rev. John Clark Young, D. D., elected October 26th. Some difficulties connected with the resignation of Dr. Blackburn gave offense to his friends and to the students of the college, a number of whom left with their departing president. Dr. Young was thus elected the very year in which the exclusive right to choose trustees was vested in the synod of Kentucky. The money that had been subscribed having been spent in the erection of buildings, purchase of apparatus and books, the support of the faculty and other purposes, the college was without funds and without students. But the times were auspicious. Transylvania had lost her prestige, and no other school in the State had acquired her ascendancy. Dr. Young, now twenty-seven years of age, was supplying the McChord Church of Lexington, from which the board had attempted to take the first president. Upon him his Presbyterian brethren laid their hands and sent him to Danville. While in college, Dr. Young had been the pupil of the great Dr. John M. Mason, of New York. He had received his theological training at Princeton Seminary, and had been a tutor in Princeton College. An eloquent and effective speaker, he brought rare gifts and attainments to the office. His amiable disposition, his large scholarship, his clear and discriminating intellect, his power of apt illustration, his readiness, his copious and ready flow of correct language, his wisdom, prudence and piety combined to fit him admirably for his work. He soon became a great favorite with the people among whom he lived, with his pupils and his brethren of the synod. He exerted a profound influence, moral and religious, in the community and over his pupils. Those who enjoyed the privilege of his instruction usually ranked him very high, perhaps above every other teacher whom they had known. Under his administration Centre College soon rose to distinction. Students flocked to its halls, and funds were contributed to its endowment. At the age of twenty seven, he began his work in college, and for another term of twenty-seven years he presided over its destinies until his death, which occurred at the early age of fifty-four, on the 23d of June, 1857. He left, as his monument, an institution whose endowment was greatly enlarged, whose halls were filled with nearly 200 students, and whose fame was spread abroad by 500 graduates whom he had sent forth through the land, especially to the south and west.

Dr. Young was succeeded by the Rev. L. W. Green, D. D., who was one of the two who composed the first graduating class. He was elected August 6, 1857, and died in office May 26, 1863. He was a worthy successor of Dr. Young, and during his administration the college continued to prosper until the unhappy civil war broke out, and the young men of the country left the college halls for military camps.

Upon the death of Dr. Green, the Rev. William L. Breckinridge, D. D., was elected October 18, 1863, and held the office for five years, resigning October 16, 1868. He struggled bravely against adverse circumstances, but the civil war had necessarily greatly lessened the number of students, though it had never entirely suspended the work of the college. But after the termination of the civil strife, the Presbyterians of Kentucky were compelled to witness the sad spectacle of a disrupted and contending church. The synod was divided, and each of the separate parts claimed to be the true representative of that body to which belonged the exclusive right of appointing the board of trustees. Various unsuccessful efforts were made to heal the schism, or to unite the fragments in support of the college, or to divide the funds. At length the civil power was invoked to determine the rights of the respective parties. The case came before the circuit and appellate courts of Kentucky, and the United States district court. In all of these courts the decision was in favor of the party in control of the college at the time, and who had always steadfastly adhered to the general assembly (northern), with which they were then and still are connected. The college could not fail to suffer under such circumstances. To add to its troubles, it lost about $60,000 of its funds, by the robbery of the Falls City Tobacco Bank of Louisville, in whose vaults its bonds were kept. About two-thirds of this sum was ultimately recovered. But the friends of the college stood by it in its dark days, and far more than replaced its lost funds. Its property, including about $70,000 of unproductive real estate, amounts to near a quarter of a million dollars. Its benefactors are numbered literally by hundreds, if not by thousands. Its funds have been contributed in part by many small donations. But it has had many liberal friends who have given much larger sums. Perhaps the largest contributor was Mr. Samuel Laird, of Fayette County, who gave about $12,000. The next largest donations were made by Messrs. L. L. Warren, Caldwell Campbell, and B. F. Avery, who first and last gave over $10,000 each. Dr. John W. Scott has given, in different ways, about $10,000. Mr. A. M. January and Mrs. M. A. Wilson each contributed $5,000 or over, and a large number $1,000 or more, and a still larger number have given in smaller sums. Mr. David Sayre erected at a cost of $5,000 the "Sayre Hall" for a library. Its graduates number 931, and now fill or have filled many posts of honor and trust, especially in the south and west.

Prof. Ormond Beatty, long connected with the college, was chosen to succeed Dr. Breckinridge as president, September 1, 1871, and still (1885) holds the office. A new building was completed in 1872; enlarged facilities of instruction in the way of books, apparatus, a larger faculty, and a fuller course of studies betoken increased prosperity and usefulness in the future.

Other colleges were established in Kentucky very early—prior to Centre College, perhaps—but none of them now exist, and some of them are even forgotten. The Southern College, at Bowling Green, was established prior to 1820. In that year the legislature passed an act appropriating "one-half of the profits of the Lexington branch of the Commonwealth's Bank to Transylvania University; one-third of the profits of the Harrodsburg branch, to purchase a library and philosophical apparatus for Centre College, and a like sum from the Bowling Green branch for the like purpose of the Southern College of Kentucky."

Augusta College was founded in 1822. This is claimed as the first college established in the world, under the patronage of the Methodist Episcopal Church. During its career, extending over a third of a century or more, it had among its presidents some distinguished men, viz.: Rev. Martin Ruter, Rev. Joseph S. Tomlinson, Rev. Henry B. Bascom, Rev. Burr H. McCown, and others equally noted. Its library at one time contained about 2,500 volumes. The college building was destroyed by fire in 1852, but was immediately rebuilt, and a few years later the college went down. Since it ceased to exist the building has been used for a high school.

The first school of a high grade established in the State, under the auspices of the Roman Catholic Church, was St. Joseph's College at Bardstown. It was chartered by the legislature December 24, 1825, and soon became the leading educational institution of that church in the State.

A female academy, the first in the west, and among the first in the United States, was established, in 1806, by Rev. John Lyle. It was a Protestant school and was quite prosperous for several years. Located at Paris, in the heart of the thickly settled portion of the State, it sometimes had 300 pupils or more. But after a few years of prosperity it passed out of existence.

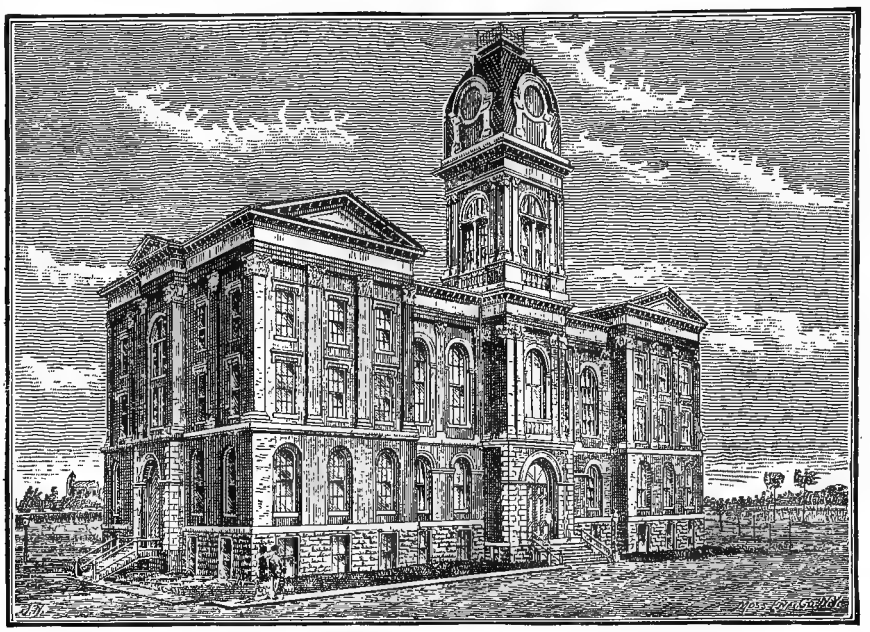
Bacon College was chartered in 1836. It was originally located at Georgetown, but in 1840 was removed to Harrodsburg, and in 1865 was merged into Kentucky University. St. Mary's College, in Marion County (Roman Catholic), was incorporated in January, 1837; Louisville College in 1840, and Marshall College at Hopkinsville the same year; Henderson College in 1842, and Maysville College in 1846. Thus seminaries, academies, colleges and universities sprang up in all parts of the State—too many really for the good of the common schools, which, after all, comprise the true system of popular education in America. The common schools languish in proportion to the increase of colleges, academies, and other private schools. No State in the Union is better supplied with educational institutions of a higher grade than Kentucky, but her common school system, although being improved every year, is still very deficient. Among first-class schools, now in successful operation, may be mentioned Kentucky University, and the Agricultural and Mechanical College at Lexington, Centre College at Danville, Kentucky Military Institute near Frankfort, Central University at Richmond, Cumberland College at Princeton, with a college, academy, seminary, or other private school in every town of any importance in the State.

The Kentucky Military Institute, situated six miles from Frankfort, was incorporated under the State laws in 1847, and placed under the control and direction of a board of visitors, appointed by the governor, who, by virtue of his office, is ex-officio inspector of the institute. The superintendent, faculty and cadets are constituted a quasi military corps. The officers are commissioned under the seal of the commonwealth, and are responsible to the board of visitors for the faithful performance of prescribed duties. The institute is a private enterprise, and has always been self-sustaining. The State furnishes the military equipment and assumes supervision over the military organization, but contributes nothing to its support.



The location of the institute is a beautiful one, and is reached by an hour's ride by stage from the State capital over the Frankfort & Harrodsburg Turnpike. The buildings were erected at a cost of $100,000, and are admirably adapted to school purposes. They are heated by steam and lighted by gas, and the excellent taste displayed in arrangement of buildings and grounds commends the establishment to visitors as a place of unequaled beauty. The following is the true aim of the military feature:

> The design of the miltary organization is not only to bring about a just discipline, but to direct to a high purpose the aimless energies of youth, which would otherwise be wasted in unprofitable sport. A robust frame, a manly carriage, and a graceful bodily development, are objects not less worthy than the acquirement of a soldierly knowledge, which may be of great practical value in the chances of life. The esprit de corps excited by this organization creates checks upon willful or thoughtless error, and urges the cadet to an observance of strict propriety, in a degree far greater than would be thought by one not familiar with its workings. The virtues of truthfulness, self-respect and self-reliance are the most direct results of a military education. While this is true, it is also true that the military discipline is entirely subservient to the grander purposes of the intellectual and moral development of the youth. It is but a means, and not the end, of earnest endeavor in the inculcation of subordination to rightful authority. An obedience is sought to be attained from the consciousness of right, and not from the fear of punishment. It is believed that a noble manhood is centered in no other element of character.

Kentucky University is one of the ablest and most renowned institutions of learning in Kentucky. It is located at Lexington, and is a genuine university, complete in every college, with a liberal endowment. It was incorporated in 1858 as a university, and located at Harrodsburg. It grew out of Bacon College, an institution established by the Reformed or Christian Church at Georgetown in 1836, and afterward removed to Harrodsburg. It finally failed through want of sufficient endowment, and about the year 1850 was virtually abandoned. Upon the incorporation of Kentucky University, the funds and property of Bacon College were turned over to it, and the identity of the latter was thus lost in the new institution.

Kentucky University owes its origin mainly to the efforts and zeal of Mr. John B. Bowman, a graduate of Bacon College. He conceived the idea of erecting a great university—a university in the full sense of the word—upon the ruins of old Bacon College, and dedicated his life to the accomplishment of this purpose. He abandoned his business aims, and devoted his time and energies to the raising of a fund for its endowment, and with such material success that within less than six months he had secured $150,000. The college of science, literature and arts, the first regular department of the university, was opened at Harrodsburg in September, 1859, with nearly 200 students. Mr. Bowman was not idle. He raised $5,000 to purchase apparatus, and $50,000 to purchase, as the site for the buildings, the celebrated Harrodsburg Springs, together with 200 acres of land adjacent. In this last he was defeated through the civil war, and other causes. The college edifice and much of the furniture, etc., were destroyed by fire in 1864. About this time a proposition was made to Mr. Bowman to remove the institution to Lexington, Louisville or Covington. The trustees of Transylvania University, in order that Lexington might maintain its character and usefulness as an educational center, proposed to convey the entire property of Transylvania and consolidate it with Kentucky University, on condition that the latter be removed to Lexington, and that it preserve all the Transylvania trusts. This proposition was accepted, and Kentucky University removed to Lexington in 1865, and permanently located in that city. The next year after its removal, Mr. Bowman purchased "Ashland," the homestead of Henry Clay, for the permanent site of Kentucky University and its different colleges; he also purchased the adjoining estate of "Woodlands," which extends within the limits of Lexington, the two estates containing 433 acres of as fine land as lies in the famous blue grass region.

STATE AGRICULTURAL AND MECHANICAL COLLEGE.

The Agricultural and Mechanical College was organized in 1866, largely through the instrumentality of its first president, John Augustus Williams, one of the most eminent educators in the west. In the early part of 1865, congress proposed to donate to the State 330,000 acres of land for the purpose of agricultural and mechanical education. The legislature, astounded at the munificent provision of congress, was somewhat undecided as to the disposal of the donation, when Mr. Bowman came to its aid, and proposed to make the State Agricultural College a department of Kentucky University. He further agreed, if this should be done, to provide an experimental farm, and all the requisite buildings, and to give gratuitous instruction to 300 students, to be selected by the State; and furthermore pledged that the board of curators would carry out, in the agricultural department, the spirit and intent of the act of congress, encouraging the education of the industrial classes.* This was agreed upon, and a bill embodying the spirit of the proposal was presented to the legislature, and, after a rather heated discussion, was passed by a large majority. It was under the provisions of this act that Mr. Bowman purchased "Ashland" and "Woodlands," as already described.

The legislature in 1878 detached the Agricultural and Mechanical College from the University, and established it on an independent basis—the act taking effect on the 1st of July, 1880. A commission had been appointed by the legislature to select a suitable place for the location of the college. Lexington made an offer of the city park, containing fifty-two acres of land, and $30,000 in city bonds; Fayette County added to this sum $20,000 in county bonds, for the erection of buildings or the purchase of land. The legislature accepted the offer, and Lexington became the permanent seat of the Agricultural and Mechanical College. It is growing in importance every year, and is fast becoming one of the most famous institutions of learning in the State.

CHAPTER XXI.

RECENT GROWTH AND PROMISE FOR THE FUTURE.

INTERNAL improvement has received the earnest attention of the legislature and the people of Kentucky from the organization of the State. While it never embarked so deeply and recklessly in the system as others of the Western States in their earlier history, yet it involved itself in debt to an extent that required it years to recover from. The surface of the State is not adapted to the cheap construction of roads and canals as are the prairie States, but it affords an inexhaustible supply of material for road building that is not surpassed by any country in the world, and when a road is once made it requires little work or expense to keep it in good order.

The common highway of travel is one of the best signs or symbols by which to understand an age or people. Something can be learned of the status of society, of the culture of a community, of the enlightenment of a government, by visiting universities and libraries, churches, palaces, and the marts of trade; but quite as much by the roads. For if there is any activity in society, or any vitality to a government, it will always be indicated by the highway, the type of civilized motion and prosperity.

Kentucky is noted for having some of the best as well as some of the worst roads in the country. The turnpike system in the central part of the State, so far as pertains to the excellent quality of the road, cannot be excelled, and the abolishment of tolls would render the system well nigh perfect. In other and less favored portions of the commonwealth, where only "mud pikes" are in use, they are no better than similar roads elsewhere.

The first act of the legislature for the opening of a road, passed after Kentucky became a State, was approved December 14, 1793, and was for a road from Frankfort to Cincinnati. On December 12, 1794, the next act was passed for a road. This was to extend from Madison Court House, or Milford, as it was called, situated about four miles from the present city of Richmond, to the hazel patch, on the road leading from Crab Orchard to Powell's Valley. This was followed by another act in 1795, providing for a road "to commence in the neighborhood of Crab Orchard, and to terminate on the top of the Cumberland Mountain, in the gap through which the present road to Virginia passes." These acts were not always followed by the immediate opening of the roads designated in them. The latter road was not opened for a year after the act was passed, and the road from Madison Court House, etc., was not opened until 1797. The expenses of opening both were paid by State appropriations. The legislature of Kentucky, in 1797, re-enacted a law of Virginia, for the "opening of new roads, and the alteration of former roads, under surveyors appointed by the courts." This act required "that all male laboring persons, sixteen years old, or more, shall work the roads, except those who are masters of two or more slaves over said age; or else pay a fine of 7s 6d for each day's absence, or neglect thus to work." It further provided, "that in the absence of bridges, mill-dams should be built at least twelve feet wide, for the passage of public roads, with bridges over the pier-heads and flood-gates." The surveyors were authorized to "impress wagons, and to take timber, stone or earth, for building roads," the same to be paid for out of the taxes of the different counties. For several years, a number of similar acts were passed by each session of the legislature. On December 21, 1821, the first act was passed, making an appropriation of a specified sum for road purposes. The appropriation was $1,000, and it was for the improvement of the State Road from Lexington, Ky., to Nashville, Tenn., from the Rolling Fork of Salt River, south, over the summit of Muldrow's Hills. As stated in the act, this was "owing to the thinness of the population in the neighborhood, and to the quantity of labor requisite to put in repair that part of the great highway, leading from northwest of the Ohio and upper settlements of this State, to the States of Tennessee and Alabama, and the Orleans country."

Turnpike originally meant a toll-gate, and not a road, but at the present day, the word "turnpike" is usually applied to all macadamized roads. On March 1, 1797, the legislature passed an act, appointing Joseph Crockett "to erect a 'turnpike' at some convenient place, and purchase as much land as may be necessary for that purpose, not exceeding two acres, on the road leading from the Crab Orchard to Cumberland Gap, beyond where the road from Madison Court House intersects said road." To give the reader some idea of the importance of this turnpike (or toll-gate), the act provided that "the turnpike should be farmed out to the highest bidder, who should give bond and security, payable to the governor of the State, for the faithful payment of his bid." When he had complied with this provision, he was allowed to charge the following tolls: "For every person, except post riders, expresses, women, and children under the age of ten years, 9d (12½ cents); for every horse, mare or mule, 9d; two-wheel carriage, 3s; four-wheel carriage, 6s ($1), and for every head of neat cattle going to the eastward, 3d." After paying for repairing the road, and keeping it in good order, the surplus of tolls went to the keeper of the turnpike, or toll-gate.

The introduction of macadamized roads* into Kentucky formed a new era in road building in the State. The first road of this character, authorized by the legislature, was that known as the "Maysville & Lexington Turnpike Road." Gov. Desha was a zealous advocate of turnpikes. In his annual message, December 4, 1826, he recommended the building of a road from Maysville to Louisville, via Paris, Lexington, Frankfort, and other towns between the two points. He suggested several other important turnpikes, and closed with the following words: "The subject of common schools and internal improvements may be made auxiliary to each other. Let the school fund now in the Bank of the Commonwealth ($140,917), the proceeds of the sale of vacant lands, the stock in the two banks belonging to the State ($781,238), and all other funds which can be raised by other means than taxes on the people, be vested in the turnpike roads; and the net profits arising from tolls on those roads be forever sacredly devoted to the interests of education."

The first macadamized road built in the State was from Maysville to Washington, a distance of four miles. By an act of the legislature, passed February 4, 1817, a company was incorporated to build a turnpike road from Lexington to Louisville, and another to build one from Lexington to Maysville, and the capital stock of each company fixed at $350,000, in shares of $100 each. The road from Maysville to Lexington was to pass through Washington, Mayslick, Millersburg and Paris. During the next year turnpike roads were chartered from Louisville to Portland and Shippingport, from Lexington toward Boonesborough, from Lexington to Georgetown, and from Georgetown to Frankfort. In February, a road was chartered from Georgetown to Cincinnati. But with all this legislation on the subject it was not until 1829, that a macadamized road was built in the State.

The legislature, on the 22d of January, 1827, chartered the Maysville & Lexington Turnpike Road Company anew, with a capital stock of $320,000. At any time, according to the provisions of the act, within three years after complete organization of the company, the United States government was authorized to subscribe $100,000, and the State of Kentucky the like sum. Gen. Metcalfe, a representative in congress at the time, and afterward governor of the commonwealth, induced the secretary of war to order a survey for the location of a leading highway and "mail road" from Zanesville, in Ohio, through Maysville and Lexington, in Kentucky, and Nashville, Tenn., to Florence, Ala., and New Orleans. The survey was commenced at Maysville, in May following, by Col. Long and Lieut. Trimble, of the United States engineer department. On the 13th of February, 1828, the Kentucky legislature recommended congress to extend a branch of the national road from Zanesville, Ohio, to Maysville, and "thence through the States of Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama and Mississippi to New Orleans." The resolution instructed the senators from Kentucky, and requested the members of congress "to use their utmost exertions to effect this object." A bill was introduced into the national congress, with an appropriation for this great enterprise, and passed the lower house, but was defeated in the senate by one of the Kentucky senators, John Rowan. Mr. Rowan's action was severely criticized, on the grounds that, but for his opposition, the bill would have passed in the spring of 1828, at a time when President John Quincy Adams would readily have approved it, and thus have secured the prompt completion of the road by national and State aid.

Maysville, with a spirit of enterprise worthy of emulation, and disgusted somewhat at the "wind-work," that, so far, was all that had been done, went to work, and succeeded in getting a charter from the legislature on the 29th of January, 1829, for "the Maysville & Washington Turnpike Road Company." By April the stock was taken, and the road commenced in July following—the first shovel of dirt being thrown on the 4th. The road was steadily pushed forward, and in November, 1830, was completed between the two points, and ultimately extended to Lexington, under an amended charter, entitling it "the Maysville, Washington, Paris & Lexington Turnpike Road Company." On the 29th of April, 1830, a bill was passed by the national house of representatives (by a vote of 102 to 84), "authorizing and directing the secretary of the treasury to subscribe, in the name and for the use of the United States, for 1,500 shares ($150,000) of the capital stock of the Maysville, Washington, Paris & Lexington Turnpike Road Company, to be paid for in the same installments as by the stockholders generally, except that not more than one-third should be demanded during the year 1830." The bill passed the senate by a vote of 24 to 18, one of the senators from Kentucky—George M. Bibb—voting against it, and the other—John Rowan—voting in favor of it, but doing so "under instructions." All the senators from the Southern States voted against the bill, except John McKinley, of Alabama. Of the twelve members of congress from Kentucky, Dr. Nathan Gaither, alone voted against it. But on the 27th of May, twelve days after the passage of the bill by the United States senate, President Jackson vetoed it. Says Mr. Collins:* "This extraordinary measure (Jackson's veto) gave to the road a fame broad as the Union, but of no avail toward its completion—unless it may have stimulated somewhat or aroused afresh the enthusiasm excited the year before by the spirited and independent course of the brave little city, Maysville (by whose name the road has always been best known), and by the additional fact that, on January 29, 1830, the legislature of Kentucky had made it lawful for the governor to subscribe for not over $25,000 in the stock of the company—none of which, however, to be paid until three times the amount required of the State had been paid by the stockholders, in gold or silver or its equivalent." During the year (1830) large sums—large for the time—were subscribed at Lexington, Paris, Millersburg, Maysville, and by Nicholas County, and thirty-one miles of the road were promptly put under contract. The State subscribed different sums at different times, until the total amount of State aid aggregated $213,200—one-half the cost of the road. The total cost of the road from Maysville to Lexington, a distance of sixty-four miles, was $426,400, including thirteen toll-houses and six covered bridges.

The first appropriation made by the State to a turnpike or macadamized road was on January 29, 1830. This appropriation, as we have seen, was based on the condition that private stockholders should subscribe for three times the amount. The State made its first unconditional subscription on January 15, 1831, and to the same enterprise—the road from Maysville to Lexington. The State acted with great caution at first, and made its appropriations slowly and in small sums; but in the great internal improvement storm which swept over the country, and well nigh bankrupted some of the Western States, Kentucky became imbued with the spirit of enterprise, and appropriations were made to the different roads and thoroughfares, until the State had invested in such works over $2,500,000. By the fall of 1837, the subscription of individual stockholders aggregated about $2,000,000 more. Something of the excess to which the spirit of internal improvement was carried, is shown by the following summary of roads, most of them receiving more or less aid from the State, completed, under contract, or in contemplation, in the fall of 1837: the Maysville & Lexington, 64 miles in length; Lexington, Danville & Lancaster, 42 miles; Lexington, Harrodsburg & Perryville, 42 miles; Lexington & Winchester, 18 miles; Lexington & Richmond, 25 miles; Lexington, Versailles & Frankfort, 27 miles; Frankfort & Shelbyville, 32 miles; Frankfort, Hardinsville & Crab Orchard, 65 miles; Frankfort & Georgetown, 17 miles; Lexington & Georgetown, 12 miles; Georgetown, Williamstown & Covington, 73 miles; Maysville & Bracken, 11 miles; Maysville & Mt. Sterling, 50 miles; Bardstown & Springfield, 18 miles; Louisville, Bardstown & Glasgow to the Tennessee line, 144 miles; Louisville via mouth of Salt River to Elizabethtown, 43 miles; Elizabethtown & Bowling Green to the Tennessee line, 96 miles; Logan, Todd & Christian, 76 miles; New Market, Lebanon & Washington, 15 miles; Muldrow's Hill and bridge, 5 miles; Versailles to Kentucky River, 12 miles; aggregating a total of nearly 900 miles of road, and a cost to the State of between $2,500,000 and $3,000,000. The cost of building some of these roads was nearly one-third of the cost of building a railroad. The Maysville Road cost $6,662.50 per mile, including bridges and toll-houses, and the road from Louisville to the Tennessee line via Bardstown and Glasgow, cost about $6,736 per mile. The roads enumerated above, were built on the macadamized plan, and cost, including bridges, etc., from $5,000 to $7,350 per mile. In addition to the macadamized roads built prior to 1840, a number of "State roads" were authorized by the legislature; and "ordered surveyed and opened." Most of these were paid for out of the county levies, and received no aid from the State. They were graded, the "dirt thrown from the sides to the center," and had toll gates on them at intervals; the tolls being used in keeping the roads in good condition for travel.

Next to the building of roads the improvement of river navigation early engaged the attention of the legislature. Indeed, the latter has the right of seniority, as the first river improvement act, or the re-enactment of an old law of Virginia, dates back to December 15, 1792. This law imposed "a fine of $2 for each twenty-four hours any obstruction was continued to the passage of fish or boats in any navigable stream—except said obstruction were a dam for the purpose of working a water grist-mill or other water-works of public utility." Another act was passed December 19, 1793, which appointed commissioners to raise a fund for the clearing of the south fork of the Licking River, and opening it for navigation, from its mouth to the junction of Hinkston and Stoner, and also that of the latter fork as high as the mouth of Strode's Creek. Mill-dams already erected, were not required to be removed, but the owners were directed to build such locks and slopes as would allow the passage of all boats that might navigate the streams. An act, December 12, 1794, ordered the removal of mills and fish-dams and other obstructions in Licking River and Slate Creek, by May 1, 1795, under a penalty of £30. This law was repealed December 21, 1799, and an act passed permitting mill-dams across the main Licking, with provisos as to height, locks and slopes.

In 1801 a company was incorporated by the legislature for the purpose of improving river navigation. It was known as the "Kentucky River Company," and had a capital stock of $10,000, divided into shares of $50 each. The stock was apportioned among the different counties, and commissioners appointed to receive the subscriptions as follows: Franklin County, twenty shares, and Christopher Greenup, Bennett Pemberton and Thomas Todd, commissioners; Woodford County, twenty shares, and Robert Alexander, Thomas Bullock and William Steele, commissioners; Fayette County, thirty shares, and James Trotter, John Jordan and Thomas Wallace, commissioners; Clark County, fifteen shares, and David Bullock, Robert Clark, Jr., and Dillard Collins, commissioners; Madison County, twenty-two shares, and John Patrick, James Barnett and John Wilkerson, commissioners; Garrard County, eighteen shares, and John Harrison, Thomas Kennedy and Abner Baker, commissioners; Mercer County, twenty-two shares, and Gabriel Slaughter, James Birney and James Moore, commissioners; Jessamine County, fifteen shares, and William Price, George Walker and Benjamin Bradshaw, commissioners; Scott County, twenty shares, and William Henry, David Flournoy and Bartlett Collins, commissioners; Lincoln County, eighteen shares, and Isaac Shelby, William Logan and William Whitley, commissioners.

The design of the Kentucky River Company was to clear the Kentucky River of all obstructions from its mouth to the mouth of its south fork, which would impede the passage of boats or might be considered necessary to improve the navigation of the river. According to the charter of the company, when the work was completed, and so long as approved by two commissioners appointed by the governor to examine the navigation of the river annually in July or August, the company was allowed to collect tolls as follows: "For each boat not more than fourteen feet wide and thirty feet long, $4; forty-five feet, $5; sixty feet, $6; and 9 cents for each foot larger. For each keel-boat, pirogue, or canoe, of over one ton burden, 12½ cents for each foot in length. For each 100 hogshead or pipe staves or headings, or each 100 feet of plank or scantling, if floated on a raft, 4 cents, or other timber, 12½ cents. Boats loaded with coal, lime, iron or other ore, or household furniture, to pay not over three-fourths of the above rates."

This enterprise proved a failure, and on the 10th of January, 1811, an act was passed which authorized the raising of $10,000 by lottery, under the supervision of eleven commissioners or directors. The amount thus raised was to be expended in "clearing all logs, brush, trees, rocks, fish traps, 'shrubbing' the points of islands, and removing other impediments from the Kentucky River, and its south fork, and Goose Creek, as high up as the salt-works of Gov. James Garrard and sons." This enterprise was likewise a failure, and nothing ever came of it of practical value.

Without going into a detailed account of all the acts, and the various projects inaugurated for the improvement of Kentucky River and its branches, the following summary* may be given: "In 1836, the total estimated cost of locks and dams was $1,950,868; to which was to be added for lock-houses $17,000, hydraulic lime, $102,000, clearing river banks at $300 per mile, $77,250, and 7 per cent, for contingences, superintendence, etc., $150,298; total, $2,297,416, or an average cost per mile of $8,922. The increased cost of the five completed locks over the estimate was, for construction alone, $185,226. The actual cost of the 95 miles was $901,932.70, or an average of $9,494 per mile; at the same ratio, the entire navigation to the middle fork would have cost $2,444,705. The outlay for engineering and instruments, land, removing snags, and other incidental expenses, on the 95 miles, was $72,231 and $52,416 for hydraulic lime."

The improvement of Green and Barren Rivers, has received considerable attention at various times from the State. The first legislative enactment for the improvement of Green River was February 16, 1808. The act made it obligatory upon the several counties lying along a certain portion of the river, to keep it in a navigable condition, and annually, in July, August and September, "to work it with hands from the neighborhood." To "work it" meant to "remove all fish pots, all dams not erected under authority of the legislature, and all logs, to cut and clear away all projecting timber, to shrub all points of islands, and to remove any other obstructions in the channel." An act of the legislature declared the navigable part of the river to be that below the mouth of Knob Lick Creek, in Casey County. A year later this was changed to that below the Adair County line. An act of the legislature, January 18, 1810, provided for the improvement of the branches of the Green River as follows: Muddy River from its mouth up to its Wolf Lick Fork; Big Barren from its mouth to Bays Fork; Pond River from its mouth to within half a mile of Brier Creek; and Rough Creek from its mouth to Long's Ferry. These improvements were to be made by subscriptions raised along the streams, in the country that would be most benefited by the improvement. Every session of the legislature for years passed acts upon acts for the improvement of small rivers and creeks, and declaring them "navigable streams," and thus often giving them "a dignity and importance they did not merit."

As early as 1833, money was expended by the State upon work, surveys, etc., of the Green and Barren Rivers. In 1834, the sum of $15,272 was appropriated for engineering work on the locks and dams, and $40,033 the next year. The State appropriated, for this work, the total sum of $125,000, most which was expended before the close of 1836. In 1834 the estimated cost of four locks and dams in the Green River, and one in the Barren River, was $238,988. The system embraced the improvement of 180 miles of the Green and Barren Rivers, thirty miles in the Green River above the mouth of the Barren, thirty miles in the Muddy River, nine in the Pond River, and nineteen in Rough Creek—268 miles in all. To November 20, 1837, nearly $250,000 had been expended upon the Green and Barren Rivers. The total amount appropriated to complete their navigation up to Bowling Green was $859,126.79. The average cost of the improvement was estimated at $5,010.73 per mile. The gross expenditures upon these rivers from 1843 to 1865, was $269,813.66; gross receipts for the same period was $265,002.59, an excess of $4,-811.07 in expenditures.

A survey of the Salt River, and of the Beech and Rolling Forks (branches), was made in 1837. It was estimated that, with four locks and dams, the Salt River could be made navigable for small boats a distance of about thirty-seven miles from its mouth. The cost of the four locks was estimated at $282,533. It was also estimated that two locks, from the mouth of Rolling Fork to the mouth of Beech Fork, would render navigable about nineteen miles between those points.

The Big and Little Sandy Rivers, though streams of some importance, especially the former, have never received the attention and appropriations that other streams in the State of really no greater magnitude. A survey of the Little Sandy, made in 1837, developed the fact that the stream was "too crooked for the successful navigation of steamboats." The Big Sandy and its west fork were partially surveyed in 1835, but the work was not completed until 1838. The report of the survey estimated, that for "the removal of rocks, snags and leaning trees, and the excavation of a channel through each of the principal shoals or ripples, so as to admit of descending navigation, the sum of $25,300 would probably be sufficient." The improvement of this stream is not yet completed, and appropriations are still occasionally made for the purpose. The sum of $75,000 was appropriated in 1870, and a "chute sufficiently wide, with slope so as to admit the passage of boats, cut in a solid rock in the falls of the Tug Fork." It was estimated to require seven lock and dams on the main stream and the West Fork, and five on the Tug Fork, costing $569,100 to render navigation certain for the inexhaustible supplies of the celebrated Peach Orchard, block and cannel coals." These coals are among the best found west of Pennsylvania, and comprise millions and millions of bushels. Statistics show the exports from the Big Sandy Valley for the year ending July 1, 1870, at $1,219,000 in value. These have greatly increased since that date.

The Licking River received its full share of notice during the rage of internal improvements, and, as we have seen, was one of the first streams coming under legislative enactments, but it did not receive the substantial aid which was given many other streams in the State quite as insignificant. The first survey of the Licking was ordered about 1835–36. In 1837 the survey was continued to West Liberty, a point 231 miles from its mouth. The total ascent in the distance was 310 feet, and to render slack-water navigation feasible twenty-one locks were required, with "lifts varying from nine to eighteen feet." The cost of the improvement up to West Liberty was estimated at $1,826,481, and the time in which it was to be completed four years. The first five locks and dams on the Licking, between Falmouth and the mouth of the river, were put under contract in October, 1837, and the work pushed on with spirit. But in 1842, owing to the great financial pressure of the times, which had existed for several years, the public works throughout the State were almost entirely abandoned. They came to a dead stop on the Licking River, and the outlay, which, up to this time, was $372,520, proved a loss to the State.

This does not include all the river improvements of Kentucky. For many years before the era of railroad building, the improvements of inland streams was agitated, and carried on vigorously. Many projects of this kind were inaugurated, that in the present age would appear supremely ridiculous to us, and that, had they all proved successful, would have cut the State up into water highways, natural and artificial. Enough of the river improvement has been given, to show the extent to which this species of internal improvement was carried in the earlier years of the commonwealth; to notice every individual enterprise of the kind is unnecessary, and would but weary the reader.

Kentucky is not adapted to canals. The uneven surface and the vast beds of limestone underlying it, render canals an "expensive luxury" in the way of internal improvements that the State has not felt able to indulge in to any very great extent. More than one project, however, of this kind, has at different times been agitated, but the canal around the falls of the Ohio, at Louisville, is the only monument to that kind of enterprise in existence in the State. During the internal improvement craze, when the construction of canals became an epidemic in Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, similar enterprises were inaugurated in Kentucky. The most gigantic scheme of this kind, was a canal to connect the Ohio River with the Atlantic Ocean. The following report made by Maj. R. P. Baker, chief engineer, to the State board of internal improvements, is from the senate journal of 1835:

> From the Ohio up the Kentucky River, by locks and dams, to the three forks of the Kentucky; thence up the South Fork and Goose Creek, to the salt works; thence by a canal thirty-six miles long, with 160 feet of lockage, into Cumberland River at Cumberland Ford; thence four miles in Cumberland River to the mouth of Yellow Creek; thence by canal, in the bed of Yellow Creek, to Cumberland Gap; through Cumberland Gap by a tunnel, probably 700 to 800 yards long, and by canal from thence into Powell's River, five miles below; down that river successively into the Clinch and Tennessee, and up the Hiwassee River, by locks and dams; from the Hiwassee, continue the improvements by a canal to the navigable waters of the Savannah, at the head of steamboat navigation on that river.
> Such a canal would outflank the whole chain of the Appalachian Mountains, on the southwest; and in the course of its extent, would cross the various noble rivers, Coosa, Chattahooche, Oconee, etc., which, taking their rise in the chain of the Appalachians, flow into the Gulf of Mexico and the Atlantic Ocean, between the cities of Charleston and New Orleans. This would throw open to the commerce of the counties bordering on the Ohio River, a choice among the numerous markets presented by the vast extent of cotton country; independently of the facilities it would offer for reaching the northeastern cities or European ports, through the ports of Savannah and Charleston.

The average cost per mile of a lock and dam navigation, upon the most perfect plan, will but little, if any, exceed one-half that of a turnpike road. More than three-fifths of the distance on the route proposed would be in the beds of rivers improved for this kind of navigation. The most perfect kind of canal can be constructed for one-half the cost of the most perfect railroad. The experience of the northeastern States has fully settled the question that the cost of transportation on railroads exceeds that upon canals by 200 to 300 per cent. * * * * * The day would not be distant from the completion of such a work, until the demands of commerce would be equal to all the capacities of the Kentucky River improved upon the largest plan proposed. This remark applies with peculiar force to the projected railroad from Charleston to the Ohio River, now undergoing discussion in the legislature of Kentucky.

At this day, when the people are groaning under railroad monopolies, and are ground down by exorbitant tariff rates required to transport their goods and produce to and fro, there can be no doubt or question but that such a water highway between the Ohio River and the Atlantic Ocean would have proven of incalculable value to the country. At the very least, it would have afforded formidable competition to railroad transportation, and have been an important factor in keeping railroad charges at lower figures than are now maintained. It is a matter for regret that the statesmen of half a century ago could not peer far enough into the future to have foreseen the value of this important enterprise, and not allowed it to fail.

The Ohio Canal Company, organized for the purpose of constructing a canal around the falls of the Ohio at Louisville, was incorporated by the legislature on the 10th of December, 1804. Under the act, "commissioners were appointed to open books in seventeen of the most important towns of the State, for the subscription of $50,000 in $50 shares." A clause was added to the charter, authorizing the company to increase their stock to "any amount found necessary to complete the canal." The company was authorized to cut a canal around the falls, construct the necessary locks and dams, and to charge sufficient tolls to keep the work in proper repair, etc. If the requisite sum was not raised by subscription, the company was allowed to raise $15,000 by lottery under rather rigid restrictions. This law was not satisfactory, and an amended act was passed December 20, 1805, by which a quorum for the transaction of business must represent, or consist of, the holders of at least 2,000 shares of the capital stock. It also "increased the capital stock to $500,000; directed the governor to subscribe for 1,000 shares, provided the amount payable by the State should not exceed $10,000 annually; reserved 1,000 other shares for the future disposition of the legislature; required the canal to be cut on the Kentucky side of the river; made it lawful for the United States to subscribe not over $60,000, the States of Pennsylvania and Virginia not over $30,000 each, and those of Maryland, New York and Ohio, $20,000 each; made the work and canal 'real estate, and forever exempt from the payment of any tax, imposition or assessment whatever;' fixed the toll on ships or other sea vessels of 100 tons or under, down to twenty tons, at from $6 to $11.75, and on those exceeding 100 tons, at 12 cents per ton; legalized a lottery to raise not over $30,000; declared the canal should be sufficient for the passage of boats drawing, in low water, not more than three feet, and at least twenty-four feet wide at bottom; and forfeited this charter unless the canal should be begun before December 20, 1808, and be completed before January 1, 1815." The charter was forfeited. Like the preceeding act, it amounted to nothing, and the construction of a canal around the falls seemed as remote as before. On the 30th of January, 1818, a new company was incorporated by the legislature under the title of the "Kentucky Ohio Canal Company," with a capital stock of $600,000, and authority to organize when one-half of the amount was subscribed. The new company, like the old one, accomplished nothing. An amended act of February 10, 1820, removed some of the restrictions from the charter, but even this did not serve to awaken sufficient interest to carry through the proposed improvement.

It was not until 1825, that there seemed a probability of the work being accomplished. The increasing commerce of the west demanded some improvements at the falls of the Ohio, and on the 12th of January, 1825, the legislature chartered the Louisville & Portland Canal Company—a private corporation. The capital stock was fixed at $600,000, and before the end of the year the full amount was subscribed. A subsequent act (December 12, 1829), increased the capital stock to $700,000, and an act passed on the 12th of December, 1831, authorized its increase to an amount "sufficient to pay all costs of construction, and interest on all sums expended up to the time the canal is opened." Work soon commenced, and from 600 to 1,000 men were at once employed and set to work excavating. The work was pushed along as fast as circumstances would permit, and during the year 1831, though still far from being completed, the canal was opened for navigation. The great freshet of 1832 damaged it to an extent that heavy repairs were required. Its total cost of construction, as shown in the report made January 2, 1832, was $742,869.94. This was merely for construction, and does not include the amount necessary to repair it after the great freshet alluded to above.

For many years after the opening of the canal it paid large dividends on the investment. In 1837 the dividends were thirteen, in 1838 eleven, and in 1839 seventeen per cent. Fifty shares of the forfeited stock were sold in 1837, at $121 per share, and, in 1838, 200 shares were sold at $130 per share, the par value being $100 per share. The United States government, under an act of congress, purchased in 1826, 1,000 shares of stock, and shortly after, 1,335 shares more—the total par value being $233,500. In lieu of dividend for 1831, it received 567 shares more, and up to 1842 received $257,778 in semi-annual cash dividends; thus making the total income of the government from this canal, $24,278, and 567 shares of stock more than it invested.

The canal was too small for the accomodation of all the craft upon the Ohio, and its enlargement was determined on. The work of widening and deepening it was commenced in 1860, and continued through the period of the war, and up to 1866, when the funds being exhausted the work ceased. Major Weitzel, United States engineer, in charge of the work, estimated at that time, that $1,178,000 would complete the enlargement. Congress, in 1868, appropriated $300,000 toward its completion; in 1869, $300,000; in 1871, $300,000; in 1871, $300,000; in 1872, $100,000, and in 1874 took final action toward assuming the payment of the bonds still outstanding. Such an arrangement was consummated, and the government took possession of this great public work, and made it a free canal. The benefit to commerce, of this act of liberality on the part of the general government, can scarcely be computed. Under its control, the enlargement of the canal has been completed, and is a master-piece of work. The largest boats that ply on the Ohio River pass through the canal with perfect ease and safety, and no longer are the falls an impediment to river commerce and navigation.

The Ohio River in the early history of Kentucky was the great feature of interest to the people, and its navigation, next to the pack horse, the first mode of transportation they knew. Many of the early settlers, in fact the great majority of them, floated down the Ohio to Limestone (Maysville), to the mouth of the Licking and of the Kentucky, or to the falls, on rafts, barges, and almost every description of water craft, except steam-vessels, and from their landing places, would make their way to the interior settlements. "The location of Louisville," says a late writer, "was due to an obstruction to commerce—the falls of the Ohio—and its growth has been due to the improvement in the methods of transportation." As early as 1776 boats and barges from the headwaters of the Ohio passed down into the lower Mississippi. Col. Richard Taylor, and his brother Hancock Taylor, in that year, 1776, descended from Pittsburgh to the mouth of the Yazoo, and in the latter part of the same year, Gibson and Linn made a trip from Pittsburgh to New Orleans for military stores for the use of the army stationed at Pittsburgh. They returned to the falls the next year, having procured 156 kegs of powder. This was carried around the falls by hand and finally delivered at Pittsburgh according to contract. Tardiveau and Honore, of Louisville, descended to New Orleans in 1782, and for several years afterward continued to make regular trips to the French and Spanish forts on the Lower Mississippi. Their mode of navigation was very slow, and attended with great danger. To make a voyage occupied from six months to a year; the river swarmed with pirates, who would steal and rob, and even murder, if necessary to do so, to secure booty. This system of navigation continued until the era of steamboats.

In the year 1809 Fulton and Livingston commenced their experiments to navigate by steam the Hudson River. As soon as their attempt on the Hudson was crowned with success, they turned their attention immediately toward the great water-ways of the west. They saw that here were the greatest streams in the world, but it may be doubted if they prolonged their vision to the present time, and realized a tithe of the possibilities they were giving to the world. They unrolled the map of this continent, and sent Capt. Roosevelt out to Pittsburgh to go over the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers to New Orleans, and report whether they could be navigated or not. His favorable report of the inspection he made resulted in the immediate construction of the steamboat "New Orleans," which was launched at Pittsburgh in December, 1811, and was the first steamboat to descend the Ohio River. "At this time there were but two steamboats on this continent; these were the North River and the Clermont, and they were employed on the Hudson River. The New Orleans on her first trip took neither freight nor passengers. Her inmates were Mr. Roosevelt, an associate of Fulton, with his wife and family, Mr. Baker, the engineer, Andrew Jack, the pilot, and six hands, with a few domestics."*

*Casseday's History of Louisville, p. 120.

The steamboat "New Orleans" was furnished with a propelling wheel at the stern and two masts; for Fulton believed, at that time, that the occasional use of sails would be indispensable. The boat's capacity was 100 tons, and her speed about three miles an hour. Before her ability to move through the water without the aid of sails or oars had been exemplified, comparatively few persons believed she could be made to answer any purpose of real utility. In fact, the boat had made several voyages before the general prejudice began to subside, and for quite a time many of the river merchants preferred the old mode of transportation, with all its risks, delays and extra expense, rather than make use of such a contrivance as a steamboat, which, to their apprehensions, appeared too marvelous and miraculous for the business of every-day life.

The first appearance of a steamboat on the western waters, produced, as well may be supposed, not a little excitement, admiration and superstition. The time of the "New Orleans'" first downward voyage, was a period of phenomena. A "fiery comet was blazing athwart the horizon," and while lying at the mouth of the Ohio, the steamer encountered the great earthquake of 1811. Many of the ignorant "squatters" along the river believed that the steamboat was the cause of both; that the comet was the harbinger of its approach, and the earthquake was but the result of its appearance. It was, they believed, this flying in the face of Providence, and making a boat to run with "bilin' water" that caused this terrific convulsion of nature. "Presumptuous man had boiled the water, when, if God had wanted it to boil, he would have so made it." People had navigated the river in flat-boats, keel-boats and canoes, and under these the glad rivers went singing to the sea. But man must come with his "fire-boat," and the earth went into convulsions, and terror and desolation brooded over the land. The arrival of the "New Orleans" at Louisville was described in Latrobe's Rambler in America, as follows:

Late at night, on the fourth day after quitting Pittsburgh, they arrived in safety at Louisville, having been but seventy hours descending upward of 700 miles. The novel appearance of the vessel, and the fearful rapidity with which it made its passage over the broad reaches of the river, excited a mixture of terror and surprise among many of the settlers on the banks, whom the rumor of such an invention had never reached; and it is related that on the unexpected arrival of the boat before Louisville, in the course of a fine, still moonlight night, the extraordinary sound which filled the air, as the pent-up steam was suffered to escape from the valve, on rounding to, produced a general alarm, and multitudes in the town rose from their beds to ascertain the cause. I have heard that the general impression among the Kentuckians was, that the comet had fallen into the Ohio; but this does not rest upon the same foundation as the other facts which I lay before you, and which I may at once say, I had directly from the lips of the parties themselves.

The "New Orleans" was detained at Louisville on account of low water, which would not permit her to pass over the falls. In the meantime, she made several trips to and from Cincinnati, and toward the middle of December a rise in the river enabled her to pass the rapids, and successfully "weathering the earthquake," at the mouth of the Ohio, reached Natchez about January 1, 1812, and passed on to New Orleans, where she arrived in safety. As soon as she had accomplished her trip and returned, commerce on the western rivers began to grow, and assume something of importance. Steam navigation opened a new era. From this rude, imperfect steamboat, that made its trial trip amid the throes of earthquake and the blazing of comets, has come the world's Armada, that now plows the waves of every river and sea, until the busy life upon the waters, and its wealth of nations, almost equal those upon the land. From the new era thus inauguarated

> Swift commerce spreads her wings,
> And tires the sinewy sea-bird as she flies,
> Fanning the solitudes from clime to clime.

The "New Orleans" continued to ply between Natchez and New Orleans for some two years. Her voyages, upon an average, occupied about seventeen days. She was finally wrecked, and sunk near Baton Rouge, on her passage up the river

The second steamboat on the Ohio was the "Comet," the name, perhaps, being suggested by the comet which, in connection with the first steamboat and the earthquake, had created so much excitement. It was owned by Samuel Smith, and was built at Pittsburgh by Daniel French, on a patent granted in 1809. It made a voyage to Louisville in 1813, and the next year to New Orleans. It was a small craft, of about only forty-five tons burden. She made two trips between New Orleans and Natchez, and was then sold, her engine taken out and placed in a cotton-gin. Dr. McMurtrie, in his sketches of Louisville, published in 1819, gives a list of the steamboats on the Ohio River up to that date; Ben Casseday, in his history of Louisville, published a third of a century later, gives a similar list, as also does Gov. Reynolds in his "Pioneer History of Illinois." The list,* as given by Dr. McMurtrie is as follows: First, "New Orleans;" second, "Comet;" third, "Vesuvius;" fourth, "Enterprise;" fifth, "Ætna;" sixth, "Despatch;" seventh and eighth, "Buffalo" and "James Monroe;" ninth, "Washington;" tenth, "Franklin;" eleventh, "Oliver Evans;" twelfth, "Harriet;" thirteenth, "Pike;" fourteenth, "Kentucky;" fifteenth, "Gov. Shelby;" sixteenth, "New Orleans;" seventeenth, "George Madison;" eighteenth, "Ohio;" nineteenth, "Napoleon;" twentieth, "Volcano;" twenty-first, "Gen. Jackson;" twenty-second, "Eagle;" twenty-third, "Hecla;" twenty-fourth, "Henderson;" twenty-fifth, "Johnson;" twenty-sixth, "Cincinnati;" twenty-seventh, "Exchange;" twenty-eighth, "Louisiana;" twenty-ninth, "James Ross;" thirtieth, "Frankfort;" thirty-first, "Tamerlane;" thirty-second, "Cedar Branch," thirty-third, "Experiment;" thirty-fourth, "St. Louis;" thirty-fifth, "Vesta;" thirty-sixth, "Rifleman;" thirty-seventh, "Alabama;" thirty-eighth, "Rising States;" thirty-ninth, "General Pike;" fortieth, "Independence;" forty-first, "United States."†

*The names of the boats are given in the order of their construction.

†A steamboat called the "Firefly," it is claimed, was among the first boats built in the west, and also among the first that navigated the Ohio River. No history, however, of Louisville or Kentucky, mentions the fact of the existence of a boat of that name, or of Dr. Thomas Ruble, who is claimed to have been its owner and builder. There was most probably such a boat, but was, doubtless, so very small that it escaped notice in all the histories of that day. Dr. Ruble was quite a prominent man of the early period of Louisville and Kentucky, and was interested somewhat in navigation at that time, but no one now seems to remember anything definitely of the steamboat "Firefly."

The "Vesuvius" was built at Pittsburgh by Fulton, and left that port for New Orleans, in the spring of 1814, under command of Capt. Frank Ogden. She was of 390 tons, and was built for a company of men of New York and New Orleans. The "Enterprise" was built at Brownsville, Penn., by Daniel French, and made two voyages to Louisville in the summer of 1814. On the 1st of December she started to New Orleans with a cargo of ordnance stores, and upon her arrival there was pressed into the United States service by Gen. Jackson. After the close of the war she left New Orleans (6th of May, 1815) and reached Louisville in twenty-five days out. This was the first voyage made by a steamboat from New Orleans to Louisville. The experiment, however, was not satisfactory, as the river was very high at the time, and the boat ran all the cut-offs, over fields etc., leaving the public still in doubt whether a steamboat could ascend the Mississippi when the river was within its banks, with the usually rapid current common in that stage of water.

It was about this time that the steamer "Washington" commenced her career. According to Dr. McMurtrie, she was the ninth boat on the river, but another authority* places her as the fifth. She was built under the personal superintendence of Capt. Henry M. Shreve, whom many Kentucky, Louisville and Cincinnati people doubtless still well remember. The hull of the "Washington" was built at Wheeling, Va., and the engines at Brownsville, Penn. She was the first "two-decker" on the western rivers—the cabin was placed between the two decks. Hitherto steamboats had carried their engines in the hold, but Capt. Shreve placed the boiler of the Washington on the lower deck. This plan was such an obvious improvement that steamboats have retained it to the present day. The engines constructed under Fulton's patent had upright and stationary cylinders; in French's engines, vibrating cylinders were used. But in the "Washington," Shreve caused the cylinders to be placed in a horizontal position, and gave the vibrations to the pitman. Fulton and French used single low-pressure engines; Shreve employed a double high-pressure engine, with cranks at right angles. This was the first engine of that kind ever used in western steamboats. David Prentice had previously used cam wheels for working the valves of the cylinder; Capt. Shreve added his invention of the cam-cut-off, with flues to the boiler, by which three-fifths of the fuel was saved.

The "Washington," on the 24th of September, 1816, passed over the falls of the Ohio on her first trip to New Orleans, and returned to Louisville in November following. While at New Orleans the ingenuity of her construction excited the admiration of the most intelligent citizens of that place. Edward Livingston, after a critical examination of the boat and her machinery, remarked to Capt. Shreve: "You deserve well of your country, young man; but we (referring to the Livingston & Fulton monopoly) shall be compelled to beat you (in the courts) if we can." The "Washington" was delayed at Louisville, by ice in the river, until March 12, 1817, when she started on her second voyage to New Orleans. She accomplished the round trip, arriving at the foot of the falls (at Shippingsport) in forty-one days. The ascending voyage was made in twenty-five days, and from this voyage, dates the actual commencement of steam navigation in the Mississippi Valley. It was now practically demonstrated, to the satisfaction of the public in general, that steamboats could ascend this river in less than one-fourth the time which the barges and keel-boats had required for the same purpose. This triumphal voyage of the "Washington" excited great interest everywhere, but especially in the river towns and cities. The citizens of Louisville gave a public dinner to Capt. Shreve, at which he predicted the time would come when the trip from New Orleans to Louisville would be made in ten days. This may have been regarded as a boastful declaration, but the prediction has been more than fulfilled, for in a quarter of a century the trip was made in a little less than five days. All prejudices against steam navigation being now removed, steamboat building was vigorously prosecuted, as the foregoing list of boats built prior to 1820 shows. But a new obstacle now presented itself, which, for a time threatened to give an effectual check to the spirit of enterprise, which had been thus developed. This was the claim made by Fulton & Livingston to the exclusive right of steam navigation on the rivers of the United States. This claim was openly resisted by Capt. Shreve, and litigation followed. The "Washington" was attached at New Orleans and taken possession of by the sheriff. When the cause came before the district court of Louisiana, that tribunal negatived the exclusive privileges claimed by Fulton & Livingston, which were decided to be unconstitutional. Their claims were finally withdrawn in 1819 and the last restraint on the steamboat navigation of the western rivers was thus removed, leaving western enterprise full liberty to carry on the great work of improvement. This work became so progressive and immense that at one time there were no less than 800 steamboats running on the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers. The era of railroads lessened this number very materially, but there are still a great many boats in operation on these rivers, and river commerce still maintains vast proportions.

The railroad is the most important internal improvement of modern times, and its invention and construction form an interesting part of our history. There is not a single occupation of interest, which the railroad has not radically affected. Agriculture, manufactures, commerce, city and country life, banking, finance, law, and even government itself, have all felt its power. Wholly unknown three-fourths of a century ago, it has become the greatest single factor in the development of the material progress, not only of the United States and the other civilized nations of the earth, but its blessings are being rapidly extended into the hitherto semi-civilized and barbarous portions of the globe. The railroad system of the United States now forms a perfect net work of iron and steel from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from the lakes to the gulf, on which run thousands of freight and passenger cars, loaded with the products of the country, and valuable merchandise from every part of the world, and carrying thousands of thousands of human beings with lightning-like speed from one city to another.

The invention of the railroad, and its introduction in this country, was most opportune as a practical settlement of the question of internal improvement, which had for years been hotly contested. A recent writer upon the subject says:

> In 1796 Tennessee was admitted to the Union, and the same year congress authorized the survey of lands north of the Ohio, and their offer for sale at $2 an acre, with a year's credit, and 10 per cent discount for cash. By the ordinance of 1787 slavery was prohibited within this territory, and the next year the first settlement was made in Ohio at Marietta. The same year Fort Washington, on the site of Cincinnati, was built, and a road constructed by Virginia, about 300 miles long, finished from Alexandria to the Ohio, opposite Marietta. The Ohio Company, in 1787, bought a tract of 5,000,000 acres, extending along the Ohio from the Muskingum to the Scioto, for two-thirds of a dollar an acre, payable in installments and in certificates of the public debt. * * * Population flowed so rapidly into the territory, that, in 1802, the people petitioned for the right to organize a State government. A convention for this purpose was held in November following at Chilicothe. When this was done the most liberal inducements were offered to settlers of the new State. * * * * * * From this date the question of internal improvements began to assume prominence in our politics; and the Cumberland Turnpike, running from Cumberland, Md., to the Ohio, occupied the attention of congress at various times up to 1836, when its control was abandoned to the States. This road cost $6,670,000, and is now merely a highway, a parallel railroad route having deprived it of the importance it once held when it was known as the "National Road." * * * There was need for new methods of inter-communication, the increasing population made every day more apparent. In 1784 the cost of transportation from Philadelphia to Erie is stated to have been $249 a ton, the method being by pack horses principally, which were driven in lines of ten or twelve, each horse being tied to the tail of the one preceding, so that the train was under the management of a single driver. In 1789 the first saw-mill was built in Ohio. The crank for this mill was made in Connecticut, and weighed 180 pounds. It was carried by pack-horses over the mountains to the Youghiogheny River at Simrell's Ferry, and thence shipped by water to Marietta. * *

In 1808, Albert Gallatin, secretary of the treasury, made a report upon the subject of internal improvements. In this report he stated that a great number of roads had been built in the Eastern and Middle States, while few had been constructed south of the Potomac. The roads were chiefly turnpikes, varying in cost from less than $1,000 a mile to $14,000. In five years Connecticut had incorporated fifty turnpike companies, and New York in less than seven years had incorporated sixty-seven companies. The report recommended that $2,000,000 should be appropriated yearly for the next ten years in improving the means of inter-communication between the different parts of the Union, and made suggestions for certain specific measures of this nature. * * * *

On the 1st of January, 1832, it was reported that there were nineteen railroads either completed or in process of construction in the Middle States, and that their aggregate was nearly 1,400 miles. Though congress afforded no material aid to this new era of internal improvements, yet this same year it exempted from duty the iron imported for railways and inclined planes, and actually used for their construction. In 1840, it has been estimated that our yearly average of railroad construction was about 500 miles. In 1850 this average had increased to 1,500 miles. In 1860 it was nearly 10,000, and in 1871 it was stated that enterprises requiring an expenditure of $800,000,000, and involving the construction of 20,000 miles of railroad, were in actual process of accomplishment. In 1872 the aggregate capital of the railroads of the United States, which were estimated to embrace one-half of the railroads of the civilized world, was stated to amount to the sum of $3,159,423,057, and $473,241,055 as their gross revenue.

Thus has the construction of railroads increased with almost unparalleled rapidity, and grown into formidable proportions, becoming, as we have said, the greatest single factor in the developement of our material progress. To better understand this marvelous growth and expansion, a brief glance at the early history of the railroad is not out of place. The first railroad of which we have any account was built in the north of England (in the collieries) nearly two centuries before the introduction of the locomative. Upon this road, which had wooden rails, cars were drawn by horses and mules, and were used in hauling coal from the mines. As early as 1794, the use of the locomotive in the place of animal power was suggested, but none were built until several years afterward, nor did they come into practical use until 1830, upon the opening of the Liverpool & Manchester Railway. The first railroad in this country was built in 1807. It was but a few hundred yards in length, and was constructed for transporting gravel from the top of Beacon Hill down into Charles Street, in the city of Boston. The rails were entirely of wood, and the propelling power the momentum of the loaded cars, which in descending, by means of a rope attachment, pulled the empty cars up, a double track, of course, being necessary to the proper working of the road.

Rude and simple as were these first efforts at railroad building, they suggested plans and designs which time and experience, together with the inventive genius of man, have continued ever since to improve upon. Scientific research demonstrates that what is now reduced to system, and rises to the dignity of science, was discovered through some trivial casualty or circumstance, which falling under the notice of a reflecting mind, gave rise to surprising results. The simple circumstance of a falling apple developed the great law of gravitation. The idea of fortifying a military camp with an insurmountable obstruction behind it, was first suggested to Pyrrhus, King of Epirus (who lived nearly 300 years before the Christian era, and who was the most celebrated warrier of his time), by seeing a wild boar, when hunted to desperation, back himself against a tree, that he might fight his pursuers, without danger of being assailed in his rear. Similar hints have led to the triumph of mechanical art, which it may be said, has culminated in the perfected railroad system of the present day.

In 1827 a railroad was built from the granite quarries of Quincy, Mass., to the Neponset River, a distance of three miles. During the same year, a road nine miles in length was laid out from the Mauch Chunk coal mines of Pennsylvania to the Lehigh River, and in 1828, a road constructed by the Delaware & Hudson Canal Company, from their coal mines to Honesdale, and a commissioner sent to England to purchase rails and locomotives. These locomotives arrived in the spring of 1829, and were the first used in the United States.

The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad was chartered, and work commenced on it in 1828. In the early part of the same year the South Carolina Railroad was chartered by the legislature of that State. It has been claimed that the latter was the first road in the country, undertaken with the intention of of using steam power as a propelling force. It was originally built from Charleston to Hamburg, but afterward extended to Augusta, Ga., and in 1833–34, was the longest railroad in the world, being 130 miles in length. The first locomotive built in this country,* was constructed especially for this road. Its trial trip was made on a small portion of the road out of Charleston, when, according to the Courier of that date, it run "on the wings of the wind, at the varied speed of fifteen to twenty miles an hour; annihilating time and space, and like the renowned John Gilpin, 'leaving all the world behind.'"

The first railroad built in Kentucky, and the first completed west of the Alleghanies, was the old "Lexington & Ohio Railroad," afterward known as the "Lexington & Frankfort," then as the "Louisville, Frankfort & Lexington," and at present, the "Shortline" division of the Louisville & Nashville system. It was originally chartered as the Lexington & Ohio Railroad, and was to extend from Lexington to Portland, on the Ohio River, a village now included in the corporate limits of Louisville. The act of incorporation passed the legislature January 27, 1830, and takes up twelve printed pages in the official proceedings of that body. Among the incorporators were John W. Hunt, John Brand, Richard Higgins, Benjamin Gratz, Luther Stevens, Robert Wickliffe, Leslie Combs, Elisha Warfield, Robert Frazer, James Weir, Michael Fishell, Thomas E. Boswell, George Boswell, Benjamin Taylor, Elisha I. Winter, Joseph Boswell, David Megowan, John Norton, M. C. Johnson and Henry C. Payne. Elisha I. Winter was elected president of the company, but was shortly afterward succeeded by Benjamin Gratz, of Lexington, who, consequently was the second president of the company. Among others who have served as president of the road, are William R. McKee, Thomas Smith, James O. Harrison, W. A. Dudley, James B. Wilder, and Jacob Kreiger, Sr. A preliminary survey followed the incorporation of the company, and was made in April, in order "to ascertain the level, and whether inclined planes and stationary engines would be required, and to furnish the company with an accurate description of the face of the country, to enable them to estimate the cost," etc. The engineer's report of the survey between Lexington and Frankfort, showed the following result: First.—There will be but one inclined plane, about 2,200 feet long, descending one foot in fourteen. All the residue of the road can be graded to thirty feet or less in a mile, which is a fraction over one-fifteenth of an inch rise in one foot. Second.—On that grade there will be no cut deeper than nineteen feet, and but one of that depth. Third.—There will be no embankment over twenty feet high, nor any bridge over thirty feet high. Fourth.—The distance to Frankfort will not be increased two miles in length over the present traveled road. Fifth.—There will be as much rock excavation in the grading as will be required to construct the road. Sixth.—On the thirty feet grade which has been adopted, a single horse is capable of traveling with seven tons' weight, with as much ease as five horses can draw two tons on our present roads in their best condition.

A strong prejudice existed in early times against railroads, and many fair-minded men opposed their construction as being impracticable, and costly beyond their possible value when built. But the friends and advocates of railroads argued that, in almost all places where canals* could be built, railroads could be built also, and at less cost, and that railroads could be built in thousands of places where canals could not be, for the want of water; that they afforded as cheap and safe if not a cheaper and safer mode of communication than canals, and could be traveled in one-third of the time; that they did not interpose any obstacle to the cross-communication of the country, or to the free passage from one part to another of the same farms as canals do; that they may be as eaily crossed as a common turnpike, or other road; that they may be used all the year, while canals are made dry by drouth, or closed by frost; that they are not only constructed at less cost than canals, but are easier kept in repair, and that no improved communication ever invented required so little for repairs as railroads. This system of argument carried the day in favor of the railroad, and left the croakers to croak on to small audiences, while preparations were made for beginning the then important work of building a railroad. The cost of constructing the Lexington & Ohio Railroad was estimated at $1,000,000, a sum that shows railroad engineers were not as extravagant in their estimates for building roads as they are now. The amount was soon subscribed, and the contracts for grading the road between Lexington and Frankfort let, the distance being divided into several divisions to better expedite the work. Railroads were built very different then, and the Lexington & Ohio, it was determined, should be without "flaw or blemish" in its construction. Instead of wooden cross-ties "stone sills" were laid lengthwise, to which the rails were spiked and then soldered. The first stone sill was laid October 22, 1831, at the Lexington end of the road, in the presence of a large assemblage of people, and amid the strains of martial music and the roar of artillery. A description of this event, which occured over half a century ago, will doubtless be of interest to the general reader, and from a chronicle of the time,* the following is taken:

The three military companies were formed for escort duty, and marched to the college grounds, where they met the various societies and individuals. A procession was then formed in the following order: Col. Leslie Combs as marshal and J. R. Coleman as aid, on horseback; Maj.-Gen. Pendleton and staff on horseback; field officers and staff on horseback; officers of the line on foot; Capt. Hunt's artillery in platoons; Gov. Metcalfe supported by Prof. Caldwell, orator of the day, and Rev. W. H. Hall, officiating clergyman; Judges Underwood and Buckner, of the court of appeals; Judge Hickey of the Fayette circuit court; the Hon. R. M. Johnson, R. P. Letcher and T. A. Marshall, members of congress, with several members of the Kentucky legislature; Capt. T. A. Russell, assistant marshal; president and directors of the Lexington & Ohio Railroad Company; Samuel H. Kneas, chief engineer, and the treasurer of the company; contractors and pioneers, with their implements of labor; Capt. Neet's Rifle Guards, in platoons; military band of music; trustees of the town of Lexington and clerk; justices of the Fayette county court and clerk; trustees and professors of Transylvania University; principal of preparatory department and pupils; principal and pupils of Wentworth's Academy; principal and tutors of Shelby Female Academy and pupils; principal and professors of the Eclectic Institute and pupils; strangers; stockholders of the Lexington & Ohio Railroad; Capt. Postlethwaite's light infantry company in platoons; Lieut.-Col. Stephens, assistant marshal; citizens on foot, etc., etc.

A Federal salute was fired at sunrise on the eventful morning, and seven guns when the first stone sill was laid, indicating the seven sections or divisions of the road then under contract. As the procession moved, the various church bells rang out a merry peal, which continued until it reached the place where the ceremony was performed. Arriving upon the ground the military formed a hollow square, within which the civic procession was inclosed. A large number of ladies were present for whom ample accommodations had been made. Prayer was offered by Rev. Mr. Hall, when Elisha I. Winter, Esq., president of the company, handed a hammer to the governor of the State, who drove the nail attaching the first iron rail to the beginning stone sill. The music struck up "Hail Columbia," and afterward "Yankee Doodle," which continued until the artillery ceased firing. Prof. Charles Caldwell then delivered an address, the text of which was internal improvements, after which the crowd dispersed, and the ceremonies were brought to an end.

The work, from this auspicions beginning, progressed steadily but rather slowly. The great pains taken to make a "solid" roadbed, and the labor of laying the stone sills, rendered the work tedious. The contract for preparing and laying the stone sills was given to Holburn & Benson, who received "great praise for executing their work so faithfully, and in a style of beauty and elegance which excited the admiration of all who examined it." By the 1st of August,

*From the Lexington Observer.

1832, one and a half miles of the road were completed, and a "splendid car" put on, and on the 14th the road was formally opened; the car "leaving its moorings at 12 o'clock, with about forty people aboard, among whom were Gov. Metcalfe and other distinguished persons." Six and a quarter miles were completed by the 1st of January, 1833, and "the car" made two regular trips daily for the accommodation of the people. The Lexington Intelligencer, of January 27, 1835, closed a lengthy article on the railroad as follows: "We cannot refrain from congratulating our fellow-citizens of the town and country adjacent upon the new and brilliant prospects which the railroad and the introduction of steam power have opened upon us. It is the beginning of a new era to Kentucky, and to this part of the Union, an era in which the population of the interior country may and will enjoy the commercial facilities which have hitherto been the exclusive property of the seaboard and river population. Interior cities need only to exert their strength and enterprise in constructing works of internal improvement, in order to compete, with certain success, with the most favored of river and seaport towns."

Considerable opposition was encountered from the enemies of railroad building, and from men who believed the project premature and far ahead of the times. They believed like Thomas Jefferson, that the time had not arrived for such improvements. It is told of Thomas Jefferson, that when the New York Grand Canal was begun, Gov. Clinton, in a letter to Mr. Jefferson, asked his opinion of the undertaking. "It is a noble project," replied Mr. Jefferson, "but you are a century too soon." A few years passed, and the great canal was finished, when another letter from Gov. Clinton to Mr. Jefferson announced the fact, with the query: "What do you think of it now?" Mr. Jefferson's reply was: "I now perceive that in regard to your resources and energies, I committed an error of one century in my calculation." Just so it was with the opponents of railroads. They believed the world was not yet old enough for the successful building of railroads, and were ready, at the slightest indication of failure, to exclaim in chorus—"I told you so." Hence, when, one bright day in December, 1835, the iron-horse dashed into Frankfort with a train of cars at his heels, drawn all the way from Lexington, they were forced to admit, that like Jefferson, they had erred in their calculations as to time. Frankfort and Lexington were now connected by rail, and the event was appropriately celebrated by the two cities.

The project, as we have seen, was chartered as the "Lexington & Ohio Railroad," and was so known for several years. In 1847, the legislature issued a charter to the "Louisville & Frankfort Railroad Company," and a company was at once organized under this title, which purchased from the State* that portion of the road between Louisville and Frankfort. The next year (1848), another company was formed, under the title of the "Lexington & Frankfort Railroad Company." This new company purchased from the State the road between Lexington and Frankfort, and in 1851 the two divisions were fully completed and connected, and trains ran through from Lexington to Louisville. This arrrangement was continued until 1857, when the two companies were consolidated, and the title of the road changed to that of the "Louisville, Frankfort & Lexington Railroad." Upon the completion of the Louisville and Cincinnati "Shortline," in the spring of 1869, a branch diverging from the main line at La Grange, and extending to Cincinnati, the title was again changed, this time to the "Louisville, Cincinnati & Lexington Railroad." In 1881 it was purchased by the Louisville & Nashville system, and since that time (and henceforth, perhaps) it has been operated as a division of that immense corporation.

The Charleston & Cincinnati Railroad excited more interest, perhaps, in the early history of railroad enterprise in Kentucky, than any road ever projected in the State. This trunk line was designed to extend from Charleston, S. C., to Cincinnati, Ohio, passing through Lexington, with diverging lines to Louisville, Paris, Maysville and Newport. A lively interest was manifested in the enterprise, and the indications were favorable at one time for its early completion. Some controversy arose, however, between its friends and supporters, and those of the canal already described (which covered nearly the same ground). And it is possible that if sentiment had been concentrated on the one or the other, it might have proved successful; as it was, both projects failed, though grand in their conception. The idea of connecting the southeastern and northwestern States by a railroad or canal, from the Atlantic Ocean to the Ohio River, half a century ago, was a scheme worthy of the greatest railroad magnates of the present day. The importance with which it was considered, is shown by the following extract*: "The project is a magnificent one, whether viewed in reference to its commercial, geographical, political, civil or social influence. Carried into successful operation, it will form a bond of union between the States immediately concerned, which no ordinary political accidents or combinations can dissolve. Completed, it will make Charleston a great commercial emporium, rivaling, or, at least successfully competing with, her elder sisters, in receiving the northwest trade. And if we could for a moment suppose that New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans and Mobile could allow themselves to be governed by a narrow, selfish and short-sighted policy, we might, from all these sources, anticipate strong and interested opposition to this truly majestic project. This anticipation, however, we will not indulge in, but will believe that the intelligent and patriotic of all sections will rejoice to see the whole country prosper."

*The Lexington & Ohio Railroad was sold at auction in Frankfort, on the 12th of January, 1842, to pay the State the sum of $150,000 and interest, which, as security, she had assumed. In this sale, the State became the purchaser of the road.

In February, 1836, the Charleston & Cincinnati Railroad was chartered by the Kentucky legislature. When the news reached Cincinnati, that the bill had passed, the mayor issued his proclamation for an illumination of the city, and a general rejoicing prevailed. A convention was called to meet at Knoxville, Tenn., on the 4th of July, 1836, in the interest of the road. On the 13th of June, preceding the convention, a meeting was held in Lexington, for the purpose of selecting delegates, and the following gentlemen were chosen: Hon. Robert Wickliffe, Benjamin Taylor, William C. Richardson, Henry C. Payne, Leslie Combs, T. C. Turner, Thomas A Russell and Henry Beard. When the convention convened in Knoxville, nine States were represented. The meeting was characterized by harmony and good feeling, and it was confidently believed the work would proceed without delay. A charter had been granted by the States of South and North Carolina, Tennessee and Kentucky, under the name and title of the "President and Directors of the Charleston & Cincinnati Railroad Company." According to the charter, as granted by Kentucky, it was made obligatory upon the company, when reaching the Kentucky line, "so to construct the road that a branch should be made to Louisville, and the main road be so constructed, as to pass through the city of Lexington, and thence to the Ohio River, opposite Cincinnati; and that another branch or prong of said road be constructed from the city of Lexington to the city of Maysville, on the Ohio River." Resolutions were adopted in the Kentucky legislature, recommending the early construction of the road, as "an enterprise of national importance," and requested their senators and representatives in congress to exert their influence in securing an "appropriation from the national government for the same." As an evidence of the interest taken in the road, Lexington alone subscribed for $100,000 of stock, a liberal sum fifty years ago. By the middle of November, 1836, sufficient stock had been subscribed to admit of the organization of the company, and at a preliminary meeting, John C. Calhoun, of South Carolina, was recommended for the presidency of the road. After formally organizing under the title of the "Louisville, Cincinnati & Charleston Railroad," the stockholders held a meeting at Knoxville, on the 9th of January, 1837, to elect officers and directors. The result of the election was as follows: E. D. Mansfield, W. Green and J. W. Bonsall, of Ohio; Robert Wickliffe, William C. Richardson, James Taylor, John W. Tibbatts, J. L. Ludlow and J. B. Casey, of Kentucky; John Williams, J. C. M. Ramsay and Alexander E. Smith, of Tennessee; Robert Y. Hayne, Mitchell King, James Hamilton, Charles Edmondson, J. W. Simpson, B. F. Ellmore, John C. Calhoun, A. Blanding and B. G. Mills, of South Carolina; James Hardy, T. H. Forney and P. Roberts, of North Carolina, directors. Gen. Robert Y. Hayne was unanimously elected president of the company. Surveys were ordered made of the different routes contemplated, and all preliminary steps taken toward inaugurating the work.

An amendment to the charter, designed to relieve the company from their obligation to build the branch to Louisville, was defeated in the legislature at the session of 1836–37. As a matter of interest to herself, Louisville opposed the amendment, and for the time, succeeded in defeating it, whereupon she was assailed by the Lexington press, as having killed the road altogether. Shortly after the defeat of the amendment, however, the proposition was reconsidered, and the amendment finally adopted, thereby revoking that part of the charter applying to the Louisville branch of the contemplated road. But the project had not only attained the summit of its greatness, but had already begun to decline in popularity, and all interest in it finally subsided. It laid down to a Rip Van Winkle sleep, to awake something more than a quarter of a century later, under the name and title of the Cincinnati Southern.

Considerable space has been given to these two railroad projects, because one of them was the first road built in the State, and the other one of the most stupendous schemes of internal improvement conceived of in that early day. Most of the contemplated route of the Charleston & Cincinnati Railroad, has since been covered by the Cincinnati Southern, Kentucky Central and the Knoxville division of the Louisville & Nashville, but had the original road been built, who can tell how different the history of the south might have been. It might have resulted in a reversal of the wealth, influence and importance of the sections, and made the south the great ruling power in the republic, as the north has been, through its vast and improved system of internal communications.

The Louisville & Nashville Railroad is the most important work of internal improvement that has been completed in the State. Its construction was a Herculean task, when the character of the country, through which it passes, is taken into consideration. To build a railroad through the chain of the Muldrow Hills was a triumph of engineering skill, and an enduring monument alike to the men who conceived the project and those who accomplished the great work. The tunnels, bridges, trestles, cuts and fills of the Louisville & Nashville Road, are perfect in their construction, and of such magnitude as would have discouraged and appalled any but men of the most determined energy.

The road was chartered March 2, 1850, and may almost be termed a Louisville institution. To the city of Louisville, and the energy and enterprise of its inhabitants, more perhaps than to any other one influence is the State and the country indebted for this great thoroughfare of travel between the north and the south. Confirmatory of this is the following extract from the New York Courier and Enquirer, of August 20, 1851:

The Louisville papers contain two ordinances, passed by the common council of that city, one authorizing a subscription of $1,000,000 for the construction of a railroad from Louisville to Nashville, Tenn., and the other authorising a subscription to the capital stock of the Jeffersonville & Columbus Railroad Company of $200,000. We believe Kentucky is rather deficient in railroads, compared with some of the Southern States, notwithstanding the eligible position of Louisville as a terminus. This movement, therefore, is important to the internal interests of the State, and will add, if carried out, greatly to the growth and future consequence of her metropolis. Combining the two propositions, we perceive the object of the city authorities, which is to intercept the western trade of the central routes of Indiana and Ohio, eastward, and direct such a would naturally flow to the lower Atlantic States to pass through Louisville, instead of going by way of Baltimore, as is at present the case. Louisville has become emulous of the advantages possessed by Wheeling, and she is (we should infer from this) determined, if the State will not aid her, as Virginia has contributed to the support of the latter, to build her own railroads, and enjoy singly their benefits. We are glad to witness the exercise of a spirit that tends to multiply the facilities of trade, and add to the prosperity of our people, without respect to locality. Kentucky should have abounded with railroads ten years since—Virginia twenty. However, by delaying their measures, they may be the better able to plan, mature and execute them now.

But in a no less degree is Louisville indebted to the Louisville & Nashville Road for its own importance as a great commercial emporium. "To it," says a recent writer, "Louisville owes its commercial influence and prosperity. It made her, with the exception of New Orleans, the leading city of the south; it strengthened the social and commercial ties which bound her to that section; it changed her from a slowly growing, contented provincial town to a progressive and aggressive competitor with larger and richer rivals. For the States of Kentucky and Tennessee it did no less than for Louisville.

The first president of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad was Mr. Levin Shreve, a well-known and prominent business man of Louisville forty years ago. During his administration, work on the road was begun and pushed on toward the Muldrow Hills as rapidly as possible, and the iron laid nearly to that point. But in its earlier history the road met with various financial obstacles, which were not overcome for several years after the work was commenced. Its principal difficulty was in floating its bonds, which a lack of public confidence in its success rendered unsaleable. About this time Hon. James Guthrie and other wealthy citizens of Louisville and of Kentucky and Tennessee became interested in it, and succeeded in securing a number of county subscriptions, which resulted in the completion of 185 miles of the line to Nashville, to which point it was opened for business in November, 1859. About this time financial troubles again threatened, and the road was in imminent danger of going into bankruptcy, but was saved by the action of the city of Louisville, which took stock to the amount of $1,000,000 and in so doing benefited the entire State.* In the earlier history of the road Helm, Guthrie and the Elder Newcomb were the master spirits connected with it, and to them and their indomitable energy its successful completion is mainly due.

The first two of these gentlemen were statesmen and politicians, as well as financiers, while the last, Mr. H. D. Newcomb, aspired to neither politics nor statesmanship, but was an able financier, and a most accomplished and successful business man. He was a native of Massachusets, and located in Louisville about the year 1833. He was for many years—a quarter of a century or more—one of the leading merchants of Louisville. For twenty years he conducted the largest cotton-mill in the west, and aided much in improving and beautifying his adopted city. He was mainly instrumental in rebuilding the Galt House, one of the best arranged and most elegant hotels in the country, and which cost $1,000,000. He became president of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad in 1868, and held the position until his death. Under his administration it became one of the most powerful railroad systems of the south or southwest.

James Guthrie, whose great abilities as a financier were so largely instrumental in carrying the Louisville & Nashville Road through to completion, was a native Kentuckian, and was born near Bardstown, December 5, 1792. He was educated principally at the Bardstown Academy, and, after a few years spent in flat-boating to New Orleans, studied law with John Rowan, was admitted to the bar, and commenced practice in Nelson County. He soon removed to Louisville, and in a short time obtained a lucrative practice. He served repeatedly in both branches of the State legislature, and in 1849, was a member of the constitutional convention, and its presiding officer. He was secretary of the treasury under President Pierce from 1853 to 1857, and a candidate for the nomination to the presidency in 1860, before the National Democratic Convention at Charleston, S. C., but was defeated. He was a delegate to the *Historical sketch of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad.

Peace Conference at Washington in 1861, and also, to the Border State Convention at Frankfort shortly after; he was elected to the United States senate in 1865, but owing to feeble health resigned in 1868. He died in Louisville, March 13, 1869. Mr. Guthrie was a great financier. He amassed a large fortune, and his ability as a financier is illustrated in its management, no less than in that of the national treasury and the affairs of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad.

John L. Helm became president of the Louisville & Nashville Road in 1854, and by his great energy and excellent business management completed it. He was born in Hardin County, July 4, 1802. When but a lad, he entered the circuit clerk's office as a deputy, and was fortunate in attracting the notice of Gen. Duff Green, a prominent merchant and business man of Elizabethtown, who directed his education. At the age of twenty-one Mr. Helm was admitted to the bar, and in 1826 was elected to the lower house of the legislature. He was re-elected again and again, serving eleven years in the house of representatives and six years in the senate. He was elected lieutenant-governor in 1848 on the Whig ticket with John J. Crittenden, and became governor in 1850 upon the resignation of Mr. Crittenden, who was called to the cabinet of President Fillmore, as his attorney-general. In 1867 he was elected governor on the Democratic ticket, and was inaugurated at his residence in Elizabethtown, September 3d (1867), being too ill at the time to go to Frankfort. He died on the 8th of the same month, and on the 13th the lieutenant-governor, John W. Stevenson, was inaugurated governor as his successor.

No three men ever connected with the Louisville & Nashville Railroad (and certainly no road has been more fortunate in the selection of its executive officers) took more interest in its affairs, or exerted greater energy and ability to make it a successful enterprise, than John L. Helm, James Guthrie and H. D. Newcomb. They did what few others could have done at that time; they built and equipped one of the most important railroads ever built south of the Ohio River. Says the writer already quoted: "Success demonstrates so clearly the wisdom of a great undertaking that we fail to do justice to the men whose wisdom, courage and devotion make success possible. There were many dark hours in the early history of the Louisville & Nashville railroad; when the public lost faith in it; when it seemed too vast an undertaking for that section and that time; when bears and skeptics, who always abound, were assuring a deluded public that failure was inevitable. Through all these years Helm and Guthrie and the elder Newcomb, and their associates had Louisville and Louisville's credit and the confidence of her citizens with them. It was invaluble; the money subscribed and the endorsements given finally wrought their perfect work and the road was completed."

In 1857, some two years previous to the completion of the main line to Nashville, the company had built a branch to Lebanon. This branch, and the main line, comprised the Louisville and Nashville system, at the breaking out of the late civil war. To the United States government it was worth much more, during each year of the war, than its entire construction had cost. Louisville became the basis of supplies, and of operations of the armies of the United States, and along its lines, built for the benefit of commerce, the battles raged. The vast importance of this north and south trunk line, had been fully demonstrated by the military movements. It was proposed, at one time, to build, for military purposes, a line branching from the main stem to Knoxville. This work would doubtless have been done had not the war closed when it did. A branch to Knoxville was a favorite idea with Mr. Guthrie, but he was never able to accomplish its construction, and it was left for those who came after him to carry out and complete it. Most of the roads in the south were wrecked during the war, but the Louisville & Nashville, as compared to others, was in a healthy condition, financially. Its management, however, knew that its future success depended largely on the reorganization and co-operation of other roads south of it. Mr. Guthrie and Mr. Newcomb boldly pushed the reorganization. The local business of the road was cared for, and encouraged, and active assistance, resulting in time in absolute control, was lent to the roads in Tennessee, and further to the south. In this way the Louisville & Nashville pushed its lines through to Memphis and Montgomery.*

The Bardstown branch, a road in process of construction from Bardstown to Louisville, was purchased in 1865, and became a feeder, and a part of the reorganized system of the Louisville & Nashville. The Richmond branch was opened in 1868, and the same year the Memphis, Clarksville & Louisville Road was leased. Two years after, the Memphis & Ohio Road was secured, and what is now known as the Memphis division was formally opened. Both lines of road composing the Memphis division, were subsequently (in 1871–72), bought by the Louisville & Nashville Company. The Cecilian branch was purchased in 1871; in 1879 the Edgefield & Kentucky Road, and the Evansville, Henderson & Nashville Road were both bought, and, together, form the Kentucky and Tennessee portion of the St. Louis division. The Louisville, Cincinnati & Lexington Road was purchased in 1881, and now forms an important part of the Louisville & Nashville system, connecting it at Cincinnati with all the Eastern lines. The Cumberland & Ohio Road was leased in 1879, and completed from Lebanon to Greensburg, and shortly after many other additions were made. The Pensacola & Selma was secured, then the Mobile & Montgomery was acquired by the purchase of its capital, and a little later the New Orleans & Mobile became a valuable part of the system. There are, also, embraced in the control of the Louisville & Nashville, by lease or ownership, the Nashville & Decatur, the Owensboro & Nashville, the Glasgow branch, and the Western Alabama Roads; and it owns the greater part of the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Road's stock, which, with its branches, has 521 miles of line. But these do not comprise all the roads in which the influence of the Louisville & Nashville is felt. With the Central Railroad of Georgia, it controls a large system in that State. To sum up its wealth, the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company owns in fee, or through the entire capital stock, thirteen branches, giving an aggregate of 1,437 miles; four divisions, operated under lease, and two by stock majority embrace 433 miles more, and these, with the southern roads, in which it has joint control, give its systems a grand total of 3,034 miles. The road and all its branches are furnished with steel rails, and the equipment, both for frieght and passenger traffic, is first class in every particular, and the equal of any road in the country.

The Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, stretching from ocean to ocean, is an important road to Kentucky, and destined to exert a powerful influence in the development of the State. Traversing its entire length from east to west, with diverging lines at important points, it penetrates the vast coal and mineral and timber regions, and as these are opened up and developed the great value of this trunk line railroad becomes apparent.

The original line of the Chesapeake & Ohio extended from Newport News in Virginia, via Richmond, to the Big Sandy River, and was formed in 1868 by consolidating the Virginia Central and the Covington & Ohio Railroads, comprising a line 512 miles in length. The road became involved financially, and in 1875 passed into the hands of a receiver. In April, 1878, it was sold, and a new company organized with Mr. C. P. Huntington at its head, one of the great railroad capitalists of the present day. The new company expended large sums of money in the reconstruction of all its lines, extending them on the east to Chesapeake Bay, and on the west to Memphis, on the Mississippi River. This formed a continuous line of road 927 miles long, made up of the Chesapeake & Ohio to the Big Sandy River, the Elizabethtown, Lexington & Big Sandy, and Louisville, Frankfort & Lexington to Louisville, and the Chesapeake, Ohio & Southwestern (formerly the Elizabethtown & Paducah), extending from Louisville to Memphis, via Paducah, a distance of 390 miles from Louisville.

The Chesapeake, Ohio & Southwestern, the title of Mr. Huntington's road west of Louisville, is formed of the old Elizabethtown & Paducah Road,* and the road extending from Paducah to Memphis, known originally as the Paducah & Memphis, which was sold under foreclosure in April, 1877. It was purchased by the bondholders, and reorganized as the Memphis, Paducah & Northern in May, 1878. This and the road from Louisville to Paducah were leased and consolidated by Mr. Huntington, thus forming an important link in his trans-continental line.

The Kentucky Central Railroad was agitated as early as 1848, and was originally known as the "Lexington & Maysville Railroad." In March, 1851, Lexington voted $200,000 toward building it, and in September following voted a like amount to the Lexington & Covington Railroad. The work was completed from Lexington to Paris in 1853, and in the fall of 1854 it was finished, and the road completed between Paris and Covington, and trains ran through to Lexington. The road to Maysville was completed a few years later. The lines of the Kentucky Central are being extended south, and are rapidly covering the last of the old route of the projected Charleston & Cincinnati Road. In the reorganization of the Chesapeake & Ohio, the Kentucky Central passed into the hands of Mr. Huntington, and forms the Cincinnati division of his road.

The Cincinnati Southern is a great trunk line road, extending from Cincinnati, Ohio, to Chattanooga, Tenn., and passing north and south through Kentucky, and through the towns of Williamstown, Georgetown, Lexington, Nicholasville, Danville, Somerset, etc. It was built principally by Cincinnati and Cincinnati capital, and is one of the finest conditioned and equipped roads in the State. Its cost is variously estimated at from $12,000,000 to $20,000,000. The charter was passed by the Kentucky legislature, and the right of way granted through the State in January, 1872, and the road built as soon thereafter as possible. The completion of this great trunk line between north and south is to some extent the culmination of the old project of the Charleston & Cincinnati Railroad, as it covers much of the route designed for that road.

It was the purpose in building the Cincinnati Southern to make it a formidable rival of the Louisville & Nashville Road, and to bring Cincinnati in stronger competition with Louisville, and win her southern trade. The project was not successful. While it certainly excited a stronger competition between Louisville and Cincinnati, the latter did not, as fondly anticipated, completely eclipse Louisville, or materially turn the tide of southern trade. But a few years passed after the completion of the road, when, under a new regime (the Erlanger system), it was running regular trains into Louisville, and that, too, without a dollar's cost to the city.

Northern railroads terminating at Louisville, or extending their lines into the city, are the Jeffersonville, Madison & Indianapolis, now operated by the Pennsylvania Company; the Ohio & Mississippi; the Louisville, New Albany & Chicago, and the St. Louis Air Line. These roads have all been liberally treated by Louisville and Kentucky, and some of them substantially aided by Louisville. Money was given, and given liberally to the Jeffersonville, Madison & Indianapolis and the St. Louis Air Line, and at a time when they most needed it. These roads afford Louisville, Kentucky and the south close connection with St. Louis, Chicago and the east.

In addition to the railroads mentioned there are others, mostly local roads, now being built and still others in contemplation, which, doubtless, will be under contract in a few years. The most important of these, perhaps, are the Kentucky Union Railroad and the Ohio River Railroad, the first now in course of construction and the latter a projected road of considerable importance, designed to run down the river, tapping the principal towns between Louisville and Paducah. The road has been chartered by the legislature, a company organized and stock subscribed. Several routes, or parts of routes, have been surveyed, and although the project is now lying dormant, it is but a question of time when it will be revived and the road built. The growing demands of the rich section of country through which it is to pass, must sooner or later compel its construction.

The Kentucky Union Railroad was originally chartered in 1854, and re-incorporated in 1880. It extends in a southeasterly course from Lexington to the Virginia State line through some of the richest agricultural and mineral regions of Kentucky. Work is in progress at the present time, and the energy of the men in control of the project will insure its ultimate completion, and through it the development of a mineral section of the State* hitherto possessing few internal improvements or facilities of transportation beyond the ordinary road wagon. So it is with other railroad projects in different parts of the State. The fine timbered valleys, the rich mineral regions, the vast agricultural areas, and the stock-producing portions of the State must soon make the construction of additional railroads an absolute demand of commerce.

The railroad facilities of Kentucky are thus becoming, and must continue to become, more and more extended every year. Its lines at four different points on the Ohio River connect with northern, eastern and western roads. At two of these points the river is spanned by superb bridges, and at a third a bridge is in process of construction (where trains are now ferried over), and will soon be completed; at the fourth trains cross regularly by improved ferriage. At Cincinnati the Kentucky Central (Chesapeake & Ohio), the Cincinnati Southern, the "Short-line" division of the Louisville & Nashville connect by bridges across the river with the Little Miami, the "Bee Line" the "Panhandle" (Pennsylvania Company), the Baltimore & Ohio Roads, etc., etc. At Louisville, Kentucky and southern roads, by means of one of the longest and most magnificent railroad bridges in the world, connect with the Ohio & Mississippi, the Jeffersonville, Madison & Indianapolis, the Louisville, New Albany & Chicago and the St. Louis Air Line; at Henderson the St. Louis division of the Louisville & Nashville crosses, and at Evansville and St. Louis make northern and eastern connections. The Illinois Central and the Mobile & Ohio pass north and south through the "Purchase" district of Kentucky, crossing the Ohio River at Cairo, Ill., where they connect with the St. Louis & Iron Mountain, the Texas & Pacific, the Cairo & St. Louis, and with the Wabash system. A few years more, and energy and enterprise will render the Ohio River no serious obstacle to railway traffic, and trains will cross it to and fro without even slacking their rate of speed.

The railroad bridge across the Ohio River at Louisville is claimed to be the second longest railroad bridge in the world. Its construction was the culmination of a project that originated more than fifty years ago A bridge over the falls of the Ohio was an enterprise, that, if it did not originate with James Guthrie, was long a favorite project of his. As early as 1831–32 a charter was granted by the Kentucky legislature authorizing the formation of a company "to construct a permanent bridge across the Ohio at the falls." Through the influence of James Guthrie, Samuel Gwathney and Daniel McAllister, who visited Indianapolis for the purpose, the passage of the charter by the Indiana legislature was secured at its session in January, 1832. Though the matter was agitated for several years it was finally abandoned for the time. After the close of the war the necessity for closer railroad communications between the sections revived the project, and the required legislation was secured both in Kentucky and Indiana, and the work commenced. It was completed, and the first passenger train crossed over the bridge on the 18th of February, 1870. The State officers and members of the legislature had been invited by the board of trade and city council of Louisville to be present at its formal opening, and most of them accepted the invitation and participated in the interesting proceedings. Mr. Guthrie lived to see his favorite project of spanning the river by a great bridge in process of construction, but died about a year before its completion.

A bridge across the Ohio at Cincinnati was contemplated as early as 1815, but no such enterprise was actually inaugurated until 1856, when the wire suspension bridge between Covington and Cincinnati was commenced. It was completed and opened to the public on the 1st of December, 1866. The structure is a superb model of excellence, and a triumph of mechanical skill and genius, and cost, in round numbers, about $2,000,000. It has a passage way for vehicles and street cars, and walks for foot passengers. The river is also spanned by a railroad bridge—a substantial iron structure—between Newport and Cincinnati. It was opened in 1872, and trains of the Kentucky and southern roads, by this means, run regularly into the city of Cincinnati.

There is in the course of construction at this time (1885), and about completed, a bridge across the Ohio, between Louisville and New Albany, Ind. Another at Henderson, Ky., has been finished within the past few weeks, for the passage of trains. The bridge at Louisville is to have a railroad track, a passage way for vehicles, street cars, etc., and a walk-way for foot passengers; that at Henderson is a railroad bridge only, and was built, principally, by the St. Louis division of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad.

Among the important works of internal improvement are the charitable institutions of the State. They were established and are principally supported by legislative appropriations, and consist of asylums for the insane, the blind, deaf mutes, feeble-minded children, etc. There are, in the State, three asylums for the insane, located respectively at Lexington, Hopkinsville and Anchorage; the asylum for deaf mutes is at Danville; that for feeble-minded children at Frankfort, and that for the education of the blind is at Louisville.

The Eastern Insane Asylum at Lexington was founded in 1816, and was the first institution of the kind established in the western country, and is believed to have been the second State asylum opened in the United States. It was originally known as "Fayette Hospital," and was inaugurated by private individuals. Chief among the projectors of this great public charity, was Andrew McCalla, one of the early citizens of Lexington. He was assisted in his benevolent work by Alexander Parker, John W. Hunt, George Trotter, Thomas January, Lewis Sanders, Samuel Trotter, John Bradford, J. D. Young, David Williamson, Thomas H. Pindell, William Morton, John Pope, E. Warfield, Daniel Bradford, J. Postlethwaite, L. McCullough, John H. Morton, John Hart, James Weir, Robert H. McNair, Samuel Ayers, Thomas Tibbats, and others. They were incorporated early in 1816, under the name of "The Contributors to the Fayette Hospital." On the 1st of March, they organized under the charter, and shortly after purchased the "Sinking Spring" property, on which the present buildings are located.

The corner-stone of the building was laid June 30, 1817, with appropriate ceremonies, and in the presence of a large assemblage of people. The proceedings concluded with an oration delivered by Henry Clay. Before the building was completed, a financial crisis overtook the benevolent projectors of the enterprise, and in 1822, it was deemed advisable to tender the property to the State. The next year the State purchased it, changed its title to the "Kentucky Eastern Lunatic Asylum," and appropriated $10,000 for its benefit. The institution was formally opened May 1, 1824. For twenty years the physicians in charge were Dr. S. Theobolds, Dr. Louis Decognets and others, assisted by the faculty of Transylvania University. In 1844, the management was changed, and Dr. John R. Allen was made superintendent under the new order of things. The legislature appropriated $150,000 in 1867 to the asylum, and its capacity was extended. Dr. W. S. Chipley succeeded Dr. Allen in 1855, as superintendent, a position he held for fourteen years. Since then there have been several superintendents, all of whom have been able physicians, and have discharged their duties with ability. In 1873, upon the establishment of the Anchorage asylum, the name of the Lexington asylum was changed to "First Kentucky Lunatic Asylum." Since 1822, the State has appropriated nearly $1,000,000 to the institution, and the lot of ground on which the original building was erected, has been increased to 300 acres of fine blue grass lands. Every convenience and comfort are afforded the patients, and the institution ranks highly among its class in the United States.

The Western Lunatic Asylum is located in Christian County, about two miles from Hopkinsville. It was established by an act of the legislature passed February 28, 1848. The growth of settlements in the State, and the increase of population, necessitated the measure as a matter of convenience, both as to capacity and locality. The asylum at Lexington could not accommodate all applicants, and before the era of railroads, it required a long journey to reach it from the southwestern portion of the State, and thus made it necessary to have a similar institution in that section. The "Spring Hill" tract of land, containing 383 acres, and lying on the turnpike road east of Hopkinsville, was purchased for $1,971.50. The citizens refunded this sum to the State, and in addition paid $2,000 toward the erection of buildings. In 1849, there was expended $43,052; in 1850, $43,484. The legislature in 1848, appropriated $15,000; in 1849, $20,000; in 1850, $45,000; in 1851, $35,000; in 1852, $43,000; in 1854, $44,017: a total of $202,017. The first patients were received on the 18th of September, 1854, and by the 1st of December, 1857, 208 had been admitted. Dr. S. Annan was the first superintendent, and under his care the institution was well managed.

The main building was destroyed by fire, November 30, 1861, "which caught from sparks from a chimney falling upon the shingle roof." There were, at the time of the fire, 210 patients in the institution, all of whom escaped uninjured, except one, who fastened himself in his room and obstinately resisted all efforts to rescue him, and finally perished in the flames. The court house and other buildings in Hopkinsville were tendered the superintendent for the use of the unfortunate inmates, and everything done by the officials and the people to render the patients comfortable until the asylum could be rebuilt. Twenty-three log-cabins were erected temporarily, at a cost of $90 each, and into these the patients were removed. The legislature in February, 1861, made an appropriation to commence rebuilding, and to January 1, 1867, had appropriated in all $258,930. Add to this the sum of $145,420, the value of the land and other buildings on it, makes the total value of the property then (1867) $404,350, with accommodations for 325 patients.

This asylum bears the name of being one of the best managed institutions of the kind in the United States It has been in charge of Dr. James Rodman, the present able superintendent, since 1863—about twenty-two years. In October, 1871, there had been received the total number of 1,273 patients, of whom 321 were then in the asylum.

The Central Lunatic Asylum is located at Anchorage, a beautiful little village in Jefferson County, twelve miles from the city of Louisville. Like the Hopkinsville asylum, its establishment was due to the inability of the Eastern and Western Asylums to accommodate the insane of the State. It was completed, and opened for patients but a few years ago, and at present it is pretty well filled. Rumors of mismanagement recently caused a legislative investigation of the institution, and a resignation of the superintendent early in the year 1884. He was succeeded by Dr. H. K. Pusey, whose management of it has won the approbation of all interested in its welfare.

The Institution for Deaf Mutes is located at Danville. It was established by an act of the legislature January 7, 1823, and is claimed to be fourth of its kind, in the order of establishment, in the United States. The legislature appropriated $3,000 to aid it, and $100 for each pupil, and in 1824, appropriated $3,000 toward the erection of buildings. In 1852, $3,000 per annum was appropriated for the support of the institution, and in 1865, this sum was increased to $6,000. To this may be added extra appropriations for clothing for the indigent, and for each pupil, thus giving the asylum a very fair endowment. The building and grounds are fine, and well adapted to the purposes for which they are used. The school session continues through the whole year, with the exception of July and August. The branches taught are reading, writing, arithmetic, English grammar, history, original composition, Scripture lessons in books; and by lectures on physical geography, chemistry and natural philosophy. A colored department has been added, and the deaf mutes of that race now receive liberal educational training.

The Kentucky Institution for the Education and Training of Feeble-minded Children is located near Frankfort. The following sketch of the institution was furnished for this work by Dr. Stewart, superintendent:

The Kentucky Institution for the Education and Training of Feeble-minded Children was organized in 1860. An act was passed by the legislature on February 11th, of that year, appropriating $20,000 for the purchase of lands and the erection of suitable buildings.

A tract of land containing sixty-five acres, belonging to Dr. Lloyd, located within one mile of Frankfort, was purchased for $6,500, and the school immediately started in a small frame building on the grounds. Dr. James Rodman, now superintendent of the Western Lunatic Asylum at Hopkinsville, was elected first superintendent, and the first child was received on August 16, 1860. Dr. Rodman resigned February 11, 1863, and Rev. William McD. Abbott was elected to fill his place. He was succeeded by Dr. E. H. Black, who was elected superintendent March 13, 1868, and served until February 25, 1878, when the present superintendent, Dr. John Q. A. Stewart, was appointed by Gov. James B. McCreary.

The plan of the building was to consist of a main building and east and west wings. The main building was commenced October 28, 1860, and completed and occupied the following year. It had capacity for about fifty children and was soon filled. Additions were made to it from time to time, and in 1870 the west wing was completed and occupied. To complete the original plan the east wing will have to be built.

There have been in all about $65,000 appropriated for buildings and grounds, and it will cost about $30,000 more to complete the buildings according to the original designs. Its capacity will then be increased to 250 children.

There are now 156 children in the institution, and are maintained principally by the State. An appropriation of $150 per caput per annum is made for their support.

The feature of industrial education has been introduced into the institution under the administration of Dr. Stewart. It is the first institution of the kind in the United States to adopt industrial education, and the experiment promises to be remunerative and pleasing. By this means physical culture will be made productive, and the pupils prepared to earn a livelihood when discharged from the institution. The apprenticeship to this system is made to contribute to the health and happiness of the amateur artisans, by strengthening their physical powers, and improving by engaging their minds in useful pursuits. In a short time all the carpentry needed by, and all the shoes used in, the institution will be supplied by the craft of the pupils. The girls are being taught all the domestic arts, including hand and machine sewing. This industrial education is not permitted to interfere with the intellectual studies of the children, but is made auxilary to them.

The Kentucky Institution for the Education of the Blind is located in the eastern suburbs of the city of Louisville. The institution was established by act of the legislature in 1842. The preamble to the original act recognizes the fact that the blind were equally entitled with the seeing children to the benefit of the school fund. The appropriation of $10,000 was made, to be paid out of the interest on certain bonds held by the board of education. These bonds had been issued fraudulently by the agent of the State of Kentucky, and at the date of the act referred to it was seriously doubted whether these bonds thus fraudulently issued would be recognized by the State. At that time efforts were made by agents of the State to trace the bonds, and thus relieve the State from their payment. The donation, therefore, to the institution for the blind was deemed of very doubtful value.

It is true, as a matter of history, the legislature was very incredulous as to the feasibility of educating the blind, and the good to result therefrom. This is illustrated by the provisions contained in the act that the school should be established and kept up for twelve months before the very doubtful appropriation could be collected. This was effected, and the school sustained for twelve months by the liberality of the people of Louisville. The appropriation of $10,000 was ultimately collected. It was the only one ever charged to or paid out of the public school fund.

The same individual was the author of the acts establishing the system of common schools and the Kentucky Institution for the Education of the Blind. No specific provision was made in the system of common schools for the education of the blind, and whilst in drafting the act he recognized their equal claims with the other children of the State on the common school fund; and at no subsequent time in his numerous applications to the legislature for aid to the institution, did he ever ask for or receive an appropriation payable from the common school fund. No special tax has ever been levied for its support. At no time has the institution been subjected to the jurisdiction or supervision of the superintendent of public instruction. It is now and always has been one of the public charities of the State, and has been liberally sustained out of its common treasury.

KENTUCKY INSTITUTION FOR THE EDUCATION OF THE BLIND.

The establishment of the school was aided by the kind efforts of Dr. S. G. Howe, the superintendent of the institution for the blind in Massachusetts, and of Mr. William Chapin, the superintendent of the institution for the blind in Ohio, who, with some of their pupils, gave an exhibition before the legislature at Frankfort, and several exhibitions subsequently in Louisville. At these exhibitions, which were largely attended by the citizens, much interest was manifested, and a committee of twenty-one appointed to collect money to support the school for one year. The efforts of the committee were successful, and the school was opened May 9, 1842, on Sixth Street, west side, between Walnut and Chestnut, with Bryce M. Patten, superintendent; Miss Maria Howe, matron, and Otis Patten, one of the pupils from Dr. Howe's school in Boston, as a teacher.

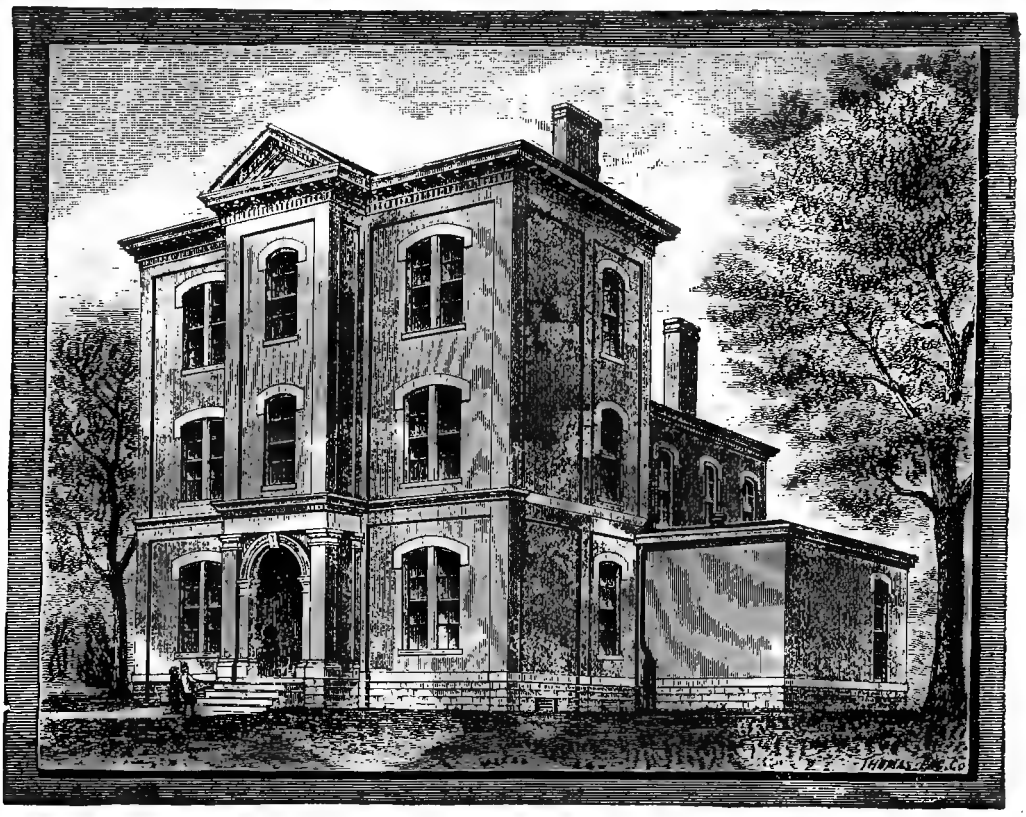
In the year 1844, in virtue of an appropriation made by the legislature, a lot of land was purchased and a building erected on the south side of Broadway, between First and Second Streets. In May, 1847, the ladies of Louisville interested in the school gave a tea party, the proceeds of which, amounting to $500, were spent in furnishing the house. On the 29th of September, 1851, this building was destroyed by fire. The trustees of the University of Louisville at once very liberally tendered the use of the large and commodious edifice erected for the collegiate and law departments of the university, so that the operations of the school were hardly interrupted by the calamity. The legislature promptly made an appropriation for a new building and for the purchase of more extensive grounds. A commissioner was appointed by the governor of the State to select grounds for the institution, and the present site was chosen and a new building begun. On the 8th of October, 1855, it was far enough advanced to remove the school to its new quarters, where it remained with a constantly increasing prosperty until November, 1862, when the building was seized by the medical authorities of the United States army for hospital purposes, and retained until an appeal to the president resulted in a restoration of the building to the State. During this compulsory exit, which lasted five months, the school occupied the building on the workhouse road belonging to the Alexander estate. Since that time the occupation of the present building has been uninterrupted.

The present superintendent, Mr. B. B. Huntoon, an educator of long experience, has been in charge for years. He is an efficient man, and under his administration the institution has become a very model of excellence in its every department.



The American Printing House for the Blind, attached to the institution, and located upon a part of the same grounds, was originally chartered by the legislature in 1860. Its facilities for printing have been increased from time to time, until to day it is the most extensive establishment of the kind in the world. It is the standard printing house for the blind in the United States, and in addition orders for books are constantly being received from Europe and the Canadas. The number of books printed each year runs up into the hundreds, and the demand is rapidly increasing. National aid is received under an act of congress passed March 3, 1879. The annual report of the trustees for that year says:

> By the provisions of this act the American Printing House for the Blind receives a sum of ten thousand ($10,000) dollars a year, with which to supply every public institution for the education of the blind in the United States with embossed books and tangible apparatus, according to the number of its pupils. The entire sum is to be expended in furnishing books and apparatus, and none of the money may be used n the erection or leasing of buildings. At a meeting of the board of trustees, held April 4, 1879, the trust imposed on them by the act was formally accepted.

Prior to this appropriation by congress, the American Printing House for the Blind had been mainly sustained by the beneficent wisdom of the State of Kentucky, as an indispensable means in the education of her own blind. An act of the legislature, passed soon after the printing house was established, appropriated $5 annually for every blind person in the State, according to the United States' census reports, to "aid the institution in printing books in raised letters for the blind, and in furnishing the same gratuitously to the indigent blind, and at cost to others, in accordance with the provisions of the charter of the said printing house for the blind." Other appropriations were made at different times, as the printing house needed them. Indeed, no State in the Union has been more liberal than Kentucky in support of her public charities.

A new printing house has recently been erected. It stands in a corner of the spacious grounds of the Institution for the Education of the Blind, and is an elegant brick building, three stories high, finished off with all the modern improvements. The printing presses run by steam, and although the orders for books are many, and are yearly increasing, the facilities for printing are equal to the demand.

AMERICAN PRINTING HOUSE FOR THE BLIND—LOUISVILLE.

The material wealth and resources of Kentucky are second to no State in the Union. With an area of 37,680 square miles, it contains some of the finest agricultural lands in North America, and its productions comprise almost everything grown in the temperate zone, but are chiefly wheat, corn, oats, grasses, tobacco, cotton, hemp, fruits, etc., etc. No country in the world is more famous for its fine stock; Kentucky thoroughbred horses and shorthorn cattle command higher prices than those of any other section. Coal, of an excellent quality, is found in many portions of the State, notably in the eastern and western portions; also beds of the finest cannel coal lie in certain localities. The State is rich in deposits of lead and iron ore, particularly the latter, and of salt; an excellent quality of marble and lithographic stone are found in the hilly and mountainous regions. With the "soil full of bread, and the earth full of minerals; with an upper surface of food, and underlayer of fuel; with perfect natural drainage, and abundant springs and streams, and navigable rivers; mid-way between the forests of the north and the fruits of the south," Kentucky is rich in her agricultural, animal and mineral productions, as well as highly favored in her geographical position.

The following article, on the material resources of Kentucky, was written by Hon. John R. Proctor, State geologist, for the Encyclopædia Britannica, and is published in this work by permission:

The area of the State has been variously estimated at from 37,000 to 40,000 square miles. The surface is an elevated plateau sloping from the great Appalachian uplift on the southeast to the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers on the north and west. Only that portion of the State, including and lying between Pine or Laurel Mountain, and the Cumberland range, may be said to partake of the mountain structure. These parallel ranges have an elevation of from 2,000 to 3,000 feet above sea-level, whilst the mountains in the Cumberland Valley between these ranges, have an elevation of 3,500. The Cumberland River, near where it passes through a break in Pine Mountain, is, at low-water mark, 960 feet above the sea. Some of the hills, immediately to the north, are as high as Pine Mountain, gradually decreasing in height to the western edge of the Appalachian coal field, where the greatest elevation is less than 1,600 feet above the sea. The eastern coal field, with an area over 10,000 square miles, has an elevation of 650 on the Ohio River, to 1,400 feet of the southwestern edge of the Tennessee line, and 3,500 feet on the southeastern border of the State. The great central, or "Blue Grass region," has an area of about 10,000 square miles, and an elevation of from 800 to 1,150 feet. Although elevated several hundred feet above the drainage level, the surface is that of a gently undulating plateau, with a pleasing topography. The Upper Silurian and Devonian, with an area of about 2,500 square miles, have an elevation of 450 on the northwest, and 800 on the northeastern end, to 1,100 feet where these formations curve around the Lower Silurian on the southwest. In this region are wide stretches of very level country, often with insufficient drainage. Around this central region extends, from the mouth of Salt River to the mouth of the Scioto, a continuous ridge, known as Muldrow's Hill, King's Mountain, Big Hill, and other local names, having an abrupt escarpment on its inner circle, and sloping away from the central uplifted dome of the Blue Grass region, as a broken plateau on the east, and an almost level plateau on the west, where the subcarboniferous limestone determines the topography. This range of hills is one of the prominent features in the State. The subcarboniferous has an area of about 10,000 square miles, with an elevation of from 350 to 600 feet on the southwestern, to 950 in the central region. In the eastern portion of this formation the streams have cut deep gorges in the limestone, but in its central part only the larger streams are open to daylight, and most of the drainage is subterraneous, which gives to that region a peculiar topography—the surface being a series of slight round or oval depressions, through which the surface water escapes to the streams below. Whenever the small passage way, leading downward from one of these sinks, becomes closed, a "pond" is formed. In this formation are the numerous caverns, for which this State is noted. The western coal field has an area of about 4,000 square miles, and an elevation of from 400 feet along the Ohio River, to 850 feet in its southeastern portion. The Quaternary, with an area of 2,500 square miles, has an elevation of about 280 feet on the river bottom lands, and from 350 to 450 on the uplands. The average elevation for the entire State is over 1,000 feet above the sea, and the numerous streams penetrating all portions have cut their channels deep enough to secure ample drainage, and exemption from the dangers of floods, with the exception of very limited areas.

The State has a river boundry of 813 miles of navigable streams:—the Chatterawha or Big Sandy on the east for 120 miles, the Ohio on the north for 643 miles, and the Mississippi on the west for 50 miles. The Chatterawha, Licking, Kentucky, Cumberland, and Tennessee Rivers have their sources in the Appalachain coal-field, and flow through the State to the Ohio River. The Green and Tradewater Rivers drain the western coal-field. Kentucky has many hundred miles of navigable rivers, connecting with the Mississippi system and furnishing a most advantageous means of cheap transport for coal, timber, etc. A system of river improvement, begun by the State some years ago, by which the Green and Barren Rivers from Bowling Green downward, and also the lower portion of the Kentucky River, were made continuously navigable, is being prosecuted still further by the United States government. It is now possible to float down logs, rafts, flat boats, etc., from almost the fountain heads of the rivers.

The climate is very mild and salubrious. The mean annual temperature ranges in different parts of the State from 50° to 55° Fahrenheit. The extreme range is less than in the States north and west. The lowest record at the United States Signal Service station during the exceptionally cold months of December, 1880, and January, 1881, was −8°. During the very hot summer of 1881, the maximum temperature was greater as far north as Chicago than in Kentucky. Cattle remain upon the pasture during the entire winter, with but little additional food, and there is seldom a day, winter or summer, when a man may not perform a full day's work in the open air. The healthfulness of the climate is attested by the low death-rate, and by the strength and vigor of the population. The tabulated measurements of the United States volunteers during the civil war show that the soldiers born in Kentucky and Tennessee exceed all others in height, weight, circumference of head, circumference of chest, and ratio of weight to stature. The speed and endurance of the Kentucky horse, and the superior development of all kinds of domestic animals, are well known. The annual rain-fall ranges in various parts of the State from forty-five to fifty inches, and is probably still higher in the Cumberland Mountains.

With the exception of the more recent formations in the portion of the State west of the Tennessee River, and along the valleys of some of the streams, Kentucky is composed entirely of Paleozoic strata, having present all of the various groups found in the Ohio Valley, from the calciferous sandrock (3a of Dana's Table of Formations) to and including the carboniferous. The united thickness of the various groups is not great in Kentucky—probably not aggregating over 5,000 feet. The entire State is included within the area of the great Appalachian uplift. In the southeast the disturbance is greater, the strata often being inclined at a high angle, the successive undulations gradually diminishing toward the northwest. This disturbance in the southeast is emphasized by the Great Pine Mountain fault extending parallel to the axis of the Appalachian uplift, entirely through the southeastern portion of the State and bringing to the surface in the coal-measures rocks as low as the Clinton group of the Upper Silurian. The axis of the greatest geological elevation in the State is parallel to the above, and passes in a northeasterly and southwesterly direction through the counties of Montgomery, Clark, Madison, Garrard, Jessamine and Boyle, shown on the map by the deflexion of the Kentucky River from its general course toward the Ohio River. This uplift brings to the surface the lowest rocks exposed in the State, the "bird's eye" limestone of the Trenton (4a of Dana), and the dolomite, known as "Kentucky River marble," including what is probably the equivalent of the calciferous sandrock of the New York section. These lowest rocks of the Kentucky section form a triangular area having its depressed apex northwest of Frankfort, and its elevated base in the counties named above. Through these formations, having a thickness of over 400 feet, the picturesque gorge of the Kentucky River has been cut. Next in ascending order we have 150 feet of blue fossiliferous limestone, containing characteristic forms of the Trenton of New York, and 800 feet of limestone and shales containing the fossils of the Hudson River or Cincinnati groups (4c of Dana). These groups make up the well-known "Blue Grass" region of Kentucky, celebrated for the fertility of soil, high agricultural development, and superiority of the horses and other domestic animals produced. The soils of the most fertile portion of this region are derived from the 150 feet immediately above the bird's eye limestone. These rocks are very rich in phosphate of lime, and with careful tillage and proper rotation of crops the lands are not exhausted by cultivation. The blue limestones of central Kentucky are very prolific in fossil forms.

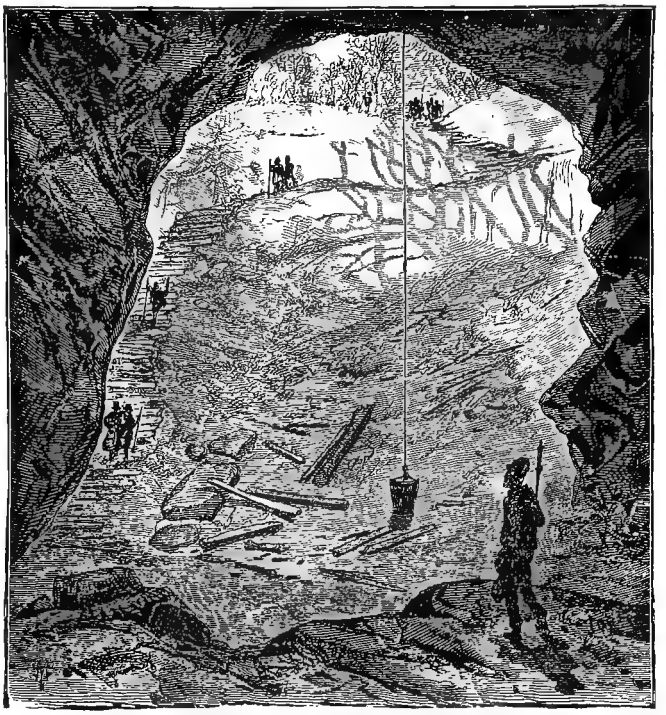
Surrounding this central region are the rocks of the Upper Silurian, averaging in thickness about 100 feet. East of Louisville this formation is about twenty-five miles wide, and in eastern central Kentucky about ten miles wide, decreasing in thickness and in superficial extent toward the southwestern portion. The rocks are mostly magnesian limestone, rich in fossil forms, of which the most characteristic are the beautiful chain corals. The soils of this formation are less fertile than those derived from the blue shell limestone and marly shales of the Lower Silurian. Above the latter formation, and forming the outer portion of the semi-circle or irregular triangle extending around the great central uplift, are the corniferous limestones of the Devonian (9c of Dana). The principal exposure is seen at the falls of the Ohio below Louisville, at low water presenting probably the most beautiful and extensive natural cabinet of corals in the world—a reef of corals perfectly preserved in minutest structure, and of exquisite beauty. The soils derived from these rocks are almost of equal fertility to the best soils of the blue limestone, and the topography is equally pleasing to the eye. The next formation in order is the black shale (10c of Dana), of the Devonian, with a thickness of about 150 feet in the northeast and decreasing gradually to the south and west. This formation is peculiar from the high percentage of petroleum contained in the shale. Before the discovery of oil-wells, oil was distilled from these shales, and the oil in the productive wells of Kentucky is derived from the same source. Where this shale determines the topography, the lands are generally flat, often with insufficient drainage, and are not so productive as analyses would seem to warrant. Doubtless underdraining will increase the yield.



The subcarboniferous rocks, consisting of the several groups identified by fossil remains with the Waverly, Keokuk, Warsaw, St. Louis, and Chester groups (13a, 13b and 13c of Dana), composed of sandstones, shales, and limestones, with a total thickness of over 1,000 feet, cannot here be described in detail. Muldrow's Hill, representing the retreating escarpment of formations which formerly extended over the central Blue Grass region, is composed of these rocks, capped at Big Hill in Madison County with the carboniferous conglomerate. The subcarboniferous limestone region of western and southern Kentucky, drained by the Green and Cumberland Rivers, is characterized for the most part by an excellent soil, well adapted to the growth of Indian corn, wheat, barley, and other cereals, producing a very fine quality of tobacco, and certain grasses in great perfection. This formation is noted for the numerous caverns of large size and great beauty—the best known being the celebrated Mammoth Cave in Edmonson County, which is the largest known cavern in the world. Here many miles of subterranean passages have been excavated by the eroding action of water charged with carbonic acid, assisted in places by the action of the atmosphere. The caverns are beautified by columns and stalagmites formed by the deposition of carbonate of lime from the percolating waters, and by exfoliation of sulphate of lime, taking the form of flowers, rosettes, and other shapes, rendered more beautiful by their power of reflecting light.*

The detailed survey of the carboniferous strata of Kentucky is not yet completed, but enough is known to justify the assertion that the total area in the State is over 14,000 square miles—10,000 square miles of the Appalachian coalfield and 4,000 square miles of the western or Illinois coalfield. In the eastern field two workable coals are found below, and twelve above the carboniferous conglomerate. The eastern field is remarkable for the thickness of some of the coal strata, and the purity of coals, for the large area of excellent cannel coals, and for the ease with which the coals may be mined, being mostly elevated above the drainage level. The thickest portion of the measures is in the synclinal trough between the Pine and Cumberland Mountains—there being a vertical thickness of over 2,200 feet of coal-measure rocks above the drainage level. In the southeastern portion of the eastern field an excellent coking coal has been traced over a wide area. This coal ranges from four feet to eight feet in thickness, can be mined cheaply, and has a very low percentage of ash and sulphur. The western coal-field is a broad synclinal, its axis almost parallel to the general direction of Green River, crossed by undulations, the axes of which extend from northeast to southwest. No workable coal has been opened below the conglomerate, which is thinner than in eastern Kentucky. Twelve coals are present in the measures above the conglomerate. Some of these coals are of excellent quality, although the percentage of sulphur is larger than in the best of the eastern Kentucky coals. The soils of the coal measures are variable in quality. Some of the most productive lands in the State are in the western coal-field. In the eastern field are very fertile valleys, and the uplands in the Cumberland Valley are quite productive. Even the poorest of the coal-measure soils are well adapted to certain grasses and fruits, and will yield good returns from intelligent culture.

There only remain to be noticed the Quaternary strata. The region west of the Tennessee River, and the level plains bordering the principal rivers and above high water level, are composed of a homogeneous buff-colored, silicious loam, known as the "bluff" or loess formation (20b of Dana). This is, with the exception of the alluvial "bottoms" along the rivers, the most recent formation in Kentucky. The deposit has a thickness of from 40 to 50 feet. Owing partly to the presence of numerous land and fresh-water shells (Helix, Cyclostoma, Pupa, Cyclas, etc.), this formation is highly calcareous, giving, from an average sample, 9.6 per cent of lime, and the soils are of marked fertility. This bluff loam rests upon a coarse gravel, varying in thickness from a few inches to thirty feet, composed mainly of water-worn pebbles from the carboniferous conglomerate, and slightly water-worn angular pebbles of chert and hornstone from the lower subcarboniferous and corniferous groups, and coarse angular sand. Intermingled throughout are silicified fragments of many of the Paleozoic fossils to be found in the Ohio Valley. In descending order are beds of white sand and clay, and shales of the Eocene (Tertiary), only slightly exposed in the extreme western part of the State, where the streams have cut deepest.

THE ENTRANCE TO MAMMOTH CAVE (LOOKING OUT).

Nowhere in the State, have evidences of glacial action been found. Over the uplifted Blue Grass region, are often thick deposits of what has been called drift material; but such deposits are composed altogether of silicified remains from the several formations above the Lower Silurian, and the evidences are conclusive that they are the remains of rocks decomposed in situ.

No precious metals have been discovered in Kentucky. The amount of coal hitherto mined has not been as large as the quantity and quality in the State would justify, but the increased facilities of transport have stimulated production, and the output will increase from year to year. In 1870, the amount mined was 150,582 tons, and in 1880, 1,050,095 tons, a larger percentage of increase than any other State in the Union. Iron ores of good quality abound in various parts of the State. In Bath County is a large deposit of Clinton ore, similar to the red fossil ore occurring in this formation from New York to Alabama. The same ore probably is in position along the western base of Pine Mountain. Along the southeastern border of the State it extends for many miles in Tennessee and Virginia, with a thickness of from eighteen inches to seven feet, where the very near proximity to the excellent coking coal of Kentucky, renders it of peculiar value in determining the future development of that portion of the State. In the Cumberland Valley of Western Kentucky, a high grade limonite is abundant in the subcarboniferous limestone, and in eastern Kentucky, a superior iron ore rests upon the top of the St. Louis group of this formation. Excellent carbonates and limonites abound in the eastern coal-measures and have been mined extensively in the northeastern part of the State. In the lower coal-measures of western Kentucky, a number of iron ore strata ranging in thickness from a few inches to five feet.

Galena, associated with sulphate of baryta, occurs in veins in the lower members of the blue limestone of central Kentucky, and also in the subcarboniferous strata in the lower Cumberland Valley, where it is associated with valuable deposits of fluorspar.

Petroleum has been produced from wells in Barren County, for a number of years. The oil is here derived from the Devonian black shale. Heavy lubricating oil is produced from the same formation in Wayne County. There is a wide area in the State, where petroleum may be obtained by boring.

Salt-brine is obtained from wells in the eastern coal field, and in the subcarboniferous limestone of western Kentucky.

Fire and pottery clays abound in the coal measures; pottery clays occur in the surface deposits in valleys of central Kentucky, and in the flat lands where the soil is derived from the decomposition of the Devonian black shale, and the argillaceous shales of the Waverly group. In the Tertiary shales below the gravel bed west of the Tennessee River, are pottery-clays, and fire-clays occur in great abundance.

Building stones of great variety abound in almost every section.

Forests.—Probably two-thirds of the State is yet covered by virgin forests of valuable timbers. At the time of the settlement of the State by the whites it was covered by forests, excepting a portion of the southwestern part, known as the "Barrens," which was a prairie, covered with tall grass, known as "barren-grass." Here only the roots of certain hardy trees had withstood the annual burning of the dry grasses; from these roots, "sprouts" grew every year, only to be destroyed by fire, and the roots or base grew horizontally under the soil. When the country was settled and the fires checked, the saplings springing from these roots soon grew into trees, and the region, was speedily covered with a dense growth, the prevailing timbers being black-jack oak (Quercus nigra), post oak (Q. obtusiloba), and black oak (Q. tinctoria). The outline of these barrens was almost identical with the outline of the cavernous group of the subcarboniferous limestone. On the lower limestones and shales of the subcarboniferous, the most valuable timbers remaining are yellow poplar (Liriodendron tulipfera), white oak (Q. alba), the hickories, and some black walnut (Juglans nigra). The several divisions of the Lower Silurian are characterized by a variation in the forest growth. On the lower rocks the most characteristic timbers are over-cup oak (Q. macrocarpa), white oak, shell bark hickory (Carya alba), black walnut and black ash (Fraxinus sambuci folia). The prevalent timbers on the best soils of this region are sugar maple (Acer saccharinum), blue ash (Fr. quadrangulata), black walnut, pig-nut hickory (C. glabra), hackberry (Celtis occidentalis), mulberry (Morus rubra), buck-eye (Æsculus glabra), honey-locust (Gleditschia triacanthos), box elder (Negundo acer-oides) and Kentucky coffee-tree (Gymnocladus). On the soils derived from the silicious member of the Cincinnati group, the prevalent timbers are yellow poplar, beech, white and red oak, and hickory. White oak is the prevailing timber on the upper portion. On the Upper Silurian lands the timbers are mainly white oak, of superior quality, sweet gum (Liquidambar styraci flua), and water maple (A. rubrum). The growth on the corniferous limestone is very similar to that on the best soils of the blue limestone, with the exception that beeches and yellow poplars are more numerous. On the black shale of the Devonian are over-cup oak, black oak, sweet gum, beech and elm, and in places where the soil is well-drained, yellow poplar, wild cherry, and black walnut. The growth on the flat lands of the Waverly is elm, beech, sweet gum and white oak; on the uplands, chestnut, oak, (Q. Prinus), and small hickories, and on the thin uplands the above timbers and yellow pine (Pinus mitis). The great stores of valuable timbers are in the coal-measures. In eastern Kentucky there is an area of 10,000 square miles of virgin forests of white oak, ash, hickory, wild cherry and other valuable timbers. On the out-crop of the conglomerate sandstone, on the western edge of the coal-field, and on the top of the eastern slope of Pine Mountain and the western slope of Cumberland Mountain, the prevailing timbers are chestnut, oak and yellow pine and hemlock (Abies canadensis), where the streams have cut deep in the rock, with an undergrowth of rhododendrons, and kalmias, and on the dryer slopes azaleas. The above is also the growth where the conglomerate is thick on the eastern out-crop of the western coal-field. In the valley of Red River, on the conglomerate series, there is an area of about 40,000 acres where the prevalent timber is white pine (P. strobus). There are fine forests remaining on the Quaternary west of the Tennessee River. On the lowlands are forests of large cypress (Taxodium distychum). In this region the Catalpa speciosa and pecan (Carya olivæformis) abound and cotton-wood (populus angulata) on the banks of streams. Many valuable timbers in addition to the above, are to be had in various parts of the State. Owing to the large demands for timber on the treeless prairies, and the rapid exhaustion of timbers in the States north of the Ohio River, the extensive forests of Kentucky have an especial value.

With the exception of the area west of the Tennessee River, all the soils are derived from the decomposition of rocks in situ. The soils over an area of about 22,000 square miles are derived from the decomposition of limestones of various geological horizons. The soils of the Blue Grass region, derived from the decomposition of phosphatic limestone and shales, and the soils of a portion of the subcarboniferous limestone groups, are of great fertility, and are easily restored by a judicious rotation with clover and grasses.

The State was peopled almost exclusively with agriculturists from Virginia and Maryland, and agriculture has remained the favorite occupation. Out of a total population of 1,321,011, in 1870, only 44,197 were engaged in manufacturing, mechanical and mining industries. The peculiarity of Kentucky agriculture is its great diversity. It will be seen from the United States census that in each decade, from 1810 to the present time, the State ranked first in the production of one or more staple articles. Thus in 1840, though sixth in rank in population, it was the first in production of wheat and hemp, and the second in the production of swine, Indian corn and tobacco. In 1850 it ranked first in the production of Indian corn, flax and hemp, and second in swine, mules and tobacco. In 1870 it was the eighth State in population, and the eighth in the total value of agricultural products (notwithstanding over one-half of the area of the State was virgin forests), it ranked first in the production of hemp and tobacco, sixth in Indian corn, and eighth in wheat. In 1880 it ranked first in the production of hemp and tobacco and seventh in Indian corn and rye. The decline in the relative position in the production of Indian corn and wheat was not caused by a decreased production, but by the increased production of these cereals by States in the west, where these are almost the exclusive crops. In Kentucky a diversified agriculture is found to be more profitable. Especial care has been devoted to the importation and improvement of domestic animals, until the State has become the great center for fine stock of all kinds. In arriving at this preeminence, the breeders have doubtless been assisted by the climate, the water and the perfection of pasturage. The Blue Grass (Poa pratensis), attains perfection in this region, making a beautiful turf; it grows in the shade of woodlands, and affords an excellent winter pasturage. Virginia, in early times, imported choice horses from England (when the breeders there paid attention to the endurance). The Kentucky breeders have kept those strains pure, and have from time to time added by importations from England until a race-horse having endurance and speed is the result. Probably over 75 per cent of the winnings on the American turf is by Kentucky-bred horses. The attention of many of the Kentucky stock breeders of late years has been turned to breeding trotting horses with very marked results. The production of the very fleet trotting horses of Kentucky is the result of intelligent breeding, under favorable conditions.

Kentucky is the principal tobacco growing State in the Union. In 1870, of the total of 262,735,371 pounds produced in the United States, Kentucky produced 105,305,869 pounds; and in 1880, out of the total of 473,107,573 pounds, Kentucky produced 171,121,134 pounds. The ten principal tobacco growing counties are:

	Pounds.
Christian	12,577,574
Henderson	10,312,631
Daviess	9,523,451
Graves	8,901,434
Mason	6,261,385
Bracken	6,126,635
Logan	6,039,983
Todd	5,808,425
Owen	5,765,351
Trigg	5,667,143

The production of the principal cereals in Kentucky was as follows in 1870 and 1880:

	1870.	1880.
Indian Corn	50,091,006	73,977,829
Wheat	5,728,704	11,355,340
Oats	6,620,103	4,582,968
Barley	238,486	487,031
Rye	1,108,933	676,245

Hemp, since the early settlement of the State, has been a favorite crop, more especially in the Blue Grass region. Contrary to an accepted opinion it has not here proved an exhausting crop where retted upon the land. Wheat succeeds almost as well after hemp as after clover sod. The yield of hemp for the year 1880, was about 15,000 tons. Cotton is grown only to a limited extent west of the Tennessee River, the total production amounting in 1880 to 1,367 bales. The total number of farms in 1870 was 118,422, the average size being 158 acres. In 1850 the average size of farms was 227 acres, and in 1860, 211 acres. Over 60 per cent of the area returned as farms was unimproved or in timber. The area returned as improved or under fence was less than one-third the area of the State.

Before the freeing of the slaves, domestic manufacturing on the farms was carried on to a large extent, and as late as 1870, the State ranked second in the value of domestic or home manufactures. The total value of manufactures was, in 1850, $21,712,210; in 1860, $37,931,240; and in 1870, $54,625,809. The increase since 1870 has been larger than before, and the State will soon rank high as a manufacturing State.

SEVERAL shell-heaps are noted in the Report of the Geological Survey of Indiana for 1873. On page 124, the State geologist, E. T. Cox, in speaking of the food of the Mound-Builders, says: Fresh water bivalves (Unionidæ) and univalve mollusks were also consumed in such quantities that great banks of shells, miles in length, are left to mark the places, where, it is possible, high carnivals were held over fresh-water "clam-bakes." At Clarksville, just below the falls of the Ohio River, in Clarke County, there is a shell-heap extending for a mile or more up and down the river. This locality must have been a favorite place of resort; an ancient Long-Branch where it was possible to find enjoyment and pass a pleasant summer, catching fish at the foot of the falls, where they congregated at certain seasons of the year in such vast numbers as to become an easy prey to the bone hooks and spears used for their capture by these pre-historic people.

Another of these shell heaps is located on the farm of W. T. Aydelotte, six miles below New Albany, and was carefully examined by Dr. E. S. Crosier at the time of its discovery. It is described by the assistant State geologist, William W. Borden, on page 185 of the above-mentioned report, as follows: It is situated in the river bottom, a short distance from the stream, and covers a large space. It is about fifteen or twenty feet high, and has an oval or elliptical form. Several years ago, Mr. Aydelotte had occasion to build a new house, and located it upon this mound above high water mark. In excavating the cellar, the shells were met within a foot below the surface, and are continuous to the bottom of the cellar. A quantity of human bones, including fragments of a skull, with the bones of animals, and quite a number of bone implements, were exhumed by the laborers, and are preserved in the museum of the New Albany Society of Natural History. Subsequently several stone axes manufactured of syenite and granite were found by further excavation, and have been also added to the collection at New Albany. The river bank from Mr. W. T. Aydelotte's farm to New Albany affords a fine field for the collection of Indian relics.

Similar relics are found along the Wabash River. See same report, page 371.

Genealogy of the Boone Family.—It may be interesting to the general reader to learn as much as is known of the genealogy of the family from which Kentucky's honored pioneer descended, and the following is therefore copied from the original record presented to the Polytechnic Library in Louisville, some years ago:

Our genealogy, or pedigree, traced as far back as had come to the knowledge of John Boone (son of George and Mary Boone) wrote by James Boone (son of James Boone, Sr., and Mary, his wife, and grandson of the said George and Mary Boone), in the year of our Lord, 1787:

George Boone I (that is the first that we have heard of) was born in old England.

George Boone II (son of George Boone the First) was born in or near the city of Exeter, being a blacksmith. His wife's maiden name was Sarah Uppey. He died aged sixty; and she died, aged eighty years, and never had an aching bone or decayed tooth.

George Boone III (son of George and Sarah Boone) was born at Stoak (a village near the city of Exeter), A. D. 1666, being a weaver. His wife's maiden name was Mary Maugridge, who was born at Bradswick (a town eight miles from the city of Exeter), in A. D. 1669; the said Mary Maugridge was a daughter of John Maugridge and Mary, his wife, whose maiden name was Milton. They, the said George III and Mary, his wife, had nine children that lived to be men and women, namely: George, Sarah, Squire, Mary, John, Joseph, Benjamin, James and Samuel, having each of them several children, excepting John, who never married. The said George and Mary Boone, with their family, came from the town of Bradwinch, in Devonshire, old England. They arrived at Philadelphia, Penn., in A. D. 1717, September 29th, old style (or October 10th, according to the new style). Three of the children, to-wit: George, Sarah and Squire, they sent in a few years before from Abington, and stayed a few months there; thence to North Wales, and lived about two years there; thence to Oley, in the same county of Philadelphia, where Sarah (being married) had moved to sometime before. This last place of their residence (since the division made in the township of Oley and county of Philadelphia) is called the township of Exeter, in the county of Berks. It was called Exeter because they came from a place near the city of Exeter. He, the said George Boone III, died A. D. 1744, July 27th, about 8 o'clock, aged seventy-eight years, and Mary, his wife, died February 2, 1740–41, aged seventy-two years, and they were decently interred in the Friend's Burying Ground, in the said township of Exeter. When he died he left eight children, fifty-two grandchildren and ten great-grandchildren living—in all seventy—being as many persons as the house of Jacob, which came into Egypt.

George Boone IV (eldest son of George and Mary Boone) was born in Bradwinch aforesaid, July 13th, in the year 1691, and died in Exeter Township aforesaid, aged about sixty-three years and four months. He taught school for several years near Philadelphia, was a good mathematician, and taught the several branches of English learning; was a magistrate for several years. His wife's maiden name was Deborah Howell

George Boone V (eldest son of George and Deborah Boone) was never married, and died in Exeter Township aforesaid, aged about twenty-four years.

James Boone, Sr. (the sixth son of George and Mary Boone) was born in Bradwinch aforesaid, A. D. 1709, July 7th (old style), about one-half past two in the morning then (when it was between 9 and 10 o'clock at night here, in Pennsylvania), and was married May 3, 1735, in the twenty-sixth year of his age, to Mary Foulke (the eldest daughter of Hugh and Anne Foulke), by whom he had fourteen children, and nine of them lived to be grown up, namely: Annie, Mary, Martha, James, John, Judah, Joshua, Rachel and Moses; she, the said Mary, his first wife, died February 20, 1756, at twenty minutes past one o'clock, P. M., aged forty-one years and eleven weeks. John, their second son, just now mentioned, died in 1773, March 29, in the twenty-eighth year of his life, on the 1st day of September, A. D. 1785, at ten minutes past nine at night, in the seventy-seventh year of his age, and was decently interred in the Friends' Burying Ground, at Exeter. And as he was born in England when it was between 9 and 10 here in Pennsylvania, so he died when it was 9 and 10 at night here.

John Boone, Sr., (son of George and Mary Boone) was born in the town of Bradwinch, in Devonshire, old England, on the seventh day of the week, about 11 in the morning, and on the 3d of January, 1701–2, old style, or 1702, January 14 (new style), and he departed this life on the 11th of October, 1785, in the eighty-fourth year of his age (being the eldest of our name and family that we have heard of, and the last of all those of our relations who came from England). He was decently interred in the Friends' Burying Ground, at Exeter, the next day after his decease. He (with his parents, etc.) left England in the sixteenth year of his age, and 'tis remarkable that he lived exactly sixty-eight years here in North America from the day he landed at Philadelphia, and he lived only five weeks and four days after the decease of his brother James.

This genealogy, it will be observed, does not mention the subsequent history of Squire Boone, Sr. (son of George III and Mary Boone). How many children he had is not known, but Daniel, Squire, Edward, George, Hannah, and perhaps two other sisters, Mrs. Grant and Mrs. William Bryan, were residents of Kentucky for a time. Daniel was born February 11, 1731, and Squire about 1737, both in Berks County, Penn. It is not probable that Daniel was the eldest of the family of children, though the eldest of the brothers named. The children seem to have been left orphans about 1745, when they were taken by friends first to Winchester, Va., and thence to Holman's Ford, on the South Yadkin, in North Carolina. Here Daniel met Rebecca Bryan and his fate in a rather romantic way, if the current story of the event may be credited.

When a young man, Boone was out one night with some companions on a "fire hunt." While proceeding through a heavily timbered piece of bottom land, which bordered a small stream, that formed the boundary of Morgan Bryan's plantation, two brilliant sparks in the gloom gave indication that the fire had "shined the eyes" of a deer. Boone, who carried his rifle, ready to shoot the game which the light should hold with its fascinating glare, gave the concerted signal to the torch-bearer who preceded him, dismounted from his horse, and having secured him to a tree, crept cautiously forward. Finding a convenient covert in a clump of hazel and plum bushes, he peered about to discover the exact location of the surprised animal. Again the eyes turned with a steady gaze toward the treacherous light, and Boone raised his rifle to fire, when some mysterious impulse caused him to hesitate. At that instant, the game, startled by some sound or motion which broke the fatal charm, sprang through the underbrush with a rustle and bound, the ardent young hunter following in rapid pursuit.

The chase led toward the cabin, and thinking he had fallen upon a pet animal of the family, he continued his course to the house, impeded in his progress by hunting-traps and dogs which beset him on his nearest approach. Reaching the door he was admitted and welcomed, but before the young hunter regained his breath sufficient to tell his story, a boy of ten years, accompanied by a breathless girl of sixteen, "with ruddy cheeks, flaxen hair, and soft blue eyes," rushed into the room. "Oh father, father," cried the boy, "Sis was down to the creek to set my lines, and was chased by a painter or something. She's too skeart to tell."

It is not probable that this was the first meeting of the young man and maiden, but however that may be, it is said that the circumstances attending this event evoked an interest in each other which eventually brought the principal actors together in marriage.

NOTE 3, PAGE 114.

It is eminently proper that the names of the adventurers who bore subordinate parts in these early surveys should be preserved as far as painstaking researches have revealed them, and for the results achieved in this direction credit is largely due to

Mr. R. C. Collins. In Bullitt's company were Col. James Harrod, subsequently founder of Harrodsburg, John Smith, Isaac Hite, James Sodousky, Abraham Haptonstall, Ebenezer Severns, John Fitzpatrick and others. In the McAfee company were James, George and Robert McAfee, brothers; James McCoun, brother-in-law, and Samuel Adams, a young man and neighbor. In Taylor's company were Matthew Bracken and Jacob Drennon, perhaps others. James Douglass appears to have come alone to join Bullitt. John Finley—not to be confused with the first pioneer—was probably a member of Thompson's company, the other members of which seem to have left no trace of their personality.

NOTE 4, PAGE 115.

In the fall of 1758 Thomas Decker and some others commenced a settlement on the Monongahela River, at the mouth of what is now Decker's Creek. In the ensuing spring it was entirely broken up by a party of Delawares and Mingoes, and the greater part of its inhabitants murdered. There was at this time at Brownsville a fort then known as Redstone Fort, under the command of Capt. Paul. One of Decker's party escaped from the Indians who destroyed the settlement, and making his way to Fort Redstone gave its commander the melancholy intelligence. The garrison being too weak to admit of sending a detachment in pursuit, Capt. Paul dispatched a runner with the information to Capt. John Gibson, then stationed at Fort Pitt. Leaving the fort under the command of Lieut. Williamson, Capt. Gibson set out with thirty men to intercept the Indians on their return to their towns. In consequence of the distance which the pursuers had to go, and the haste with which the Indians had retreated, the expedition failed in its object. They, however, accidentally came on a party of six or seven Mingoes, on the head of Cross Creek, in Ohio, near Steubenville. These had been prowling about the river below Fort Pitt seeking an opportunity of committing depredations. As Capt. Gibson passed the point of a small knoll just after daybreak he came unexpectedly upon them. Some of them were lying down; the others were sitting around a fire making thongs of green hides. Kiskepila, or Little Eagle, a Mingo chief, headed the party. As soon as he discovered Capt. Gibson he raised the war-whoop and fired his rifle; the ball passed through Gibson's hunting-shirt and wounded a soldier just behind him. Gibson sprang forward, and swinging his sword with herculean force severed the head of Little Eagle from his body. Two other Indians were shot down, and the remainder escaped to their towns on the Muskingum.

When the captives who were restored under the treaty of 1763 came in, those who were at the Mingo towns when the remnant of Kiskepila's party returned stated that the Indians represented Gibson as having cut off Little Eagle's head with a long knife. Several of the white persons were then sacrificed to appease the manes of Kiskepila, and a war dance ensued, accompanied with terrific shouts and bitter denunciations of revenge on "the big knife warrior." This name was soon after applied to Virginia militia generally; and to this day they are known among the northwestern Indians as the "Long Knives" or "Big Knife Nation."—Wither's Chronicles of Border Warfare, 1821.

Big Bone Lick is situated in Boone County, about a mile and a half east from Hamilton, on the Ohio River. This Lick, widely known as the original depository of numerous remains of extinct animals, was discovered by Longueil, a Frenchman, in 1739, and was early resorted to by the Indians in quest of game. In 1773 it was visited by various surveying parties, and its appearance is described in Robert McAfee's journal. It extended over about ten acres, which was bare of timber and herbage, and worn away by the hoofs and tongues of the animals that frequented the spot to a level some three or four feet below the original surface. Through this area the creek ran, which is fed on either side by two never-failing streams of salt water. Here the explorers of 1773 found a large number of mammoth bones in the lick or near it, indicating that the animals had stood side by side mired in mud, and so died. Some portions of the back bones lay out upon solid ground, and were used by the surveyors as seats; the ribs were found long enough to serve as tent poles, and one tusk protruded from a bank some six feet, defying the united efforts of six men to remove it. Teeth were found weighing upward of ten pounds, and with a grinding surface of seventy-five inches.

The first collection of these interesting remains was made in 1803 by Dr. William Goforth, then a physician in Cincinnati. In 1804 or 1805 the collector shipped about five tons of the bones to Pittsburgh, with the intention of forwarding them to Philadelphia, or where they could be profitably disposed of for scientific purposes. Unfortunately, this collection remained here until Thomas Ash, an Irish traveler, whose only claim to public notice is based on his literary piracies and base robbery of Dr. Goforth, met the collector. Insinuating himself into the confidence of his victim, Ash entered into a written engagement to secure the sale of these fossils for the benefit of the owner, for which the agent was to receive a percentage of the net proceeds. Thus gaining possession of the collection, Ash shipped it to New Orleans, where he refused an offer of $7,000 for it, and subsequently took it to England. Here he sold the valuable remains at a large price and pocketed the proceeds. Parts of this collection afterward found their way to the Royal College of Surgeons in London, to Dr. Blake, of Dublin, and to Prof. Monroe, of Edinburgh.

No complete description of these fossils exists, but in a letter to Thomas Jefferson, written in 1807, Dr. Goforth gives some interesting facts concerning them from memory: "The part of a head which was in my possession, and which I thought to be the head of the mammoth, appeared small. I only possessed the maxilla superior and maxilla inferior, with the teeth. The maxilla superior was furnished with four large teeth, two on each side of the jaw; the two nearest the jaw were molars, and had two points or cones on each side of the tooth, making double processes thickly enameled on the cones or masticating surface. The maxilla inferior was in two parts naturally, teeth the same as in maxilla superior, and from the appearance of both jaws I concluded they had their full complement of teeth. —I judged the head to which these bones belonged was small, as I had teeth of the same kind more than five times the size of the largest in either jaw —each under jaw with the teeth weighing forty-eight pounds.

"I had a number of teeth ribbed transversely on the masticating surface, and enamelled, weighing from one and a half to twelve pounds each. Of the teeth of the mammoth kind, furnished with double coned or blunt pointer processes on the masticating surfaces, and thickly enamelled, and generally four processes for insertion in the jaw, as many as a wagon and four horses could draw, weighing from twelve to twenty pounds each.

"One small femoris, weight 31 pounds; 4 ribs, weight and length not recollected; they appeared to be so connected with the vertebræ as to throw their edge outward; one tusk, weighing 100 pounds, 21 inches in circumference in the middle, which was the thickest part; one other tusk, weight 150 pounds, 23 inches in circumference, and measuring 10 feet, 6 inches in length; its form thus—J; one horn 5 feet long, weight 21 pounds.

"The bones of one jaw nearly filled a flour barrel; it had four claws, and when the bones were regularly placed together, measured from the os calcis to the end of either middle claw 5 feet, 2 inches. The bones of this paw were similar to those of a bear's foot. Where I found these bones I found large quantities of bear's bones at the same time, and had opportunity of arranging and comparing the bones together, and the similarity was striking in every particular, except the size.

"The vertebræ of the back and neck, when arranged in order with the os sacrum and coccygis, measured nearly 60 feet, allowing for cartilages, though I am not confident the bones all belonged to one animal, and the number of vertebræ I cannot recollect. I had some thigh bones of incognita of a monstrous size when compared with my other bones, which I much regret I neither weighed nor measured, and a number of large bones so much impaired by time, it was fruitless to conjecture to what part of any animal they belonged."

A second collection was made by order of Mr. Jefferson, while he was president of the American Philosophical Society, about the year 1805, which was divided between that society and M. Cuvier, the distinguished French naturalist. A third collection was made in 1819, by the Western Museum Society, and in 1831 a fourth collection was made by Mr. Finnell. In 1840 it was estimated that the bones of 100 mastodons and of twenty elephants, besides other extinct species, had been collected here.

Of the plain on which Louisville is built—including the sites of Portland and Shippingsport—2,000 acres were patented December 16, 1773, in the name of Dr. John Connolly, a surgeon's mate in the general hospital of the royal forces. On the same day 2,000 acres, adjoining and below the former, were patented to Charles de Warrenstaff, an ensign in the (royal) Pennsylvania regiment. In 1774 the latter conveyed his tract to Connolly and Col. John Campbell. In the following year Campbell purchased of Connolly an undivided half on the first mentioned 2,000 acres, and the 4,000 acres were partitioned in such a way that the upper and lower 1,000 acres fell to the share of Connolly. On July 1, 1780, owing to Dr. Connolly having previously been active in the cause of the crown, the upper 1,000 acres were escheated to the State, and Louisville established thereon by an act of the Virginia legislature. The other portion Connolly had conveyed to Campbell in 1778. The proof that any lots were sold on Bullitt's plan is entirely inferential, though reasonably certain. A new survey, however, was made in 1780 by Col. William Pope, and still another by William Peyton, subsequently. None of these early plats are preserved, however, and the earliest recorded plat to be found is that made in 1812 by Jared Brooks, which is just one-half of the 2,000 acres granted to Connolly. (See Collins, Vol. II, 360.)

The names of these first settlers have not all been preserved. From the examination of various depositions, Mr. Collins has discovered the following names: James Blair, James Brown, Abraham Chapline, John Clark, John Crawford, Jared Cowan, John Cowan, John Crow, Azariah Davis, William Fields, David Glenn, Thomas Glenn, Silas Harlan, James Harlan, James Harrod, Thomas Harrod, Evan (or John) Hinton, — Rees, John Shelp, James Wiley and John Wilson. Of Isaac Hite's company, the following are derived from the same authority: Robert Gilbert, James Hamilton, Isaac Hite, James Knox, James McColloch, Alexander Petrey, Jacob Sanduskey, James Sodousky, Benjamin Tutt and David Williams. (See Collins, Vol. II, p. 517.)

At the subsequent meeting of the Indians held at Fort Stanwix, where negotiations were opened October 24, 1768, four grants were made by the Indians to the whites. One to the proprietors of Pennsylvania; one to George Croghan; one to William Trent, attorney for twenty-two traders; and one to his majesty, the king of England. A deed for the one to the traders was executed on the 3d of November, but Sir William Johnson and the commissioners recommended that the chiefs of the Six Nations who had signed it, should carry it into congress and publicly acknowledge the execution of it, at the same time they executed the grant to the king of England and the proprietors of Pennsylvania. Accordingly, on November 5, these deeds being laid upon a table, were executed in the presence of the governor of New Jersey, the commissioners of Virginia and Pennsylvania, and other gentlemen present. The tract thus conveyed to the traders was between the Kanawha and Monongahela Rivers, and was by the traders named Indiana. It was subsequently practically confiscated by Virginia. (See "Plain Facts," published by R. Aitken, Philadelphia, 1781.)

The dimensions are not found on the original draft but the general estimate of twenty feet for each cabin and opening would give the fort a length of about 260 feet and a breadth of 180 feet. The actual situation of the fort was so changed from the suggestion of the plan as to present the end of the structure toward the river. (Romance of Western History, p. 164.)

The Girty family, of which this renegade was but one of several who achieved an infamous notoriety, is thus described by Judge Campbell: "Girty, the father, was an emigrant from Ireland, about eighty years ago, if report can be relied on. He settled in Pennsylvania, where that liberty he sought degenerated in his possession into the basest licentiousness. His hours were wasted in idleness and beastly intemperance. Nothing ranked higher in his estimation, or so entirely commanded his regard, as a jug of whisky. 'Grog was his song, and grog would he have.' His sottishness turned his wife's affection. Ready for seduction, she yielded her heart to a neighboring rustic, who, to remove all obstacles to their wishes, knocked Girty on the head and bore off the trophy of his prowess.

"He left four sons, Thomas, Simon, George and James. The three latter were taken prisoners by the Shawanese, Delawares and Senecas, in that war which developed the military talents of Gen. Washington. George was adopted by the Delawares, and continued with them until his death. He became a perfect savage, his manners being entirely Indian. To consummate cunning, he added the most fearless intrepidity. He fought in the battles of Kenhawa, Blue Licks and Sandusky, and gained himself much distinction for skill and bravery. In his latter years like his father, he gave himself up to intemperance and died drunk about twenty-five years ago on the Miami of the Lake.

"Simon was adopted by the Senecas, and became as expert a hunter as any of them. In Kentucky and Ohio, he sustained the reputation of an unrelenting barbarian. Forty-five years ago, with his name was associated everything cruel and fiend-like. To the women and children, in particular, nothing was more terrifying than the name of Simon Girty. At that time it was believed by many that he had fled from justice and sought refuge among the Indians, determined to do his countrymen all the harm in his power. This impression was an erroneous one. It is true he joined the Indians in their wars against the whites, and conformed to their usages. This was the education he had received, and those who were the foes of his brethren were also his foes. Although trained in all his pursuits as an Indian, it is said to be a fact, susceptible of proof, that through his importunities, many prisoners were saved from death. His influence was great, and when he chose to be merciful, it was generally in his power to protect the imploring captive. His reputation was that of an honest man. In the payment of his debts, he was scrupulously exact. Knowing and duly appreciating integrity, he fulfilled his engagement to the last cent. It is stated that on one occasion he sold his horse, rather than incur the odium of violating his promise.

"He was a great lover of rum; nothing could afford him more joy than a keg of this beverage. When intoxicated, in abuse he was indiscriminate sparing neither friends nor foes. Then it was he had no compassion in his heart. Although much disabled by rheumatism for the last ten years of his life, he rode to his hunting grounds in pursuit of game. Suffering the most excruciating pains, he often boasted of his warlike spirit. It was his constant wish that he might breathe his last in battle. So it happened. He was at Proctor's defeat on the River Thames, and was cut to pieces by Col. Johnson's mounted men.

"James Girty fell into the hands of the Shawanese, who adopted him as a son. As he approached manhood, he became dextrous in all the arts of savage life. To the most sanguinary spirit he added all the vices of the depraved frontiersmen, with whom he frequently associated.

"It is represented that he often visited Kentucky at the time of its first settlement, many of the inhabitants feeling the effects of his courage and cruelty. Neither age nor sex found mercy at his hands. His delight was in carnage. When unable to walk in consequence of disease, he laid low with his hatchet captive women and children, who came within his reach. Traders, who were acquainted with him, say that so furious was he, that he would not have turned on his heel to save a prisoner from the flames. His pleasure was to see new and refined tortures inflicted; and to perfect his gratification he frequently gave directions. To this barbarian are to be attributed many of the cruelties charged upon his brother Simon. Yet this monster was caressed by Elliott and Proctor." (See "Campbell's Remains," Columbus, 1838).

NOTE 11, PAGE 165.

This is not the view taken by the greater number of writers, who have had occasion to recount the events which follow. Indeed the order of these events is generally reversed, though it must be observed without very clear grounds for doing so. In any statement of the relation of "Rogers' defeat" and "Bowman's expedition," however, harmony is apparently to be secured only by arbitrary methods, and the order determined by the preponderance of circumstantial evidence. The confusion arrises from the careless and inadequate statement of the facts of McClung, p. 148. Marshall does not mention the first event; Butler does, pp. 102–4, and it is his narration which the text follows, avoiding the manifest error into which he is betrayed by adopting McClung's conclusion of the story.

The order followed in the text is based upon the following considerations: First.—McClung's narrative is found to contain such irreconcilable statements as to require some adjustments; the chief difficulty in the way of such adjustment being the date of Capt. Benham's rescue, i. e., the "27th of November." Second.—Butler, by independent evidence (pp. 102–3), indicates that the boats proceeded up the river from the falls "in the spring of 1779." Third.—When the wounded men were discovered, they had only partially recovered from their wounds, and a period of about six weeks is generally assigned to the interval between the action and the rescue. Fourth.—Collins, Vol. II, p. 426, quotes the narrative of Samuel Frazee to the effect that he left the mouth of the Licking for Harrodsburg "to give the alarm of Indian depredations and expeditions." Returning with the volunteers to this point, the same narrator says: "We struck the trail of the red men, and followed it to Old Chillicothe," etc. Fifth.—Marshall, Vol. I, p. 91, and Butler, p. 108, place the march of Bowman's expedition in July; McClung, p. 113, in May. The former are accepted as correct. Sixth.—McClung speaks of the Indians as coming down the Little Miami in their retreat from Kentucky, a statement which is obviously a mistake. The natural correction seems to be that this band of "four or five hundred" Shawanese—Butler, p. 105—was on its way to attack the frontier posts in Kentucky; that falling in with Rogers, and achieving a signal victory, they accepted it as glory enough for one campaign, and retired — a proceeding entirely in accordance with their well-known practice. Seventh.—Such an explanation receives confirmation from the fact that it is clearly improbable that so large a force should have been repelled with such success as to cause so early a retreat, without finding some more complete record in the annals of this year. Neither Ranck, in his "History of Lexington," nor McClung, in his "Outline-History," in Collins, mentions it. Eighth.—It should be observed, also, that such an expedition on the part of the savages was more likely to occur in the early part of the year, as in September the Shawanese were attending a conference at Fort Pitt with Brodhead, which terminated to the satisfaction of both parties. ("Annals of the West," p. 216.) Ninth.—It follows, therefore, that if the Indian invasion be placed in the fall the expedition must have been organized immediately after this conference, to which the savages had been drawn by the chastisement inflicted upon the Pennsylvania frontier, which is improbable. Tenth.—these considerations all tend to point out the date of "the 27th of November" as an error; that "Rogers' defeat" occurred in the late spring or early summer of 1779, and is so indicated in the text.

NOTE 12, PAGE 180.

Peter Duree was the leading man in the company of Pennsylvanians, who, in 1779, established Hart's or White Oak Station on the Kentucky River in connection with Nathaniel Hart. In the fall of 1781, or in the succeeding winter, he determined to build a new station between the mouth of Muddy Creek and Estill's Station, and, having erected a block-house on the chosen site, his son, Peter Duree, Jr., and his son-in-law, John Bullock, with their families, took possession of it. Here they were attacked by the Indians about the 20th of March. The men were outside of the cabin adjusting a hand-mill, when both were shot. After running a short distance toward the block-house Bullock fell, but Duree succeeded in reaching it and throwing himself upon a bed. Mrs. Bullock, going to the door to ascertain the fate of her husband, received a shot in her breast, and fell dead upon the threshhold. Mrs. Duree, doubtful whether her husband had been wounded or had fainted, drew the murdered woman within the cabin and closed the door. Grasping a rifle, she told her husband she would help him to defend the cabin, when he told her he was wounded and dying. Presenting the gun in quick succession at the different port-holes, she turned to her dying husband, and calmly watched his life go out. After waiting several hours without seeing anything more of the Indians, she ventured out to go to the older station, carrying an infant in her arms, and leading a four-year-old son by her side. Avoiding the beaten track, she hurried through the forest, hoping to gain her destination unobserved. She struck the trail at some distance from her starting-point, however, and with her strength so far exhausted that she determined to follow it. A few miles further on she met the elder Peter Duree, with his wife and youngest son, on their way with their household effects to the new station. The shocking story which the poor refugee had to relate changed their course, and, unloading their horses in an adjacent cane-brake, the whole party hurried to White Oak Station, where they arrived before daylight.

NOTE 13, PAGE 181.

Of the five descriptions of this heroic encounter examined, no two agree upon all the essential points. That of R. H. Collins (Historical Sketches of Kentucky, Vol. II, p. 634 et seq.), who bases his statements upon an examination of the evidence presented in the case of E. Crews vs. Crews Heirs and other equally authoritative data (see note, p. 636), is perhaps most entitled to credit. But this account is unfortunately marred by such carelessness of statement as to throw some doubt upon an otherwise consistent narrative. This will be observed in the last two paragraphs on page 234, which seem to indicate that a body of men who "pressed forward," consumed the time from "early next morning" till "an hour before sunset" in making the distance from Little Mountain to the scene of the battle, some two miles above Mount Sterling. If true, it is of sufficient importance to warrant the author in giving the reason for such an unusual delay, but it is probably an inaccuracy, in which the writer has fallen in amending the account as it existed in the original edition. Other accounts do not attempt to fix the hour of the engagement. It was probably somewhat earlier than "an hour before sunset;" it is more probable that it occurred an hour before sunrise. This time would satisfy all the conditions much better.

Authors differ in their characterization of Miller's conduct. A tradition is mentioned by Marshall which authorizes the statement that the lieutenant made the diversion as ordered, was met by the savages, and suffered the loss of three or four men killed or wounded. Besides its manifest improbability, this tradition is opposed by the almost unanimous conviction of the settlers and their descendants in the neighborhood of Estill's Station, and the subsequent action of Miller. For twenty years, it is said, one of the men wounded in the action patiently watched for Miller's return to Richmond, vowing to kill him on sight. "If he had met the threatened fate, no jury in Madison County would have convicted Cook—so intense was, and to this day is, * * * * the detestation for those who shamefully retreated." Miller did not return to Richmond.

There is a wide disagreement as to the date of the encounter. Marshall (Vol. I, p. 126) places the event in May, 1782, and Butler quotes his account without remark. The question seems to be authoritatively settled, and a sufficient warrant for the prominence accorded this inconclusive skirmish in history is given in the decision of Chief Justice Robertson, in the case of Conley's Heirs vs. Chiles, found in the 5th Marshall's Reports (note p. 124, Butler), the chief justice said: The battle was fought on the 22d of March, 1782. in the new county of Montgomery, and in the vicinity of Mount Sterling. It is a memorable incident, and perhaps one of the most memorable in the interesting history of the settlement of Kentucky. The usefulness and popularity of Capt. Estill; the deep and universal sensibility excited by the premature death of a citizen so gallant and so beloved; the emphatic character of his associates in battle; the masterly skill and chivalric daring displayed throughout the action ("every man to his man, and each to his tree"); the grief and despondence produced by the catastrophe, all contribute to give to "Estill's defeat" a most signal notoriety and importance, especially among the "early settlers." All the story, with all the circumstances of locality, and of "the fight," was told and told again and again, until even children knew it "by heart." No legendary tale was ever listened to with as intense anxiety, or was inscribed in as vivid and indelible an impress on the hearts of the few of both sexes, who then constituted the hope and the strength of Kentucky.

Such is the traditional as well as the recorded history of this sanguinary battle between the white men and the Indians; and such, too, is the testimony embodied in this cause.

NOTE 14, PAGE 182.

The details in regard to the attack on Bryant's or Bryan's Station are involved in the greatest confusion. According to Marshall the Indians attacked the station on the 15th, after the settlers had engaged in their ordinary work for the day, and continued their investment of the place until "the morning of the fourth day." Butler describes the enemy as approaching the fort in the darkness of the night of the 14th, and maintaining their siege until the morning of the fourth day, the 18th inst. McClung says the Indians came on the night of the 14th, and implies that they left on the morning of the 16th. Gov. Morehead, who had access to statements of those who were actors in the events of this period, agrees with McClung. Boone's narrative says the attack took place on the 15th, and that the enemy retired on the 17th, but in his letter, quoted below (note 15), he says the attack was on the 16th, and the retreat "about 10 o'clock the next day." An account by one who was present, quoted from Cist's Cincinnati Miscellany (Vol. I, page 236) makes the attack occur on the 16th, and the retreat "before daylight" on the 17th.

Later writers here generally accepted the night of the 14th, as the date of the arrival of the Indians, though why this rather than the 16th is not clear. By the concurrent testimony of McClung, Morehead, Boone and Cist's Miscellany, the period of active hostilities extended only through one day. The relieving party arrived on the next day, and on the third day fought the battle at the Lower Blue Lick. The date of the battle is invariably fixed on the 19th, and the date of the arrival of the force from Lexington and the beginning of the pursuit, on the 18th. This will be found the case in Marshall, Butler, McClung, Morehead, Collins, Perkins' "Annals of the West," Ranck's "History of Fayette County, Ky.," McKnight's "Our Western Border," and Shaler's "Kentucky." If these dates may be considered established, it follows that the attack occurred on the 17th, and the approach of the enemy on the night before, as in the text.

NOTE 15, PAGE 188.

The various writers who have recounted the battle of Blue Lick differ in their account of the opening details. The common narrative is given by Marshall, Stipp (Miscellany, Xenia, Ohio, 1827), McClung and Cooper. They represent the whole army following McGary in headlong confusion, without previous examination of the locality by scouts, or halt until confronted by the enemy. Boone's account in a letter to the governor of Virginia is as follows:

BOONE'S STATION, FAYETTE CO., August 30, 1782.

Sir:—Present circumstances of affairs cause me to write to your Excellency as follows: On the 16th inst, a large number of Indians with some white men attacked one of our frontier stations, known by the name of Bryan's Station. The siege continued from about sunrise till about 10 o'clock the next day, when they marched off.

Notice being given to the neighboring stations, we immediately raised 181 horsemen, commanded by Col. John Todd, including some of the Lincoln County militia, commanded by Col. Trigg, and having pursued about forty miles, on the 19th inst. we discovered the enemy lying in wait for us. On this discovery we formed our columns into one single line and marched up to their front within about forty yards before there was a guu fired. Col. Trigg commanded on the right, myself on the left, Maj. McGary in the center, and Maj. Harlan, the advance party, in the front.

From the manner in which we had formed, it fell to my lot to bring on the attack. This was done with a very heavy fire on both sides, and extended back of the line to Col. Trigg, where the enemy was so strong that they rushed up and broke the right wing at the first fire. Thus the enemy got in our rear, and we were compelled to retreat with the loss of seventy-seven of our men and twelve wounded.

Afterward we were enforced by Col. Logan, which made our force 460 men. We marched again to the battle-ground, but finding that the enemy had gone we proceeded to bury the dead. We found forty-three on the ground, and many lay about which we could not stay to find, hungry and weary as we were, and somewhat dubious that the enemy might not have gone off quite. By the sign we thought the Indians had exceeded 400, while the whole of the militia of this county does not amount to more than 130.

From these facts your Excellency may form an idea of our situation. I know that your own circumstances are critical, but are we to be wholly forgotten? I hope not. I trust about 500 men may be sent to our assistance immediately. If these shall be stationed as our county lieutenants shall deem necessary, it may be the means of saving our part of the country, but if they are placed under the direction of Gen. George Rogers Clark they will be of little or no service to our settlement. The falls lie 100 miles west of us, and the Indians northeast, while our men are frequently called to protect them. I have encouraged the people in this county all that I could, but can no longer justify them or myself to risk our lives here under such extraordinary hazards. The inhabitants of this county are very much alarmed at the thought of the Indians bringing another campaign into our country this fall. If this should be the case it will break up these settlements. I hope, therefore, your Excellency will take the matter into your consideration, and send us some relief as quickly as possible.

These are my sentiments without consulting any person. Col. Logan will, I expect, immediately send you an express, by whom I humbly request your Excellency's answer. In the meanwhile

I remain, DANIEL BOONE.

In this letter it will be observed Boone does not mention McGary's reckless conduct, and leaves it to be inferred that the battle was brought on by the determination of the council and in regular order. That it was begun in regular order receives confirmation from "a distinguished citizen of Kentucky" whom Mr. Collins quotes (Vol. II, p. 659). This gentleman gained his information from participants in the battle, and agrees with the accounts given from actors in this scene by Kenton and Clark.

Morehead, whom the text follows, takes a middle course; notes the precipitate action of McGary, but describes the final approach in accordance with Boone's account. This account raises the questions whether McGary would be likely to stop when once started in his mad career, and whether, if McGary did act the part generally assigned to him, Boone would be likely to omit all mention of it. To the latter it may be replied that Boone aimed only to give the outlines of the event, and omits many undoubtedly authentic details which have been recorded by the historians; that his purpose was not to make an official report, but to picture the general situation, and on his own responsibility to seek relief for the alarmed settlers; and that if the fact be as Marshall states, McGary's action would not appear of such importance as to be noted in the letter referred to.

Whether McGary would be any more amenable to reason after crossing the river than before, is a question for the decision of which there exists no evidence. It may be supposed, however, that the crossing may have given the crowd which followed him an opportunity for a sober second thought, and the "Rubicon" having been passed, they may have been inclined to accept the precautionary measures offered.

There is little reason to doubt that McGary forced the fighting in some way contrary to the calmer judgment of his superiors, and that by his contemporaries he was generally held responsible, to a large degree, for the disaster which followed. This responsibility, it is said, he defended rather than denied, and in so doing, aspersed the character of Todd, a proceeding which seems to make his culpability more probable. Butler (p. 129) refers to his defense as a tradition in which it was held that he "counseled a delay at Bryant's Station for twenty-four hours, until Logan could arrive with his powerful re-enforcement. This was rather tauntingly rejected, as it is alleged, by Col. Todd, who, in the honorable ambition of a brave man, was fearful of the escape of the Indians, and was apprehensive that he should lose this opportunity of distinguishing himself, by the arrival of his senior colonel." This view is not at all in keeping with the known character of the respective officers. McGary was of a reckless disposition, insubordinate, quarrelsome in his relations to his superiors. Todd was of a quiet, judicial temperament, and unselfish in his public and private life. Of this there is abundant evidence. It is true that Logan ranked higher in public esteem as an Indian fighter than any, save Clark, on the border, but Cooper is authority for the statement that Logan was not certainly expected, and as a matter of fact Todd was not only colonel in the militia, but also in the State line, which made him Logan's senior. In this connection, Mr. Charles McKnight ("Our Western Border," p. 283) relates: "Several years after the battle of the Blue Lick, a gentleman of Kentucky, since dead, fell in company of McGary at one of the circuit courts, and the conversation soon turned on the battle. McGary frankly acknowledged that he was the immediate cause of the loss of blood on that day, and with great heat and energy, assigned his reasons for urging on the battle. He said that in the hurried council that was held at Bryant's, on the 18th, he strenuously urged Todd and Trigg to halt for twenty-four hours, assuring them that with the aid of Logan, they would be able to follow them even to Chillicothe if necessary, and that their numbers then were too weak to encounter them alone. He offered, he said, to pledge his head that the Indians would not return with such precipitation as was supposed, but would afford ample time to collect more force, and give them battle with a prospect of success.

"He added that Col. Todd scouted his arguments and declared that, if a single day were lost, the Indians would never be overtaken; but would cross the Ohio and disperse; that now was the time to strike them, while they were in a body; that to talk of their numbers was nonsense, the more the merrier; that for his part he determined to pursue them without a moment's delay and did not doubt that there were brave men enough on the ground to enable him to attack them with effect." McGary declared that he felt somewhat nettled at the manner in which his advice had been received; that he thought Todd and Trigg jealous of Logan, who, as senior colonel, would be entitled to the command on his arrival; and that, in their eagerness to have the honor of victory to themselves, they were rashly throwing themselves into a condition which would endanger the safety of the country.

" 'However, sir' (continued he, with an air of unamiable triumph) 'when I saw the gentlemen so keen for a fight, I gave way, and joined in the pursuit as willingly as any; but when we came in sight of the enemy, and the gentlemen began to talk of numbers, position, Logan and waiting, I burst into a passion, d——d them for a set of cowards, who could not be wise until they were scared into it, and swore that since they had come so far for a fight, they should fight, or I would disgrace them forever. That when I spoke of waiting for Logan on the day before, they had scouted the idea, and hinted about courage, that now it would be shown who had courage, or who were d——d cowards, who could talk big when the enemy were at a distance, but turned pale when danger was near. I then dashed into the river, and called upon all who were not cowards to follow.' The gentleman, upon whose authority this is given, added that even then, McGary spoke with bittnerness of the deceased colonels, and swore that they had received just what they deserved, and that he, for one, was glad of it."

Such a statement can scarcely be credited, but if it be true, as there are indications that it is, it leaves nothing further wanting to mark McGary as the willful murderer of his comrades and the malicious slanderer of the noble dead.

The loss of the Indians is stated generally as equal to that of the whites. This appears incredible when the number and advantageous position of the savages are considered. Logan found no Indian burials, and but few trails of blood, but Boone states in his narrative that on numbering their dead the Indians discovered that their loss exceeded the whites by four, and therefore four of the prisoners were, by general consent, ordered to be killed. This is confirmed by the statement of prisoners who were exchanged in the next year. The loss of the Indians referred to, however, may have included the casualties received in both the battle of the Blue Lick and before Bryan's Station. In the latter engagement the whites had only two killed in the station, while the savages are believed to have lost heavily. The losses in the two battles may have been equalized in the manner stated.

In 1802 F. A. Michaux, M. D., a distinguished French naturalist, made a tour of the newer portions of the United States under the auspices of the French minister of the interior, and subsequently recorded the result of his observations in a volume printed in Paris. This was translated into English by B. Lambert, and published at London in 1805. It is from this work that the following extract is made:

The Barrens or meadows of Kentucky comprise an extent of sixty or seventy miles in length by fifty or sixty in breadth. From the signification of the word I expected to cross a bare tract, with a few plants scattered here and there upon it; and in this opinion I was supported by the notion which some of the inhabitants had given me of these meadows before I reached them. They told me that at this season (28th of August) I should perish with heat and thirst, and that I should not meet with any shade the whole length of the road, for the greater number of the Americans who live in woods have no conception that countries can exist that are entirely free from them, and still less that they can be habitable. Instead of finding a country such as described to me, I was agreeably surprised to see a beautiful meadow well covered with grass of two or three feet in height, which is used to feed cattle. A great variety of plants also grow here. * * * In some parts of these meadows several species of wild creeping vines are met with, and particularly that called by the inhabitants summer grapes. These grapes are as large and of as good a quality as those from the vineyards in the neighborhood of Paris, with this difference, that they are not so close upon the bunches.

* * * * * *

The Barrens are circumscribed within a chain of woods two or three miles in breadth, forming a continuation of the forests which cover the country. The trees comprising them are not very close, and their distances from each other increase in approaching the meadows. On the Tennessee side this chain is formed exclusively of post oaks, Quercus obtusiloba, the wood of which being very hard and not perishing easily is preferred to all others in the formation of fences. * * * Here and there through the meadows are also to be seen black oaks, Quercus nigra, and walnuts, Juglans hickery, which rise to about twelve or fifteen feet; sometimes they form small groves, but always so far asunder as not in any way to interrupt the sight. With the exception of little sallows about two feet high, Salix longrostris, and some sumachs, there is not any shrub to be seen. The surface of these meadows is in general very even; but toward the Dripping Spring I observed a long and high hill, slightly covered with wood and with enormous detached rocks which are visible from the road.

There appears to be a great number of subterraneous caverns in the Barrens, some of which are very near the surface. A short time before I passed this way, one of them sunk in the road near Bears' Wallow, under the feet of a traveler, who only escaped by a most fortunate chance. The danger of such accidents in a country where the habitations are so remote from each other, and where, perhaps, a traveler does not pass once in fifteen days, may be conceived.

There are also to be seen in these meadows broken holes of the shape of a funnel, the breadth of which varies, according to the depth, from fifteen to thirty feet. In some of these cavities, at five or six feet from the bottom, there is a small, trickling stream of water, which is totally lost in the crevice at the lower extremity of the funnel. These kind of streams never dry up, which has induced several of the inhabitants to settle in their vicinity; for except the Big Barren River, I did not discover the smallest brook or creek through all these plains. Neither have I heard of any attempt having been made to dig wells; and, therefore, can form no judgment of the success of the trials, which will doubtless be hereafter made. From these observations it is evident that the want of water, and of wood fit for fences, will long be an obstacle to the increase of the establishments in this part of Kentucky.* * * The Barrens are therefore at present very thinly inhabited in comparison with their extent; for on the road, where the plantations are the most contiguous, there are only eighteen in a space of seventy miles.

Some of the inhabitants divide the land of the Barrens of Kentucky into three classes, according to their qualities, and in their opinion the middle class occupies the largest part of them. That part which I crossed, where the soil is yellowish and a little gravelly, seemed to be very well calculated for the culture of wheat. * * * * * *

Every year, in the course of the months of March and April, the inhabitants set fire to the herbage, which at that period is dry, and the extreme length of which would deprive the cattle, for a fortnight or three weeks longer, of the new grass, which then begins to shoot. This custom is, however, generally blamed, and with reason; for, being set fire to early, the grass dries, and, in consequence of its drooping, does not protect the rising crop from the spring frosts, and its vegetation retarded. This custom was formerly practiced by the natives, who came to hunt in these countries, and is still continued by them in other parts of North America, where there are savannahs of vast extent. Their object in setting fire to them is to attract the stags, bison, etc., into the burnt parts, when they can perceive them at a distance.

No idea can be formed of these dreadful conflagrations without having seen them. The flame, which generally occupies a line of several miles in extent, is sometimes driven forward with such rapidity that men on horseback have become their prey.

The American hunters and the savages preserve themselves from this danger by a method as simple as ingenious; they immediately set fire to that part of the meadow in which they happen to be, and afterward retreat to this burnt spot, where the flame, which threatened them, stops for want of fuel. This is what the Canadian hunters call making their own fire.—Michaux's Travels, pp. 182–190.

NOTE 17, PAGE 195.

The early promise of success in grape culture was not confirmed by experience. Nearly eighteen years after Imlay wrote, Michaux recorded the result of the "agitation," to which the text refers: I left Lexington for Nashville, in the State of Tennessee, on the 10th of August, wrote the French traveler, and as the establishment formed for naturalizing the vine in Kentucky was only a few miles out of my road, I determined to visit it. * * *

At fourteen miles from Lexington, I quitted the road to Hickman's Ferry. I turned to the left and lost myself in the middle of the woods, so that I did not reach the vineyard until evening, where I was very politely received by M. Dufour, who directs the undertaking. He invited me to sleep there and pass the following day with him, which I accepted.

There is a public spirit in the United States which causes them to seize with avidity every prospect tending to enrich the country by agriculture or commerce. That of acclimating the vine in Kentucky was eagerly received. Several individuals formed themselves into a society to carry it into execution, and it was determined to raise a capital of 10,000 piasters (dollars,) divided into 200 shares of 50 piasters each. This subscription was soon filled. M. Defour, the principal of a small Swiss colony, who had established himself seven or eight years before in Kentucky, and was the proposer of this scheme, was employed to look for a suitable soil to procure some plants, and to do everything which he might judge necessary to insure success. The spot which he had selected and cleared was situated on the River Kentucky, twenty miles from Lexington. The soil is excellent, and the vines are planted on a small hill with a steep declivity, exposed to the south, and the base of which is about 200 toises (a fathom, six French feet, or 6.39459 English feet) from the river.

M. Dufour intended to pass into France to procure the vine plants, and with this view he went to New York, but the war or some other cause, with which I am unacquainted, prevented him, and he contented himself with procuring there and at Philadelphia plants of every species, which he could obtain from individuals who had them in their gardens. He collected twenty-five species, which he brought to Kentucky, where he has endeavored to multiply them. But his success is not equal to his attention; not more than four or five varieties are left, among which are those which he calls by the names of Burgundy and Madeira, and the first does not thrive well; the fruit always rots before it arrives at maturity. When I saw them the bunches were few and stinted, the grapes small, and everything appeared as though the vintage of the year 1802 would not be more abundant than those of the preceding years. The Madeira vines, on the contrary, seemed to give some hopes of 150 or 200 plants—about a third were loaded with very fine grapes. These vines do not occupy a space of more than six acres; they are planted and supported by props, as in the environs of Paris. The vicinity of the woods attracts a species of bird which is very destructive to them, and the nature of the country is a great obstacle to getting freed from them.

Such was then the situation of this establishment, in which the proprietors took but slight interest, and which was likely to meet with another hindrance in the division of M. Dufour's family, a part of which was on the point of quitting it to settle on the banks of the Ohio. These details are sufficient to give a very different idea of the state of the pretended flourishing vines of Kentucky, from that which may have been formed on the pompous accounts of them some months ago in the public papers.—Michaux's Travels, pp. 163–167.

The decade which preceded Kenton's removal from Kentucky, marked the culmination and rapid decline of his fortunes. He had entered large tracts of land, which the continued immigration greatly enhanced in value. On the site of his old blockhouse, near Washington, he erected a fine brick residence, which became widely noted for the open-handed hospitality dispensed by its owner. But this prosperity was only short-lived. The great tide of immigration, which at first contributed so largely to his prosperity finally proved his ruin. Land became more scarce, and the greedy speculator began to invade his domains and involve him in legal difficulties, to which his ignorance and credulity made him an easy victim. One after another of his possessions were wrested from him on legal informalities, until not only was his valuable property absorbed, but even his body taken to satisfy the warranty of deeds to land which he had given away. Thus, four years after the general pacification of the Indians had promised him a life of ease, dearly earned by twenty years of constant danger and hardship, he found himself beggared by land suits.

In this predicament he turned to Ohio, where he had previously pushed his speculations. Here, in 1799, he "took up" land and began anew, settling, in 1802, near Urbana. His misfortunes still followed him, and it was not until 1820, when he moved to the head-waters of the Mad River, in Logan County, and entered land in the name of his wife and children, that he escaped the persecutions of the malign spirit which presided over the lands of Kentucky. In all this trouble he never inveighed against the injustice of his country, which to his exalted patriotism, seemed incapable of doing wrong. In 1805, he was made brigadier-general of Ohio militia, and was ready at all times to give his services in defense of the frontier. On the breaking out of hostilities in 1812, he was anxious to take part in the military operations, and in the succeeding year, when Gov. Shelby led the Kentucky troops northward, he joined them with his rifle and horse as a volunteer, though constrained to act as a privileged member of the Governor's military family. In this capacity he was present at the battles of the Thames and of the Moravian town, where he displayed his old-time courage and address. With this he ended his military career.

In 1824 he made his first visit to Kentucky after his removal from that State. Certain mountainous lands of little value, which had, on that account, escaped the voracity of the land-hunters, had become forfeited to the State for unpaid taxes. To seek the release of this last vestige of his Kentucky fortunes, he was induced to undertake the journey alone. He made his way to Frankfort, where the legislature was in session, with as little idea of what steps were to be taken to effect his wishes as a child. On reaching his destination, he found himself an utter stranger. His worn out horse and tattered garments proclaimed his fallen fortunes, while his simple, dazed manner sharpened the curiosity of those who observed his entry into the town. Aimlessly wandering in the street, peering into each face for some familiar countenance, and followed by a crowd of curious urchins, the old white-haired man was at length recognized by Gen. Thomas Fletcher, who provided him with decent clothing, and took the old pioneer home for entertainment. His presence was soon noised abroad, and large numbers came to greet the renowned hunter and scout. He was taken to the capitol and placed in the speaker's chair, where the leading members of the government, as well as prominent citizens, were introduced to him. This spontaneous courtesy completely won his heart, and the simple-hearted old man counted this the proudest day of his life. His lands were promptly released by the State, and in the same year, through the exertions of Judge Burnett, of Cincinnati, and Gov. Vance, of Ohio, then members of congress, the United States granted Kenton a pension of $20 a month. This thoughtful provision enabled the old pioneer to end his days free from want. He died April 29, 1836, a victim of the cholera, which prevailed in this year.

Kenton married Elizabeth Jarbo, probably in Kentucky, by whom he had several children, though, strange to say, of all the notices of his eventful career to be found in the various encyclopedias and reviews, these important details omitted by his biographer have been supplied in none. His descendants subsequently moved to Indiana. McDonald, who became acquainted with the veteran pioneer in 1789, and knew him well during the remainder of his life, writes thus of his character and general appearance: "Gen. Kenton was of fair complexion, six feet one inch in height. He stood and walked very erect, and in the prime of life weighed about 190 pounds. He never was inclined to be corpulent, although of sufficient fullness to form a graceful person. He had a soft, tremulous voice, very pleasing to the hearer. He had laughing grey eyes, which appeared to fascinate the beholder. He was a pleasant, good-humored and obliging companion. When excited or provoked to anger (which was seldom the case) the fiery glance of his eye would almost curdle the blood of those with whom he came in contact. His rage, when roused, was a tornado. In his dealing he was perfectly honest; his confidence in man and his credulity were such that the same man might cheat him twenty times, and if he professed friendship he might cheat him still." His remains still rest in the obscurity of his unmarked grave in Ohio.

NOTE 19, PAGE 200.

On leaving Kentucky, Boone seems to have been swayed by alternating impulses, which carried him hither and thither, the prey of conflicting desires. In April, 1794, he is found at Point Pleasant, in western Virginia; in February, 1796, a few miles from Paris, Bourbon Co., Ky.; in April, 1797, floating down the Ohio River in a canoe, bound for that part of the Spanish possessions now known as Missouri. In all these wanderings his wife was his devoted companion, and in the last named year this aged couple found a resting place with their son, Daniel, Jr.

It appears that the venerable pioneer had received assurances from the governor of upper Louisiana that a liberal grant of land should be awarded him and his family. Ten thousand acres of choice land were accordingly marked out on the Missouri River, and given him for his individual use, but the title was never completed, as it could only be done by a trip to New Orleans, which Boone unfortunately failed to make. He became a citizen of Spain, and was appointed syndic or chief of the district of St. Charles. For a time prosperity seemed to shine upon him; he once more enjoyed the unbounded freedom of the woods, and with his rifle and traps earned sufficient to pay the debts which he was obliged to leave unsettled on his removal from Kentucky. It is said, he one day suddenly appeared amid the scenes of his pioneer labors, clad and armed as of old, sought out his various creditors, and taking their account of his indebtedness, paid each one in full, disappearing as suddenly as he came.

But the settlements began once more to intrude upon his hunting grounds. The territory was ceded to the French, and then to the United States. Longer trips were necessary for his hunting and trapping excursions, which took him far up the Missouri River and its tributaries. On one occasion he went to the Osage, accompanied only by a negro lad. Having pitched his camp he was suddenly taken sick, and continued seriously ill for so long a time that the old woodsman thought the end was approaching. One pleasant day, when feeling somewhat stronger, he took his attendant to a slight eminence, and imperturbably marked out his own grave, and gave minute directions in regard to the distribution of his personal effects, and the manner of his burial. This done, he returned to his camp to await the arrival of the "awful summons," but his strong vitality weathered the storm, and he recovered to live some years.

About 1810 he again fell a victim to his incapacity for business affairs. Settlers intruded upon his land, and when he laid his claim before the commissioners of land claims, appointed by congress, they were compelled by their instructions to reject it, because he had failed to settle on and cultivate the land. These were the usual conditions annexed by the Spanish to their grants of land, but in the case of Boone, his official duties in the Spanish government requiring his residence elsewhere, these conditions were dispensed with. However, his failure to complete his title of gift, and his failure to occupy the land claimed, defeated his case before the commissioners. He, therefore, memorialized congress to afford relief, and "left once more, at about the age of eighty, to be a wanderer in the world," he prayed the legislature of Kentucky "to support his application to congress by their aid and influence." This petition promptly received the favorable attention of the legislature, and its instruction to the Kentucky senators and representatives in congress to use their exertions to secure a confirmation of the Spanish grant, or a suitable quantity as a donation, was prefaced by a tribute to the "many eminent services rendered by Col. Daniel Boone," which was alike honorable to the sentiment which moved the assembly and grateful to the simple, guileless spirit, whose keen sagacity and generous bravery had done so much for the infant fortunes of the commonwealth. It is pleasant to record that this effort on the part of the assembly was crowned with success. On February 10, 1814, congress granted Boone, as a donation, 1,000 arpens of land.

His old misfortunes still followed him. Not only did he lose the lands which he called his own, but such as he had sold became a source of loss and trouble. In selling these he gave a "warrantee deed," and subsequently when the original title proved invalid, under the jugglery of the Virginia law, he was obliged to part with his late grant from the United States to satisfy the purchaser. A greater misfortune befel Boone, however, about 1813, in the death of his aged wife. He mourned her loss as one who "would not be comforted," and from this event forward his spirit seems to have been completely broken. He took up his residence with his son, Nathan, and sought forgetfulness in long hunting excursions, which he extended in 1816 as far as Fort Osage, on the Kansas River, a hundred miles from his home. In these expeditions he was accompanied by an attendant who was bound by a written agreement to return his body, wherever he might die, to be buried beside his wife. But the infirmities of age curbed, at last, even the untiring energies of this indefatigable man. Obliged to forego his hunting excursions, and unable to walk far, he would sit at his cabin door for hours at a time, his trusty rifle across his knee, and his eyes directed toward the forest with a dreamy gaze, while in fancy he lived again amid the stirring scenes of his vigorous manhood.

His narrative, preserved by Filson, was a constant source of enjoyment to the kind-hearted old man, and he was never more gratified than when some friend would read to him the meager story of his eventful life. He listened with the keenest interest, occasionally rubbing his hands with excess of satisfaction, and ejaculate, "All true, every word true; not a lie in it." But while thus pleased with the record of his exploits, he seldom spoke of himself, save when particularly questioned. It was the printed memorial that "completely overcame the cold philosophy of his general manner, and he seemed to think it a master-piece of composition."

In 1819 an American artist, prompted by a patriotic wish to preserve the portrait of this notable man, visited him in Missouri, and communicated the following description of his surroundings to Gov. Morehead, who embodied it in his address: "He found him in a small rude cabin, indisposed and resting on his bed. A slice from the loin of a buck, twisted round the rammer of his rifle, within reach of him as he lay, was roasting before the fire. Several other cabins, arranged in the form of a parallelogram, marked the spot of a dilapidated station. They were occupied by the descendants of the pioneer. Here he lived in the midst of his posterity. His withered energies and locks of snow indicated that the sources of existence were nearly exhausted." A fever terminated his life on September 26, 1820, at the house of his son-in-law, Flanders Callaway, in Charette Village, on the Missouri River. He was buried by the side of his wife.

The legislature in session at St. Louis, on the announcement of this event, adjourned for the day in token of respect to his memory, and wore the usual badge of mourning for twenty days. In Kentucky no special observance of the event was made for some years. In its session of 1844–45, the Kentucky legislature adopted measures to have the mortal remains of the celebrated pioneer and his wife removed from Missouri to the public cemetery at Frankfort. On the 13th of September, 1845, these efforts were consummated by the elaborate obsequies with which the remains of the pioneer couple were placed in their new resting place. Since then a handsome monument has been erected, which, though somewhat marred by time, and relic hunters, still remains to mark the resting place of Daniel and Rebecca Boone.

It is probable that Harrod's life was ended by murder. He had had a suit at law with one Bridges, in regard to some property, the result of which had produced a bitter enmity between the two litigants. They had not spoken to each other for some time, when, one day in 1793, Bridges returned after several weeks' absence, and, professing to wish a reconciliation, disclosed to Harrod that he had discovered an abandoned silver mine, of which there was a current tradition, and solicited him to furnish the capital to work it. Harrod's wife earnestly opposed his going alone with Bridges to examine the alleged discovery, and prevailed on him to allow a third person to join the investigation.

On reaching the Three-Forks of the Kentucky River, in the vicinity of which the mine was supposed to be located, the company halted, prepared a camp, and then set out in quest of game, each one pursuing his own course. Bridges and Harrod were not widely separated and proceeded some distance from camp, while the third man explored the less remote regions. He soon heard the report of a gun in the direction and about the vicinity he supposed Harrod was, and thinking he had secured a deer, returned to camp. Here he found Bridges apparently greatly alarmed; he said he had seen fresh Indian "signs," and believed Harrod had been killed; and insisted upon a precipitate retreat, in spite of the earnest remonstrance of his companion, who, rather than be left alone, soon followed to the settlements.

Bridges subsequently sold a quantity of furs to a hatter in Lexington, and at the same time disposed of a pair of silver buttons engraved with the letter H. These being sent to Mrs. Harrod, she instantly recognized them as the ones the colonel had worn in his linen hunting-shirt, when he set out on the expedition. A party of men at once set out for the Three-Forks, where they discovered the bones of a human being, picked bare by the wild beasts of the woods, but a hunting-shirt with the buttons gone remained, and was identified as belonging to Harrod. In the meanwhile, Bridges took the alarm, left the country, and was never more heard of. (See Dr. Graham's narrative in Collins, Vol. II, p. 614.)

The "Kentucky boat," or "broad horn," was a flat-boat, constructed upon the crudest principles of naval architecture. Until 1800, it was the only traffic boat on the western rivers, but at this time the "keel-boat" was introduced, which gradually superseded its predecessor in the public service, although flat-boats were found on the Mississippi in considerable numbers until the steam-boat ended the career of all such craft.

The numerous water-ways and the utter lack of roads made travel and transportation by water an early necessity, and the flat-boat was an outgrowth of the self-help of the pioneers. It was earliest in demand as a means to transport immigrants and their goods to Kentucky, which gave rise to its name. At first these boats were constructed by those who had need of them, but immigration subsequently increased to such an extent that their construction became one of the more prominent industries of Brownsville and Pittsburgh, Penn., and of Wheeling, W. Va. The business was not confined to these points, however, and almost every settlement upon the navigable portion of the Monongahela and Youghiogheny Rivers, did more or less of boat building. Subsequently, when the "keel-boat" became prominent, the flat-boat lost its distinctive name, and was chiefly used by the farmers and merchants of Kentucky, Ohio, Illinois and Indiana to convey their produce to the New Orleans market.

The form of these boats was a parallelogram, varying in length from fifteen to fifty feet, and in width from ten to fifteen feet, affording a capacity which varied from fifty to 500 tons burthen. On the Kentucky and Illinois Rivers they were sometimes built seventy-five feet long, and carried from 2,000 to 5,000 bushels of grain. The method and style of construction was simple, and suited to the meager resources of the times. The plan was to take a fine poplar or sycamore tree, hew it in rectangular shape about eighteen by twenty-four inches. This was split through the middle, leaving strips about twelve by eighteen inches and of varying length to suit the boat. These formed the gunwales, and constituted the main strength of the boat. The heart side was placed outward, amd on the inner corner was cut a "gain" large enough to allow the two-inch flooring to rest in it, and come to the level of the bottom of the gunwale. The width of the boat was established by cross pieces framed in the gunwales at moderate distances apart. Lengthwise the boat was further strengthened by "streamers" running parallel with the gunwales about four feet apart. Upon this framework, securely framed and fastened together, flooring of two-inch oak planks was laid double, pinned with wooden pins and heavy nails.

The boat, thus far constructed, was bottom side up, and after being well caulked, the difficulty encountered was to turn it over to be finished and launched. Among the farmers the practice was to choose a location on the bank of the river convenient for launching, and when the work reached this stage to turn it on the land, though the more skillful turned it on the water. If it was done on the land, the men of the neighborhood were invited, and all joined in lifting one side of the wooden leviathan, and letting it fall over on brush heaps and a multitude of hoop-poles, somewhat inclined to break its fall. This was attended with considerable risk of damage, and the other way was preferred. That was to place a temporary board railing on one side and the ends. Against this railing an embankment of earth was placed on the boat, and thus prepared, it was launched into the stream and towed by yawls into deep water. The side of the boat, weighted with earth was placed up stream across the current, and while held in this position the embankment was broken in two places, to allow the water to find its way into the boat. The weight of the earth held this side lower than the other, to which was added the weight of the admitted water; this resulted in such a depression of this side as to give the current such hold of the structure as to turn it under the stream, when, the dirt falling off, it righted with the proper side uppermost. Great care was necessary to prevent the embankment from being prematurely broken, and for those who managed the turning to escape a serious wetting by leaping into a small boat kept near at hand.

When turned, it was hauled ashore by a cable previously fastened to it, and then completed. The gunwales were trimmed off at the prow to give the boat the proper "rake;" sides about four feet high were added by nailing clapboards on studding, framed in the sills or gunwales, and caulking applied to the first and second joints from the bottom, and sometimes higher. In case of boats bound for New Orleans, about three feet of the prow was left unincloused to prevent snags piercing into the cargo. The inclosed portion was roofed over with boards projecting over the sides to shed the water perfectly, and rounded from one side to the other, the center being about five and a half to six feet high. This was the rule in case of traffic boats, but in other cases only the cabin was provided with roof. This was located at the stern, about six feet of which was devoted to bunks, a stone fireplace with "cat and clay" chimney. Emigrant boats were made to resemble a box and were abandoned to the current without any effort or means of navigating them. Traffic boats were provided with "sweeps," and a steering oar.

Such a craft could be purchased of regular builders at a price varying from $1 to $1.25 per linear foot, but the purchaser found it necessary to provide a cable, pump and fire-place at an additional cost of about $10. Flat-boats were built with square prow to resist the rapid current, and were illy adapted to progress up stream. Traffic boats were, therefore, sold as lumber or firewood on reaching their destination. Emigrant boats found some purchasers who would use them to continue the trip to New Orleans, but they were generally disposed of cheaply for the lumber in them.

In his reminiscential letters, Dr. Drake, speaking of a visit in 1845 to the scene of his early home at Mayslick, Mason Co., Ky., says: "It is a remarkable fact that in the early period of which I am writing, from 1794 to 1800, the white population was greater in that neighborhood than I found it in the visit referred to. In a single solitary walk of two miles, which included the spot of our old home, I passed over the foundation—the decayed logs and dust—of no less than twelve cabins, on the broad hearths of which I used to warm myself in winter, or play around in other seasons, when sent to them on errands, or permitted to visit the boys and girls with which they were redolent. Besides, I saw two of a better kind than the first, erected of hewed logs, which were tenantless and surrounded by hemp. * * * * * * * * The loss of white population so impressively shown forth by what I have said, has occurred in various parts of Kentucky. ("Pioneer Life in Kentucky." pp. 182-3.)

Census Years.	Whites.	Free Colored	Slaves.	Total.
1790	61,133	114	12,430	73,677
1800	179,873	739	40,343	220,955
1810	324,237	1,713	80,561	406,511
1820	434,647	2,759	126,732	564,135
1830	517,787	4,917	165,213	687,917
1840	590,253	7,317	182,258	779,828
1850	761,413	10,011	210,981	982,405
1860	919,484	10,684	225,483	1,155,684
1870	1,098,692	222,210	.....	1,321,011
1880	1,377,187	271,521*	.....	1,648,708

*Including 10 Chinese and 50 Indians.

The following cities had in 1880 a population exceeding 5,000:

Louisville	123,645
Covington	29,720
Newport	20,433
Lexington	16,656
Paducah	8,376
Frankfort (State capital)	6,958
Maysville	5,220

"We have individvals in Kentucky," wrote the famous naturalist, Audubon, "that even there are considered wonderful adepts in the management of the rifle. Having resided some years in Kentucky, and having more than once been witness of rifle sport, I shall present the results of my observation, leaving the reader to judge how far rifle shooting is understood in that State.

"Several individuals who conceive themselves adepts in the management of the rifle, are often seen to meet for the purpose of displaying their skill; and, betting a trifling sum, put up a target, in the center of which, a common sized nail is hammered for about two thirds its length. The marksmen make choice of what they consider a proper distance, and which may be forty paces. Each man cleans the interior of his tube, which is called wiping it, places a ball in the palm of his hand, pouring as much powder from his horn as will cover it. This quanity is supposed to be sufficient for any distance short of 100 yards. A shot which comes very close to the nail is considered that of an indifferent marksman; the bending of the nail is of course somewhat better; but nothing less than hitting it right on the head is satisfactory. One out of three shots generally hits the nail; and should the shooters amount to half a dozen, two nails are frequently needed before each can have a shot.

Those who drive the nail have a further trial among themselves, and the two best shots out of these generally settle the affair, when all the sportsmen adjourn to some house and spend an hour or two in friendly intercourse, appointing before they part a day for another trial. This is technically termed, 'driving the nail.'

"Barking of squirrels is delightful sport, and in my opinion, requires a greater degree of accuracy than any other. I first witnessed this manner of procuring squirrels while near the town of Frankfort. The performer was the celebrated Daniel Boone. We walked out together and followed the rocky margins of the Kentucky River until we reached a piece of flat land, thickly covered with black walnuts, oaks and hickories. As the general mast was a good one for that year, squirrels were seen gamboling on every tree around us. My companion, a stout, hale, athletic man, dressed in a homespun hunting shirt, bare-legged and moccasined, carried a long and heavy rifle, which, as he was loading, he said had proved efficient in all of his former undertakings, and which he hoped would not fail on this occasion, as he felt proud to show me his skill. The gun was wiped, the powder measured, the ball patched with six-hundred-thread linen, and a charge sent home with a hickory rod. We moved not a step from the place, for the squirrels were so thick that it was unnecessary to go after them.

"Boone pointed to one of these animals, which had observed us, and was crouched on a bough about fifty paces distant, and bade me mark well where the ball should hit. He raised his piece gradually until the bead, or sight of the barrel, was brought to a line with he spot he intended to hit. The whip-like report resounded through the woods, and along the hills in repeated echoes. Judge of my surprise when I perceived that the ball had hit the piece of bark immediately underneath the squirrel, and shivered it into splinters, the concussion produced by which had killed the animal, and sent it whirling through the air as if it had been blown up by the explosion of a powder magazine. Boone kept up his firing, and before many hours had elapsed, we had procured as many squirrels as we wished. Since that first interview with the veteran Boone, I have seen many other individuals perform the same feat.

"The snuffing of a candle with a ball I first had an opportunity of seeing near the banks of the Green River, not far from a large pigeon-roost, to which I had previously made a visit. I had heard many reports of guns during the early part of a dark night, and knowing them to be those of rifles, I went forward toward the spot to ascertain the cause. On reaching the place I was welcomed by a dozen tall, stout men, who told me they were exercising for the purpose of enabling them to shoot after night, at the reflected light from the eyes of a deer or wolf by torch-light. A fire was blazing near, the smoke of which rose curling among the thick foliage of the trees. At a distance which rendered it scarcely distinguishable, stood a burning candle, but which in reality was only fifty yards from the spot on which we all stood. One man was within a few yards of it to watch the effect of the shots, as well as to light the candle should it chance to go out, or to replace it should the shot cut it across. Each marksman shot in his turn. Some never hit either the snuff or the candle, and were congratulated with a loud laugh, while others actually snuffed the candle without putting it out, and were recompensed for their dexterity with numerous hurrahs. One of them, who was particularly expert, was very fortunate, and snuffed the candle three times out of seven, while the other shots either put out the candle or cut it immediately under the light.

"Of the feats performed by the Kentuckians with the rifle, I might say more than might be expedient on the present occasion. By way of recreation, they often cut off a piece of the bark of a tree, make a target of it, using a little powder wetted with water or saliva, for the bulls-eye, and shoot into the mark all the balls they have about them, picking them out of the wood again."

A great part of the insecurity of land-titles arose from the eagerness of ignorant men. The location of land at that date was attended with no little danger, arising from the hostility of the Indians, and demanded for its successful accomplishment such qualifications as were seldom possessed by the frontiersmen. To the technical proficiency of the surveyor, the situation demanded the addition of the wood-craft of the pioneer and the bold hardiness of the scout. Those who possessed the last two generally lacked the first qualification, and it was believed it could better be omitted in choosing a locator than the others. Hence it followed that, in their eagerness to anticipate their competitors for possession of public lands, many holders of land-warrants entrusted their interests to persons who were more skilled in wood-craft than in the legal requirements of the legislative enactment. But the success of such locators was generally hindered by the dangers and natural difficulties of the work, as well as by the urgency of their employers, and the inevitable result was that, notwithstanding the honest intentions of the agents, "locations" were strewn "over the face of the country, as autumn distributes its falling leaves." The character of the consequent confusion is aptly illustrated by Marshall (Vol. I, pp. 150, 151) as follows: "Lewis Craig enters 500 acres of land upon a treasury warrant, adjoining his former entry on the north side, and running along northwardly with Christian's and Todd's line for quantity."

Here, it is to be remarked, that of all the country north of the Kentucky River, no particular watercourse is called for, or other object of general description named, whereby the attention of the subsequent locator could be led to a particular section or circuit, within, or about, which to look for the particular objects of location. Again, it does not appear what former entry of Craig's is meant; neither is it certain what line of Christian and Todd is intended, or who, among many of the name, they are; or what line of theirs is to be followed, or where it is to be found; or, if one be found, whether it be the same called for by Craig or not. This exemplifies a vague entry.

The same day "George Smith enters 500 acres of land on a treasury-warrant, lying on the north side of Kentucky, a mile below a creek, beginning about twenty poles below a lick, running down the river, westerly and northwestwardly, for quantity."

It is obvious that the location-calls in this entry are all vague and uncertain to a subsequent locator.

The "north side of Kentucky" comprehended the whole county of Fayette, and more than one-third of the whole country. The next call is, "a mile below a creek," but which of the 500 creeks on the north side of the Kentucky does not appear either by name or description; and finally it is to begin "about twenty poles from a lick," but what lick, or where, are questions all-important to the locator of the adjoining land, but which are left unanswered and unanswerable by anything in Mr. Smith's entry. It is presumable that the person who made Mr. Smith's location knew the place which he intended to include, but certainly those holding unlocated warrants were not bound to find him; nor could his verbal explanation, if seen, aid an entry which the law required should be in writing. The holder of a warrant, which he desired to locate, with a copy of Mr. Smith's entry in his hand, could not know how to adjoin it, nor yet how to avoid an interference. He would, however, proceed to make his entry, and possibly, with a similar degree of vagueness. When they came to be surveyed, very probably, and to the very great surprise of both owners, the two interfered.

Another instance: "Edward Hall enters 622 acres of land, upon a treasury warrant, on Eagle Creek, a branch of Kentucky; beginning at a small beech, marked thus, 'I. N,' on the north side of a small drain; then east 320 poles; then north at right angles for quantity."

To see that this entry is wholly vague and uncertain to a subsequent locator, it is only necessary to observe that Eagle Creek is fifty miles in length, has 1,000 drains, and 1,000,000 of beech trees; while I. N. being cut on any one of them left it still destitute of notoriety. Hence it was totally unreasonable to require of a subsequent locator that he should find where it was in order to avoid an interference. He, of course, proceeded without knowing.

Besides these, there were other circumstances which contributed to produce interference between the claims to land, and which the importance of the subject requires should be mentioned. The country, being unknown and unsettled in its greatest extent, was explored by individuals, or small parties, who often gave different names to the same objects, such as water-courses, traces, licks, etc., and often mistook or confounded places and distances from the one to the other.

Whence sprang an infinitude of conflicting claims. Others made or referred to obscure marks, which, not having acquired the attention of those conversant in their vicinity, wanted notoriety to supply the absence of description, and relied on them as the foundation of their locations. To notice another source of interference, though last not least productive, it often happened that two sets of locators, commencing their entries on parallel creeks, and running out each way until they interlocked, were quite astonished to find their surveyors crossing each other's lines.

This plant, known to the botanist as Panax quinque folium, is highly prized by the Chinese. The root, when dried, is of a yellowish white color, with a mucilaginous sweetness in the taste, somewhat resembling licorice, accompanied with a slight aromatic bitterness. It is found in America, from Lower Canada as far as the State of Georgia. It thrives most in the mountainous regions of the Alleghanies, where it is more abundant. It is also met with in the environs of New York and Philadelphia, as well as in those parts of the northern States situated between the mountains and the sea, but it is so scarce as not to be worth the trouble of seeking. It is not found in the lower parts of Virginia and the Carolinas. It grows on declivities of mountains, in cool shady places, and in the richest soil. A man will not take up more than eight or nine pounds of the fresh roots in a day; these roots are always less than an inch in diameter, even after a growth of fifteen years, if any dependence can be placed on the number of rings on the upper part of the neck of the root, which are produced by the annual addition of successive layers.

Its collection in the United States is begun in the spring and ends when frost begins. Its root shrivels in drying, and finally becomes extremely hard, losing a third of its volume, and nearly half its weight in the process. By a simple process the Chinese give it a semi-transparency, which greatly enhances its commercial value. A description of this operation, though no secret, was early sold for $400 to persons in Kentucky, who turned the knowledge to a valuable account. Ginseng, thus prepared, brought $6 or $7 a pound in Philadelphia, and was sold at $50 to $100 in Canton. A considerable quantity was exported direct to China from Kentucky. It is still gathered and sold to some extent.

On January 1, 1785, all that part of Jefferson south of Salt River became Nelson County, in accordance with an act of the legislature passed the previous year. In the fall session of this year acts were passed forming three new counties, and all that part of Fayette lying "within a line beginning at the mouth of Upper Howard's Creek, on Kentucky River, running up the main fork thereof to the head; thence with the dividing ridge between Kentucky and Licking, until it comes opposite Eagle Creek; from thence a direct line to the nearest part of Raven Creek, a branch of Licking, and down Raven Creek to the mouth thereof; thence with Licking to the Ohio; thence with the Ohio to the mouth of Sandy Creek, up said creek to Cumberland Mountain; thence with the said mountain to the line of Lincoln County; thence with that line and the Kentucky River to the beginning," was constituted the county of Bourbon, and organized May 1, 1786.

The county of Mercer was formed of that part of Lincoln County lying within "a line beginning at the confluence of Sugar Creek and Kentucky River; thence a direct line to the mouth of Clark's Run; thence a straight line to Wilson's Station, in the fork of Clark's Run; then the same course continued to the line of Nelson County; thence with the said line to the line of Jefferson County; thence with that line to the Kentucky River; thence up the said river to the beginning."

Madison County was formed at the same time from that portion of Lincoln lying within "a line beginning at the confluence of Kentucky River and Sugar Creek; thence up said creek to the fork that James Thompson lives on; thence up said fork to the head thereof; thence a straight line to where an east course from John Ellis' will intersect the ridge that divides the waters of Paint Lick from the waters of Dick's River; thence along the top of said ridge southwardly, opposite to Hickman's Lick; thence south, forty-five degrees east, to the main Rockcastle River; thence up the said river to the head thereof; thence with the ridge that divides the waters of Kentucky River from the waters of Cumberland River to the line of Washington County; thence along said line to the main fork of Kentucky River that divides the county of Fayette from the county of Lincoln; thence down the said river to the beginning."

This will suffice to indicate the order and character of this development, which may be summarized in the following table:

For a time the organization of successive counties indicated the gradual development of the country, but that period has passed sometime since. Many of the later counties owe their origin to other motives than the demands of a sound public policy, and a number of "pauper counties" have been added to the list, the existence of which is prejudicial to nearly every interest concerned. The last county formed is a conspicuous example of this unfortunate legislation, the origin of which is given in a very readable article found in the Louisville Commercial for July 8, 1885, as follows:

The last legislature included a plain-looking man of forty five, of the average size, cheaply dressed, slightly bald and wearing spectacles—Robert Bates, the member from Letcher and some other counties. He occupied a seat in a remote corner of the House of Representatives, and never arose to speak even to a "point of order." The chief distinction he wore was that of being a brother to "Baby Bates," the celebrated Kentucky giant, known to the patrons of every museum in the land. Back of the seat occupied by Bates, frequently leaning over the railing of the lobby to talk with him, sat an ex-member named Fitzpatrick, tall, awkward, smooth-faced, and always appearing in the same heavy drab overcoat. Before the session closed an act was passed to create a county to be called Knott, with a county-seat named Hindman, in honor of the two officials wearing these names. Perhaps it would not have been termed inappropriately "An act to establish a county-seat upon the land of Robert Bates."

The traveler southward from Catlettsburg, on the Chattaroi Railroad, will find that the cars stop at Richardson, on the Big Sandy River. In the winter some sort of a boat can be procured to Prestonburg, in Floyd County, but at this season part of the distance must be traveled in a vehicle, which may be described as an ambulance, and part on horseback. Here the traveler is still forty-two miles from the Forks of Troublesome, indicated by the act as the seat of government for the new county. Another horse must be procured for the ride over the rough road which follows Beaver Creek during a greater part of the way. Upon arriving at the Forks of Troublesome nothing appears but two or three log houses, not grouped together with any view of making a beginning for a town, while vast forests extend in every direction. A road extends to Whitesburg, the county-seat of Letcher; another to Hazard, in Perry County, and a third to Jackson, in Breathitt. Two of these counties, at least, have made a reputation for outlawry that has extended beyond the State.

On Monday, July 7, 1884, the commissioners named to form the new county of Knott assembled at the "forks." The event had been duly advertised throughout those parts of Breathitt, Floyd, Perry and Letcher Counties, which were to be embraced in the new organization. A few persons from a distance were lodged in the "double" log-house, which served as the only inn in that section. It consisted of two log pens, covered by one roof, with a space between them large enough for another room. The second largest house was the store of "Chick" Allen, a son-in-law of Robert Bates aforesaid. The third house was what is facetiously known in the "moonshine" districts as a "bonded warehouse." No distillery was in sight, but a plentiful supply of white native whisky was served from the log-cabin with the high-sounding name. Mr. Bates was on hand, of course, as was his friend, Fitzpatrick, the latter being the spokesman of the commissioners.

Early in the day the neighboring people—and not all of them near neighbors—began to assemble. The young people predominated, because a "good time" was promised. Rustic maidens, accompanied by their swains, and rugged farmers with their families came on foot or on horseback, according to the distance. Soon two fiddlers of local repute made an appearance, which was a signal for clearing a small level space near the store, which was used for dancing through the day. The "bonded warehouse" was the chief attraction, however, and the pure mountain liquor, as the good people deemed it, flowed steadily from morning until night. With some, numerous potations proved an incentive for greater agility on the dancing-ground—not that anybody was drunk, but "they war a drinkin' some." The effect upon others was to make them boisterous, singing and shouting, now and then firing a pistol to add to the general "hilarity." The people of these counties are the most hospitable in the world, and the most amiable toward strangers, who give no grounds for suspicion. Everything was good natured, therefore, though a few small disputes had to be settled by personal encounters in which no weapons were employed.

A marked figure on this scene was old man Everidge, evidently of the age of sixty, who had never owned a hat, "'cause it made his head too warm." Nor did he wear any shoes in summer. Not even a coat was needed to complete his costume for the dance. He drank nothing, but was none the less hilarious for that, and danced as regularly as any of the younger bloods. The dancing ground was small, bounded on one side by a dry ditch, which, during part of the year, is one of the branches of Troublesome Creek. Once, while dancing a cotillion, the old man was led to the brink of the ditch by two of the women, whose hands held him, when they suddenly let him go, with the effect of landing him on his back on the sand below. It was great sport for everybody, and the old man lost no temper in consequence. A figure more noticeable was the belle of the ball—a young woman of twenty, with a most attractive form and the bearing of a princess. A ruddy complexion, great brown eyes, and a profusion of auburn ringlets were additional attractions. Dressed tastefully, she would have attracted wide admiration on any of our fashionable streets Perhaps she would have excited greater curiosity, however, in her native habiliments. She wore a dress of red calico, severely plain with the exception of a yellow ruffle about the bottom of the skirt and a narrow blue ribbon around the waist. A small green sun-bonnet, which did not hide half her ringlets, formed the rest of her attire. The belle wore shoes, without stockings, upon her arrival, but like the other dancers she placed these against the stone wall which lined one side of the dancing-ground. She was heard to say that she "couldn't dance to do no good with shoes on." The ladies drank more sparingly than their lords of the white whisky, so that none of them, except one or two of dubious reputations, became intoxicated.

Meanwhile the commissioners were compelled, by the general excitement, to adjourn to a farm-house half a mile down the creek, where their business was transacted. The nature of that business perhaps was never recorded. It was not altogether a peaceable meeting. The territory to be formed into a new county embraced the homes of the assessor of Floyd County, the sheriff of Letcher, the coroner of Breathitt and the surveyor of Perry. The first mentioned, Bolling Hall, was named as the head of a committee to divide the county into magisterial districts, but refused to serve, asserting that he would never consent to any arrangement which would deprive him of his former well-paying office, as the formation of the new county would do. Another work of the commissioners was to arrange for the election of county officers a month later, and to order a set of blank books for the county records. The latter have been secured, and the bill for them sent, as the law requires, to Frankfort, to be paid by the State. The shrewdness of these unsophisticated people is shown in the fact that while no other new county has expended more than $1,200 for an outfit of record books, the bill sent by Knott was $2,100, an amount which Auditor Hewitt has refused to pay until forced by law to do so. Thus it seems that one of the first acts of the new county was to raid the State treasury for the private benefit of a few citizens. There is a story told at Frankfort which is a propos: The late James Davidson, while State treasurer, always doled out the public moneys grudgingly, as if bestowing private alms upon undeserving persons. One day the sheriff of Perry County came in to make his settlement with the State. There were twenty-five "idiot claims," which were approved by the auditor, who gave a warrant upon the treasurer for their payment. Mr. Davidson counted the claims slowly and aloud, turning, as he finished, to the sheriff with the remark:

"Why, Mr. Coombs, you must all be idiots up in Perry County."

"Pretty near, I guess," was the reply, "but we generally have sense enough to get what's comin' to us from the treasury."

In the latter respect it seems that Perry County people are not unlike all the others.

The close of the festivities at what had become, during the day, the town of Hindman, was a fitting climax. The local magistrate and the only physician in the community lay on their backs in the sand, which lined the bottom of the dry creek, the former singing with all his might until he became too drowsy longer to make any exertion. Many others lay stretched at full length upon the grass. The growth of the darkness made the enthusiastic survivors more reckless, and pistol shots became more frequent until late in the night. Since the first day's performance in making the new county it is not reported that any further measures have been taken toward setting the county machinery in motion. The double log-house is the only known repository of the expensive record books, and no accommodations have been provided for holding courts. Such is the new county named for the present governor of Kentucky. Such is the county formed for the benefit of Mr. Bates and his friends.

Yet these are not bad people. Their quarrels are among themselves, and they do not offer to molest a stranger. Their ideas are narrow because they have no relations with the rest of the world. The man among them who happens to get to Frankfort once or twice in a lifetime, as the steerer of a raft of logs, is listened to thereafter on public questions as an oracle. Probably not more than two dozen persons present at the organization of Knott County could read, but there was evident a certain amount of respect for the man able to read and write. Some one was being discussed with reference to his becoming a candidate for the legislature.

"Hell!" says one; "he ain't fitten for no legislature."

"Yes he is!" ejaculated his neighbor; "he can read and repeat!"

What degree of qualification this may be is left for the reader to conjecture.

James Wilkinson was born in Maryland in 1757, studied medicine in Philadelphia, but after the battle of Bunker Hill repaired to Cambridge, and was soon appointed captain in Reed's New Hampshire regiment, serving as such with Arnold in the northern army; promoted brigade-major July, 1776, and lieutenant-colonel January 12, 1777; bearer of dispatches to Gen. Washington from Gen. Gates December, 1776, he participated in the battles of Trenton and Princeton. Upon Gates' accession to command of the northern army, Wilkinson was made his adjutant-general May, 1777, and upon surrender of Burgoyne he conveyed the official dispatches to congress. Brevetted brigadier-general in November, he was, in January, 1778, appointed secretary of the board of war, of which Gates was president. A quarrel arising with the latter at the time of the Conway cabal, Wilkinson resigned his secretaryship, and in July, 1779, was appointed clothier-general of the army. Settled in Kentucky after the peace, and engaged in mercantile affairs. Appointed lieutenant-colonel Second Infantry November, 1791, and conducted an expedition against the Wabash Indians in 1791–92; promoted to be brigadier-general March 1792, and commanded the right wing of Wayne's army at Maumee Rapids, and in December, 1796, became general-in-chief of the army, serving on the western frontier; one of the commissioners to receive Louisiana from the French in 1803; he was governor of that territory in 1805–06; ordered to command on the Mississippi December, 1808; he was recalled to Washington in 1810, and tried by court-martial in 1811 on charges of corruptly receiving money from Spain, and being in complicity with Aaron Burr. The court acquitted him with credit, and he returned to the southern department. In 1813 he was appointed major-general and transferred to the northern frontier. Owing to the failure of Hampton to co-operate with him, his plans for the occupation of Canada totally failed. He was superseded in command, and a court of inquiry ordered in 1815, which acquitted him of all blame. On the re-organization of the army in 1815, he was discharged, and passed the later years of his life upon his estates in Mexico. In 1816 he published "Memoirs of My Own Times" (3 Vols., 8 vo.); died near the City of Mexico December 28, 1825. (Johnson's Cyclopedia.)

NOTE 28, PAGE 275.

A memoir by Daniel Clark, supposed to be the nephew of the gentleman of the same name who was appointed Wilkinson's agent, gives a concise history of the matter, which is extracted from American State Papers, Vol. XX, p. 707. Wilkinson, in his "Memoirs of My Own Times," confirms this account as substantially correct. "About the period of which we are now speaking, in the middle of the year 1787, the foundation of an intercourse with Kentucky and the settlements on the Ohio was laid, which daily increased. Previous to that time, all those who ventured on the Mississippi had their property seized by the first commanding officer whom they met, and little or no communication was kept up between the countries. Now and then an emigrant who wished to settle in Natchez, by dint of entreaty, and solicitation of friends who had interests in New Orleans, procured permission to move there with his family, slaves, cattle, furniture and farming utensils, but was allowed to bring no other property except cash. An unexpected incident, however, changed the face of things, and was productive of a new line of conduct. The arrival of a boat, belonging to Gen. Wilkinson, loaded with tobacco and other productions of Kentucky, is announced in town, and a guard was immediately sent on board of it. The general's name had hindered this being done at Natchez, as the commandant was fearful that such a step might be displeasing to his superiors, who might wish to show some respect to the property of a general officer; at any rate the boat was proceeding to New Orleans, and they would there resolve on what measures they ought to pursue and put in execution. The government, not much disposed to show any mark of respect or forbearance toward the general's property, he not having at that time arrived, was about proceeding in the usual way of confiscation, when a merchant in New Orleans, who had considerable influence there, and who was formerly acquainted with the general, represented to the governor that the measures taken by the intendant would very probably give rise to disagreeable events; that the people of Kentucky were already exasperated at the conduct of the Spaniards in seizing on the property of all those who navigated the Mississippi; and if this system was pursued, they would very probably, in spite of congress and the executive of the United States, take upon themselves to obtain the navigation of the river by force, which they were well able to do; a measure for some time before much dreaded by this government, which had no force to resist them, if such a plan was put in execution. Hints were likewise given that Wilkinson was a very popular man, who could influence the whole of that country; and probably that his sending a boat before him with a wish that she might be seized was but a snare at his return to influence the minds of the people, and, having brought them to the point he wished, induce them to appoint him their leader, and then, like a torrent, spread over the country, and carry fire and desolation from one end of the province to the other.

"Gov. Miro, a weak man, unacquainted with the American government, ignorant even of the position of Kentucky with respect to his own province, but alarmed at the very idea of an irruption of Kentucky men, whom he feared without knowing their strength, communicated his wishes to the intendant that the guard might be removed from the boat, which was accordingly done, and a Mr. Patterson, who was the agent of the general, was permitted to take charge of the property on board, and to sell it free of duty. The general, on his arrival in Orleans, sometime after, was informed of the obligation he lay under to the merchant, who had impressed the government with such an idea of his importance and influence at home, waited on him, and in concert with him, formed a plan for their future operations. In his interview with the governor, that he might not seem to derrogate from the character given of him, by appearing concerned in so trifling a business as a boat load of tobacco, hams and butter, he gave him to understand that the property belonged to many citizens of Kentucky, who, availing themselves of his return to the Atlantic States, by way of Orleans, wished to make trial of the temper of this government, as he, on his arrival, might inform his own what steps had been pursued under his eye, that adequate measures might be afterward taken to procure satisfaction. He acknowledged with gratitude the attention and respect manifested by the governor toward himself in the favor shown to his agent; but at the same time mentioned that he would not wish the governor to expose himself to the anger of his court by refraining from seizing on the boat and cargo, as it was but a trifle, if such were the positive orders from the court, and that he had not power to relax them according to circumstances. Convinced by this discourse that the general rather wished for an opportunity of embroiling affairs than sought to avoid it, the governor became more alarmed. For two or three years before, particularly since the arrival of the commissioners from Georgia, who had come to Natchez to claim that country, he had been fearful of an invasion at every annual rise of the waters, and the news of a few boats being seen was enough to alarm the whole province. He revolved in his mind what measures he ought to pursue (consistent with the orders he had from home not to permit the free navigation of the river), in order to keep the Kentucky people quiet; and in his succeeding interviews with Wilkinson, having procured more knowledge than he had hitherto acquired of their character, population, strength and dispositions, he thought he could do nothing better than hold out a bait to Wilkinson to use his influence in restraining the people from an invasion of this province till he could give advice to his court, and require further instructions. This was the point to which the parties wished to bring him, and being informed that in Kentucky two or three crops were on hand, for which, if an immediate vent was not to be found, the people could not be kept within bounds, he made Wilkinson the offer of a permission to import, on his own account to New Orleans, free of duty, all the productions of Kentucky, thinking by this means to conciliate the good will of the people, without yielding the point of navigation, as the commerce carried on would appear the effect of an indulgence to an individual, which could be withdrawn at pleasure. On consultation with his friends, who well knew what further concessions Wilkinson would extort from the fears of the Spaniards, by the promise of his good offices in preaching peace, harmony, and good understanding with this government, until arrangements were made between Spain and America, he was advised to insist that the governor should insure him a market for all the flour and tobacco he might send, as in the event of an unfortunate shipment, he would be ruined whilst endeavoring to do a service to Louisiana. This was accepted. Flour was always wanted in New Orleans, and the king of Spain had given orders to purchase more tobacco for the supply of his manufactories at home than Louisiana at that time produced, and which was paid for at about $9.50 per cwt. In Kentucky it cost but $2, and the profit was immense. In consequence, the general had appointed his friend Daniel Clark his agent here, returned by way of Charleston in a vessel, with a particular permission to go to the United States, even at the very moment of Gardoqui's information; and on his arrival in Kentucky, bought up all the produce he could collect, which he shipped and disposed of as before mentioned, and for some time all the trade for the Ohio was carried on in his name, a line from him sufficing to ensure the owner of the boat every privilege and protection he could desire."

An act concerning the erection of the District of Kentucky into an independent State. Passed the 18th of December, 1789.

WHEREAS it is represented to this present General Assembly, that the act of last session entitled "an act concerning the erection of the District of Kentucky into an independent State," which contains terms materially different from those of the act of October session, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-five, are found incompatible with the real views of this Commonwealth, as well as injurious to the good people of said district:

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly, That in the month of May, next, on the respective court days of the counties within the said district, and at the respective places of holding courts therein, Representatives to continue in appointment for one year, and to compose a convention, with the powers, and for the purposes hereinafter mentioned, shall be elected by the free male inhabitants of each county above the age of twenty-one years, in like manner as delegates to the General Assembly have been elected within said district in the proportions following: In the county of Jefferson shall be elected five representatives; in the county of Nelson, five representatives; in the county of Mercer, five representatives; in the county of Lincoln, five representatives; in the county of Madison, five representatives; in the county of Fayette, five representatives; in the county of Woodford, five representatives; in the county of Bourbon, five representatives; and in the county of Mason, five representatives: Provided, That no free male inhabitant above the age of twenty-one years shall vote in any other county except that in which he resides, and that no person shall be capable of being elected unless he has been a resident within the said district at least one year.

SEC. 2. That full opportunity may be given to the good people of exercising their right of sufferage on an occasion so interesting to them, each of the officers holding such elections, shall continue the same from day to-day, passing over Sunday, for five days, including the first day, and shall cause this act to be read on each day immediately preceding the opening of the election at the door of the court house or other convenient place; each of the said officers shall deliver to each person duly elected a representative, a certificate of his election, and shall transmit a general return to the clerk of the Supreme Court, to be, by him, laid before the convention.

SEC. 3. For every neglect of any of the duties hereby enjoined on such officer, he shall forfeit one hundred pounds, to be recovered by action of debt by any person suing for the same.

SEC. 4. The said convention shall be held at Danville, on the twenty-sixth day of July next, and shall and may proceed, after choosing a president and other proper officers, and settling the proper rules of proceeding, to consider and determine whether it be expedient for, and the will of the good people of the district, that the same be erected into an independant State, on the terms and conditions following:

SEC. 5. First, that the boundary between the proposed State and Virginia, shall remain the same as at present separates the district from the residue of this commonwealth.

SEC. 6. Second, that the proposed State shall take upon itself a just proportion of the debt of the United States, and the payment of all the certificates granted on account of the several expeditions carried on from the Kentucky district against the Indians, since the first day of January, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-five.

SEC. 7. Third, that all private rights and interests of lands within the said district, derived from the laws of Virginia prior to such separation, shall remain valid and secure under the laws of the proposed State, and shall be determined by the laws now existing in this State.

SEC. 8. Fourth, that the lands within the proposed State of non-resident proprietors, shall not in any case be taxed higher than the lands of residents, at any time prior to the admission of the proposed State to a vote by its delegates in Congress, where such non-residents reside out of the United States, nor at any time either before or after such admission, where such non-residents reside within this Commonwealth, within which the stipulation shall be reciprocal; or where such non-residents reside within any other of the United States, which shall declare the same to be reciprocal within its limits; nor shall a neglect of cultivation or improvement of any land within either the proposed State of this Commonwealth, belonging to non-residents, citizens of the other, subject such non-residents to forfeiture or other penalty, within the term of six years, after the admission of the said State into the Federal Union.

SEC. 9. Fifth, that no grant of land or land warrant to be issued by the proposed State, shall interfere with any warrant heretofore issued from the land office of Virginia, which shall be located on land within the said district, now liable thereto, on or before the first day of September, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-one.

SEC. 10. Sixth, that the unlocated lands within the said district, which stand appropriated to individuals of description of individuals, by the laws of this Commonwealth, for military or other services, shall be exempted from the disposition of the proposed State, and shall remain subject to be disposed of by the Commonwealth of Virginia, according to such appropriation until the first day of May, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-two, and no longer; thereafter the residue of all lands remaining within the limits of the said, shall be subject to the disposition of the proposed State.

SEC. 11. Seventh, that the use and navigation of the river Ohio, so far as the territory of the proposed State, or the territory which shall remain within the limits of this Commonwealth lies therein, shall be free and common to the citizens of the United States, and respective jurisdictions of this Commonwealth and of the proposed State on the river as aforesaid, shall be concurrent only with the States which may possess the opposite shores of the said river.

SEC. 12. Eighth, that in case any complaint or dispute shall at any time arise between the Commonwealth of Virginia and the said district, after it shall be an independent State, concerning the meaning or execution of the foregoing articles, the same shall be determined by six commissioners, of whom two shall be chosen by each of the parties, and the remainder by the commissioners so first appointed.

SEC. 13. Provided, however, That five members assembled shall be a sufficient number to adjourn from day to day, and to issue writs for supplying vacancies which may happen from deaths, resignations or refusals to act; a majority of the whole shall be a sufficient number to choose a President, settle the proper rules of proceeding, authorize any number to summon a convention during a recess, and to act in all other instances where a greater number is not expressly required. Two-thirds of the whole shall be a sufficient number to determine on the expediency of forming the said district into an independent State on the aforesaid terms and conditions: Provided, that a majority of the whole number to be elected concur therein.

SEC. 14. And be it further enacted, That if the said convention shall approve of the erection of the said district into an independent State on the foregoing terms and conditions, they shall and may proceed to fix a day posterior to the first day of November, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-one, on which the authority of this Commonwealth, and of its laws, under the exceptions aforesaid, shall cease and determine forever over the proposed State, and the said articles become a solemn compact mutually binding on the parties, and unalterably by either without the consent of the other.

SEC. 15. Provided, however, That prior to the first day of November, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-one, the general government of the United States shall consent to the erection of the said district into an independent State, shall release this Commonwealth from all its Federal obligations arising from the said district as being part thereof, and shall agree that the proposed State shall immediately after the day to be fixed as aforesaid, posterior to the first day of November, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-one, or at some convenient time future thereto. be admitted into the Federal Union.

SEC. 16. And to the end that no period of anarchy may happen to the good people of the proposed State, it is to be understood that the said convention shall have the authority to take the necessary provisional measures for the election and meeting of a convention, at some time prior to the day fixed for the determination of the authority of this Commonwealth, and of its laws over said district, and posterior to the first day of November, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-one aforesaid, with full power and authority to frame and establish a fundamental constitution of government for the proposed State, and to declare what laws shall be in force therein, until the same shall be abrogated or altered by the legislative authority acting under the constitution so to be framed and established.

SEC. 17. And be it further enacted, That the electors in going to, continuing at, and returning from an election of members to the said convention, shall be entitled to the same privileges from arrest, as are by law allowed at an election of members to the General Assembly; and each person returned to serve as a member in said convention, shall be entitled to the same privileges from arrest in going to, during his attendance on, and returning from said convention, as are by law allowed to members of the General Assembly.

SEC. 18. This act shall be transmitted by the Executive to the representatives of this Commonwealth in Congress, who are hereby instructed to use their endeavors to obtain from Congress a speedy act to the effect above specified.

NOTE 30, PAGE 297.

The House, according to the standing order of the day, resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Commonwealth, Mr. Caldwell in the chair. And after some time spent therein, the Speaker resumed the chair, and Mr. Caldwell reported that the committee had, according to order, had under consideration the Governor's address, and had come to the following resolutions thereupon, which he had delivered in at the Clerk's table, where they were twice read and agreed to by the House.*

I. Resolved, That the several States composing the United States of America, are not united on the principle of unlimited submission to their general government; but that by compact under the style and title of a Constitution for the United States and of amendments thereto, they constituted a general government for special purposes, delegated to that government certain definite powers, reserving each State to itself, the residuary mass of right to their own self-government; and that whensoever the general government assumes undelegated powers, its acts are unauthoritative, void and of no force; That to this compact each State acceded as a State, and is an integral party, its co-States forming, as to itself, the other party; That the government created by this compact was not made the exclusive or final judge of the extent of the powers delegated to itself; since that would have made its discretion, and not the Constitution, the measure of its powers; but that as in all other cases of compact among parties having no common judge, each party has an equal right to judge for itself, as well of infractions as of the mode and measure of redress.

II. Resolved, That the Constitution of the United States having delegated to Congress a power to punish treason, counterfeiting the securities and current coin of the United States, piracies and felonies committed on the high seas, and offenses against the laws of nations, and no other crimes whatever, and it being true as a general principle, and one of the amendments to the Constitution having also declared "that the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people," therefore, also, the same act of Congress passed on the 14th day of July, 1798, entitled "An act in addition to the act entitled an act for the punishment of certain crimes against the United States;" as also the act passed by them on the 27th day of June, 1798, entitled "An act to punish frauds committed on the Bank of the United States" (and all other of their acts which assume to create, define or punish crimes other than those enumerated in the Constitution), are altogether void and of no force, and that the power to create, define and punish such other crimes is reserved, and of right appertains solely and exclusively to the respective States, each within its own territory.

III. Resolved, That it is true as a general principle, and is also expressly declared by one of the amendments to the Constitution that "the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people;" and that no power over the freedom of religion, freedom of speech, or freedom of the press being delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, all lawful powers respecting the same did of right remain, and were reserved to the States or to the people: That thus was manifested their determination to retain to themselves the right of judging how far the licentiousness of speech and of the press may be abridged without lessening their useful freedom, and how far those abuses, which cannot be separated from their use, should be tolerated, rather than the use be destroyed, and thus also they guarded against all abridgement by the United States of the freedom of religious opinions and exercises, and retained to themselves the right of protecting the same, as this State, by a law passed on the general demand of its citizens, had already protected them from all human restraint or interference. And that in addition to this general principle and express declaration, another and more special provision has been made by one of the amendments to the Constitution which expressly declares that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercises thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press," whereby guarding in the same sentence and under the same words, the freedom of religion, of speech, or of the press insomuch, that whatever violates either, throws down the sanctuary which covers the others, and that libels, falsehoods, defamation equally with heresy and false religion, are withheld from the cognizance of Federal tribunals. That therefore the act of Congress of the United States passed on the 14th day of July, 1798, entitled "An act in addition to the act for the punishment of certain crimes against the United States," which does abridge the freedom of the press, is not law, but is altogether void and of no effect.

IV. Resolved, That alien friends are under the jurisdiction and protection of the laws of the State wherein they are; that no power over them has been delegated to the United States nor prohibited to the individual State distinct from their power over citizens; and it being true as a general principle and one of the amendments to the Constitution having also declared that "the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people," the act of the Congress of the United States passed on the 22d day of June, 1798, entitled "An act concerning aliens," which assumes power over alien friends not delegated by the Constitution, is not law, but is altogether void and of no force.

V. Resolved, That in addition to the general principle as well as the express declaration, that powers not delegated are reserved, another and more special provision inserted in the Constitution from abundant caution has declared, "that the migration or importation of such persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit, shall not be prohibited by the Congress prior to the year 1808." That this Commonwealth does admit the migration of alien friends described as the subject of the said act concerning aliens; that a provision against the prohibiting their migration is a provision against all acts equivalent thereto, or it would be nugatory; that to remove them when migrated is equivalent to a prohibition of their migration, and is therefore contrary to the said provision of the Constitution, and void.

VI. Resolved, That the imprisonment of a person under the protection of the laws of this Commonwealth on his failure to obey the simple order of the President to depart out of the United States, as is undertaken by the said act entitled "An act concerning aliens," is contrary to the Constitution, one amendment to which has provided that "no person shall be deprived of liberty without due process of law," and that another having provided "that in all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a public trial by an impartial jury, to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation, to be confronted with the witnesses against him, to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense," the same act undertaking to authorize the President to remove a person out of the United States who is under the protection of the law, on his own suspicion, without accusation, without jury, without public trial, without confrontation of the witnesses against him, without having witnesses in his favor, without defense, without counsel, is contrary to these provisions also of the Constitution, is therefore not law, but utterly void and of no force. That transferring the power of judging any person who is under the protection of the laws, from the courts to the President of the United States, as is undertaken by the same act concerning aliens, is against the article of the Constitution which provides that "the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in courts, the judges of which shall hold their offices during good behavior," and that the said act is void for that reason also; and it is further to be noted, that this transfer of judiciary power is to that magistrate of the general government who already possesses all the executive, and a qualified negative in all the legislative powers.

VII. Resolved, That the construction applied by the general government (as is evinced by sundry of their proceedings) to those parts of the Constitution of the United States, which delegate to Congress a power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises; to pay the debts and provide for the common defense, and general welfare of the United States, and to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the powers vested by the Constitution in the government of the United States, or any department thereof, goes to the destruction of all the limits prescribed to their power by the Constitution; that words meant by that instrument to be subsidiary only to the execution of the limited powers ought not to be so construed as themselves to give unlimited powers, nor a part so to be taken as to destroy the whole residue of the instrument; that the proceedings of the general government, under color of these articles, will be a fit and necessary subject for revisal and correction at a time of greater tranquility, while those specified in the preceding resolutions call for immediate redress.

VIII. Resolved, That the preceding resolutions be transmitted to the senators and representatives in Congress from this Commonwealth, who are hereby enjoined to present the same to their respective houses, and to use their best endeavors to procure, at the next session of Congress, a repeal of the aforesaid unconstitutional and obnoxious acts.

IX. Resolved, Lastly, that the governor of this Commonwealth be, and is hereby authorized and requested to communicate the preceding resolutions to the legislatures of the several States, to assure them that this Commonwealth considers union for specified national purposes, and particularly for those specified in their late Federal compact, to be friendly to the peace, happiness, and prosperity of all the States; that faithful to that compact, according to the plain intent and meaning in which it was understood and acceded to by the several parties, it is sincerely anxious for its preservation; that it does also believe, that to take from the States all the powers of self-government, and transfer them to a general and consolidated government, without regard to the special delegations and reservations solemnly agreed to in that compact, is not for the peace, happiness, or prosperity of these States. And that, therefore, this Commonwealth is determined, as it doubts not its co-States are, to tamely submit to undelegated and consequently unlimited powers in no man or body of men on earth; that if the acts before specified should stand, these conclusions would flow from them; that the general government may place any act they think proper on the list of crimes and punish it themselves, whether enumerated or not enumerated by the Constitution as cognizable by them; that they may transfer its cognizance to the President or any other person, who may himself be the accuser, counsel, judge and jury, whose suspicions may be the evidence, his order the sentence, his officer the executioner, and his breast the sole record of the transaction; that a very numerous and valuable description of the inhabitants of these States being by this precedent reduced as outlaws to the absolute dominion of one man, and the barrier of the Constitution thus swept away from us all, no rampart now remains against the passions and the powers of a majority of Congress, to protect from a like exportation or other more grievous punishment the minority of the same body, the Legislature, judges, governors, and counselors of the States, nor their other peaceable inhabitants who may venture to reclaim the constitutional rights and liberties of the State and people, or who for other causes, good or bad, may be obnoxious to the views or marked by the suspicions of the President, or be thought dangerous to his or their elections or other interests, public or personal; that the friendless alien has indeed been selected as the safest subject of a first experiment, but the citizens will soon follow, or rather has already followed; for already has a sedition act marked him as its prey; that these and successive acts of the same character, unless arrested on the threshold, may tend to drive these States into revolution and blood, and will furnish new calumnies against Republican governments, and new pretexts for those who wish it to be believed that man cannot be governed but by a rod of iron; that it would be a dangerous delusion were a confidence in the men of our choice to silence our fears for the safety of our rights; that confidence is everywhere the parent of despotism. Free government is founded in jealousy and not in confidence. It is jealousy, and not confidence which prescribes limited constitutions to bind down those whom we are obliged to trust with power; that our Constitution has accordingly fixed the limits to which and no further our confidence may go; and let the honest advocate of confidence read the alien and sedition acts, and say if the Constitution has now been wise in fixing limits to the government it created, and whether we should be wise in destroying those limits. Let him say what the government is if it be not a tyranny, which the men of our choice have conferred on the President, and the President of our choice has assented to and accepted over the friendly strangers, to whom the mild spirit of our country and its laws had pledged hospitality and protection; that the men of our choice have more respected the bare suspicions of the President than the solid rights of innocence, the claims of justification, the sacred force of truth, and the forms and substance of law and justice. In questions of power then let no more be heard of confidence in man, but bind him down from mischief by the claims of the Constitution. That this Commonwealth does therefore call on its co-States for an expression of their sentiments on the acts concerning aliens, and for the punishment of certain crimes hereinbefore specified, plainly declaring whether these acts are or are not authorized by the Federal compact. And it doubts not that their sense will be so announced as to prove their attachment unaltered to limited government, whether general or particular, and that the rights and liberties of their co-States will be exposed to no dangers by remaining embarked on a common bottom with their own; that they will concur with this Commonwealth in considering the said acts as so palpably against the Constitution as to amount to an undisguised declaration, that the compact is not meant to be the measure of the powers of the general government, but that it will proceed in the exercise over these States of all powers whatsoever; that they will view this as seizing the rights of the States and consolidating them in the hands of the general government with a power assumed to bind the States (not merely in cases made Federal) but in all cases whatsoever, by laws made not with their consent; that this would be to surrender the form of government we have chosen, and to live under one deriving its power from its own will, and not from out authority; and that the co-States, recurring to their natural right in cases not made Federal, will concur in declaring these acts void and of no force, and will each unite with this Commonweath in requesting their repeal at the next session of Congress.

EDMUND BULLOCK.

NOTE 31, PAGE 325.

CONSTITUTION OF 1850.

ARTICLE I.

CONCERNING THE DISTRIBUTION OF THE POWERS OF GOVERNMENT.

SECTION 1. The powers of the government of the State of Kentucky shall be divided into three distinct departments, and each of them to be confided to a separate body of magistracy, to-wit, those which are legislative to one; those which are executive to another, and those which are judiciary to another.

SEC. 2. No person, or collection of persons, being of one of those departments, shall exercise any power properly belonging to either of the others, except in the instances hereinafter expressly directed or permitted.

ARTICLE II.

CONCERNING THE LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

SECTION 1. The legislative power shall be vested in a House of Representatives and Senate, which together shall be styled "The General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky."

SEC. 2. The members of the House of Representatives shall continue in service for the term of two years from the day of the general election, and no longer.

SEC. 3. Representatives shall be chosen on the first Monday in August in every second year, and the mode of holding the election shall be regulated by law.

SEC. 4. No person shall be a Representative, who, at the time of his election, is not a citizen of the United States, has not attained the age of twenty-four years, and who has not resided in this State two years next preceding his election, and the last year thereof in the county, town or city for which he may be chosen.

SEC. 5. The General Assembly shall divide each county of this Commonwealth into convenient election precincts, or may delegate power to do so to such county authorities as may be designated by law; and elections for Representatives for the several counties shall be held at the places for holding their respective courts, and in the several election precincts into which the counties may be divided. Provided, That when it shall appear to the General Assembly that any city or town hath a number of qualified voters equal to the ratio then fixed, such city or town shall be invested with the privilege of a separate Representative, in either or both houses of the General Assembly, which shall be retained so long as such city or town shall contain a number of qualified voters equal to the ratio which may from time to time be fixed by law, and, thereafter, elections for the county in which such city or town is situated shall not be held therein; but such city or town shall not be entitled to a separate representation unless such county, after the separation, shall also be entitled to one or more representatives. That whenever a city or town shall be entitled to a representation in either house of the General Assembly, and by its members shall be entitled to more than one representative, such city or town shall be divided, by squares which are contiguous, so as to make the most compact form, into representative districts, as nearly equal as may be, equal to the number of representatives to which such city or town may be entitled; and one representative shall be elected from each district. In like manner shall said city or town be divided into senatorial districts, when by the apportionment more than one Senator shall be allotted to such city or town, and a Senator shall be elected from each senatorial district; but no ward or municipal division shall be divided by such division of senatorial or representative districts, unless it be necessary to equalize the elective, senatorial or representative districts.

SEC. 6. Representation shall be equal and uniform in this Commonwealth, and shall be forever regulated and ascertained by the number of qualified voters therein. In the year 1850, again in the year 1857, and every eighth year thereafter, an enumeration of all qualified voters of the State shall be made, and to secure uniformity and equality of representation, the State is hereby laid off into ten districts. The first district shall be composed of the counties of Fulton, Hickman, Ballard, McCracken, Graves, Calloway, Marshall, Livingston Crittenden, Union, Hopkins, Caldwell and Trigg. The second district shall be composed of the counties of Christian, Muhlenburgh, Henderson, Daviess, Hancock, Ohio, Breckinridge, Meade, Grayson, Butler and Edmonson. The third district shall be composed of the counties of Todd, Logan, Simpson, Warren, Allen, Monroe, Barren and Hart. The fourth district shall be composed of the counties of Cumberland, Adair, Green, Taylor, Clinton, Russell, Wayne, Pulaski, Casey, Boyle and Lincoln. The fifth district shall be composed of the counties of Hardin, Larue, Bullitt, Spencer, Nelson, Washington, Marion, Mercer and Anderson. The sixth district shall be composed of the counties of Garrard, Madison, Estill, Owsley, Rockcastle, Laurel, Clay, Whitley, Knox, Harlan, Perry, Letcher, Pike, Floyd and Johnson. The seventh district shall be composed of the counties of Jefferson, Oldham, Trimble, Carroll, Henry and Shelby and the city of Louisville. The eighth district shall be composed of the counties of Bourbon, Fayette, Scott, Owen, Franklin, Woodford and Jessamine. The ninth district shall be composed of the counties of Clark, Bath, Montgomery, Fleming, Lewis, Greenup, Carter, Lawrence, Morgan and Breathitt. The tenth district shall be composed of the counties of Mason, Bracken, Nicholas, Harrison, Pendleton, Campbell, Grant, Kenton, Boone and Gallatin. The number of Representatives shall, at the several sessions of the General Assembly next after making the enumerations, be apportioned among the ten several districts, according to the number of qualified voters in each; and the representatives shall be apportioned, as near as may be, among the counties, towns and cities in each district; and in making such apportionment the following rules shall govern, to-wit: Every county, town or city, having the ratio, shall have one Representative; if double the ratio, two Representatives, and so on. Next the counties, towns or cities having one or more Representatives, and the largest number of qualified voters above the ratio, and counties having the largest number under the ratio, shall have a Representative, regard being always had to the greatest number of qualified voters. Provided, That when a county may not have a sufficient number of qualified voters to entitle it to one Representative, then such county may be joined to some adjacent county or counties, which counties shall send one Representative. When a new county shall be formed of territory belonging to more than one district, it shall form a part of that district having the least number of qualified voters.

SEC. 7. The House of Representatives shall choose its speaker and other officers.

SEC. 8. Every free white male citizen of the age of twenty-one years, who has resided in the State two years, or in the county, town, or city in which he offers to vote, one year next preceding the election, shall be a voter; but such voter shall have been for sixty days next preceding the election a resident of the precinct in which he offers to vote, and he shall vote in said precinct and not elsewhere.

SEC. 9. Voters, in all cases, except treason, felony, breach or surety of the peace, shall be privileged from arrest during their attendance at, going to, and returning from elections.

SEC. 10. Senators shall be chosen for the term of four years, and the Senate shall have power to choose its officers biennially.

SEC. 11. Senators and Representatives shall be elected under the first apportionment after the adoption of this Constitution, in the year 1851.

SEC. 12. At the session of the General Assembly next after the first apportionment under this Constitution, the Senators shall be divided by lot, as equally as may be, into two classes; the seats of the first class shall be vacated at the end of two years from the day of the election, and those of the second class at the end of four years, so that one-half shall be chosen every two years.

SEC. 13. The number of Representatives shall be one hundred, and the number of Senators thirty-eight.

SEC. 14. At every apportionment of representation, the State shall be laid off into thirty-eight senatorial districts, which shall be so formed as to contain, as near as may be, an equal number of qualified voters, and so that no county shall be divided in the formation of a senatorial district, except such county shall be entitled, under the enumeration, to two or more Senators; and where two or more counties compose a district, they shall be adjoining.

SEC. 15. One Senator for each district shall be elected by the qualified voters therein, who shall vote in the precincts where they reside, at the places where elections are by law directed to be held.

SEC. 16. No person shall be a Senator, who at the time of his election, is not a citizen of the United States, has not attained the age of thirty years, and who has not resided in this State six years next preceding his election, and the last year thereof in the district for which he may be chosen.

SEC. 17. The election for Senators, next after the first apportionment under this constitution shall be general throughout the State, and at the same time that the election for representatives is held, and thereafter there shall be a biennial election for Senators to fill the places of those whose term of service may have expired.

SEC. 18. The General Assembly shall convene on the first Monday in November, after the adoption of this constitution, and again on the first Monday in November, 1851, and on the same day of every second year thereafter, unless a different day be appointed by law, and their sessions shall be held at the seat of government.

SEC. 19. Not less than a majority of the members of each house of the General Assembly shall constitute a quorm to do business, but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and shall be authorized by law to compel the attendance of absent members in such manner and under such penalties as may be prescribed thereby.

SEC. 20. Each house of the General Assembly shall judge of the qualifications, elections and returns of its members; but a contested election shall be determined in such manner as shall be directed by law.

SEC. 21. Each house of the General Assembly may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish a member for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member, but not a second time for the same cause.

SEC. 22. Each house of the General Assembly shall keep and publish, weekly, a journal of its proceedings, and the yeas and nays of the members on any question shall, at the desire of any two of them, be entered on their journal.

SEC. 23. Neither house during the session of the General Assembly shall, without the consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other place than that in which they may be sitting.

SEC. 24. The members of the General Assembly shall severally receive from the public treasury a compensation for their services, which shall be three dollars a day during their attendance on, and twelve and a half cents per mile for the necessary travel in going to, and returning from, the sessions of their respective houses: Provided, That the same may be increased or diminished by law; but no alteration shall take effect during the session at which such alteration shall be made; nor shall a session of the General Assembly continue beyond sixty days, except by a vote of two-thirds of all the members elected to each house, but this shall not apply to the first session held under this constitution.

SEC. 25. The members of the General Assembly shall, in all cases, except treason, felony, breach or surety of the peace, be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the sessions of their respective houses, and in going to and returning from the same; and for any speech or debate in either house, they shall not be questioned in any other place.

SEC. 26. No Senator or Representative shall, during the term for which he was elected, nor for one year thereafter be appointed or elected to any civil office of profit under this Commonwealth, which shall have been created, or the emoluments of which shall have been increased, during said term, except to such offices or appointments as may be filled by the election of the people.

SEC. 27. No person, while he continues to exercise the functions of a clergyman, priest or teacher of any religious persuasion, society or sect, nor while he holds or exercises any office of profit under this Commonwealth, or under the government of the United States, shall be eligible to the General Assembly except attorneys at law, justices of the peace and militia officers: Provided, That attorneys for the Commonwealth who receive a fixed annual salary, shall be ineligible.

SEC. 28. No person who at any time may have a collector of taxes or public moneys for the State or the assistant or deputy of such collector, shall be eligible to the General Assembly unless he shall have obtained a quietus, six months before the election, for the amount of such collection, and for all public moneys for which he may have been responsible.

SEC. 29. No bill shall have the force of a law until on three several days it be read over in each House of the General Assembly, and free discussion allowed thereon, unless, in cases of urgency, four-fifths of the house where the bill shall be depending, may deem it expedient to dispense with this rule.

SEC. 30. All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, but the Senate may propose amendments, as in other bills: Provided, that they shall not introduce any new matter, under color of amendment, which does not relate to raising revenue.

SEC. 31. The General Assembly shall regulate by law by whom and in what manner writs of election shall be issued to fill the vacancies which may happen in either branch thereof.

SEC. 32. The General Assembly shall have no power to grant divorces, to change the names of individuals, or direct the sales of estates belonging to infants or other persons laboring under legal disabilities, by special legislation; but by general laws shall confer such powers on the courts of justice.

SEC. 33. The credit of this Commonwealth shall never be given or loaned in aid of any person, association, municipality or corporation,

SEC. 34. The General Assembly shall have no power to pass laws to diminish the resources of the sinking-fund, as now established by law, until the debt of the State be paid, but may pass laws to increase them; and the whole resources of said fund from year to year, shall be sacredly set apart and applied to the payment of the interest and principal of the State debt, and to no other use or purpose, until the whole debt of the State is fully paid and satisfied.

SEC. 35. The General Assembly may contract debts to meet casual deficits or failures in the revenue; but such debts, direct or contingent, singly or in the aggregate, shall not at any time exceed $500,000; and the moneys arising from loans creating such debts shall be applied to the purposes for which they were obtained or to repay such debts: Provided, That the State may contract debts to repel invasion, suppress insurrection, or if hostilities are threatened, provide for the public defense.

SEC. 36. No act of the General Assembly shall authorize any debt to be contracted on behalf of the Commonwealth, except for the purposes mentioned in the thirty-fifth section of this article, unless provision be made therein to lay and collect an annual tax sufficient to pay the interest stipulated, and to discharge the debt within thirty years; nor shall such act take effect until it shall have been submitted to the people at a general election, and shall have received a majority of all the votes cast for or against it: Provided, that the General Assembly may contract debts, by borrowing money to pay any part of the debt of the State, without submission to the people, and without making provision in the act authorizing the same for a tax to discharge the debt so contracted, or the interest thereon.

SEC. 37. No law enacted by the General Assembly shall relate to more than one subject, and that shall be expresssed in the title.

SEC. 38. The General Assembly shall not change the venue in any criminal or penal prosecution, but shall provide for the same by general laws.

SEC. 39. The General Assembly may pass laws authorizing writs of error in criminal or penal cases, and regulating the right of challenge of jurors therein.

SEC. 40. The General Assembly shall have no power to pass any act or resolution for the appropriation of any money, or the creation of any debt, exceeding the sum of one hundred dollars, at any one time, unless the same, on its final passage, shall be voted for by a majority of all the members then elected to each branch of the General Assembly, and the yeas and nays thereon entered on the journal.

ARTICLE III.

CONCERNING THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

SECTION 1. The supreme executive power of the Commonwealth shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the Governor of the Commonwealth of Kentucky.

SEC. 2. The Governor shall be elected for the term of four years by the qualified voters of the State, at the time when and places where they shall respectively vote for Representatives. The person having the highest number of votes shall be Governor; but if two or more shall be equal and highest in votes, the election shall be determined by lot, in such manner as the General Assembly may direct.

SEC. 3. The Governor shall be ineligible for the succeeding four years after the expiration of the term for which he shall have been elected.

SEC. 4. He shall be at least thirty-five years of age, and a citizen of the United States, and have been an inhabitant of this State at least six years next preceding his election.

SEC. 5. He shall commence the execution of the duties of his office on the fifth Tuesday succeeding the day of the general election on which he shall have been chosen, and shall continue in the execution thereof until his successor shall have taken the oath or affirmation prescribed by this Constitution.

SEC. 6. No member of Congress, or person holding any office under the United States, or minister of any religious society, shall be eligible to the office of Governer.

SEC. 7. The Governor shall, at stated times, receive for his services a compensation, which shall neither be increased nor diminished during the term for which he was elected.

SEC. 8. He shall be commander-in-chief of the army and navy of this Commonwealth, and of the militia thereof, except when they shall be called into the service of the United States; but he shall not command personally in the field, unless advised so to do by a resolution of the General Assembly

SEC. 9. He shall have power to fill vacancies that may occur, by granting commissions, which shall expire when such vacancies shall have been filled according to the provisions of this Constitution.

SEC. 10. He shall have power to remit fines and forfeitures, grant reprieves and pardons, except in cases of impeachment. In cases of treason he shall have power to grant reprieves until the end of the next session of the General Assembly, in which the power of pardoning shall be vested; but he shall have no power to remit the fees of the Clerk, Sheriff, or Commonwealth Attorney in penal or criminal cases.

SEC. 11. He may require information, in writing, from the officers in the executive department upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices.

SEC. 12. He shall, from time to time, give to the General Assembly information of the state of the Commonwealth, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he may deem expedient.

SEC. 13. He may, on extraordinary occasions, convene the General Assembly at the seat of government, or at a different place if that should have become, since their last adjournment, dangerous from an enemy or from contagious disorders; and in case of disagreement between the two Houses, with respect to the time of adjournment, he may adjourn them to such time as he shall think proper, not exceeding four months.

SEC. 14. He shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed.

SEC. 15. A Lieutenant-Governor shall be chosen at every regular election for Governor, in the same manner, to continue in office for the same time, and possess the same qualifications as the Governor. In voting for Governor and Lieutenant-Governor the electors shall state for whom they vote as Governor and for whom as Lieutenant-Governor.

SEC. 16. He shall, by virtue of his office, be Speaker of the Senate, have a right, when in Committee of the Whole, to debate and vote on all subjects, and, when the Senate are equally divided to give the casting vote.

SEC. 17. Should the Governor be impeached, removed from office, die, refuse to qualify, resign, or be absent from the State, the Lieutenant-Governor shall exercise all the power and authority appertaining to the office of Governor, until another be duly elected and qualified, or the Governor absent or impeached shall return or be acquitted.

SEC. 18. Whenever the government shall be administered by the Lieutenant-Governor, or he shall fail to attend as Speaker of the Senate, the Senators shall elect one of their own members as Speaker for that occasion. And if during the vacancy of the office of Governor, the Lieutenant-Governor shall be impeached, removed from office, refuse to qualify, resign, die, or be absent from the State, the Speaker of the Senate shall, in like manner, administer the government: Provided, That whenever a vacancy shall occur in the office of Governor, before the first two years of the term shall have expired, a new election for Governor shall take place to fill such vacancy.

SEC. 19. The Lieutenant-Governor, or Speaker pro tempore of the Senate, while he acts as Speaker of the Senate, shall receive for his services the same compensation which shall, for the same period, be allowed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and no more; and during the time he administers the government, as Governor, shall receive the same compensation which the Governor would have received had he been employed in the duties of his office.

SEC. 20. If the Lieutenant-Governor shall be called upon to administer the government, and shall, while in such administration, resign, die, or be absent from the State during the recess of the General Assembly, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of State, for the time being, to convene the Senate for the purpose of choosing a Speaker.

SEC. 21. The Governor shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint a Secretary of State, who shall be commissioned during the term for which the Governor was elected, if he shall so long behave himself well. He shall keep a fair register, and attest all the official acts of the Governor, and shall, when required, lay the same, and all papers, minutes and vouchers relative thereto, before either House of the General Assemby; and shall perform such other duties as may be required of him by law.

SEC. 22. Every bill which shall have passed both Houses shall be presented to the Governor. If he approve, he shall sign it, but if not, he shall return it, with his objections, to the House in which it originated, who shall enter the objections at large upon their journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If, after such reconsideration, a majority of all the members elected to that House shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, with the objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be considered, and, if approved by a majority of all the members elected to that House, it shall be a law; but in such cases, the votes of both Houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of the members voting for and against the bill shall be entered upon the journals of each House respectively. If any bill shall not be returned by the Governor within ten days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, it shall be a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the General Assembly, by their adjournment, prevent its return; in which case it shall be a law, unless sent back within three days after their next meeting.

SEC. 23. Every order, resolution, or vote in which the concurrence of both Houses may be necessary, except on a question of adjournment, shall be presented to the Governor, and before it shall take effect be approved by him; or, being disapproved, shall be repassed by a majority of all the members elected to both Houses, according to the rules and limitations prescribed in case of a bill.

SEC. 24. Contested elections for Governor and Lieutenant-Governor shall be determined by both houses of the General Assembly, according to such regulations as may be established by law.

SEC. 25. A Treasurer shall be elected by the qualified voters of the State, for the term of two years; and an Auditor of Public Accounts, Register of the Land-Office, and Attorney-General for the term of four years. The duties and responsibilities of these officers shall be prescribed by law: Provided; That inferior State officers, not specially provided for in this Constitution, may be appointed or elected in such manner as shall be prescribed by law, for a term not exceeding four years.

SEC. 26. The first election under this Constitution for Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, Treasurer, Auditor of Public Accounts, Register of the Land-Office and Attorney-General, shall be held on the first Monday in August, in the year 1851.

ARTICLE IV.

CONCERNING THE JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT.

SECTION 1. The judicial power of this Commonwealth, both as to matters of law and equity, shall be vested in one Supreme Court (to be styled the Court of Appeals), the courts established by this Constitution, and such courts, inferior to the Supreme Court, as the General Assembly may, from time to time, erect and establish.

CONCERNING THE COURT OF APPEALS.

SEC. 2. The Court of Appeals shall have appellate jurisdiction only, which shall be co-extensive with the State, under such restrictions and regulations, not repugnant to this Constitution, as may, from to time be prescribed by law.

SEC. 3. The Judges of the Court of Appeals shall, after their first term, hold their offices for eight years, from and after their election, and until their successors shall be duly qualified, subject to the conditions hereinafter prescribed; but for any reasonable cause the Governor shall remove any of them on the address of two-thirds of each House of the General Assembly: Provided, however, That the cause or causes for which such removal may be required shall be stated at length in such address and on the journal of each House. They shall, at stated times, receive for their services an adequate compensation, to be fixed by law, which shall not be diminished during the time for which they have been elected.

SEC. 4. The Court of Appeals shall consist of four Judges, any three of whom may constitute a court for the transaction of business. The General Assembly at its first session after the adoption of this Constitution, shall divide the State, by counties, into four districts, as nearly equal in voting population and with as convenient limits as may be, in each of which the qualified voters shall elect one Judge of the Court of Appeals: Provided, That whenever a vacancy shall occur in said court, from any cause, the General Assembly shall have the power to reduce the number of Judges and districts; but in no event shall there be less than three Judges and districts. Should a change in the number of the Judges of the Court of Appeals be made, the term of office and number of districts shall be so changed as to preserve the principle of electing one Judge every two years.

SEC. 5. The Judges shall, by virtue of their office, be conservators of the peace throughout the State. The style of all process shall be "The Commonwealth of Kentucky." All prosecutions shall be carried on in the name and by the authority of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, and conclude "against the peace and dignity of the same."

SEC. 6. The Judges first elected shall serve as follows, to wit: One shall serve until the first Monday in August, 1852; one until the first Monday in August, 1854; one until the first Monday in August, 1856; and one until the first Monday in August, 1858. The Judges, at the first term of the court suceeding their election, shall determine, by lot, the length of time which each one shall serve; and at the expiration of the service of each an election in the proper district shall take place to fill the vacancy. The Judge having the shortest time to serve shall be styled Chief Justice of Kentucky.

SEC. 7. If a vacancy shall occur in said court from any cause, the Governor shall issue a writ of election to the proper district to fill such vacancy for the residue of the term: Provided, That if the unexpired term be less than one year, the Governor shall appoint a Judge to fill such vacancy.

SEC. 8. No person shall be eligible to the office of Judge of the Court of Appeals who is not a citizen of the United States, a resident of the district for which he may be a candidate two years next preceding his election, at least thirty years of age, and who has not been a practicing lawyer eight years or whose service upon the bench of any court of record when added to the time he may have practiced law, shall not be equal to eight years.

SEC. 9. The Court of Appeals shall hold its sessions at the seat of government, unless otherwise directed by law; but the General Assembly may, from time to time, direct that said court shall hold sessions in any one or more of said districts.

SEC. 10. The first election of the Judges and Clerks of the Court of Appeals shall take place on the second Monday in May, 1851, and thereafter, in each district, as a vacancy may occur, by the expiration of the term of office; and the Judges of the said court shall be commissioned by the Governor.

SEC. 11. There shall be elected, by the qualified voters of this State, a Clerk of the Court of Appeals, who shall hold his office, from the first election, until the first Monday in August, 1858, and thereafter for the term of eight years from and after his election; and should the General Assembly provide for holding the Court of Appeals in any one or more of said districts, they shall also provide for the election of a Clerk by the qualified voters of such district, who shall hold his office for eight years, possess the same qualifications, and be subject to removal in the same manner, as the Clerk of the Court of Appeals; but if the General Assembly shall, at its first or any other session, direct the Court of Appeals to hold its session in more than one district, a Clerk shall be elected by the qualified voters of such district. And the Clerk first provided for in this section shall be elected by the qualified voters of the other district or districts. The same principle shall be observed whenever the court shall be directed to hold its sessions in either of the other districts. Should the number of Judges be reduced, the term of the office of Clerk shall be six years.

SEC. 12. No person shall be eligible to the office of Clerk of the Court of Appeals, unless he be a citizen of the United States, a resident of the State two years next preceding his election, of the age of twenty-one years, and have a certificate from a Judge of the Court of Appeals, or a Judge of a Circuit Court, that he has been examined by the Clerk of his Court, under his supervision, and that he is qualified for the office for which he is a candidate.

SEC. 13. Should a vacancy occur in the office of Clerk of the Court of Appeals, the Governor shall issue a writ of election, and the qualified voters of the State, or of the district in which the vacancy may occur, shall elect a Clerk of the Court of Appeals, to serve until the end of the term for which such Clerk was elected: Provided, That when a vacancy shall occur from any cause, or the Clerk be under charges upon information, the Judges of the Court of Appeals shall have power to appoint a clerk pro tempore, to perform the duties of Clerk until such vacancy shall be filled or the Clerk acquitted: And provided further, That no writ of election shall issue to fill a vacancy unless the unexpired term exceed one year.

SEC. 14. The General Assembly shall direct, by law, the mode and manner of conducting and making due returns to the Secretary of State of all elections of the Judges and Clerk or Clerks of the Court of Appeals, and of determining contested elections of any of these offices.

SEC. 15. The General Assembly shall provide for an additional Judge or Judges, to constitute, with the remaining Judge or Judges, a special court for the trial of such cause or causes as may, at any time, be pending in the Court of Appeals, on the trial of which a majority of the Judges cannot sit, on account of interest in the event of the cause, or on account of their relationship to either party, or when a Judge may have been employed in or decided the cause in the inferior court.

CONCERNING THE CIRCUIT COURTS.

SEC. 16. A Circuit Court shall be established in each county now existing, or which may hereafter be erected in this commonwealth.

SEC. 17. The jurisdiction of said court shall be and remain as now established, hereby giving to the General Assembly the power to change or alter it.

SEC. 18. The right to appeal or sue out a writ of error to the Court of Appeals shall remain as it now exists, until altered by law, hereby giving to the General Assembly the power to change, alter, or modify said right.

SEC. 19. At the first session after the adoption of this Constitution, the General Assembly shall divide the State into twelve judicial districts, having due regard to business, territory, and population: Provided, That no county shall be divided.

SEC. 20. They shall, at the same time that the judicial districts are laid off, direct elections to be held in each district, to elect a Judge for said district, and shall prescribe in what manner the election shall be conducted. The first election of Judges of the Circuit Court shall take place on the second Monday in May, 1851; and afterward on the first Monday in August, 1856, and on the first Monday in August in every sixth year thereafter.

SEC. 21. All persons qualified to vote for members of the General Assembly in each district, shall have the right to vote for Judges.

SEC. 22. No person shall be eligible as Judge of the Circuit Court who is not a citizen of the United States, a resident of the district for which he may be a candidate two years next preceding his election, at least thirty years of age, and who has not been a practicing lawyer eight years, or whose service upon the bench of any court of record, when added to the time he may have practiced law, shall not be equal to eight years.

SEC. 23. The Judges of the Circuit Court shall, after their first term, hold their office for the term of six years from the day of their election. They shall be commissioned by the Governor, and continue in office until their successors be qualified, but shall be removable from office in the same manner as the Judges of the Court of Appeals; and the removal of a Judge from his district shall vacate his office.

SEC. 24. The General Assembly, if they deem it necessary, may establish one additional district every four years, but the judicial districts shall not exceed sixteen, until the population of this State shall exceed 1,500,000.

SEC. 25. The Judges of the Circuit Court shall, at stated times, receive for their service an adequate compensation, to be fixed by law, which shall be equal and uniform throughout the State, and which shall not be diminished during the time for which they were elected.

SEC. 26. If a vacancy shall occur in the office of Judge of the Circuit Court, the Governor shall issue a writ of election to fill such vacancy for the residue of the term: Provided, that if the unexpired term be less than one year, the Governor shall appoint a Judge to fill such vacancy.

SEC. 27. The judicial districts of this State shall not be changed, except at the first session after enumeration, unless when a new district may be established.

SEC. 28. The General Assembly shall provide by law for holding Circuit Courts when, from any cause, the Judge shall fail to attend, or, if in attendance, cannot properly preside.

CONCERNING COUNTY COURTS.

SEC. 29. A County Court shall be established in each county now existing, or which may hereafter be erected within this Commonwealth, to consist of a Presiding Judge and two Associate Judges, any two of whom shall constitute a court for the transaction of business: Provided, the General Assembly may at any time abolish the office of the Associate Judges, whenever it shall be deemed expedient; in which event they may associate the said court any or all of the Justices of the Peace for the transaction of business.

SEC. 30. The Judges of the County Court shall be elected by the qualified voters in each county, for the term of four years, and shall continue in office until their successors be duly qualified, and shall receive such compensation for their services as may be provided by law.

SEC. 31. The first election of County Court Judges shall take place at the same time of the election of Judges of the Circuit Court. The Presiding Judge, first elected, shall hold his office until the first Monday in August, 1854. The Associate Judges shall hold their offices until the first Monday in August, 1852, and until their successors be qualified; and afterward elections shall be held on the first Monday in August, in the years in which vacancies regularly occur.

SEC. 32. No person shall be eligible to the office of Presiding or Associate Judge of the County Court, unless he be a citizen of the United States, over twenty-one years of age, and shall have been a resident of the county in which he shall be chosen one year next preceding the election.

SEC. 33. The jurisdiction of the County Court shall be regulated by law; and, until changed, shall be the same now vested in the County Courts of this State.

SEC. 34. Each county in this State shall be laid off into districts of convenient size, as the General Assembly may from time to time direct. Two Justices of the Peace shall be elected in each district, by the qualified voters therein, at such time and place as may be prescribed by law, for the term of four years, whose jurisdiction shall be co-extensive with the county. No person shall be eligible as a Justice of the Peace unless he be a citizen of the United States, twenty-one years of age, and a resident of the district in which he may be a candidate.

SEC. 35. Judges of the County Court and Justices of the Peace shall be conservators of the peace. They shall be commissioned by the Governor. County and district officers shall vacate their offices by removal from the district or county in which they shall be appointed. The General Assembly shall provide by law the manner of conducting and making due return of all elections of Judges of the County Court and Justices of the Peace, and for determining contested elections, and provide the mode of filling vacancies in these offices.

SEC. 36. Judges of the County Court and Justices of the Peace, Sheriffs, Coroners, Surveyors, Jailors, County Assessor, Attorney for the County, and Constables, shall be subject to indictment or presentment for malfeasance or misfeasance in office, or willful neglect in the discharge of their official duties, in such mode as may be prescribed by law, subject to appeal to the Court of Appeals; and upon conviction, their offices shall become vacant.

SEC. 37. The General Assembly may provide by law that the Justices of the Peace in each County shall sit at the Court of Claims and assist in laying the county levy and making appropriations only.

SEC. 38. When any city or town shall have a separate representation, such city or town, and the county in which it is located, may have such separate municipal courts and executive and ministerial officers as the General Assembly may from time to time provide.

SEC. 39. The Clerks of the Court of Appeals, Circuit and County Courts, shall be removable from office by the Court of Appeals, upon information and good cause shown. The court shall be judges of the fact as well as the law. Two-thirds of the members present must concur in the sentence.

SEC. 40. The Louisville Chancery Court shall exist under this Constitution, subject to repeal, and its jurisdiction to enlargement and modification of the General Assembly. The Chancellor shall have the same qualifications as the Circuit Court Judge, and the Clerk of the said Court as the Clerk of the Circuit Court, and the Marshal of said Court as a Sheriff; and the General Assembly shall provide for the election, by the qualified voters within its jurisdiction, of the Chancellor, Clerk and Marshal of said Court, at the same time that the Judge and Clerk of the Circuit Court are elected for the County of Jefferson, and they shall hold their offices for the same time, and shall be removable in the same manner; Provided, that the Marshal of said Court shall be ineligible for the succeeding term.

SEC. 41. The City Court of Louisville, the Lexington City Court, and all other police courts established in any city or town, shall remain until otherwise directed by law, with their present powers and jurisdictions; and the Judges, Clerks, and Marshals of said Courts shall have the same qualifications, and shall be elected by the qualified voters of such cities or towns at the same time, and in the same manner, and hold their offices for the same term, as County Judges, Clerks and Sheriffs, respectively, and shall be liable to removal in the same manner. The General Assembly may vest judicial powers, for police purposes, in Mayors of cities, Police Judges and Trustees of towns.

ARTICLE V.

CONCERNING IMPEACHMENTS.

SECTION 1. The House of Representatives shall have the sole power of impeachment.

SEC. 2. All impeachments shall be tried by the Senate. When sitting for that purpose, the Senators shall be on oath or affirmation. No person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the members present.

SEC. 3. The Governor and all civil officers shall be liable to impeachment for any misdemeanor in office; but judgment in such cases shall not extend further than to removal from office, and disqualification to hold any office of honor, trust, or profit under this Commonwealth; but the party convicted shall, nevertheless, be subject and liable to indictment, trial, and punishment by law.

ARTICLE VI.

CONCERNING EXECUTIVE AND MINISTERIAL OFFICERS FOR COUNTIES AND DISTRICTS.

SECTION 1. A Commonwealth's Attorney for each Judicial District, and a Circuit Court Clerk for each County, shall be elected, whose term of office shall be the same as that of the Circuit Judges; also a County Court Clerk, an Attorney, Surveyor, Coroner, and Jailer, for each County, whose term of office shall be the same as that of the presiding Judge of the County Court.

SEC. 2. No person shall be eligible to the offices mentioned in this article who is not at the time twenty-four years old (except Clerks of the County and Circuit Courts, Sheriffs, Constables and County Attorneys, who shall be eligible at the age of twenty-one years), a citizen of the United States, and who has not resided two years next preceding the election in the State, and one year in the county or district for which he is a candidate. No person shall be eligible to the office of Commonwealth's Attorney or County Attorney unless he shall have been a licensed practicing attorney for two years. No person shall be eligible to the office of Clerk unless he shall have procured from a Judge of the Court of Appeals, or a Judge of the Circuit Court, a certificate that he has been examined by the Clerk of his court, under his supervision, and that he is qualified for the office for which he is a candidate.

SEC. 3. The Commonwealth's Attorney and Circuit Court Clerk shall be elected at the same time as the Circuit Judge—the Commonwealth's Attorney by the qualified voters of the district, the Circuit Court Clerk by the qualified voters of the county. The County Attorney, Clerk, Surveyor, Coroner and Jailer shall be elected at the same time and in the same manner as the Presiding Judge of the County Court.

SEC. 4. A Sheriff shall be elected in each county by the qualified voters thereof, whose term of office shall, after the first term, be two years, and until his successor be qualified; and he shall be re-eligible for a second term; but no Sheriff shall, after the expiration of the second term, be re-eligible, or act as deputy, for the succeeding term. The first election of Sheriff shall be on the second Monday in May, 1851; and the Sheriffs then elected shall hold their offices until the first Monday in January, 1853, and until their successors be qualified; and on the first Monday in August, 1852, and on the first Monday of August every second year thereafter, elections for Sheriff shall be held: Provided, That the Sheriffs first elected shall enter upon the duties of their respective offices on the first Monday in June, 1851, and after the first election on the first Monday in January next succeeding their election.

SEC. 5. A Constable shall be elected in every Justice's district, who shall be chosen for two years, at such time and place as may be provided by law, whose jurisdiction shall be co-extensive with the county in which he may reside.

SEC. 6. Officers for towns and cities shall be elected for such terms, and in such manner, and with such qualifications as may be prescribed by law.

SEC. 7. Vacancies in offices under this article shall be filled, until the next regular election, in such manner as the General Assembly may provide.

SEC. 8. When a new county shall be erected, officers for the same to serve until the next stated election, shall be elected or appointed in such a way and at such times as the general assembly may prescribe.

SEC. 9. Clerks, Sheriffs, Surveyors, Coroners, Constables and Jailers, and such other officers as the General Assembly may from time to time require, shall, before they enter upon the duties of their respective offices, and as often thereafter as may be deemed proper, give such bond and security as shall be prescribed by law.

SEC. 10. The General Assembly may provide for the election or appointment, for a term not exceeding four years, of such other county or district ministerial and executive officers as shall, from time to time, be necessary and proper.

SEC. 11. A County Assessor shall be elected in each county at the same time and for the same term that the Presiding Judge of the County Court is elected, until otherwise provided for by law. He shall have power to appoint such assistants as may be necessary and proper.

ARTICLE VII.

CONCERNING THE MILITIA.

SECTION 1. The militia of this Commonwealth shall consist of all free, able-bodied male persons (negroes, mulattoes and Indians excepted) resident in the same, between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years; except such persons as now are, or hereafter may be, exempted by the laws of the United States or of this State; but those who belong to religious societies, whose tenets forbid them to carry arms, shall not be compelled to do so, but shall pay an equivalent for personal services.

SEC. 2. The Governor shall the Adjutant-General and his other staff-officers, the Major-Generals, Brigadier-Generals, and Commandants of regiments shall respectively appoint their staff-officers; and commandants of companies shall appoint their non-commissioned officers.

SEC. 3. All militia officers, whose appointment is not herein otherwise provided for, shall be elected by persons subject to military duty within their respective companies—battalions, regiments, brigades and divisions—under such rules and regulations, and for such terms, not exceeding six years, as the General Assembly may, from time to time, direct and establish.

ARTICLE VIII.

GENERAL PROVISIONS.

SECTION 1. Members of the General Assembly and all officers, before they enter upon the execution of the duties of their respective offices, and all members of the bar, before they enter upon the practice of their profession, shall take the following oath or affirmation: "I do solemnly swear [or affirm, as the case may be] that I will support the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of this State, and be faithful and true to the Commonwealth of Kentucky so long as I continue a citizen thereof, and that I will faithfully execute, to the best of my abilities, the office of ——, according to law; and I do further solemnly swear [or affirm] that since the adoption of the present Constitution I, being a citizen of this State, have not fought a duel, with deadly weapons, within this State, nor out of it, with a citizen of this State, nor have I sent or accepted a challenge to fight a duel, with deadly weapons, with a citizen of this State; nor have I acted as second in carrying a challenge, or aided or assisted any person thus offending: So help me God."

SEC. 2. Treason against this Commonwealth shall consist only in levying war against it, or in adhering to its enemies, giving them aid and comfort. No person shall be convicted of treason unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or his own confession in open court.

SEC. 3. Every person shall be disqualified from holding any office of trust or profit for the term for which he shall have been elected, who shall be convicted of having given or offered any bribe or threat to procure his election.

SEC. 4. Laws shall be made to exclude from office and from suffrage those who shall be hereafter convicted of bribery, perjury, forgery, or other crimes or high misdemeanors. The privilege of free suffrage shall be supported by laws regulating elections and prohibiting, under adequate penalties, all undue influence thereon from power, bribery, tumult or other improper practices.

SEC. 5. No money shall be drawn from the treasury but in pursuance of appropriations made by law, nor shall any appropriations of money for the support of an army be made for a longer time than two years, and a regular statement and account of the receipts and expenditures of all public moneys shall be published annually.

SEC. 6. The General Assembly may direct by law, in what manner, and in what courts, suits may be brought against the Commonwealth.

SEC. 7. The manner of administering an oath or affirmation shall be such as is most consistent with the conscience of the deponent, and shall be esteemed by the General Assembly the most solemn appeal to God.

SEC. 8. All laws which, on the first day of June, 1792, were in force in the State of Virginia, and which are of a general nature, and not local to the State, and not repugnant to this Constitution, nor to the laws which have been enacted by the General Assembly of this Commonwealth, shall be in force within this State, until they shall be altered or repealed by the General Assembly.

SEC. 9. The compact with the State of Virginia, subject to such alterations as may be made therein agreeably to the mode prescribed by the said compact, shall be considered as a part of this Constitution.

SEC. 10. It shall be the duty of the General Assembly to pass such laws as shall be necessary and proper to decide differences by arbitrators, to be appointed by the parties who may choose that summary mode of adjustment.

SEC. 11. All civil officers for the Commonwealth at large shall reside within the State, and all district, county, or town officers, within their respective districts, counties or towns (trustees of towns excepted), and shall keep their offices at such places therein as may be required by law; and all militia officers shall reside in the bounds of the division, brigade, regiment, battalion or company to which they may severally belong.

SEC. 12. Absence on the business of this State or the United States, shall not forfeit a residence once obtained, so as to deprive any one of the right of suffrage, or of being elected or appointed to any office under this Commonwealth, under the exception contained in this Constitution.

SEC. 13. It shall be the duty of the General Assembly to regulate, by law, in what cases, and what deductions from the salaries of public officers shall be made, for neglect of duty in their official capacity.

SEC. 14. Returns of all elections by the people shall be made to the Secretary of State, for the time being, except in those cases otherwise provided for this Constitution, or which shall be otherwise directed by law

SEC. 15. In all elections by the people, and also by the Senate and House of Representatives jointly or separately, the votes shall be publicly and personally given viva voce: Provided, That dumb persons, entitled to suffrage, may vote by ballot.

SEC. 16. All elections by the people shall be held between the hours of six o'clock in the morning and seven o'clock in the evening.

SEC. 17. The General Assembly shall, by law, prescribe the time when the several officers authorized or directed by this Constitution to be elected or appointed shall enter upon the duties of their respective offices, except where the time is fixed by this Constitution.

SEC. 18. No member of Congress, nor person holding or exercising any office of trust or profit under the United States, or either of them, or under any foreign power, shall be eligible as a member of the General Assembly of this Commonwealth, or hold or exercise any office of trust or profit under the same.

SEC. 19. The General Assembly shall direct by law how persons who now are, or who may hereafter become, securites for public officers may be relieved or discharged on account of such securityship.

SEC. 20. Any person who shall, after the adoption of this Constitution, either directly or indirectly, give, accept, or knowingly carry a challenge to any person or persons to fight in single combat, with a citizen of this State, with any deadly weapon, either in or out of the State, shall be deprived of the right to hold any office of honor or profit in this Commonwealth, and shall be punished otherwise in such manner as the General Assembly may prescribe by law.

SEC. 21. The Governor shall have power, after five years from the time of the offence, to pardon all persons who shall have in anywise participated in a duel, either as principals, seconds or otherwise, and to restore him or them to all the rights, privileges and immunities to which he or they were entitled before such participation. And upon the presentation of such pardon, the oath prescribed in the first section of this article shall be varied to suit the case.

SEC. 22. At its first session after the adoption of this Constitution, the General Assembly shall appoint not more than three persons, learned in the law, whose duty it shall be to revise and arrange the statute laws of this Commonwealth, both civil and criminal, so as to have but one law on any subject; and also three other persons, learned in the law, whose duty it shall be to prepare a code of practice for the courts both civil and criminal in this Commonwealth, by abridging and simplifying the rules of practice and laws in relation thereto; all of whom shall, at as early a day as practicable, report the result of their labors to the General Assembly for their adoption or modification.

SEC. 23. So long as the Board of Internal Improvement shall be continued, the President thereof shall be elected by the qualified voters of this Commonwealth, and hold the office for the term of four years, and until another be duly elected and qualified. The election shall be held at the same time, and be conducted in the same manner, as the election of Governor of this Commonwealth under this Constitution; but nothing herein contained shall prevent the General Assembly from abolishing said Board of Internal Improvement, or the office of President thereof.

SEC. 24. The General Assembly shall provide by law for the trial of any contested election of Auditor, Register, Treasurer, Attorney-General, Judges of Circuit Courts, and all other officers not otherwise herein specified.

SEC. 25. The General Assembly shall provide by law for the making of the returns, by the proper officers, of the election of all officers to be elected under this Constitution; and the Governor shall issue commissions to the Auditor, Register, Treasurer, President of the Board of Internal Improvement, Superintendent of Public Instruction, and such other officers as he may be directed by law to commission, as soon as he has ascertained the result of the election of those officers respectively.

SEC. 26. When a vacancy shall happen in the office of Attorney-General, Auditor of Public Accounts, Treasurer, Register of the Land Office, President of the Board of Internal Improvements, or Superintendent of Public Instruction, the Governor, in the recess of the Senate, shall have power to fill the vacancy, by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of the next session, and shall fill the vacancy for the balance of the time by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

ARTICLE IX.

CONCERNING THE SEAT OF GOVERNMENT.

The seat of government shall continue in the city of Frankfort, until it shall be removed by law: Provided, however, That two-thirds of all the members elected to each House of the General Assembly shall concur in the passage of such law.

ARTICLE X.

CONCERNING SLAVES.

SECTION 1. The General Assembly shall have no power to pass laws for the emancipation of slaves without the consent of their owners, or without paying their owners, previous to such emancipation, a full equivalent in money for the slaves so emancipated, and providing for their removal from the State. They shall have no power to prevent immigrants to this State from bringing with them such persons as are deemed slaves by the laws of any of the United States, so long as any person of the same age or description shall be continued in slavery by the laws of this State. They shall pass laws to permit owners of slaves to emancipate them, saving the rights of creditors, and to prevent them from remaining in this State after they are emancipated. They shall have full power to prevent slaves being brought into this State as merchandise. They shall have full power to prevent slaves being brought into this State who have been, since the first day of January, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine, or may hereafter be, imported into any of the United States from a foreign country. And they shall have full power to pass such laws as may be necessary to oblige the owners of slaves to treat them with humanity; to provide for them necessary clothing and provisions; to abstain from all injuries to them, extending to life or limb, and in case of their neglect or refusal to comply with the directions of such laws, to have such slave or slaves sold for the benefit of their owner or owners.

SEC. 2. The General Assembly shall pass laws providing that any free negro or mulatto hereafter immigrating to, and any slave hereafter emancipated in, and refusing to leave this State, or having left, shall return and settle within this State, shall be deemed guilty of felony, and punished by confinement in the penitentiary thereof.

SEC. 3. In the prosecution of slaves for felony no inquest by a grand jury shall be necessary, but the proceedings in such prosecutions shall be regulated by law, except that the General Assembly shall have no power to deprive them of the privilege of an impartial trial by a petit jury.

Article XI.

CONCERNING EDUCATION.

Section 1. The capital of the fund called and known as the "common school fund," consisting of one million two hundred and twenty-five thousand seven hundred and sixty-eight dollars and forty-two cents, for which bonds have been executed by the State to the Board of Education, and seventy-three thousand five hundred dollars of stock in the Bank of Kentucky; also, the sum of fifty-one thousand two hundred and twenty-three dollars and twenty-nine cents, balance of interest on the school-fund of the year 1848, unexpended, together with any sum which may be hereafter raised in the State by taxation, or otherwise, for the purposes of education, shall be held inviolate, for the purpose of sustaining a system of common schools. The interest and dividends of said funds, together with any sum which may be produced for that purpose, by taxation, or otherwise, may be appropriated in aid of common schools, but for no other purpose. The General Assembly shall invest said fifty-one thousand two hundred and twenty-three dollars and twenty-nine cents in some safe and profitable manner, and any portion of the interest and dividends of said school-fund, or other money or property raised for school purposes, which may not be needed in sustaining common schools, shall be invested in like manner. The General Assembly shall make provision by law for the payment of the interest of said school-fund. Provided, That each county shall be entitled to its proportion of the income of said fund, and if not called for for common school purposes, it shall be re-invested from time to time for the benefit of such county.

Sec. 2. A Superintendent of Public Instruction shall be elected by the qualified voters of this Commonwealth at the same time the Governor is elected, who shall hold his office for four years, and his duties and salary shall be prescribed and fixed by law.

Article XII.

MODE OF REVISING THE CONSTITUTION.

Section 1. When experience shall point out the necessity of amending this Constitution, and when a majority of all the members elected to each house of the General Assembly shall, within the first twenty days of any regular session, concur in passing a law for taking the sense of the good people of this Commonwealth as to the necessity and expediency of calling a convention, it shall be the duty of the several Sheriffs and other officers of elections, at the next general election which shall be held for Representatives to the General Assembly after the passage of such a law, to open a poll for, and make a return to the Secretary of State, for the time being, of the names of all those entitled to vote for Representatives who have voted for calling a convention; and if thereupon it shall appear that a majority of all the citizens of the State entitled to vote for Representatives have voted for calling a convention, the General Assembly shall, at their next regular session, direct that a similar poll shall be opened and return made for the next election for Representatives, and if thereupon it shall appear that a majority of all the citizens of this State entitled to vote for Representatives have voted for calling a convention, the General Assembly shall, at their next session, pass a law calling a convention to consist of as many members as there shall be in the House of Representatives, and no more, to be chosen on the first Monday in August thereafter, in the same manner and proportion, and at the same places, and possessed of the same qualifications of a qualified elector by citizens entitled to vote for Representatives, and to meet within three months after their election for the purpose of re-adopting, amending or changing this Constitution; but if it shall appear by the vote of either year, as aforesaid, that a majority of all the citizens entitled to vote for Representatives did not vote for calling a convention, a convention shall not then be called. And for the purpose of ascertaining whether a majority of the citizens entitled to vote for Representatives, did or did not vote for calling a convention as above, the General Assembly passing the law authorizing such vote shall provide for ascertaining the number of citizens entitled to vote for Representatives within the State.

Sec. 2. The convention when assembled shall judge of the election of its members, and decide contested elections, but the General Assembly shall, in calling a convention, provide for taking testimony in such cases and for issuing a writ of election in case of a tie.

Article XIII.

BILL OF RIGHTS.

That the general, great and essential principles of liberty and free government may be recognized and established, we declare:

Section 1. That all freemen, when they form a social compact, are equal, and that no man or set of men are entitled to exclusive, separate public emoluments or privileges from the community, but in consideration of public services.

Sec. 2. That absolute, arbitrary power over the lives, liberty and property of freemen, exists nowhere in a Republic, not even in the largest majority.

Sec. 3. The right of property is before and higher than any constitutional sanction; and the right of the owner of a slave to such slave, and its increase, is the same, as inviolable as the right of the owner of any property whatever.

Sec. 4. That all property is inherent in the people and all free governments are founded on their authority and instituted for their peace, safety, happiness, security and the protection of property. For the advancement of these ends, they have at all times an inalienable and indefeasible right to alter, reform or abolish their government, in such manner as they may think proper.

Sec. 5. That all men have a natural and indefeasible right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own consciences; that no man shall be compelled to attend, erect or support any place of worship, or to maintain any ministry against his consent; that no human authority ought, in any case, whatever, to control or intefere with the rights of conscience; that no preference shall ever be given, by law, to any religious societies or modes of worship.

Sec. 6. That the civil rights, privileges or capacities of any citizen shall in no wise be diminished or enlarged on account of his religion.

Sec. 7. That all elections shall be free and equal.

Sec. 8. That the ancient mode of trial by jury shall be held sacred, and the right thereof remain inviolate, subject to such modifications as may be authorized by this Constitution.

Sec. 9. That printing-presses shall be free to every person who undertakes to examine the proceedings of the general assembly, or any branch of government, and no law shall ever be made to restrain the right thereof. The free communication of thoughts and opinions is one of the invaluable rights of man, and every citizen may freely speak, write and print on any subject, being responsible for the abuse of that liberty.

SEC. 10. In prosecutions for the publication of papers investigating the official conduct of officers or men in a public capacity, or where the matter published is proper for public information, the truth thereof may be given in evidence; and in all indictments for libels, the jury shall have a right to determine the law and the facts, under the direction of the court as in other cases.

SEC. 11. That the people shall be secure in their persons, houses, papers and possessions from unreasonable seizures and searches, and that no warrant to search any place, or to seize any person or thing, shall issue, without describing them as nearly as may be, nor without probable cause supported by oath or affirmation.

SEC. 12. That in all criminal prosecutions, the accused hath a right to be heard by himself and counsel; to demand the nature and cause of the accusation against him; to meet the witness face to face; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor; and, in prosecutions by indictment or information, a speedy public trial by an impartial jury of the vicinage; that he cannot be compelled to give evidence against himself; nor can he be deprived of his life, liberty or property unless by the judgment of his peers or the law of the land.

SEC. 13. That no person shall, for any indictable offence, be proceeded against criminally, by information, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia when in actual service, in time of war or public danger, or by leave of the court, for oppression or misdemeanor in office.

SEC. 14. No person shall, for the same offence, be twice put in jeopardy of his life or limb; nor shall any man's property be taken or applied to public use without the consent of his representatives and without just compensation being previously made to him.

SEC. 15. That all courts shall be open, and every person, for an injury done him in his lands, goods, person or reputation, shall have remedy by the due course of law and right and justice administered without sale, denial or delay.

SEC. 16. That no power of suspending laws shall be exercised, unless by the General Assembly or its authority.

SEC. 17. That excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel punishments inflicted.

SEC. 18. That all prisoners shall be bailable by sufficient securities, unless for capital offences, when the proof is evident or presumption great; and the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless, when in cases of rebellion or invasion, the public safety may require it.

SEC. 19. That the person of a debtor, where there is not strong presumption of fraud, shall not be continued in prison after delivering up his estate for the benefit of his creditors, in such manner as shall be prescribed by law.

SEC. 20. That no ex post facto law, nor any law impairing contracts, shall be made.

SEC. 21. That no person shall be attainted of treason or felony by the General Assembly.

SEC. 22. That no attainder shall work corruption of blood, nor, except during the life of the offender, forfeiture of the estate to the Commonwealth.

SEC. 23. That the estates of such persons as shall destroy their own lives shall descend or vest as in case of natural death; and if any person shall be killed by casualty, there shall be no forfeiture by reason thereof.

SEC. 24. That the citizens have the right, in a peaceable manner, to assemble together for their common good, and to apply to those invested with the powers of government for redress of grievances, or other proper purposes, by petition, address or remonstrance.

SEC. 25. That the rights of the citizens to bear arms in defense of themselves and the State shall not be questioned; but the General Assembly may pass laws to prevent persons from carrying concealed arms.

SEC 26. That no standing army shall, in time of peace, be kept up without the consent of the General Assembly, and the military shall, in all cases and at all times, be in strict subordination to the civil power.

SEC. 27. That no soldier shall, in time of peace, be quartered in any house without the consent of the owner; nor in time of war, but in a manner to be prescribed by law.

SEC. 28. That the General Assembly shall not grant any title of nobility, or hereditary distinction, nor create any office, the appointment to which shall be for a longer time than for a term of years.

SEC. 29. That emigration from the State shall not be prohibited.

SEC. 30. To guard against transgressions of the high powers which we have delegated, we declare that everything in this article is excepted out of the general powers of government, and shall forever remain inviolate, and that all laws contrary thereto, or contrary to this Constitution, shall be void.

SCHEDULE.

That no inconvenience may arise from the alterations and amendments made in the Constitution of this Commonwealth, and in order to carry the same into complete operation, it is hereby declared and ordained:

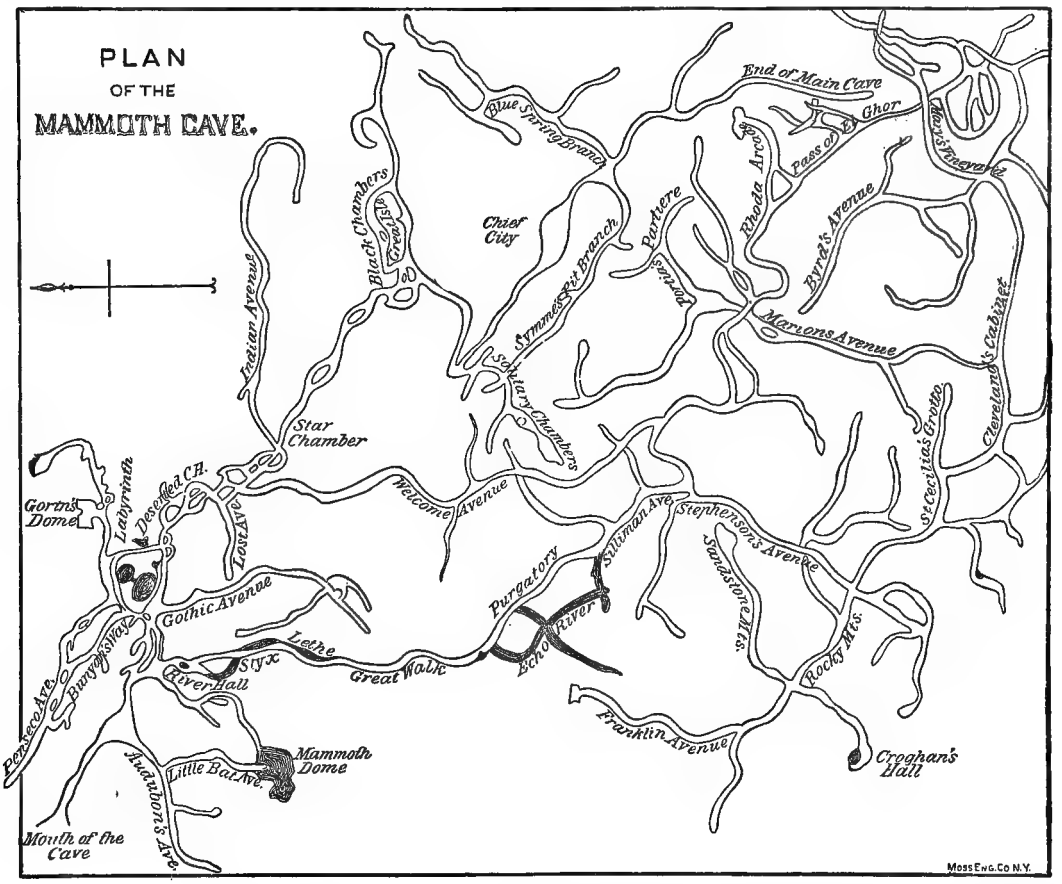
SECTION 1. That all the laws of this Commonwealth, in force at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, and not inconsistent therewith, and all rights, actions, prosecutions, claims, and contracts, as well of individuals as of bodies-corporate, shall continue as if this Constitution had not been adopted.

SEC. 2. The oaths of office herein directed to be taken, may be administered by any Judge or Justice of the Peace, until the general assembly shall otherwise direct.

SEC. 3. No office shall be superseded by the adoption of this Constitution, but the laws of the State relative to the duties of the several officers, legislative, executive, judicial, and military, shall remain in full force, though the same be contrary to this Constitution, and the several duties shall be performed by the respective officers of the State, according to the existing laws, until the organization of the government, as provided for under this Constitution, and the entering into office of the officers to be elected or appointed under said government, and no longer.

SEC. 4. It shall be the duty of the General Assembly which shall convene in the year 1850, to make an apportionment of the representation of this State, upon the principles set forth in this Constitution; and until the first apportionment shall be made as herein directed, the apportionment of Senators and Representatives among the several districts and counties in this State shall remain as at present fixed by law: Provided, That on the first Monday in August, 1850, all Senators shall go out of office, and on that day an election for Senators and Representatives shall be held throughout the State, and those then elected shall hold their offices for one year, and no longer: Provided further, that at the elections to be held in the year 1850, that provision in this Constitution which requires voters to vote in the precinct within which they reside, shall not apply.

SEC. 5. All recognizances heretofore taken, or which may be taken before the organization of the judicial department under this Constitution, shall remain as valid as though this Constitution had not been adopted, and may be prosecuted in the name of the Commonwealth. All criminal prosecutions and penal actions which have arisen or may arise, before the reorganization of the judicial department under this Constitution, may be prosecuted to judgment and execution in the name of the Commonwealth.



We, the Representatives of the freemen of Kentucky, in convention assembled, in their name, and by the authority of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, and in virtue of the powers vested in us, as delegates from the counties respectively affixed to our names, do ordain and proclaim the foregoing to be the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Kentucky from and after this day.

Done at Frankfort this eleventh day of June, in the year of our Lord one thousand, eight hundred and fifty, and in the fifty-ninth year of the Commonwealth.

NOTE 32, PAGE 542.

The Mammoth Cave in Edmonson County, Ky., by rail eighty-five miles south-southwest of Louisville, was discovered in 1809 by a hunter named Hutchins, while in pursuit of a wounded bear. Its mouth is in a forest ravine, 194 feet above Green River, and 600 feet above the sea. This aperture is not the original mouth, the latter being a chasm a quarter of a mile north of it, and leading into what is known as Dixon's Cave. The two portions are not now connected, though persons in one can make themselves heard by those in the other. Saltpetre was formerly made from the nitrous earth, in which the cave abounded, but it is now mainly turned to account as a place of exhibition.

The cavernous limestone of Kentucky covers an area of 8,000 square miles, is massive and homogeneous, and belongs to the subcarboniferous period. It shows few traces of dynamic disturbance, but has been carved since the Miocene epoch into many caverns, of which the Mammoth Cave is the noblest specimen known. The region is undulating, but its valleys are mostly funnel-shaped depressions, emptying through fissures into subterranean streams, which feed rivers, often of navigable size, and whose waters are never frozen over, even in severe winters. Such valleys are called sink-holes.

The natural arch that admits one to the Mammoth Cave has a span of seventy feet, and from a ledge above it a cascade leaps fifty feet to the rocks below, where it disappears. A winding flight of stone steps leads the way down to a narrow passage, through which the air rushes with violence, outward in summer and inward in winter. The temperature of the cave is uniformly 54° Fahrenheit throughout the year, and the atmosphere is both chemically and optically of singular purity. While the lower levels are moist from the large pools that have secret connection with Green River, the upper galleries are extremely dry. These conditions led, at one time, to the erection of thirteen cottages, at a point about a mile under ground, for the use of invalids, especially consumptives. The experiment ended in failure, and only two cottages now remain.

The main cave, from forty to 300 feet wide, and from thirty-five to 125 feet high, has several vast rooms, e. g., the Rotunda, where are the ruins of the old saltpetre works; the Star Chamber, where the protrusion of white crystals through a coating of the black oxide of manganese, creates an optical illusion of great beauty; the Chief City, where an area of two acres is covered by a vault 125 feet high, and the floor is strewn with rocky fragments, among which are found numerous half-burnt torches made of canes, and other signs of prehistoric occupancy. Two skeletons were exhumed near the Rotunda, but no other bones have been found. The so-called Mammoth Cave "mummies" (i. e., bodies kept by being inhumed in nitrous earth), with accompanying utensils, ornaments, braided sandals, and other relics were found in Short and Salt Caves near by, and removed to Mammoth Cave for exhibition. The main cave, which abruptly ends four miles from the entrance, is joined by winding passages, with spacious galleries on different levels, and although the diameter of the area of the whole cavern is less than ten miles, the combined length of all accessible avenues is supposed to be about 150 miles.*

The chief points of interest are ranged along two lines of exploration, beside which there are certain side excursions. The "short route" requires about four hours, and the "long route" nine. Audubon's Avenue, the one nearest the entrance, is seldom visited except by the bats that hang from the walls in clusters like swarms of bees. The Gothic Avenue contains numerous large stalactites and stalagmites, and an interesting place called the Chapel, and ends in a small double dome and cascade. Among the most suprising features of cave scenery are the vertical shafts that pierce through all levels, from the uppermost galleries, or even from the sink-holes, down to the lowest floor. These are styled pits or domes according to the position occupied by the observer. A crevice behind a block of stone, forty feet long by twenty wide, called the Giant's Coffin, admits the explorer to a place where six pits, varying in depth from 65 to 220 feet, exist in an area of 600 yards. This includes Gorin's Dome, which is viewed from a point midway in its side, and is by many regarded as the finest room in the cavern. Others admire more the Mammoth Dome, at the termination of Spark's Avenue, where a cataract falls from a height of 250 feet amid walls wonderfully draped with stalactitic tapestry. The Egyptian Temple, which is a continuation of the Mammoth Dome, contains six massive columns, two of them quite perfect, and eighty feet high and twenty-five feet in diameter. The combined length of these contiguous chambers is 400 feet. By a crevice above, they are connected with an arm of Audubon's Avenue. Lucy's Dome, about 300 feet high, is supposed to be the loftiest of all these vertical shafts. A pit, called the "Maelstrom," in Croghan's Hall, is the spot most remote from the mouth of the cave. A son of Prentice, the poet, permitted himself to be lowered 190 feet by a rope to the bottom in 1859. There are some fine stalactites near this pit, and others in the Fairy Grotto and in Pensico Avenue, but considering the magnitude of Mammoth Cave, its poverty of stalactitic ornamentation is remarkable. The wealth of crystals is, however, surprising. These are of endless variety and fantastic beauty. Beside the sparkling vault of the Star Chamber (300 feet long and 80 feet high), there are halls canopied by fleecy clouds or studded with mimic snowballs, and others displaying various grotesque resemblances on the walls and ceiling.

Cleveland's Cabinet and Marion's Avenue, each a mile long, are adorned by myriads of gypsum rosettes and curiously twisted crystals called "oulopholites." These cave flowers are unfolded by pressure, as if a sheaf were forced through a tight binding, and the crystal fibres curl outward from the center of the group. Thus spotless arches of fifty feet span are embellished by floral clusters and garlands, hiding nearly every foot of grey limestone. The botryoidal formations, hanging by thousands in Mary's Vineyard, resemble mimic clusters of grapes as the oulopholites resemble roses. Again, there are chambers with drifts of snowy crystals of the sulphate of magnesia, the ceilings so thickly covered with their efflorescence that a loud concussion of the air will cause them to fall like the flakes of a snow storm.

Many small rooms and tortuous paths, where nothing of special interest can be found, are avoided as much as possible on the regular routes; but certain disagreeable experiences are inevitable. There is a peril also in the vicinity of the deep pits. The one known as the Bottomless Pit was for many years a barrier to all further exploration, but is now crossed by a wooden bridge. Long before the shaft had been cut as deep as now, the water flowed away by a channel gradually contracting to a serpentine way, so extremely narrow as to be called the Fat Man's Misery. The walls, only eighteen inches apart, change direction eight times in 105 yards, while the distance from the sandy path to the ledge overhead is but five feet. The rocky sides are finely marked with waves and ripples, as if running water had suddenly been petrified. This winding way conducts one to River Hall, beyond which lie the crystalline gardens that have been described. It used to be said that if this narrow passage were blocked up, escape would be impossible; but lately an intricate web of fissures, called the Corkscrew, has been discovered, by means of which a good climber, ascending only a few hundred feet, lands 1,000 yards from the mouth of the cave, and cuts off one or two miles.

The waters entering through numerous domes and pits, and falling, during the rainy season, in cascades of great volume, are finally collected at River Hall, where they form several extensive lakes or rivers, whose connection with Green River is known to be in two deep springs, appearing under arches on its margin. Whenever there is a freshet in Green River the streams in the cave are joined in a continuous body of water, the rise being sometimes sixty feet above the low water mark. The subsidence within is less rapid than the rise; and the streams are impassable for about seven months in each year. They are navigable from May to October, and furnish interesting features of cave scenery. The first approached is called the Dead Sea, embraced by cliffs sixty feet high and 100 feet long, above which a path has been made, whence a stairway conducts us down to the banks of the River Styx, a body of water forty feet wide and 400 feet long, crossed by a natural bridge. Lake Lethe comes next, a broad basin, enclosed by walls ninety feet high, below which a narrow path leads to a pontoon at the neck of the lake. A beach of the finest yellow sand extends for 500 yards to Echo River, the largest of all, being from twenty to 200 feet wide, ten to forty feet deep, and about three quarters of a mile long. It is crossed by boats. The arched passage-way is very symmetrical, varying in height from ten to thirty-five feet, and famous for its musical reverberations,—not a distinct echo, but an harmonious prolongation of sound for from ten to thirty seconds after the original tone is produced. The long vault has a certain key-note of its own, which, when firmly struck, excites harmonies, including tones of incredible depth and sweetness.

The fauna of Mammoth Cave has been classed by Putman, Packard and Cope, who have catalogued twenty-eight species truly subterraneous, besides those that may be considered as stragglers from the surface. They are distributed thus: Vertebrata, 4 species; insects, 11, arachnida, 6; myriapoda, 2; crustacea, 2; vermer, 3. Ehrenberg adds a list of 8 polygastric infusoria, 1 fossil infusorian, 5 phytolitharia, and several microscopic fungi. A bed of Agaricus was found by the writer near the River Styx; and upon this hint an attempt has been made to propagate edible fungi in this locality. The most interesting inhabitants of the Mammoth Cave are the blind, wingless grasshoppers, with extremely long antennæ; blind, colorless crayfish (cambarus pellucidus, telk); and the blind fish (amblyopsis spelæus), colorless and viviparous, from one inch to six inches long. The cambarus and amblyopsis have wide distinction, being found in many other caves, and also in deep wells in Kentucky and Indiana. Fish not blind are occasionally caught, which are apparently identical with species existing in streams outside. The true subterranean fauna may be regarded as chiefly of pleistocene origin; yet certain forms are possibly remnants of tertiary life. The strongly marked divergence of these animals from those found outside, convinced the elder Agassiz that they were especially created for the limits in which they dwell. But the opinion now held is that they are modified from allied species existing in the sunlight, and that their peculiarities may all be accounted for on principles of evolution, the process being accelerated (or retarded) by their migration from the outer world to a realm of absolute silence and perpetual darkness.—*Rev. The Seventh Kentucky Infantry was organized at Camp Dick Robinson, Ky., under Col. T. T. Garrard, and mustered into the United States service on the 22d day of September, 1861, by Brig. Gen. George H. Thomas. As soon as organized it was ordered to Wild Cat, Ky., to repel the invasion of Gen. Zollicoffer, and participated in an engagement with the enemy at that point, which was the first general engagement fought on Kentucky soil. In this battle the Seventh won distinction for the gallant manner in which it repelled the repeated attacks of the enemy.

The Thirty-fifth Kentucky Mounted Infantry was organized September 26, 1863, at Owensboro, Ky., under Col. E. A. Starling, and was mustered into the United States service October 2, 1863, by Capt. Knight, United States mustering officer. This regiment was recruited under the most difficult circumstances, the State, at that time being overrun with guerrillas, making it exceedingly hazardous for officers to recruit and retain their men in camp. From Owensboro it marched to Henderson, on the 10th of October; and from thence to Hopkinsville, Ky. During the latter part of the year 1863 it was constantly on the march, guarding the country between the Green and Cumberland Rivers, which was infested with many predatory bands of guerrillas. The arduous duties performed by this regiment, during its early existence, did not afford much time for drill; still, through the indefatigable exertions of its officers, it arrived at a point of excellence in drill and discipline which was the admiration of all who were connected with the regiment and the division to which it was attached.

During the month of August, 1864, this regiment, with others, under command of Gen. E. H. Hobson, marched from Elizabethtown in pursuit of the rebel Gen. Adam Johnson, who held possession of the country between the Green and Cumberland Rivers. After a long and tedious march, with various skirmishes, they succeeded in driving him out of Kentucky into Tennessee in the direction of Cadiz. It then returned, via Hopkinsville, to Lexington, and, on the 15th of September, moved in Gen. Burbridge's command in the first expedition on Saltville, Va. It returned to Lexington on the 5th of November, and from there was ordered to Louisville, Ky., where it was mustered out December 29, 1864. It participated in the battle of Saltville, Va., and in numerous skirmishes with guerrillas, in various portions of Kentucky.

The Thirty-seventh Kentucky Volunteer Infantry was organized under Col. Chas. S. Hanson, in the summer of 1863, and Companies A, B and C were mustered into the United States service at Glasgow, Ky., September 17, 1863. Companies D, E, F and G were mustered in October 24, 1863, at Glasgow, Ky. Capt. Stroube's Company, originally raised for the Fifty-first Kentucky Infantry, was mustered in September 4, 1863, at Covington, Ky., and consolidated with the Thirty-seventh, forming Company H. Companies I and K were mustered in at Glasgow, Ky., Dec. 21 and 22, 1863. Charles S. Hanson was mustered in as colonel Dec. 29, 1863, and commanded the regiment until the battle of Saltville, Va., on the 2d day of Oct., 1864, when he was severely wounded, and made prisoner of war. It was composed of the best material, and though a one-year regiment, bore as honorable a part in the war as many three years' regiments, and was engaged in the battles occurring in the locality in which it served, though the records of the regiment only show it to have been engaged in the battles of Glasgow, Ky.; Jackson County, Tenn.; Saltville, Va.; and Mt. Sterling, Ky. The regiment was mustered out Dec. 29, 1864, at Louisville, Ky., the re enlisted men being transferred to the Fifty-fifth Kentucky Infantry, and the Fourth Kentucky Mounted Infantry

The Thirty-ninth Kentucky Infantry was organized at Peach Orchard, Ky., under Col. John Dils, and was mustered into the United States service February 16, 1863, by Capt. W. B. Royall, United States mustering officer. This command was raised entirely in the Sandy Valley and the counties adjoining, and, being thoroughly acquainted with the country, was stationed in that section of the State for its protection against the frequent incursions of rebels from Virginia. In April, 1863, the regiment had a fight near Pikeville, Ky., and captured Col. French and his command, and in June engaged the enemy again at Pond Creek, some thirty miles from Pikeville. The regiment being divided, a portion of it proceeded with other troops to Gladeville, Va., and succeeded in capturing Col. Condil and his command, who were brought back as prisoners of war. Through the constant and vigilant service of this regiment, the eastern portion of Kentucky remained uninterrupted from any invasion of the rebels for many months.

The regiment participated in many battles and skirmishes, in which loss was sustained, among which the following are mentioned, viz.: Pond Creek, Pike Co., Ky., May 16, 1864: boat fight in Johnson County, December 4, 1862; Beaver Creek, Floyd County, June 27, 1863; Marrowbone, Pike County, September 22, 1863; Clark's Neck, Lawrence County, August 27, 1863; Paintsville, Johnson County, April 13, 1864; Half Mount, Magoffin County, April 14, 1864; Mount Sterling, Ky., June 9, 1864, Cynthiana, Ky., June 12, 1864; Saltville, Va., October 2, 1864. It was mustered out September 15, 1865, at Louisville, Ky.

The Fortieth Kentucky Infantry was recruited under the 20,000 call, by Col. C. J. True, and was mustered in at Grayson, Carter Co., Ky., in September, 1863. Being raised for twelve months' service, and during a time when the State was overrun with guerillas, and all troops were ordered into active service immediately after, and sometimes before they were thoroughly organized, it had no time for drill and discipline. Being mounted, it was constantly employed in defending different portions of eastern Kentucky, and rendered good service. It was with Gen. Burbridge in his expedition against Saltville, Virginia, and participated in all the battles in Kentucky during the frequent raids of Morgan. It was mustered out at Catlettsburg, Ky., December 30, 1864

The Forty-fifth Regiment Kentucky Mounted Infantry Volunteers was at first designed as a battalion for local service on the Virginia front and in the eastern counties of Kentucky. The recruiting and organization of the command was intrusted to Maj. Lewis M. Clark, formerly lieutenant Sixteenth Kentucky Infantry, and captain Tenth Kentucky Cavalry. For some months in the summer of 1863 the recruits of four companies were employed as above indicated; but it was determined to increase the command to a regiment and muster it into the United States service. Although the requisite number of recruits were rapidly collected, and the regiment put on active duty in October, 1863, and the organization effected at Ashland, Ky., the formal muster-in of the two companies was unavoidably delayed until the beginning of the following January, when Col. John Mason Brown was assigned to the command, and Maj. L. M. Clark promoted to lieutenant-colonel. In May it rendezvoused at Lexington, Ky., and under the immediate command of Lieut.-Col. Clark (Col. Brown commanding brigade) was attached to Hobson's Cavalry Division, and marched to the Virginia line, near Pound Gap. It led the pursuit after Morgan in June, 1864, and was the leading regiment of an assaulting column at the battle of Mt. Sterling, 9th June, 1864. It participated in the battle of Cynthiana June 12, 1864, in which Morgan's force was finally destroyed, having up to that engagement been continuously on duty for twenty-six days and nights, with no halt of as much as four hours.

During the months of July and August, 1864, a part of the regiment, under Lieut.-Col. Clark, was detailed by Gen. Burbridge to pursue guerrillas and scattered Confederate troops in Owen, Trimble, and the adjacent counties of Kentucky. In October, 1864, the Forty-fifth Kentucky formed part of Burbridge's command in the unsuccessful attack on Saltville, Va., and covered the retreat thence. In November and December, 1864, it was in Stoneman's column, at the capture of Bristol, east Tennessee, Marion, Abingdon, and Saltville, Va., and participated in all the engagements of that campaign.

Besides a great number of skirmishes of greater or less note, the Forty-fifth Kentucky took part in the engagements of Mt. Sterling, Cynthiana, Marion, Bristol, Laurel Gap, and Saltville. From its constant duty in most inclement weather the regiment suffered even more seriously than from the bullets of the enemy, and a large proportion of the men were mustered out much injured by frostbites.

This regiment, raised under the call for 20,000 men, was recruited chiefly from the mountain counties of the State, and the greater portion of the men were mustered in at Irvine, Ky., October 5, 1863, and at Camp Nelson, Ky., December, 1863, and January, 1864. The officers of this regiment failed to furnish any data from which to make up a statement of its operations, marches, etc., which is to be regretted, as it was due to the gallant men of this command that their record should be as complete as possible. It did most excellent service in the central and eastern portions of the State. Company I, commanded by Capt. Cockrill, after being mounted, scouted the country thoroughly, sending terror to the hearts of guerrillas and all lawless bands.

The Forty-eighth Kentucky Volunteers was enlisted principally from the counties of Trigg, Lyon, Livingston, Crittenden, Union, Christian, Caldwell, Muhlenburgh, Breckinridge and Grayson, and was organized and mustered into service at Princeton, Ky., by Charles H. Fletcher, captain Thirteenth United States Infantry, on the 26th day of October, 1863, for the period of one year, with Hartwell T. Burge, of Louisville, as colonel.

This regiment was raised for especial service in Kentucky to serve as a mounted force to aid in preventing raids, and to clear the State of guerrillas. Immediately upon muster it was assigned to First Brigade, Second Division, Department of Kentucky, and remained on duty at Princeton until the 1st of December, 1863, when it was ordered and marched to Russellville, Ky. Here it was ordered in detail on December 5, viz.: Companies A, D, I and K to Bowling Green, with Col. Burge as post commandant; companies B, F, G and H remaining at Russellville, with Lieut.-Col. Hester as post commandant. It remained on duty at these stations until April 6, 1864, when, by direction of Bvt. Maj.-Gen. Burbridge, it was removed, with exception of one company, and distributed along the line of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, garrisoning that line from Cave City to Louisville, headquarters at Munfordsville, with Col. Burge as post commandant, and Lieut.-Col. Hester in command of regiment and supervision of the railway line guarded by his force.

The Fifty-second Kentucky Mounted Infantry was organized under the authority of an act of Congress, dated February 7, 1863, authorizing the governor to raise 20,000 troops for the better defense of Kentucky. Companies A, B, C and E were mustered in at Scottsville, Ky., October 16, 1863, and Company D on the 17th of October. Company F was mustered in November 12, 1863, and Company G December 21, 1863, at Franklin, Ky. Companies H, I and K were mustered in March 3, 1864, at Franklin, Ky.

This regiment was raised for twelve months' service, and, under provisions of the act, was to be employed within the limits of the State of Kentucky in repelling invasions, suppressing insurrection, and guarding and protecting the public property. For the purpose of enabling it to cope more readily with the guerrillas that infested the State, it was mounted and stationed in the lower and central portions of the State, and rendered efficient aid to the government in protecting its line of communication with the army at the front. In the many fights and skirmishes in which it engaged, the bearing of both officers and men sustained the gallant record so bravely won by all Kentucky troops during the Rebellion. It was mustered out at Bowling Green, Ky., in January and March, 1865.

The Fifty-third Kentucky Infantry was organized at Paris, Ky., in the winter of 1864 and spring of 1865, and the exigencies of the service demanding all the available forces about that time, this regiment was called on to perform arduous duty which retarded its speedy organization. Being mounted, it was constantly employed in scouting the counties in the central portion of the State and along the Kentucky Central Railroad. In the second expedition of Gen. Burbridge against Saltville, Va., this regiment suffered much from the excessive cold, and the long and fatiguing marches. It participated in many skirmishes and in the battles of Clinch River, Marion and Saltville, Va., in all of which it performed its duty to the entire satisfation of the commanding general. It was mustered out at Louisville, Ky., September 15, 1865.

Company I was never organized.

The Fifty-fourth Kentucky Mounted Infantry was organized at New Castle, Ky., in September, 1864, under special authority from the War Department. The difficulties attending the recruiting and organization of this regiment were great, owing to the frequent raids by guerrillas, and the constant presence of predatory bands in the vicinity of its camp. It was mounted and performed duty in various portions of Kentucky, and by the energy displayed by its officers soon dispelled the guerrillas from the section of country in which it was stationed. On the second Saltville expedition the Fifty-fourth lost many men by exposure to the extreme cold weather. It participated in the battles of Clinch River, Marion and Saltville, Va., beside various skirmishes and minor engagements. It was mustered out at Louisville, Ky., September 1, 1865.

The Fifty-fifth Kentucky Infantry was raised under special authority from the War Department, and was organized at Covington, Ky., in November, 1864. It was mounted, and performed duty in the counties bordering on the Kentucky Central Railroad, until ordered on the Saltville expedition under Gen. Burbridge. On this expedition it performed good and efficient service, and was favorably mentioned by the commanding general, among other troops of his division, for gallant bearing in face of the enemy. After the return from Virginia the regiment was by detail posted in various counties to protect the citizens from the depredations of guerrillas, upon which duty it remained until mustered out at Louisville, Ky., September 19, 1865.

PATTERSON'S COMPANY OF MECHANICS AND ENGINEERS.

William F. Patterson, captain; Andrew Patterson, 2d lieutenant.

Patterson's company of Mechanics and Engineers was organized at Somerset, Ky., under Capt. W. F. Patterson, and mustered into the United States service by Charles S. Medary, lieutenant, United States mustering officer, and has marched as follows:

This company, as enlisted, was employed in the construction of defenses for Camp Hoskins, Ky., then under command of Col. Hoskins, up to the 2d of December, 1861, when Brig.-Gen. Shoepff assumed command, and continued the work of defense in the vicinity of Somerset, Ky., until the battle of Mill Springs, on the 19th of January, 1862. On the 16th of January this company, together with seven companies from the command, were employed in the repair of the road from Somerset to Stanford, Ky. On the 8th of February the seven companies were relieved, and the work continued by this company under orders of Gen. Thomas. On the 12th of April it was ordered to report to headquarters Seventh Division, Army of Ohio, Cumberland Ford, Ky., by Gen. George W. Morgan, where it arrived on the 20th, repairing roads on the way. From the 25th of April to May 1 engaged, with large detailed force added, in the repair of the road for supplies. From the 1st of May this company constructed roads and bridges forty miles for a flank movement upon Cumberland Gap, through Cumberland Mountains, which was accomplished successfully on the 18th of June. From this date a new detail was added of 230 men, and engaged in the construction of building roads, etc., up to the 18th of September, when all was destroyed by order of Gen. Morgan, together with nine siege guns. Marched with the advance of Morgan's division to the Ohio River, and accompanied it to Memphis, where, in December, it embarked with the division for an attack upon Vicksburg. From the 26th to the 1st of January, 1863, this company was constantly engaged, night and day, in preparing earthworks, and on the 28th was greatly exposed in an effort to throw a pontoon bridge across Chickasaw Bayou under a destructive fire from the enemy. Sergt. Welsh, in charge of the party, relinquished the effort only when the boats were so damaged as to be useless. On the 1st of January, 1863, embarked on transports for Arkansas Post, arriving on the 10th. After the battle and surrender the demolition of the fort and siege guns was assigned to this company, with a large detail from the command.

From this time until the date of its return to Kentucky, November 23, 1864, the company was constantly on duty, adding to the courage and discipline of true soldiers the skill and intelligence of competent engineers and mechanics.

The following is taken from the official records on file in the adjutant-general's office:

The Seventeenth Kentucky Cavalry was organized in the winter of 1864–65. A portion of the regiment was mustered into the United States service by Lieut. Russell, in December, 1864, at Russellville, Ky.; a portion by Capt. Smith, at Owensboro, Ky., in April, 1865; the remainder was mustered in at Louisville, Ky., in the months of January, February and March. Thos. W. Campbell, was commissioned lieutenant-colonel, March 22, 1865. Saml. F. Johnson was commissioned colonel, April 25, 1865. The regiment did good service in the southern portion of the State and along the line of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, guarding that great military thoroughfare. It was finally mustered out at Louisville, Ky., on the 20th day of September, 1865. It was engaged in numerous skirmishes, in which loss was sustained, beside the battles at Hopkinsville, Bunker Hill, and in Lyon County, Ky.

The officers of this command having failed to furnish any memorandum or official history of its marches and the battles and skirmishes in which it was engaged, a more extended notice of the same cannot be given.

Battery A was organized in July, 1861, at Camp Joe Holt, Ind., by Capt. David C. Stone, and mustered into the United States service Sept. 27, 1861. After three years of active and distinguished service in the Army of the Cumberland, this battery veteranized at Nashville, Tenn., in February, 1864. After the defeat of Gen. Hood in December, 1864, the battery was ordered to Texas, where it remained until October, when it returned to Louisville, and was mustered out of service Nov. 15, 1865.

Battery B was organized at Camp Dick Robinson, Ky., in August, 1861, by Capt. J. W. Hewitt, and was mustered into service Oct. 8, 1861. This battery took an active part in the early engagements in Kentucky and Tennessee, and was distinguished for soldierly bearing and excellent discipline. It was mustered out at Louisville, Ky., Nov. 16, 1864, the recruits and veterans being transferred to Battery A.

Battery C was organized for one year's service at Louisville, Ky., in September, 1863, by Capt. John W. Neville, and was mustered into service on the 10th of the same month. After serving one year in the Department of Kentucky, the battery reenlisted for three years, and was ordered to Arkansas, where it participated in several severe engagements.

Battery E was organized at Louisville, Ky., by Capt. John J. Hawes, in September, 1863, and was mustered into the service at Camp Nelson, Ky., October 6, 1863. It re-enlisted for three years in February, 1864. The service performed by this battery in Kentucky and east Tennessee was peculiarly arduous, and the gallant behavior of its members won the repeated commendation of superior officers.

The First Independent Battery was organized as Company E, 1st Kentucky Infantry, and detached as artillery at the instance of Gen. Rosecrans, then commanding in Western Virginia, Oct. 31, 1861. The battery served with distinction in the campaigns in West Virginia, participating in the engagements at Tylus Mountain, Horse Shoe Bend, Cotton Mountain and Greeley Bridge, Va., Frederick City and Antietam, Md., Cloyrd Mountain, New River Bridge, Lynchburg and Salem, Va. After four years of honorable service, the battery was mustered out July 10, 1865, at Louisville, Ky.

It has not been possible, in compiling the foregoing list, to obtain all the names, or even a satisfactory list of the killed and wounded in the Confederate army, either among commissioned officers or privates, from 1861-65. Records of such statistics are not easily, if at all attainable, and this interesting feature, so far as regards Confederate officers and soldiers, has been reluctantly omitted.

THE BATTLE OF PERRYVILLE.

The disposition of the Union forces at the period of the Confederate invasion in August, 1862, was as follows: The Seventh Division of the Army of the Ohio, under command of Maj. Gen. George W. Morgan, consisting of three brigades of four regiments each, three batteries of artillery and a squadron of cavalry, numbering in all about 7,000 men, was stationed at Cumberland Gap. Maj.-Gen. William Nelson, who had been detached from the main army in Tennessee and sent to Kentucky to assume command of all the Union forces in the State, had at his disposal a considerable number of regiments of the new levy sent him by Gen. Wright, in command at Cincinnati. Two brigades of these troops under command of Brig.-Gens. M. D. Manson and Charles Cruft were stationed at Richmond, Ky.; one brigade under Col. C. C. Gilbert at Stanford, and probably a few more within easy call, which it was his intention to concentrate before offering battle to the better seasoned troops of Gen. E. Kirby Smith, when an unlooked-for battle was precipitated by Manson's advance from Richmond to try conclusions with the invader. In addition to this force in central Kentucky was that constantly accumulating in the vicinity of Louisville under command of Gen. Boyle. All of these, however, were raw troops, undisciplined, undrilled and totally deficient in military experience. It may be imagined with what anxiety the arrival of the Army of the Ohio was awaited by the Union people of Kentucky.

ARMY OF THE OHIO.

MAJ.-GEN. DON CARLOS BUELL, OCTOBER 8, 1862.

Brig.-Gen. Sill's division, fourteen volunteer regiments and three battalions of regular infantry, one battalion of cavalry, one battalion of engineers and three batteries of artillery.

Brig.-Gen. Rousseau's division, fourteen regiments of infantry, four batteries of artillery, one squadron of cavalry and a battalion of engineers.

Brig.-Gen. Jackson's division, eight regiments of infantry, Garrard's detachment of the Seventh Kentucky, Thirty-second Kentucky and Third Tennessee infantry, and two batteries of artillery. The above troops composed the First Army Corps under command of Maj.-Gen. Alex McD. McCook. Gen. Sill's division being absent, left only the two divisions of Rousseau and Jackson on the field of Perryville. The latter (with the exception of Garrard's), composed exclusively of raw recruits, had the misfortune to receive the attack of Cheatham's veteran troops. The death of their brave commander, Gen. James S. Jackson, who was killed early in the action, followed almost immediately by the fall of both brigade commanders, led to the rout of this division. Had this assault fallen upon any other division present on the field a different result would doubtless have followed.

The Second Army Corps, Maj.-Gen. Thomas L. Crittenden, consisted of three divisions of fifteen regiments of infantry each; total, forty-five; ten batteries of artillery, two squadrons of cavalry and one battalion of engineers. This fine corps of troops occupied the extreme right of the line of battle as formed about noon, but was not ordered into action until too late to take part before night closed the contest. It may be added that they were, with the possible exception of a few regiments on their extreme left, in utter ignorance that a battle was being fought by their comrades on the left not more than four miles away.

THIRD ARMY CORPS, MAJ.-GEN. CHARLES C. GILBERT.

The First Division, Brig.-Gen. Alvin Schoepf, was the original division organized the previous year by Maj.-Gen. George H. Thomas, who was now second in command of the Army of the Ohio. It consisted of three brigades commanded by Col. Moses B. Walker, Brig.-Gen. Speed S. Fry and Brig.-Gen. James B. Steedman. Fifteen regiments of infantry (among which were the Fourth, Tenth and Twelfth Kentucky), a squadron of cavalry and three batteries of artillery constituted the organization.

Brig.-Gen. R. B. Mitchell's division consisted of three brigades of four regiments each, two squadrons of cavalry and three batteries of artillery.

Brig.-Gen. Philip H. Sheridan's division comprised the same number of infantry regiments, with two batteries of artillery. The two last mentioned divisions, together with Rousseau's and Jackson's, fought the battle of Perryville. The Fifteenth Kentucky infantry was in Lytle's brigade of Rousseau's division, and Stone's Kentucky Battery was in the same division.

The death of Maj.-Gen. William Nelson at the hands of Brig.-Gen. Jeff. C. Davis at the Gault House, Louisville, on the 29th of August, deprived the Union army of one of its most valued commanders. Had this deplorable event not occurred, the central corps would, on the day of Perryville, have been commanded by Nelson. Those who witnessed the magnificent fighting qualities of this superb soldier at Shiloh need not be told that he would not have awaited a second invitation from hard-pressed McCook to lead his three divisions thundering down upon Polk's left flank in ample time to close his avenue of escape through Perryville to Harrodsburg.

The casualties in the Army of the Ohio were as follows:

Rousseau's division.—Killed, 484; wounded, 1,520; missing, 188; total, 2,192. Jackson's division—Killed, 188; wounded, 682; missing, 237; total, 1,107. Schoepf's division—Killed, 4; wounded, 14; missing, 8; total, 26. Mitchell's division—Killed, 121; wounded, 324; missing, 64; total, 509. Sheridan's division—Killed, 44; wounded, 292; missing, 14; total, 350. Cavalry division—Killed, 4; wounded, 17; missing, 4; total, 25. Aggregate, 4,209. The loss in the Fifteenth Kentucky was greater than in any other regiment on the field: Killed, 66; wounded, 130; total, 196. Stone's Kentucky Battery lost in killed, 3; wounded, 9; missing, 1; total, 13. Garrard's detachment—Wounded, 6; missing, 33; total, 39. The Second Kentucky Cavalry lost wounded, 4; missing, 1; total, 5. Col. Curran Pope was fatally wounded and died November 5, 1862; Lieut.-Col. George P. Jouett, Maj. William P. Campbell, Lieut. James A. T. McGrath and Lieut. Joseph L. McClure were killed in action. Capts. John Spalding and Joshua P. Prather and Lieut. F. D. Garretty were among the wounded.

ARMY OF THE MISSISSIPPI

The Army of the Mississippi, commanded by Maj.-Gen. Bragg, consisted of four divisions of four brigades each. The divisions commanded respectively by Gens. Cheatham and Withers constituted the right wing, under command of Maj.-Gen. Leonidas Polk. Maj.-Gen. William J. Hardee commanded the left wing, which embraced the remaining two divisions under Maj.-Gens. Simon B. Buckner and J. Patton Anderson.

Withers' division having been detached in compliance with the request of Gen. Smith to report to him, left the three divisions of Cheatham, Buckner and Anderson to cope, at hazardous odds against them, with nearly the whole of Buell's army. That they were not captured is only to be accounted for by the surprising luck that often accompanies the most foolhardy enterprises. Had Bragg directed his attack against the right instead of the left of the Union line of battle he would have met the veteran divisions of Wood, Van Cleve and Smith, the two latter seasoned in battle at Shiloh, where their heroic courage had won the twin stars of a major-general's commission for their brave commanders, Crittenden and Nelson. Here, too, was their gallant commander, Thomas L. Crittenden, whose cheerful courage found its readiest manifestation on the battle-field, while at his side, strong, wise and brave, was the masterful Thomas, second in command.

Nothing could excel the fury of the Confederate attack. The raw recruits, upon whom it came, did not remain long to witness its terribly destructive power, but fell back to make room for the veterans under Rousseau, Mitchell and Sheridan, whose eight brigades breasted the attack made by eleven equally well-educated to the profession, until Schoepf's division, tardily sent to take a hand in the fray, made its appearance upon the field, and night closed the contest. Referring to the conduct of Maj.-Gen. Buckner on the field, Gen. Hardee says: "To Maj.-Gen. Buckner I am indebted for the skillful management of his troops, the judicious use of his artillery, and for the opportune services of himself and the veteran division under his command."

The casualties in the Army of the Mississippi were as follows:

Cheatham's division — Killed, 268; wounded, 1,131; missing, 67; total, 1,466.

Hardee's Corps, Buckner's and Anderson's divisions—Killed, 242; wounded, 1,504; missing, 184; total, 1,930. Aggregate, 3,396.

BUTLER COUNTY.

WILLIAM G. ABBOTT was born in Butler County, Ky., April 30, 1835. At the age of eleven years, he began to earn his own living, which he did by fishing and selling fish in Rochester, Butler County; this he continued for several years; then hired to a farmer to drive plow for 10 cents per day, which he continued for three seasons, and was always happy on Saturday night with six dimes in his pockets; at the age of fourteen, being from home, he received notice of the death of his step-father. He mounted a wild mule and started home; the mule threw him and cut his head badly, but, undaunted, he continued his journey, after having his wound sewed up by a farmer on the way. After the death of his step-father, young Abbott constituted himself the guardian and supporter of his mother and her children, Josephine, Sarah, Jane and George Washington. He remained with them until he was twenty-one years of age. In the meantime, he had settled in Ohio County on some military land, known as the Fitz-Hugh survey. After three years he sold his improvement, and bought 200 acres in Butler County, where he settled and remained one year, then left his mother on the farm, where she lived until she again married, twelve years later. During this period, Mr. Abbott worked at stone-cutting at Paradise for a while, then worked for W. D. Coleman for eighteen months, for $18 per month; bought a ferry on Green River, which he operated for two years; sold the ferry and went into a general merchandising business in Paradise, Ky., where he built a fine residence, but lost considerable money on account of the failure of the iron works and discontinuance of coal mining. March 24, 1861, he married Annie A. Nourse, of Butler County; they are the parents of nine children, of whom there are living: Cordelia, Christian S., Olive, Inez, Ettie, Nola and Murnie M. In 1862, Mr. Abbott was commissioned a lieutenant in the Home Guards in Muhlenburgh County, and in 1863 joined the Federal army. He enlisted in Company H, Eighteenth Kentucky Volunteers; fought under Gen. Sherman in the Georgia campaigns, and from Atlanta to Richmond; was discharged in July, 1865, when he returned to Kentucky, and engaged in farming until 1883; served as a peace officer in his native State nine years, and in 1883, was elected magistrate, which office he now holds. He owns 400 acres of good land, well improved; also owns the best hotel property in Rochester, besides small stock in the Rochester Roller mills, and in the Rochester Academy. Mr. Abbott is thorough in business, and has acquired his property by his own industry and perseverance. In politics he is a Republican; his religious views are based on charity to mankind, and fulfillment of personal obligations.

REDDICK ARENDELL, farmer, was born in Rochester, Butler County, March 15, 1835, and brought up there until the age of five years, when his parents removed to Muhlenburgh County, where he resided until 1854, when he removed to Kansas, but returned to his native State in the fall of 1856, and settled on Hickory Camp Creek, five miles southeast of Rochester. His parents were Reuben and Lavinia (Dewese) Arendell, who removed, the former from North Carolina, and the latter from South Carolina, to Kentucky with subject's grandfather, John Arendell, who had fifteen sons and one daughter. Reuben Arendell was the fourteenth son, and fifty years ago owned lands in Butler County, extending four miles along the Green River, including the present site of Rochester. Mr. Arendell did not enjoy the facilities for mental training in his early life that children at the present day have, but acquired a taste for reading, and seeks to give his children the advantages of instruction in school and at home. His business, since 1856, has been mainly farming and lumbering. In 1854 he was united in matrimony to Elizabeth, daughter of W. Arendell, also a second cousin. She was born August 24, 1833, and is the mother of nine children, six of whom are now living: Theodosia Earnest, Henry McDonald (married to Joanna Cook), Lavinia (wife of T. E. Pendley), Cleopatra Theresa, Josephine Lillian, Eliza Celeste. Mr. Arendell's farm consists of 135 acres of timber and plow land, comfortable homestead, etc. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and a stanch Democrat in politics.

SAMUEL H. AUSTIN was born in Butler County, Ky., July 22, 1845, and is a son of Samuel and Nancy (James) Austin, the former of whom was a native of Maryland, and the latter of Butler County, Ky. They were of Irish and Scotch descent, respectively. When but a lad, some fourteen years old, in 1815, Samuel Austin came with his parents from Maryland to Ohio County, Ky., then almost an unbroken wilderness. There he received the major part of his education at the primitive log schoolhouses of the Kentucky frontier. In early life he learned the tailor's trade, which he followed at Hartford some ten or twelve years. In 1833, he removed to Morgantown, Butler Co., Ky, where he was soon after married. Here he first engaged in general merchandise and continued the same for several years; after which he bought wild land on the north side of Green River, six miles below Morgantown, and subsequently improved a farm, upon which he remained about eighteen years. In 1856, he sold this place and bought another in the little bend of the Green River, same county, where he remaimed some twenty-three years, when he again sold out and returned to Ohio County, remaining only about two years. After this he made his home among his children until his death, December 3, 1884, in his eighty-fourth year. He was the first county judge of Butler County, which office he held for eight years. He was also among the first magistrates of Butler County, which office he also held in Ohio County. He and wife were for many years devoted members of the United Baptist Church. He was also a member of the Masonic fraternity from early life. Two of his brothers were veterans of the war of 1812. Samuel H. Austin, the subject of this sketch, was employed on his father's farm until he was twenty years old, after which he farmed his father-in-law's farm for several years. He then bought a partially improved farm on Indian Camp Creek, Butler Co., Ky., upon which he has ever since resided. He was married February 14, 1867, to Helen N. Porter, also a native of Butler County, Ky.; born March 1, 1850. Three sons and five daughters have blessed their union, all of whom are yet living. Their names are as follows: Thomas P., Elisha F., Lela B., Lether R., Nancy E., Flora A., Ella V. and William O. Mr. Austin and wife are and have been devoted members of the church.

JOHN W. BAILEY, Butler County, was born May 4, 1811, in Granville County, N.C., where he grew to manhood, and in 1842, removed to Butler County, Ky., where he has since resided. His father, Israel Bailey, a native of Granville County, died in 1853, at the age of eighty-five years. He was the son of Jeremiah Bailey of North Carolina, who died in 1811. Israel married Mary, daughter of Ned Harris, of Granville County (died about 1857, aged sixty-six years). Their children are Samuel, Israel, Allen, Anderson, Matilda (Davis), Solomon, John W. Mahala (Dilon), Joseph, Priscilla (Bailey) and Henderson. September 8, 1829, J. W. Bailey married Lucy, daughter of John and Tabitha (Harris) Snead, of Wake County, N. C. (born February 4, 1809, died March 13, 1835). To them were born Sarah A. T. (Bailey), Henry A. (deceased), Mary S., Elizabeth A., Doc. Samuel J., Israel, Perlina, and Emily C. (Barclay). Mr. Bailey is a farmer, and has 277 acres of land in a good state of cultivation. He is a Missionary Baptist, and in politics affiliates with the Democratic party.

JOHN BAKER, Butler County, was born April 12, 1833, in Smith County, Tenn., where he grew to manhood. In 1861 he removed to the southern part of this county, where he has since resided. His father John Baker, Sr., was a native of Tennessee, and died in 1833, of cholera, on the Mississippi River; his father was George Baker. John Baker, Sr., married Sarah Enoch, of Smith County, Tenn.; their union was blessed with the following children, Mary M. (Neel), Louisa (Bell), and John (subject). The last having been left an orphan in early childhood, he was brought up by his maternal grandmother, and received but limited advantages for an education; until twenty-two years old he attended a five months' school. He has continued to improve his mind by constant reading, until at present he is a man of considerable information. He has been twice married; first September 15, 1856, to Minerva J., daughter of Philip and Phœbe (Dice) Fisher, of Wilson County, Tenn., and second on October 4, 1866, to Mrs. Mary A. Philips, widow of Stephen R. Philips, and daughter of Josiah and Eliza (Hams) Wood, of Smith County, Tenn. His first wife died June 26, 1866, without issue; his present wife has one son, Ezra F. Baker. Mrs. Baker's children by her first husband are Elizabeth (Helm), Ida F. (Gray), Elmira L. (Mayhugh), and James P. Mr. Baker is a practical farmer, and owns 252 acres of well improved and productive land. He is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and a Prohibitionist in politics.

WILEY R. BEESLEY, Butler County, was born in Warren County, Ky., April 11, 1807, where he remained until he was twelve years old, when he removed with his mother, Elizabeth Beesley, and his grandfather, William Beesley, to Butler County, Ky. The family settled on the Indian Camp Creek. Here Wiley R. Beesley received a common school education and grew to manhood. After attaining his majority, he bought a partially improved farm on the north fork of the Indian Camp Creek, where he remained until the fall of 1872. He then sold out and bought the farm of 160 acres (a part of which he has since sold) on the waters of Welch's Creek, where he still resides. He held the office of constable for four years, and afterward that of magistrate for three terms of four years each. William Beesley, the grandfather of our subject, was a veteran of the Revolution; served under Gen. Greene, during that struggle, and was in the battle of Roodsley's Mill, where Gen. Gates was defeated by the British. Wiley R. Beesley was first married November 8, 1832, to Perlina Smith, a native of Butler County, Ky; to this union were born three children, only one of whom (Anthaline Daughety) is now living. Perlina Beesley departed this life April 10, 1849, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Beesley was next married April 18, 1853, to Lucinda Haning, a native of Switzerland County, Ind., born July 6, 1833. She is a daughter of John and Sallie (Coy) Haning. Eleven children have blessed their union, nine of whom—seven sons and two daughters—are living, viz.: William D., Elizabeth Taylor, Robert D., John W., Florence T., Ira R., Irving R., Singleton R. and Peter Cooper. Mr. Beesley and wife, have been for many years members of the United Baptist Church, in which he has officiated as deacon. In politics he is a Democrat.

LEANDER BELCHER, Butler County, was born July 4, 1852, in Logan County, this State, and in childhood removed with his parents to Butler County, where he was brought up and now resides. He is the son of Thomas Belcher, a native of Tennessee, born in 1803, and removed from Smith County in 1847 to Logan County, Ky. In 1854, he came to Butler County, where he died in November, 1862. His father was Richard Belcher. Thomas (subject's father) married Mary Gill, of Tennessee (born in 1809, and died in 1868), and their children were Rebecca J. (Orange), born June 15, 1826, Louisa (Tyree), born April 24, 1828, Mary (Melton), born July 6, 1830, Sutton E., born August 19, 1832, Susan (McCoy), born July 3, 1834, John W., born January 11, 1837, James T., born February 17, 1838, Elizabeth M., born December 29, 1839, Richard F., born August 10, 1841, Prudence (Chandler), born September 29, 1844, Zachariah Taylor, born January 29, 1848, and Leander, born July 4, 1852. June 25, 1884, Leander married Barthenia, daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth (Childers) Brown, born April 25, 1852. Mr. Belcher has for the past four years been engaged in merchandizing at Townsville, and has met with encouraging success. He is a member of the Baptist Church, and in politics is identified with the Republican party.

JAMES A. BELLAR, Butler County, was born September 20, 1850, in the southern part of the county, while his parents were here on a visit. He was reared in Smith County, Tenn., until 1863, and in that year removed with his parents to the region where he was born and where he has since resided. His father, George W. Bellar, a Tennessean, died in 1881, at the age of fifty-two years. He was the son of Samuel Bellar, of Tennessee, and was married to Lucinda M. Lack, daughter of Obadiah and Elizabeth (Conger) Lack. They had eight children, viz.: William L., James A., Nancy E. (Proctor), Obadiah, Mary F. (Hutchinson), John P. (deceased), Isaac and George W. James A. Bellar was married October 21, 1873, to Helena S., daughter of Allen and Sarah (Stewart) Cornell of Macon County, Tenn. The fruits of this union are four children, three of whom, Fannie, Bennie and Ophelia, are living—Jennie is deceased. Mr. Bellar is a farmer, and deputy county clerk. He is a member of the United Baptist Church, of which he is clerk.

JAMES R. BERRY was born in Butler County, Ky., near Berry's Lick, April 25, 1818, and is one of ten children born to Francis M. and Rebecca (Reed) Berry, both of whom were natives of Virginia, and of Irish descent. When only a small boy, Francis M. Berry removed with his parents from Virginia to the upper part of Kentucky, from thence in the latter part of the last century, the family removed to what is now Butler County, Ky., but was then a part of Logan County, and settled on Big Muddy Creek, near Berry's Lick. Here Francis M. received his early education; was married and engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death, which occurred in December, 1881, in his ninety-first year; he was a veteran of the war of 1812, served under Gen. Harrison in the Canadian campaign, and also against the Indians in the Northwest territory; he and his wife were devoted members of the old school Presbyterian Church for more than sixty years. James R. Berry received such an education as the schools of the country afforded in his youth. At that time three horse-mills supplied the entire country with bread stuff. James R. was employed on his father's farm until he was twenty-four years old; he then bought seventy-five acres of wild land near Berry's Lick, erected a log-cabin, and subsequently improved a farm, upon which he resided until the breaking out of the war, in 1861, when he sold out, and bought a farm one mile below Aberdeen on the Green River, which he afterward lost on account of a defective title. In February, 1883, he came to the farm where he now lives, three miles below Aberdeen on the Green River. He was married August 5, 1842, to Catherine Bennett, also a native of Butler County; born January 18, 1819, a daughter of Elisha and Elizabeth (Hancock) Bennett, both of whom were natives of Virginia. Three sons and three daughters blessed their union, of whom the three sons are living, as follows: John W., Elisha F. and James D. Mr. Berry and wife have been for many years members of the church, first of the old school but now of the Cumberland Presbyterian. Mr. B. is a Republican.

JASPER C. BERRY was born in Butler County, Ky., near Berry's Lick, September 2, 1837, and is a son of Francis M. and Rebecca (Reed) Berry, whose sketch appears elsewhere in this volume. Jasper C. received a common school education in youth, and was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority, after which he and his brother farmed the home place on shares for some five years. He then removed to a farm on the Green River, about five miles below Morgantown, where he remained one year, after which he was employed as a laborer on a farm two years. In March, 1864, he enlisted in Company G, Twelfth Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry (Federal service), and served with that regiment in all its marches and engagements until it was mustered out at Louisville in September, 1865. He participated in all the battles of the Georgia and Atlanta campaigns and the Saltville and Salisbury raids, as well as many other lesser engagements. After his return from the army, he was employed on the farm for several years. In 1867, he bought 200 acres of wild land some three miles below Aberdeen on the Green River, where he has since improved the farm upon which he now resides. He was for a time superintendent of the county poor. He was married August 2, 1866, to Mary E. Porter, also a native of Butler County; born March 22, 1847. Five children have blessed their union, two of whom are living: John F. and Edney C. Mr. Berry and wife are church members; he of the Cumberland Presbyterian, and she of the Baptist. They were formerly members of the Grange. In politics, Mr. Berry is a Republican.

JOSEPH BLUNK, Butler County, was born November 2, 1833, in Harrison County, Ind., where he grew to manhood, and, in 1875, removed to Meade County, Ky.; in 1876, to Hancock County; in 1880, to Daviess County, and in 1883 he located in Butler County, where he now resides. His father, Andrew Jackson Blunk, a native of Jefferson County, Ky., died in 1877, at the age of seventy years. He was the son of Andrew Blunk, who was born in Virginia, and was a soldier in the war of 1812. Andrew J. married Mary, daughter of Henson and Jane Johnson of Harrison County, Ind. (died in 1873, aged seventy years). Their offspring were John, Henson (died in the Mexican war), Joseph, Jane (Farnsley), Andrew, Levi, Amos and William. Joseph Blunk procured a common English education in youth. He was married August 15, 1850, to Adaline, daughter of Thomas and Susan (Gwartney) Wright, of Harrison County, Ind. (born April 16, 1834), and to them have been born William T., Mary E. (widow of Charley Fransell), Levi H., Andrew J., Susan E. (Renfrow), John S., Minnie M. and Virginia B. Mr. Blunk is a farmer owning 259 acres of land in a good state of cultivation.

LEWIS F. BOLTON, Butler County, was born September 23, 1837, in Whitley County, Ky., and in 1841 removed with his parents to Butler County, locating on Big Reedy Creek, on the place where he now resides. Sympathizing with the South, and believing in the right of secession, he took up arms to maintain his views, enlisting, in 1861, in the Ninth Kentucky (Confederate) Infantry, in in which he served until the final settlement of the conflict; he returned home and since has been an honored and law-abiding citizen. His father, Haile Bolton, a native of Grayson County, Tenn., was born February 21, 1813; at the age of twelve he removed with his parents to Campbell County, that State, where he grew to manhood and is now enjoying a good old age. He is the son of John Bolton, a native of Halifax County, Va., and a soldier in the war of 1812, who died in Campbell County, Tenn., in 1855, at the age of sixty-eight years. Haile Bolton (subject's father) married Dina Woosley, a daughter of Samuel and Phœbe (Bailey) Woosley of Whitley County, Ky., born in 1816 and died December 28, 1883. This union was blessed with the birth of ten children, seven of whom are living, as follows viz.: Lewis F., Josiah, Martha J. (Hunt), Elizabeth (Jones), George W., Samuel M., and Beverley L. The following are dead: James, John R. and Julia A. Mr. Bolton was brought up on a farm with limited facilities for an education, but by close application and constant reading his mind is well-stored with useful knowledge. He was placed in nomination by his friends for representative to the legislature, and though carrying the full strength of his party, he was defeated by a strictly party vote. He was married, December 13, 1866, to Mary V. Thacker, daughter of Dillingham and Prudence A. (Kelley) Thacker, of Warren County, Ky., born December 10, 1847. To them have been born seven children: Aurora A. (deceased), Anna M., Belle, John C., Adaline, Roscoe H. and Josiah L. Mr. Bolton is a farmer and owns 101 acres of productive land, which is in a good state of cultivation. He is a member of the Masonic order, and of the Christian Church; polititically he is a Democrat.

JAMES J. BORAH was born December 18, 1847, near Borah's Ferry, Butler County, where he spent his youth. He is the second of eight children, six of whom are living. His parents were Willis and Margaret (Austin) Borah, both of whom are deceased. His grandfather was George Borah, a native of Pennsylvania, one of the first settlers of Butler County. He was an extensive land owner in this county, and established and gave his name to the ferry across the Green River, known as Borah's Ferry. Our subject was married November 21, 1877, to Caroline E. Annis, the fifth child of John Annis, a native of England. She was born near Morgantown, Butler County, February 20, 1863. The result of this union is two children: Donnie May and Dixie. Mr. Borah has a farm of 150 acres, with a beautiful house, lately built. He is a Democrat in politics.

G. WASHINGTON BROWN is one of the eminently successful farmers of Butler County, and was born in Ohio County, Ky., March 14, forty-four years ago. He was brought up in the same locality and educated in the public schools. His father, Thomas E. Brown, was born in Virginia, January 13, 1808, and died March 18, 1872; he was by occupation a prominent farmer and merchant and settled in Ohio County, when a child. G. W. Brown's mother was born February 10, 1809, and died November 6, 1858. Our subject moved to Butler County in 1860, and purchased his farm near Mining City, where he now owns 300 acres of good land. He enlisted in Company H, 12th Kentucky Cavalry (Capt. Payne), and served nearly three years, and was in the campaigns of Tennessee and Georgia. November 29, 1866, Mr. Brown was united in marriage with Rebecca F., second daughter of J. W. and Mary McKinney. She was born in Butler County, February 5, 1850. Seven children have blessed this union: William Ellsworth, Minerva Ann, John Thomas, Oscar Vineyard, Elmer Hamilton, James Pendleton, Mona Alcyon. Mrs. Brown's father, J. A. McKinney, was born in Virginia in 1819, and came to Kentucky with his parents in infancy, and has since been a resident of Butler County; in 1846 he married Mary A. London, by whom he has seven children: Nancy E. Layne, William Martin, Rebecca, Brice V., John L., Laura L., wife of G. G. Pendley; and James. They have eighteen grandchildren and have never had but one death among them, and have not employed a doctor but twice in twenty years. Mr. McKinney owns 250 acres of good land, well supplied with both graded and common stock. His farm is about half bottom and half timber land. A portion of the bottom land, being well set with cane, affords excellent winter pasturage. Mr. McKinney and Mr. Brown are both Democrats, and their families are members of the Baptist Church; both are of strong temperance principles.

JOHN H. BURRISS, Butler County, was born January 7, 1822, on the place where he now resides. He is a son of John and Betsey (Sutton) Burriss, the former a native of North Carolina, who removed to Tennessee, when a young man, bringing his earthly all on a packhorse. He was in many Indian skirmishes; was in the battle of Nickajack; was also a soldier in the war of 1812; was married to Betsey Sutton, a daughter of Jacob and Nancy (Know) Sutton, of this county, by whom he had ten children, as follows: William, Nancy (Oden), Sally (Potts), Pully (Hutchison), Ann, Elizabeth, Jane, John H., James and Melinda (Ennis). Mr. Burriss lives with three sisters on the homestead; he is a carpenter and farmer, and ownes 130 acres of land. He is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

IREDELL BYERS, Butler County, was born in Grayson County, Ky., September 19, 1829, and is the eldest of nine children born to John and Jennie (Elder) Byers, both of whom were natives of Grayson County, and of Irish and German descent, respectively. John Byers was educated and married in his native county, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death, in September, 1875, in his sixty-seventh year. He and wife were, from early life, devoted members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church; he was a soldier in the service of the State during the late civil war, and participated in several battles. Iredell Byers received such an education as the schools of Kentucky afforded in his youth; he has since, however, by his own exertions, acquired a good practical business education. He was employed on his father's farm until he was twenty-two years of age, the last year, however, being for himself. He then bought wild land in Grayson County, where he improved a farm, and remained for four years, after which he sold out and again bought wild land in the same county, and improved another farm, on which he resided for some twenty-five years. From September, 1862, until the close of the late civil war, he served as first lieutenant in the Home Guard or State service, and saw some very active and hard service. In the spring of 1881, he sold his farm in Grayson County, and bought a partially improved farm in Butler County, Ky., where he still resides. The farm is now well improved. Mr. Byers was married March 6, 1851, to Mary Hayse, also a native of Grayson County, Ky., born April 13, 1830. She is a daughter of Caleb and Margaret (Putt) Hayse. Seven children have been the fruit of this union, five of whom—two sons and three daughters—are living, as follows: Angeline Squier (deceased), Beesley, Sarah E. (deceased), Perry C., Martha J. (Legrande), Austin G. and Phœbe C. Mr. Byers and wife, and most of the children are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, in which he has been a ruling elder for the past thirty years. He is also a member of the Masonic fraternity. In politics he is a Republican.

SAMUEL J. CALDWELL, Butler County, was born March 12, 1840, in this county, and is the son of James and Martha (Ried) Caldwell. The former was a native of this county; was born March 10, 1810; he was a wealthy farmer, and died in 1845. His father was George W. Caldwell, a native of Virginia, and who in early youth came to Logan County, now Butler, where he died about 1837. He was the son of Oliver Caldwell, who came from Scotland, and lived and died in Virginia. The father of subject, James Caldwell, married Martha Ried, a daughter of Cunningham and Peggy (Ewing) Ried, of Butler County. To them were born George W., William C., Samuel J., Daniel C. and Mary M. (Mansfield). Samuel J. was brought up on a farm, and received but a limited education. He was married January 15, 1863, to Margaret R., daughter of William and Margaret (Wright) Caldwell. She was born September 30, 1839, and died December 3, 1872. This union was blessed with the birth of the following children: James W., Margaret L. and Lillie B. A coincidence in the history of this branch of the Caldwell family is the fact that subject, his wife, both their parents and their children were born and reared in the same house, and the homestead of the grandfather still remains in possession of the family. Mr. Caldwell is a man temperate in all his habits, industrious and economical. He owns 1,061 acres of improved land. His dwelling is one of the finest and best in the county, and his barns and other buildings are excellent; he has six barns, one of which is 161x50 feet, and twenty feet high to the eaves. He has also fifty acres in fruit, 200 pear trees and other varieties of fine fruit. He owns nearly 100 horses and mules, and 50 head of cattle. He deals in tobacco, and frequently has on hand at one time 400,000 pounds of the leaf. He is a member of the Masonic order, and in politics a Democrat.

WILLIAM B. CARDWELL was born in Butler County, Ky., July 20, 1841, and is a son of Robert and Nancy J. (Moore) Cardwell, both of whom were natives of Virginia, and of Irish and English descent respectively. When a young man, in about 1830, Robert Cardwell removed from Virginia to Butler County, Ky., then almost an unbroken wilderness. Here he was married, and engaged in agricultural pursuits all his life. He first rented a farm in the little bend of the Green River, below Morgantown, where he resided for several years, when he removed to a farm on Renfrew Creek, above Morgantown, where he remained some three or four years. He then bought a farm three miles and a half from Morgantown, where he resided until 1867, when he sold out and bought a farm north of the river on Welch's Creek, where he remained until his death, which occurred on the night of the 25th of April, 1877, in his 64th year. On that night his dwelling, with its entire contents, was destroyed by fire, in which he and his youngest daughter and youngest child were so severely burned that they died the following day. Mrs. Cardwell departed this life on the 15th of April, preceding the fire. Mr. Cardwell and wife were devoted church members, he of the Methodist Episcopal Church North, and she of the Cumberland Presbyterian; he was also member of the I. O. G. T., and an earnest advocate of the temperance cause. William B. Cardwell received only a limited common school education but has since acquired a good business education. He was employed on his father's farm until he was eighteen years of age, after which he was employed as a laborer for a few months. He then rented lands in Ohio County where he was employed until September, 1861, when he enlisted in Company C, Eleventh Kentucky Volunteer Infantry (Federal service), and served with that regiment in all its marches and engagements until the expiration of his term of service, being mustered out at Bowling Green, in December, 1864. He participated in the battles of Shiloh, Stone River, Lookout Mountain, Kenesaw Mountain, the siege of Atlanta, siege of Knoxville, and many lesser engagements. After his return from the army he farmed on shares for several years. He then bought a partially improved farm of 102 acres, three miles east of Aberdeen, upon which he still resides. Since that time he has dealt quite extensively in real estate, and now owns well improved farms amounting to 217 acres. In February, 1884, he engaged in general merchandising at Aberdeen in connection with farming. He was married April 5, 1860, to Angeline Flener, also a native of Butler County, Ky.; born June 12, 1841. Twelve children have blessed their union, ten of whom, five sons and five daughters are living, viz.: William H., Paradine A., Luvenia A., Sarah A. F., Azro A., Alverado, Mary A., Siotha J., Leroy L., Robert L. Mr. Cardwell and wife are church members; he of the Methodist Episcopal and she of the United Baptist. He is also an earnest advocate of the temperance cause. In politics he is a stanch Republican.

HON. THOMAS C. CARSON is the son of William and Nancy (Porter) Carson; the former, a native of Campbell County, Va., was born in 1798, and removed to the southern part of Butler County, then Logan County, Ky., early in the century. His occupation was surveying, and he was the first county surveyor of Butler after its organization in 1810. He also assisted in the division of the county. Subject's mother was born in 1800. There were eight children in the family, of whom two are now living. The eldest was Lena, the wife of W. T. Martin, now deceased; Sally, wife of James Butler both deceased; Jackson, deceased; Oliver Cromwell, now residing in Bowling Green; Hon. T. C. Carson, the subject of this sketch; William P., deceased; Nancy, deceased; John M. William Carson followed farming and surveying until his death, which occurred in 1852, and was a gentleman of considerable wealth and influence in the county. Judge Thomas C. Carson was born in Butler County, April 2, 1823. He received a good common school education, and was brought up on the farm. In 1870 he was elected county judge, which position he has held four years. In 1881, Judge Carson and others organized the Butler County Bank (with an authorized capital of $100,000) of which he was elected president and J. P. More, cashier. This is one of the most substantial institutions in the State, and since its organization has steadily increased its business. The judge has been twice married; first to Sarah E., daughter of William N. Wilson of Butler County, by whom he had five children: John M. Carson, married to Luli, daughter of the Hon. B. S. D. Guffy; Nancy P.; Alvina, the wife of E. T. Harreld, both deceased; Emma, deceased wife of J. E. Whitaker; and Mollie, deceased wife of J. E. Harreld. Mrs. Nancy Carson departed this life in 1873. The judge married as his second wife Martha Hughes of Tennessee, by whom there was born to him one son, Justus O. Mr. Carson owns a fine farm in the Big Bend of the Green River, also large interests in Morgantown, including real estate, stocks, etc. He and his family are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. He is also a member of the Masonic fraternity, No. 272, and the Keystone Chapter, Hartford, Ky.

WILLIAM RUMSEY CHAPMAN, Butler County, was born December 6, 1841, near Beaver Dam, Ohio County, where he grew to manhood, and in 1861 enlisted in Company C, Ninth Kentucky (Confederate) Infantry. He served during the war, and participated in the battles of Shiloh, Vicksburg, Murfreesboro, Chickamauga (in the last-named battle was wounded), Missionary Ridge, and was with Johnston in the campaign between Dalton and Atlanta. After the fall of Atlanta his regiment was mounted and attached to Gen. Wheeler's cavalry, and with them fought Gen. Sherman all the way to Savannah. In the siege of the latter place he was the only member of Company C, Ninth Kentucky, participating in its defense, balance of company having been detailed on a scout and cut off from the command. He was then detailed as provost guard, and surrendered at Charlotte, N. C.; took the oath of allegiance to the United States in Nashville, and in the following May returned home. In 1869 he located in the southeast part of Butler County, where he has since resided. He received a good English education in his youth. He married, January 16, 1868, Mattie A., daughter of Jacob W. and Emoline (McCoy) Mason, of this county, and born May 3, 1848. They have two children: Elfie R. and Olive M. In 1876 Mr. Chapman was appointed magistrate and member of the court of claims, which position he held by appointment and election for six years. He is a farmer, and has been brought up to the business of tilling the soil. He owns 250 acres of well improved land on Richland Creek. In politics he is a Democrat. He is a member of the Baptist Church. His father, Solomon Chapman, was born November 12, 1800, in Todd County; removed with his parents in childhood to Ohio County, where he died April 3, 1869. He was the son of Willis Chapman, a native of Sumter District, S. C., and who died in Missouri in 1856 at the age of eighty-eight years. Solomon Chapman married on the 8th of January, 1824, Sarah, daughter of Robert and Charlotte (Barnes) Render, of Ohio County, born March 11, 1807, and died May 12, 1860. They had the following children: Artemisa (Taylor), now dead; Isaphenia E. (Wise); Willis N., deceased; Robert R., deceased; Elizabeth E. (Williams); Ellis M.; Marianna, deceased; subject; Cyrus F., deceased, and Sarah J., deceased.

PRESLEY M. CLARK, Butler County, was born March 6, 1829, in Vanderburgh County, Ind. He is a son of Isaac Clark, a native of Virginia, who at an early day located in Butler County, Ky., where he married Elizabeth Morris. To this marriage was born one son, Presley M., and one daughter, Elizabeth, who died in 1872. Isaac Clark removed to Indiana about 1828, and remained there some years. After the death of his wife, Elizabeth, he returned to Kentucky, where he took a second wife, Eliza James, of Butler County; she departed this life in 1865, surviving her husband twenty-two years, he having died in 1843. During his lifetime he followed the trade of a bootmaker. Presley M., at the age of twenty-one years, began to learn the tanner's trade, which he followed two years. In 1850 he married Elizabeth, a daughter of James B. Reade, of Butler Co., Ky., and to them were born seven children: William W., Naomi, Mary F., James I., Iva, Jane and Edward. Mrs. Elizabeth (Reade) Clark died in 1873, after which in 1875 Mr. Clark married Mrs. Sarah F. Brisendine, of Butler County. She was a widow, and the mother of three children: Annie, James and Calvin. To her marriage with Mr. Clark were born four children: Robert L., Blanche, Doyle and Claybourne. After his marriage in 1850 Mr. Clark bought 125 acres of land in Butler County, and has followed farming very successfully; so much so that in addition to the support of a large family he has amassed a good share of this world's goods and owns a farm of 176 acres of land, which he has brought to a high state of cultivation, and improved with good dwelling, barns, fences, etc. The farm produces abundant crops of grain and tobacco, and is admirably adapted to grasses, which, with the water privileges, renders it valuable as a stock farm. Mr. Clark is a Democrat without political aspirations; the improvement of his land and the education of his children engage his attention. He, Mrs. Clark and three children are members of the Presbyterian Church, in which Mr. Clark is elder. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and is a Master Mason in Acacia Lodge, No. 212. He is strictly temperate, and lends his influence to the temperance cause.

FLEMING J. CLARK was born in Butler County, Ky., January 15, 1836, and is a son of Isaac and Eliza (James) Clark, the former of whom was a native of Virginia, and the latter a native of Ohio County, Ky; they were of English and Scotch descent respectively. When only a lad, Isaac Clark came with his parents to Butler County, where his early education was received and where he was married. The family settled on the Green River, about six miles below Cromwell. In early life Isaac learned the shoe-making trade, which he continued to follow, in connection with farming, until his death, which occurred in the fall of 1842. He and wife were members of the Baptist church. Fleming J. Clark received a fair common school education in youth. His father died when he was only six years old, but he remained at home with his mother and step-father until he attained his majority, after which he was employed as a laborer on a farm for nearly a year. He then bought a partially improved farm in Ohio County, where he remained about eighteen months, when he sold out, and rented for one year in Ohio County. After that he bought wild land on Sixe's Creek, in Butler County, and subsequently improved a farm, upon which he resided until 1871; he then bought a partially improved farm of 220 acres (a part of which he has since sold), upon which he now resides; the farm is in a fair state of cultivation. August, 1862, he enlisted in Company I, Twelfth Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry (Federal service), and served with that regiment in all its marches and engagements until May, 1863, when he was sent to the hospital at Louisville, where he remained until the following October, when he was transferred to the Invalid Corps, with which he served until the close of the war, being mustered out at Chicago, July 1, 1865. He was married November 11, 1857, to Elizabeth Warren, a native of Garrard County, Ky.; born March 28, 1837. Three sons and five daughters have blessed their union, all of whom are living, as follows: Fines W., Rosana, Nancy E., John R., Bruneta, Amanda, Ada and Thomas P. Mr. Clark and wife are members of the Christian Church, in which he has been a ruling elder for several years. In politics he was formerly a Republican, but is at present acting with the National Greenback party.

HENRY COHRON, Butler County, was born August 31, 1833, in the southern part of this county, where he grew to manhood and where he still resides. He is a son of John Cohron and Catherine Cohron, nee Johnson; the former was a native of Campbell County, Va., and came with his parents to Logan County, Ky., September 15, 1797, where he lived many years, and died in 1877, at the age of eighty-five years; the latter was a native of Edmonson County, and died in 1876, aged eighty-five years. They had ten children, viz.: James, Polly (Ewing), Susan (Graham), Bettie (Howard), John, Adaline (Stringfield), Maria (Hill), William, Benjamin and Henry. Mr. Cohron was brought up on a farm, and had no educational advantages beyond the neighborhood schools. He was married January 27, 1859, to Mary A., daughter of Thomas and Thory (Richardson) Martin of this county, but born in Wilson County, Tenn., October 31, 1838. This union has been without issue but they have adopted a son, Edward C. In 1865 Mr. Cohron enlisted in Company M, Seventeenth Kentucky (Federal) Cavalry, in which he served until the close of the war. He is a farmer, and in politics a zealous Republican. The family are members of the Methodist Church.

JOHN N. CONWAY, Butler County, was born January 6, 1841, on Big Reedy Creek, in this county, where he grew to manhood and has always resided. In 1861, he enlisted in Company G, Eleventh Kentucky (Federal) Infantry, and was slightly wounded at the battle of Murfreesboro. He served three years and was honorably discharged. His father, William Conway, a native of Barren County, Kentucky, was born October 18, 1807, and is still living. He is the son of Thomas Conway, a native of Virginia, a Baptist minister, who was accidentally killed in the construction of the canal at Louisville, Ky., in 1829; his father was Thomas Conway, of Virginia, a celebrated Indian fighter. William (subject's father) married Mary, daughter of Rev. Isaac Embry, of this county, who was born in May, 1819. From this union sprang Melvina (Miller), John N., James M. (deceased), Nancy (Miller), Martha (Willis), William T. and Jane (Wilson). In youth John N. received a limited education but by studious habits has acquiried a fair business education. September 17, 1861, he was married to Miss Annie, daughter of J. A. and Nancy Jones of Butler County (born July 23, 1847). To them have been born John W., Thomas L. C., Joseph W., William F., Otis A. B., Drusilla B. (deceased), Theodore H., Lula J. and Catherine A. Mr. Conway served one term as magistrate, and member of court of claims of Butler County. He is a farmer and owns 568 acres of well improved and productive land. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and for the past twelve years has been an elder in the Christian Church.

JOHN M. COOK, Butler County, was born in Ohio County, Ky., April 22, 1832, and is the third in a family of seven children born to James and Jane (Raines) Cook, both of whom were natives of Tennessee. James Cook was educated and married in his native State, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits all his life. He and his wife separated in Tennessee, and about 1830 or 1831, Mrs. Cook removed to Ohio County, with her family, and remained there for several years when subject was born to her and William Arnold. He retained the name of Cook from his mother. She then came to Butler County, and settled on Indian Camp Creek. For the last five or six years of her life she made her home among her children. Her death occurred in the fall of 1868. She was a member of no church but was nevertheless a devout Christian. John M. Cook received only a limited common school education in youth. As soon as he was able to work, the care and support of his mother and several younger brothers and sisters devolved mainly upon him. He left home and commenced life's battle for himself at the age of seventeen, being first employed as a laborer on a farm, which he continued until 1854. He then farmed on rented lands for some eight years. In 1862, he bought a partially improved farm of 100 acres on the Indian Camp Creek, Butler County, Ky., where he improved a farm and remained about six years. In 1868, he traded this place for another partially improved farm of 116 acres in the same neighborhood, where he has since improved the farm upon which he now resides, and to which he has added sixty acres. He was first married, in 1854, to Eliza J. Haney, a native of Butler County, Ky. To this union were born two daughters, both of whom are living, viz.: Sarah J. Evans and Martha A. Daughety. Mrs. Eliza J. Cook departed this life in April, 1858, and Mr. Cook next married, April 24, 1859, Perlina J. Daughety, also a native of Butler County, Ky., born July 24, 1842, a daughter of William and Abigail (White) Daughety, both of whom were natives of Kentucky. Seven children were born to this union, six of whom, all sons, are living: John W. (deceased), Monroe, McClellan, William A., Stephen T., Robert L., and Joseph M. Mr. Cook and wife have been for many years members of the United Baptist Church. In politics he is a Democrat. He was formerly a member of the Grange.

HON. JAMES M. COOK. Among the prominent and successful men of Butler County, none exerts a wider influence or has a more enviable reputation than this gentleman. His birth took place on the old homestead, on the Woodbury and Morgantown road, May 28, 1822. His early education was secured in an old log schoolhouse with dirt floor and benches of split saplings, with other facilities to correspond. His parents were George W. and Phœbe (Dulton) Cook. His father, a soldier in the war of 1812, was born in Pittsylvania County, Va., and settled in Butler County about 1820. Three years later he went to Russellville and after one year went to Morgantown, and died September 12, 1839. Being a poor man, his family depended largely on their own exertions. The mother died February 2, 1865. They had three children: Mrs. Mary D. Wilson, and Mrs. Martha Sublett, both of whom, as well as their descendants, are deceased, and our subject. The last married, February 15, 1843, Mary D., only daughter of Mark Kuykendall, born May 24, 1825, in Butler County. Her father fought at the battle of New Orleans, and her grandfather, Matthew K., was a Revolutionary hero, and one of the first justices in Butler (then Logan) County. Mr. and Mrs. Cook had ten children: Mrs. Martha Elizabeth Thomas; George T. (drowned), Mrs. Mary Almeda Hines, Mrs. Laura Jane Moore, John W., Mark K., Sarah M., Beatrice V., Monroe Morgan and Hezekiah Temple. All are members of the Protestant Methodist Church. In 1844 Mr. Cook cast his first vote for James K. Polk, and voted the Democratic ticket until 1876, when he voted for Peter Cooper, and has since been a Greenbacker; he has never missed an election since his first vote. In the fall of 1875, he was elected on the Democratic ticket to the Kentucky legislature, and filled the office with honor one term. He owns 1,000 acres of good land near the Green River, between Morgantown and Woodbury. It consists of river bottom, upland, timber and plow land. He has excellent farm buildings, a large herd of stock, and all the evidences of thrift and prosperity.

JOHN W. CORDER, Butler County, was born in Allen County, Ky., March 26, 1834, and is the eldest of four children born to Benjamin R. and Malinda (Durham) Corder, both of whom were natives of Virginia and of Scotch and German descent, respectively. When only an infant, Benjamin R. Corder's parents removed from Virginia to Allen County, Ky., then almost an unbroken wilderness. There Benjamin R. received his early education; married and engaged in agricultural pursuits all his life; in early life he learned the blacksmith's trade, which he followed in connection with farming for many years. His death occurred in March, 1867, in his fifty-sixth year. He and wife were life-long church members, he of the Missionary Baptist, and she of the Methodist Episcopal. His father, Thomas Corder, the grandfather of our subject, was a veteran of the war of 1812; was slain at the battle of New Orleans; his father, William Corder, the great-grandfather of our subject, attained to the remarkable age of one hundred and fifteen years. Mrs. Malinda Corder departed this life in 1841. Her father, John Durham, was a veteran of the Revolutionary war, serving through the entire struggle of seven years. John W. Corder received a good common school education in youth, and after attaining manhood, attended a high school for a time. He was employed on his father's farm and in his blacksmith shop until he was twenty-three years old; was then appointed constable to fill a vacancy, and afterward elected to the same office, serving about two years and a half; after that he taught school some five years. In 1864 he went to Bowling Green, where he was employed as a salesman in a dry-goods house for two years. In February, 1866, he removed to Reedyville, Butler County, where he engaged in general merchandising, continuing the same some fourteen years. During a part of that time he was also engaged in the tobacco trade, and was postmaster at that place for the whole fourteen years. In 1880, he removed to Brooklyn, Butler County, where he was engaged in merchandising for two years and then at Welch's Creek, same county, and is still so employed in connection with farming. He is also assistant postmaster at that place. In 1871, he was the Republican candidate for representative in the legislature from Butler and Edmonson Counties. In 1875 he was elected magistrate and re-elected to the same office in 1879, but soon after resigned. He was married in February 27, 1867, to Josephine Hamill, a native of Barren County, Ky.; born December 25, 1847, a daughter of James and Sarah A. (Tisdale) Hamill. Five children—three daughters and two sons—have blessed their union, all of whom are living. Their names are as follows: Mattie B., Mary I., Lester C., Willie and Ada F. Mr. Corder has been from early life a member of the Missionary Baptist Church; also a member of the Masonic fraternity, having served as W. M. of his lodge at Reedyville for a number of years; in politics he is a Republican. Mrs. Josephine Corder departed this life May 19, 1883; she was a life-long and devoted member of the Christian Church.

ZACHARY TAYLOR CORUM, Butler County, is a native of Warren County, Ky., born April 8, 1849. He remained with his parents until the age of eighteen, working on the farm. Previous to his eighteenth year he attended school for a few short terms, and had laid the foundation of the education which he has since acquired by close reading and self-culture. In 1867 he set out to make his own way in life, worked on a farm one year, then superintended farming for other parties for four years; went to Tennessee in 1872, and drove team on road two years; then traveled through Louisiana and Florida for awhile; returned and farmed in Ohio and Muhlenburgh Counties; afterward engaged in the lumber and stave business six years, in which he was successful and acquired an independence. He started in life with no capital except his own energy and business tact, and attributes much of his success to the help and encouragement of his wife, Elizabeth Turner, whom he married December 24, 1878; she is a daughter of William Turner, of Muhlenburgh County. Their union is blessed with one daughter and one son—Ethel and Elieo. Mr. Corum is a Democrat. He and Mrs. Corum are members of the Protestant Methodist Church, in which Mr. Corum is a steward. His father, Champion Corum, was born in Barren County, August 13, 1826, and on March 20, 1845, married Mary J. McKy, a daughter of John McKy, of Barren County; she survives, aged seventy-one years. He was a farmer, and died in 1882, leaving one son—Zachary T. Champion Corum, Sr., the grandfather of our subject, was a native of Virginia. He came to Kentucky in the latter part of the eighteenth century, and located in Barren County, where he resided until his death. John McKy was also a Virginian, and of Irish descent; came to Kentucky when a boy, but died in Coles County, Mo., aged seventy years.

FRANCIS M. DAUGHETY was born in Butler County, Ky., June 24, 1850, and is a son of William and Abigail (White) Daughety, natives of Butler County, Ky., and of Irish and Scotch-Irish descent. Mrs. Abigail Daughety died June 27, 1876. She was from early life a member of the Old School Baptist Church. Her father, Henry White, was a veteran of the Revolution. Henry White's parents were among the earliest pioneers of Kentucky. When Henry was about sixteen years old, the family were one day attacked by the Indians, their dwelling burned and the whole family, Henry alone excepted, massacred. He was in the field at work some distance from the house, and hence was enabled to make good his escape. One of the maternal grand-uncles of our subject, Joseph Lockston, familiarly known as "Master Jo" was also a veteran of the Revolution. During that struggle his command was for a time stationed on the Kentucky frontier, where he was one day attacked by two stalwart Indians, both of whom he succeeded in killing. Francis M. Daughety received a common school education in his youth, but has since acquired a good practical business education. On June 20, 1863, in his thirteenth year, he enlisted in Company G, Thirty-fifth Kentucky Mtd. Inf. (Federal service), with which he served for one year, or until the expiration of his term of service, being mustered out at Louisville, Ky., December, 1864. He participated in the battle of Salina Salt Works, Va., and many lesser engagements. After his return from the army he farmed with his brother-in-law for one year, and with his brother for another year. He then bought a partially improved farm of 352 acres on Indian Camp Creek, a part of which he has since sold. Here he improved a farm, and remained until 1871, when he bought another small farm of sixty-five acres in the same neighborhood, upon which he remained only one year. In 1872 he bought the farm of 130 acres near Dexter's Mill, upon which he now resides. He now owns well-improved farms amounting to 380 acres. In June, 1884, he opened a general store at Dexter's Mill, where he is doing a thriving business. For several years he has also been quite extensively engaged in the saw-mill, lumber, log and stave business. He is now serving as constable in District No. 5. He was married in November, 1867, to Mary A. Abney, also a native of Butler County, Ky., where she was born December 7, 1852. One son and three daughters have blessed their union, all of whom are living, viz.: Hermina, Montreville, Abigail and Naoma. Mrs. Daughety is a member of the Baptist Church. Mr. Daughety belongs to no church. He was formerly a member of the Grange. In politics he is a Democrat.

VIRGIL M. DEWEESE was born in Butler County, Ky., February 18, 1840, and is a son of William and Elizabeth (Pitman) Deweese, the former of whom was a native of Virginia, and the latter a native of N. C., and of German and English descent respectively. When but a small boy, William Deweese emigrated with his parents from Virginia to Cumberland County, Ky., where his early education was received. While yet a young man, he removed to Butler County, Ky., where he was married and soon afterward removed to Illinois, settling near Springfield, where he bought wild land and subsequently improved a farm, upon which he remained for several years. From that place he went into the Black Hawk war, and served through the entire trouble. In one of the engagements of the war he had his horse shot under him, but immediately traded a cow to one of his comrades for another, with which he pursued the flying Indians. Soon after the war he returned to Butler County, Ky., where he bought 1,400 acres of wild land on Little Bool Creek, and subsequently improved the farm upon which he resided until his death, which occurred in 1869, in his sixtieth year. In early life he learned the carpenter trade, which he followed exclusively for several years, but after his marriage he devoted his attention mainly to farming. He was for many years a magistrate in Butler County. He and wife were members of the Baptist Church from early life. Virgil M. Deweese received a fair common school education in his youth, and was employed on his father's farm until nineteen years of age, after which he farmed on rented lands for two years. He then bought a partially improved farm on Big Reedy Creek, Butler Co. Ky., upon which he remained about three years. In September, 1861, he enlisted in Company G, Eleventh Kentucky Volunteer Infantry (Federal service) and served with that regiment in all its marches and engagements until the expiration of his term of service, being mustered out with his regiment at Bowling Green, Ky., December, 1864. He participated in the battles of Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Stone River, the siege of Knoxville, the siege of Atlanta, and many other lesser engagements. After his return from the army he engaged in the grocery trade at Aberdeen, continuing the same for one year, after which he engaged in the hotel and grocery business at Morgantown for some six years. In 1868, he was elected high sheriff of Butler County, Ky., and served one term of two years. In 1870, he removed to Montgomery County, Kas., in the Osage country, where he bought wild land and subsequently improved a farm upon which he remained for seven years. He then sold out and returned to Butler County, Ky., where he bought 130 acres of wild land at the mouth of Indian Camp Creek, on the Green River, and has since improved the farm upon which he now resides. To this he has added other lands, now owning a fairly improved farm of 240 acres. He was first married in 1860 to Mary P. Gayer, a native of Warren County, Ky. Mrs. Deweese departed this life in 1862. She was a devoted and consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Deweese was again married in November, 1864, to Margaret Neel, a native of Butler County, Ky., where she was born in 1836. They have no children of their own but have reared two. Mrs. Deweese is a member of the Baptist Church. Mr. Deweese belongs to no church, but is a member of the Masonic fraternity. He also holds a membership in the Masonic Mutual Benefit Society of Kansas. In politics he is a Democrat.

ISAAC B. DEXTER was born in Ohio County, Ky., July 25, 1843, and is a son of Benjamin and Elizabeth (Warden) Dexter, both of whom were natives of Ohio County, Ky., and of English-German and Irish-Italian descent respectively. Benjamin Dexter was educated and married in his native county, where he has been engaged in agricultural pursuits all his life. In early life he learned the blacksmith trade, which he followed in connection with farming for many years. In about 1880 he retired from active life, but still makes his home on the old farm with his son Joseph W. He and wife have been from early life church members, he of the General and she of the United Baptist Church. Mr. Dexter was born December 19, 1806, and Mrs. Dexter the same year. One of Mr. Dexter's uncles, James Dexter, attained the unusual age of one hundred and eighteen years, and made the first violin that was ever used in Washington City. Isaac B. Dexter received a good common school education, and also attended college at Janesboro, Ill., for a time. He was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority, soon after which he engaged in the saw-mill and lumber business, continuing the same with abundant success until 1880. He then came to Butler County, Ky., and erected a grist-mill on Indian Camp Creek, which he still owns. The mill is doing an excellent business. In the spring of 1884 he opened a general store at the same place, where he is doing a thriving business. He carries a large and well selected stock in his line. He also owns a well-improved farm in same neighborhood of 240 acres, and is quite extensively engaged in agricultural pursuits. Mr. Dexter is yet unmarried. In politics he was formerly a Republican, but is now identified with the National Greenback party.

JOHN B. DIAL, Butler County, Ky., was born July 7, 1850, in Warren County, Ky., where he grew to manhood, and, in 1875, he removed to the southeast part of Butler County. His father, William Dial, a native of Kentucky, was born September 15, 1807, and is now living. He is the son of Thomas Dial (died in Warren County). William married Elizabeth, daughter of Bloomer and Hannah (Sawyers) McMillan, of Logan County. Their children are John B., Bloomer M., Andrew J. and Robert E. L. William Dial's first wife was Miss Bennett, and and to them were born Warren M., Orlena (Shannon), Sarah J. (Mobley), James S., Amanda (Clay), William F., Thomas M. and Mary E. (Young). John B. Dial received a common school education. He has been twice married, first, November 19, 1871, to Sarah N., daughter of William and Sarah (Young) Ewing, of Logan County (born November 19, 1852, and died July 27, 1875). To them were born Ida L. and Mattie E. His second marriage took place February 7, 1878, to Mrs. Sarah A., widow of Thomas W. Porter, and daughter of James B. and Elizabeth H. (Waddle) Taylor, of Warren County, Ky. Mr. Dial is a farmer, and has over 400 acres of well improved and productive land. He is a member of the A. F. & A. M., and in politics is a Democrat.

JOHN A. DOCKERY was born in Butler County, Ky., June 27, 1837, and is a son of John E. and Pauline (Foreman) Dockery, both of whom were natives of Garrard County, Ky., and of French and Irish descent, respectively. John E. Dockery was educated and married in his native county. In early life he learned the carpenter's trade, which he continued to follow in connection with farming all his life. About 1830 or 1831 he removed to Daviess County, Ky., where he remained until 1836, when he came to Butler County, Ky., and settled on Welch's Creek. There he resided until his death, which occurred February 20, 1883, in his eighty-third year. He was for several years a captain in the State militia. He and wife were for many years devoted church members, he of the Baptist and she of the Methodist Episcopal Church North. His father, George Dockery, the grandfather of our subject, was a veteran of the Revolution, having served under Gen. Stirling during that struggle. John A. Dockery received a common school education in youth, and was employed on his father's farm until he was nineteen years of age, after which he farmed a part of the home place on his own account for some two years. He then engaged in the grocery trade at Morgantown, where he remained about two years, after which he again engaged in farming. In the spring of 1865 he removed to Woodbury, Butler Co., Ky., where he was engaged in the saloon, distilling and grocery business in connection with farming for about three years. In the spring of 1868 he removed to Posey County, Ind., where he was engaged in farming and the shingle business for some four years. In 1872 he removed to Union County, Ky., where he farmed about one year, and then removed to Webster County, Ky., remaining only a few months, when he went to Henderson County, Ky., where he remained about nine months. In December, 1874, he returned to Butler County, Ky., where he has since resided and been engaged in agricultural pursuits. In 1862 he was elected deputy sheriff of Butler County, and was re-elected in 1864, but resigned the following year. He was married September 11, 1860, to Mary E. Whitten, a native of Warren County, Ky.

Eight children have been born to them, seven of whom are still living, viz.: Dora A., Edmona F., Underwood A., Basil R., Mary P., Theodore E. and Lule G. Mr. Dockery and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in politics Mr. Dockery is a Democrat.

FRANCIS A. DOOLIN, farmer, Butler County, was born in that county, October 3, 1840. His early advantages were such as the common schools of the country afforded. He was reared on the farm, and at farming he has met with marked success since starting for himself at the age of twenty-five, at which time he married Miss Polly, the eldest daughter of John and Sally Rone. The result of this union is five children: James E., Adam E., Sally M., John W., Francis E. Mr. Doolin's parents were George and Mary E. (Pendley) Doolin, the former of whom was born in March, 1818, and was a well-to-do farmer, a native of Butler County, and an earnest Christian gentleman, a member of the Baptist Church, and occupied during his life several important county offices, among which was that of county assessor. He was a man of strict integrity and great industry. He died in 1877; his wife died in 1841. Subject's paternal grandfather, John Doolin, came from Georgia, and was one of the first ettlers of Butler County. His maternal grandfather, Austin Pendley, came from North Carolina and settled in Butler County in an early day. Our subject is the owner of 500 acres of excellent farm land, on which he has a neat and comfortable house. In politics he is a Greenbacker.

THOMAS Mc. DORAN, M. D., was born in Elizabethtown, Hardin Co., Ky., June 4, 1849, and is the eldest of seven children born to Reuben Bennett and Lucinda (McDonald) Doran, the former of whom was a native of Hart and the latter of LaRue County, Ky., both of Irish descent. Reuben B. Doran received his early education in his native county. While yet a young man he removed to LaRue County, Ky., where he was married, and engaged in agricultural pursuits for many years. Later he removed to Greenbush, Ill., where he was engaged in merchandising for a time, and afterward removed to Galesburg, Ill., where he followed the livery and teaming business for one year. He then engaged in farming and coal mining in the same State for another year, when he returned to Hart County, Ky. At the breaking out of the late civil war, he enlisted in the Confederate service, and served under Gen. John A. Morgan until his death, which occurred during that General's retreat from Bowling Green to Nashville in the early part of 1862, in his thirty-third year. He served as high sheriff of LaRue County, Ky., under the old constitution, for one term. He and wife were members of the Christian Church. Thomas Mc. Doran received a good education in early life at the common schools and at the State University of Kentucky, at Lexington. He was employed on the farm until he was sixteen years old, after which he spent some three years visiting in the West. He then returned to Hardin County, Ky., where he was engaged in teaching vocal music, in connection with farming, for several years. He commenced the study of medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. S. N. Willis, of Pineyville, Hardin Co., Ky., and graduated from the Louisville Medical College, with the class of 1881–82. In the spring of the same year he located at Brooklyn, Butler Co., Ky., where he has since practiced his profession with excellent success, and is securing a large and lucrative practice. The Doctor commenced life without a dollar, but by his untiring industry and energy has secured for himself a place in the front rank of his profession. He was married March 24, 1873, to Noah Ann English, also a native of Hardin County, Ky., born in 1851, a daughter of Noah and Anna (Johnson) English. Six children blessed their union, five of whom are living: Lottie C., Beulah, Lucinda, Mary E. and Frank. The Doctor and wife are members of the Christian Church. In politics he is a Democrat.

WILLIAM L. DURKEE, Butler County, was born in Dalton, Mass., March 13, 1832. His father, Amasa Durkee, was of Scotch parentage, and for many years a boot and shoe dealer in Dalton, Mass.; he died in 1873, aged seventy-five years. The mother, Mary (Lester) Durkee, was of English extraction; she died in 1840, leaving eight children: Sarah, Mary, John W., Henry S., James M., William L., Orpha E. and Emily A. After the death of his mother William L. Durkee remained with his father until the age of fourteen years, then lived with William Sprague four years, after which he was employed in a handle factory in Monson, Mass., for two years; later he leased some land and farmed for five years, and within those five years married Nancy M. Beebe, of Monson, Mass. They have been blessed with two children: Mary A. (deceased), and George A. After marriage Mr. Durkee moved to Sandusky, Ohio, where he was made foreman in the Woolworth Handle Manufactory, a position which he held for a year, then took up painting, which he followed until 1873, since which he has been foreman in the Woolworth Manufacturing Company's shops at Mound City, Ill., St. Louis, Mo., and Woodbury and Rochester, Ky., and has been employed by the same company in the same business for the last twelve years. Mr. Durkee is, politically, a Democrat, but attends to business rather than politics; he is a member of the order of G. T. and of A. M. He and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in which he holds the office of steward.

STEPHEN DAVENPORT EASLEY, Butler County, was born January 21, 1811, in Halifax County, Va., where he grew to manhood; in 1833, he removed to Smith County, Tenn., and in 1850, located in the southern part of Butler County, Ky., where he has since resided. His father, John Easley, a native of Halifax County, a soldier in the war of 1812, died in Butler County in 1853, at the age of seventy-one years. He was the son of Robert Easley, of Virginia, who died in 1814. John Easley married Susan W., daughter of Stephen and Mary (Adams) Jones, of Person County, N. C. (she died in 1833, aged about fifty years). From this union sprang Mary J. (Ragland), Stephen D., Nancy W. (Thomas), Sarah A. (Farmer) and Susan W. (Noland). In youth Stephen D. received but a common school education, but by reading and study has acquired a good fund of useful information. September 3, 1835, he married Mahala G., daughter of Champion T. and Elizabeth (Jones) Thomas, of Smith County, Tenn. (born February 25, 1820), and to them have been born Susan E. (Turner), Eliza G. (deceased), Thomas H., Mary C. (Ragland), William B., Sarah A. F. (deceased), Martha H. (deceased), Othelia V., John J. (deceased), and Stephen F. Mr. Easley is a farmer, owning 165 acres of well improved land, on which is grown corn, wheat, oats and tobacco. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity. For more than fifty years he has been an active Methodist. In politics he was a Whig during the existence of that party, but of late has acted with the Democrats.

HENRY ELDER was born in Grayson County, Ky., February 21, 1845, and is a son of William and Frances (Sirls) Elder, the former of whom was a native of Grayson County, and the latter of Logan County, Ky. They were of English and Irish descent, respectively. William Elder was educated and married in his native county, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits all his life. He was also engaged for several years in the distilling business in connection with farming. His death occurred in April, 1869, in his fifty-fifth year. His father, Thomas Elder, was one of the earliest pioneers of Grayson County, Ky., having moved to that county from Virginia in the latter part of the last century. Henry Elder received only a limited education in youth, but has, since he became a man, by his own exertions, acquired an excellent practical business education. He was employed on his father's farm until he was seventeen years old. He then came to Butler County, Ky., where he was employed as a laborer on a farm for some two years, after which he bought a half interest in a saw and grist-mill, at Brooklyn, on Welch's Creek, continuing the mill business, in connection with farming, for two years. After which he kept a hotel and farmed at the same place for three years. In the fall of 1870, he rented a farm two miles and a half below Aberdeen, on the Green River, where he remained for four years. In the fall of 1874, he bought 160 acres of wild land, one mile and a half below Aberdeen, moved into a log-cabin and improved the farm on which he now resides, which is one of the best improved farms in the county. In 1876, he and his brother, Perry, bought jointly 99 acres of timbered lands adjoining his home place, when he engaged in the lumber business, running logs down the Green River to the Evansville market. In 1878, he took in a partner in the lumber business, viz.: J. H. Moore; this partnership continued one year. In the fall of 1879, he went into partnership in the lumber and stave business with C. W. Neel, continuing the business with abundant success until the spring of 1883; since which time, and for some time before, he has been the agent of Messrs. H. & B. Ahlering, of Evansville, Ind., buying logs in the Green River country at a salary of $1,000 per annum. Mr. Elder commenced life a poor boy, but by honesty, integrity, industry and economy, he has amassed a handsome fortune, being now one of the wealthy men of the county. He was married, May 9, 1865, to Emily J. Galloway, also a native of Grayson County, Ky., born July 20, 1840; she is a daughter of Smith and Phœbe (Deweese) Galloway. Mr. Elder and wife are firm believers in the Christian religion, but do not belong to any church. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, having held various official positions in his lodge. In politics he is a stanch Republican.

MASON EMBRY, Sr., Butler County, was born June 26, 1826, in Madison County, Ky., and, in 1833, removed with his parents to the northeast portion of Butler County, locating on the place where he now resides. His father, Cader Embry, a native of North Carolina, was born in 1778; removed with his parents to Madison County, Ky., and was long a minister of the gospel, and organized the first Christian Church in Butler County; he died on this place, January 24, 1848. He was the son of William Embry, of North Carolina, who died about 1840, aged about eighty years. His father was William Embry. Cader Embry married Frances, daughter of William and Sally Sebastian, of Madison County (born in 1785, died July 3, 1862). From their union sprang Golson, Sallie (Forman), Fannie (Maxey), Wiley, Wilford, Nancy (Phelps), Allie (Dockery), Patsey (Embry), Frankie (Dockery), Amanda (Embry), Cader, John, Esquire and Mason, Sr. (subject). In youth our subject procured but a limited education at the old field schools of the country, but has since by application obtained a business education. He has been twice married: first, September 12, 1843, to Elizabeth, daughter of William and Susan (Coy) Embry, of Butler County (born July 31, 1827, died April 18, 1864), and to whom were born Jesse H., Cader S., Paradine (Dockery), Adeline (Embry), Cynthie (deceased), Harlan, Orran and Wheeler (deceased. September 18, 1864, Mr. Embry married Mrs. Emily Small, daughter of Phillip and Eunice (Armitage) Zagler (born in Pennsylvania, September 9, 1836). This union has been blessed by the birth of Alice (Taylor), Adney, Cletus, Rufus, Eugene, Gauda and Daisy. Mr. Mason has always been a successful farmer, owning 455 acres of well improved and productive land. He is running a wool-carding machine; is also dealing largely in live stock. He is an active member of the Christian Church, of which he was long clerk.

MALACHI EMBRY was born in Butler County, May 26, 1838, and is the fifth child in a family of eight children born to Wiley and Eliza (Bolton) Embry, the former of whom was a native of Garrard County, Ky., and the latter of Buckingham, County, Va. They were of English and Scotch-Irish descent respectively. Wiley Embry was educated and married in his native county, where he engaged in agricultural pursuits for many years; in 1831, removed with his wife and family to Butler County, Ky., and bought wild land on the waters of Welch's Creek, where he subsequently improved the farm upon which he resided until his death, April 11, 1879, in his seventy-second year; he was one of the noted hunters of the Kentucky frontier, having frequently killed as many as thirty-eight deer in a week, besides wolves and other game; was a life-long and devoted church member, first of the Baptist and afterward of the Christian Church, and was for over forty years a regularly ordained preacher. Mrs. Eliza Embry's death occurred October 16, 1852, in her forty-third year. She was also a devoted member of the Christian Church. Malachi Embry received a very fair education at the early subscription schools, and was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority; then bought 106 acres of wild land near the old homestead, where he has since improved the farm upon which he still resides, and to which he afterward added about 1,000 acres, a part of which he deeded to his children, but still owns a well improved farm of some 600 acres. He is decidedly the largest tobacco grower in Butler County, and has also been extensively engaged in the stave, log and lumber business in connection with farming. In 1865, he was elected deputy sheriff for that part of Butler County lying north of the Green River, to fill the unexpired term of J. A. Dockery, and was re-elected to the same office in 1866. In August, 1862, he enlisted in Company G, Twelfth Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry (Federal service), and served with that regiment in all its marches and engagements until April, 1863, when he was discharged on account of disability, resulting from a severe wound in the knee. He was married August 8, 1859, to Frances Phelps, also a native of Butler County, Ky.; born March 16, 1841, a daughter of James and Nancy (Embry) Phelps, and a twin sister of Mrs. Nancy Duke. Eleven children were the fruit of this union, nine of whom—four sons and five daughters—are yet living. The names of the children are as follows: William W., Mary E. (deceased), Olivia E. Embry, Sarah Byers, Ulysses S. Grant, Nancy E., James O., Eudora A., Estil O., Cleopatra and Effie L. (deceased). Mr. Embry belongs to no church, but is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and was formerly a member of the Grange. He is also a member of Perry Campbell Post, G. A. R., of Caneyville, Grayson County, Ky. Mrs. Embry and the three eldest children are members of the Christian Church. In politics Mr. Embry is a Republican.

JESSE H. EMBRY, Butler County, was born January 31, 1845, on Welch's Creek, in this county, where he now resides (for ancestry see Mason Embry's sketch). Jesse H. enlisted in Company K, Fifty-second Kentucky (Federal) Mounted Infantry in 1863, and remained in the service of his country until the spring of 1865. July 19, 1866, he was married to Martha, daughter of Bennett and Martha (Green) Bratcher of Grayson County (born December 29, 1847). To them have been born Tempy Florence, Matella Ellen, Martilla, Carless, Atlas, Rosetta, Jacob and Esau (twins), both deceased, and Lula. Mr. Embry is a farmer, and owns 384 acres of fertile land, well improved and in a good state of cultivation; he also owns a saw and grist-mill. He has served as assessor in the north end of Butler County for eight years. He is a member of the Christian church, and in politics a Republican.

WILLIAM J. FERGUSON, farmer, was born in Butler County, July 7, 1844. His parents were John and Nancy (Hinly) Ferguson; the former a native of Virginia, born in 1796, and removed to Kentucky in 1820; the latter was also a native of Virginia and came to Kentucky in 1828. John Ferguson was married twice; first to Jennie Gray, by whom he had eight children, only three of whom are now living. His second wife was Nancy Hinly, who was the mother of ten children, of whom William is the eldest, and who was married March 9, 1869, to Miss S. J. Atkins, eldest daughter of Luke Atkins. She was born in Eastern Kentucky in 1840. This union has been blessed with three children: Bivian Reed, Maggie, Sada A. Mr. Ferguson is the owner of 100 acres of land near the Barren River, farm buildings, stock, etc. He and his family are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. His father died December 8, 1882, and his mother still lives in Butler County.

W. H. FLENER, Butler County. In the early part of 1791–92, four Flener brothers emigrated from Virginia; two of them, Adam and another brother, settled in Kentucky, and the other two in Indiana, then the Northwest Territory. From these four brothers all of the name in Indiana and Kentucky have descended. William H. Flener was born in Butler County, Kentucky, December 28, 1836, and is the eldest of six children, born to Wesley and Caroline B. (Romans) Flener, both of whom were natives of Butler County and of German and English descent respectively. Wesley Flener was educated and married in his native county, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death, which occurred December 25, 1880, in his sixty-fifth year. He and his wife were from early life members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he officiated for many years as a class leader. His father, Adam Flener, Jr., the grandfather of our subject, was a veteran in the war of 1812, having served under Gen. Jackson at New Orleans. William H. Flener received a limited common school education in youth, but has since acquired through his own efforts, an excellent practical business education. He was employed on the home farm until he was eighteen years old, after which he bought a partially improved farm on Indian Camp Creek in Butler County, Ky., upon which he remained some two or three years, when he bought another farm in the same neighborhood, upon which he remained another two years. He then bought an interest in his grandfather Romans' farm, upon which he resided about two years. Since then he has owned and lived upon several different places in the same neighborhood. In 1865 he commenced to learn the miller's trade, and has since that time been engaged in both the saw and grist-mill business for several years, most of the time in connection with farming in Butler and Ohio Counties, Ky. In 1875 he bought the farm of 200 acres near Flener, upon which he now resides, a part of which he has since sold. In 1879 he was appointed deputy county clerk for that part of Butler County lying northeast of the Green River, which office he yet holds. He was married March 9, 1855, to Elizabeth A. Kesinger, a native of Ohio County, where she was born December 13, 1834. Twelve children blessed their union, of whom—four sons and three daughters—are living: Comodore, Caroline B. Bratcher, John W., Survire, Ida M., Pleasant H. and Robert E. Mrs. Flener is and has been for many years a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Flener belongs to no church or secret order, but holds to the doctrines of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In politics he is a Republican.

NAPOLEON FLENER was born in Butler County, Ky., April 19, 1837, and is a son of John and Elizabeth (Smith) Flener, both of whom were natives of Kentucky, and of German descent. John Flener was educated and married in Butler County, Ky., where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits all his life. He was for a time school commissioner of Butler County, and also served as constable. His death occurred September 30, 1874, in his sixty-fifth year. He and wife were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church North; his father, Moses Flener, was born in Virginia, but removed with his parents to southwestern Kentucky, when only a lad about ten years old. Here he received a limited education, was married, and engaged in agricultural pursuits all his life. His father, the great-grandfather of our subject, Adam Flener, was killed by the Indians at Dripping Springs in 1794 or 1795. Napoleon Flener, the subject of this sketch, received such an education as the schools of the Kentucky frontier afforded in his youth. He has always resided on the old homestead, where he was born, a part of which he now owns. In September, 1861, he enlisted in Company C, Eleventh Kentucky Volunteer Infantry (Federal service), and served with his regiment in all its marches and engagements until July 30, 1864, when he was detailed for service with the supply train of the Twenty-third Army Corps, remaining until November 29, 1864, when he was relieved, and was mustered out at Bowling Green, Ky., December 16, 1864, by reason of expiration of his term of service. He was elected justice of the peace for the Fifth District Butler County, Ky., in May, 1883, which office he yet holds. He was married January 11, 1858, to Nancy A. Shultz, a native of Ohio County, Ky. Eight children blessed their union, seven of whom are yet living, viz.: Mary E., Martha, Montreville, Huston P., Warren E., Oscar LaRue and Fannie A. Mr. Flener belongs to no church or secret order. Mrs. Flener is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In politics Mr. Flener is a stanch Republican.

VEACHEL FLENER was born in Butler County, Ky., December 2, 1847, and is a son of George W. and Siney G. (Romans) Flener, both of whom were natives of Butler County, Ky., and of German and English descent. respectively. George W. Flener was educated and married in his native county; he first bought wild land on Welch's Creek, Butler Co., Ky., where he subsequently improved the farm, upon which he resided all his life. He was for a time engaged in both merchandising and grist and saw-milling in connection with farming. He inherited his father's (Moses Flener) farm, and continued to add to his real estate from time to time until he was the owner of farms amounting to some 700 acres. At the breaking out of the late civil war he sympathized with the Southern cause, went South, and enlisted in the Confederate service, and participated in the battles of Fort Sumter and the first Bull Run. In the fall of 1861 he returned to Kentucky; his death occurred shortly after. His widow is still living, and has been from early life a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Veachel Flener received a common school education in youth, and has since, by his own exertions, acquired a very fair practical business education. After his father's death the care and support of a widowed mother and several younger children devolved upon him. In June, 1862, he enlisted in Company C, Eleventh Kentucky Volunteer Infantry (Federal service), remaining two months, but was never mustered. In August of the same year he enlisted in Company I, Fifty-second Kentucky Mounted Infantry (Federal service), and served with that regiment in all its marches and engagements until the close of the war, being mustered out at Bowling Green, Ky., March, 1865. After his return from the army he was engaged in the grocery trade on Welch's and Indian Camp Creeks for some two years, after which he farmed for about three years. In 1870 he removed to Flenersville, of which place he was the founder and proprietor; here he opened a general country store and has continued the business ever since. For several years he has been extensively engaged in the saw-mill, log and lumber business, live-stock trade and agricultural pursuits, now owning a well-improved farm of 207 acres. He was postmaster at Flenersville for a time, and also held the office of constable for some three years. He was the candidate of his party for assessor on the north side of the river in 1878, and was beaten by only seven votes. He was married December 27, 1866, to Anthaline Flener, also a native of Butler County, Ky., where she was born December 2, 1848. Three children have blessed their union, viz.: George W. (deceased), Finetie and Cornelius. Mrs. Flener is a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Flener belongs to no church or secret order. In politics he was first a Republican; for many years past has been identified with the Democratic party.

BLUIT FLENER was born in Butler County, Ky., January 3, 1848, and is one of twins born to Andrew J. and Easter J. (Romans) Flener, both of whom were natives of Butler County, and of German and Irish descent respectively. Andrew J. Flener was educated and married in his native county of Butler, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits all his life. He was associated with the Home Guards on various occasions during the late civil war, and was a stanch Union man. His death occurred March 14, 1883, in his sixty-ninth year. He was a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he officiated as exhorter. Bluit Flener is a twin brother of Worth Flener; received a fair common school education in youth, and was employed on his father's farm until he was twenty-four years old. His father then gave him 123 acres of unimproved land near the old homestead in Flenersville Precinct, Butler County, where he has since improved the farm, upon which he now resides. The farm is now in a fair state of cultivation. Mr. Flener was married, December 11, 1873, to Paulina Gary, a native of Grayson County, Ky. Two sons and three daughters have blessed their union, viz.: John J., Idina, Baliss G., Jannie and Minnie. In politics Mr. Flener is a Republican.

WORTH FLENER was born in Butler County, Ky., January 3, 1848, and is one of ten children born to Andrew J. and Easter J. (Romans) Flener, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this volume. Worth Flener is a twin brother of Bluit Flener. He received a fair common school education, and was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority. He then farmed a part of the homestead on shares for three years, after which his father gave him 125 acres of wild land in the neighborhood of the old homestead in Flenersville Precinct, Butler County, where he has since improved a farm, upon which he yet resides. The farm is now in a good state of cultivation. He was married August 2, 1869, to Sallie J. Romans, also a native of Butler County, Ky. She was born August 17, 1849, and is a daughter of Miles W. and Nancy A. (Flener) Romans. To Mr. and Mrs. Flener have been born four sons and three daughters, viz.: Charlotte, Dora, Millard, Julian N., Paradine A., Reed and Lonnie. In politics Mr. Flener is a Republican.

"AUNT FRANKIE" FLOWERS, Butler County. In nearly every community one occasionally meets a person whose checkered life, filled with such varied experiences, renders the person an object of interest. Such an one is the remarkable lady who is the subject of this sketch. She was born near Berry's Lick, April 2, 1807, and received a fair English education. She is the eldest of a family of eight children, whose parents were John and Nancy (Read) Ferguson. While she was still quite young her father died, and her mother soon after became blind, leaving the care of the large family to fall upon this young girl. She very early became self-reliant, and was soon the sole support of her widowed mother and family. All kinds of work devolved upon her, and she became as expert in chopping, sawing, mowing and plowing as any man, besides perfecting herself in all the mysteries of woman's work. She made sugar in the woods and exchanged it for groceries; has always done her own milling; hauled saw-logs; woven twenty-four yards of heavy tow cloth day after day. In fact, has done both man's and woman's work on the farm, and has probably done more manual labor than any living person in Kentucky. On the 17th of May, 1831, she married Mark H. Flowers, a North Carolinian by birth, but who removed to Tennessee in his boyhood, and there received his early training. They had eight children, only one of whom, Mrs. Elizabeth Carr, is now living. "Aunt Frankie" comes of good old revolutionary stock, four grand-uncles on her father's side and three on her mother's having been engaged in that struggle. The Berrys, Carsons, Porters and Reads of Butler County are relatives. Capt. George Berry, who received from the government a grant of 4,000 acres of land for services rendered in the Revolution, was a grand-uncle. Her father was in the war of 1812, and distinguished himself at the battle of Tippecanoe. In the late war she and her husband were firm Unionists, and were active in feeding and sheltering soldiers, and their house has been, and is still, a stopping place for people from all sections, from New York to Texas and from Main to California. One incident of war times is well known and often repeated: As a company of soldiers was passing her house, she mounted her horse, took command of the company, ordered the boys to "single file," and with an overflowing basket of provisions, rode along the line and fed every man of them. In this, and all other circumstances where large hearted sympathy and practical benevolence were necessary, Aunt Frankie has never been found wanting. But while all esteem her good will, there are few who would care to incur her displeasure. At one time a man was preparing to start a distillery in her neighborhood. Being a stanch temperance advocate, she proceeded to raise a company of fifty women to destroy the still house. The information of this reaching the ears of the would-be distiller, he dared not go on with the enterprise, and the idea was abandoned. She is also known as a fine botanist and herb practitioner; the number of those who have been cured of various diseases by her simple remedies are numbered by scores and hundreds. She and her husband are members of the Presbyterian Church, she having joined the old Presbyterian Church in 1840.

HON. JAMES MONROE FORGY is the second of eight children born to Samuel C. and Elizabeth C. (Scott) Forgy, who were natives of Logan County, married in 1818, and who are both deceased. Both paternal and maternal grandfathers came from South Carolina. His grandfather, James Forgy, was married in Fort Sumter, and was a soldier in the patriot army in the war of Independence. He married Rebecca Haws, and in 1792, removed to the northern part of Logan County, then a wilderness. There he reared a large family, and there he is buried. Hon. J. M. Forgy was born in the southwest part of Butler County, June 23, 1820, where he received his early education, and remained until the age of sixteen, when, his father dying, he removed with his mother to Coles County, Ill., where he completed his education in the public schools and in Lane Seminary near Quincy. At the completion of his studies he commenced teaching, in 1847, in the public schools of Illinois; soon after this, however, he returned to Butler County, where he resumed the profession of teaching, which he followed with marked success, teaching in public and private schools, and was the first principal of the Butler County Seminary at Morgantown. In 1862, he was elected county school superintendent, and with an interval of two terms continued in the same office fourteen years. In 1874 he was elected to the office of county judge, which position he retained four years. Subsequently he has been examiner for the county, and has also been devoting much time to the business of pension agent. Soon after his return to Kentucky, the Judge was united in marriage with Mary Ann, the daughter of Clement Read, of Butler County, by whom he had eight children: James R., residing in Texas; Elizabeth; Alice, wife of Francis Read, also in Texas; Moses Alexander, in Texas; Clarence; William A., a druggist; Finis M., a teacher; Minnie E., now in Texas. Judge Forgy has been closely identified with the history of Butler County, both in educational and political affairs, since 1848, and has always been a Republican in politics. He and his family are connected with the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

DR. MOSES H. FUQUA, Butler County, was born October 27, 1831, in the south part of Logan County, where he grew to manhood. In 1868 he removed to Morgantown, where he remained three years, when he located on his present place near Martin's Spring, in the south part of Butler County. His father, Samuel Fuqua, a native of Buckingham County, Va., removed to Logan County, Ky., in 1826, where he died in 1861 at the age of sixty-five years. He was the son of Moses Fuqua, of Virginia, and of Welsh descent. Samuel Fuqua married Lavina P., daughter of Robert Baker, of Logan County, who died in 1860. Their offspring were Dr. Moses H., Elizabeth A. (Collier), Mary E. (Watson), Sarah E., Joseph B., Samuel S., George R., Vinnie (Harvey), Udora (Kadier), and Zachary T. Dr. Fuqua obtained a good English education, with a knowledge of Latin and Greek; he is a student and a great reader, and possesses a mind well stored with useful information. He was married December 28, 1870, to Mary M. Furguson, of Butler County, born July 1, 1849. They have the following children: George H., born October 6, 1871; Lavina, February 5, 1873; Samuel B., June 10, 1877; and Nora Z., October 12, 1882. In 1853, Dr. Fuqua commenced the study of medicine with Dr. Thomas Grubles, of Russellville, with whom he remained two years, and in the winter of 1854–55, he attended lectures at the Nashville (Tenn.) Medical College; in 1857 he entered into partnership with Dr. Beauchamp, of Logan County, and continued with him for two years; he then practiced in Auburn for two years, and in 1862 he was a refugee from Kentucky for a considerable time. In 1868 he commenced practice at Morgantown, and in 1871 located where he now lives, where he has practiced successfully ever since. Dr. Fuqua is also engaged in farming, having 200 acres of well improved land in good condition, and in a high state of cultivation. He is identified with the Democratic party.

SCOTT GALLOWAY was born in Grayson County, Ky., December 18, 1848, and is a son of Smith and Phœbe (Deweese) Galloway, both of whom were natives of Grayson County, and of English descent. Smith Galloway was educated and married in his native county, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death, which occurred in the latter part of 1849. He and wife were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Scott Galloway received a fair education at the common schools in his youth. He remained on the home farm with his mother until he was ten years old, after which he made his home with Ferdinand W. Pirtle, of Ohio County, Ky., until he was sixteen years old. He then came to Butler County, Ky., where he was employed as a laborer on a farm until 1869, after which he engaged in farming on his own account, some three miles below Aberdeen on the Green River, and has been so employed in the same neighborhood ever since, with the exception of one year, when he went to Kansas on a prospecting tour, accomplishing the entire journey with an ox team; he has also followed the carpenter trade to some extent in connection with farming. He was married September 26, 1872, to Almeda Shultz, a native of Ohio County, Ky.; she was born September 20, 1853, and is a daughter of Thias and Mary A. (Shepard) Shultz. Six children have blessed their union, five of whom, three sons and two daughters, are living: Mattie C., Oliver T., Charles H., Ora E., Fannie S. (deceased), and Roy. Mrs. Galloway is a consistent member of the Baptist Church; Mr. Galloway belongs to no church, but holds to the doctrine of the Baptist faith. In politics he is a Republican.

J. WESLEY GOODMAN, superintendent of the poor farm, was born in Rochester District, Butler County, December 9, 1839, and reared on a farm. At the age of twenty-one he commenced farming, with nothing but his brave heart and willing hands. January 2, 1861, he married Martha N., the eldest daughter of William H. Simmonds. Mr. and Mrs. Goodman are the parents of five children: Eliza Jane, wife of Alexander Hale; Lilly Belle, wife of Leroy Day; A. Lincoln; Mollie; Benjamin Butler. Mr. Goodman took charge of the poor-house farm in December, 1884. This farm is situated on the Morgantown and Russellville high road, near the former town. Mr. Goodman has never missed to vote at the elections, and always with the Republican party. He has several times held important offices in the county of Butler, among them constable two terms and deputy sheriff two terms. This position he still holds. Mr. Goodman is the eldest of six children living. Elijah entered the Union army, Twenty-third Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and died in 1865, in the Zollicoffer hospital, Nashville, Tenn. Mrs. Goodman's father was the first and only man in his voting district that voted for A. Lincoln in the first campaign.

MOSES P. GOTT was born July 29, 1824, in Warren County, Ky., where he grew to manhood and lived until 1857, when he removed to Reedyville, Butler County, where he has since resided. In 1862, he entered Company A, Twelfth Kentucky (Federal) Cavalry, as first lieutenant, in which service he remained twelve months. His father, Jonathan F. Gott, a native of Virginia, was born in 1798; removed with his parents to Warren County, Ky., in 1807, where he died in 1854. He was the son of Sutton Gott, of Virginia, who ran away at the age of fifteen years, and was in the battle of Yorktown; was long a Methodist minister, and died about 1850, aged over eighty years. Jonathan F. (subject's father) married Elizabeth, daughter of Morris and Prudie (Doty) Phillips. Their children are Prudie (Smith), subject, Farmer S., Morris W., and Elizabeth J. (Walker). Moses P. procured a fair English education in youth and taught school four terms. He has been married four times; first, in 1847, to Sarah E., daughter of Thomas Mansfield, of Barren County (born in 1826, died in 1868) and to them were born Jonathan (deceased), Thomas, Elizabeth (Davis), Matilda (Dwyer), Harriet (Logsden), and Sarah A. (Childers). His second marriage was in 1870, to Bettie Rector, of Warren County (died in 1874). His third marriage was in 1876 to Mrs. Drusilla Elder, nee Smith, of Butler County (died in 1877). His last marriage took place in 1878 to Mrs. Mary A. Palmore (nee Rone) of Warren County. Mr. Gott served as magistrate and member of the court of claims in Butler County for eight years. In 1871, he commenced merchandising at Reedyville, which he continued eighteen months. In 1876, he again engaged in general merchandising, in which he has met with success. He is also engaged in farming, owning 3,500 acres of land, 1,000 acres of which are well improved, and in a good state of cultivation. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, also a member of the Christian Church, and in politics a Democrat.

GARRETT GRAHAM, Butler County, was born February 15, 1836, in the southern part of this county, and is a son of John Graham, who was born in North Carolina; came with his parents to Butler County in early childhood, where he died in 1862, at the age of fifty-two years. His father was Garrett Graham, of North Carolina. John Graham married Susan, daughter of John and Catherine (Cox) Cohron, of this county. Their children are as follows: Garrett (subject), Mary (Orange), James, Elizabeth (Coley), John, Virgil, Esther A., Adaline (Oliver), Charles W., Robert and Millard F. Garrett Graham was married May 19, 1859, to Serilda P., daughter of Paul and Catherine (Graham) Ferguson of this county, born February 22, 1840. They had born to them the following children: Mary J. (deceased), Susan C. (deceased), Virginia M. (Sims), John V., Charles M., Laura A., Alonzo R. (deceased), Finis A. and Carlie C. In 1865 Mr. Graham enlisted in Company M, Seventeenth Kentucky (Federal) Cavalry, and remained in the service until peace was restored. His health was injured in the army, and he is now a confirmed invalid. Three of his brothers also served in the army. Mr. Graham is a farmer and owns 215 acres of land well improved. The family are members of the Methodist Church.

FELIX GRAY, Butler County, was born December 23, 1818, in the brick house where he now resides, in the southeast part of Butler County. His father was Charles Gray, a native of Appomattox County, Va., born in 1776, and removed to Boyle County, Ky., when a young man, and to Butler County in 1809, where he died in 1830. He was the son of Charles Gray, Sr., a native of Ireland. The mother was Susanna Bilbo, a daughter of William and Sally (Bugg) Bilbo, of Boyle County, who was born in a fort in that county in 1786. She died in 1861. She was the mother of seven children, viz.: Bradford, Jane, John, Curran, subject, Hickman and Tabitha. Felix Gray's education was limited, but he has been a reader and a student, and is well posted upon the current topics of the time. He originated and is a director in the Morgantown Deposit Bank, which commenced business in September, 1880, and has met with encouraging success. He has never been married, but with his sisters is living on the old homestead. Mr. Gray is a farmer and owns 200 acres of fine land well improved. Politically he is a stalwart Republican.

E. C. GUEST is a son of John I. and Eleanor (Catlin) Guest, who were natives of Connecticut, and married in Albany, N. Y., where Ebenezer C. was born Jan. 6, 1815. Their ancestors were of English and French extraction, and immigrated to America some time before the war of 1776. E. C. was two years old when his father died, and he remained with his mother, attending school when he arrived at a proper age, and assisting in the support of his mother. At the age of twenty he joined a regiment of New York Volunteers, with the purpose of joining Papineau in the Canadian rebellion, but the regiment was disbanded before entering into active service. Young Guest then joined a "Band of Americans" and assisted in the destruction of British vessels: the "Sir Robert Peel" on Lake Champlain, and the "British Queen" on Lake Ontario, in retaliation for the loss of the "Caroline," which was burned by the British on the Niagara River. Immediately thereafter Mr. Guest engaged with a clock manufacturing company, and went on a collecting tour through the South and West for two or three years. He, in 1837, married Esther, daughter of Major Joseph Evans, of Barren County, Ky., who died in 1858, leaving two children, one of whom is living, one son having died from small-pox when a young man. In 1843 Mr. Guest settled in Russellville, Ky., and engaged in the stove and tinware trade; sold out in 1846 and removed to Rochester, Butler County, and went into the tobacco trade. Next year he joined the regiment called the "Tennessee Tigers," for the Mexican war. The government refused to enlist them, and they returned home. Mr. G. continued in the tobacco trade and in 1853 invested heavily, and through a depreciation in the market value, lost about $16,000. In the next year he put his son in business, and sold out his own interest to a partner, who went into bankruptcy, by which Mr. Guest lost $8,000. He next (in 1858) suffered by fire the loss of his dwelling, warehouse and store, including stock of goods and tobacco. He immediately rebuilt and continued the traffic, to which he added the hoop-pole and stave trade. At the beginning of the civil war Mr. Guest took his position in favor of neutrality, and consequently could not procure goods for his trade and was forced to suspend business. He then recruited a company of 110 men for State service, but before he could procure arms for them from the government, about eighty of the company joined the Federal army, and the company was disbanded. Mr. Guest, in 1863, married Mary Taylor, of Barren County, Ky. She departed this life in 1872, leaving one son, Eben C. She at her death left her household affairs in charge of an aged woman, who was a slave to Robert Todd. Mr. Guest is a Royal Arch Mason, in Russellville Chapter, No. 8, and a Democrat, but was an "Old Line Whig." He believes in free thought in religious matters, and is highly respected as a man and citizen by all who know him.

HON. B. L. D. GUFFY, attorney and counsellor at law and county judge, Morgantown, Butler County, was born in Muhlenburgh County, Ky., December 24, 1832, and in his infancy his parents, James and Malinda (Jamison) Guffy, removed to Logan County, where our subject received a good common school education, and subsequently attended the Glasgow College, then under the principalship of Prof. D. C. Nutting. In the fall of 1854 he removed to Butler County, where he taught a district school, and commenced the study of law. He settled in Morgantown in 1857. His practice at first being insufficient, he often worked as a day laborer at 60 cents a day, boarding himself. In 1856 he studied law with J. J. Harrison, of Hartford, and in the autumn of the same year he was admitted to the bar. May 28, 1857, he was married to Miss M. A. Munroe, of Ohio County, by whom he has nine children: Estil D. Guffy (an attorney at law, Hartford, Ky.), Luella (wife of John M. Carson, Morgantown), Olive, Speed, Stella, Cora, Bayless L., Mabel Clare and Lilly Dale. Judge Guffy first received the appointment of deputy assessor, subsequently filled the office of police judge for the town of Morgantown, and later, in 1860, became assistant marshal, and took the census. In 1862 he was elected judge for the county of Butler, which office he held continuously for eight years, and was again elected in 1878 and 1882. The last two times he was elected on the Greenback ticket, and is probably now the only county judge in office elected by this party in Kentucky. His father was a gentleman of liberal education, and followed farming as an occupation, and school teaching, and died in 1862. His mother was Malinda Jamison, who died in 1857. They were the parents of nine children, of whom the judge was the youngest. His eldest sister was the wife of Lieut.-Gov. Hardy; a brother, Rev. C. F. Guffy, is a clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and resides in Butler County; another brother, James H., is a prosperous farmer of Butler County; a third brother, F. C., died in the Federal Army in 1862, at Tuscumbia, Ala. His grandfather was Alexander Guffy, a Revolutionary soldier and a native of Pennsylvania. Judge Guffy owns one of the finest homes in Morgantown, and county of Butler, besides other real estate and personal porperty in the town and county. He has an extensive practice in his profession, and his influence as a private citizen and public officer has always been exerted in favor of justice and right.

JAMES H. GUFFY, farmer, Butler County, was born December 26, 1828, in Logan County, Ky. He received a common English education, and engaged in farming, in which he has been eminently successful, as he is now one of the most prosperous farmers in Butler, to which county he removed in 1852, and purchased the home farm in 1859, on which he now resides, and which consists of 199 acres of fertile land on the Morgantown and Russellville high road, three and a half miles south of the former town. November 14, 1854, he married Adeline, the sixth daughter and eighth child of Benjamin Moore. This union has been blessed with five children: Alpharetah, Arazell, Theophrastus, Chastine and James Hunter. Mr. Guffy's father was James Guffy, born in Pennsylvania in 1785, and came with Alexander Guffy, the grandfather, to Logan County, Ky., 1790, and helped to clear the wilderness; his neighborhood extended from Russellville to Morgantown. He died in 1862. His wife, Malinda, was a native of Virginia, and died in 1857. The members of the family living are Mrs. Nourse, residing in Butler County; Rev. C. F. Guffy, a Methodist Episcopal clergyman, residing near his brother James H. in Butler County; Mrs. Simmonds, of Muhlenburgh County; Mrs. Lucas, of the same county; James H., our subject, and the Hon. B. L. D. Guffy, the present judge of Butler County.

QUINTUS M. HAMILL, Butler County, was born in Barren County, Ky., October 1, 1846. In 1854 he removed with his parents to the Chalybeate Springs, in Edmonson County; in 1858, to the Big Reedy Valley in Butler County. In 1876 he commenced clerking and buying tobacco for Julian Phelps at Brooklyn; in 1877, he engaged in merchandising at the same place, and was postmaster; in 1881, he located on the farm where he now resides. His father, James M. Hamill, was also a native of Barren County; was born in 1806, and is now living. He was twice married; first to Lucy, daughter of William and Eliza Tisdale, of Barren County. Their children are, Addison (died in the Confederate army), Livingston, William, John (died in the Confederate army), James (died in the Federal army) and Lucy (Walker). After his first wife's death, he married Sarah, her sister, and from their union sprang Fannie (Hamilton), Quintus M., Josephine (Corder), Nannie (Duvall), and Worth (deceased). Quintus M. was brought up on a farm and obtained a common English education; he engaged in teaching for several years. He was married September 7, 1880, to Etna A. Phelps, a daughter of James M. and Polly A. (Reems), Phelps of this county. She was born January 21, 1860, and has two children, Zona and James M. Mr. Hamill is a farmer and owns 267 acres of good land. He is a member of the Masonic order; his wife is a member of the Christian Church.

MORRIS G. HAMMER, Butler County, was born July 3, 1827, in Montgomery County, Tenn. His father, Elisha Hammer, was a citizen of Massachusetts, who emigrated from that State to Tennessee when a young man. His marriage with Nellie Jordan occurred about 1819. They were the parents of four children. Morris G. Hammer was left an orphan at the age of eight years, and during the next nine years of his life he resided with a Mr. Richmond. He had poor educational advantages in early life and attended school very little; but his reading has been to a purpose, and he transacts his business in a practical way, and with success. At the age of seventeen he began life for himself; worked one year in the lead mines of Missouri, then for the next five years worked on a farm by the month. On the 2d of January, 1850, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Caudill, of Robertson County, Tenn. They are the parents of nine children, six of whom are living: Caroline, wife of Charles Webster; Phœbe J., Lucinda, wife of Henry Jains; John W., Martha C., wife of Francis Drake, and Louisa E. After marriage Mr. Hammer leased land and farmed for two or three years. In 1853 he bought fifty acres in Robertson County, Tenn.; this he sold in 1855 and removed to Butler County, Ky., where he bought 124 acres, to which he has, by subsequent purchases, added 156 acres. His farm of 280 acres is well improved, and in an excellent state of cultivation; a fine young orchard of 100 trees produces abundance of good fruit. Mr. Hammer makes a specialty of raising grain and tobacco. He was an active member of the order of P. of H., and is a member of the order of G. T. He is a Republican, but is more interested in his farming interests than in politics. He is liberal-minded and a patron of schools and educational enterprises. He, his wife and four children are members of the Baptist Church.

J. E. HARRELD, druggist, Morgantown, is the son of Hon. Nelson Harreld, who was born in Butler County in 1811, and was for many years a prominent dry goods merchant, in partnership with Judge Thomas P. Wand. In 1847 Mr. Harreld represented Butler County in the Kentucky legislature, and his father (grandfather of our subject) had a seat in the same body the previous year. He died in 1861. The mother of Mr. Harreld was Mary Jane Wand, a sister of Judge Wand, and died in 1857. She was the mother of eleven children, of whom all but six have passed away. Our subject was born about six miles from Morgantown, April 12, 1846. He received his education in the public schools and in the college at Greenville, Muhlenburgh County. For many years he was employed as clerk in a dry goods store. He opened his present business August 29, 1872, and now he has one of the oldest, largest and best appointed drug stores in this part of the State. In 1876 he married Mollie June, daughter of Hon. T. C. Carson. Mrs. Harreld died in September, 1879, leaving one son, Arthur Carson. Mr. Harreld next married, March 15, 1882, Ella, only daughter of W. J. Finley, a distinguished clergyman of the Protestant Methodist Church, now preaching at Montgomery, Ala. She was born in Wilson County, Tenn., in 1855, and educated at the Russellville (Ky.) College. She has had two children, Ruth, deceased, and Jonell. Mr. Harreld is a member of the Masonic Lodge, No. 271, at Morgantown. In politics he is a Democrat, and a faithful and consistent member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

MRS. T. D. HARRELD, Butler County, is the wife of Temple D. Harreld, son of Nelson and Mary Jane (Wand) Harreld, the former born in the southern part of Butler County in 1809; removed, in his early manhood, to Morgantown, and became a contractor for the building of the court house—the first brick court house in the county. He was a man of much energy and ability, and represented his district in the Kentucky legislature, in 1848, when the Free School Act was passed, which measure he favored by his speech and vote; he died in 1862, and his wife in 1857. Temple D. Harreld was born June 21, 1839, in Morgantown, where he passed the first ten years of his life. The family then removed to the Big Bend of the Green River. In 1867, September 26, Mr. Harreld and Miss Sallie Gray were united in marriage. Mrs. Harreld was born in London district, March 13, 1847, and was brought up and educated in the same locality. That district was also the birth-place of her father, in April, 1814. He was an intelligent, industrious, and successful farmer, and died November 21, 1883. Her mother, whose maiden name was Rebecca Hay (a sister of V. S. Hay, a prominent lawyer of Butler and Warren Counties, now deceased) was born in 1812, near the Warren and Butler lines, and died in 1881. Ancestors on both sides were from Virginia; other branches of the family reside in Mississippi. The Gray family are scattered throughout upper Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Harreld have five children: Elbert Gray, Ethie, Elia, Selwyn and Davis. Their farm consists of 250 acres, with house on a high bank overlooking Green River on the south and north, one of the most charming spots to be found anywhere.

WILLIAM H. HAWES belongs to one of the pioneer families of Butler County. When the woods of Kentucky resounded with the halloo of the hunter, when the trail of scouting and trapping expeditions were the only roads, and the settlers' cabins few and far between, the grandfather of Mr. Hawes came from North Carolina and established a home for himself and his descendants. His son, William, the father of our subject, was born in Butler (then Logan) County, in 1797, and was the first white child born in the Green River country. William H. Hawes was born near Rochester, December 15, 1839. He commenced business for himself at the age of twenty-one, and raised his first crop in 1859. In September, 1861, he enlisted in Company D, Eleventh Kentucky Infantry, and served three years and three months. During all that time. he was with one exception with his regiment, and participated in many engagements, among which may be mentioned, Shiloh, Stone River, siege of Knoxville, and was in the Georgia campaign twenty miles south of Atlanta. He was mustered out on the 16th of December, 1864, at Bowling Green. On the 14th of March, 1865, Mr. Hawes was married to Margaret, eldest daughter of Amos and Nancy (Brown) Russ, born in Butler County, May 15, 1840. Her grandfather, Austin Brown, was a soldier in the second war with England, and participated in the battle of New Orleans. Mr. and Mrs. Hawes have had six children, four of whom are living: James Palace, Oliver Ollas, Margaret Effey, and Robert Everett. The family are members of the Baptist church. Their farm consists of ninety acres of upland with comfortable home, convenient buildings, etc. Mr. Hawes has identified himself with the Republican party.

MARION WASHINGTON HAWES, Butler County, is the son of John and Nancy Hawes. The former was a native of North Carolina, born in 1815, and removed to Butler County with his father, John Hawes, at an early day, and settled on the Little Bend of the Green River, near "Hawes" Ferry, to which his name was given. John Hawes, subject's father, was, by occupation, a farmer, owning a large tract of valuable land in the valley of the Green. He was an excellent citizen, a prominent member of the Monticello Baptist Church. He died about 1858. Subject's mother, Nancy (Layne) Hawes, died in 1842. They were the parents of nine children, only two of whom are now living: Marion W. and a younger brother, Greenbury Wallace, now residing in Texas. Our subject, Marion W., was born at the old homestead on the banks of Green River, on February 16, 1844; educated in the common schools and reared on the farm. In September, 1861, he enlisted in Company F, Eleventh Kentucky and served honorably three years and three months. His service was principally in Tennessee, Georgia, Mississippi and Virginia. He participated in the celebrated battles of Shiloh, Stone River, Perryville, siege of Knoxville, Blain's Cross Roads, and in the campaign to Atlanta. He was a brave soldier, and always with his regiment. He was married three times; first to Harriet Barbrey, February 22, 1865, and by her had two children: David Jarret, born December 11, 1866, and died in 1881; John French, born October 22, 1872. Mrs. Harriet Hawes departed this life in 1878. His second wife was Emily Layne, who died in 1880. Mr. Hawes married his third wife, Frances Pendley, in 1884. Mr. Hawes' farm consists of 110 acres, mostly rich bottom lands, with a good home, and all the evidences of thrift and industry. He is a member of the Monticello Baptist Church, and a Republican in politics, also an industrious and honest citizen.

CHARLES HAYNES, Butler County, was born November 8, 1834, in Barren County, Ky., and in 1845 removed with his parents to Butler County, where he has since resided. His father, John Haynes, Jr., was also a native of Barren County, was born in 1807, and is now living in Butler County. He is the son of John Haynes, Sr., of North Carolina, who died in 1846. John, Jr., subject's father, married Millie, daughter of Willis and Isabell (Butler) Larrence of Barren County (born in 1812, died in 1874). Their offspring are subject, Alexander, Alvy, Silas C., Willis, John H. and Virginia A. He next married Joanna Simpson, and their children are Cynthia A. and Mary J. Our subject obtained but a limited education in youth, having mainly "schooled" himself. He has been twice married; first, April 2, 1862, to Elizabeth A., daughter of John and Lucy (Woodcock) Elmore of Butler County (born in 1841; died January 8, 1863). This union was without issue. He was next married October 18, 1876, to Albinna, daughter of William and Barbara A. (Young) Bellar of Butler County (born November 10, 1852), and to them have been born Vasta, Vuna and Vander. Subject has been for many years engaged in the business of carpenter and cabinet-maker in which he has met with good success. He is also a miller by profession. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and in politics a Democrat.

JOHN B. HELM, Butler County, was born August 20, 1815, in this county, and is a son of Moses Helm, Jr., a native of Campbell County, Va., and was born October 8, 1777; he removed to Logan County (now Butler) in 1802, and died in 1847. He was the son of John Helm, of Virginia, born August 14, 1741, a soldier during the latter part of the Revolution, and who died April 20, 1825; his brother, Capt. Thomas Helm, was killed at the battle of the Cowpens, and his sword is now in the possession of John B. Helm, who cherishes it as a valuable relic. Moses Helm, Jr., the father of J. B., married Nancy, a daughter of James Owen, born near the Peaks of Otter in Virginia; she was born about 1777, and died in 1864; she was the mother of six children: James M., Mary A. (Berryman), John B., David O., Sarah E. (Porter), and Martha J. (Moody). John B. Helm was married November 19, 1846, to Nancy P., daughter of William and Nancy (Porter) Carson of this county, born June 7, 1825. They had the following children: William A., (deceased), Nannie E. (deceased), James W., John C., and Dr. Thomas O. Mrs. Helm died December 1, 1861. Mr. Helm is a pratical farmer and owns 1,100 acres of good land, well improved. He is a Mason, was for many years a magistrate, and has been also an elder in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church for the past thirty-seven years. In politics he affiliates with the Democratic party.

G. A. HINANT, druggist and grocer, Butler County, is the son of John G. Hinant, a native of Alabama, who removed to Butler County in 1848, and settled first four miles north of Morgantown. He was by profession a teacher, but was prominent in politics, and at different times filled various county offices, as well as a government position at Washington. He died in 1872. His wife was a Miss Elizabeth A. Morand, who was born in Washington City, and died January 5, 1881. There were seven children, as follows: Montezuma Morgan, a saddler and harness-maker, born in the city of Washington, June 9, 1845, but was taken to Butler County, when quite young; Mrs. Mary Catherine Bailey, now deceased; John Maberry, in the ax-handle business; William Haywood, in the same business; G. A. Hinant, Mrs. Sarah J. Burchfield, Rosanna. All the boys but John M., a resident of Bowling Green, are doing business in Woodbury. They are all Democrats in politics. G. A. Hinant was born in Woodbury, January 23, 1858, and brought up in the same place, receiving his education at the public school. He began commercial life as a clerk in J. W. Dixon's grocery, in Woodbury; was subsequently with C. A. Carson in the dry goods trade, and finally became partner with Capt. Sproule, which partnership continued until the Captain's death. In December, 1884, he entered the drug business and is now doing a fair trade.

PLEASANT M. HONAKER was born June 22, 1829, on the place where he now resides, in Butler County. In 1862, he enlisted as orderly-sergeant in Company A, Twelfth Kentucky Federal Cavalry. He was twice wounded, and remained in the service until the close of the war. His father, John Honaker, was born July 30, 1802, in Virginia; removed, in 1804, with his parents to Kentucky and located on the place where our subject now resides. He was a magistrate and sheriff of Butler County; he died December 4, 1847. He was the son of Isaac Honaker, a native of Virginia, who died in Butler County, at the age of forty-six years. John Honaker married July 29, 1824, Sophia, daughter of Robert and Polly (Rasdell) Walker, of Warren County (born May 23, 1802, died October 29, 1884). To them were born Polly A. (Davis), James H., subject, Isaac J., Susan (Keown), Isabelle (Edgar), Doctor C. and Nancy (Phelps). Subject has never married, having lived with his mother on the old family homestead. He is a farmer owning 750 acres of productive land in a fine state of cultivation. In addition to the old homestead he owns a valuable farm on Bear Creek in Edmonson County. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and of the Christian Church; in politics he is identified with the Republican party.

NEWEL T. HOOD, Butler County, was born December 3, 1836, in the southern part of this county, where he grew to manhood. In 1853, he removed to St. Louis County, Mo., and in 1857 to Walker County, Tex.; then to Kaufman County, and in 1861, he enlisted in the Sixth Texas Cavalry (Confederate States army), in which he served until the close of the war. His father, Jarrett Hood, was born in this county, where he died September 1, 1877, at the age of seventy-one years. He married Vina Fluallen, a daughter of Harry and Betsey (Cohron) Fluallen, all of Butler County. They had five children, viz.: Mary (Smith), Newel T., Caroline (McCoy and Mathis), Eliza (Peay and Andrews) and Edward. January 31, 1870, Newel T. married Rosaline Romans, of Butler County, daughter of William G. and Eliza E. (Mason) Romans, who was born December 23, 1850. They have had the following children: Olive T. (deceased), Edward E., Carrie E., Perna E. and Newel C. Mr. Hood is a farmer, and in politics affiliates with the Democratic party. His wife is a member of the Baptist Church.

STEPHEN HOPSON HOOD, Butler County, was born February 1, 1833, on the place where he now resides, on Richland Creek. He is a son of Edward and Elizabeth (Woods) Hood, the former a native of Virginia, born in 1798; removed with his mother in childhood to Butler County, where he died in 1865; the latter was a native of this county, and the mother of the following children: Mary J. (Shultz), Robert N.,

Selina (Sweatt), William W., Stephen H., Lemuel T., James M. and Melinda E. (Sweatt). Stephen H. Hood married November 28, 1855, Harriet A., daughter of Joseph and Jane (Mitchell) Sterrett of Butler County. She was born March 17, 1835, and died November 10, 1884. They have had ten children, nine of whom are living, as follows: John W., Sarah A. (Gray), Ann J., Mary E. (Kuykendall), Robert E., James L., Jerred, Stephen H., Jr., and Mintia; Hester is deceased. Mr. Hood is a practical farmer and owns 450 acres of productive land, and in a good state of cultivation. He is a member of the Masonic order and of the Christian Church; on the political questions of the day he is independent.

JOHN WOODVILLE HOWARD, physician, Butler County. The biography of Dr. Howard affords another proof of what determined and persevering efforts may accomplish in spite of adverse circumstances and lack of influence. He is a self-made man, and owes his present high position solely to his own efforts. He was born in Morgantown November 17, 1848. At the age of eighteen he left home and worked at Borah's seven months, earning in that time $175. He then went to Illinois and remained twenty months, earning $25 per month, and at the age of twenty-one had saved $500. He served as deputy sheriff three months after returning to his old home, and then gratified his ambition for obtaining an education. He remained at school until his means were exhausted; then taught a term of five months, and again took up his studies. His subsequent school life was passed in alternate teaching and attending school, always paying his own way. He took up the study of medicine, but when ready for a course of lectures, his money failed him and he was obliged to borrow. This he did, Squire James, of Morgantown, becoming security, he, in turn being secured by an insurance policy on the Doctor's life. He graduated from the Kentucky School of Medicine in 1876, and having fitted himself thoroughly for his profession, he began practicing in Madison and Morgantown, and later removed to Logansport, where he has followed his profession most assiduously ever since. He is the best known and most successful doctor in that locality, and is the only regularly graduated physician who was born in the county and has always practiced there. He pursued his studies at Butler County Seminary, at the college at Muhlenburgh and the School of Medicine at Louisville, Ky. His father and mother, James and Margaret Howard, were of old Virginian stock, and were the parents of six children, all living in Butler County. The Doctor was married March 13, 1873, to Miss Timanthus Hood, a native of Butler County, by whom he had one child, Eva May. Mrs. Howard died March 16, 1875, and the Doctor afterward married Belle Harreld, youngest daughter of Robert and Eliza Duncan Harreld, of Logan County. They have three children: Robert Mayburn, Rura Belle and Inez Lizzie. Dr. Howard owns a fine farm of 140 acres, and a beautiful house, lately built in Logansport, on the Morgantown and Hartford high road. At the organization of the Morgantown Deposit Bank, he was elected one of the directors, which position he has since retained.

N. T. HOWARD was born in the county of Butler, on the north side of Green River, June 27, 1860. He received a liberal education in the Butler County Seminary, Morgantown, and in the Agricultural and Mechanical College, Lexington, Ky.; he studied law with William Wand, Esq., of Morgantown, and was admitted to the Butler County bar in April, 1883. His father was J. W. Howard, a native of Butler County, born in 1827, and was by occupation a farmer, and died in 1873; his mother was Nancy I. Nation before her marriage; was born in Ohio County, in 1835, and died in 1879, leaving five children, of whom our subject is the second. The others are James N. Howard, residing in Daviess County, Sarah E., O. O. Howard and Dorcas. Mr. Howard is a member of the Baptist Church, and is also of the Republican party. He is a lawyer of good attainments and fine promise.

CHARLES M. HOWARD, merchant, Morgantown. The paternal grandfather of our subject was a native of Virginia, came to Butler County in an early day, and with many of the early settlers endured privations and hardships incident to pioneer life. He carried salt on horseback many a mile through the wilderness to his cabin. J. C. Howard, subject's father, was born in Butler County about 1830, and in 1851 became a merchant of Morgantown, and in 1866 removed to Greenville, Muhlenburgh County, where he became engaged in business. Subject's mother was Amanda G. Austin, the daughter of Dr. Austin. She was born and reared in Morgantown, and died in 1871. Charles M. is the second of four children now living; the eldest is Lillian, the wife of J. D. Gontz, the owner of one of the largest drug stores in western Kentucky, at Greenville, Muhlenburgh County; a brother, J. P. Howard, is a dry goods merchant at Greenville, and Annie, the wife of Charley E. Eads, a clothing merchant of Greenville, Muhlenburgh County. C. M. Howard was born at Morgantown, November 17, 1853, and at thirteen years of age removed with his parents to the county of Muhlenburgh, where, at the college of Greenville, he received a thorough literary and business training, and on September 1, 1881, returned to Morgantown, and established one of the finest and best general stores to be found in the town or county. His stock includes dry goods, groceries, hats, caps, boots, shoes, clothing, stoneware, tinware, etc. August 30, 1881, he was married to Miss Emma A., daughter of E. A. Coppage, a hardware merchant of Greenville, Muhlenburgh County. Mr. Howard and wife are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and he votes with the Democratic party.

DR. JOSHUA N. HOWARD, Morgantown, Butler County, was born in Bedford County, Tenn., June 3, 1827, and passed his first five years in the home of his birth. His parents then removed to Robertson County, in the same State, where he was brought up and educated. In 1857 he removed to Adairville, Logan County, where, in 1862, he commenced the practice of medicine, he having studied that profession with Dr. A. M. Henrickson, and graduated at the university at Louisville, in the department of medicine. In February, 1863, he again made a change of residence, and became a practitioner in Morgantown, where he now resides. He has been a member of the Methodist Church from boyhood, and since 1852 has been a member of the I. O. O. F., and filled every position in the lodge. In 1871 he became one of the fraternity of Woodbury Lodge, No. 280, of Masons. He has always been a strong advocate of temperance. In early life he was a Whig in politics, later a Republican, and finally a member of the Greenback party. The Doctor has been twice married, first in 1847, to Miss Martha Strain, of Robertson County, Tenn., who bore him two children: Joella and Mrs. Rosalie McKinney, both now deceased. Mrs. Howard died at Adairville, Ky., July 31, 1853, and June 28, 1858, the Doctor made Miss Mary Anderson his second wife. They had one child, Mattie, who died in her eighteenth year. Dr. Howard is the second oldest physician in the county.

WILLIAM E. HUDSON was born in Sumner County, Tenn., February 21, 1838, and is a son of James and Fetise (Wallace) Hudson, both of whom were natives of Tennessee, and of English and Irish descent, respectively. James Hudson received quite a liberal education in youth, in his native State, where also he was married, and engaged in agricultural pursuits for many years. He also taught a number of years in connection with farming. In the fall of 1840 he removed, with his wife and family, to Ohio County, Ky., where he bought a farm near Cromwell, upon which he resided until his death. He was a veteran in the war of 1812, and in the early part of the late civil war recruited and organized Company A, Seventeenth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry (Confederate service), and served as captain of that company until April 10, 1863, when he resigned and started home, but was drowned in the Cumberland River before reaching his destination. He was for many years a member of the Baptist Church. Mrs. Fetise Hudson is still living, and makes her home with her son, the subject of this sketch; she is now in her seventy-sixth year. Her father, Adam Wallace, was a veteran of the Revolution. William E. Hudson received a limited education in youth, to which he has since added extensively. He was employed on his father's farm until he was nineteen years of age, after which he was employed as a laborer in a tobacco warehouse at Cromwell for two years. He then farmed his father-in-law's place about one year; then moved to Randolph County, Ark., pre-empted 160 acres, and farmed for about four years. In the fall of 1863 he returned to Kentucky, and resided on the old homestead, near Cromwell, in Ohio County, for some three years. In 1866 he removed to Butler County, Ky., and lived on his father-in-law's farm for two years. In 1868 he bought a partially improved farm of 135 acres on the middle fork of Indian Camp Creek, upon which he still resides. The farm is now in a good state of cultivation. He was first married March 15, 1859, to Acratta Hobdy, a native of Butler County, Ky.; born April 13, 1844. To this union were born three children—one son and two daughters—all of whom are living, as follows: Sarah E. Neel, James A. and Olive C. Mrs. Acratta Hudson departed this life March 8, 1873, and was a devoted member of the Christian Church. Mr. Hudson was next married April 29, 1874, to Leura C. James, a native of Butler County, born June 16, 1844. One son gladdens their home—Erlis J. Mr. Hudson and wife have been for many years members of the Christian Church. In politics he was formerly a Democrat, but is now identified with the National Greenback party.

THE HUNT FAMILY. The progenitor is John Hunt, who was born in 1800, and is now eighty-five years old; he is a native of Rowan County, N. C.; came to Kentucky, when a youth and followed farming, from which he retired a few year ago. In 1820, he married Anna Jenkins; she was born in Rowan County, N. C., in 1801, and soon after removed with her parents to Kentucky, where she still resides at the age of eighty-four years. John Hunt is a son of Daniel Hunt, who came from North Carolina to Kentucky in 1804, and located in Muhlenburgh County; he moved to Warrick County, Ind., where he died at the age of seventy years. He was a farmer and a son of John Hunt, who was of English extraction, and a native of Virginia; he lived to the ripe old age of eighty-four, having for fifty years of his life been a minister of the Gospel in the Baptist Church.

Dr. Alexander Hunt, a son of John and Anna (Jenkins) Hunt, passed his early life on a farm, attending school for a short time each year, until he attained his eighteenth year, when he constructed a flat-boat, on which he floated a cargo of staves to New Orleans; finding the trade lucrative he continued it for four years, after which he tried farming for a few years; then read medicine and took his degree in the Louisville Medical College in 1878, since which time he has followed the practice of his profession, in connection with the business of superintending his farming interests. He gives much of his time to the improvement of the country. He is an advocate of the temperance cause, and is interested in all educational enterprises. Politically he is a Republican; is liberal in his views, and does not know men by their politics. His wife, Catherine J. Clark, whom he married April 8, 1849, is a daughter of David and Martha Clark of Hickman County, Ky. Their marriage has been blessed with twelve children, eight of whom are living: Martha A., Henry D., William C., Jonathan A., Elias M., Alexander, David and Katie H.; those deceased are John T., Letitia J., Ota and an infant unnamed.

Daniel Hunt, a brother of Dr. Alexander Hunt, was born in Butler County, September 13, 1832. He is a son of John and Anna (Jenkins) Hunt, above mentioned. He was educated in the common schools of the district in which he resided, and at the age of nineteen launched himself upon the sea of life; his first undertaking was to construct a flat-boat on Mud River, on which he shipped a load of staves to New Orleans; the undertaking proved successful, and for several years he continued in the same business; then for three years he worked in a tobacco warehouse for the firm of Tanner & Campbell, and in that time bought and paid for 196 acres of land, where he now resides, in Butler County, to which he has added by subsequent purchase. He now owns 600 acres in Butler County and 160 acres in the State of Kansas. His farm is well improved and well kept, and he is among the most prosperous farmers in Butler County. Mr. Hunt is a Democrat politically, and in 1857 was elected constable, in which capacity he served twelve years, afterward held the office of magistrate in Butler County four years. In 1852, he bought and gathered from among the hills of Butler County, 250 head of wild sheep, which, with one assistant, he drove a distance of 150 miles through unbroken forests, to a market at Louisville, Ky. His return trip was made in three days, and on foot. His wife, Sarah C. Watkins, whom he married in 1857, is a native of Butler County; they are the parents of twelve children, ten of whom are living: Camelier J., Mary E., Henry, Warner, Vidia, Lydia J., Eridine, Willard, Lily M. and Bertha; those deceased are Nettie D. and Oscar. Mr. Hunt has been a member of the Methodist Church for thirty years; his wife and three children are also members of the same church. Hr. Hunt is a Master Mason, and a member of the Rochester Lodge, No. 270. He is a progressive citizen, and one of the "solid" men of Butler County; he takes a leading part in all public enterprises, and is a strong patron of schools and churches.

H. A. JAMES is the son of Hezekiah and Elizabeth (Carson) James, the former of whom was born in Ohio County, Ky., September 20, 1792; was by occupation a tanner, and died August 24, 1835; the latter a native of the "Old Dominion," and born July 20, 1798, and died June 9, 1840. To this couple were born seven children, of whom but three are now living: W. S. James, residing in Paradise, Muhlenburgh County; H. A. James and Mary D., wife of Lycurgus Wilson, of Lafayette County, Mo. H. A. James was born in Morgantown, Butler County, January 26, 1824, and was educated partly in the common schools and partly in the Cumberland College, Caldwell County. He was appointed county clerk in 1848, and elected in 1851; re-elected county clerk in 1854, and subsequently elected county attorney, and appointed master commissioner of the circuit court; and was never defeated for any office that he has asked of the people. March 15, 1882, he was married to Sarah E. Smith, daughter of John and Nancy (Sloss) Smith of Simpson County. She was born there March 9, 1839. Mr. James is one of the leading attorneys of the county of Butler; commenced practicing in 1867, and was licensed by the Hon. G. C. Rogers of the Fourth Judicial District, and Hon. T. T. Alexander of the Fifteenth Judicial District. He is chairman of the board of trustees, one of the directors of the Morgantown Bank, and a member of the Masonic fraternity, a strong temperance man, and in politics a Democrat.

MORRISON JAMES, Butler County, was born in Ohio County, Ky., September 1, 1814, and is one of ten children, only three now living, born to Mosby and Elizabeth (Rogers) James, the former of whom was a native of Henrico County, Va., and the latter of Nelson County, Ky.; they were of Scotch and Irish descent, respectively. At the age of nine years, in the latter part of the last century, Mosby James removed with his parents from Virginia to Mercer County, Ky., where his early education was received. While yet a young man, he removed to Ohio County, Ky., where he was married, and here he was engaged in agricultural pursuits all his life. He was also for a time engaged in merchandising in connection with farming. He served as quartermaster under Gen. Hopkins, in his campaigns against the Indians in the Northwest Territory, and was a captain in the Kentucky militia for a number of years. For some twelve years he held the office of magistrate in Ohio County, and was also high sheriff of that county for a term of two years. His death occurred in 1855; he and wife were consistent members of the Christian Church. The ancestor of the James family in America, was one of the first settlers in the colony of Virginia; the family are also connected with the first families of Virginia, including the Mosbys. Morrison James received a common school education, and was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority. He then bought 100 acres of wild land in the south part of Ohio County, Ky., where he subsequently improved a farm, and resided for seven years, when he sold out and came to Butler County, and bought a farm on Indian Camp Creek. There he resided some five years, when he again sold out and returned to Ohio County, where he was engaged in merchandising at Martin's Ferry for four years. After that he again engaged in farming in Ohio County, where he owned and lived on two different farms. In 1866, he again sold out and returned to Butler County, where he bought wild land on Indian Camp Creek, and commenced to improve a farm, upon which he remained some nine or ten years. He then bought a farm on the same creek upon which he now resides. He was married January 1, 1836, to Caroline M. James, a native of Butler County, Ky., born June 16, 1814. Seven children blessed their union, four of whom are living: Richard S., Leura C. (Hudson), Elizabeth (Warren), and Louis P. Mrs. James is a member of the Christian Church. Mr. James belongs to no church or secret order, but holds to the Christian faith. In politics he is identified with the National Greenback party.

ANDREW W. JENKINS, farmer, a descendant of large land owners in Warren County, is the son of John and Sarah Jenkins, who resided three miles north of Bowling Green. The father was born in 1800, and died in 1860; the mother, born in 1810, and died in 1870. They had nine children, six of whom are living: Mrs. Polly Comfort, of Missouri; John C., living at Bowling Green; James C., of Fort Scott, Kas.; R. T., also residing in Kansas; Mrs. Sarah Amanda Terry, of Woodbury; Andrew W., who was born in Warren County, in 1844, and educated in the common schools. At the age of twenty-one, with nothing but his manhood and industry, he was left to carve his own fortune. He now owns 300 acres of good land on the south bank of Barren River, in Woodbury precinct, consisting of plow land and timber, well stocked. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity at Bowling Green, and also of the Odd Fellows' Anchor Lodge. He votes with the Democratic party. Few men have met with more uniform prosperity.

HON. OLIVER P. JOHNSON was born April 12, 1830, on Big Reedy Creek in this county, where he was reared to manhood. In 1861 he entered the Eleventh Kentucky (Federal) Infantry as first lieutenant of Company G. He was promoted to captain of that company, and remained in the service nearly three years. His father, Hiram Johnson, was a native of Edmonson County, and died in 1843. He was the son of Arthur Johnson, a native of Pennsylvania, who was one of the pioneers of Edmonson County, and died in Sangamon County, Ills., at an advanced age. Hiram Johnson married Martha, daughter of John and Frankie (Gross) Day, of Edmonson County, who was born March 2, 1803, died August 11, 1853. Their children were Birzilla (Anderson), subject, Lucinda (Oller and Willis), and Cynthia A. (Bledsoe). Subject enjoyed but a limited education, but by study and application in later years, has become well versed in the current literature of the day. September 20, 1855, our subject married Ellen, daughter of John S. and Sophrona (Hall) Phelps, of Butler County; she was born March 16, 1839. To them have been born George W. (deceased), John J., Francis M., Josephine (deceased), Addie, Hiram W., and Samuel B. In 1870 subject was appointed internal revenue assessor, and served until the office was abolished. He was then appointed internal revenue collector for the Second District of Kentucky, which position he retained about three years. He was elected to the legislature in 1863, and to the State senate in 1865, serving one term in each body. He is now successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits, and owns 500 acres of well improved and productive land. He is a member of the R. A. M. of Hartford. In politics he is a Republican.

CHRISTOPHER R. JOHNSON was born October 20, 1824, on Little Reedy Creek, this county, and removed with his parents in infancy to Illinois, and settled on Shoal Creek. After two years he returned to Butler County, where he has since resided. His father, Joseph Johnson, was born near Richmond, Va., removed to Butler County, when a young man, and died in 1844, aged about sixty years. He married Sarah N., daughter of John and Mary Pitman, of this county, (born 1797, died November 2, 1881). Their children are Elizabeth G. (Forman), John J., William P., subject, Lucinda F. (Johnson), James C., Thomas M., Joseph N. and Nicholas W. Subject had no educational advantages in his youth, but is regarded as a good business man. He was married July 2, 1850, to Dorothy, daughter of Hiram and Millie (Renfrow) Baker, of Butler County (born October 12, 1833), and to them have been born Andrew J., Millie (Colburn), Anthatine, Melvin J., James H., Joseph R., Clay P., Ancil, George M., Sallie and Binnie. Subject had an even start with the world, commencing at the bottom round of the ladder, but by industry and economy has secured a comfortable competency. He owns about 1,000 acres of well-improved and productive land in a fine state of cultivation. He is a member of the Methodist Church and of the A. F. & A. M., and in politics a stanch Republican.

J. A. JONES was born January 18, 1828, on Little Reedy Creek, in this county, where he has ever since resided. In youth he enjoyed very limited educational advantages, having attended the common schools of the county about two months. From 1842 to 1846, he carried the mail between Russellville and Elizabethtown, and being unemployed on Mondays would often attend the school one day in the week at the former place, in addition to which his Sabbath-school attendance constituted his whole opportunities for an early education. Having a thirst for knowledge, he employed his leisure hours at study and reading and has by his own endeavors secured a good business education and a fund of valuable information, thus furnishing an encouraging example to those who are left self-dependent. April 14, 1846, he was united in marriage to Nancy, daughter of Moses Jones, of Butler County, who was born March 22, 1827, in Illinois. Their union has been blessed by the birth of Annie (Conway), Julian N., Mary E., William H., James B., Patia J. (Duvall), Honor E. (deceased), California (deceased), John C., Emily V. (Lawrence), Woodford W., Julia K. (Lawrence), and Madison (deceased). Subject had an even start with the world commencing at the bottom of the ladder. Being blessed with a strong arm and good courage, commenced the battle of life with a determination to succeed, and his best hopes have been fully realized. He is a successful farmer and owns 1,200 acres of productive land, well improved. He was one of the organizers and is one of the directors of the Morgantown Deposit Bank. He also owns a good business property in Bowling Green, and is possessed of other valuable interests. Mr Jones is a member of the A. F. & A. M., and is also a member of the Christian Church.

THOMAS BURTON JONES was born in Butler County, December 24, 1846. His father, Grissom Jones, was born in Georgia in 1820. He followed farming during his lifetime, and died in 1872, leaving three children, one older and one younger than our subject; his widow, Anna Jones, a native of Virginia, is still living, aged about seventy-one years. Thomas B., in obedience to the dying request of his father, took charge of the farm, and assumed the care of his aged mother, which he has done ever since. In 1869, he married Mrs. Sarah E. Parker, a widow, of Christian County, Ky.; she has one son, John R. Parker, by her former husband. In 1879, Mr. Jones bought seventy-two acres of land in Butler County, which he has very much improved and brought into a good state of cultivation; one-half of his farm is admirably adapted to grazing purposes, and consequently he gives some attention to stock raising. He is not a member of any church; his religious views are liberal and based on free thought and justice to all; his wife is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian faith. Mr. Jones' early education was confined to the elementary course in the public schools, but he has attained to a fair education through close application and home reading since he reached his majority. Politically he is a Republican and takes an interest in the political issues of the day.

NICHOLAS C. KESINGER, Butler County, was born in Ohio County, Ky., June 15, 1847, and is one of sixteen children born to John and Jane (Ellems) Kesinger, both of whom were natives of Kentucky, and of German descent. John was married in Butler County, and was engaged in agricultural pursuits in Ohio and Butler Counties all his life, with the exception of one year, when he resided in Illinois. He and wife were from early life devoted members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His death occurred in March, 1863, in his sixtieth year. Nicholas Kesinger received a common school education in youth. From the time he was twelve years old, until after his father's death, he was employed as a laborer on a farm. In March, 1864, he enlisted in Company C, Middle Green River Battalion (Federal service), and served with that battalion until September, 1864, when they were mustered out at Bowling Green, Ky. After his return from the service he was again employed as a laborer on a farm for some five years. He then bought a small farm on the north side of Green River, this county, where he remained only a short time. Since then he has owned and lived upon several different farms in Ohio and Butler Counties. In the fall of 1882, he bought the farm of 114 acres on Indian Camp Creek, near Flenerville, where he now resides. The farm is in a fair state of cultivation. He was married August 12, 1869, to Sarah R. Snodgrass, a native of Butler County, Ky., born November 10, 1851. Five children have blessed their union, all of whom—two sons and three daughters—are living. Their names are as follows: Perley G., Naoma, Ruth, Cleophus D., and Eliza C. Mr. Kesinger and wife are and have been from early life members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he has held various official positions. He is also a member of the Masonic fraternity. The father of Mrs. Kesinger, Isaac W. Snodgrass, was a soldier in the Eleventh Kentucky Volunteer Infantry (Federal service), Company C, and died in the service in March, 1863. Mr. Kesinger's maternal great-grandfather was a veteran of the Revolutionary war, as was also the maternal grandfather of Mrs. Kesinger. In politics, Mr. Kesinger was formerly a Republican, but is now identified with the National Greenback party.

E. C. KUYKENDALL, merchant and druggist, holds an enviable position among the many young men whose interests are identified with Butler County. He was born in Woodbury Precinct, January 2, 1859, and has passed his life, thus far, in the same locality, receiving his education in the public school. His father, Hezekiah Kuykendall, was also a native of Butler County, by occupation a farmer, and died in 1863. His mother's maiden name was Emily Clark, who was born in Warren County, Ky., and died in 1864. They had but two children, of whom our subject is the elder, and Mrs. Ella Helm the younger. Mr. Kuykendall was married January 28, 1885, to Miss Ida Overstreet, the daughter of W. S. and May Overstreet. She is the eldest of five children, was born January 15, 1869, and educated in the public schools of Woodbury. The business of this gentleman consists of a large store of general merchandise, carrying about $4,500 worth of goods, and a fine drug store stocked to the value of $1,500. His intelligence, industry and perseverance have already earned for him well merited success. In politics he is a Democrat.

ROBERT B. KUYKENDALL, Butler County, was born August 13, 1841, in this county, and is a son of Matthew and Martha (Talbott) Kuykendall. Matthew was a native of Smith County, Tenn., and was born in 1794; removed with his parents to this county, then a part of Logan in 1796, where he died in 1865. He was a son of Matthew Kuykendall, Sr., long a justice of the peace, and the first high sheriff of Butler County: he was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and carried through life a lame arm, caused by a wound received in battle; he died in 1845, at an advanced age. Subject's mother was a daughter of Rev. Benjamin and Martha Talbott. She was the mother of the following children: Maria (Sterrett), Josiah, William (deceased), Melinda (Taylor), Allen, Mary (deceased), Adaline (Thomas), Margaret (Sublett), Harriet (Thomas), Robert B. and James (deceased). Robert B. was married June 14, 1866, to Mary J., daughter of Richard S., and Aramedia J. (Carson) Thornton, born July 17, 1846. They have had five children, four of whom are now living, viz.: Eulalie, Mary E., Anna B. and Alma E.; Roberta C. is dead. Mr. Kuykendall was elected sheriff in 1881, and served one term; he overcame a party majority of 400 votes. He owns 700 acres of well improved land; raises tobacco, wheat, corn, and devotes some attention to stockraising; he is a member of the Masonic order and Master of his lodge; is also a Cumberland Presbyterian, in which church he is an elder and clerk of the session.

FRAZIER Y. LAWSON, JR., Butler County, was born in Hopkinsville, Ky., January 24, 1846. His father was Frazier Young Lawson, also a native of Hopkinsville, Christian County, a tailor by trade, and for many years a dealer in dry goods in the same town. In 1859 he removed with his family to Russellville, Logan County, where he was the owner of a fine farm, and where he reared and educated his family of fourteen children, seven of whom are now living. They are Volumnia (wife of John T. Woodard), Lucy Jane, David Moses (a merchant of Bowling Green), Frazier Young, Jr., William Hopson (a trader in Dallas, Texas,), James Henry (in Paducah), Alexander R. (a merchant at Bowling Green). Our subject learned the plasterer's trade, which he now follows, in connection with his other occupation. He was also engaged for some time in business at Russellville, Logan County. February 10, 1882, he was united in marriage to Miss Mattie, the youngest daughter of Allen C. and Adeline Jane Hunter, of Butler County. She was born December 5, 1859. Mr. and Mrs. Lawson are the parents of two children: Clarence Dee (born February 25, 1883), David Moses (born January 7, 1885). F. Y. Lawson, Sr., died on May 25, 1865. His widow died August 2, 1883. She was a native of Virginia, born near Lynchburg, July 6, 1811, and was a life-long member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Lawson received a thorough common school education, and owns at the present time a large amount of fine stock. He is a member of the Democratic party.

MRS. MARY T. LAYMAN, Butler County. This estimable lady is the daughter of David Mason and Mary Ann Graves, natives of Tennessee. She was born near the Hermitage, Nashville, Tenn., and educated at the Sacred Heart College, at St. Louis, where she was reared by Capt. Thomas B. Hudson, an attorney of that city. She is related to Gen. William S. Horney, Senator Gwynn and Henry Clay. She was first married to John C. Thatcher, a native of New London, Conn., who died in Wisconsin. She then married Mr. Edwin Alexander Layman, a native of Butler County, Ky., born in Morgantown, February 28, 1849, the son of Greenbery and Lydia (Day) Layman, who came from Virginia to Kentucky at an early day. Mr. Layman is an intelligent and useful citizen, a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and clerk of same, as well as chairman of the school board. Mrs. Layman had, by her former husband, two sons, both students. They are related through their father to many eminent men of New England, and inherit much native talent.

WILLIAM F. LEACH, blacksmith and farmer, was born in the eastern part of Ohio County, December 9, 1828, and was brought up on a farm until nineteen years of age, when he learned the trade of blacksmith, which occupation he has followed since that time. In 1856 he removed to Morgantown, Butler County, where he set up his business, and he has been for some years the only permanent blacksmith of the town. August 16, 1859, he was married to Sarah Anglea, the eldest daughter of William and Dulaney Anglea, of Ohio County. The result of this union was three children: George W., Albert Kelly and Annie Laura. His father was William C. Leach, who was born in Maryland, and when quite young came to Kentucky and settled in Ohio County, and died in 1863. His mother's maiden name was Nancy Leach, but she was no relation to his father's people. Our subject owns a good farm of eighty acres of land in the vicinity of Morgantown, with a pleasant and comfortable home in the town. He is a first-class mechanic, a member of the Methodist Church, of the Masonic fraternity, Lodge No. 280, Morgantown, Ky., a Republican in politics and an upright citizen.

NAPOLEON W. LONDON, Butler County, was born September 12, 1831, in Smith County, Tenn., and in 1839 removed with his parents to the southern portion of this county, where he has since resided. His father, Martin London, a native of Amherst County, Va., was born September 3, 1787; removed to Tennessee in 1818. He was long a Methodist class-leader, and died in Butler County, May 19, 1876. He married Nancy R., daughter of Bartlet D. Eades, of Amherst County, Va. (born June 8, 1797, now living), and from this union sprang Parthenia J. (Belcher), Mary A. (McKinney), David E., James B., Louisa, E. W. (London), John A., Napoleon W., Americus P. (deceased), and Rebecca F. (deceased). Napoleon W. London has been twice married; first to Arena, daughter of Azariah and Finetta (Phillips) Sweatt, of Butler County (born November 25, 1837, and died November 5, 1876). To them were born Joseph L. (deceased), Susan C. (deceased), Jeremiah B., Willis, Millard, French, Cleopatra, Ellen and Finess. August 30, 1877, Mr. London married Temperance, daughter of Samuel and Sarah (Austin) Slate of this county (born November 5, 1842.) Mr. London is a farmer, and has 180 acres of well-improved and productive land. He is a member of the Methodist Church, and in politics is identified with the Democratic party.

JAMES M. LONDON, Butler County, was born July 18, 1849, on the place where he now resides, and is a son of Henry B. London, a native of Warren County. He was born January 28, 1819; removed to Butler County in 1845, where he died in 1869; his father was James London, of North Carolina, who came to Kentucky, and died in Warren County. Subject's mother was Louisa E. W. London, a daughter of Martin and Nancy (Eades) London. She was born in Smith County, Tenn., January 16, 1824, and was the mother of the following children: Frances E. (Cox), James M., Arigie B. (King), Nancy P., Mattie N. and Rosa B. Mr. London has never married. Disregarding the injunction that "it is not well for man to be alone," he has escaped the wiles of the fair sex, and continues in single blessedness. He resides on the old homestead with his mother and sisters. The farm comprises 135 acres of land, which he cultivates successfully in corn, wheat, oats and tobacco. In 1865 he enlisted in Company M, Seventeenth Kentucky (Federal) Cavalry, and served until the close of the war. At the time of his enlistment he was only sixteen years old. He is a Democrat in politics.

JASPER NEWTON LONG, Butler County, was born in Barren County, Ky., May 28, 1840. His father, Thomas Long, was a native of Virginia, where he married Mary Bond, in 1822, and soon after came to Kentucky, and located in Barren County. Several years later he removed to Arkansas, where he died in 1864. Jasper Newton Long is the youngest of a family of eight children. His early education was obtained in the common schools; he has acquired a practical business education through self-culture and application to business. At the age of eighteen years, he began to work his own way in life, and for three years worked at logging, and made several trips to New Orleans. His wife, Maria Jane Bunch, to whom he was married on August 25, 1862, bore him twelve children: William J., Charles B., Joanna, Lee, Eddy and Elby (twins), Katie, Frank, Henry D., Emma, Ella and Nellie. In August, 1863, he raised a company in the Fifty-seventh Kentucky Volunteers (Federal) which were merged into the First Capital Guards. After serving as captain of Company B eighteen months, he was discharged from service and returned to Butler County, leased land and began farming, and on August 25, 1866, got burned out. In 1878, he bought fifty acres of land, to which he has added, by subsequent purchases, 1,250 acres, all by his shrewd management and close application to business. His farm of 1,300 acres is one of the best in his vicinity, and is improved with new frame dwelling, spacious barns and an orchard of 200 fruit trees. Two hundred acres are fenced and in cultivation. For the last five years, Mr. Long has been engaged in the timber trade in connection with his farming interests, and has been successful in his business transactions. He is a member of the Protestant Methodist Church. He is a Democrat, but takes little interest in politics; his time is given to the interests of his farm, and the education of his family.

JOHN M. McKINNEY, Butler County, was born July 20, 1854, in Ohio County, Ky., where he resided all his life until recently, when he became a resident of Butler County. He is the fourth in a family of twelve children born to Marshall and Eliza McKinney, both of whom are native Kentuckians, and are still living in Ohio County. The grandfather of our subject was John McKinney, a Kentuckian by birth and of Irish descent, being a son of James McKinney, whose father was a native of Ireland, emigrated to America and settled in Virginia about the middle of the eighteenth century. John M. was obliged to assist as much as possible in the support of the family, his father being disabled, and was therefore, deprived of every advantage of school education, though in after life he set assiduously to work to educate himself, which he did to some purpose; is able to transact all ordinary business, and is well posted on the topics of the day. After attaining the age of twenty-one he took charge of his father's farm for six years, and within that time bought 108 acres of land on the waters of Green River, and in Butler County. He has given his attention exclusively to his farming interests, and his farm is well improved with good fences, barns and dwelling; fifty acres are in cultivation, and produce abundant crops of grain and tobacco. The water privileges are excellent, and the land is well adapted to grass; he gives some attention to stock raising. On January, 19, 1881, Mr. McKinney married Margaret A., daughter of James H. Read of Butler County. Mr. and Mrs. McKinney are the parents of two sons: Chester A. and Albert S. Mr. McK. is a member of the Baptist Church. Though not a prohibitionist, his influence is in favor of the cause of temperance. Politically he is a Democrat, but takes no part in politics.

JOSEPH W. McREYNOLDS, Butler County, was born October 14, 1845, in Logan County, Ky., and is a son of William T. and Nancy A. (Stroud) McReynolds, the former a native of Virginia, who was born in April, 1797. At the age of two years W. T. was brought by his parents to Kentucky, locating in Logan County, where he died April 25, 1871; Nancy A. was born January 2, 1802, and died June 10, 1863. She was the mother of the following children: William S., James A., Thomas B., Belle, Sarah C., Presley M., Mary A., Mattie T. and Joseph W. Belle married Porter, and afterward Simmons; Sarah married Duncan; Mary also married a Duncan, and Mattie married a Brown. Joseph W. was brought up on a farm, and obtained a common English education. He was married April 15, 1869, to Mary S., daughter of Foster and Dolly (Gibbs) Gupton, of Logan County, who was born April 12, 1852, and died March 24, 1874. One child was born to this union, Sarah Etta. He was next married September 5, 1877, to Salenda S., daughter of Azariah and Sarepta (Gwaltney) Sweatt, of Logan County, born December 8, 1855. They have two children, Fannie G. and Jessie F. Mr. McReynolds commenced merchandising in 1881 in Dallam's Creek, in Logan County, and in September, 1883, located at Sugar Grove, where he has since resided, and has been successful in business. He is a member of the Masonic order and of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church; in politics he is a Democrat.

JOHN LEWIS MARTIN, Butler County, was born November 27, 1806, in Amherst County, Va. In 1809 he removed with his parents to Garrard County, Ky., and in 1830 located in Butler County, where he has since resided. His father, John Martin, a native of Virginia, died in 1820, aged about sixty years. He married Anna Page, of Amherst County, Va., who died about 1844, aged seventy years. Their children are Elizabeth (Cole), subject, Lucinda (Cole), Margaret (Pitman), and Rebecca A. (Phelps). June 11, 1829, subject was married to Sarah A., daughter of Ebenezer and Mary (Romans) Cole, of Warren County, who was born October 10, 1809. To them have been born Isabelle (Cardwell and Winkfield), Green, Ann (Deweese), Woodford R., John, Warren N., Sarah (Romans), Anthetta (Renfrow), and Euclid C. Mr. Martin was brought up on a farm, and has always followed farming. He owns 400 acres of good land, 200 of which are in the Green River bottoms, and very valuable. He has divided 650 acres among his children. He and wife started about even with the world, but by industry and frugality, have attained to independence. He is a member of the Methodist Church, and in politics is independent.

EUCLID C. MARTIN, Butler County, was born September 28, 1852, on Little Bull Creek, three miles northeast of the mouth of the Barren River, in this county, where he has always resided. (For sketch of ancestors, see sketch of J. L. Martin.) Euclid C. obtained at the free schools of Kentucky a common school education. He was married July 21, 1874, to Mary A., daughter of Alfred and Jane G. (Stewart) Burchfield, of Warren County, Ky., born September 28, 1851. To them have been born the following children: Peter C., Aaron L., Oley M. and Katie J. Mr. Martin is a farmer, and owns 400 acres of well-improved and productive land. In politics he is a Democrat. His wife is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. His wife's sister is Laura M. and her brothers are Alonzo R., and Burrell B. Burchfield. After her father's death, her mother married C. W. Stewart, and their children are Belle D., Jane D. and Theodore W.

LEOPOLD MENDEL, Butler County, was born in Germany, April 29, 1848. His father, Alexander Mendel, is a stock trader by occupation, and resides in his native country. The mother, Harriet (Kahn) Mendel, died in 1880, leaving three sons, who are residents of America, Leopold being the youngest. His early education was such as is prescribed by the law of his native land. He attended school until the age of fourteen years; and four years later he immigrated to America, and settled at Cromwell, Ohio Co., Ky., where he was employed by his brother, as a clerk in a store, for two years. In 1868 he began business for himself by engaging in trade, in clothing, shoes, hats, which business he continued until 1869, when he removed to Rochester, Butler Co., Ky., where he engaged in a general merchandise business, which has grown to immense proportions. His store-rooms are 40x130 feet in size, and he carries an average of $30,000 in stock. Mr. Mendel is one of a firm of three brothers, who own large merchandise establishments in the towns of Dixon, Rochester, Greenville and Russellville. They are also largely interested in a wholesale establishment doing an extensive trade in boots and shoes, in Louisville, Ky. Mr. Mendel gives strict attention to business, and is one of the solid men of Butler County. Politically he is a Democrat, but takes no lively interest in elections. In the year 1879 Mr. Mendel was united in marriage with Florence Bowles, of Ohio County. She died in 1880. His second marriage was in 1881, with Bertha, daughter of Isaac Slaughter, of Louisville, Ky. They are the parents of three children; two—Ira and Hallie—are living.

DR. GEORGE HENDERSON MILLIGAN was born January 30, 1846, in Warren County, Ky., where he grew to manhood. In 1871 he removed to Butler County, and in 1876 located on the Brownsville and Morgantown road, between Big and Little Reedy Creeks, where he has since resided. In 1862 he enlisted in Company A, Twelfth Kentucky Federal Cavalry, and remained in the service until the close of the war, participating in the battles in which his regiment was engaged, and was promoted to the position of quartermaster's sergeant. His father, James W. Milligan, also a native of Warren County, was born in 1818, and is now living in that county. He is the son of Lewis Milligan, a native of Virginia, and who died in 1875, in Warren County. His father, James Milligan of Virginia, was a Revolutionary soldier and died in Warren County, about 1843, at a great age. James W. married Nancy, daughter of Wren Hudnall of Warren County, who was born in 1825, and is now living. From this union sprang James L., subject, Sarah J. (Jones), John J. C., Missouri (deceased), Polly A. (Young and Watt), and Christopher C. Subject obtained a good English education and is well versed in the current literature of the day. January 30, 1873, he was united in marriage to Miss Burrilla, daughter of Daniel M. and Polly (Flener) Smith of Butler County (born February 23, 1850), and to them have been born two children, viz.: Millard and Myrtle. In 1870 subject commenced the study of medicine with Dr. Dolphus Dunn, of Brownsville, and in the fall of that year attended lectures at the university of Louisville where he graduated in 1872. Since that time he has been very successful in the practice of his profession. He is residing upon his farm, consisting of 140 acres of well improved land, which he is cultivating by hired labor. He is a member of the A. F. & A. M., and in politics is identified with the Republican party.

ROBERT BURNS MOREHEAD, physician and surgeon, Morgantown, is the oldest practicing physician in the county of Butler. He was born near Central City, Muhlenburgh Co., Ky., February 25, 1827, and remained in his native place until he attained the age of twenty-six years. He then, in 1854, removed to this county. He was educated in the common schools and commenced the study of medicine with Dr. William H. Yost, a widely known physician of Muhlenburgh. He has continually added to his literary acquirements, and is now ranked as one of the best informed men of the county. His practice is extensive and his success unquestionable. His parents, John and Nancy (Branscomb) Morehead, had four children, of whom our subject is the second; Ann, wife of Hon. Benjamin J. Shaver, and Susan, wife of Thomas J. Eads, both of Greenville, Muhlenburgh County, are his sisters. His only brother, Dr. John W. Morehead, of the same place, is now deceased. Dr. Morehead was married March 13, 1855, to Mary, second daughter of Hon. Thomas Hampton of Butler, who represented this county in the Kentucky legislature, prior to his death, which occurred July 4, 1852, of cholera. His physician contracted the disease from him, and died two hours previously. Mrs. Morehead was born January 23, 1829, in Butler County. They have had seven children: Dr. John Calvin Morehead, a graduate of the Keokuk (Iowa) Medical College, and now practicing in Morgantown; Charles Y., who died of consumption on the 13th of March, 1880; Henry Bascom, Nanie Lee, also died of consumption, in 1881; Mary Carlyn, died November 25, 1883; Annie Laura, died February 5, 1882, and Robert Benjamin. The Doctor's paternal ancestors came from Scotland. His great-grandfather, Branscomb, came from England and settled at Appomattox Court House, near where Gen. Lee surrendered. He was a Revolutionary soldier, and was captured while on picket duty near Yorktown, by scouts from Cornwallis' army. Dr. Morehead was a Henry Clay Whig, and an advocate of emancipation. He was the first of two in Butler, who voted for Abraham Lincoln in 1860; the other gentleman was John H. Sipes. He also voted for Lincoln the second time. At the last presidential election, Dr. Morehead voted for Gov. St. John. Dr. Morehead is a Baptist minister, and pastor of the church at Morgantown.

W. A. NEWTON, merchant, Butler County, was born in the county of Warren, September 14, 1857, and educated at the Morgantown Seminary, and commenced business at Woodbury, September 16, 1884. His father is John Wesley Newton, who was a native of Tennessee, born in 1827, and removed to Warren County, Ky., when our subject was but eight years of age. Twenty-one years ago the family removed to Butler County. John Wesley Newton was married in Warren County to Miss Melvina Kirkland. This union was blessed with eight children, of whom W.A. Newton is the eldest, William Shakespeare, Henry Clay, Bailey Peyton, George B. McClellan, Zachariah Taylor, Julia Ann and Minniozella. Mr. Newton has been engaged extensively in farming and lumbering, and owns a farm of 800 acres of land in the finest section of Butler County. Our subject, W. A. Newton, is one of the largest dealers in general merchandise in this locality, including boots and shoes, groceries, dry goods, farm implements, etc.

C. W. NEEL, stave contractor, Morgantown, Butler Co., Ky., is the son of Volney and Elizabeth (Goodall) Neel; the former being of Georgia descent, born near Woodbury, Butler County, about 1833. The maternal ancestors were from Virginia. They had nine children, all of whom are living, and subject is the eldest. He was born in Butler County, March 3, 1852, and was reared on a farm in the same place. His early advantages were very good, receiving his education at the Morgantown Seminary. He was engaged in farming for himself from January 8, 1873, until the fall of 1877, at which time he began working in the stave and hoop-pole business for Wilshire & Krepke, of Evansville, Ind., and has since deen employed in that business. In June, 1882, he purchased the ferry, known as the Aberdeen Ferry, from Morgantown to Aberdeen. January 2, 1873, he married Miss Fannie, youngest daughter of Cyrus and Mary Shultz. She was born March 11, 1853, in Ohio, and removed to Butler County where she was educated in the public schools. Mr. Neel is a member of the Masonic Lodge, No. 272. His family have united with the Baptist Church. He is chairman of the Republican county committee for Butler County, and is a leading and influential citizen, and is well deserving of the success his industry and energy have given him. He owns two farms of 700 acres of land.

JOHN L. NORRIS, farmer, Butler County, is the son of W. W. and Mary Ewing Norris; the former born in Virginia, March 2, 1807, and settled in Kentucky with his parents in 1811. His paternal grandfather, Clayburn Norris, was an early settler in Cumberland County, Ky. W. W. Norris (subject's father) is still living in Warren County, and is a manufacturer. His mother died January 5, 1880. John L. Norris is the second son and fourth child of a family of nine, only five of whom are now living. He was born in Cumberland County, Ky., October 26, 1840, and at the age of nine years removed with his parents to Warren County, where he received a limited common school education, and was brought up on the farm. In December, 1875, he removed to the valley of the Little Muddy Creek, Butler County, and purchased a large and fertile farm, where he is engaged in stock raising principally, and buys and sells stock. He has met with good success in most of his undertakings, and has made many valuable improvements on his farm. Mr. Norris married February 2, 1865, Margaret J., second daughter of W. L. White, of Warren County. Her father was born in 1801, and her mother, Charlotte (Taylor) White, was born October 8, 1805. Both are now deceased. Mrs. Norris is a native of Warren County; born March 5, 1837. She is the mother of four children: Lottie May, wife of James A. Stewart, of Butler County; Jessie G., Robert Ewing, and Hallie Maggie. Of his father's family living there are James E., residing in Texas; Annie R., wife of William Humphrey, in Texas; John L.; Nancy E., wife of B. D. Cole, of Warren County; Rev. R. W. Norris, clergyman of Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and now pastor of Macomb, Ill. In September, 1861, Mr. Norris enlisted in Company A, Eleventh Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and served until September, 1864. He was captured at the Holston River, near Knoxville, and was stripped of his clothing by the Eighth Texas Rangers, and was taken to Richmond and Belle Isle, bareheaded and barefooted, where he remained nine months and eight days, and came very near perishing of hunger and cold. At the age of twenty-four Mr. Norris commenced life with nothing, but by industry and intelligent management has made a good home for himself and family. Mr. and Mrs. Norris are members of the Presbyterian Church, and both are known in the community as liberal and kind-hearted people. He is a leading citizen, does not affiliate with any party, but votes for whom he thinks is the best man.

M. D. PAYNE, blacksmith, Butler County, is the son of J. B. and Elizabeth (Hall) Payne. The former is a native of Kentucky. He was born in the eastern part of the State, but removed to Butler County thirteen years ago, and is now living with his son, at the advanced age of eighty-four. Mr. Payne's mother was a Virginian, who immigrated to Kentucky and first made her home at Bowling Green; she died in 1870. Our subject is the youngest of seven children and was born April 3, 1837. He went to school in Warren County and learned his trade from his father, who was also a blacksmith. In 1862, Mr. Payne was married to Miss Melissa Pendley, daughter of Solomon and Nancy (Sullivan) Pendley, both now deceased. They are blessed with five children: Josie, Mary Martha, Ida Jane, William Robert, and Solomon Moses. Mr. Payne owns a small farm of twenty-two acres and works industriously at his trade.

BERRY M. PEAY, Butler County, was born January 31, 1852, on the place where he now resides in the southern part of this county. His father, Newman M. Peay, a native of Coffee County, Tenn., was born in 1813; was a Baptist minister, and served as captain in the Eleventh Kentucky (Federal) Infantry in the late war, and died in February, 1884. He was the son of Joseph Peay (whose father, John Peay, came from Ireland), of North Carolina, who was a soldier in the war of 1812, and was in the battle of New Orleans. He died about 1850. Newman M. Peay, the father of Berry M., married Mary C., daughter of Isaac Henry, of Coffee County (born in 1812 and now living). From their union sprang Sophrona C. (Belcher), Joseph H., George H. (deceased), Thomas J., James M. (deceased), Elizabeth E., Mira V. (Mathis), Amanda P. (Andrews), Ezekiel E. and Berry M. The latter in youth enjoyed excellent educational advantages, and having been nine years engaged in teaching he has improved his opportunities. He was married February 26, 1874, to Asberie P., daughter of Paten and Eliza (Russ) McCoy, of Butler County (born March 10, 1856), and to them have been born Everett B., James C., Walter C., Ada P., and Gertrude C. Mr. Peay is a farmer, and is now the owner of 200 acres of productive land, well improved. He is a member of the Missionary Baptist Church, and in politics a Prohibitionist.

DAVID HALL PENDLEY, Butler County, was born September 29, 1836, in this county, where he has always resided. He is a son of Smith and Sarah (Whitaker) Pendley —the former born in South Carolina, and a son of James Pendley of that State; he was brought to this county when he was but a child, where he made his home through life, and where he died in 1864, at the age of sixty; the latter was a daughter of Henry Whitaker, of this county, and died in November 22, 1882. Their children were as follows: Miles, Levi, Elizabeth, David H., Amelia, Solomon and Smith. On the 21st of November, 1859, David H. was married to Elizabeth J. Tibbs, of Butler County, who was born October 24, 1843, and died July 14, 1864. To them were born Nancy C. (Proctor), and Sarah (deceased). He was next married April 26, 1867, to Mrs. Mary E. Parks, nee Shaver, of this county. Mr. Pendley was reared a farmer, which occupation he followed until 1880, when he embarked in merchandising, and in which he has been successfully engaged ever since. He also owns a well stocked farm, comprising 260 acres of good land, in a fine state of cultivation. He is a member of the United Baptist Church, and in politics independent —voting for the man, not the party.

HON. JULIAN N. PHELPS was born in Butler County, Ky., March 7, 1809, and is the eldest of fifteen children born to James and Nellie (Jones) Phelps, natives of Green County, and of Scotch-Irish and English descent respectively. James Phelps received his early education in his native county, but while yet a young man, in the latter part of the last century, removed to what is now Butler County, Ky., which was then a part of Ohio County, and almost an unbroken wilderness. Here he was afterward married; bought wild land on the waters of Welch's Creek, erected a log-cabin, and subsequently improved a farm, upon which he resided for many years; then removed to Edmonson County, where he resided some five or six years; returned to Butler County and again bought wild land, adjoining his first purchase, where he improved another farm and resided for several years; then sold out and bought a farm and corn-mill on big Reedy Creek, same county, upon which he resided for some five or six years, after which he made his home among his children until his death, in 1863. He and wife were from early life members of the United Baptist Church; he was also for many years a captain in the State militia. His mother, Nancy (Nail) Phelps, the grandmother of Hon. Julian N. Phelps, was killed by the Indians soon after settling in Green County; and her husband Julian Phelps, was severely wounded at the same time; the whole family only escaped massacre through the courage and forethought of his brother, William Phelps. Hon. Julian N. Phelps received such an education as could be obtained at the early schools of the Kentucky frontier; he has, however, by his own exertions, acquired a fair practical business education. He was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority; he then bought a part of the old homestead in Butler County, and afterward bought the entire farm, to which he added other lands from time to time until he was the owner of some 600 acres, a part of which he has since sold. Here he has been extensively and successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits ever since. For the past eight years he has also been engaged in merchandising at Brooklyn, in connection with farming, and is now doing a thriving business; he sawed most of the lumber, with which his farm buildings were built, with a whip saw. Mr. Phelps represented Butler and Edmonson Counties in the lower house of the State legislature for three terms of two years each, viz.: from 1851 to 1857. He was married in September, 1829, to Polly Duvall, a native of Nelson County, Ky.; born September 3, 1808, a daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth (Rickets) Duvall. Mr. Phelps and wife have no children of their own, but have reared five orphan children, all of whom are now grown and married. Mr. Phelps' maternal grandfather, James Jones, was a veteran of the Revolutionary war. Mr. Phelps belongs to no church, but holds to the doctrines of the Universalist Church. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and a Democrat.

ESQ. JAMES M. PHELPS was born October 31, 1827, one mile east of the mouth of the Barren River, in Butler County, Ky., and he was reared and continued to reside in this vicinity. His father, Julian R. Phelps, a native of Warren County, was born January 20, 1801, removed in childhood with his parents to Butler County; an extensive farmer, owning thirty slaves and over 3,000 acres of land, and died on this place, March 18, 1856. He was the son of Nicholas Phelps, of Virginia, a soldier in the Revolutionary war; a pioneer and Indian fighter in Kentucky; died about 1840 at an advanced age. His children were John, Samuel, William, Jesse, Polly (Homes), Sally (Lacefield) and Betsey (Bacon). Julian R. married Sarah, daughter of Jacob and Mary Smith of Butler County, (born July 23, 1803, died January 7, 1860), and their offspring are Mark H., Eliza J. (Skillon), subject, Bedford F., Mary (Garstine), Julia A. (Hoody), Martha B. (Lucas), Elmeda (Cohn), America (Renfrow), Bertha (Souders), and Sarah F. (McFarlan). May 13, 1852, our subject was married to Miss Polly A., daughter of Peter M. and Sarah A. (Hudnall) Reeves of Warren County, (born August 14, 1835), and to them have been born Dabna A., Bedford N., Sarah B. (Ferguson), Bertha J. (Austin), Etna A. (Hamill), George B. Mc., Idomie, Lizzie P., Laura M., Minnie H. H., Zerilda and Mary (deceased). Subject served his community five years as magistrate and member of the court of claims of Butler County. He is a successful farmer by occupation, owning 1,000 acres of well improved and productive land in good condition, and 400 acres of which is in a high state of cultivation. This magnificent farm is situated in the bend of Green River, and the dwelling is on the bluffs four miles above Woodbury, by water. Mr. Phelps is a member of the Masonic fraternity; also of the Christian Church, and in politics a Democrat. He lost two slaves by the late war. He is now largely engaged in raising and selling live stock.

JOHN PHELPS was born in Butler County, Ky , October 15, 1858, and is a son of Amos and Nancy (Johnson) Phelps, both of whom are natives of Butler County, Ky. John Phelps received a common school education in youth, and was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority. He then farmed on shares for two years, after which he bought a partially improved farm of 240 acres on the Green River, three miles northeast of Morgantown, on which he still resides. The farm is now well improved. He was married February 1, 1884, to Rebecca Johnson, also a native of Butler County, Ky. One little daughter gladdens their home—Effie. In politics Mr. Phelps is a Democrat, and is one of the enterprising young farmers of the county.

JAMES F. PHILLIPS, proprietor of the Richmond House, Morgantown, was born in Monmouthshire, England, October 8, 1843. He was the third of six children, five of whom are now living; a sister, Annie, resides at Long Island, and a brother, Edwin, in Hopkins County, Ky. His parents are Evan and Jemima Phillips, the former now seventy-five and the latter seventy-three years of age, both residing in England. Our subject was reared and received his education in his native land until the age of twenty-one, when he left home and became a practical miner. Soon afterward he removed to America, landing in New York May 5, 1868. He immediately removed to the State of Ohio, where he followed the business of mining one year. He then came to Boyd County, Ky., and became a contractor in the Ashland mines. He remained there five years, and in 1879 removed to Clay County, Ind., and soon after settled in Hopkins County, Ky., and was in business there four years; thence came to Mining District, Butler County, where he became superintendent of mines, in which business he was engaged four years. In October, 1884, he removed to Morgantown and purchased the Richmond House, which he has refitted and furnished. His table, rooms and all the appointments of the house are first class. Mr. Phillips was married October 15, 1883, to Mrs. Frank Haffley, a native of Moulton, Ala., where she was born March 5, 1848. She was the fourth child of Jacob Odom, and was brought up at Tuscumbia, Ala.

HON. DAVID POOLE, Butler County, was born in Muhlenburgh County, Ky., May 12, 1835. His early life was passed amid the scenes and labors incident to farm life. He received a fair common school education, and at the age of twenty-one years engaged as a clerk in the dry goods house of H. B. Wiggins, of Rochester, Butler County, where he remained for three or four years. His next step was to join the Federal army. On the 12th of October, 1861, he enlisted in the Eleventh Regiment Kentucky Volunteers, and was commissioned second lieutenant of Company F, of that regiment. He was subsequently promoted to first lieutenant, and rose through merit to the rank of captain, in which rank he served until the 14th of December, 1864, when he received an honorable discharge. He then returned to his home in Rochester, where he engaged in the dry goods business, which he continued four years; then entered the drug and grocery trade, which he has followed successfully up to the present time (1885). On the 16th of October, 1866, Mr. Poole married Margaret B. Rhoads, of Muhlenburgh County, Ky. Mrs. Poole died April 14, 1883, leaving six children. In the year 1875 Mr. Poole's friends placed him in nomination for election to a seat in the legislature of Kentucky. With his opponent (Hon. J. Monroe Cook) he made a canvass of the counties of Edmonson and Butler, but in the election was defeated by two votes. He quietly submitted to his defeat, and again turned his attention to merchandising. In 1880 he was nominated for State senator for the Eighth Senatorial District of Kentucky, consisting of the counties of Muhlenburgh, Ohio and Butler. He received a unanimous nomination by the Republican party in his district, was elected by a majority of 480 votes, and has served two sessions in the general assembly of his State. Mr. Poole is a man of liberal views, and bears a good record as a public spirited citizen and as a man of strict business principles. In religious matters he is a liberal thinker, believing in honesty to his neighbors, charity to mankind and the sacred fulfillment of personal obligations. March 4, 1885, Mr. Poole married Miss M. Etna Prather. Her conduct toward the orphaned children of Mr. Poole's family is marked with firm rule and great kindness. She commands the love and esteem of all who know her. Mr. Poole's father, Joseph R. Poole, was of English descent and a native of Maryland, from which State he emigrated to Kentucky in 1825, and settled at Harlan Lake, in Union County, where he followed farming. His death occurred in 1847. He was married to Elizabeth Guiler in 1815. She died in 1855, aged fifty-four years.

PINKNEY POOLE, Butler County, was born at Harlan Lake, Union Co., Ky., March 11, 1824. He is a son of Joseph and Elizabeth (Guiler) Poole, who were married in 1815. Joseph Poole, in early life, manufactured salt, at Harlan Lake, and, in 1830, engaged in farming, which he followed until his death in 1847; his widow, a native of Virginia, died in 1855, aged fifty-four years. Pinkney Poole is the fourth in a family of eight children. He remained with his parents until 1847, and then engaged in flatboating, and trading in timber on Green River, for five years. In 1852, he made an overland trip to California, and there worked in the gold mines until 1856, when he returned to Kentucky, bought a farm of 100 acres in Muhlenburgh County, and farmed until 1865; then leased his farm and removed to Rochester, Butler County, and engaged in the tobacco trade, which he has followed successfully for twenty years. In the years 1865 and 1866 he sold dry goods, and in 1867 and 1868 sold drugs in connection with the tobacco trade; since that time he has given all of his attention to the tobacco business and tending his farm. In 1868, he married Sarah C., daughter of Henry Meyers, of Muhlenburgh County. They are the parents of eight children, five of whom are living: David H., Mary S., Napoleon B., Edward and Nancy. The eldest son has lately graduated from Eastman College, at Poughkeepsie, N. Y. Mr. Poole is a Republican, and takes an active interest in political questions. He has been very successful in business and is numbered among the "solid men" of Butler County.

CLARK T. PORTER, jailer and proprietor of the Farmers' House, Morgantown, was born on the Big Bend of the Green River, five miles north of Morgantown, May 22, 1822. There he was reared until the age of twelve, when his parents removed to the north bank of the Green River, near Wilson's Ferry, and later to the mouth of Indian Camp Creek. His first wife was Adeline Harreld, to whom he was married in 1844. The fruit of this union was three children: Mary Elizabeth, wife of Jasper C. Berry; Buena Vista, the widow of Granville Hampton, and Nancy Helen, the wife of Samuel Austin. Mrs. Porter departed this life in 1854. Mr. Porter's second marriage was with Margaret Ellen Austin, in September, 1858. To her there were born seven children, four now living: Robert Benjamin, Ann Eliza, John C. and Margaret R. The death of Mr. Porter's second wife occurred in 1878. His third wife was Nancy C. Berry, the widow of Moses C. Berry. Her children by her former husband are James William, Samuel Ridley, Virgil, Martha Jane, and Thomas Newton. Mr. Porter's father was Benjamin Porter, and his mother was Mary (Proctor) Porter; the former a native of Butler County and the latter of Logan County. His grandfather was Col. John Porter, of Virginia, a Revolutionary soldier, and one of the earliest settlers of Butler County. Mr. Porter followed agriculture until September, 1882, when he was elected jailer for the county of Butler, and removed to Morgantown. December 1, 1883, he commenced keeping the hotel on the corner of Main and Ohio Streets, known as the Farmers' Hotel. He and his family are members of the Baptist Church, and he is known as a gentleman of strict integrity.

THOMAS T. PORTER, Butler County, was born June 28, 1840, on the place where he now resides in the south part of this county. His father, Benjamin Porter, a native of Prince Edward County, Va., was born in 1785, and removed to Logan (now Butler County), Ky., in 1799. He died in 1859. He was twice married; first to Elizabeth Ewing, by whom he had seven children, viz.: David, William, Florence (Mahon), Hugh, James, Benjamin, Margaret (Hunt) and Mary (Turner). His second wife was Nancy P., daughter of William Hutchison, of Logan County, born in 1813, died in 1867. She had three children: Thomas T., Jane E. (Crane), and Virgil W. Thomas T. procured a common school education, such as was to be obtained in the county schools. He was married, March 1, 1866, to Susan, daughter of Shepherd and Martha (Foster) McReynolds, of Logan County, born in 1847. To them have been born Ella M., Cecil, Arthur and Lizzie D. Mr. Porter is a farmer and has 375 acres of valuable and productive land. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity; also a member of the Presbyterian Church.

VIRGIL W. PORTER, Butler County, was born August 18, 1845, on the farm where he now resides, in the southern portion of this county. (For ancestry see sketch of Thomas T. Porter.) Virgil W. Porter has been twice married; first, December 10, 1868, to Nancy M., daughter of Samuel F. and Eliza (Ewing) Porter, of Logan County, born November 3, 1848, died on August 20, 1883. To them were born Laura E., Annie P., Mattie E. and Benjamin S. He was next married, January 15, 1885, to Flutie E., daughter of Thomas and Mary (Young) Ewing, of Logan County. Mr. Porter is a farmer, and owns about 200 acres of fine farming land which he has in a good state of cultivation. He also has a thrifty young orchard, which is his especial care. He is a member of the A. F. & A. M.; is also a member of the Presbyterian Church.

QUINN & SHARER. — G. W. QUINN, of this firm, is the son of Samuel F. and Nancy (Green) Quinn, both natives of Kentucky, the former born in 1804, and by occupation a farmer; the latter born in 1813, and died in 1864. G. W. Quinn was born in Henderson County, September 2, 1854, and is the youngest of ten children, only six of whom are now living. He was educated at Lexington. He commenced business in the fall of 1882 as successor to H. J. Young. Mr. Sharer was made partner in the spring of 1884. They have all kinds of merchandise for the country trade, and do a business of $10,000 a year. In August, 1882, Mr. Quinn was commissioned postmaster for Davenport, and has since continued in office. Mr. Quinn was married, February 13, 1881, to Miss Mary E., youngest daughter of A. C. and M. E. Brown, of Rockport, Ohio County. They have had two children: Maud (deceased) and Mable E.

JAMES EDWARD SHARER. The great-grandfather of this gentleman came from Maryland many years ago, and was among the first to settle in Butler County, (then Logan) where many of his descendants have since had their homes, on and near the old homestead. The sawed log-house, built by the grandfather of Mr. Sharer, is still standing, with cellar 20x20 feet, and one story, spring, milk-house and fire-place in cellar. The house and floor are pinned together, the latter being the same floor that was placed there 100 years ago. Mr. Sharer is one of the ten children of Henry Milton and Frances J. (Harmon) Sharer, both natives of Butler County, and still residing there, as also are all of the family, each eminently successful in farming and other employments. They are members of the Protestant Methodist Church. Mrs. Sharer, mother of our subject, is one of the Whitaker family, whose biography will be found elsewhere. Our subject was born near the old homestead in Morgantown Precinct, May 9, 1846, where he has since remained, receiving his education in the common schools, and entering into business in 1870. In February of the same year, he married Miss Lizzie Sweatt, the youngest daughter of William and Elizabeth Sweatt, of London District. She was born February 15, 1850. They have six children: Okolona, Yedefonso, Eldon, Albin, Halley, Leonidas Adolphus. As before stated, he entered into partnership with G. W. Quinn, March 15, 1884. He owns a fine farm located on the headwaters of the Renfrew Creek, three and a half miles south of Morgantown; it contains 175 acres. In politics, Mr. Sharer has been a Democrat, but has lately become a Greenbacker; he is a strong temperance man, and never purchased a drink of anything intoxicating and has never used tobacco in any form.

WILLIAM WASHINGTON READ was born in Butler County, Ky., on April 24, 1819. He is a son of Cunningham Read, a native of Hanover, Va., born in 1790; who came to Kentucky when a lad of ten years, with his father Moses Read; he was married to Margaret (Ewing) Porter in 1814, in Butler County; she died September 16, 1824, leaving five children, William W. being the third. His second marriage was with Eliza McReynolds and to them were born three children. Cunningham Read was a farmer; he died in August 30, 1834. Moses Read was a Scot by birth. After his marriage he emigrated from Scotland and settled in Virginia where he remained and followed the life of a farmer until his death, which occurred in——. William W., after the death of his father, remained with his mother and supported the family by his labor until he was eighteen years of age. Then for one year he was overseer on a plantation, afterward followed the river trade, flat-boating and rafting for three years, until 1840. On May 14, in that year, he was married to Servary B. Ewing, of Butler County, Ky., they are the parents of five children, all of whom lived to be married, though only one now survives—Mrs. Minerva Woods, of Coffee County, Kas. After marriage Mr. Read removed to Todd County, where he learned the tanner's trade, which he has followed in connection with farming up to the present time. In December, 1857, he bought 500 acres of land on Mud River, in Butler County, where he now resides. His farm is one of the best in his section, 100 acres of it being well fenced and in a fine state of cultivation and improved with good comfortable dwelling, large barn, also a tanyard and shoe-maker's shop, and orchard of 150 fruit trees. Mr. Read gives most of his attention to raising of grain. He had few advantages for school education but has acquired a fair business education, through his own efforts. He is practical, and manages his business with tact and success. He is a Master Mason in Rochester Lodge No. 270; also a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and favors the temperance cause by example as well as precept. He is a Republican and during the Rebellion was a strong Union man. Mr. Read is a public spirited citizen and does much for the improvement of the county around him.

JAMES D. RENDER is the son of Joshua and Mattie D. (Forsythe) Render, the former a native of McHenry, Ohio County, born April, 1835, and the latter born in Butler County in the same year. His father is one of the most prosperous farmers of Butler County, and owns a large and productive farm in the Big Bend of the Green River, opposite the mouth of Indian Camp Creek. He was married to Mattie D. Forsythe in 1856. This union was blessed with seven children, of whom our subject, James D., is the eldest, and was born in Butler County, October 7, 1858; Lillian, wife of H. J. Shaver, residing at Greenville, Muhlenburgh County; Luther H., Mattie Irene, Ellington, Clarence and Oakley. James D. received a liberal education in the common schools and also graduated from the Evansville (Ind.) Commercial College, in 1880, and in the same year made the canvass for circuit clerk, but was defeated by C. Carson by nine votes. After the death of Mr. Carson, in 1883, Mr. Render was elected to the same office. He is also a beautiful penman, and his efficiency as a public officer is well known. He and his parents are members of the Baptist Church. In politics he is a Republican.

J. WILSON RENDER, Butler County. Among the many well known and influential families of Butler and Ohio Counties, none are more respected than the Render family. One of the prominent representatives of this family is John W. Render, the subject of this sketch, and the son of Joshua and Mary (Jackson) Render, and the grandson of Joshua Render, the ancestor of the Renders in this part of the State. John Wilson Render was born in the county of Ohio, November 15, 1837, and his parents dying when he was quite young, he lived with an elder brother, J. S. Render, until 1860, when he commenced farming for himself in the Little Bend of the Green River, and in 1867 removed to his present farm on the Big Bend. Mr. Render was married August 23, 1866, to Emily F., youngest daughter of Davis Forsythe, born in Woodbury, Butler County, in 1845. Mr. and Mrs. Render are the parents of five children, only three of whom are living: Mary Irene (deceased), John Bradley, Ora Belle (deceased), William Elmer and Carlie D. Mr. Render is one of Butler County's successful and enterprising farmers, and is the owner of a large and fertile farm of 250 acres of land with commodious and pleasant house, situated on the high road from Morgantown to Hartford. He and his family are members of the Baptist Church. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity 272, Logansport, and past master of the same. He has also, for several years, represented his lodge at the Grand Lodge at Louisville. Mr. Render received a good common school education, and commenced life with comparitively nothing; his success is owing largely to his steady industry and intelligent management.

THOMAS P. RENDER, Butler County, is the son of Christopher and Lucinda E. Render, both natives of Ohio county. The father, born in 1816, followed the business of agriculture and was a magistrate for many years, an honored member of the Baptist Church, and died in 1882. His mother, an earnest Christian lady, member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, departed this life in 1876. Their children are John C., born in 1845; William L., born in 1849; Thomas P. (subject), born in July 8, 1855. Received a good common school education and commenced business for himself at the age of fifteen, or in 1870; removed to Coffee County, Kas., where he engaged in farming, and in the spring of 1877 removed to Texas and engaged in stock raising; in 1882 returned to Kentucky where he owns a part interest in 189 acres of fine land in Butler County. He is a young man of enterprise, and is a member of the Democratic party.

EDWARD RENFROW, Butler County, was born in March, 1822, in Trigg County, Ky., and in infancy removed with his parents to Butler County, where he has since resided. His father, Mark Renfrow, a native of Georgia, and a soldier in the war of 1812, died about the year 1858, at the age of seventy-six years. He married Anna, daughter of Edward Woolridge, of Christian County, who died in 1857, at the age of seventy years. Their children are Millie (Baker), Russell, Sally (Good), Jackson, Edward, David (deceased), William, Washington, Louisiana (Taylor) and Mark. Subject has been twice married; first, January 9, 1840, to Judith E., daughter of John and Susan (Carpenter) Hendrix of Warren County (born in 1830, and died in 1874.) To them were John, Melissa (Martin), David, Joseph, Lucy J. (deceased), Edward, Mahala and Rice. He was next married March 6, 1879 to Ann, daughter of John L. Martin, of Butler County (born in 1850). This union has been blessed by the birth of one child—Sallie Elizabeth. Subject is a farmer and owns 700 acres of productive land. He has given 350 acres to his children. He is a member of the Reformed Church.

JAMES T. RIVES, Butler County, was born in DeKalb County, Tenn., March 16, 1840. His father, Richard Rives, was a native of Virginia, and emigrated when a young man, with his father, to east Tennessee, where he married Rebecca, daughter of James Taylor, of White County. Mr. Rives came to Kentucky in 1853, and bought a farm on Mud River, in Butler County, where he resided and followed farming until his death, January 23, 1885, at the age of seventy-three years. His widow still survives aged about seventy-six years. They had nine children, of whom James T. is the fourth. The latter remained with his parents until September 21, 1861, when he joined the Federal army; enlisted in Company E, Twenty-sixth Regiment, Kentucky Volunteers, in the command of Col. Burbridge. He was engaged in the battle of Shiloh, where he received a severe gun-shot wound; was afterward engaged in the battle of Nashville, and numerous other battles and skirmishes; was discharged at the close of the war at Salisbury, N. C., August 10, 1865; then returned to his home in Butler County, and for five years followed farming; then sold the farm and bought a hotel property in Rochester, where he now resides. In July, 1865, while home on veteran furlough, Mr. Rives married Almina J. Williams, of Muhlenburgh County, Ky. They are the parents of six children, four of whom are living: Rupert S., Herbert E., Alberta A. and Ina B. Mr. Rives is, politically, a Republican. He is a member of the order A. F. & A. M., Rochester Lodge, No 270, and has held the offices of warden and deacon. Mr. and Mrs. Rives are active and consistent members of the Christian Church.

ADAM RONE, farmer, was born in Butler County, September 3, 1847, and is the second of five children; the eldest is Mrs. Francis Doolin; the others are Virgil Andrew, residing on the Little Bend of the Green River; Jasper Rone, on the Big Bend of the river, and Mrs. Lundy Graves. His parents were John and Salley (Flener) Rone, the former a native of Butler County, died in 1882, and the latter of Butler County, and resides with her daughter, Mrs. Graves. Our subject started in the business of farming and lumbering at the age of twenty-one, and has met with good success in acquiring property. He owns a fertile farm of 163 acres, with fine farm buildings, at Rone's Ferry, Little Bend of the Green River. His father, John Rone, was an extensive land owner, and settled all his children on good farms in Butler County. Mr. Rone was married April 30, 1879, to Mrs. Dolly McSpedden, widow of John McSpedden; her maiden name was Hatcher; she was born in Wilson County, Tenn., in 1853. She has one child by her former husband—Andrew S. McSpedden.

ALEXANDER C. RUNNER, Butler County, was born November 10, 1825, in Warren County, Ky., where he grew to manhood and lived until 1878, when he removed to Butler County, where he has since resided. His father, William Runner, a native of Maryland, removed in childhood with his parents, to Warren County, Ky., where he is now living, at the age of eighty-seven years. He is the son of Adam Runner, who died in Warren County. William was twice married; first, to Margaret, daughter of Christian and Polly (Whalen) Penner, of Warren County (died in 1828). From their union sprang Zorilda J. (Anderson), John A., subject and Mary E. (Taylor). He next married Sarah Watt, and their children are Silas M., William E. and Richard B. Subject enjoyed only limited educational advantages in youth, but by self-improvement and application, has obtained a fair business education. He has been twice married; the first time on June 12, 1849, to Adeline M., daughter of Jesse and Sarah (Floyd) Watt, of Warren County, born September 2, 1830; died November 14, 1868. To them were born Jesse A., William T., Sarah M. (deceased), Mary E. (deceased), and John M. Mr. Runner's second marriage took place June 14, 1869, to Zorilda J., daughter of James F. and Emery A. (Moore) Gott, of Edmonson County, who was born May 21, 1843. This union has been blessed by the birth of James H., Nancy A., Charles B., George M. and Robert C. Subject has served as magistrate and member of the court of claims for ten years in Warren County, and has acted in the same capacity for the past four years in this county. He is a farmer by occupation, having 200 acres of productive land in good condition, and a high state of cultivation. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity; also a member of the Christian Church.

SAMUEL H. RUSH, Butler County, was born March 20, 1839, in Sumner County, Tenn.; in 1840, he removed with his parents to Simpson County, Ky., where he grew to manhood. In 1869, he located near Berry's Lick, in Butler County, where he has since resided. His father, John Rush, long a Baptist minister, was a native of South Carolina, and removed with his parents to Tennessee in childhood, and is now living in Simpson County, aged seventy-two years. He is the son of John Rush of South Carolina, a soldier in the war of 1812, who died in Missouri about 1855, very old. John Rush (subject's father) married Susanna, daughter of Frederick and Polly Brown, of Sumner County, Tenn. (died in 1870, at the age of fifty-six years). Their offspring are Alfred J., Samuel H., Lucy A., Frederick M., Elizabeth E. (McGuire), Martha S. (Walden), John R., Effie P. (Span), and Joseph W. May 29, 1862, Samuel H. Rush married Sarah J., daughter of John W. and Lucinda (Dixon) Carpenter, of Simpson County (born March 6, 1844). To them have been born Lucinda J. (Tyree), Martha H., John H. (deceased), William A., Ira M., Ody W. and Rotha E. (twins), Mary R., Ida P. (deceased), and James E. Mr. Rush has served as magistrate and member of the court of claims of Butler County for six years, which position he still holds. He is a farmer, and has 110 acres of good land, in a high state of cultivation. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and of the old regular Baptist Church.

JAMES H. SATTERFIELD, Butler County, was born April 14, 1838, in Allen County, Ky., where he grew to manhood. In 1867 he removed to Dakota County, Minn., and in 1875 he returned to Kentucky, and located in Warren County. In 1876 he settled in Butler County, where he has since resided. In 1861 he enlisted in the Ninth Kentucky (Federal) Infantry, remaining in the field but three months, after which he was engaged in the recruiting service. His father, Henry Satterfield, a native of Maury County, Tenn., died in 1861, at the age of fifty years. He was the son of Ephraim Satterfield, a native of Virginia, who died about 1850. Henry married Mary, daughter of John M. Garrison, of Allen County, Ky. (now living at the age of seventy-five years). Their offspring are Louisa J. (Roy), David E., Samuel A., James H., Ruth M. (Massey), John E., Euphema P. (Liles), Hettie C. (Jones), Martha C. (deceased), Sarah E. (Hues), Joseph W. H. and Abraham W. James H. Satterfield has twice been married; first on September 15, 1859, to Melissa A., daughter of James and Cynthia (Woodcock) Gibson, of Allen County (died in 1877). To them were born Henry W., John C., Sidney R., James D., Martha A. and Mary C. He was next married, in 1878, to Lucinda B., daughter of Solomon and Sarah J. (Deweese) Phelps, of this county. Their union has been blessed with the birth of Martha B., Alonzo T. and Minnie E. Mr. Satterfield is a farmer, and owns 1,340 acres of land, where he now resides, and 425 acres in Tennessee.

CYRUS C. SHULTZ, Butler County, is a native of Ohio County, Ky., born March 16, 1854. He is a son of Matthew Shultz, who was also a native of Ohio County, born May 8, 1824, and who married Sallie Brown, of Ohio County, in 1844. She died early after marriage, and in the year —— occurred his second marriage, which was with Eliza Williams, of Ohio County. Matthew Shultz departed this life in 1874, on the fiftieth anniversary of his birth. He followed farming from his youth; was successful in life, and accumulated a fine property. Joseph Shultz, the grandfather of Cyrus C., was of German descent, and by birth a Kentuckian. Cyrus C. is the youngest of a family of four daughters and one son, and upon him devolved, to a certain extent, the overseeing of affairs on the farm. His early education was consequently confined to the common schools, which he was able to attend during the winter for some years, and thus laid the foundation for a fair business education, which he has acquired principally by home reading and close application to business. He is the owner of 300 acres of excellent land lying on the waters of Green River. His farm is well improved and well kept, and is in a high state of cultivation; all of which he owes to his own efforts, and the assistance of his wife, Cynthia E. Drozenden. They were married in 1875, and are acceptable members of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Shultz is a Democrat, and gives some attention to politics in the interests of his friends. He is one of the popular and rising young farmers of Butler County.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN SMITH, miller, Morgantown, Butler Co., Ky., is the fourth child of Liberty R. and Cynthia Ann (Lewis) Smith, the former a miller, millwright and cabinet workman, born in 1812, in Virginia, and the latter born in 1813, in Green County, Ky. They had seven children: Daniel E. W., James P., Mary L. (wife of W. S. Overstreet), B. F., Margaret C. V. (deceased), Diocletian A. and Sarah J. In Hart County, Ky., on March 17, 18—, B. F. Smith first saw the light, but his boyhood was passed in Green County, where his parents soon removed. On September 9, 1869, he married Mattie J., daughter of Johnson and Harriet D. (McChesney) Monroe, by whom he had two children: Lelia V. and Leroy (deceased). Mrs. Smith died in June, 1876, and our subject was afterward married to M. E. Wand, youngest daughter of Judge Thomas P. Wand, of Morgantown, born in Woodbury, in 1853. They have three children: Robert Thomas, Leslie Albin and Edna May. Mr. Smith commenced milling when he was quite young, about fifteen years ago, and is now one of the principal owners of the Morgantown steam-mill. He is a member of the Baptist Church, belongs to the Masonic fraternity, and is a strong temperance advocate and a Democrat.

DANIEL M. SMITH was born in Morgantown, Butler Co., Ky., December 14, 1811, and was the first white child born in that place. He is a son of Jacob and Mary (Barker) Smith, the former of whom was a native of Pennsylvania, and the latter of Maryland. They were of German and English descent, respectively. When but a small boy Jacob Smith removed with his mother to Maryland, his father, Adam Smith, being absent in the Continental army during the Revolutionary war, where he remained throughout the entire struggle, and was absent so long that his friends had given him up as dead. In Maryland young Jacob received his early education, but while yet a young man, in the latter part of the last century, he immigrated to eastern Kentucky, coming down the Alleghany and Ohio Rivers, first landing at Maysville, and from thence he removed to Mercer County, Ky., where he was married in 1800. In early life he learned the blacksmith trade, which he continued to follow, in connection with farming, all his life. In 1808 he removed with his family to Russellville, Logan County, Ky., where he remained some three years. In the fall of 1811, he came to Morgantown (then just laid out), Butler County, where he resided until his death, which occurred July 20, 1854, in his eighty-second year. He and wife were devoted members of the Methodist Episcopal Church for more than forty years. Daniel Morgan Smith received such an education as the schools of the country afforded in his youth. He was employed on his father's farm and in his shop until he was twenty-five years old, after which he located a squatter's claim, some seven miles east of Morgantown, Butler County, upon which he erected a cabin and commenced to improve the farm, upon which he still resides. Some years later he bought the land, and now owns a well-improved farm of 180 acres. He has always given considerable attention to the raising of stock. He has held the office of assessor, and also of constable. He was married January 24, 1837, to Polly Flener, a native of Butler County, Ky., who was born March 6, 1818. Thirteen children blessed their union, nine of whom—four sons and five daughters—are yet living, all of whom are married, except two sons. Their names are as follows: Louisa J. Romans, Sallie Flener, Columbus B., Peplina Rogers, Berrilla Miligan, Powel C., Lavaga A., Daniel Morgan, Jr., and Paridine A. Flener. The maternal grandfather of our subject, John Barker, was also a veteran in the Revolution. Mr. Smith belongs to no church or secret order. In politics he is a Democrat.

DR. JOHN F. STROTHER is one of the respected citizens and leading physicians of Butler County, Ky., and a son of John Strother, a native of Virginia, who was born in 1784, and who married a Miss Kilgour of Culpeper County, in 1807; she died in 1809, leaving one child, Solomon. After the death of his wife, Mr. Strother removed to Robertson County, Tenn., where, in 1812, he married Miss Tabitha Chick. This marriage was blessed by the birth of five children, of which number, Dr. Strother is the youngest, and was born September 2, 1824. John Strother was engaged in the war of 1812–14, in which he held the rank of captain, and fought in the battle of New Orleans, where he received several wounds. After being discharged from service, he returned to his farm in Robertson County, where he resided until his death. After the death of his father in 1840, Dr. Strother lived with his elder half-brother, and attended school for about three years; then was under the tuition of a Mr. Thomas for two years. In 1846 he engaged in the clothing trade, and read medicine for three years with Dr. Yost. in Greenville, Ky. In 1854, he became a student in the Medical University of Tennessee, at Nashville, from which he graduated in medicine and surgery in 1857; in the same year began practice in Butler County, Ky., where he was one of the pioneers, and did all the medical practice in a territory that is now occupied by sixteen regular physicians. The Doctor is a member of Greenville Lodge, of the fraternity of Ancient Masonry, in which order he has passed through all the orders of the ancient rite. Politically, the Doctor is a Democrat, but has never taken any active part in politics, nor aspired to any political office. He owns a farm of 600 acres of good land, 300 acres of which are in cultivation and well improved. He has devoted his time to his profession and to the improvement of the county. He is a man of liberal views, and as a progressive and public-spirited citizen, commands the respect of all who know him.

JAMES L. SWEATT, Butler County, was born April 2, 1834, in Wilson County, Tenn., and in 1849 removed with his parents to Logan County, Ky. He remained there until 1862, when he located in Butler County, where he has since resided. His father, Joseph Sweatt, a native of Surrey County, N. C., was born March 1, 1788. He removed to Tennessee about 1815, and was many years a teacher, and died February 8, 1861. He was the son of William Sweatt, a native of Maryland, who died in Wilson County, Tenn., about 1840. Joseph, father of James Lemuel Sweatt, married Susan, daughter of William and Frances Goodall, of Wilson County (born in 1800, died in 1851). Their children are Azariah, William B., Joseph H., John T., James L., Sallie (Dockins), Jane (Willcutt), Ann (Guffy) and Elizabeth (Guffy). James L. was married March 17, 1861, to Sarah S., a daughter of Benjamin and Elizabeth (Martin) Moore, of Butler County (born October 31, 1838). To them have been born John W., Nora E., Laura J. and James B. Mr. Sweatt has 186 acres of well improved and productive land, in a high state of cultivation. He is a member of the Masonic order, also of the Christian Church, and in politics is a Democrat.

JOHN TURNER SWEATT, Butler County, was born December 10, 1832, in Wilson County, Tenn., and is a son of Joseph and Susan (Goodall) Sweatt, the former a native of Surrey County, N. C., and a son of William Sweatt. He owned eleven slaves; was born in 1800, and died in 1861; the latter (subject's mother) was a daughter of Parks and Frances Goodall of Wilson County, Tenn. She was the mother of the following children: Azariah, William B., Sallie (Dockins), Jane (Willcut), Anne (Guffy), Joseph H., John T., James L., and Elizabeth (Guffy). John T. was married January 25, 1865, to Elizabeth, daughter of Edward and Betsey (Wood) Hood, of this county. She was born in 1842, and died October 19, 1881. They had three children: Mary V., James C., and John W. Mr. Sweatt next married, July 9, 1884, Fannie Anderson, daughter of James and Zorilda (Runner) Anderson, of Warren County, born February 20, 1848. Mr. Sweatt was brought up on a farm, and still follows the business; he owns 220 acres of well improved land. He is independent in politics; is a member of the Masonic order, and of the Christian Church.

SAMUEL H. TANNER, Butler County, is a son of Alexander Branch Tanner and Catharine Hill, daughter of James D. Hill, an early settler of Butler County. His father was a native of Virginia, and removed to Butler County many years ago and settled on a farm and married in 1843, and subsequently removed to Rochester, this county, where he and his wife still reside. His grandfather was Branch Tanner. Our subject was born in the county of Butler, May 19, 1844, and received a good common school education. In 1864 he enlisted in Company A, First Kentucky State Guard, and served as a non-commissioned officer, and January 13, 1865, was mustered out of the service. After the war he commenced farming in Fillmore Precinct, Logan County. He subsequently purchased a fine farm of 150 acres in Rochester Precinct. In 1882, he was elected sheriff for the county of Butler, and in 1884 was re-elected. He was married February 8, 1866, to Eliza, second daughter of A. C. McReynolds, Esq., of London Precinct, Butler County, where she was born in 1843. There were born to them seven children: Alice A. (deceased), Thomas J., Alexander Campbell, John Virgil, James Davis, Elizabeth Maud, Samuel Edward. Mr. and Mrs. Tanner are members of the Protestant Methodist Church, and Mr. Tanner is a member of the Masonic fraternity, No. 477. Mr. Tanner's record, both as a private citizen and public officer, is first class.

R. T. AND S. L. TAYLOR, Jr., farmers. Septimus Taylor is the son of Maj. Dick Taylor, and grandson of Septimus Taylor, and great-grandson of "Harrison Taylor at the mill," of whom mention is elsewhere made; he was born in Ohio County, near Rochester, Butler County, on December 1, 1822, and passed his youth and young manhood in his native home. On the 18th of September, 1845, he married Betsy Mary Shultz, only daughter of Joseph Shultz, one of the oldest and most wealthy farmers in Ohio County. She was born in 1826. The result of this marriage is eleven children: Delilah, wife of P. W. Thomasson, of Butler County; Dr. J. W. Taylor, a practicing physician of Cromwell, married to Miss Florence Paxton; Betsy Mary, wife of E. Perry, of Butler; Richard Thomas, Septimus L., Jr.; Sarah S., deceased; Galen, deceased; Jefferson Davis, married to Miss Mattie Moore; Florence, wife of M. A. Herreld, of Butler; James G. and Laura E. All the family had good advantages for obtaining an education, which were well improved, and they have an enviable reputation throughout the country as a family the most wealthy, enterprising and influential in that locality. Mr. Taylor owns about 1,100 acres of first class land, well stocked, in the Big Bend of the Green River, and has a large and commodious home. S. L. and R. T. Taylor, our subjects, own what is known as "Taylor's Lake;" a beautiful sheet of water, two and a half miles in length and one-eighth of a mile in width; it is well stocked with all kinds of fish and is a summer resort for those who love to sail and fish. Septimus L., Jr., is a teacher of much experience and success.

W. S. TAYLOR, clerk of the county court, was born on the Big Bend of the Green River, Butler County, October 10, 1853. He did not commence going to school until fifteen years of age, and then was compelled to walk four miles through mud and storm. After completing his course at the common schools he continued his studies at home, but while in the business of teaching, made specialties of mathematics, history and politics, in each of which he was well informed. He commenced teaching in the fall of 1874, in which business he was eminently successful. In 1878 he made a contest for the position of county clerk, but was defeated by T. J. Bunch. In 1880 he was assistant elector for the candidature of Gen. Weaver for the office of president of the United States. In 1882 he was elected to the office of county clerk, which position he now fills. February 10, 1878, he married Sallie Bell, only daughter of J. F. Tanner. This union was blessed with four children: Minnie Bell, who died in the summer of 1884, Tyler Florence, Alma Kline, and an infant. Mr. Taylor is a fine public speaker and debater, and owes his success to his industry and studious habits. In 1884 he joined the Republican party, and became an active supporter of Blaine and Logan. He is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

GARRARD BANKS TAYLOR, Butler County, was born July 7, 1813, in Garrard County, Ky., where he grew to manhood, and in 1833 removed to Trimble County, and in 1845 located in the northeast part of this county, where he has since resided. His father, Mooreman Taylor, an ative of North Carolina, was born in 1769; removed with his father to Garrard County while a youth; was a hatter by trade, and died in 1827. He was the son of Zachary Taylor, a cousin of Gen. Taylor's father. His children were Mooreman, Uriah, Zachary, George and Betsey (McDonald). Mooreman married Levina, daughter of Lynn and Sally (Proctor) Banks, of Garrard County (born in 1776, died in 1868), and their offspring are Betsey, Naoma (Banks), Uriah, Zachary, Melissa (Pruett), John, Charity (Emery), Lorenah, Garrard B. Oliver, Garton C. and Theresa B. (Sadler). Garrard B. procured his education by his own industry, and is a reading man. He has been twice married; first March 5, 1835, to Nancy, daughter of Jesse and Hannah (Kimmel) Stearling, of Trimble County (born July 7, 1818, died December 21, 1867), and to them were born John M., William A., Wilford E. (deceased), Charity E. (deceased), Garrard B., Jr., Zachary, Jesse S., Mooreman, Joel J., James S., Edward, Mary J. (Bryant) and Oliver P. Mr. Taylor was next married October 25, 1868, to Mrs. Julina, widow of Azel Simpson, and daughter of William and Rachel (Hampton) Lowe (born in Barren County, December 6, 1819). Her children are James W., John E., Warren T., Angeline (Lee), Amanda J. (Bryant), Marion (deceased), Martha L. (Bryant), Jesse S. (deceased), and Sarah E. (Embry). Mr. Taylor has served his community seven years as a magistrate and member of the court of claims in Butler County. He is a farmer, having 217 acres of productive land, in a high state of cultivation. He has for more than forty years been an elder and a deacon in the Christian Church; in politics he is a Prohibitionist. Mr. Taylor and his last wife had three sons each in the Union army in the late war.

JOSEPH E. TAYLOR, Butler County, was born October 18, 1851, in Warren County, Ky., and removed with his parents in 1853, and located on Little Reedy Creek, in this county, where he has since resided. His father, James W. Taylor, also a native of Warren County, many years magistrate in Butler County, and orderly sergeant in the late war, is now living in Missouri, aged about sixty years. He was the son of Joseph Taylor, a native of Virginia, who died about 1865. James W. was twice married; first to Martia A., daughter of Enoch Floyd of Warren County (born in 1828, died July 26, 1872.) Their offspring are Atwood, Richard B., Martha F. (Hosey), Joseph E., Alfred, Mack, Henry A., Douglass, Ann D. (Cropper) and James N. He was next married to Louisa E. Whalen, and their children are Clara B., Sarah J., and others. Joseph E. Taylor received a limited education in youth. He was married, October 24, 1872, to Delilah A., daughter of Thomas and Delilah (Burchfield) McClung, of Butler County (born April 10, 1855), and to them have been born Lillie Florence and George Milton. Mr. Taylor is a farmer, having 400 acres of productive land. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and in politics a Republican.

ERASTUS O. THOMAS was born in Butler County, Ky., September 29, 1866, and is the eldest of eight children born to George S. and Martha Elizabeth (Cook) Thomas, the former of whom was born in Henderson County, Ky., August 31, 1836, and the latter born in Butler County in 1845, and the only daughter of James Monroe and Mary D. (Kuykendall) Cook. George S. Thomas received a fair common school education in his native county in his youth. At the breaking out of the late civil war he enlisted in the First Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, known as the North Wood Volunteers, Col. Helm commanding, and served with that regiment in all its marches and engagements until the close of the war. He participated in the battle of Shiloh and many others on the Tennessee and the Cumberland Rivers, and was once slightly wounded. Soon after the close of the war he removed to Morgantown, Butler County, where he still resides, and where he owns one of the best residences in the county, two well improved farms of 300 acres adjoining the village, and is one of the principal owners of the Morgantown steam-mill. He and wife are devoted members of the Methodist Protestant Church. George S. Thomas is a son of Owen Thomas and Betsy Elizabeth (Ashby) Thomas, the former of whom was a native of Henderson and the latter a native of Daviess County, Ky., and were descended from old Virginian English stock. Owen Thomas' father settled in Henderson County, Ky., at an early day. He was a prosperous farmer and a devoted member of the Methodist Church. Owen Thomas was three times married, George S. being the second child of the second wife's family, of whom there were six in all. Erastus O. Thomas, the subject of this sketch, received a good common school education, and was employed on his father's farm and in his tobacco warehouse until June, 1883, when he went to Rockfield, Warren Co., Ky., where he was employed as a salesman in a drug store for several months; he was then engaged in the fruit tree business for a short time, after which he attended a high school or academy for some five or six months. In March, 1885, he opened a grocery, provision and hardware store at Aberdeen, Butler Co., Ky. He carries a well selected stock in his line, and is securing quite an extensive and remunerative trade. He also intends opening a hotel at the same place in the near future. Mr. Thomas was married, April 3, 1884, to Anna E. Porter, also a native of Butler County, Ky., born December 10, 1866. One daughter gladdens their home—Ava Ellen. Mr. Thomas belongs to no church or secret order. He is not yet a voter, but holds to the Democratic faith.

JOHN M. TINSLEY, Butler County, was born December 14, 1819, in Sumner County, Tenn., and is a son of Isaac Tinsley, Jr., and Charlotte Tinsley, nee Murray. The former was born in Amherst County, Va., and in early youth came with his parents to Tennessee; was a soldier in the war of 1812, and took part in the battle of New Orleans. He removed to Barren County, Ky., about the year 1834, and after a number of other removals, located in Butler County in 1880; he died in 1858, at the age of seventy-two years. Charlotte (Murray) Tinsley was a daughter of Thomas and Hannah (Bushnell) Murray, and in her union with Isaac Tinsley, Jr., was the mother of the following children: James (deceased), Harriet L., (Holman), John M., Calvin, Thomas W., Joseph K., Christopher C. (deceased), Cynthia (Wolf, Burris and Mills), and Sophia J. (Oliver). John M. was first married, in 1846, to Mrs. Lucinda Quiesenberry, nee Nichols; she was the daughter of John and Edith (Stovall) Nichols of Allen County; she was the mother of the following children: Amanda A. (Doyle), Henry C., and Emma J. (Lambert). She died in February, 1856, and Mr. Tinsley married Mary D. Landrum of Barren County; she died in July, 1858, and he married his third wife, June, 26, 1859, Lucinda A., daughter of John and Nancy (Wainscott) Watkins of Allen County, born October, 9, 1834; this union has been blessed by the birth of four children., viz.: Thomas E., Ulysses L., Isaac L., and Ida B. Mr. Tinsley is a farmer and owns 150 acres of land; he has also for many years engaged in blacksmithing. In politics he is independent. He is a member of the Christian Church.

PHILIP HENRY TUCK, Butler County, was born August 23, 1822, in Bedford County, Tenn.; in 1832, removed with his parents to Smith County, where he grew to manhood, and in 1848 came to this county. He located his home on the ground rendered famous in early church history, the "Little Muddy Camp Ground," where the great revivals of the beginning of the present century were celebrated. Remnants of the camps and old church house were in existence when he settled there. His father, Powel Tuck, a native of Halifax County, Va., was a soldier in the war of 1812; removed to Tennessee in 1819, and died December 17, 1858, at the age of seventy-three years. He was the son of Edward Tuck, born in Halifax County, Va., a soldier in the Revolutionary war; was shot through the body at the battle of Trenton; became a wealthy slaveholder, and died about 1839, aged seventy-six years. Powel Tuck was twice married; first to Nancy Fletcher, by whom he had the following children: Edward B., George W., Nancy (Ford) and Nathan P. and William F. (twins). He next married Edna, daughter of Sharp Willingham of Person County, N. C. (born July 4, 1804, died July 2, 1878). From this union sprang Drusilla M. (Hughes), Philip Henry, Mary P. (Porter), Paul J. (deceased), Powell, Sharp H., Franklin F., Sarah E. (Tuck) and Rev. John P. Mr. Tuck was married January 8, 1848, to Nancy N., daughter of Yerby and Sophrona (Jones) Orange of Smith County, Tenn. (born October 10, 1827), and to them have been born, Lenis P. (Lee), George W. (deceased), Drusilla A. (Gray), William H., Newton J., Missouri K. (Tinsley), Alice B. (deceased), Yerby O., Nancy N. (deceased), Armitta S., Marianna, Alonzo G., and Philip E. Mr. Tuck is a farmer. He has divided his land among his children, but still retains 154 acres, well improved and in good condition. He is a member of the Methodist Church, and in politics is a stanch Republican.

DR. HAMILTON B. TURNER, Butler County, was born December 1, 1821, in the south part of this county, where he has always resided. His father, Thomas Turner, was born near Harper's Ferry, Va., November 16, 1794. He was left an orphan in early life; was a soldier in the war of 1812, and was stationed at Baltimore; he removed to Zanesville, Ohio, in 1816, and two years later to Butler County. He labored 200 days for a young mare of common scrub stock; he leased and rented land for twelve years, at the end of which time, after a hard struggle, he purchased 256 acres of land, the same land he had improved, and where he died January 30, 1884. He was the son of William Turner, a native of Virginia, who started to Kentucky in 1796, and was supposed to have been murdered by the Indians, as he was never after heard of. Thomas Turner, the father of subject, married Hannah, the daughter of James B. Carson, of Harper's Ferry, born November 5, 1797, and died October 9, 1844. This union resulted in the following children: James W., subject, David C., John S., Benjamin P., Edward C., Susan M. (Smith), Mary (Caldwell), Robert H. and Elizabeth J. His second wife was Rachel P. Cook, who bore him two children—Eliza (Chandler) and Virginia (Pilcher). Dr. Hamilton B. Turner was married in October, 1843, to Mary C., daughter of David Parks of Logan County, born in 1826. To them have been born Mary H. (Lee), Thomas D., George C., Calvin W., Cyrus F. and Joseph A. In 1840, Dr. Turner commenced the study of medicine, and soon after commenced practice, and has met with universal success. Dr. Turner is also a farmer, and has given his children a good start in the world financially. He has been an elder in the Presbyterian Church for thirty years. In politics he was an old line Whig and now votes with the Republican party. He is a zealous Prohibitionist—his father was the first man in his neighborhood to banish whisky from log-rollings, husking bees, etc.

STEPHEN BARTON TURNER, Butler County, was born May 27, 1837, in Wilson County, Tenn.; in 1853, removed with his parents to Logan County, Ky., and in 1858, located in Butler County, where he now resides. August 26, 1880, he married Sarah J., daughter of James and Rebecca (O'Briant) Badgett, of Logan County (born July 7, 1852). To them have been born James W., Effie May and Susie Lee. Mr. Turner's adopted daughter, Elizabeth Willey, married E. N. Hutchison. Mr. Turner owns 122 acres of well improved land. He is a member of the Methodist Church, and in politics a Democrat.

THOMAS VASS, JR., Butler County, was born October 2, 1841, in Granville County, N. C., and is a son of Thomas Vass, Sr., and Elizabeth Vass, nee Badgett; the former a native of North Carolina, was born May 6, 1805, and is still living; he is a son of Thomas Vass, also of North Carolina, who died about 1856, over seventy years of age. Thomas Vass, Sr., the father of subject, was twice married, first to Parthena Howard, who bore him four children: Robert A., James W., Ruben and Frances E. (Neel). His second marriage was to Elizabeth, daughter of William and Elizabeth (Howard) Badgett, of Caswell County, N. C., born June 9, 1802, now living. To them were born Mary T. (Ragland) and Thomas Vass, Jr. Mrs. Elizabeth Vass' father was a Revolutionary soldier, and was in the battle of Guilford Court House. Thomas, Jr., received a good English education. He is a surveyor, and does considerable work in that line in Logan, Warren and Butler Counties. He was married, October 25, 1866, to Josephine, daughter of GeorgeW. and Sallie (Harland) Sweatt, of this county, born October, 22, 1848. They have four children: James W., George E., Myrtle T. and Mary T. Mr. Vass is a practical farmer, and owns 240 acres of land, well improved. The house in which he lives was built in 1800 for Nicholas Gautier, the Frenchman. In politics Mr. Vass affiliates with the Democrats. He is a member of the Masonic order.

JOSIAH W. WADE was born in Butler County, Ky., October 3, 1845, and is a son of Josiah and Nancy (Hines) Wade, the former of whom was a native of North Carolina, and the latter of Virginia. When but a lad some five years old, in 1805, Josiah Wade emigrated with his parents from North Carolina to Lincoln County, Ky., where his early education was received. While yet a young man, in about 1824, he came to Butler County, then almost an unbroken wilderness. Here he was afterward married and engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death. In early life he learned the brick and stone-mason trade, which he followed for many years in connection with farming. He was also an excellent singer, and taught vocal music until in his latter years. His death occurred December 5, 1884, in his eighty-fifth year. He and wife were for many years devoted members of the Baptist and Methodist Episcopal Churches, respectively. He was also a member of the P. of H. His grandfather, the great-grandfather of our subject, was a captain in the army during the early Indian wars before the Revolution, his death occurring while in the service. Josiah W. Wade, the subject of our sketch, received only a limited common school education in youth, to which he has since added somewhat by his own exertions. He was employed on his father's farm until he was nineteen years old, after which he farmed on leased lands for four years. He then farmed on rented lands for about five years, after which he bought a partially improved farm of 110 acres on Indian Camp Creek, in Butler County, Ky., upon which he still resides. The farm is now in a good state of cultivation and improvement. He was married, April 9, 1869, to Eudora James, a native of Ohio County, Ky., born May 1, 1851. Six children—three sons and three daughters—have blessed their union, all of whom are yet living. Their names are as follows: Fayette H., Loren E., Albinnie, Elbunah, Louis B. and Alonda B. Mr. Wade belongs to no church or secret order, but in politics is a Democrat.

WILLIAM WAND, attorney at law, Morgantown. The ancestors of Mr. Wand have been among the celebrities of the Kentucky bar; his great-grandfather, Thomas Wand, having been one of the first associate judges of Butler County, and his father, Thomas P. Wand, born in Woodbury, Ky., January 27, 1820, is an eminent lawyer, and has also been judge of the county and honorably filled many other important offices. He is a gentlemen of large experience, and influence. Our subject was born near Woodbury, Ky., August 11, 1847, and was educated in the schools of that town. He remained on the farm where he was born until he was twenty-three years of age, at which time he went to Bowling Green, and was engaged as deputy clerk of circuit court for three months, returned home and ran for circuit clerk but was defeated. He was admitted to the bar in December, 1871, and has since resided and practiced his profession at Morgantown. He held the office of school commissioner from 1874 to 1878, and was county attorney from 1878 until 1882, having been elected as a Greenback candidate. Mr. Wand was married on the 30th of September, 1875, to Miss Sally Waddle, daughter of John H. Waddle, Esq., of Morgantown. They have five children, Finley Clyde, Mattie Agnes, Mamie, Effie, and Thomas P.

ELDER BIRD WEAVER was born in Allen County, Ky., in 1843; professed a hope in Christ in 1856, and united with the Baptist Church in Allen County. He enlisted September 15, 1862, in company H, Twenty-sixth Kentucky Infantry, and served three years, lacking forty days. He was with the regiment in all its engagements after enlistment, the principal ones being Nashville, Tenn., Salt Work, W. Va., and the North Carolina campaign, besides the Knoxville, Tenn., siege, where he was on detached service. He returned home in August, 1865, and assumed a farmer's life. He was married on the 13th day of February, 1866, to Miss Elizabeth E. Motley, daughter of H. T. Motley of Allen County, by whom he has three children: Mary Etter, William Shearman (now dead), and Robert Grant. On the 6th of August, 1878, Mrs. Weaver departed this life, and on the 26th day of August, 1880, he was married to Mrs. Mary S. Bridges, a widow with one child by her first husband—Amplus Owen. Mrs. Bridges' maiden name was Austin. Soon after the war our subject was impressed with a call to the ministry, but being a man of limited means, and possessed of only a common school education, besides the bad health of his family, he long stood in doubt as to duty, but began to study for the ministry in 1875. He became a pastor in 1876, and continued preaching as pastor for Shiloh Church some three years and a half, doing service for other churches at the same time in adjoining counties. In 1880, he located in Morgantown, Ky., and has remained there until date, doing pastoral work in Butler, Simpson, Muhlenburgh, McLean and Ohio Counties; is pastor of Cool Spring and Union Zion Churches, Butler County; Green River Union, Ohio County; Pleasant Hope, McLean County; has helped to build and constitute four churches; was at the constitution of Mount Union Association; worked with and for said body until the Green River Association was constituted, and is moderator of said body at this time. He has preached 1017 sermons; delivered 263 exhortations; traveled 10,000 miles, mostly by land, and rode the same horse nearly all the time. The latter part of the time, the churches of his charge have been very prosperous having gained 84 per cent, in eighteen months. Besides this amount of preaching, which has been done mostly for poor people, he made a canvass in Butler in favor of local option. He is the youngest child of a family of eleven, five girls and six sons. All of the family are dead but one brother, W. T. Weaver, a farmer of Allen, and one sister, Mrs. Eliza J. Rickman, of Missouri. His father, William, died in 1845; his mother's maiden name was Elizabeth Dopson; each was born in Virginia. His grandfather was John Weaver, who was a soldier during the war of Independence; his father, as well as his uncle, James Weaver served in the war of 1815. All of his uncles and aunts, on his father's side, became the heads of large families; all of them sought the pleasures of a farmer's life, but Elder Bird Weaver, and Dr. J. E. Meredith of Bowling Green, who chose a public profession. Nearly all the family were Baptists, not one could be called a castaway; all of them were Democrats up to the war; since that time they have been Republicans, with some few exceptions, notwithstanding they were the owners of slaves. Elder Weaver was appointed postmaster at his place in 1880, and is still in office. Mary Etter, daughter of Elder Bird and Elizabeth E. Weaver, was born in Allen County, Ky., on the 11th day of April, 1867, receiving her education at the normal school, at Morgantown, Butler County. She taught last fall, gave general satisfaction, and was considered competent.

DR. WILLIAM P. WESTERFIELD, Butler County, was born in Breckinridge County, Ky., April 17, 1835. He is a son of David Westerfield, who was a native of Knox County, Tenn., born in 1812, came to Kentucky in 1816; was married, in 1834, to Catherine Whittington, of Ohio County. She died in 1847, leaving eight children, Dr. Westerfield being the eldest. David Westerfield was engaged in blacksmithing during the greater part of his life. He died in 1872. He was a son of John Westerfield, who was born in Germany, from which country he emigrated some time in the latter part of the eighteenth century, and located in America, near Knoxville, Tenn. He lived to be about one hundred years of age, and died at Fort Gillison, Kas. His first wife was a Miss Hale, who was brought from Germany to America and sold for 100 pounds of tobacco to defray the expense of the voyage. Later in life one of her children, an infant, was tortured to death by the Indians. Dr. Westerfield, at the age of sixteen, was thrown upon his own resources, with but a small amount of money, and for several years attended school at Cloverport, in Breckinridge County; then taught school for a few years, until his marriage, in 1857, with Martha A. Miles, of Ohio County. To them have been born four children: Perry, Alison H., Catherine and Mary A. Mrs. Westerfield died in 1872, aged thirty-six years. Dr. Westerfield next married Mary P. Hill, of Ohio County, September 29, 1873. To this union were born six children: Annie, William D., Ester, Evaline, Ruth and John. Our subject began to read medicine in 1853, and began practice in 1861, and has devoted all his time and talent to his profession ever since. He comes of a family of physicians, there being no fewer than seventeen of his ancestors wh have been in the medical profession. The Doctor is a member of the Eighty-seventh Kentucky militia, and held the rank of major. His first wife was a daughter of John Miles, who was of Irish extraction, and her mother was of Scotch descent, and a daughter of John Ford, a soldier who fought with Gen. Harrison, and was wounded at the battle of Tippecanoe. The Doctor is not a member of the church, but is a Master Mason.

PERRY WESTERFIELD, Butler County, was born in Ohio County, Ky., January 6, 1861. His father, W. P. Westerfield, is a native of Kentucky, born in 1835. He followed teaching for about fifteen years. In 1861 abandoned the profession, and took up the practice of medicine, in which he has been engaged up to the present time. He was married, in 1860, to Martha A. Miles, who died in the year 1872, leaving four children, of whom Perry is the eldest. Perry Westerfield remained with his parents until the death of his mother, when he went to reside with an uncle, and spent one year in farm work, after which he was clerk in a hotel for about two years, after which he went to school one year; then was employed in the store of L. Mendel & Co., in the capacity of clerk and salesman, for four years. He then entered Cumberland University, at Lebanon, Tenn.; took the literary course and graduated in 1881, and returned to the employ of Mendel & Co. In June, 1884, he went into business for himself, and up to the present time has been engaged in the sale of drugs and groceries, under the firm name of P. Westerfield & Co. They are doing a good business and carry in stock about $2,000. Mr. Westerfield, though young, has developed extraordinary business qualities, and bids fair to excel as a man of business. September 21, 1884, he married Joannie, daughter of William H. and Sarah (Hancock) Evans, of Butler County, Ky. Politically, Mr. Westerfield is a Republican.

J. H. WHALIN, farmer, Butler County, Ky., was born near Honaker's Landing or Ferry, on the Green River, in Warren County, April 18, 1835. His parents were William and Priscilla (Goodman) Whalin, natives of Kentucky and both deceased. James Henry is the fourth of eleven children, eight of whom are still living. His early education was obtained in the common schools, and at the age of twenty-one he moved to Butler County, and settled in the Little Bend of the Green River, on a farm given to him by his father-in-law, John C. Jones. In the following spring Mr. Whalin removed across the river to the Big Bend, where he is now the owner of 1,200 acres of some of Butler County's best land, on which he has excellent farm buildings, and large herds of graded and common stock, and is one of the most prosperous of the farmers of Butler County. In November, 1855, he was married to Polly Ann, the only daughter of John C. Jones, of Butler County. As the result of this union eight children were born: Francis Marion, James Crawford, Lillian, Ollie Augusta, Julia E., Henry Newton, Ulysses, Edward Van Buren. Mrs. Polly Ann Whalin departed this life March 17, 1877. Mr. Whalin and his family are members of the Christian Church, and he is an enterprising and intelligent citizen, and takes a deep interest in the education of his children, and all other enterprises of a progressive nature.

PRESLEY WHITAKER was born in Butler County, Ky., July 10, 1826. He is a son of Johnston Whitaker, a native Kentuckian and a farmer, who died in 1872, aged eighty years, and who married Charlotta Sheletta Hiletta Carolina Matilda Brown, a lady of English lineage, and descended from the Morgans, who were connected with the royal line of England. She died in 1840, leaving seven children, of which number Presley Whitaker is the second. Mark Whitaker, subject's grandfather, was a native of Rowan County, N. C., and a grandson of an English marquis. He held the rank of major in the war of 1812, and was with Gen. Jackson in the battle of New Orleans. Presley Whitaker was reared on the farm where he was born. He never received any school education in early life excepting three terms in subscription schools; his education is self-acquired. Between the age of eighteen and twenty-seven, he worked in different occupations, and in that time he acquired a knowledge of the principles of music, which he taught for several years. He has been twice married; first in 1853, to Talitha Ann, daughter of Amos Russ, of Butler County. She was a music teacher by profession, and a lady who did much to assist her husband through life. She was a member of the Baptist Church, and died June 17, 1869, leaving ten children: Presley G., James E., Quinturah F., Sirilia V., Laura J., Robert P., Lorenzo A., Luzetta P., Lizetta E. and Monroe B.; his second wife, whom he married September 28, 1870, was Sarah C. Brown, widow of Hamilton Brown, of Ohio County, a woman of sterling integrity, who commands the respect and confidence of all who know her. Mr. Whittaker, after his first marriage, bought fifty-five acres of land, and commenced life on a $7 order to a store; he erected his cabin himself; also manufactured his own furniture; his bedstead was constructed by fastening a couple of poles in the corner of the room, and supporting the angle by the leg; the cord was of hickory withes woven in; his trips to the mill were made on foot, and often after the day's work was finished he would carry his peck of corn seven miles, and wait for it to be ground. By luck and pluck and the help of an excellent wife he is now in good circumstances; his farm of 600 acres is in high cultivation and well improved. Mr. and Mrs. Whitaker are members of the Baptist Church, in which he is a deacon, and in which he takes a great interest. In politics he was an old line Whig; is now a national Greenbacker, a Master Mason, and a member of the Woodbury Lodge. As a public-spirited citizen he takes an interest in the good of the community, in which he resides.

PRESLEY G. WHITAKER, grocery and hardware merchant, Morgantown, was born in Butler County, Ky., March 22, 1854, and received his education in the common schools and Butler County Seminary, Morgantown. His parents were Presley and Talitha A. (Russ) Whitaker, the former a native of Butler County, born in 1825, and the latter of Ohio County, born in 1829, and died in 1869. Presley G. is the eldest of eight children, of whom six are living. Grandfather Johnston Whitaker was the son of Thomas Whitaker, a Scotchman, who immigrated to Maryland in the latter part of the last century, and subsequently became one of the earliest settlers of Butler County, on Mud Creek, and lived to the advanced age of one hundred and four years. P. G. Whitaker was married February 8, 1883, to Miss Frankie E. Kimbley, of South Carrollton, Muhlenburgh County. They have one child, Maud. On Christmas Eve, 1879, Mr. Whitaker commenced business with only 40 cents cash, and goods purchased on credit to the amount of $191.50. His business is conducted on a cash basis, and his stock of goods constantly on hand amounts to nearly $4,000. His success in business has been exceptional. He is a member of the Baptist Church, and of the Masonic Woodbury Lodge, No. 280.

HEZEKIAH WHITE, Butler County, was born July 6, 1824, in Warren County, Ky., where he grew to manhood, and in 1883, removed to Butler County, where he has since resided. His father, William L. White, was born January 31, 1801, near Lynchburgh, Va.; removed in childhood with his parents to Warren County, Ky., and settled on the forks of Green and Barren Rivers, eight miles above the mouth of the latter, where he died in 1877. He was the son of William White, a native of Virginia, who was born November 24, 1767, and who died January 19, 1840. William L. (subject's father) was twice married; first to Charlotte, daughter of Joseph Taylor of Warren County (born in 1808, and died in 1867). They had the following children: Hezekiah, Mary A. (deceased), Sallie (Lamastus), William A., Samuel D., John H., Chesterfield, Margaret J. (Norris), Joseph (deceased), Cynthia A. (Stewart), Hustan C. (killed in the late war) and Melinda (Young). His second wife was Mrs. Martha Jones, and their children are Calpurna and Mary. Hezekiah was married September 6, 1849, to Mary A. E., daughter of Rev. John W. and Rachel (Upton) Hudnall, of Warren County (born September 20, 1831), and to them have been born Mary C. (Hill), Elijah U. (deceased), Charlotte B. (Cole), Celeste L. (Cherry), Charlie A., Rachel T. (Dearing), Fannie A. E. (Spencer), Lucy E. (Clark), Nannie W., Connie L., Sallie C. and Kiah J. Mr. White is a farmer and owns 254 acres of valuable and well improved land, on which he raises wheat, corn, oats, tobacco and stock. He is a member of the Masonic order; also of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and is a Democrat.

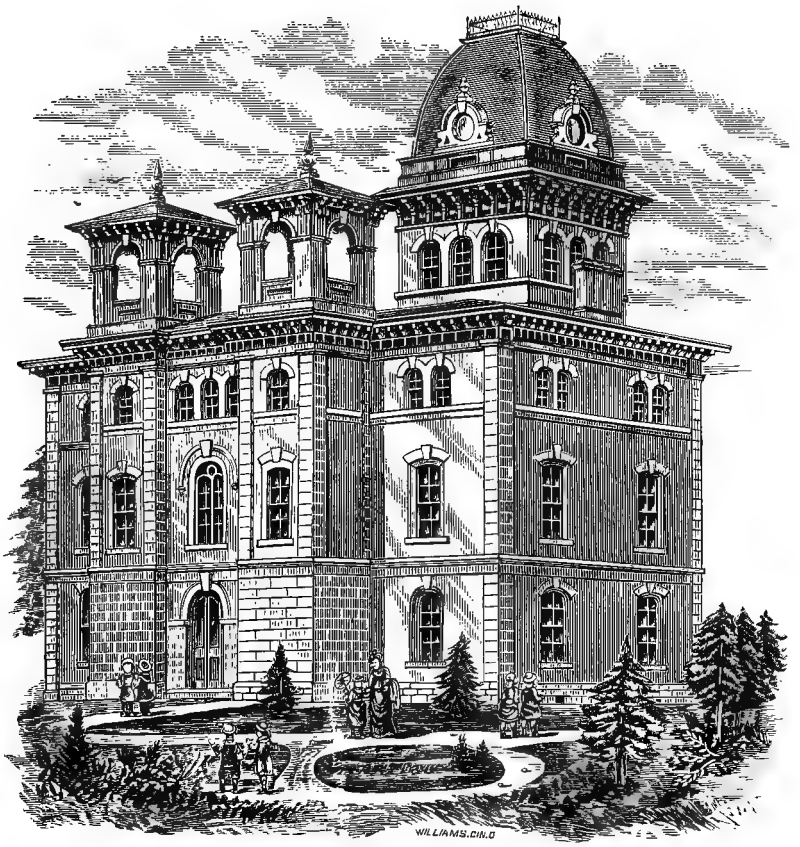
OLIVER C. WHITE was born in Butler County, January 15, 1827, where he grew to manhood and has ever since resided. He received a common school education in youth, and made his home with his grandfather, Daniel Daughety, until he was ten years old, until the latter's death, after which he remained with his mother until her death, which occurred in 1854. He then bought twenty-five acres of land, unimproved, from his uncle on Indian Camp Creek, Butler County, where he has since improved the farm upon which he now resides, and to which he has added from time to time, now owning 170 acres. In August, 1862, he enlisted in Company I, Twelfth Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry (Federal service), and was afterward consolidated with Company F, of the same regiment; served in all its engagements until the close of the war, being mustered out with the regiment at Louisville, Ky., in September, 1865. He participated in the battles of Knoxville, Kenesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Franklin, Nashville and many other lesser engagements. He was first married in the spring of 1853 to Elizabeth Duvall, native of Ohio County, Ky.; born in 1829, and daughter of Benjamin and Elizabeth (Allen) Duvall. To this union was born one daughter—Leuella J. (deceased). Mrs. Elizabeth White departed this life in 1856, a devoted member of the Baptist Church. Mr. White was next married in the fall of the same year, 1856, to Elizabeth J. Snodgrass, a native of Butler County, Ky., born in 1834, and a daughter of Christopher and Hannah E. (Embrey) Snodgrass. Seven children blessed their union, five of whom—two sons and three daughters—are yet living, viz.: Percilla A. Taylor (now a widow), James M., Hugh J. K., Margaret A. and Louisa F. Mr. White and wife have been for many years members of the United Baptist Church. In politics he is a stanch Republican.

WILLIAM E. WHITE was born in Butler County, Ky., January 15, 1827, and is a twin brother of Oliver C. White, and a son of Nancy (Daughety) White, also a native of Butler County, Ky. She had six children, all sons, William E. and his twin brother being the only survivors. William E. received such an education as the schools of Kentucky afforded in his youth. He resided with his grandfather Daughety, a native of North Carolina until the latter's death, after which he remained with his mother until her death July 4, 1854, in about her forty-fifth year. She was a devoted member of the United Baptist Church. The next year after their mother's death, William E. and his brother erected a horse-mill on the old home place, which they operated several years in connection with farming. When only a lad, in about 1840, our subject bought twenty-five acres of land from his uncle, William Daughety on the Indian Camp Creek, which he afterward traded to his brother. He now owns a well improved farm adjoining his first purchase, of 180 acres, where he is successfully engaged in farming, making the culture of tobacco a specialty. In August, 1862, he enlisted in Company I, which was afterward consolidated with Company F, Twelfth Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry (Federal service) and served with that regiment in all its marches and engagements until the close of the war, being mustered out at Louisville, Ky., in September, 1865. He participated in the battles of Knoxville, Kenesaw Mountain, Atlanta, the Saline Salt Works, Clinch Gap and many other lesser engagements. He was married August 9, 1852, to Margaret M. Snodgrass, also a native of Butler County, Ky. She was born June 3, 1836, and is a daughter of Christopher and Hannah (Embrey) Snodgrass. Ten children blessed this union, eight of whom, six sons and two daughters are living: Sarah E. Evans, Woodford H., Stephen A. D., Odecy C. Evans, Oliver C., Christopher M., John

A., and Charles W. Mr. White and wife have been for many years members of the Baptist Church, in which he has held various official positions. At present he is deacon. Politically he is a Republican.

WILLIAM WILLIS, Jr., was born in Rochester, Butler Co., Ky., on the 12th of October, 1847. His father, William Willis, Sr., is a Kentuckian, born in Mercer County, March 2, 1818. His life has been an active one; he was for many years a dealer in leaf tobacco, and operated in Rochester, where he yet resides. He is hale and hearty for his age, which is now nearly sixty-seven years. He was married in 1838 to Hannah E. Noell, with whom he lived happily until 1852, when she died; she left six children, of which number William, Jr., is the fourth. William Willis, Sr., is of Welch descent, his grandfather being a native of Wales. William, Jr., at the age of eighteen years began working for wages with his father in a tobacco warehouse, and continued there for four years; then engaged as a clerk with Guest & Evans for two years, after which, in 1871, he engaged in the grocery trade for two years, and during that time dealt in timber and lumber, which he has continued with unvarying success until the present time; he has discontinued the grocery trade, and in connection with the timber trade superintends his farm in Butler County. He was married October 12, 1872, to Phœbe, daughter of Silas and Elizabeth (Downing) Brewer of Muhlenburgh County, Ky. To this union have been born four children: Ella P., F. May, Hannah E. and Jonelle. Mrs. Willis is a member of the Christian Church, while Mrs. Willis holds to the faith of the Methodist Church South. Mr. Willis takes a strong position on the side of temperance and in politics is a Democrat.

PRESLEY S. WOOD, a merchant at Forgyville, Butler County, was born in Muhlenburgh County, Ky., May 29, 1861. He is the sixth of a family of eight children born to James and Sarah (Watkins) Wood, who are Kentuckians by birth. Their children, Mary, Rufus, Lina, Rousseau, P. Sherman, Ludina Luella and Henderson are all living, except the last named, who died in 18—. James Wood has been a farmer all his life; he was born in 1817, and is yet living, aged sixty-eight years; his wife is several years younger. Isaac Wood, father of James, was one of the pioneers of Kentucky; was a farmer, and lived to be very old. Presley Sherman Wood laid the foundation of an English education at the common schools, and in 1878, entered as a student in Prof. Baker's Academy at Homer, in Logan County, from which institution he graduated in the English literary course before he had attained his twentieth year. After teaching school for a year, he in 1883, engaged in merchandising at Forgyville, in Butler County, where he does a good business and carries $3,000 in stock in trade. Mr. Wood is a Democrat. His time is devoted to his business, and he has gained for himself many friends. He is unmarried, and his religious views are based on honesty and fair dealing.



LEWIS F. WOOSLEY, Butler County, was born October 10, 1859, on Big Reedy Creek, in Edmonson County, Ky., where he grew to manhood. In 1881, he located in Butler County, where he now resides. His father, George W. Woosley, a native of Whitley County, Ky., was born in 1817, and is now living in Edmonson County. He is the son of Samuel Woosley. George W. was twice married: first, to Julia Siler, who bore him five children, as follows: Merrel, Terrel, Joseph, Mary J. (Oller), and Silas C. He was next married to Elizabeth, daughter, of James Oller, of Edmonson County (born in 1828, died April 6, 1883). Their offspring are: Phebe F. (Willis), Cynthia A. (Thoms), Julia A. (Thoms), Elvira (Nash), Lewis F. (subject), Eliza (Willis), Dina E. and Martha T. Lewis F. obtained but a common school education. He was married November 29, 1879, to Miss Lucinda, daughter of Marvil and Elizabeth (Miller) Nash, of Edmonson County (born January 14, 1860). To them have been born Palvena and Luvena E. Mr. Woosley is a farmer, and owns 100 acres of productive land.

CALDWELL COUNTY.

REV. HEMAN H. ALLEN, D. D., Caldwell County, principal of Princeton Collegiate Institute, was born in Canton, St. Lawrence County, N. Y., October 16, 1828. His parents, Marcus and Lucia (Fabrigue) Allen, were Vermont people. His grandfather Allen was a cousin of Col. Ethan Allen, of Revolutionary fame; the father's side was of Scotch-Irish stock, the mother's, French-Huguenot. His maternal ancestor was one of those who escaped from Lyons during the awful scenes of the St. Bartholomew massacre. Sturdy Protestantism and love of civil liberty run in the blood on both sides. The parents of young Heman removed West in 1832, and finally settled in Breckinridge County, Ky., in 1838. Here he grew to manhood, engaged in the severe labors of clearing and cultivating a farm in the woods. After he reached maturity, he decided to enter the ministry in the Presbyterian Church, and entered upon a course of education necessary to that end. He graduated in 1855, at Centre College, Danville, Ky., under the presidency of that eloquent preacher and distinguished educator, Dr. John C. Young. He received the highest honors for scholarship in a class which had in it such men as Col. W. C. P. Breckinridge, Gov. T. T. Crittenden, Hon. John Y. Brown, and others who have become widely known in various professions. He pursued his theological course in Danville Theological Seminary, under Drs. R. J. Breckinridge and E. P. Humphrey, and was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Louisville, in April, 1858. His work in the ministry has been in Kentucky, with the exception of two years, in which he was pastor of a church in St. Charles, Mo. He was four years editor of the Western Presbyterian, at Louisville, Ky. He has been engaged from time to time in teaching, always having a deep interest in the cause of education. His success as a teacher, especially in the government and training of youth, is favorably recognized among the best educators of the State. When the Princeton Collegiate Institute was reorganized in 1881, he was elected principal by the board of trustees, a position which he still holds (1884). Under his administration, assisted by a corps of able and experienced teachers, the institution has entered upon a career which promises to be one of eminent efficiency and usefulness in the cause of the higher Christian education. Mr. Allen has been twice married: the first wife, Annie Thayer, to whom he was married in July, 1858, was a granddaughter of Judge Bridges, and great-granddaughter of Gen. John Adair, so well known in the early history of Kentucky. His second wife, Mary Washington Marshall, to whom he was married in November, 1861, was the granddaughter of Rev. Robert Marshall, one of the noted pioneer preachers of the Presbyterian Church of Kentucky. He has four children: one by the first, and three by the second marriage, all living.

PRINCETON COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE. Designed to furnish the best education at the lowest possible cost. Established in 1860. Reorganized in 1880 under a new charter, dated March, 1881. Rev. Heman H. Allen, D. D., principal; Hon. Charles Anderson, president of the board of trustees. Has a full corps of experienced teachers. Course of study extensive and thorough, in the primary, intermediate and collegiate departments, including mathematics, the natural, mental and moral sciences, belles-lettres, ancient and modern languages, music and art. Some of the leading and best educated men of Kentucky, after visiting the school, said of it, "we cannot speak too highly of the methods of instruction and proficiency of this school. We know of none better."

CAPT. C. T. ALLEN, Caldwell County, editor of the Princeton Banner, was born June 5, 1841, in Lunenburg County, Va. He was a graduate from Richmond College at Richmond, Va., in June, 1860. In 1861 he entered the Confederate army as lieutenant in Company C, Twentieth Regiment of Virginia Volunteers, and participated in the Rich Mountain campaign under Gen. Robert S. Garnett. At the battle of Rich Mountain on July 11, 1861, his regiment was so cut to pieces, captured, etc., that it was disbanded in the fall of 1861. In January following, PRINCETON COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, PRINCETON.

Capt. Allen again entered the service as lieutenant of the "Lunenburg Rebel Artillery," one of the largest and finest companies ever mustered into the Confederate service. He became captain of this company in June, 1862, by the resignation of Capt. Hawthorne, and his company was incorporated with the Second Regiment of Virginia Artillery. He had command of the Iron Battery on James River, at Chaffin's Bluff, ten miles below Richmond, and took part in the storming of Fort Harrison, just in the rear of Chaffin's Bluff, September 29, 1864, where he received three slight wounds. For his behavior on this field he was recommended by his commanding officer, Gen. R. S. Ewell, for promotion to the position of lieutenant-colonel of artillery, which recommendation was favorably endorsed by Gen. R. E. Lee. Capt. Allen also participated in the battle of Sailor's Creek, in Amelia County, Va., on April 6, 1865, the last general battle of Lee's army, where he was again wounded and where he lost thirty-one men, killed and wounded, from his company, then numbering seventy odd. The fact that over 3,000 men were killed and wounded in this battle and quite 10,000 captured, attests its fury. With other officers captured on the retreat from Richmond, Capt. Allen was sent to Johnson's Island, Lake Erie, and there remained until all the Confederate armies had surrendered. He was in the old capitol prison, Washington City, on the terrible night of President Lincoln's assassination, when several hundred Confederate officers were saved from massacre, by a mob, by the thoughtful and generous action of Gen. Green Clay Smith, then a member of congress from Kentucky. Capt. Allen was married in 1863 to Miss Luce Ashby Meade, daughter of Hon. Robert E. Meade, of Brunswick County, Va.; she died at Princeton in July, 1882. He next married Miss Lizzie Taylor Meade, a half sister of his first wife, in March, 1884. In the reorganization of political parties after the war, Capt. Allen espoused the cause of the Conservative-Democratic party, and was the nominee of that party for the State senate of Virginia in 1869, but was defeated by a carpet-bagger. In 1869 Capt. Allen came to Kentucky and taught school for a few months at Cerulean Springs, Trigg County. In 1870 he located at Princeton and began the practice of law, which profession he had followed in Virginia. In 1871 he founded the Princeton Banner, since which date he has devoted his energies to journalism. In 1876 he was the Democratic elector for the First District of Kentucky; was elected to the Legislature from Caldwell County in 1877, and re-elected in 1879; was a delegate to the National Democratic Convention in 1880, and made a good though unsuccessful run for lieutenant-governor of the State in 1883.

WILLIAM P. BLACK, Caldwell County, was born in Fredonia District, July 16, 1843, and is a son of James S. and Jane (Peden) Black. James S. Black was born in this county, February 14, 1814, and died April 23, 1885. His father, who was born in Albemarle County, Va., was of Irish descent, came to this State about 1800, and purchased land in Caldwell County. He patented 160 acres where L. Adamson now resides, and remained there until his death, which occurred about 1850, at the age of eighty-three years. In 1840 James S. came to the place now owned by subject, and first purchased 150 acres. He was married in 1839 to Miss Peden, a daughter of Robert Peden, who was from South Carolina. The result of this union was two children: William P. and David A.; the latter born January 16, 1840, and died in 1857. The mother died in 1878. William P. received his education at Bethlehem Academy. He has always resided on the old homestead, which now contains about 600 acres, with about 350 acres in cultivation. He also pays attention to stock raising and trading, handling about 100 head per year. Mr. Black was married in September, 1854, to Miss Eveline Brelsford, a daughter of Hiram Brelsford, of Caldwell County; she died in June, 1865. Mr. Black's second marriage was to Mrs. Mary Leech, nee Wilson, a daughter of James and Amanda Wilson, of this county. They have two children living: Jane Ella and Thomas W., one died in infancy, James Clay. Jane Ella is a graduate of C. F. C., McMinnville, Tenn., having completed her studies there in June, 1885, and has a diploma from that faculty, with degree of M. A. Thomas W. is the youngest, and is yet attending the common schools in Caldwell County. Mr. Black and family are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. In 1867 he was elected magistrate, and served eight years. He has also served as road commissioner.

C. S. BLANTON, Caldwell County, was born in the city of Paris, Henry Co., Tenn., January 22, 1842. His father, John W. Blanton, was a native of Frankfort, Ky., and for many years a leading physician of Paris, Tenn., at which place he died in 1855. Willis Blanton, subject's grandfather, came from Virginia many years ago, and settled at Frankfort, Ky. He was a skillful civil engineer, and at one time held the responsible position of State surveyor of Kentucky. Subject's mother, Elizabeth Ann Blanton, was a daughter of William Samuels, a native of Woodford County, Ky. She died in 1850, at the age of forty-two or forty-three years. C. S. Blanton is the third of a family of six children. His youth was spent in his native town, where he received the advantages of a liberal education, attending the common schools of Paris, and later took a year's course at Bethel College, McLeansboro, Tenn. In 1855 he went to Louisiana, and located near Port Hudson, where he resided until 1860, and three years later he engaged as clerk with the mercantile firm of Kay & Sherer, Paducah, Ky., remaining in that city for a period of nine or ten years, part of which time he was book-keeper in the office of his father-in-law, Col. John C. Noble, editor of the Paducah Herald. His marriage to Miss Maria E. Noble took place September 25, 1866. In 1873 Mr. Blanton left Paducah, and moved to Fredonia, Caldwell County, where he clerked in a general goods business, which he continued for one year, for John F. Harris, of Paducah. He next established a drug store at Fredonia, which he conducted for a short time. In the latter year he moved to Princeton, and engaged in the manufacture and sale of furniture, his present business. Mr. and Mrs. Blanton are the parents of two children: Elizabeth C. and Jennie B. Mr. Blanton, in politics, votes with the Democratic party.

PROF. E. LEE BLANTON, Caldwell County, was born April 4, 1844, in Cumberland County, Va. His paternal ancestors came from England prior to the war of Independence, and settled in Caroline County, Va. His paternal great-grandfather was David Blanton, who died in 18—. His grandfather was James Blanton, who died in 1852. Subject's father, W. D. Blanton, was a farmer, and died in Virginia November 7, 1882, at the age of sixty-one years. The maiden name of subject's mother was R. F. Lee, a daughter of Joseph D. Lee, who died in the year 1845. Mrs. Blanton is still living in her native State of Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Blanton reared a family of ten children, named as follows: E. Lee (subject), Joseph J., Willis S., Judith T. (deceased), Dr. John W., William B., Mary W., Frank, Jesse and Sarah E. Prof. Blanton, until the age of eighteen, attended a number of excellent select schools in his native county; at the age of twenty-three he entered Hampden Sydney College, Prince Edward Co., Va., where he remained one year. Prior to entering that institution of learning, however, Mr. Blanton had filled the position of assistant professor of mathematics in Roanoke College, Salem, Va., prosecuting his studies at the same time with the object of making teaching his life work. After leaving Hampden Sydney College, he accepted the position of professor of music in the Ann Smith Female Seminary, Lexington, Ky., where he remained one year, but the following year taught music and mathematics in the Gordonsville Female Seminary. In 1869 he located at Paris, Ky., and accepted a professorship in the Bourbon female institute, teaching music and mathematics one session, after which he returned to Virginia, and on December 21, of the same year, was united in marriage to Miss Anna M., daughter of Dr. J. M. and Lavina (Rizer)Snyder. After the marriage he removed to Mississippi, locating at Pass Christian, and took charge of the Trinity High School at that place, which position he filled until the spring of 1873. In August of the latter year he went to Bowling Green, Ky., and established a select school at that place, which he taught until June, 1876, at which time he was elected president of Princeton College, which office he held four years; at the end of that time he established the Princeton High School, of which he has charge at the present time, the attendance averaging seventy-five to 100 pupils. On January 27, 1883, Mrs. Blanton died at the age of forty years, the mother of five children, named as follows: Kate Lavinia, Annie Lee Clifford (deceased), Wallace Carroll (deceased), Mabel Carr and Orabel. Mr. Blanton was next married June 24, 1884, to Miss Sarah E. M., daughter of W. C. C. and Elizabeth Jones, of Princeton, Ky. Mr. Blanton is a member of the Masonic fraternity and of the K. of H., and he and wife are active members of the Southern Presbyterian Church at Princeton.

WYATT P. BOYD was born in Caldwell County, Ky, June 20, 1837. His father, John P. Boyd, was also a native of Caldwell County, where he spent the greater part of his life as a farmer. He was a very successful man and accumulated a large estate, but sustained heavy losses during the war, having been a large slave-holder. He was born in 1809, and died August 17, 1877. His wife, Sarah P. Boyd, was a daughter of James Rucker, of Virginia, one of the early successful farmers of Caldwell County. She died February 3, 1870, at the age of sixty-eight years. Wyatt P. Boyd is the second of a family of six children, named as follows: Charles M., deceased; W. P.; L. M., wife of J. W. Statterfield; Charles C., deceased; Frances E., wife of A. E. Jacobs; and F. R., merchant in Princeton. Our subject enjoyed good educational advantages in his youth, attending the common schools of the county, and later the Cumberland College, where he remained for a period of three years. He commenced farming in Caldwell County on attaining his majority, continued about six years, and at the end of that time removed to Christian County and went into the mercantile business near Hopkinsville, where he sold goods for about the same length of time. He discontinued merchandising on account of failing health and came back to Caldwell County and engaged in farming and stock raising on his present farm, four miles and a half south of Princeton. Mr. Boyd owns a farm of 200 acres, the greater part of which is under a high state of cultivation. December 21, 1858, he was married to Miss Elizabeth Morris, daughter of Amon and Permelia (Pickering) Morris, by whom he has four children: Victoria, wife of J. T. Parker; Charles D., Minnie Lee and Ida. Mr. Boyd takes an active part in religious matters, having been a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church for over thirty-three years. His wife is also a member of the same church.

G. H. BUGG was born in Fredonia District, December 1, 1818, and is a son of James and Elizabeth (McDowell) Bugg; the former was born in North Carolina, and the latter in South Carolina. Her father served for four years in the Revolution; both the paternal and maternal ancestors were of Irish descent. In 1806 subject's father first came to this State and worked for some of the farmers then living in this portion of Kentucky. He settled on Piney Creek in this county, but remained only a short time, then settled one-half mile from there. This farm was in Crittenden County, and there he resided until his death, in 1863. G. H. is the third of nine children. He remained on the old homestead until he was twenty-five years of age, and then settled on a farm on the Ford's Ferry road, in Crittenden County. There he lived for four years on a tract of 100 acres, then came to this county and made one or two settlements, but in February, 1854, came to his present farm where he has since resided. He now owns about 240 acres of land, with about 140 acres in cultivation. Mr. Bugg was married in March, 1844, to Miss Mary Jane Lowry, daughter of John and Gracie (Ordway) Lowry, early settlers of this county. Her father was born in Virginia; her mother in New Hampshire. Mrs. Bugg was born in 1827, and is the mother of eleven children, of whom nine—four sons and five daughters—are now living. Mr. Bugg has served as magistrate four years, and in the early days of muster held the offices of sergeant, lieutenant and captain. Mr. Bugg and family are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

J. S. BUGG was born in Fredonia District January 15, 1848, and is a son G. H. and Mary J. (Lowry) Bugg. J. S. is the second in a family of eleven children, of whom nine are now living. He remained at home with his father until 1877, then came to Fredonia, where he opened a drug store. In the winter of 1881–82, he attended the College of Pharmacy at St. Louis. Returning to Fredonia, he reopened the drug store and has since followed the business, carrying a stock of about $3,000. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

T. M. BUTLER, Caldwell County, was born in Crittenden County, five miles southeast of Marion, August 11, 1839, and is a son of D. A. and Matilda (Green) Butler. D. A. Butler was born in Culpeper County, Va., in 1819, and came to this State in 1825 with his parents, who settled in Crittenden County, where they lived and died. He grew to manhood in that county, and in 1837 married Miss Green, a native of that county and of Virginia ancestry. He made his home in Crittenden County until his death, which occurred in September, 1872. He was a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and of the Masonic fraternity. His wife died May 20, 1872. Subject is the eldest of a family of nine children, of whom six are now living: Thomas M.; W. F., in Livingston County; George B. in Caldwell County; Polly Ann, wife of Smith Lowry, of Livingston County; Albert, in Livingston County, and Gideon D. in St. Louis. Subject's education was received in the schools of his neighborhood, at Salem Academy and at the Cumberland Presbyterian College at Princeton. At the age of nineteen, he became a partner with his father, who was engaged farming and merchandising, and rehandling tobacco; this partnership lasted until 1867. Subject continued farming for himself in that county until 1873, then came to Caldwell County, and settled on his present farm. He now owns about 520 acres of land, with about 320 acres in cultivation. He is also the principal tobacco buyer in this section of the county, and has erected a very large stemmery and handles about 500,000 pounds of tobacco annually.

He was married in September, 1862, to Miss Nancy S. Lowry, daughter of John and Gracie (Ordway) Lowry; she was born in Caldwell County, and was the mother of three children, one of whom is now living, Robert E. Mr. Butler's second marriage was December, 1868, to Miss Sarah J. Smith, daughter of John and Minerva (Watson) Smith, the former a native of Pennsylvania, and the latter of Tennessee. Mrs. Butler was born in Decatur County, Tenn., November 27, 1852, and is the mother of five children, of whom four are now living: Nonie Ellen, John A., Thomas H. and Sadie L. Mr. and Mrs. Butler are members of the Piney Fork Church. He is a member of the Fredonia Lodge, No. 247, A. F. & A. M. He is now serving as road overseer.

C. N. BYRD was born in Fredonia, May 2, 1843, and is a son of Nathan C. and Sarah J. (Leeper) Byrd. Nathan C. Byrd was born in North Carolina, and when a young man, came to Kentucky and first settled at Hopkinsville. He remained only a short time there, however, and then went to Muhlenburgh County; thence he moved to Princeton about 1832, and there merchandised for about six years. He then came to Fredonia, being one of the first business men at this point, and for upward of thirty-five years continued to be one of the leading merchants of the place. He was also an extensive farmer, owning at one time nearly all the land about Fredonia. Subsequently he sold considerable land, and at the time of his death, which occurred October 12, 1872, he owned only about 500 hundred acres. For upward of fifteen years he was a magistrate in this district. His wife was born in Mississippi, and died in this county, March 14, 1864. Subject is the third of ten children, of whom four are now living, viz.: Charles N., Mary R. (widow of Thomas Hughes), David T. and Walter R. Subject clerked for his father for about ten years, then commenced business for himself in March, 1869, in company with his brother, R. D. Byrd. They continued in business for about three years, when R. D. died, and subject continued for himself for about one year. He then settled up his father's estate, and subsequently turned his attention to farming, settling on 150 acres, which he inherited from the homestead. He now owns about 475 acres, of which there are about 300 acres in cultivation. He also pays some attention to stock raising. In 1875 he resumed merchandising, and followed it for about four years. In 1881 he reopened his store, and has since been in the business. He now owns a stock of about $5,000. Mr. Byrd was married June 11, 1868, to Miss Virginia C. Graham, daughter of John and Sarah (Tull) Graham. Mrs. Byrd was born in Lyon County, Ky., July 4, 1849, and is the mother of four children, two of whom are now living: Nathan J. and Robbie. Mr. and Mrs. Byrd are members of the Southern Presbyterian Church. He is a member of the Fredonia Lodge, No. 247, A. F. & A. M., and has also been identified with the I. O. O. F.

B. F. CANTRELL was born in Caldwell County, Ky., August 9, 1826, and is a son of James and Hannah (Wadlington) Cantrell, natives of South Carolina and Kentucky. Thompson Cantrell, subject's grandfather, was born in South Carolina, and in an early day moved to Indiana, where he died about 1833. James Wadlington, subject's maternal grandfather, a native of North Carolina, came to Kentucky several years before the present century, and settled about one and a quarter miles east of Princeton, on what is now known as the Eldred farm. He was a man of considerable prominence, and at one time owned a large number of slaves. He died in 1853, at the age of eighty years. James Cantrell, subject's father, was a soldier in the war of 1812. He came to Caldwell County many years ago, and settled two and one-half miles east of Princeton, and died in 1872, aged eighty-three years. Mrs. Cantrell died in 1865, at the age of sixty years. B. F. Cantrell remained with his parents on the farm until the age of twenty-five years, and in 1847 went as a soldier to Mexico in Company C, Third Kentucky Volunteer Infantry. His regiment was in Gen. Scott's command, but saw no active service, aside from marching to the Mexican capital, when the American army took possession of that city. After returning from the army he engaged in farming on the old home place, where he remained until 1852, when he purchased a farm seven miles south of Princeton. He has since owned a number of farms and purchased his present farm of 160 acres in 1869, and has resided upon it since that time. Mr. Cantrell was married to Elvira A. Dunning, daughter of Miles and Patsey Dunning, of Trigg County, Ky., January 9, 1852. To this marriage the following children were born: Rodolphus (deceased), Mary B. (decesaed), Forrest (deceased), Henry B. (deceased), and E. H. Mrs. Cantrell died in 1861, aged thirty-three years. Mr. Cantrell's second marriage took place September 6, 1864, to Mary E. Adams, daughter of Sanford and Elizabeth Adams, of Caldwell County. This union has been blessed by the following children: Robert E. (deceased), Florence, Mallibert, S. J., Albert R. and J. J. Wheeler.

H. J. CARTER was born in the city of Concord, N. H., January 23, 1841, and is the third son of John and Margaret (Dow) Carter. Subject's paternal ancestors were natives of New Hampshire, and of English descent. The father, John Carter, was a farmer by occupation, and died in his native county in 1869, aged about seventy years. Subject's mother, Margaret Carter, is a daughter of Samuel Dow, who died in New Hampshire in the year 1847 or 1848. Mrs. Carter is still living in her native State at an advanced age. The subject of this sketch attended the common schools of his native city, and later the New London and Pembroke Academies; in 1856, he entered Darmouth College, but was not able to complete his course, owing to poor health, which compelled him to leave school at the end of the second year. After quitting college he went on a tour South and stopped in Alabama, where he engaged in teaching, which profession he followed until the breaking out of the war. He espoused the Southern cause, and enlisted in Wirt Adams' celebrated cavalry regiment, with which he served until after the battle of Shiloh, when he was transferred to the Third Alabama Cavalry, and assigned to duty on Gen. Wheeler's staff as topographical engineer. He afterward served on Col. Hagan's staff in the same capacity, and acquired the reputation of being one of the most skillful engineers in his division of the army. In the summer of 1863, he was captured at Shelbyville, Tenn., and confined in the Federal prisons at Nashville, Louisville, Camp Chase, Fort Delaware and Point Lookout, remaining at the latter place until the close of the war. During his confinement at Point Lookout he was elected president of the Y. M. C. A., organized among the prisoners, and also had executive charge of the prisoners' camp school, which numbered over 1,500 pupils, and employed fifty teachers. Mr Carter looks upon the time spent in connection with the prison school as the most useful and pleasant period of his life, and he is in receipt of numerous congratulatory letters from his pupils, many of whom are now holding positions of trust in various States. At the close of the war Mr. Carter returned to Alabama and accepted a professorship in the Female Academy, at Livingston, which position he filled until the fall of 1870, when he removed to Mississippi, and established the Male High School at the town of Meridian, remaining there for a period of nine years. In 1879, he came to Princeton, Ky., and accepted a professorship in Princeton College, with which institution he was connected one year. After severing his connection, Mr. Carter engaged in the drug business, which he still carries on, having one of the oldest drug houses in Princeton. Mr. Carter was married, December 25, 1860, to Miss Abbie A. Carrington, daughter of Robert M. Carrington, of Saratoga, N. Y. This union has been blessed by one child: Lake T. Mr. Carter stands high in the Masonic fraternity and K. of G. R.; he is a member of the Presbyterian Church South, as is also his wife.

W. P. A. CHAMBERS was born in Caldwell County, Ky., December 17, 1825, and is the second of a family of five children born to Thomas W. and Permelia (Saterfield) Chambers. He and one brother are all that survive. He worked at the saddler's trade for a short time, and then entered the grocery business at Princeton, Ky., and continued until he was twenty-three years old, when he became a farmer, locating near where he now lives. The place was then in the wilds, but by the assistance of his family he has succeeded in developing a good farm of 260 acres. Mr. Chambers was married, January 2, 1849, to Emily Mitchusson, who was born April 1, 1829, and died February 7, 1861. This union was blessed by the birth of the following children: Alma, born October 2, 1849; Elizabeth M., born March 22, 1851 deceased; James T., born February 14, 1853; Ninnian J., born February 3, 1855, deceased; William S., September 25, 1856; Mary, born July 4, 1859, and Emily, born January 26, 1861. Mr. Chamber's second marriage was to Rosa Keny, who was born June 22, 1837. Mr. Chambers was constable for several years, and justice of the peace for four years in the fourth district. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and a Democrat in politics.

JAMES A. COOK, Caldwell County, was born in Christian County, Ky.; February 18, 1833. His paternal ancestors came from Germany in an early day and settled in Franklin County, Va., in which State his grandfather, Benjamin Cook, died many years ago. His father, John W. Cook, was born in Virginia about the year 1796. He came to Kentucky about 1830, and settled in Christian County, where he acquired a handsome fortune. He was a large slave holder, and at one time took an active part in political matters. His death occurred in 1857. Subject's mother, Mary E. Cook, was a daughter of Anthony Street. She was born in Franklin County, Va., and died in Kentucky in the year 1860. Mr. and Mrs. Cook reared a family of seven children, named as follows: Eliza A., wife of George W. Duvall; Sarah M., wife of Dr. W. O. Stokes; Virginia, deceased; Susan, deceased; J. A., subject; Mary E., wife of L. D. Husbands, of Paducah; and John W., of Caldwell County. J. A. Cook remained with his parents until twenty-one years of age. His early education was received in the schools of Princeton and Princeton College, which last institution he attended several sessions. He chose the farmer's vocation as his life work, and at one time paid taxes on 1,900 acres of land in Caldwell County. He was married, July 10, 1856, to Miss Lydia Pettit, daughter of Thomas G. and Mary (Gray) Pettit, by whom he had three children, viz.: Mittie, John and Susan, none of whom are living. Mrs. Cook died November 8, 1863, at the age of about twenty-six years. February 14, 1865, Mr. Cook married Miss Addie Pettit, sister of his former wife. This union has been blessed with the birth of nine children: Florence, James A. (deceased), Dow Husbands, George (deceased), Harry Woodson, Frank (deceased), Edwin, Addie Cope and Jack Grace (deceased). In 1878 Mr. Cook moved to Paducah, where he remained five years, and then moved back to Caldwell County and purchased his present farm, five miles south of Princeton. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and in politics votes with the Democratic party. Mr. and Mrs. Cook are members of the Christian Church of Paducah.

R. M. CRAVENS, M. D., postmaster at Princeton, was born August 16, 1823, in Caldwell County, Ky., and is the second son of Michael M. and Elizabeth (Tovrea) Cravens, the father a native of Christian County, Ky., and the mother of Tennessee. Jesse P. Cravens, subject's grandfather, was born in the State of Virginia, and in a very early day moved to Christian County, Ky., of which he was one of the first permanent settlers, and which he represented in the legislature several terms. Michael Cravens was by trade a brick-maker; he came to Caldwell County when quite a young man, and was married here in the year 1820. He died, while on a southern tour, in 1845, aged fifty years. Mrs. Cravens departed this life in 1877, at the age of seventy-seven years. They were the parents of six children, James L., deceased; R. M., subject; Thomas Y., deceased; N. H., deceased; Michael M., deceased; Martha A., deceased. R. M. Cravens, in 1843, moved to west Tennessee and engaged in farming, which he followed for a period of twenty-seven years. In the year 1850, he began the study of medicine under the tutorship of Dr. J. B. McClellan, of Spring Hill, Tenn., and seven years later entered the Medical University of Nashville, from which he graduated in 1858. After graduating he commenced practicing medicine in his home neighborhood, and remained there until 1869, at which time he moved to Princeton and opened a drug store, which he carried on in connection with his profession for a period of two years. He then retired from active practice and removed to a farm a short distance from the county seat, on which he lived until 1882, when he received the appointment of postmaster of Princeton, and moved back to the city. Mr. Cravens is one of the leading Republicans in Caldwell County, and a gentleman of culture and refinement. He was married in February, 1843, to Miss Elizabeth, daughter of Augustine and Eunice Bumpass, of Tenn. To this union were born the following children: Tennie A., deceased; Cammie A., wife of J. T. Griffin; Elizabeth L., wife of Isaac Harper; and Elvira P., deceased. Mrs. Cravens died in November, 1869, aged fifty-two years, and on the twenty-sixth of July, 1871, Mr. Cravens married Mrs. Martha P. Stone, daughter of James and Hannah Cantwell of Caldwell County.

WILLIAM B. CREWS, son of Randolph and Elizabeth (Parker) Crews, was born in Henry County, Mo., March 12, 1840. Randolph Crews was born in Madison County, Ky., in 1815. He was a blacksmith by occupation and worked at his trade in Henry County, Mo., for twenty-two years. He was killed at his home near Calhoun, Mo., in 1862, by a band of guerrillas. Elizabeth Crews, subject's mother, is a daughter of Wiley Parker, a resident of Webster County, Ky., and is still living in Missouri. Mr. and Mrs. Crews were the parents of eleven children: W. B., R. Z., Elizabeth, Maud, Alfred, Thomas, Ann E., Mary, John R., Ellen and Susan A. William B. Crews received a fair education, and commenced farming for himself at the age of twenty-one in his native county. At the breaking out of the war he espoused the cause of the Confederacy and enlisted in Maj. Owen's battalion of mounted infantry, with which he served four years, participating in many hard fought battles in the Western campaign. He received a severe wound in the left hip at Helena, Ark., in 1863, and was also captured the same year and held a prisoner twenty months. He was paroled at Richmond, Va., in 1865, and immediately thereafter went back to Missouri, where he engaged in farming. The following year he moved to Kentucky, locating in Caldwell County, on the place where he now resides, two miles south of Princeton. He was married June 6, 1866, to Mrs. P. F. Pettit, daughter of Thomas and Sarah Kevil of Caldwell County. Mr. and Mrs. Crews have a family of four children: Sarah Frances, James Randolph, Susan Ann and Lucy Evaline. By a previous marriage Mrs. Crews has one child living, Thomas M. Pettit. Mr. Crews operates a farm of 330 acres and is one of the successful business men of the community. He and wife are members of the Rock Spring Church, Methodist Episcopal.

JACOB CRIDER was a native of Pittsylvania, County, Va., and came to Kentucky about 1805, with his parents, who settled on Piney Creek, in what is now Crittenden County, where they lived and died. He came to this county in 1835, and settled on a part of the farm now owned by J. E. Crider. Here he first bought 200 acres, but afterward increased the size of his farm to 700 acres, which was subsequently divided among his children. He shipped stock to New Orleans for many years and also paid considerable attention to raising stock. He handled about fifty head per year. For four years he was a partner with F. H. Baker in the dry goods business in Fredonia. He also ran a steam flouring-mill, with wool carding attachment, at Fredonia for about five years. He died August 4, 1875. He was identified with the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. He was married to Miss Orpha Bivens, who was born in Georgia and came to this county in 1806, when nine years old, with her parents. She died January 1, 1863. To her and husband were born eleven children, of whom three are now living: Mrs. Mary J. Wyatt, Z. J. and J. E.

Z. J. CRIDER was born December 23, 1825. He received his education at Fredonia and spent his early life on his father's farm. At the age of twenty, he left home and commenced life for himself. His first venture was merchandizing at Fredonia, and he followed this business for over seven years. He next settled on a farm one and a half miles east of the village, where he resided until 1868. He then came to Walnut Grove and settled on his present farm, where he now owns about 700 acres, of which there are about 600 acres in cultivation. He also pays some attention to stock raising. In 1876 he purchased the Hoover Mill, which he is still running. At present the milling property is valued at about $2,500. deputy clerk and notary public. Mr. and Mrs. Duer are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

GEORGE W. DUVALL, attorney at law, Caldwell County, Ky., was born in Lewis County, Va., December 11, 1829. His grandfather, Lewis Duvall, was a native of Virginia, and in an early day moved to Harrison County, in the western part of the State (now West Virginia), where he died many years ago. Subject's father, George T. Duvall, was one of the earliest settlers of Lewis County, Va. He was one of the founders of what is known as Collins' Settlement, a locality which has probably produced more distinguished men than any other community in the United States. Among the noted men born in this settlement can be named G. D. Camden; J. M. Bennett and James Bennett, lawyers of State reputation; George J. and William E. Arnold, leading attorneys; J. M. and Homer Holt, prominent lawyers; Johnson Camden, present United States senator from West Virginia; Dr. Thomas Camden; Morgan L. Pullen; George W. Bush; W. K. Wilson and L. L. Duvall, and others, all prominent men, and all born within a radius of five miles of the original settlement. George T. Duvall was a farmer and man of high standing, and filled various positions of honor and trust. He died in 1876, aged eighty-eight years. Subject's mother, Mary (Godfrey) Duvall, was a daughter of John Godfrey, who died in Lewis County, Va., in 1846, at the advanced age of one hundred and ten years. Mrs. Duvall departed this life June 17, 1866, aged seventy years. Mr. and Mrs. Duvall reared a large family of children, most of whom are dead, and all loved and respected where they lived and died. Capt. George W. Duvall enjoyed good educational advantages in his youth, and at the age of eighteen entered the Northwestern Virginia Academy at Clarksburgh, from which he graduated in 1853. After graduation he commenced the study of law in Lewis County under Judge G. D. Camden, and received license to practice in 1854. In 1857 he located in Spencer, Roane Co., Va., where he engaged in the practice of his profession, and remained until 1861, at which time he entered the Confederate army as private; was elected captain of Company E, Thirty-sixth Virginia Regiment, Volunteer Infantry, with which he served until September, 1863. In 1861 he was elected to represent the counties of Jackson and Roane in the legislature of Virginia, but did not get a certificate or take his seat owing to his connection with the army. He was again elected in May, 1863, left the service in September and entered upon his duties as representative, remaining in the house until 1865. At the close of the war he came to Princeton, where he has ever since resided, practicing his profession in Caldwell and adjoining counties. He was elected commonwealth's attorney for Caldwell County in 1876 and served two terms. He was married January 4, 1872, to Mrs. E. A. Murrell, daughter of John W. and Mary Cook, formerly of Virginia. Mr. Duvall is a successful attorney, having a large and lucrative practice, and for several years has been one of the leading lawyers of southern Kentucky. In politics he has always been a Jeffersonian Democrat.

Mrs. Hopson survived her husband one year, and died in October, 1870, aged seventy-six years. Their family consisted of twelve children, subject being the ninth. He lived at the paternal home until his thirtieth year, in the meantime farming and trading for himself. In 1853 he came to Caldwell County, and engaged in the livery business at Princeton, which he continued for five years, and at the end of that time started a blacksmith shop, which he operated for about two years. In 1859, he moved to the country, and engaged in farming, one and a half miles from Princeton, purchasing a good tract of land on which he resided until 1867, when he moved back to the city, and opened a mercantile house, with which he was connected for a short time. He purchased the farm on which he at present resides, two and a half miles east of Princeton, in 1870. March 25, 1851, Mr. Hopson was married to Ann Hammond, daughter of William and Elizabeth (Halloway) Hammond. Mrs. Hopson was born December 11, 1834, and came to Kentucky in 1851. The following children have been born to this marriage: Helen (deceased), Edwin, Mack, Willie and Junius (deceased), Mr. and Mrs. Hopson are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

N. C. HOOVER, Caldwell County, was born in Bedford County, Tenn., July 15, 1848, and is the second child born to Charles L. and Jemima (Marr) Hoover, natives of Tennessee, but who came to Kentucky, when N. C. was eight years old. The subject lived on a farm with his parents until 1872, when he came to Scottsburg, and engaged as clerk with J. H. Miller. For this service he received nothing, his employer leaving at the end of six months. He then began business for himself and has since continued with reasonable success. He was appointed railroad agent at Scottsburg in 1875; agent for the Southern Express Company in 1880, and postmaster May 17, 1881. All these offices he now holds. Mr. Hoover is a strong advocate of temperance and education, and has lectured some on moral questions. He takes a deep interest in politics, and votes the straight Republican ticket. He was married November 15, 1876, to Annie Jones, daughter of Noflet and Harriet Jones. This union has been blessed by the birth of three children: Herbert, born September 10, 1877; Iva Myrtle, born January 5, 1879, and Harland, born September 29, 1881.

J. M. HOWARD was born January 2, 1834, and is the second of eight children born to Franklin and Martha E. Howard. His grandparents were very early settlers of this region, and lived to a very old age. Mr. Howard was reared a farmer and has been successful through life. He and his wife are members of the Baptist Church. He is at present chairman of the board of trustees in his school district. Mr. Howard enlisted in the Third Kentucky Regiment, Confederate States Army, in July, 1861, and served until March, 1864. Among some of the battles in which he took part, were Shiloh, where he was wounded in the left arm, and Corinth. He was married December 22, 1857, to Louisa J. Matlock, daughter of Rev. Thomas W. Matlock, one of the prominent ministers of this section. She was born April 13, 1842. This union has been blessed with seven children: Alexis B., Maxius O., Fannie B., Maud E., Hubert G., Mabel V. and Chester M., all of whom are living.

THOMAS HUNTER was born April 15, 1811, in Fayette County, Ky. His paternal ancestors were natives of Maryland, his grandfather dying in that State a great many years ago. His father, George Hunter, Jr., came from Maryland in his early manhood, and settled in Fayette County, Ky., where he lived until 1824, when he moved to Todd County, and one year later moved to Caldwell County and located near Princeton. He was a farmer, and died at his home about the year 1835 or 1836. The maiden name of subject's mother was Elizabeth McKee. She died when Thomas was quite a small boy. The following are the names of the children born to George and Elizabeth Hunter: James (deceased), Martha (deceased), George (deceased), Samuel, William (deceased), Archibald and Thomas. By a second marriage Mr. Hunter reared a family of eight children, several of whom are now living. Thomas Hunter passed his youth in his native county of Fayette, and came to Caldwell County with his father in the year mentioned above. He received a good education in the schools of the country, and at the age of twenty was appointed deputy sheriff of Caldwell County, which position he filled for several years. After quitting the sheriff's office he engaged in farming, purchasing a fine tract of land two and a half miles from Princeton, which is now one of the finest farms in the county. He carried on farming for some time, and afterward engaged in the mercantile and milling business. He has been one of the leading business men of the county, but is now retired from active life. He has been twice married; the first time, February 23, 1834, to Lucy A. Rochester, a daughter of Nathaniel and Miland Rochester, of Caldwell County. One child was born to this marriage: Sophia Jane, deceased wife of Benjamin Gardner. Mrs. Hunter departed this life April 22, 1842, at the age of about thirty-one years. Mr. Hunter was married the second time, September 22, 1842, the bride being Jane R. Crabb, of Garrard County, Ky., by whom he has had six children, viz.: John C., Mary E., deceased wife of D. H. Armstrong; Thomas H. (deceased), J. W., Lucy, wife of Rev. I. B. Self, and Robert L. (deceased). Mr. Hunter is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, in which he has held the office of elder for a period of over forty years.

JAMES F. INGRAM was born March 26, 1835, in Princeton, Caldwell Co. He is a son of George J. and Mary (Martin) Ingram, the father a native of Virginia and the mother of Muhlenburgh County, Ky. George J. Ingram was born in 1802, and came to Kentucky with his parents when quite a small boy, settling in Logan County, where he lived until about 1825 or 1826, at which time he moved to Caldwell County and located at Princeton. He was a tailor, and worked at his trade in Princeton for a number of years, but later in life purchased a farm four miles from the town, on which he lived for a period of sixteen years, dying in 1879. Mrs. Ingram, subject's mother, was a daughter of Hudson Martin, an early settler of Muhlenburgh County. She died in 1874, aged sixty-eight or seventy years. Mr. and Mrs. Ingram were the parents of thirteen children, only four of whom are living: James F., Charles H., George Felix and Elizabeth, wife of W. H. Carter. Our subject at the age of fourteen years was apprenticed to C. T. Dabney, saddler, for three years. In 1852 he joined a company of gold-seekers from northwest Missouri, and went to California, where he remained two years, returning to Princeton in 1854. A short time afterward he went to Garrettsburg, Christian County, where he worked at his trade some months, and later came back to Princeton, and engaged with his former employer, remaining with him several years. He was elected marshal of Princeton in 1859, and served until 1861, when he commenced farming, which he continued until 1863. In the latter year he moved to Princeton and effected a partnership with Mr. Dabney in the saddlery business. He subsequently purchased his partner's interest, and continued the business until 1875, at which time he engaged with Charles Ratcliffe in the general hardware and saddlery business, which he continued until 1881, when he disposed of his city business, and purchased his present farm, one mile east of Princeton, on which he has since resided. He was married January 19, 1859, to Mary R., daughter of John and Sarah Teear. This union has been blessed with the following children: Joseph Allen, Sarah F., John (deceased), Mary E., James, Annie Laura, Lena, infant deceased, and Charles Owen. Mr. Ingram is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and votes with the Democratic party. He and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

WILLIAM A. JAMES, of Caldwell County, Ky., is a native of Union County, Ky., and was born August 6, 1821. His father, Judge Thomas James, was born in Virginia in 1796, and came with his parents to Kentucky in about 1800, settling first in Logan County. The family moved a few years later to Union County, then to Hickman County, Ky., where Mr. James afterward became noted as a public spirited citizen and politician. He represented Hickman County in the lower house of the legislature for a period of eight years, and afterward served in the State senate for sixteen years, representing the First Senatorial District. He was a member of the constitutional convention of 1849, beside filling several other positions of trust, and died in 1870, aged seventy-four years. Subject's mother, Judith (Finney) James, died in 1856 at the age of fifty-six years. Mr. and Mrs. James were the parents of five children, William A. being the second. Subject remained with his parents until reaching his fourteenth year, when he started out in life for himself, engaging first as a clerk in a mercantile house at Charlotte, Tenn., continuing until he reached his majority, when he effected a copartnership with the proprietor, which was kept up for nineteen or twenty years. In 1857 he went to Nashville, Tenn., and engaged in the coal trade, which he carried on quite extensively until the breaking out of the war. For eighteen months following his coal trade he was engaged in steamboating. In November, 1864, he went to Cincinnati, Ohio, and went into the wholesale boot and shoe business, which he carried on for two years. In November, 1868, he came to Princeton, Ky., and opened a dry goods store, which he carried on until 1884, at which time he disposed of his business and retired from active life. For forty-nine years Mr. James has been a prominent business man, and during that long period he has sustained the reputation of being strictly honest and liberal in all his dealings. By successful management he has been enabled to accumulate a handsome competency for his declining years. Mr. James was first married in April, 1846, to Miss Mary J., daughter of John C. and Mary Collier, of Charlotte, Tenn. To this union were born the following children: Frances E., deceased; Sallie B., deceased; Mary, deceased; Belle, deceased; Henry, deceased; Judith E.; John T. and Willie A. Mrs. James died September 14, 1870, aged forty-six years. In April, 1872, Mr. James married Mrs. M. M. Reed, daughter of William and Susan Walker, of Covington, Ky. Mr. James belongs to the Masonic fraternity, and he and his wife are active members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

T. J. JOHNSON, JR., Caldwell County, was born October 13, 1842, in Eddyville, Lyon Co. (then Caldwell), Ky., and is a son of T. J. and Eliza Ann (Barnard) Johnson, the former a native of Tennessee and the latter of Kentucky. Subject's paternal grandfather was a native of North Carolina, who immigrated to Tennessee in an early day, and ran a ferry at Nashville when there were but two or three cabins in that city. John Barnard, maternal grandfather, was born in Massachusetts, which State he left many years ago, immigrating to Kentucky and settling at Princeton, where he lived until 1840, at which time he moved to Texas and died in that State two years later. His wife, Rachel (Warren) Barnard, was a grand niece of Gen. Warren, who fell at the battle of Bunker Hill. She died in Kentucky in 1880, at the advanced age of one hundred and one years. T. J. Johnson, Sr., subject's father, came to Princeton in 1833, and worked at the tinner's trade for a number of years. He was also a livery man and hotel-keeper, and later in life became a farmer. He is still living in Logan County, where he moved in 1873. Subject's mother is living also. T. J., Jr., is the fourth of a family of ten children. He commenced life for himself at the age of seventeen years by keeping a stage office at Hopkinsville, where he remained until the breaking out of the war. In April, 1861, he enlisted in Woodward's Oak Grove Rangers (Confederate), with which he served through the war. His command figured in the Western campaign under Gens. Forrest and Wheeler, and participated in a number of bloody engagements, the most noted of which were second fight at Fort Donelson, Thompson's Station, Farmington, Saltville and Chickamauga. Mr. Johnson was taken prisoner in middle Tennessee September 6, 1864, and kept in confinement at Camp Chase until the close of the war, after which he went West, and for several years followed mining, stock-raising and farming among the Rocky Mountains. After an absence of five years he came back to his native State and engaged in farming in Ballard County, which he continued until 1873, when he engaged as clerk for J. T. Savage, of Hopkinsville. He afterward served as clerk for E. H. Daniells, of Princeton, with whom he remained for a period of five years, and then went to Texas for the purpose of going into the stock business. He remained but a short time, however, coming back to Princeton before the expiration of a year, and engaging in the livery business, which he still follows, and in which he has been very successful. Mr. Johnson was married June 2, 1880, to Miss Ida Bell, daughter of Dr. J. A. and Mary M. (Melville) King, of Caldwell County. Three children bless this union: King, Jeff Warren and Ray Barnard.

WILLIAM C. C. JONES, of Caldwell County, was born in London, Middlesex Co., England, December 22, 1809, and is a son of Augustus and Mary (Bosley) Jones, also natives of England. The father was a trained soldier in the English army, and served as captain in the Fifth Lancers, under Wellington. He was wounded at the battle of Waterloo; was placed on the pension roll, and finally died in April, 1812, aged seventy-two years; his widow died in April, 1820, aged sixty years. William C. Jones remained with his parents until he was fourteen years of age, and then attended two sessions at Eton College. In 1830 he came to America and settled in Caldwell County, Ky. He immediately entered upon his profession, teaching his first school three miles east of Princeton. For over fifty years this veteran educator has directed the minds of the youth of Caldwell County and other counties. His head has grown gray and his steps tottering in following his work in the school room, and he can look back over a course strewn with many pleasant deeds and recollections. His first pupils were those men who are to-day numbered among the pioneers of this county, while since then their children and grandchildren have in turn been his pupils, and now, as his life work is nearing its end, he can feel sure that his example has accomplished good in nearly every family in the county. Mr. Jones was married in October, 1844, to Elizabeth, daughter of Tighlman and Catherine Martin, of Fauquier County, Va. The result of this union has been four children: H. M., Mary C. (deceased), Sarah M. (wife of Prof. E. Lee Blanton), and William J. Subject was elected school commissioner in Caldwell County, in 1874, and served two years. He also served as examiner previous to the time that the office of school commissioner was created. He is identified with the Princeton Presbyterian Church South, and in politics affiliates with the Democratic party.

W. R. JONES, M. D., is a native of Buckingham County, Va., and was born January 15, 1839. His father, David C. Jones, was descended from an old Welsh family, and became a physician of considerable note, practicing his profession for many years in Appomattox County, where he died in November, 1859. His mother, Eliza A. Jones, is still living in Virginia at an advanced age. She is the daughter of William Walton, a native of Virginia, and of English extraction, who died in 1850. The following are the names of the children born to David C. and Eliza A. Jones: Anne, Martha (deceased), Alice (deceased), Sallie, Ellen, William R. (subject), Charles (deceased), Frank, Ida, Cornelia, Belle and Howard (deceased). W. R. enjoyed the advantages of a good education in his youth, attending the high school of Appomattox County a number of terms before attaining his majority, reading medicine in the meantime under the instruction of his father. In 1859 he entered the medical department of Virginia University, of Charlottesville, and graduated from that institution in the class of 1861. Immediately after graduation he commenced practicing his profession in Pamplin City Va., remaining there until 1862, at which time he entered the Confederate service as assistant surgeon in the hospital department, in which capacity he served until the close of the war. In 1866 he came to Kentucky, and located at Boxville, Union County, where he practiced his profession for a period of seven years, when he went back to his native State, remaining there until 1879. In the latter year he again came to Kentucky, locating at Montgomery Village, Trigg County, where he remained until 1882, at which time he moved to Princeton, where he has since resided. He was married in Union County, Ky., September 1, 1869, to Miss Drue, daughter of Dr. James B. and Frances Allen, of Sulphur Springs. Mr. and Mrs. Jones had born to them two children, both deceased. The Doctor has been a successful physician, and has a very lucrative practice in Princeton and surrounding country.

C. C. JONES was born October 27, 1847, near the village of Scottsburg, in Caldwell Co., Ky. His father, Noflet, a native of North Carolina, was born in 1816, and came to Tennessee when quite young. His mother, Harriet (Bowers) Jones (deceased) was a native of Tennessee. They were the parents of eight children, of whom our subject is the fourth. C. C. Jones has spent the greater part of his life in farm pursuits. He enlisted in Company C, Seventeenth Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, United States army, September 20, 1864, and served just one year, when he was honorably discharged at Louisville. While in the service and sick at Bowling Green of varioloid and typhus fever, he lay in a stable in preference to going to the hospital, for nearly a week, living on hazel nuts. He is now suffering from the effects of his exposure in the war. In 1872 he opened a small store in Scottsburg, which he still controls. January 2, 1873, he was united in marriage to Miss Martha E. Howard, daughter of Franklin and Martha E. Howard. This union has been blessed with the following named children: Hugh, born December 17, 1873, died November 25, 1876; Harmon, born September 17, 1875; Ires May, born September 29, 1877; Mattie M., born October 31, 1879; Artilia F., born January 8, 1882; Firman, born January 16, 1883. Mr. Jones is an enthusiastic Republican.

W. H. JONES was born Jauuary 13, 1839, in Lyon County, Ky., and is the second son of G. B. and Sarah Jones, the father a native of Kentucky, and the mother, of Greenbrier County, Va. Subject's paternal grandfather, John Jones, was a native of South Carolina. He was among the early pioneers of Lyon County, and settled in the neighborhood of New Bethel, between Eddyville and Fredonia, where he died some years ago. G. B. Jones, subject's father, was born February 23, 1807, and spent the greater part of his life in Caldwell and Lyon Counties. He died in March, 1881. The maiden name of subject's mother as Sarah Holsapple. She was a daughter of Henry Holsapple, who came from Virginia in an early day and settled in Lyon County, dying there before subject was born. Mrs. Jones died in 1878, aged sixty-five years. W. H. Jones commenced life for himself as a shoemaker, which trade he followed for fourteen years. October 28, 1878, he engaged in merchandising in the village of Dulaney, a station on the Chesapeake, Ohio & Southwestern Railroad, which business he still continues, carrying on an extensive trade with a stock aggregating $4,000. In 1881 he was appointed deputy county clerk under F. A. Pasteur, and served in that capacity one year. He has been assistant postmaster and postmaster fifteen years; railroad agent since 1873, and express agent for about four years, holding at present the positions of postmaster, railroad agent and express agent. Mr. Jones was married January 12, 1874, to Malvina G. Yates, daughter of G. W. and Martha Yates, of Lyon County.

DR. W. D. KIRKPATRICK was born in Corydon, Ind., November 26, 1819, and is a son of James and Jane Dodd Kirkpatrick. James Kirkpatrick was born in Jefferson County, Ky., in 1784, and was among the first white children of upper Kentucky. His father, Moses Kirkpatrick, was born near Washington, in Canada Jake Valley, Penn., and coming to Kentucky when a young man, settled near the present site of Louisville. He erected a block house on Harrod's Creek, and lived there with his family for some years. One day while out hunting at Dreman's Spring Lick, it is supposed he was captured by the Indians, for he was never seen by his family again. James Kirkpatrick was a resident in Jefferson County until his marriage in 1812. He then lived for a short time in Henry County, Ky. Shortly after the Indiana capital was established at Corydon, he moved to that point, and there followed the trade of a tanner. When Indianapolis was made the capital he moved to New Albany, where he merchandised for a few years. He then returned to Kentucky, and settled in Canton, Trigg County. There he sold goods until 1831, when he came to Fredonia, and opened the first store that ever had been there. He continued in business for about five years, and then turned his attention to farming. He settled near the village and there resided until his death, which occurred in 1874, at the age of ninety years. The mother of our subject was born in Scotland, and came to this country when twelve years of age, with her parents, who settled in Henry County, Ky. Her death occurred at New Albany in 1828. While James Kirkpatrick was a resident of Corydon, he served as associate judge for some time. At the breaking out of the war of 1812 he raised a company, but, owing to sickness in his family, he was subsequently compelled to procure a substitute. Both he and his wife were members of the Old School Presbyterians. Our subject is the fifth of twelve children, of whom but two are now living: Moses, in Salt Lake City, Utah, and W. D. The latter received his education in the old field schools of the county, and worked on the home farm until seventeen years of age, and then went to Paducah. There he first clerked and subsequently ran a store-boat on the Ohio River. He next became deputy postmaster at that point, under Frank Harrison, and remained there until 1842. In the meantime he found time to read medicine under Drs. Lay and Brownell. He next came to Fredonia and entered upon the practice of his profession. Since that time he has continued to have a fair practice, and is now the oldest resident physician in the place. He is a member of the Southwestern Kentucky Medical Society, the National Medical Association, and the State Sanitary Board. He also pays attention to agriculture, owning a farm of 150 acres. Dr. Kirkpatrick was married January 29, 1850, to Miss Aurelia S. Cobb, of Eddyville, Ky., daughter of Gideon and Modena (Clark) Cobb, natives of Vermont. Mrs. Kirkpatrick was born in Eddyville, and is the mother of six children, of whom two are living: James D., in Kuttawa, and Moses C., at home on the farm. Dr. Kirkpatrick is a member of Fredonia Lodge, No. 247, A. F. & A. M., and is also a member of the Old School Presbyterian Church.

R. H. LANDER was born August 14, 1826, in Caldwell County, Ky. His grandfather, William Lander, Sr., was a native of Virginia, but left that State as early as 1790, immigrating to Kentucky, and settling near Strode's Station, where he lived until 1800, at which time he moved to Christian County, locating near Belleview, where he died in 1845. Subject's maternal grandfather was Robert Dudley. He was born in Kentucky, and early distinguished himself in the Indian wars, holding the position of captain. His death occurred in Lyon County in 1842. William Lander, Jr., subject's father, was born in Clark County, Ky., came to Caldwell County in 1819, was the first resident lawyer of Princeton and practiced here eight years. He died in 1834, aged thirty-five years. Paulina Lander, subject's mother departed this life in July, 1834, at the age of thirty years. To William and Paulina Lander were born the following children: Robert H. (subject), William C., Nancy P., Paulina G. and Margaret, deceased. R. H. Lander spent his youth in the family of relatives, his parents having died when he was quite small. He obtained a good practical education from the schools of Princeton and from Cumberland College, which institution he entered in 1840, remaining four years. After leaving college he engaged as clerk in the store of M. Dudley in Princeton, in which capacity he served until about 1846, when he opened a wholesale and retail grocery house, which he conducted for three years. In 1854 he purchased his present place of residence, one mile east of Princeton, and since that time he has been actively engaged in farming and stock raising. He was married August 7, 1851, to Miss Pernecy, daughter of Charles and Lucinda (Gray) Wall, of Caldwell County. The following children have been born to this union: Georgiana (deceased), Charles W., Nancy (deceased), Lucy, Mary (deceased), Rose, Robert, Benjamin (deceased) and Stephen B. Mr. Lander is a member of the Masonic fraternity and votes with the Democratic party. He is also a member of the Presbyterian Church, in which he has held the office of ruling elder for over thirty years. Mrs. Lander also belongs to the Presbyterian Church.

T. A. LOWEY, attorney at law, Caldwell County, was born June 8, 1825, in Sparta, White Co., Tenn. His father, James S. Lowey, was a native of North Carolina, which State he left when quite a small boy, moving to Sparta, where he lived until 1827, at which time he came to Caldwell County, Ky., and remained here until 1865, when he immigrated to Johnson County, Ill., dying there in 1882, at the age of ninety-four years. He was of Irish descent and had served as a soldier in the American army during the war of 1812. Subject's mother, Elizabeth Lowey, was a daughter of Turner Lane, an early settler of White County, Tenn. She was married to Mr. Lowey in 1807, and died in 1852. Mr. and Mrs. Lowey were the parents of fourteen children, T. His father was born August 17, 1818, and died July 30, 1855. His mother was born December 26, 1821, and is still living. His paternal grandfather, Samuel McConnell, was born October 3, 1774, and died October 6, 1837, and his paternal grandmother, Elizabeth (Nesbit) McConnell, who was born October 21, 1780, died September 17, 1840. His maternal grandfather, Joseph McConnell, was born March 21, 1784, and died October 8, 1855, and his maternal grandmother, Jane McConnell, who was born March 18, 1795, died August 6, 1847. Mr. McConnell is a farmer and has resided in Caldwell County all his life. He speculates some in tobacco. February 20, 1878, he was married to Maggie B. Groom, daughter of William G. (deceased) and Martha Groom, early settlers of this region. Two children—Harry Claude and Percy Hugh—have been born to them. Mr. and Mrs. McConnell together own 270 acres of land. They are members of the Harmony Baptist Church, and Mr. McConnell is at present one of the deacons in said church; he is a strong advocate of temperance, and is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

SAMUEL McELFATRICK is a native of Dauphin County, Penn. He was born September 18, 1821, and is the eldest son and second child of Edward and Eve (Hartman) McElfatrick, both natives of Pennsylvania. Hector McElfatrick, subject's grandfather, was born in Scotland; when a mere child he came to America with his parents, who settled in Dauphin County, Penn. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, and died in the city of Baltimore before his term of service expired. Edward McElfatrick was an architect and builder. He left Pennsylvania in 1852, going to Fort Wayne, Ind., in which city he died in 1873, at the age of eighty-one years. His wife, Eve McElfatrick, was a daughter of Christian Hartman, who died in Lancaster County, Penn., about the year 1824. Mrs. McE. died at Fort Wayne, Ind., in 1882, aged eighty-two years. The family of Mr. and Mrs. McElfatrick consisted of the following children: Sarah, Samuel, John B., a noted architect of New York City, William D., Mary, Josiah H., Isaiah C. (deceased) and Eliza (deceased). The subject of this sketch commenced the study of architecture under his father, but finally abandoned it for the profession of civil engineer, which he commenced studying when sixteen years old under Harman Gross, of Dauphin, with whom he remained eighteen months. After attaining his majority he was appointed civil engineer of the Dauphin & Susquehanna Coal Company, which position he filled until the year 1852, when he resigned in order to accept the appointment of chief engineer of the Ohio & Indiana Railroad, now the Pittsburgh, Ft. Wayne & Chicago, with which he remained until its consolidation with the Ohio & Pennsylvania Company—in all a period of eleven years. He was next appointed chief engineer of the Grand Rapids & Indiana Railroad, remaining with the company two years, when he resigned and came to Louisville, and accepted a position as division engineer under George McCool, serving in that capacity until the completion of the road, making headquarters at Princeton. He located the Elizabethtown and Paducah roads, now known as the Chesapeake, Ohio & Southwestern, from Greenville and Paducah and had charge of its construction from Trade Water River and west side of the Tennessee River, including the bridges over the Cumberland and Tennessee. In 1873 he was appointed chief engineer of the Clarksville & Princeton Railroad, making the preliminary survey; in the same year he received the appointment as engineer to make the survey of the Princeton & Southern Railroad. In 1880 he engaged with the Columbus & Tennessee Railroad Company, making the survey of line of the said road, and in the latter part of the same year was elected president of the Princeton Stone & Marble Company. Mr. McElfatrick has also filled several other positions, in all of which he has shown himself master of his profession. In 1882 he purchased lands in Hopkins County, Ky., and organized the Crab Tree Coal Company, with which he is at present connected. He is also connected with the Princeton Stone & Marble Company, recently reorganized, being one of its leading officials. Mr. McElfatrick has been twice married; the first time on the 19th of September, 1842, in Middletown, Penn., to Rachel Simcox, daughter of Charles and Catherine Simcox, by whom he had four children: John E., James R. (deceased), Catharine and Mamie. Mrs. McElfatrick died in 1864, aged forty-two years. His second marriage took place July 4, 1867, to Rose Worden, daughter of Judge James Worden, of Indiana. Mr. McElfatrick has been living in Princeton since 1878, and purposes to make the city his permanent place of residence. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, in which he has taken all the degrees, including the K. of M. He filled the position of high priest of the Royal Arch Chapter of Fort Wayne, Ind., for a period of five years, and was also eminent commander of Knights Templar in the same place for five years; he is also a member of the I. O. O. F.; politically, votes with the Democratic party.

CHARLES T. MARTIN was born in Caldwell County, on the 6th of January, 1854, and is the eldest son of Elias and Mildred (Cantrell) Martin, both parents natives of Kentucky. Subject's grandfather, Tillman Martin, moved from Virginia to Kentucky in a very early day, and located near Princeton, where he died, about the year 1844. Elias Martin was born in Trigg County in the year 1814, and is still living on his farm five miles south of Princeton. The father of Mrs. Martin was James Cantrell, a native of one of the Carolinas, and an early settler of Caldwell County. Charles T. Martin is the eldest of a family of six children, and was reared on a farm, attended the common schools of the country in his youth, and commenced life for himself as a farmer, purchasing a tract of 166 acres of fine land, lying four miles west of the county seat, where he at present resides. He makes farming a specialty, but pays considerable attention to buying and selling stock, in which he has been very successful. Mr. Martin was married December 24, 1877, to Miss Eudora, daughter of Washington and Adelia (Lester) Rucker of Caldwell County. Three children have been born to this union viz.: Walter L., Bessie L., and an infant (deceased).

DR. JAMES A. MAXWELL was born in Caldwell County, Ky., January 26, 1843, and is a son of W. P. and Isabella (Adamson) Maxwell, both natives of Caldwell County. The paternal grandfather was a native of Guilford Court House, N. C.; he left that State in company with his father, Edward Maxwell, at the close of the Revolution, and came to Kentucky; he first settled in what is now Washington County, and in 1797 came to what is now Caldwell County, and here the family has since resided. The grandfather resided in that county until his death, which occurred in 1839, in the fifty-fourth year of his age. The maternal grandfather, Alexander Adamson, was a native of Scotland, and emigrated from that country in 1818. Upon his arrival in this country he settled in Caldwell County, Ky., where he died in about 1833. The father of subject is still living in Princeton, and is engaged in farming and trading, being numbered among the foremost men of the county. The mother died on March 3, 1864, at the age of forty-two years. Our subject remained with his parents until he was twenty-one, receiving his education at the Bethlehem Academy. In 1864 he commenced the study of medicine with Dr. T. B. Johnson, of Fredonia, Caldwell County. He read with him one year, and then entered the Kentucky School of Medicine. In 1866 he entered the Jefferson Medical College at Philadelphia, Penn., graduating from that institution with the class of 1867. He began the practice of his profession at Fredonia, where he remained four years, when he came to Princeton, where he has since resided. In connection with his practice he opened a drug store upon his arrival at Princeton, and at this business he engaged until 1880, when he closed out his stock. Dr. Maxwell was married, June 5, 1878, to Miss Caroline M., daughter of Capt. John F. and Mary D. Herris, of Paducah. This union has resulted in two children: Perry D. and Mary I. Subject served as police judge at Fredonia one year, and has been member of the Princeton Board of Trustees. He is also a member of the Masonic fraternity.

A. C. MAYES, Caldwell County, was born March 15, 1830, in Christian County, Ky., and has never lived outside his native State. He is a son of Robert C. Mayes, a prominent farmer of Trigg County, whose death occurred about 1832 or 1833. His mother, Martha Mayes, was a daughter of William Walden, a native Virginian, and one of the early settlers of central Kentucky. He lived for a number of years in Barren County, and later moved to the county of Trigg, where he died about the year 1828. Mrs. Mayes survived her husband about thirty years, and died in 1862, at the age of sixty years. The subject of this sketch is the second of a family of three children, and the only one now living. At the age of sixteen years he commenced life for himself as clerk in a mercantile house in Cadiz, Ky., where he remained four years, and at the end of that time came to Princeton, where he also engaged as clerk for a period of several years. Later he entered the dry goods business, which he continued until 1878, and then established a book and stationery and variety store, which he is conducting at the present time. This establishment represents a capital of about $8,000. Mr. Mayes was married, April 19, 1859, to Miss Anna, daughter of William and Caroline McGowan, by whom he has had two children: Walter (deceased) and Hugh. Mr. Mayes has been called to fill various official positions at different times, having been elected magistrate in 1870, which office he filled for fourteen years; he was also treasurer of Caldwell County for five years, and discharged the duties of that office with credit to himself and satisfaction to the public. He is an active member of the Masonic fraternity, I. O. O. F. and K. of H., and belongs to the Christian Church of Princeton, as does also his wife.

ELIAS MITCHELL is a native of Trigg County, Ky., born April 9, 1837, and is a son of Jarett and Sarah Mitchell, both deceased, who were of English descent. He was reared a farmer, and with the exception of occasional work at the brick-maker's trade, he followed farming all his life. He is at present manufacturing brick on his farm. He moved to this county from Trigg County in 1878. He has held the office of justice of the peace for nearly three years. He was married, September 25, 1856, to Margaret Adams, who was born November 5, 1837, and died April 25, 1862; she was the mother of the following children; an infant (deceased), Samuel E. and Charles W. His second marriage, which took place February 6, 1866, was to Frances Stephens, who was born February 6, 1837. This union has been blessed with four children, viz.: an infant (deceased), Vallie May, Effie A. and Luther B. Mr. Mitchell takes an active interest in politics, and votes the Democratic ticket. He has a farm of fifty acres.

Dr. R. R. MORGAN, Caldwell County, was born in Fredonia District, December 4, 1844, and is a son of J. Q. C. and Frances (Ford) Morgan. The father was born in Logan County, Ky.; the mother in Caldwell County. The paternal grandfather, Abram Morgan, came from Virginia to Logan County about 1800, where he resided until his death. His father, Abraham Morgan, was a soldier in the war of the Revolution, going out with his kinsman Gen. Daniel Morgan, from Virginia. The family are of Welsh descent. Subject's father came to Caldwell County about 1828, and settled on a farm one mile from the village of Fredonia, where he died in May, 1853. The mother is still living at the age of fifty-eight. The Doctor is the eldest of five children, of whom three are now living: Robert R., F. M., in Princeton, and John T. Robert R., our subject, enlisted in Company I, Seventeeth Kentucky Cavalry, United States Army, August 1, 1864, and remained out until September 20, 1864. He was commissioned hospital steward, and served principally at Owensboro, and at Louisville. Returning to Caldwell County he began the study of medicine with Dr. J. D. Mott of Walnut Grove, remaining there about one year, and then attended lectures at Louisville Medical College for six months. He then came back to Caldwell County, settled at Fredonia and began the practice of his chosen profession. In 1872 he turned his attention to merchandising and opened a general store. In 1881 he opened a hardware and agricultural implement store which he is still running, carrying a stock of about $2,000. He also has a farm of about 150 acres. He was married January 15, 1869, to Miss Octavia J. Parr, daughter of Housen and Elizabeth (Smith) Parr, natives of Lincoln County, Ky. Mrs. Morgan was born in Caldwell County, January 15, 1847, and is the mother of six children: James P., John F., Robert, Carrie, Nannie M. and Lucy. The family are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Dr. Morgan has served as town assessor, marshal and trustee.

J. A. MOTT was born in North Carolina, and came to this State in 1812, with his parents, who settled in what is now Livingston County. In 1830 the parents came to this county and settled where Z. J. Crider is now located. They subsequently moved back to Livingston County, where they died. Joseph A. has reached the advanced age of seventy-five years. He was married to Miss Lucinda Miller, who was born in Kentucky; she died in October, 1882, and was the mother of eleven children, of whom nine are now living: William H., J. D., J. B., Sarah J. (wife of A. W. Scott of Bethany Ill.), Kittie (wife of John Crowder of Bethany, Ill.), Stephen B., of Princeton, Eliza A., Mary K. and Maggie. Dr. J. D. Mott was born January 9, 1841. He received his education at the schools of this county and at the college or McLemoresville, Tenn. In 1860 he commenced reading medicine under Dr. J. A. King, now of Princeton, and then living at Walnut Grove, Ky. He subsequently attended lectures at the Louisville Medical College during the winters of 1864, 1865 and 1866, and in the spring of the last named year settled down at Walnut Grove, where he now has a fine practice. He was married December 27, 1868, to Miss Mary S. Wilson, daughter of David and Nancy J. (Cruce) Wilson. Her father was a native of Scotland; her mother of Crittenden County, Ky. Mrs. Mott was born July 28, 1847, and is the mother of four children, all of whom are now living: Florence, Thomas H., Belle and an infant. Dr. Mott was a soldier in the late war. He enlisted in the Fifteenth Kentucky Cavalry, United States Army, in 1862, and soon after enlistment was stationed at the Marine Hospital at Paducah, where he served as assistant surgeon. In 1863 he was made acting assistant surgeon in the regular army, but when the Forty-eighth Kentucky Mounted Infantry was formed, he accepted the position of assistant surgeon in that regiment and served for over a year. He then resumed his former position of acting assistant surgeon in the regular army, and served in that capacity until the close of the war. He and his family are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church; he is also a member of the Masonic fraternity. Dr. J. B. Mott was born September 19, 1843. His education was received in this district and at Princeton College. He read medicine with Dr. King for two years, and then attended lectures at the Louisville Medical College, graduating in the class of 1866. He next returned to this county, and settled at Walnut Grove, where he practiced five years. He then came to Fredonia, where he has since resided, and now has a fair practice. He was married January 31, 1871, to Miss Mary Wyatt, a daughter of F. D. and Elizabeth (Rice) Wyatt. This union has resulted in two children: Alma and Joseph. Dr. Mott is a member of the Fredonia Lodge, No. 247, A. F. & A. M. At present he is serving as United States examining surgeon for pensions of this district.

JOHN G. ORR was born in Beith, County Ayr, Scotland, April 19, 1855. His father, William Orr, was a merchant in the town of Beith, which occupation he followed all his life, and died in 1881, aged sixty-eight years. Agnes Orr, subject's mother, is a daughter of David Longwell, an extensive coal miner of Scotland, and is still living in his native country. Mr. and Mrs. Orr reared a family of seven children, whose names are as follows: Robert, David, Jessie, Jane (deceased), John G., Agnes and Mary. The subject of this sketch attended the schools of his native town until the age of fourteen, when he entered the high school of Glasgow, where he remained for a period of two years, making rapid progress in his studies in the meantime. After leaving school he entered his father's office as clerk, which position he held until 1874, when he came to America, in company with his brother, David, coming direct to Princeton, Ky., where he engaged in the tobacco business, and where he has since resided. Mr. Orr is one of the leading tobacco buyers in Caldwell County, having a large stemmery in Princeton, and a branch house on the Cumberland River, in Lyon County. He has been very successful in his operations, handling upon an average 1,500,000 pounds of tobacco, annually. October 12, 1882, he married Miss Willie James, daughter of William and Mary (Collins) James, of Princeton. One child has been born to this union, William James. Mr. and Mrs Orr are active members of the Presbyterian Church.

THOMAS G. PETTIT was born January 24, 1854, in Caldwell County, Ky., and is a son of Thomas G. and Mary (Gray) Pettit, both natives of the same county and State. Thomas Pettit, Sr., was one of the leading farmers of Caldwell County, and during his life, accumulated a large property. He served as sheriff a number of years and died in 1856 at the age of sixty years. Subject's mother died in 1858. Mr. and Mrs. Pettit reared a family of seven children, named as follows: John (deceased), Lydia (deceased), Eliza (deceased), Addie, Susie, George W. and Thomas G. Subject was bereft of his parents at an early age, and lived with the family of his brother, George Pettit. He received the elements of a fair education in the schools of Princeton, attending the college at that place several sessions, and on attaining his majority commenced farming on the place where he now lives, three miles from Princeton. This is one of the largest and best farms in the County, and Mr. Pettit enjoys the reputation of being one of the most successful stockmen in west Kentucky.

THOMAS PHELPS is the sixth in a family of eight children born to Neres and Martha Phelps, the former a native of Virginia and the latter of Tennessee. The family came to this county from Tennessee in 1858, and subject has lived here ever since. He has been twice married, first in 1873, to Elizabeth Lane, now deceased; she was the mother of two children: James E. and William Scott. In 1879 he married Mattie L. Lane, who was born in 1857, she has borne him two children: Lalar Bell and Other. Mr. Phelps is endeavoring to educate his children, and is surrounding them with all the agencies within his power. He is a farmer and owns 107 acres of fairly improved land. Politically he follows the teachings of his mother and votes the Republican ticket.

R. R. PICKERING, sheriff, was born April 17, 1850, in Caldwell County, Ky., and is a son of Thomas W. and Minerva (Cook) Pickering, both natives of the same county and State. M. A. Pickering, subject's grandfather, was born in Tennessee, and in an early day came to Kentucky, settling in Caldwell County, where he died in 1870, aged eighty-two years. Mrs. Pickering's father, James Cook, was a North Carolinaian by birth, and came to Kentucky when Mrs. Pickering was a child, locating in Caldwell County, where he died in 1855. Thomas W. Pickering was for many years one of the leading farmers and active business men of Caldwell County, having filled several official positions at different times. He died January 25, 1882, at the age of sixty-six years. Subject's mother died in 1878, at the age of sixty-six years. Mr. and Mrs. Pickering were the parents of eleven children, six of whom are living: John M., Martha (wife of Samuel Lapradd), M. A., Thomas W., R. R. (subject), and Minnie (wife of P. R. Hunter). R. R. Pickering was reared a farmer, which business he followed until 1875, when he was appointed deputy sheriff under his father, and later with F. J. Harris, serving as deputy about four years and eight months; he was elected to the office in 1882, and re-elected August 4, 1884. He is one of the most careful and painstaking sheriffs the county has ever had, and his popularity is attested by the fact that he received the unanimous vote of the county at his second election. On the 26th of November, 1879, he was united in marriage with Miss Lizzie M., daughter of J. N. and Elizabeth (Harker) Wiley, of Caldwell County. Mr. and Mrs. Pickering have had two children, both deceased; their names were Carrie and Gracie. Mr. Pickering is an active member of the Masonic fraternity, and has been a life-long Democrat.

DR. R. M. POOL was the seventh child born to Timothy B. and Mary (Brown) Pool; the former was born in Rowan County, N. C., in 1803, and died December 17, 1883. The latter was born in the same county in 1806, and died in 1862. The paternal grandparents came to Christian County in 1809, where they remained until 1853, and thence came to Caldwell County, Ky. The father of subject practiced medicine for forty-two years, and was one of the leading physicians of this region. R. M. Pool was born April 23, 1835, on a farm, where he lived until he was eighteen years of age, when he left the tobacco-field of his father, determined to get an education. Up to this time he had received but three weeks of schooling. He attended school and studied medicine seven years, when he located at Parkersville, Lyon Co., Ky., and began practice. In 1861 he came to Caldwell County, and has since remained, enjoying a lucrative practice. He was married February 10, 1858, to Rebecca A. Stephens, who was born in 1843. She has borne him ten children, of whom eight are now living: James M., Mary F., Rosella, Frederick M, Zelenor, Willie, Annie D. and Prestern. Dr. Pool is a Democrat.

JAMES M. POOL was born in Christian County, Ky., June 10, 1825, and is the second of a family of ten children born to Dr. T. B. and Mary L. (Brown) Pool, both natives of Rowan County, N. C. Mr. Pool's ancestors were of German descent and among the early pioneers of Christian County, his grandfather, Henry Pool, having settled there about the year 1804 or 1805. His grandfather on the mother's side, Timothy A. Brown, was a native of England, and when a small boy came to America and settled in North Carolina. He came to Kentucky in company with a colony of families, the Pools among the number, and settled in Christian County, about fourteen miles from Hopkinsville. Subject's father was born in North Carolina in 1801, and was but four years old when the family sought a home in Kentucky. He lived in Christian County until 1853, at which time he moved to Princeton where he died in 1883. Mrs. Pool died in December, 1862, at the age of fifty-nine years. James M. remained with his parents until after his marriage, and commenced life as a farmer in Christian County, where he lived until 1853, at which time he moved to Caldwell County and purchased a farm two and a half miles east of Princeton, on which he resided until 1877. His first marriage took place December 12, 1844, to Eliza Jane Nix, daughter of Lebanon Nix, by whom he had six children, viz.: William T., Mary Frances (wife of M. Clark), Sarah Jane (wife of L. B. Allison), T. B., James T. and Caldora (deceased). Mrs. Pool was born in 1827 and died October 19, 1855. July 1, 1858, Mr. Pool married Mary F. Stephens, of Caldwell County. Eight children have been born to this marriage: Mildred A., wife of William Allison; Monroe, deceased; Jonathan S.; infant, deceased; Louella; Reuben M. and an infant deceased. In 1877 Mr. Pool was elected jailer, which position he still retains, having been twice re-elected. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and belongs to the Universalist Church.

T. M. POWELL, Caldwell County, senior member of the large dry goods house of Powell & Henry, was born March 17, 1848, in Henderson County, Ky., and is a son of Thomas W. and Elizabeth (Dorsey) Powell, of Virginia and Kentucky, respectively. Thomas W. Powell came with his father from Virginia when quite a small boy, settling in Henderson County, where he still lives at an advanced age. Mrs. Powell is living also. They had born to them twelve children: John A.; Mollie, wife of R. A. Raymond; Samuel H., deceased; W. S.; J. F.; Elizabeth Maggie; T. M., subject; E. R. deceased; Richard, deceased; Allie, deceased; Olivia and Ida. T. M. Powell remained in his native county until attaining his majority, receiving the rudiments of a good education in the select schools of the country, and in 1867 entered the college at Lexington, Ky., which he attended one year, completing the regular English course. After leaving school he engaged as clerk in his brother's (W. S.) store in Petersburgh, where he remained four years and then formed a copartnership with his brother, Edwin R. Powell, in the mercantile business at Corydon, Henderson Co., Ky., which continued for a period of one year. In 1872 he came to Princeton, and in partnership with W. S. Powell opened a large dry goods house, with which he is still connected, his present partner being W. P. Henry, who bought a half interest in 1875. The firm of Powell & Henry is, perhaps, the largest dry goods house in the county, representing a capital of about $35,000, and doing an annual business of from $40,000 to $50,000. Mr. Powell was married December 19, 1877, to Miss Mollie B. Farrow, of Princeton. Three children have been born to them: Otho P., Bessie and S. Banks, all of whom are living. Mr. Powell and his wife are prominent members of the Christian Church, at Princeton.

W. S. RANDOLPH, county judge, was born September 25, 1836, in Trigg County, Ky.; his father, Alexander Randolph, was a native of North Carolina, born in 1800. C. B. REYNOLDS was born in Owensborough, Daviess Co., Ky., September 15, 1851. His parents were Martin R. and Pernecy (Cantrell) Reynolds, the former a native of Maryland, and the latter of Caldwell County, Ky. Martin Reynolds was a son of Martin L. Reynolds. He came to Kentucky about 1840, and settled in Princeton, where he worked as a hatter for four years, when he moved to Hopkinsville and later to Owensborough, where he died in 1853. Pernecy Reynolds was a daughter of James Cantrell, a native of South Carolina. She was born in 1823 and is still living in Caldwell County, on the farm of subject. She was married to Mr. Reynolds, October 14, 1842. Our subject remained with his mother until his twenty-first year, looking after her interests. He commenced farming in Caldwell County, renting different places, and in 1881 purchased a fine place five miles west of Princeton, which he owned until 1884, at which time he disposed of it and bought his present place of 214 acres on the Eddyville road. This is a very fine tract of land, and under Mr. Reynolds' skillful management has been brought to a high state of cultivation. February 22, 1877, Mr. Reynolds married Miss Matilda George, daughter of Enoch and Laura (Rucker) George, of Caldwell County. Three children blessed this union: Prince L., Sydney H. and Charley Dow.

JAMES E. SATTERFIELD was born February 16, 1832, in Princeton, Caldwell Co., Ky. He is a son of Elijah Satterfield, whose father, James Satterfield, was among the earliest settlers of Caldwell County, having come from South Carolina in 1798, and having located on the farm where subject now lives, two and a half miles south of Princeton, where he died in 1820. Subject's mother was Mary Satterfield, daughter of Edmund Watkins of Virginia. Mr. Watkins left his native State as early as 1810, immigrating to Logan County, Ky., where he lived several years, and later moved to Muhlenburgh County, which was his home until his death in 1834. Elijah Satterfield was a farmer by occupation and spent his life in Caldwell County, dying in the year 1846. Mrs. Satterfield, subject's mother, was born in March, 1815, and is still living in Caldwell County. James E. is the only child of his parents. He was reared on a farm and in his youth enjoyed good educational advantages at Princeton and Cumberland Colleges. After his father's death he became a student in the Emory & Henry College, Washington County, Va., in which institution he remained three years. After leaving school he came back to Caldwell County, and engaged in farming on the old homestead, which he owns and on which he has since resided. Mr. Satterfield was married February 16, 1858, to Miss Anna L., daughter of Rev. Milton Bird, D. D., and Elizabeth A. (Dunham) Bird, the former a native of Barren County, Ky., and the latter of Marietta, Ohio. Dr. Bird was a prominent minister of the Cumberland Church, and died in 1872. Mrs. Bird is still living in Caldwell County. Mr. and Mrs. Satterfield have a family of seven children, as follows: H. Kent, F. P., Hugh L., Coleridge M., Birdie, Robert Raymond and Nannie. Mr. Satterfield votes the Republican ticket.

J. W. SATTERFIELD was born November 17, 1831, in Caldwell County, Ky., to Robartus and Sarah (Chambers) Satterfield. He has always been a farmer and a very successful one. He now owns about 900 acres of land, and an interest in two gristmills. He was united in matrimony, February 17, 1858, to Miss L. M. Boyd, born June, 20, 1837, to John P. and Sarah P. (Rucker) Boyd. She has borne ten children, three of whom are living: Finis T., Agnes Orr and Hattie. Mr. Satterfield is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of which he is one of the trustees, and has served several years as steward. Politically he is a Democrat. Mrs. Satterfield is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

R. C. SIMS is the eldest child born to Q. B. and Sarah (Groom) Sims, both natives of Kentucky. His grandparents were natives of Virginia and came to Kentucky at an early date. R. C. was born in Trigg County, October 15, 1851, and was reared a farmer. December 16, 1875, he married Sallie Boyd, who was born in 1858, and who died October 2, 1876; she was the mother of one child George Herman, born September 18, 1876, and now living. Mr. Sims is a young man of enterprise, and an earnest advocate of education and temperance. He is a member of the Baptist Church and in politics a Democrat. He and his father have some of the finest cattle in this part of the State. He is also the owner of a well improved farm of 140 acres.

B. J. SPRATT, Caldwell County, is a native of Garrard County, Ky., and is a son of John and Sophia Spratt. He was born September 3, 1824, and is the sixth of a family of seven children, as follows: H. D., deceased; John T., deceased; Margaret; William S.; Elizabeth, deceased; Martha L., deceased, and subject. The paternal grandfather of subject was a native of Virginia and an early pioneer of Lincoln County, Ky., where he died. John Spratt was born in Virginia, was a farmer, and died in September, 1880. Mrs. Spratt, subject's mother, was a daughter of A. J. Brown, a pioneer of Garrard County, who died in 1833 at an advanced age. Mrs. Spratt died in 1853. The subject of this sketch, at the age of twenty years, left the paternal roof and commenced learning the cabinet trade in Princeton with Coon & Anderson, with whom he remained about three years. At the end of that time he enlisted in Company G, Fourth Kentucky Regiment, for the Mexican war, and served throughout that struggle. He then returned to Princeton, where he worked at his trade until 1852, when he joined R. B. Snelling's company of gold seekers, and made the overland trip to California, where he remained until 1855, mining and prospecting in the meantime. In 1855 he located near the mouth of Rogue River, Ore., where he remained until the breaking out of the Indian war, which broke up the settlement. With 105 other citizens he fled to a hastily constructed fort for safety. This fort stood on the present site of Ellensburgh, and afforded the settlers protection from the foe twenty-three days, during which eight of the defenders fell. At the close of the trouble Mr. Spratt joined the command of Capt. Rynerson, and assisted in removing the tribe of Rogue River Indians to their reservation on Silette River. There he found employment as carpenter and builder on the fort in King's Valley under Lieut. Philip Sheridan, now lieutenant-general of the United States army, and remained with the command until the spring of 1857, when he returned, via the Isthmus of Panama, to Caldwell County, and purchased the farm on which he now resides. Mr. Spratt was married in 1848 to Mary Jane Chambers, daughter of W. P. Chambers, by whom he had two children: John F., and Jeannette, wife of J. K. McGoodwin, of Princeton. Mrs. Spratt died in 1860, aged thirty years. Mr. Spratt's second marriage took place, in 1862, to Mrs. Macy M. Bond, daughter of Thomas Kevil. To this marriage five children have been born, whose names are as follows: Neecy, Norah, Belle, Ocy and Sydney. Mr. Spratt belongs to the Masonic fraternity, and votes with the Democratic party.

E. M. STEPHENS was born August 25, 1839, in Caldwell County, Ky., and is a son of Jonathan and Judith (Thurmond) Stephens, the father a native of Virginia and the mother of Kentucky. Jonathan Stephens came to Kentucky in an early day, and settled in Caldwell County, near Princeton. He was twice married, his first wife being a Miss Mitcheson, by whom he had seven children, only one of whom is living—Mildred, wife of Henry Cooksey. By his second marriage he had eight children, named as follows: James E. (deceased), Adaline E. (deceased), Mary F., Peter C., E. M., Jonathan, Rebecca Ann and Judith (deceased). Subject's parents having died when he was quite young, he went to live in the family of his grandmother, Mrs. Thurmond, with whom he remained until sixteen years of age. He then commenced life on his own responsibility as a farm laborer in Caldwell County, working for different parties until 1868, at which time he purchased land about one mile south of Princeton. He came in possession of a part of his present land in 1869, and since that time has purchased the entire farm, consisting of 200 acres of good land. Mr. Stephens was married in October, 1869, to Mrs. Teresa Hunter, daughter of Stallard Scott, of Caldwell County. One child was born to this union---Reuben M. Mrs. Stephens died August, 1877, aged thirty nine years. In April, 1882, Mr. Stephens was married to Miss Elizabeth Francis, daughter of James and Sarah Francis. To this union one child has been born—Meredith.

H. H. THOMPSON is a native of Caldwell County, Ky., born October 18, 1844, and is a son of Nathaniel and Lucy (Wilson) Thompson, the former a native of Virginia, and the latter of Kentucky. H. H. Thompson is the eldest of the family of four children, three of whom are living, and was left an orphan at the age of nine years. He has been reasonably successful through life, and now lives on a farm of 157 acres, tolerably well improved. He enlisted October 24, 1861, in the Eighth Kentucky Infantry, Confederate States army, and did gallant service at the battles of Fort Donelson, where he was wounded, and was among the few who escaped being captured; he was also at Shiloh, the first siege of Vicksburg, Corinth, Baton Rouge, Jackson (Miss.), Franklin (Tenn.), and Coldwater. At the latter place he was taken seriously sick, and had to remain several weeks. He was twice wounded and still suffers from his injuries. He was paroled May 18, 1865. His wife, Sarah Frances Quisenberry, was born February 9, 1871, and has borne him six children: William J., Patience Jane (deceased), Rosa Lee, Harry Clay, Carl L. (deceased), and Grace. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson are members of the Harmony Baptist Church, of which he is a deacon. He is at present road commissioner of his district, and has been school trustee for several years. He is a Democrat and believes in equal laws and equal rights under the laws.

C. F. WEBBER was born in Jackson County, Mich., June 28, 1840, and is the son of Elijah and Sarah (Bentley) Webber. His parents were born in Syracuse County, N. Y., and were probably of Dutch descent. They went to Michigan when it was still a territory and settled the farm on which the father still resides, in Jackson County. Subject is next to the youngest of a family of ten children, of whom nine are now living. He lived on the farm until the age of twenty-one, when he began learning the trade of a miller at Adrian, Mich. He followed his trade in that town until 1866, when he came to Kentucky, settled in Crittenden County, and worked for one year in Webber & Elder's mill at Marion. He next came to this county and purchased the Hoover Mill, south of Fredonia. He ran the mill for three years and then went to Colorado, where he remained one year. He returned to Jackson, Mich., and there ran a saw-mill for two years. In 1872 he returned to Caldwell County, and purchased the mill which he had formerly owned. This mill is valued at about $4,000, and was run by Mr. Webber until August, 1884, when he sold it to N. M. Dollar. He next bought a farm in Crittenden County, containing about 400 acres, of which there are about 300 under cultivation, and there he is at the present residing. Mr. Webber was married July 3, 1867, to Miss Mary Orr, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Anderson) Orr. Her father was born in Hopkins County, Ky., his parents were natives of the Carolinas and he came with them to Union County, about 1800, and there lived until his death, which occurred in 1842. Mrs. Webber's mother was born in Union County in 1809; her parents were natives of Virginia and among the very earliest settlers in this portion of the State; she is living with Mr. Webber. Mrs. Webber was born October 16, 1838, and is the mother of six children, of whom five are now living—Lizzie, Sadie, Mary, Frank, and Emma. Mr. and Mrs. Webber are members of the Baptist Church. Mr. Webber is a member of Fredonia Lodge, 247, A. F. and A. M. He has served as school trustee.

S. M. WELDON was born in Crittenden County, Ky., August 11, 1836, and is a son of William and Mary (Jones) Weldon; the former was born in 1808 in South Carolina and the latter was born in Jackson County, Tenn. About 1818 the father was taken to Tennessee by his parents, and in 1830 to Crittenden County. There he remained until 1860, when he moved to Pinckneyville, where he still resides, and is at present running a family grocery. The mother died March 4, 1864. S. M. is the fifth of a family of twelve children, of whom the following are now living: Amy E. (wife of G. S. Lewis), in Polk County, Ill.; S. P., in Fulton County, Ark.; Nancy J. (wife of Thomas King), of Polk County, Ill.; S. M.; W. E., in Crittenden County, Ky.; M. H., at Marion, Ky.; L. A., in Crittenden County, Ky., and J. W., at Marion. He received his schooling in Crittenden County, and remained at home until he was twenty years of age, when he began learning the blacksmith's trade at Marion, where he remained one year. He then removed to Clements' Mill, where he followed his trade for about four years. He next located at Ford's Ferry, and after remaining there three years, came in 1871 to this county and settled at Walnut Grove, where he remained four years. He then bought a farm two miles from that point, and, turning his attention to agriculture, remained there for seven years. In 1881 he returned to Walnut Grove, and has since been merchandizing, at present carrying a stock of about $800. Mr. Weldon was married November 27, 1856, to Miss Harriet C. Marr, daughter of Samuel and Zilpha (Whitehead) Marr, natives of North Carolina. Mrs. Weldon was born in Bedford County, Tenn., and is the mother of five children, of whom but one, Sarah E., wife of E. M. Dalton, is now living.

J. A. WORMELSDUFF, Caldwell County, is the second son of Henry and Pernecy (Quisenbery) Wormelsduff, and was born in Caldwell County, December 15, 1847. His paternal ancestors came from North Carolina and were of German descent. His grandfather, Daniel Wormelsduff. came to Kentucky many years ago and settled in Crittenden County; he died in Caldwell County while on a visit in 1864. Subject's maternal grandfather was Benjamin Quisenbery. He was a native of Virginia, but came to Caldwell County when there were but few settlements within its present limits, and located near the Harmony Church. Henry Wormelsduff came to Kentucky in 1842 and settled near where our subject now lives, five miles southeast of Princeton, where he died in October, 1866, aged fifty-three years. Mrs. Wormelsduff is still living on the old home place. Our subject is the second of a family of nine children, named as follows: Richard (deceased), J. A., Henry William, Sallie (wife of Thomas Lafoon), of Hopkins County, Edward (deceased), Lucy Floyd (deceased), Oda, and two who died in infancy. Our subject commenced business as a farmer on the old home place, which he now owns and on which he lives with his mother, never having married. With the exception of three years spent in a western tour through Texas, Kansas, the Indian Territory and various other States and Territories, he has been a resident of Caldwell County all his life. He is an ardent supporter of Democratic principles, but votes for the man rather than the party.

J. T. WYATT was born in Caldwell County, Ky., February 28, 1816, and is a son of Zedick and Mary (Cameron) Wyatt; the former was born in Virginia, the latter in South Carolina. The father of our subject ran away from Virginia in 1789, when he was but nine years of age, and came to what was then Christian County, Ky., and hired out to a farmer living on Piny Creek. He worked as a laborer until he was twenty-four years old, then settled down in what is now Crittenden County, then Livingston County. There he bought 200 acres of land, and resided until 1813, when he came to Caldwell County, and settled on a farm within five miles of where J. T. is now living. He first purchased 300 acres, but subsequently increased the size of the farm, until he owned at one time about 1,100 acres. He also paid some attention to the raising of fine stock, and to stock trading. He died in March, 1843. A short time before the battle of New Orleans, he enlisted in a company that was being formed for duty in the South, but hardly had the soldiers started, when the news of the battle was received, and he came home. He was a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Our subject is the seventh of ten children, of whom but three are now living: Frank, in this district; Polly, wife of Frank Darby, of Princeton, and J. T. The latter's education was received in the old field schools of the country. He remained at home until he was twenty-five, and then settled down on a part of the home farm, where he remained one year, and then came to his present farm. Here he first bought 200 acres, and has since, by his own industry, increased it until he now owns 800 acres, of which there are about 650 acres in cultivation. He was also engaged upward of sixteen years as a merchant in Fredonia, and for over twenty years as a buyer and re-handler of tobacco. Mr. Wyatt was married December 23, 1840, to Miss Mary Jane Crider, a daughter of Jacob and Orpha (Bivens) Crider, natives of Virginia. The result of this union has been ten children, of whom the following are now living: Jasper, in Princeton; Jacob J., Frank, E. J., at Walnut Grove, and Orphetta. Mr. Wyatt and family are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at Fredonia.

JOHN R. WYLIE, circuit clerk of Caldwell County, was born November 9, 1859, and belongs to one of the oldest families of this part of Kentucky. His grandfather, John Wylie, was born in Ireland in 1789, and came to America with his parents in 1793, the family settling near Charleston, S. C. He came to Caldwell County, Ky., as early as 1817, located in Princeton, and later purchased the homestead farm, two miles east of the town, on which he died in 1862, at the age of seventy-three years. Subject's grandmother, on the father's side, was Elizabeth (Whitnell) Wylie, a daughter of Josiah Whitnell, of Virginia, who came to Caldwell County, about the year 1805. Mrs. Elizabeth Wylie was born in Sullivan County, Tenn., in 1794, and was but eleven years of age, when her parents came to Kentucky. She lived nearly all her life in and around Princeton, and died August 10, 1884. Subject's father, James S. Wylie, was the son of John and Elizabeth Wylie. He was a farmer and active business man of Caldwell County, and died in July, 1874, at the age of forty-four years. Subject's mother, Sarah L. (Pollard) Wylie, was born in Caldwell County, and is a daughter of Wilson L. Pollard. She is now living in Princeton. Mr. and Mrs. Wylie were the parents of eight children, named as follows: Virginia (deceased), Robert S. (deceased), John R. (subject), William (deceased), Maggie, James (deceased), Albert and Sallie. John R. Wylie received a good education; attended Princeton College for a period of several years, and early displayed those business qualifications which have characterized him in his official capacities. After leaving school, he entered the circuit clerk's office as deputy, under his brother, Robert S. Wylie, and at the latter's resignation, was appointed to fill the unexpired term. August, 1882, he was elected to the place without opposition. He votes with the Democratic party. He is also one of the trustees of the town of Princeton (in which he lives), having been elected to that position in April, 1884, for a term of two years.

CRITTENDEN COUNTY.

WILLIAM A. ADAMS is a native of Knox County, Tenn., and the second of a family of six children born to John S. and Polly Adams. Mr. Adams' paternal grandfather, William Adams, emigrated from Ireland to America, and settled in South Carolina in an early day. He afterward moved to Tennessee, and died in Knox County, that State, in 1832. The maiden name of subject's mother was Polly Wilson. She was a daughter of Joseph Wilson, a native of South Carolina. Mr. Wilson was a school teacher, and died in Tennessee about 1830 or 1831. Subject's father came with his parents to Tennessee and remained a resident of that State until 1846, at which time he came to Crittenden County, Ky., settling about two miles from Marion, on what is now known as the Crider farm. In early life he followed the hatter's trade, but in 1833 he commenced farming, which continued to be his business until his death in 1855. Mr. Adams reared a family of six children, five of whom are living: Joseph, William A., Margaret, wife of J. A. Minner, Martha J., wife of Bradley Crider, and Lysander. William A. was born November 3, 1828. He remained with his parents until his twenty-second year, and commenced life for himself as a farmer in Crittenden County, three miles south of Marion, where he still resides. He at first purchased a tract of woodland, out of which by hard work he has cleared a good farm, and now has a very comfortable home. He has added to his original purchase at different times, and now has 250 acres of land, the greater part of which is in a high state of cultivation. He was married April 25, 1855, to Mandena, daughter of James L. and Eliza (Ditterline) Hill of Crittenden County. Six children have been born to this union: James C., John F., William L., Mary J., (deceased); Clarence A. and Ida D. Mr. and Mrs. Adams are active members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

W. H. ASHER, Crittenden County, was born in Humboldt, Gibson Co., Tenn., March 9, 1828, and is a son of William R. and Easter C. (Love) Asher. His parents were born in South Carolina, his mother being an own cousin of John C. Calhoun. His grandparents on both sides came to Caldwell County, Ky., in an early day, and his parents were married here. Soon afterward they moved to Gibson County, where they resided until 1835, then came to Kentucky and settled in Crittenden County, where the father died February 18, 1869; the mother April 18, 1868. Subject is the seventh of eleven children, of whom seven are living: T. S. C., in Missouri; Jane Hurley, in Livingston County; Narcissa Robenson, in the Indian Territory; W. H. (subject), Walter M., in Shady Grove; R. L., in Missouri, and D. C. in Illinois. Subject remained on the home farm until twenty-one years old and then settled down for himself near the old homestead, where he remained until 1867. He then came to his present farm, where he now owns about 600 acres of land, with about 200 acres in cultivation. He pays considerable attention to stock raising, and is also engaged in buying and rehandling tobacco. Mr. Asher was married March 21, 1849, to Miss M. A. Crider, daughter of Samuel J. and Polk (Foster) Crider, natives of Virginia. Mrs. Asher was born in Crittenden County, and is the mother of ten children: Nancy J., wife of T. A. O'Neal; Mary, wife of Joseph Samuels; Sarah J., wife of P. O'Neal; Henrietta, wife of B. H. Thurman; Elizabeth B., wife of W. D. Lamb; Eastus C., W. L., J. D., Kittie and Samuel. Mrs. Asher and family are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Mr. Asher is a member of Bigham Lodge, No. 256, A. F. & A. M. of Marion, and Wingate Council No. 35.

JAMES W. BARKLOW is a native of Union County, Ky., and was born April 3, 1841. His grandparents were natives of Maryland, and both his grandfathers were wounded at the battle of New Orleans. His parents, Leroy and Harriet (Belmire) Bark-low, are natives of Union County, Ky., and are sincere and consistent members of the United Baptist Church, and have reared a family of fourteen children, of whom our subject is the eldest. James W. was reared a farmer and agriculture has been his principal occupation through life. September 25, 1861, he enlisted in Company K, First Illinois Volunteer Light Artillery, under Capt. Franklin, and served until July 15, 1865, without intermission; he is now drawing a pension for injuries received while in the service. Returning from the war he engaged in farming in Crittenden County, where he has since lived. He was married November 7, 1864, to Elizabeth Riley. She was born April 6, 1846, in Crittenden County, and has borne nine children: Julia A., Leroy L., Charles B., Laura F., Harriet E., John, Rosella, Thomas and Ritta May. Politically Mr. Barklow is an enthusiastic Republican; he is also a member of the Masonic fraternity.

P. C. BARNETT was born near Bowling Green, Warren County, Ky., February 16, 1809, and is a son of James C. and Nancy (Cox) Barnett. James C. Barnett, was born in North Carolina in 1774. His father, Thomas Barnett, was a soldier in the Revolution, and went out in a North Carolina company. He moved to Warren County when James C. was a young man, and subsequently moved to Logan County, where he died. In 1818 James C. moved to Missouri, and there resided until his death in 1867. Subject's mother died in 1814. Subject is the elder of two children and the only one now living. He went to Missouri with his father and remained there until he was seventeen years of age. He then came back to Warren County, and remained with his grandparents a short time, and there attended school and subsequently went to the Cumberland College at Princeton. Thence he came to what is now Livingston County, settling near Smithland, and in 1835 came to this county and settled on his present farm. He first purchased 770 acres, and owned at one time about 2,000 acres of land. A part of this he has since divided among his children, and he now owns about 700 acres in the home place. He also pays some attention to stock raising, and handles about seventy-five head per year. He commenced merchandising in 1851 and continued in business until 1871. He first opened a store on his farm, but subsequently moved to Carrsville, where his son J. C. is at present engaged in merchandising. From 1851 to 1875 he also engaged in buying and rehandling tobacco. Mr. Barnett was married May 25, 1834, to Miss Jeanette Threlkeld, daughter of Thomas Threlkeld. Mrs. Barnett was born November 20, 1819, and was the mother of eight children, of whom four are now living: James C. at Carrsville; Thomas T., Sallie, widow of Richard Miles, and William. Mrs. Barnett died in this county in October, 1875. Mr. Barnett has served as magistrate.

T. T. BARNETT was born in Crittenden County, October 6, 1838, and is a son of P. C. and Jeannette (Threlkeld) Barnett (see sketch). His education was received at the schools of this county, and at the Cumberland Presbyterian College at Princeton. He remained at home and assisted his father in the management of the home farm until 1872, when he settled at his present farm. He first received about 340 acres from his father, and now owns about 1,500 acres, of which there are about 900 acres in cultivation. He also pays considerable attention to stock raising and trading, handling about 100 head per year. Mr. Barnett was married January 27, 1875, to Miss J. L. Hibbs, daughter of Lacey and Emma (Branch) Hibbs. Mrs. Barnett was born in Arkansas in the fall of 1849, and is the mother of one child—L. J. Mr. Barnett enlisted July 1, 1861, in the Third Kentucky Infantry, Confederate States army; was promoted to major in the fall of 1862, and in the spring of 1863 was promoted to lieutenant-colonel, and served in that position until the close of the war. For the first two and one-half years, his regiment served on foot, but at the end of that time the men were mounted, and the regiment placed under Forrest's command. Among the battles in which Mr. Barnett participated might be mentioned: Shiloh, Corinth, Vicksburg, Baton Rouge, Port Hudson, Paducah and Guntown, beside the many raids made by Forrest's cavalry through middle Tennessee. Mrs. Barnett is a member of the Baptist Church.

L. F. BENNETT, Crittenden County, was born in Henry County, Tenn., October 17, 1848. His parents, Larkin and Harriet (Wheeler) Bennett died when our subject was quite young, and he was placed under the care of an elder brother. At the age of fifteen he enlisted in the Confederate service or army in Company H, Seventh Kentucky Mounted Infantry. Owing to his extreme youth, he was not required to do active service, and acted as orderly for his colonel. He remained in the war one year, and on his return went to Caldwell County, near Fredonia, and worked as a farm laborer for about a year. Since then he has been more or less engaged in merchandising, either as a clerk or proprietor. He has been engaged in business at Fredonia, Dycusburg, Crittenden Springs and Paducah. He was married May 21, 1872, to Annie P. Yancey, who was born May 26, 1851. Four children have resulted from this union: Leon, born November 11, 1874, died November 29, 1880; Edmonia, born February 20, 1877; Clifton, born April 12, 1880, and Cron., born February 7, 1885. Mr. Bennett was a member of the I. O. O. F. and K. of the G. R., until they ceased to have a lodge at Dycusburg.

J. W. Blue sr

J. W. BLUE, Crittenden County, attorney at law, is a native of Union County, Ky., and a son of Solomon and Mahala (Kearney) Blue, both parents are natives of Virginia. James Blue, subject's grandfather, left Virginia as early as 1803, immigrating to Kentucky and settling in what is now Union County, where he died about 1811 or 1812. He had been a soldier in the war of the Revolution, holding the commission of captain in the American army. Subject's maternal grandfather, John Kearney, was a native of Virginia also. He distinguished himself during the war of Independence as a major in the American army, serving throughout the entire struggle. His death ocurred in Virginia, some years prior to 1803. Solomon Blue was a farmer and had been a soldier of the war of 1812; he died in 1867 at the age of eighty-four years. He was for many years a colonel of the State militia. His brother, Uriah Blue, belonged to the regular army, held the commission of colonel, and fought through the Seminole and Florida war, and was with Gen. Jackson at the battle of New Orleans. Favorable mention is made of him in the Life of Jackson. He died in Mobile, Ala., while in command of the garrison at that place. His wife, Mahala (Kearney) Blue, died in 1831 at about the age of thirty-five years. She was the mother of six children: a son who died in infancy and Reuben B., Margaret S., Mahala, James B., and subject. In 1836, he was married to Mrs. Eliza Ralph. He left one child by her surviving him—Rachel Ann. J. W. Blue is the youngest of a family of six children. He was born August 24, 1828, and remained with his father until his eighteenth year. In his nineteenth year, he became a student in the LaGrange University, Oldham County, Ky., in which institution he remained for about one year. In September, 1847, he entered Cumberland College at Princeton, in which he remained four years, graduating in the class of 1851. After completing his literary education, he commenced the study of law with Barber & Ward of Princeton, under whose instruction he continued until 1853, when he went back to Union County. He was admitted to the bar, February, 1853, in the town of Morganfield, where he practiced his profession one year and then came to Marion, where he has since resided, being the oldest lawyer of the Crittenden County bar at the present time. Mr. Blue has been very successful in his profession, having a large and lucrative practice in Crittenden and surrounding counties. He was married November 4, 1851, in Princeton, to Miss Fannie M., daughter of Sharp and Mary (Prince) Baldwin of Caldwell County. Eight children have been born to this union, five of whom are living, viz.: Nonie, John W., Jr.; Annie, wife of E. B. Krausse of St. Louis; Mattie and Fannie. The names of the deceased ones are Maggie, James and Solomon. In 1861 Mr. Blue was elected to represent Crittenden County in the State legislature, to which position he has been twice re-elected, in 1867 and in 1869, serving in all six years. In 1862 he was elected commissioner of public schools for Crittenden County, the duties of which office he discharged for ten years, resigning in 1872. Mr. Blue is a member of the Masonic fraternity, K. of H., and K. of the G. R. in all of which he has held positions of trust. He and family belong to the Presbyterian Church.

DR. M. BRISTOW, Crittenden County, was born in Essex County, Va., May 20, 1806, and is a son of Sanders and Jane (Abbott) Bristow, natives of Virginia and of English descent. His father died in 1810, and in 1811 the mother came to Kentucky with her family and settled in Jessamine County, where she resided until her death, which occurred about 1816. After his mother's death he remained with his uncle until about sixteen years of age, when he came to Morganfield, Ky., and began working out for himself. He remained there until twenty-one years of age, and then came to Crittenden County and followed farming and shoe-making. In 1832 he settled on his present farm. He first entered fifty acres and subsequently owned 440 acres, a part of which has since been divided among his children. In 1832 he began reading medicine by himself, and soon after began the active practice of his profession, which for the past fifty-five years he has followed. He is now one of the oldest practitioners in the county, and is still in active practice. Dr. Bristow was married in November, 1828, to Miss Elizabeth Hill, daughter of William Hill; she died in November, 1829. His second marriage was May 1, 1832, to Miss Sarah Gilbert, a daughter of Moulton and Nancy (Kane) Gilbert. Mrs. Sarah Bristow was born in Tennessee, in 1812, and is the mother of eight children, of whom five are now living: Ira; Elizabeth, widow of Francis Woods; Susan, wife of Harvey Hughes; Ann, wife of John Heath, and Nancy J., wife of Marion Daniel. Dr. Bristow is a member of Zion Lodge, No. 371, A. F. & A. M., Crittenden Chapter No. 70, and Wingate Council No. 35. He is identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

W. S. CAIN, M. D., was born January 26, 1827, in Crittenden County, and is a son of Charles and Ellen (Stewart) Cain. Subject's paternal grandfather was William Cain. He was born in South Carolina, and shortly after the Revolutionary war moved to Georgia, where he lived until 1806, when he immigrated to Kentucky, and settled in what is now Crittenden County, near where subject still lives. He died in 1842 or 1843. William Stewart, subject's maternal grandfather, was a native of South Carolina, also. He moved to Kentucky in 1806 and settled near Piny Creek, in Crittenden County; he afterward moved to Illinois, in which State his death occurred in 1856. He was a soldier in the Revolution and received a severe wound at the battle of Camden. Charles Cain was born in Georgia in 1796, and was but ten years old when his parents moved to Kentucky. He was a resident of Crittenden County for sixty-five years, dying here in 1871. Mrs. Cain was born in South Carolina, and died in Crittenden County in 1872, at the age of seventy-two years. Subject is the second of a family of seven children born to Charles and Ellen Cain. At the age of twenty-two years he engaged in teaching school, which he followed for two years. In 1851 he commenced the study of medicine with Dr. Gillam, of Marion, in whose office he remained two years, and at the end of that time commenced the practice of his profession at Bell's Mines, where he remained until 1855. In the latter year he came to Marion and effected a copartnership with Dr. J. A. Hodge, which was continued one year. In 1857 Dr. Cain entered the St. Louis Medical College, from which he graduated in March of the following year. After leaving college he returned to Marion, where he practiced his profession until 1877, at which time he moved to Illinois, locating at Cave-in-Rock, where he remained two years. From Cave-in-Rock he came to Weston, this county, and in 1882 moved to his present location five miles northeast of Marion, where he has since practiced his profession. Dr. Cain was married June 24, 1859, to Mrs. Mary A. Bence, daughter of Marcus Twitchell, of Ohio. Mrs. Cain died July 29, 1870, at the age of forty-two years. The Doctor next married, December 31, 1870, Mrs. Susan A. Peck, daughter of John M. and Mary E. (Jackson) Carter, of Henderson County, Ky. Three children have been born to Dr. and Mrs. Cain: Maggie D., Dixie and Kittie S. By previous marriage Mrs. Cain had one child, who has since been adopted by the Doctor; its name is William Walter Cain.

T. J. CAMERON was born April 15, 1842, in Trigg County, Ky., and is a son of John and Frances (Daniel) Cameron. His grandfather, John Cameron, was a native of North Carolina, and of Scotch descent. He came to Kentucky, when it was indeed the "dark and bloody ground," and settled in Christian County, when there were but two or three little settlements in that part of the State. After clearing a small farm he started back to his native State for supplies, but was killed by the Indians before reaching his destination. John, subject's father, was born in Christian County, January 8, 1804. He afterward moved to Trigg County, and engaged in the jewelry business at Cadiz, where he lived until 1830, at which time he removed to Princeton, Caldwell County, where he still resides. His wife, Frances Cameron, subject's mother, was born in Christian County, in 1808, and is still living. T. J. Cameron is the fourth child and second son of the above. In 1862 he entered the Federal service, enlisting in the Eighth Kentucky Cavalry under Gen. James M. Shackelford, with which command he served fourteen months, participating in a number of engagements. After leaving the army he came to Marion, with but $200 capital, and engaged in the mercantile business, in partnership with J. N. Woods under the firm name of Woods & Cameron. The partnership was dissolved in 1872—Mr. Cameron retiring and opening a store of his own, which he has since operated. Mr. C. has been very successful in business, and has a general stock of merchandise, representing a capital of $6,000, and represents his annual sales at $25,000. He was married November 15, 1866, to Miss Henrie A. Marble, daughter of Henry and Mary (Crawford) Marble, of Madison, Ind. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Cameron, viz.: John W., deceased; Mary Frances, Victoria M., Henry W., and T. J. Mr. Cameron is a Republican in politics, and a firm champion of the cause of prohibition.

WILLIAM C. CARNAHAN, Crittenden County, son of John and Sarah Carnahan, was born May 18, 1818, in Madisonville, Ky. His grandfather, John Carnahan, was a native of Pennsylvania. His maternal grandfather was William C. Bradburne, a native of Virginia. He moved to Caldwell County, Ky., in 1821, settling about twelve miles from Princeton. He was a silversmith by trade, but, after coming to this State, he engaged in farming, which he followed until his death, in 1828. John Carnahan, subject's father, was born in Pennsylvania, which State he left in early manhood, coming to Kentucky and settling near Lexington, Fayette County. Later he moved to Hopkinsville, Christian County, where he lived for a number of years, working at his trade of gunsmith. He died at Madisonville in 1828, aged fifty-three years. Mrs. Carnahan was born in 1780, and died in Hopkins County in 1833. The family of John and Sarah Carnahan consisted of nine children. At the age of sixteen, W. C. was apprenticed to learn the saddler's trade, and remained with his employer in Madisonville three years and nine months. After serving his apprenticeship he opened a shop of his own, working at his trade in Madisonville until 1845, when he came to Marion and carried on a successful business until the breaking out of the war, when he retired from active employment and engaged in trading. In 1864 he was elected sheriff of Crittenden County, the duties of which office he discharged four years, having been re-elected in 1866. Previous to the above years he held the office of constable, and also served as county treasurer several terms, devoting his leisure time to trading in real estate, in which he was very successful. By strict attention to business and skillful management he succeeded in accumulating a handsome fortune, owning large tracts of real estate in Crittenden County, besides valuable property in Marion and other towns. He is the largest property-holder in Crittenden County, and in every respect a self-made man. Mr. Carnahan's first marriage took place May 17, 1839, to Miss Emeline, daughter of Reddick and Elizabeth O'Brien, of Hopkins County, by whom he had four children: Worthington B., Electa M., wife of John D. Boaz; Sarah A., deceased; and John R., deceased. Mrs. Carnahan died December 16, 1846, aged twenty-four years. Mr. Carnahan was next married March 11, 1849, to Sarah A. Hammond, daughter of Martin and Margaret Hammond, of Crittenden County. Two children have been born to this union, viz.: William G., and Emeline, wife of I. F. Wheeler. Mr. Carnahan takes an active interest in church affairs and is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

GARLAND CARTER was born in Logan County, Ky., April 16, 1827, and is a son of William L. and Roda (Scott) Carter. William Carter was born in Virginia, came to Kentucky when a young man, and settled in Logan County, fourteen miles east of Russellville. He was killed by lightning in 1843, and at his death was sixty-four years of age. The subject of our sketch was left at the age of sixteen with a blind mother and five sisters dependent upon him for support, but he went at his task with a will that is seldom equaled by boys of that age. He managed to give his sisters a fair education, but having but little time to spare to go to school his own education was greatly neglected. Subject's mother was a daughter of Moses Scott. Moses Scott was also a native of Virginia, but in an early day immigrated to Tennessee, settling about seven miles from Nashville, where he pursued the occupation of a farmer until his death, many years after. Mrs. Carter, subject's mother, left Logan County in 1857 and went to Texas, where she lived until her death in 1872, at the age of eighty. Our subject is the eighth of a family of ten children—four boys and six girls—whose names are as follows: Eliza, Frances, Merry J., William L., Roda, Harriett, Mary Ann, Nancy and Joseph; four of the above number are dead: Eliza, William L., Harriett and Joseph. Subject spent his youth and early manhood in his native county farming, commencing as a renter. In 1857 he moved to Crittenden County and bought a farm of 165 acres, to which he has made additions at different times until he now owns 1,100 acres, —one of the finest stock farms in the county. Mr. Carter farms quite extensively, but makes stock raising his specialty, in which he has been very successful. He was married May 14, 1853, in Logan County, to Miss Adaline Davis, daughter of William and Patsy Davis. Ten children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Carter: Thomas H., James W., Sallie A. (wife of Ira C. Hughes), Joel L., Keturah L., Garland D., Adaline D. (deceased), and three infants (deceased). Mr. Carter belongs to the Universalist Church, and in politics votes with the Republican party.

S. H. CASSIDY, Crittenden County, is the sixth in a family of ten children born to Howard and Mary G. Cassidy, and was born August 30, 1835, in Princeton, Ky. His paternal grandparents, Samuel and Sarah Cassidy, were of English extraction. His maternal grandfather, John Hayworth, was a native of South Carolina, and the grandmother a native of Virginia. Howard Cassidy was born in 1794, and died February 2, 1864. Mary G. Cassidy was born in 1804;

she came to Princeton, Ky., about 1813. Howard Cassidy came to Kentucky about the year 1818, and three years thereafter was married. At the age of twenty-one years, S. H. Cassidy began engineering on steamboats plying the Mississippi, Ohio, Tennessee, and Cumberland Rivers; this he followed until 1861, when he, in partnership with his brother-in-law (W. E. Dycus), began merchandising at Dycusburg and continued until 1874, when the partnership was ended, W. E. Dycus having died. Mr. Cassidy continued the business until W. S. and F. B. Dycus, sons of W. E. Dycus, were old enough, when he formed a partnership with them, giving them the advantage of the increase in their father's capital. The firm is now known as S. H. Cassidy & Co.; they deal extensively in tobacco for export and have two large stemmeries in Kuttawa, and four at Dycusburg, with a capacity of 2,000,000 pounds. Mr. Cassidy was married in 1867, February 21, to Narcissa M. Clement; she was born November 27, 1845, and has borne three children: Mary R., born May 22, 1868; Samuel R., June 19, 1870; William N., August 14, 1872 (died September 5, 1873). Mr. Cassidy was bereft of his wife November 4, 1872, and April 9, 1879, he married Maggie A. Wilson, then of Caldwell County, Ky. This union has been blessed by the birth of two children: John E., born March 9, 1882, and Emma J., May 1, 1883. Politically Mr. Cassidy is a Democrat, has been deputy county clerk for about twenty years, and for many years treasurer, and one of the town trustees of Dycusburg. He was instrumental in introducing the present telephone line over this section, and is one of the principal stockholders. He has been a member of the Masonic fraternity since he was twenty-one years old.

I. N. CLEMENT was born in what is now Crittenden County, then Livingston County, Ky., April 11, 1819, and is a son of Isham and Sallie (Rudd) Clement; the former was born in Charlotte County, Va., the latter in Amelia County. The father was drafted near the close of the war of 1812, and was sent to Richmond, where he remained about four months, when peace was declared. In 1817 he moved to Henry County, Ky., where he remained about one year, then moved to what is now Crittenden County, and settled on Clay Lick Creek, where he bought about 380 acres of land. He was magistrate in this county for some ten years, and, under the old constitution, served as sheriff for two years, by seniority. He died here in September, 1856; his widow in 1857. Subject is the seventh of a family of twelve children, of whom eight are now living: Maria Owens, in Princeton; Elizabeth Coleman, in Marion District; Granville, in Ford's Ferry District; William, in Crittenden County; Paulina Champion, in Livingston County; I. N. (subject); Parthenia Bennett, in Caldwell County; and Marion, in Crittenden County. I. N. remained with his father until twenty-seven years old, and then settled on a farm adjacent to the old homestead. There he remained until 1871, when he came to Weston, where he engaged in tobacco speculating for some time. At present he is living a retired life. In 1851 he was elected magistrate, and served eight years. In 1878, he was again elected to the same office, and is still serving. He was elected to the legislature from this county in 1855, and again in 1857. Mr. Clement was married January 15, 1845, to Miss Ann R. Coleman, daughter of Henry R. D. Coleman, a native of North Carolina. She died August 2, 1853. This union resulted in four children, of whom one, Sallie A., wife of T. J. Nunn, of Marion, is now living. Mr. Clement's second marriage was on June 19, 1861, to Miss Margaret E. Anglen, daughter of Hezekiah and Margaret D. (Hobbs) Anglen, natives of northern Kentucky; she died March 31, 1878. To this marriage four children were born, three of whom are now living: Isaac H., Walter L., in Caseyville, and Nannie M. Mr. Clement and family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He is a member of the Bigham Lodge, No. 256, A. F. & A. M., of Marion.

W. L. CLEMENT was born March 10, 1838, and is a son of John R. and Sarah S. (Hughes) Clement. John R. Clement was born in this county, March 7, 1810. His parents came from Virginia to this county about 1802. He settled on the farm now owned by subject; bought 450 acres and at one time owned about 1,000 acres, which was subsequently divided among his children. At one time he engaged in the saw-milling business, and also merchandised at old Clementsburg. He died April 28, 1858. W. L. Clement is the second of a family of ten children, of whom seven are now living: Mrs. Sarah J. Walker, at Marion; John R., in Ford's Ferry District; W. L.; Anastasia, wife of I. R. Nunn; Mary, wife of James Gill, in Cave-in-Rock, Ill.; Ellen and James, in Webster County. He received his education in the schools of this county, and at the Cumberland Presbyterian College, at Princeton. At the age of thirty years he began life for himself, and has always resided on the home place. He now owns about 360 acres, of which there are about 160 acres in cultivation. Mr. Clement was married October 8, 1861, to Miss Nancy E. Williams, daughter of George and Eliza (Wallingford) Williams, natives of Virginia. This lady was born in this county, and is the mother of eight children, of whom seven are now living: Ida F., Kosciusko, Mary E., John M., George L., Virgie L. and Sallie K.

J. H. CLIFTON, postmaster and notary public, Dycusburg, Crittenden County, was born in Montgomery, Tenn., April 4, 1835, to Miles W. and Mary J. (Walker) Clifton; the former a native of North Carolina, who settled in Tennessee about 1830, and the latter of Tennessee. J. H. Clifton is the eldest of a family of seven children, five of whom are living, four in Kentucky, and one in Missouri. At the age of eighteen years, he was apprenticed to the blacksmith trade, and continued thereat for fifteen years. On account of failing health he quit the business, and embarked in general merchandising at Dycusburg in 1871, and has continued at his present location ever since, and is now one of the leading business men of this region. He served two years as deputy sheriff of Crittenden County, and has served also as marshal and police judge of Dycusburg. Since July 1, 1881, he has served as postmaster at Dycusburg; he was commissioned a notary public in December, 1882. May 20, 1863, he led to the altar Mary J. McLarney, daughter of Thomas and Ann McLarney, natives of Ireland. She has borne the following-named children: Thomas G., born December 20, 1864; Mary J., born November 20, 1866, now the wife of George M. Yancey; Alma A., born November 26, 1868; James L., born July 16, 1872; Margaret A., February 27, 1875; William G., September 30, 1877; Laly J., June 14, 1881; Cora A., March 25, 1884. Mr. and Mrs. Clifton are members of the Christian Church, and he is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

J. T. COCHRAN, proprietor of the Crittenden Hotel, Marion, is a native of Livingstone County, and a son of Robert and Sarah (Terry) Cochran. Mr. Cochran's ancestors were from North Carolina; his paternal grandfather, Robert Cochran, Sr., dying in that State many years ago. Robert Cochran, Jr., was born in North Carolina. He came to Kentucky in his early manhood and settled near Salem, Livingston County, where he lived for sixty years. Subject's mother, Sarah Cochran, was born in North Carolina; she came to Kentucky, when quite young, with her father, Thomas Terry, and died in Livingston County about 1868, at the age of seventy-one years. Mr. and Mrs. Cochran had one child, J. T., but by previous marriages, the father had other children, two of whom are living, Allen and Henry Cochran. J. T. Cochran was born August 14, 1834. He commenced life for himself as a farmer, and purchased land near Smithland, on which he lived for fifteen years. He disposed of his farm in 1871, and, moving to Smithland, engaged in the mercantile business, which he continued until 1877, when he lost all his possessions by fire. He next engaged in carpentering and blacksmithing, at which trades he worked two years, and then moved to the country, and farmed until 1880. In the latter year he moved to Crittenden Springs, Crittenden County, and engaged in the hotel business at that resort; he ran the hotel for three years when he again lost all his property by fire. He moved to Marion in the fall of 1883, and took charge of the Crittenden House, of which he is still the proprietor. Mr. Cochran was married in February, 1857, to Sarah Ross, daughter of James and Becky Ross of Livingston County. To this marriage were born two children, Mary and Sarah (wife of Andrew Dunlapp). Mrs. Cochran died January 3, 1860, and September 19, 1860, Mr. Cochran married Nannie Moxley, a daughter of Dr. S. D. and Nannie Moxley, of Franklin County, Ky. The following children were born to the second marriage: Thomas H., Dora, Anna, George, John, William, Hely and Babb (deceased). Mr. Cochran is a member of the Masonic fraternity and a Democrat in politics. He and wife belong to the Methodist Episcopal Church.

R. COFFIELD was born in what is now Union District, Crittenden Co., Ky., December 8, 1832, and is a son of Isaac S. and Lucinda (Ray) Coffield. His father was a native of Edgecombe County, N. C., and was born in 1789. His mother was probably born in Kentucky; her parents came from Maryland. In 1802 the father came with his parents to this county. They were among the first settlers here, and upon their arrival they at once proceeded to patent about 1,000 acres of land. The father died in this county about 1843, the mother in 1832. Subject is the youngest of a family of seven children and is the only one now living. His father died when he was eleven years old, and he subsequently came to Marion, where he attended school. He also spent some time at the Cumberland Presbyterian College at Princeton, and the old seminary at Hopkinsville. At the age of twenty-one, he began merchandising at Marion and followed it for about eighteen months, then purchased a farm in the Hurricane District, where he still resides, owning about 100 acres. In May, 1884, he was appointed storekeeper and gauger for the Second Revenue District of Kentucky, and is still serving in that capacity. Mr. Coffield was married January 22, 1856, to Miss Ellen S. Bigham, daughter of Harvey W. and Sarah (Rice) Bigham. This lady was born in 1837, and died October 22, 1858. She was the mother of one child, R. L., born October 31, 1856, died February 16, 1882. Mr. Coffield's second marriage took place May 13, 1863, to Miss Mary H. Evertson, daughter of George and Lucinda (Walker) Evertson. Mrs. Coffield was born in 1843, and is the mother of seven children: Minnie D., Lavinia, Lucinda, Lilly G., Horatio E., Mary and Norman. Mrs. Coffield is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Mr. Coffield served as United States marshal in this county in 1870. In politics he is identified with the Republican party.

H. M. COOK was born in Russell County, Ky., August 28, 1837, and is a son of Christopher and Alice (Yeakey) Cook. His father was born in North Carolina, his mother in Barren County, Ky.; both were of German descent. In 1840 they came to this county and settled in Ford's Ferry District. There the father died in March, 1876, the mother in February, 1863. H. M. is the ninth of fourteen children; the following are now living: Mary, widow of Dr. John P. Wathens; Isabella, wife of John A. Flanary; Matilda, widow of Stephen Kendall; Sarah E.; L. E.; H. M.; C. C. in Little Rock, Ark.; Dr. A. V., at Dexter City, Mo., and S. N., wife of R. M. Wilborn. Subject remained at home until thirty years of age, and then settled on his present farm, where he now owns about 390 acres, with about 175 acres in cultivation. He pays some attention to stock raising, handling about fifty head per year. Mr. Cook was married September 3, 1867, to Miss Mary E. Carter, daughter of Judge D. W. and Jane (Bennett) Carter. Judge Carter was born in this county and was one of the leading farmers of this region. He served as magistrate and constable in this district, and held the position of county judge for twelve years. Mrs. Cook was born in this county August 29, 1846, and is the mother of six children: Alice E., David P., Henry L., Thomas C., Inez A. and Robert B. Mrs. Cook is a member of the Baptist Church. Mr. Cook is a member of the Hurricane Masonic Lodge.

JOHN W. COOK, Sr., Crittenden County, was born in Pittsburgh, Penn., May 6, 1822, and is a son of J. W. and Salomi (Traxx) Cook. His father was born in Strasbourg, came to this country when twenty-three years of age, and settled down in Pennsylvania, where he married and resided until 1857. In that year he came to Kentucky, and here resided until his death in 1861. He was a member of the Lutheran Church; the mother died about 1867. Subject is the eldest of two children, both living: Lewis, in Weston, and John W. The latter remained at home until twenty-one years of age. He learned the trade of a cabinet-maker and followed it in Pittsburgh until 1849, when he came to Kentucky and settled at Bell's Mines, which were then just being opened. A stock company was formed, consisting of Mr. Cook and four other gentlemen from Pittsburgh, and Mr. Cook was made the general manager of the company at this point. He remained in this business until 1862, and then turned his attention to farming, first settling within three miles of his present farm. In 1863 he came to his present location, where he now owns about 200 acres, with about 120 acres in cultivation. He also pays some attention to stock raising and trading, handling about 100 head per year. Mr. Cook was married in November, 1847, to Miss Mary A. Wheatcroft, a native of Pittsburgh, and a daughter of of Samuel Wheatcroft. She died July, 1850. The result of this union was two children: J. W., Jr., and Mary A., wife of James Cooper. Mr. Cook's second marriage was to Miss Zarelda J. Clinton, daughter of Peter Clinton; she died in 1865. She was the mother of five children: W. L. (in Union County), James F., Alice (wife of James G. Gilbert), Peter E. and Joseph F. His third marriage was July 25, 1866, to Miss Ann Walker, daughter of Robert Walker. Two children have blessed the union: Ella M. and George R. Mr. Cook and family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

J. W. CRAWFORD, physician and surgeon, is a native of Livingston County, Ky., and a son of Francis and Martha Crawford of South and North Carolina, respectively. Subject's paternal grandfather, John Crawford, came from Ireland. He first settled in North Carolina, and from that State came to Kentucky many years ago, locating in Livingston County. He later moved to Illinois, and died in Hardin County, that State. Subject's maternal grandfather, Willis Champion, was a native of North Carolina, and of Scotch descent; he was an early settler of Salem, Livingston County, and died near Old Salem in 1843 or 1844. Francis Crawford, subject's father, was born in South Carolina, January 27, 1795. He came to Kentucky with his parents when a small child, and spent the greater part of his life in Livingston County, where he became one of the leading farmers, accumulating a large estate; he died in 1860. Mrs. Crawford was born January 22, 1799, and is still living in Livingston County. The family of Francis and Martha Crawford consisted of eight children, viz.: Sarah L. (deceased), William H., Theophilus F., Nancy (deceased), Pernecy, John W. (subject), Lucinda (deceased), and Mary Jane. Dr. Crawford was born December 20, 1831. He commenced life as a teacher, a profession he followed four years, after which he was appointed deputy sheriff of Livingston County, under James K. Huey. While serving as sheriff he employed his leisure time in reading medicine under the instruction of Dr. John Lunday, and in 1856 entered the Miami Medical College at Cincinnati, which institution he attended two sessions. In 1857 he became a student of the St. Louis Medical College, from which he graduated the latter part of the same year. After completing his studies he commenced practicing the healing art in his old home neighborhood, where he remained until 1877, at which time he came to Marion, which has since been his home. The Doctor was married December 25, 1860, to Elizabeth Frazier, daughter of Jesse and Polly Padon, of Livingston County. The following children have been born to Dr. and Mrs. Crawford: Fannie F. (wife of A. C. Gilbert), Mary W. (wife of Robert Dean), Carrie Lee, Elizabeth, Jesse P., Sarah E., John F., William Henry. Dr. Crawford is a member of the Masonic fraternity and of the K. of H. He and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

SAMUEL F. CRIDER was born in what is now Crittenden County, then Livingston County, Ky., August 16, 1832, and is a son of William and Melissa (Foster) Crider, natives of this county. The father was born October 29, 1811; was a son of Jacob Crider, who came from Pennsylvania to Kentucky about 1804. He was of German descent, the Crider family having immigrated to this country about 200 years ago. The mother of subject was of English descent. The father is still living in this county and is a farmer by occupation. The mother died in this county in July, 1847. Subject is the third of a family of eight children, of whom two are now living: S. F., and Mary J. (wife of Asbury Chadwick, of Izard County, Ark.). S. F. remained with his father until he was eighteen years of age, when he settled on the home farm, where he remained one year. He then purchased land in Fredonia District, Caldwell County, where he remained three years. He came to this county and made a settlement near Caldwell Springs, where he remained one year, and then moved to Dycusburg, and thence to Lyon County. He then came back to this county, where he remained until 1878. He then moved to Pawnee County, Kas.; but after a short stay again returned to this county, where he has since resided. He purchased his present farm in 1883, where he now owns 353 acres. This farm is now the oldest one in the county, as tradition says it was settled in 1784. Mr. Crider was married December 10, 1850 to Miss Mary Guess (see sketch of J. W. Guess). Mrs. Crider was born in this county December 5, 1837, and is the mother one child—William P. Mr. Crider was a soldier in the late war. He enlisted first, August 4, 1861, in Company D, Twentieth Kentucky Infantry, United States army, and served as third duty sergeant. June 6, 1862, he was discharged on account of disability. He re-enlisted in August, 1863, in a company of 106 men, which he raised himself. He was made captain and the company was consolidated with the Seventeenth Kentucky Mounted Infantry, United States army, and in this regiment he served until the close of the war.

T. S. CROFT, Crittenden County, was born in Christian County, Ky., September 25, 1821, and is a son of Martin and Fannie (Sullivant) Croft. His parents were born in South Carolina, and his father was a soldier in the war of 1812. His grandfather, Frederick Croft, was born in Charleston in 1761. In 1806 Martin Croft came West and settled in Christian County, Ky., near where the present town of Crofton now stands. In 1826 he came to Livingston County, and made a settlement within four miles of Salem, and in 1834 he came to Hurricane District, where he resided until his death, September 15, 1834. Subject's mother died November 20, 1846. T. S. is the seventh son of a family of nine children, of whom three are now living: F. H., in this county; Margaret, wife of Josiah Stallions; and T. S. The last named remained at home until he was sixteen years of age, and then began farming on a part of the home place. He subsequently taught school in the home district for about five years. His first farm consisted of a tract of sixty acres, on which he lived for some length of time, and then settled on an adjoining farm, where he resided until 1864. In that year he settled on his present farm, where he now owns about 4,100 acres of land, with about 2,000 acres in cultivation. From 1860 to 1868 he was quite extensively engaged in saw-milling. In 1862 he began buying and rehandling tobacco, and followed it until 1875. He also engages in stock raising and trading quite extensively, and handles about 400 to 800 head per year. He was married October 14, 1847, to Miss Elmira Wright daughter of Thomas and Mildred (Holmes) Wright, of Tennessee. Mrs. Croft was born in Bedford County, Tenn., March 2, 1828. and to her and husband have been born eleven children, of whom seven are now living: Mildred, wife of G. B. Crawford, in Elizabethtown, Ill.; N. J., wife of James Yates of Webster County; G. T.; P. B.; Mary S.; Elmira and Buckner. Mrs. Croft is a member of the Baptist Church. Mr. Croft has been identified with the I. O. O. F.

ALEXANDER DEAN, deceased (see sketch of Dr. Dean, Marion), was born in Caldwell County, Ky., January 25, 1801. He was a son of Job Dean, a native of South Carolina, and one of the early pioneers of Caldwell County. Alexander Dean lived in Caldwell County until 1836, when he moved to what is now Crittenden County and settled on the place now owned by his sons, A. and J. E. Dean, six miles north of Marion. Mr. Dean was an extensive farmer and an active business man. During his life in this county he accumulated a handsome estate. He died in 1879, aged seventy-nine. Mr. Dean was twice married; the first time to Margaret Ann Gates, of Caldwell County, by whom he had one child, J. M., who is living at the present time in Crittenden County. His second wife, Nancy Dean, was a daughter of William Hughes. Mr. Hughes came to Kentucky from his native State of South Carolina, about 1808, and settled in Crittenden County, about six miles northeast of Marion, where he died in 1847, at the age of eighty-five years. Mrs. Dean was born in 1811, and died in September, 1860. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Dean: Dr. T. L. Dean, of Marion; Jane A. (deceased), Mary L. (deceased), Josephine (wife of J. W. Adams), Alfred, Malinda J. (deceased), Job E., Nannie and Patrick H. (deceased). Alfred Dean was born February 8, 1840, in Crittenden County, on the old home farm, where he has since resided. He commenced life as a farmer, and has been very successful. He is one of the leading stock men of the county and in every respect a public spirited citizen. He has never married, and lives on the place where he was born in company with his brother J. E., and his sister Nannie Dean. Job E. Dean was born April 1, 1844. He has been a farmer and stock raiser all his life. He served a number of years as deputy sheriff of Crittenden County, but has never been an aspirant for any office.

T. L. DEAN, physician and surgeon, son of Alexander and Nancy (Hughes) Dean, was born in Caldwell County, Ky., October 16, 1833. Subject's grandfather was Job Dean, a native of North Carolina. He came to Kentucky many years ago, settling in Caldwell County, were he was killed, in 1804, by being thrown from a horse. Subject's maternal ancestors were from South Carolina; his grandfather, William Hughes, immigrated to Kentucky from South Carolina in 1808, and settled in Crittenden County, about six miles northeast of Marion. He died about 1847. His daughter, Mrs. Dean, was born in 1811, and died in 1860. Alexander Dean was born in January, 1801, in Caldwell County, where he lived until his removal to this county in 1836. He settled six miles north of Marion on a farm now in possession of his sons, and was a resident of this county until his death, in 1879. He took an active part in the county organization, and was a member of the first grand jury ever impaneled in the county. Dr. Dean is the eldest of a family of eight children, born to Alexander and Nancy Dean. He obtained the rudiments of his education in the common schools and later attended the Bethlehem Academy in Caldwell County several sessions. On attaining his majority he commenced farming in Crittenden County, which vocation he followed until 1857, when he commenced the study of medicine under Dr. J. A. Hodge, of Marion, remaining in his office at intervals for three years. He entered the St. Louis Medical college some time in 1857, and graduated from that institution in the class of 1859. After graduation he settled in Marion, in the practice of his profession, and here remained until 1869, when he moved to the country, where he practiced three years. In 1872 he moved to Illinois, settling in the town of Rose Clare, Hardin County, where he engaged in the drug business, which he carried on in connection with his profession for two years, and in 1874 he went to Elizabethtown, Ill., where he resided one year. He moved to Cave-in-Rock, Hardin Co., Ill., in 1875, remaining there until 1877, when he came back to Marion, which has since been his home. He was married August 12, 1863, to Mary C. Minner, daughter of Harvey Minner, of Crittenden County. Seven children were the result of this union: Charles P., P. K., Harvey, Nellie, Alexander (deceased), Joseph M. and Robert (deceased). Mrs. Dean died August, 1876, at the age of thirty-five years. The Doctor's second marriage took place April 16, 1879, in Greenville, Ky., to Nannie C. McIntire, of Muhlenburg County. She died April 6, 1883, aged forty-eight years. May 7, 1883, Dr. Dean married Miss Bettie Linthicum, daughter of Dr. R. L. Linthicum of Henderson County, Ky. Dr. Dean has a very large practice in Crittenden County, and the adjoining counties, and his professional career has been eminently successful. He has been a member of the Democratic party for many years, but is now a stanch Prohibitionist. He belongs to the K. of H., and is an active member of the Presbytrian Church.

WILLIAM J. DEBOE, M. D., was born June 30, 1849, in Crittenden County, and is a son of Abram and Mary J. (Smith) DeBoe. Abram DeBoe was born in Virginia in 1817, and is still living, his home being at present in Caldwell County. He is a minister of the

W. J. DeBoe M.D.

Baptist Church, preaching for a number of congregations. Subject's mother died in March, 1863. She was a daughter of Garland Smith, a native of Virginia, and an early settler of Crittenden County. Our subject is the fourth of a family of eight children. His early education was received at the common schools of the county and at Bethlehem Academy, which institution he attended several years. He commenced teaching in his twentieth year and continued the profession for seven years, having had charge of a number of schools in Crittenden and adjoining counties. In 1874 he became a student in Ewing College, Ill., where he remained two years, reading medicine during his vacations. In 1878 he entered the Medical University of Louisville, from which he graduated in 1881. After graduation, he commenced the practice of his profession in Marion, where he has since resided. Dr. DeBoe stands high in his community as a physician and surgeon, and has already achieved an enviable reputation, having a large and lucrative practice. He is a young man of fine abilities.

J. C. ELDER, Jr., Crittenden County, was born in Equality, Gallatin Co., Ill., August 24, 1847. Dr. J. C. Elder, the father of subject, was born in what is now Crittenden County, then Livingston County, Ky., January 12, 1819. He was a son of David and Eleanor (Dickey) Elder. His father was born in North Carolina, his mother in South Carolina. John Elder, the father of David, was a soldier in the Revolution, as was also four of his brothers, two of whom were killed in the conflict. In 1791 David and Eleanor Elder came to Kentucky and settled two miles south of the present site of Marion. There David bought 400 acres, which he subsequently divided among his children, and there he died June 24, 1832. J. C. Elder, Sr., grew up in Crittenden County and remained there until he was seventeen. He then moved to Gallatin County, Ill., and settled on a farm twelve miles north of Shawneetown. At the age of twenty-three he commenced studying medicine under Dr. E. H. Holman, of Equality, Ill.; he read with him two years. In 1847 he came to Dycusburgh, Crittenden County, where he remained until January, 1848. He then settled four miles southwest of Marion, where he still resides. He owns a tract of land of 162 acres, with about 150 acres in cultivation. He remained actively engaged in the practice of his profession until 1880. Since that time he has been living a retired life. In 1870 he began milling and followed it until 1881. He was married December 8, 1843, to Miss Mary Ann Stinson, daughter of Andrew and Catherine (McCallister) Stinson; the father was born in North Carolina, the mother in Scotland. Mrs. Elder was born in Crittenden County, August 26, 1823, and is the mother of ten children, of whom six are now living: J. C., Jr., Marzilla (wife of W. R. Jacobs), Mary E., Julia (wife of W.

T. Belt), Martha C. and Charles. J. C. Elder, Sr., is a member of the Northern Presbyterian Church. He has served as deputy sheriff and county judge; he was a soldier in the late war. He enlisted in the Twentieth Kentucky Infantry, United States army, but was subsequently detailed as quartermaster. He was soon, however, taken sick and resigned. He was afterward detailed as surgeon in several engagements. J. C. Elder, Jr. (subject), was educated at Shawneetown, Ill., and Poughkeepsie, N. Y. He remained on a farm until nineteen, and then began clerking for D. Woods, at Marion. He remained with him five years. He next clerked for J. McKee Peebles, at Shawneetown, Eldorado, and Spiller & Hall, Lebanon, Mo. In 1880 he returned to Marion and embarked in the tobacco business, first in partnership with Walker, Wilson & Co.; in 1883 he succeeded to the management of the firm, and is now engaged by himself in purchasing and rehandling tobacco. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church South. In 1877 he ran for county clerk on the Republican ticket, and lacked but two votes of being elected, the Democratic party being then the dominant party.

J. R. FINLEY, Crittenden County, was born October 13, 1845, in Union County, Ky., and is a son of Rev. I. R. and Helen (Blue) Finley, the father a native of Baltimore, Md., and the mother of Kentucky. The Finley family came originally from Scotland, and settled in Maryland; there subject's grandfather, Isham Finley, died many years ago. Subject's maternal ancestors were Virginians. His grandfather, John Blue, was born in that State in 1784, and died in Union County, Ky., September, 22, 1840. Rev. I. R. Finley was born in 1812. He came to Kentucky in his early manhood, and settled in Union County, where he was married and there he lived a short time, afterward moving to Oldham County, which was his home for a number of years. He was a distinguished minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and an able educator, having had charge of a number of colleges throughout the Southern States, among which may be mentioned, Athens, La Grange, Murfreesboro, Bardstown and several others. He died in Virginia, July 27, 1882. Subject's mother was born in Union County, Ky., January 17, 1817, and died at Bardstown about 1850. J. R. Finley is the fourth child of a family of seven children born to the above. At the breaking out of the war he entered the Southern army, enlisting in the Eighteenth Virginia Volunteer Infantry in 1862. His regiment was in Gen. Longstreet's division and saw some of the hardest fighting that took place during the war, having been actively engaged in the eastern campaign until the close of the war, and surrendering with Lee in 1865. Among the battles in which Mr. Finley took part, were the following: Seven Pines, Gettysburg, battles of the Wilderness, the Peninsula campaign. At the close of the war, Mr. Finley located in Warren County, N. C., and engaged in the merchandise business, which he continued for fifteen months, and in 1866 he moved to Marion, and commenced the study of the law, under the instruction of John Blue. He was admitted to the bar in 1868, and from that time until 1881, was engaged in the practice of his profession in Crittenden and adjoining counties. In 1870 he was elected county attorney, the duties of which office he discharged for four years. In 1881 he retired from practice and gave his attention to farming, in which he has since been engaged. He was married August 18, 1870, to Elizabeth G. Gregory, daughter of James and Amanda (White) Gregory, of Crittenden County. Mr. and Mrs. Finley have a family of five children, viz.: Percy B., Hortense, Fannie, Lucy and Arthur, all of whom are living. Mr. Finley belongs to the Masonic fraternity and is a supporter of the Democratic party.

R. W. FOSTER was born in Oldham County, Ky., September 7, 1817, and is a son of Archibald G. and Lucy (Duerson) Foster; the former born in Spottsylvania County, Va., and the latter in Caroline County, Va. His parents come in an early day to Kentucky, where the father died in 1832, the mother in 1826. The father was a member of the Masonic fraternity, and had taken all the degrees. Subject is the eldest of four children, of whom three are now living: R. W., Anthony M. in Missouri, and Susan, widow of W. M. Threlkeld. R. W. began life for himself at the age of fifteen years, and first learned the house-joiner's trade, at which he worked as an apprentice for four years. He subsequently followed the trade for himself for five years. He resided in Oldham County until 1852, when he came to this county, and settled on part of his present farm. He first bought about 265 acres, and now owns about 725 acres, of which there are about 200 acres cleared. He also pays some attention to stock raising and trading. Mr. Foster has never been married, and for some years past his sister, Mrs. Threlkeld, has been acting as his housekeeper. In 1867 Mr. Foster was appointed postmaster at Hurricane and still holds the office.

L. C. FRAZIER is the second in a family of three children born to Felix L. and Annie (Bond) Frazier. He was born January 1, 1849, in Livingston County, Ky; the only other surviving member of the family is the wife of W. B. Lear. The subject has spent his life as a farmer, and now owns 253 acres of land. He lived in Livingston County until he was eight years old then moved to Lyon County, remained until 1872, when he came to Crittenden County and engaged as a farm laborer for Dr. Koon, now deceased. February 27, 1876, he married Miss Alice Koon, daughter of his former employer. She was born June 16, 1857. This union was crowned by the birth of the following-named children: Samuel E., born March 13, 1877, died September 8, 1878; Julia Ann, born December 10, 1878, and Edward C., born November 26, 1880. Mr. Frazier was bereft of his wife June 29, 1881. He is a member of the Baptist Church.

F. M. GLENN, Crittenden County, was born in Lyon County, Ky, September 14, 1833. He is the sixth in a family of nine children born to James G. and Nancy (McElroy) Glenn; the former, a native of Georgia, was born October 18, 1799, and died December 7, 1857; the latter was born in North Carolina in 1805, and died July 22, 1841, in Kentucky. Subject's paternal grandfather was of Irish extraction, came to Kentucky about 1806, locating near where subject now lives. His maternal grandfather came to Kentucky at quite an early date. F. M. Glenn remained in Lyon County until the age of twenty-three years, and then moved near his present location. Farming and stock raising has been his life occupations, and he now owns a well improved farm of 140 acres. October 30, 1856, he married Susan Turley, daughter of John and Margaret (Crain) Turley; she was born July 24, 1839; five children have resulted from this union: Laura B., Flora A., Albert S., Bedford H. and Melville J.

DR. W. S. GRAVES was born August 28, 1820, in Marion County, Ky. His father was a native of St. Mary's County, Md., born November 15, 1783; his mother, a native of the same place, was born in 1793. About 1795 they found their way to Washington County, Ky., where they were married and spent their after life. The former died in 1844 and the latter in 1866. W. S. Graves spent his boyhood on the farm; at the age of twenty he began the study of medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. Green Forrest, at Lebanon, Ky., and after four years as a student, he began the practice of medicine in partnership with his preceptor at the above named place. This partnership lasted two years, when he located at Dycusburg, where he has since remained, enjoying a flattering success. He is one of the oldest men of his profession now in western Kentucky, and has had quite a number of students under his tutelage, who have become very successful in their profession. Notably among these is his son, who graduated at the Louisville Medical College in 1882. Dr. Graves suffered greatly, financially, by the late war, but has since recovered rapidly, now owning 1,200 acres of land and having given his children a liberal education. He is a Democrat and has served as one of the trustees of Dycusburg for about twenty years. October 27, 1852 he wedded Helen A. Shelby, daughter of Isaac and Catherine (Proctor) Shelby, who was born November 15, 1835. Isaac Shelby was born in 1795 and died in 1877. To Dr. and Mrs. Graves were born ten children, seven of whom are living: Catherine S., born September 1, 1853; Williams S., born August 12, 1855, died January 27, 1858; George S., born June 8, 1857, died April 16, 1858; William T., born May 7, 1859; Cora A., born June 2, 1861; George E., born August 7, 1863; Emma A., born March 24, 1866; John A., born August 26, 1868; F. Eugene, born June 20, 1871, and Ernest A., born August 22, 1878, died October 23, 1878. Subject and his family are supporters of the Roman Catholic faith.

JAMES M. GRAVES, M. D., was born in Jefferson County, Ky., November 20, 1848. His father, Dr. John M. Graves, was a native of Marion County, Ky., born November 17, 1811, and died in Henderson County, Ky., December 18, 1883. He was of a rather roaming disposition, and made no less than eight moves. He began the study of medicine in Missouri, where he practiced a few years, then returned to Kentucky, where he spent the remainder of his life. The mother of subject, L. A. (Maryman) Graves, was born in Nelson County, Ky., January 13, 1813, where she remained until her marriage. She died in Union County, Ky., July 28, 1871. At the age of twenty-five years, our subject began the study of medicine with Dr. W. S. Graves, at Dycusburg. He graduated at the Medical University of Louisville, in 1877, and has since had a very successful practice at Dycusburg.

J. W. GUESS was born in Caldwell County, Ky., July 11, 1845, and is a son of John W. and Nancy (Warren) Guess. His parents were born in Orange County, N. C., the father in 1800, the mother in 1813. In 1832 they came to Kentucky, and settled in Caldwell County, near Fredonia, where they resided until 1852, when they moved to what is now Lyon County. There the father died, December 20, 1853. He was a member and also a deacon of the Baptist Church. The mother is still living in this county. Subject is the youngest of a family of six children, of whom three are now living: Mary Ann, wife of S. F. Crider; D. M., in Lyon County, and J. W. He received his schooling in the last named county, and began life for himself when sixteen years of age, working out for some years. In 1868 he came to his present farm, where he now owns about 200 acres of land, with about 160 acres in cultivation. In 1881 he embarked in the milling business, at Hurricane, and continued it until July, 1884. He was married January 23, 1868, to Miss Sarah W. Love, daughter of William and Rebecca (Knight) Love, early settlers of this county. She was born in 1843, and died July 2, 1869. They had one child—Thomas T. Mr. Guess' second marriage was April 13, 1870, to Miss Rebecca Terry, daughter of B. B. Terry. This lady died August 27, 1870. His third marriage was April 28, 1872, to Miss Sallie A. Shanks, daughter of Mentor Shanks. Mrs. Guess was born in this county, in 1845, and is the mother of three children: Eugene, Belle and Lurnet. Mr. Guess is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was a soldier in the late war, enlisting in Company E, Forty-eighth Kentucky Infantry, United States army, July 3, 1863. He remained with that regiment one year, and was then transferred to the Seventeenth Kentucky Cavalry, with which he remained until close of war.

C. R. HAMILTON was born in New Madrid County, Mo., September 12, 1839, and is a son of Joshua and Margaret (Hayes) Hamilton; the former born in Hickman County, Ky., and the latter born in Christian County, Ky. Both parents moved to Missouri, when young, and resided there until 1843, when the family returned to Kentucky. Subject's father first settled in Ballard County, and there resided until January, 1860, when he came to Livingston County, where the mother died in April, 1860. In 1862 the father came to this county, and here resided until his death, July 16, 1876. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and of Hurricane Masonic Lodge. Subject is the eldest of a family of nine children, of whom five are now living: Charles R., Ann A. (wife of S. J. Stallions), Melinda (wife of Jesse J. Boyd), Thomas J., Mary A. (wife of I. W. Thompson). C. R. received his schooling in Ballard County, Ky., and remained at home until twenty-three years of age. He then settled in Livingston County, where he resided about eight years, and then returned to Ballard County. After remaining there two years he came to this county, where he has since resided. He now owns about 700 acres of land, of which about 150 acres are in cultivation. Mr. Hamilton was married December 4, 1861, to Miss Christina E. Jones, daughter of Gabriel and Elizabeth (Allcock) Jones. Mrs. Hamilton was born January 7, 1842, and is the mother of six children, five of whom are living: Margaret E., Ann E. (wife of Hodge Murphy), Gabriel J., Thomas M. and John A. Mr. Hamilton has served as constable for two years, and in 1875 he was elected magistrate of the Hurricane District, and is still serving. Mrs. Hamilton is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He is a member of Hurricane Masonic Lodge No. 571.

G. T. HARRIS was born October 3, 1866, in Caldwell County, Ky., near Princeton. His father, John H. Harris, is a native of Caldwell County, Ky., born April 8, 1838; his mother, Sarah J. (Rice) Harris, is a native of Christian County, Ky., and is a descendant of Daniel Boone. They are the parents of six children, of whom our subject is the second, and the only son. George T. Harris received his education in the school at Dycusburg, where, in the summer of 1884, he turned his attention to journalism, and is now editor and proprietor of the Dycusburg Herald, a five-column, eight-page paper. Mr. Harris has never served an apprenticeship at printing, but through his own tact and skill, has acquired some proficiency in the trade.

H. A. HAYNES, circuit clerk, is a native of Crittenden County, Ky., and the eldest of a family of seven children born to Robert F. and Anna C. (Chastain) Haynes, the father a native of Kentucky, and the mother of Virginia. Subject's paternal ancestors were from North Carolina, his great-grandfather Christopher Haynes immigrating to Kentucky many years ago, settling in what was then Livingston County. Here subject's paternal grandfather, Robert H. Haynes, was born; he first settled in the western part of Crittenden (then Livingston) County, near the Hurricane Iron Works. Later he moved near the county seat, and died January, 1881, aged seventy-four years. He was for many years justice of the peace, and served as first sheriff of Crittenden County under the old constitution. Samuel Chastain, subject's maternal grandfather, was a native of Virginia, which State he left in his early married life, immigrating to eastern Kentucky and settling in Manchester, Clay County, where he engaged in the manufacture of salt. He became quite wealthy, and died at an advanced age in 1860 or 1861. Robert F. Haynes, subject's father, was born in Crittenden County, December 1, 1829, and now resides in Volusia County, Fla., to which State he moved in 1883. He is a lawyer by profession and at one time served as attorney for Crittenden County. He was a Captain of Company E, Twentieth Kentucky Infantry, United States army, during the late war, and served with distinction until compelled to resign on account of sickness. Mrs. Haynes is living also. They are the parents of seven children: H. A., S. C., Robert F., Mary W., W. D., Alexander C. and George T., all of whom are living. H. A. remained with his parents until he was twenty-one years of age, receiving his education in the schools of Marion, and attending the academy a number of terms. At the age of seventeen he engaged as traveling salesman for the Neurine Manufacturing Company of Marion, which position he filled for five years, doing a very successful business in the meantime. In 1877 he entered the store of T. J. Cameron, as clerk, remaining with him five months, and in 1879 he accepted a position as deputy circuit clerk under W. J. L. Hughes. In 1880 he was elected circuit clerk of Crittenden County, after a spirited contest, his competitor being a very popular man, and a member of the dominant party. At the time of his election, Mr. Haynes was probably the youngest county official in the State, but it is safe to say, that Crittenden County never had a more popular or efficient one than he. Mr. Haynes was married June 3, 1880, to Miss Lizzie T., daughter of Samuel and Sarah A., (Hall) Adams, of Ohio. Two children bless this union: Chastain W., and Robert H. Mr. Haynes is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and votes with the Republican party. Mrs. Haynes belongs to the Marion Presbyterian Church.

REV. J. S. HENRY, Crittenden County, is a native of Muhlenburgh County, Ky, and a son of James and Christina (Wolcott) Henry, natives of Ohio and New York respectively. Subject's grandfather, William Henry, was a native of Ireland, which country he left many years ago, immigrating to America and settling in southern Ohio, where he died in 1859. Subject's maternal ancestors were also Irish. His mother's father, James Wolcott, came to America about the same time, perhaps a few years later than the Henry family, and settled in New York, where he lived until 1840, when he moved to northern Kentucky, where he died several years later. James Henry was born in Ohio, in 1822. He came to Kentucky in his early manhood, settling in South Carrolton, Muhlenburgh County, dying there March 2, 1867. Mrs. Henry was born in 1822, and is still living in Muhlenburgh County. Our subject was born March 27, 1848, and is the eldest of a family of six children, whose names are as follows: J. S.; W. C., deceased; Albert; Mary E., wife of J. W. Goodloe; Samuel N., and Mattie. Mr. Henry enjoyed fair educational advantages in his youth, attending the schools of his native county and Bethel College, which institution he entered in 1866, taking a three-years' course. After completing his studies he went to Evansville, Ind., and commenced learning the stone-cutting trade, in which he served an apprenticeship of three-years'. He then opened a shop of his own at Madisonville, Kentucky, where he worked at his trade ten years, and then came to Marion, where he has since resided, carrying on a lucrative business, having the only marble shop in town. Mr. Henry was married December 31, 1869, to Miss M. E. Searcy, daughter of S. R. and Lucinda (Taylor) Searcy, of Spencer County, Ky. He remained in Arkansas until 1863, in which year he came back to Crittenden County, and engaged in carpentering and farming. He purchased a farm of 271 acres in 1874, which he has since operated. In 1882 he opened a store on his farm, and is now doing a good business with a general stock of merchandise, representing a capital of about $2,000. Mr. Shewmaker was married January 8, 1871, to Sarah J. Duvall, daughter of W. S. Duvall of Crittenden County. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Shewmaker, viz.: Rose E., Sarah E. and William.

PETER C. STEPHENS is a native of Caldwell County, Ky., and the fourth of a family of eight children born to Jonathan and Judith (Thurmond) Stephens. Subject's grandfather was John Stephens, a native of Ireland. He came to America in an early day, settling in Virginia, and later moved to Kentucky, near Danville, where he died many years ago. Jonathan Stephens was born in Kentucky, and spent the greater part of his life in Caldwell County, dying there in 1843. Subject's maternal grandfather was Elisha Thurmond. He was born in Virginia, but came West about 1817, and settled in what is now Crittenden County, about one mile from subject's present place of residence. He was a civil engineer and farmer, and died about 1840, at a ripe old age. His daughter, Judith Thurmond, subject's mother, was born in Kentucky. She was cruelly murdered by a colored woman, one of the family slaves, in 1844; the murderess was arrested, tried for the crime and, one year later, hanged. Jonathan and Judith Stephens had a family of eight children, viz.: James E. (deceased), Adaline E. (deceased), Mary F., Peter C., Elisha M.; Jonathan A., Rebecca A. and Be Judith (deceased). By a previous marriage, Mr. Stephens had six children, only one of whom is living: Mildred, wife of Mr. Cooksey. Peter C. Stephens was born June 2, 1838. His parents dying when he was quite young, he lived with his grandmother, Mrs. Thurmond, until his twenty first year, receiving a limited education in the common schools of the county; he afterward attended Bethel College several sessions, and commenced life for himself as a carpenter, learning his trade in Crittenden County. He also taught school for five years in Crittenden County, and in 1864 commenced farming. Four years later he purchased a part of his present farm, to which he has made additions at different times, and now owns 290 acres of fine land, a greater part of which is in a high state of cultivation. Mr. Stephens is a very successful farmer and an intelligent business man. He was married March 14, 1866, to Mrs. Henrietta Bristow, a daughter of J. P. Thurmond, of Simpson County, Ky. Three children have been born to this marriage: James E., Elizabeth F. and Jonathan A. Mrs. Stephens by a previous marriage had one child—Marietta Bristow. Mr. Stephens has filled several official positions, the first of which was that of deputy sheriff. He served as constable a number of years also. He read law for a number of years and received a license in 1867, but never engaged in the active practice of his profession.

J. H. WALKER is a native of what is now Crittenden County, Ky., and a son of Robert A. and Nellie (Hickman) Walker. James H. Walker, subject's paternal grandfather, was a native of South Carolina, and died in that State as early as 1803 or 1804. Subject's maternal ancestors were Eastern people, his grandfather, Tighlman Hickman, emigrating from Delaware in about 1796, and, in company with his brother, William, settled in Bourbon County, where he shortly afterward married a Miss Sallie Shanks, with whom he became acquainted on the journey to the new country. Mr. Hickman resided in Bourbon County until 1804, when he moved to what is now Crittenden County, making the journey by water, locating near the mouth of Hurricane Creek on the Ohio River. He was drowned the same year of his arrival. Subject's mother, Nellie Walker, was born in Bourbon County, August 9, 1800, and was but four years old when the parents moved to their new home on the Ohio. Robert A. Walker was born October 23, 1800, and came to Kentucky with his grandfather, Col. Andrew Love, when but four years of age. Ke spent the greater part of his life in Crittenden County, and for twenty-one years was postmaster at the office which bears his name. In 1859 he was elected to the State legislature, serving one term besides several called sessions. He died November 24, 1876, at the age of seventy-six years. Mrs. Walker died December 22, 1868, aged sixty-eight years. Mr. and Mrs. Walker reared a family of eight children, whose names are as follows: William F. (deceased), Lucinda J. (wife of John Mitchell), J. H., Mary H. (widow of James C. Jones), Robert N., Pernecy A. (wife of Levi Cook), John T. (deceased), Maria E. (widow of W. F. Wilson). J. H. Walker was born November 14, 1827, and remained with his parents until his twenty-fourth year; in 1851 he was appointed deputy sheriff of Crittenden County, under M. B. Haynes, in which capacity he served until 1854. In the latter year he was elected sheriff and re-elected in 1856, serving in all four years. At the close of his term of office he engaged in farming for one year, and in 1860, went to merchandising, which business he continued until 1862, when he was elected circuit clerk of Crittenden County. He served as clerk two terms, having been elected to the office again in 1868. In 1879 he was appointed master commissioner by Judge Cissell, which position he still holds. He is also trustee of the jury fund, and in all his business transactions has proved himself painstaking and trustworthy. He was married February 5, 1856, in Crittenden County, to Miss Hortense Gregory, daughter of James A. and Amanda (White) Gregory, formerly of Boone County, Ky. In politics, Mr. Walker votes with the Democratic party, but during the war he was a strong Union man. Mrs. Walker is a member of the Christian Church.

R. C. WALKER, editor of the Crittenden County Press, is a native of Crittenden County, and was born November 11, 1857. He is a son of R. N. and Sarah (Clement) Walker, both natives of the same county and State. Subject's father is a son of R. A. and Nellie (Hickman) Walker, and a brother of J. H. Walker, of Marion; he was married March 4, 1857, to Sarah J., daughter of John and Sallie (Hughes) Clement, by whom he has had eight children, viz.: R. C., Louisa (deceased), Sallie (wife of Jesse O. Olive), Mollie (wife of Henry Ledbetter), Nellie, Joseph H., Katie and Lucy. Mr. R. N. Walker has been one of the wide-awake business men of Crittenden County, serving in several official positions. He was elected sheriff in 1868, and held the office two terms. At present he is engaged in the mercantile business, and is also running a farm near Marion. R. C. Walker received his education in the schools of Marion, and in 1877 entered the State University at Lexington, which he attended one year. He established the Crittenden County Press in 1879, which he has made one of the best local papers in western Kentucky. The Press is a seven-column folio, decidedly Democratic in politics, and has a large circulation. Mr. Walker is very popular in the county, and one of the rising young journalists of Kentucky. He was married July 7, 1881, to Miss Mattie Brown, daughter of George W. and Matilda (Noel) Brown, of Boone County, Ky. Two children have been born to this union: Walter N. and Mattie E. Mr. and Mrs. Walker are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

THOMAS WALLACE was born in Crittenden County May 8, 1841, and is a son of Arthur H. and Letitia P. (Hart) Wallace. The great-grandfather of subject, Dr. Michael Wallace, immigrated to this country from Glasgow, Scotland, some time in the early part of the eighteenth century, and settled in Stafford County, Va. His son, Thomas Wallace, was a captain in the Revolution, and November 10, 1791, was married in Prince William County, Va,, to Miss Mary Hooe. He resided in the last named county until his death, June 16, 1818. To him and wife were born twelve children, of whom Arthur Wallace was the second, and was born September 17, 1794. He remained in Virginia until 1815, and then came to Louisville, Ky. He accepted a position as clerk in the old Bank of Kentucky and was subsequently appointed to the position of president and cashier of that institution. He served in that capacity about four years, and then went to New Orleans. He embarked in the commission business with a capital of $3,000, and after remaining in the business fifteen years retired with $200,000. He came to Louisville, and there resided in private life until his death July 12, 1879.

The place now occupied by our subject was purchased by his father for a summer residence in 1835. It consisted of a tract of 2,700 acres, and 2,100 are still in possession of the family. He was a member of the Southern Presbyterian Church for many years, and an elder in that denomination. Subject's mother was born in Woodford County, Ky., in 1801. She was a daughter of Nathaniel and Susan (Preston) Hart. Her death occurred in 1866. Thomas is the youngest of a family of four children, of whom three are now living: Susan (widow of R. B. Alexander, late cashier of the Falls City Bank), Mary H. (wife of Hon. Hancock Taylor, lieutenant of the Confederate States army and representative in the legislature for 1877 and 1878), of Jefferson County, Ky., and Thomas. The last named received his education in Louisville, and at the age of seventeen years engaged in mercantile pursuits, which he followed for five years. In 1867 he came to his present farm, and now owns about 1,400 acres, with about 550 acres in cultivation. He also owns a farm of about 315 acres in Christian County. Mr. Wallace was married February 14, 1867, to Miss Mary S. Dade, a daughter of Lucian and Rosalie (Bankhead) Dade, natives of Prince William County, Va. Mrs. Wallace was born March 29, 1843, and to her and husband have been born five children: Elizabeth R., Hart, Thomas, Mary D. and Rosalie Ashton. Mrs. Wallace is a member of the Episcopal Church. Mr. Wallace was a soldier in the late war; he enlisted in the Crescent City Rifles, of New Orleans, in 1861, but served in that company only a few months, when he was transferred to the regiment commanded by Gen. J. H. Morgan. He first served as a private in the Second Kentucky Cavalry, was then transferred to the Sixth, and was made lieutenant and acting-adjutant. In this position he served until Morgan's raid through Ohio, when he was captured and confined on Johnson's Island until the close of the war. Capt. William P. Wallace, a son of subject, was captain and aide de camp to Gen. William Preston, Confederate States army. After the war he married Eliza Henry Edwards, of Christian County, Ky., and then moved to California and died there in 1881.

W. E. WELDON was born in Marion District, this county, January 7, 1843, and is a son of William and Mary R. (Jones) Weldon. Both his parents were born in North Carolina and were brought to Tennessee, when young, by their parents. In 1832 his father came to this county, where he resided until 1874, when he moved to Pickneyville, Livingston County, where he is now engaged in merchandising. Subject's mother died March 18, 1865. W. E. is the eighth of a family of twelve children, of whom nine are now living: Amy E., wife of George Lewis of Pope County, Ill.; S. P. in Fulton County, Ark.; Jane, wife of Thomas King, of Pope County, Ill.; S. M. in Caldwell County, Ky.; S. B. in Pope County, Ill.; W. E.; M. H. in Marion; L. A. at Hurricane, Ky., and J. W. J. in Marion, Ky. Subject remained at home with his father until twenty-two years of age, and then settled in the Hurricane District. In 1870 he came to his present location, and embarked in merchandising. He has since been engaged in the business and carries a stock of about $2,000. He also owns a small farm which he has carried on for himself. Mr. Weldon was married January 6, 1870, to Miss Elizabeth J. Clark (a daughter of Thomas H. and Rachel (Duncan) Clark. Mrs. Weldon's father was born in Kentucky, his parents being of old North Carolina stock. Her mother was born in Tennessee. Mrs. Weldon was born in Marion Precinct, this county, January 17, 1847, and to her have been born five children, three of whom are now living: Rittie A., Thomas A., and Odie E. Mr. and Mrs. Weldon are members of the Baptist Church. He is a member of the Hurricane Lodge, No. 571, A. F. & A. M.

L. A. WELDON was born in this county, November 26, 1847, and is a son of William and Mary (Jones) Weldon (see sketch of W. E. Weldon). L. A. is the tenth of a family of twelve children. He remained at home until twenty-one years of age. At the age of twenty-two he began farming in the Hurricane District, and remained there about four years. In 1873 he began merchandising at Pinckneyville, Livingston County, remaining there one year. He next came to Lebanon, this county, where he remained about six months, and then removed to Pope County, Ill. In that State he remained one year, and then returned to this county. Here he turned his attention to farming, which he followed until 1882. He then settled at Hurricane and has since been engaged in merchandising. He was married, February 24, 1869, to Miss Mary J. Champion, daughter of Jesse and Caroline (Terry) Champion, natives of South Carolina. Mrs. Weldon was born in this county February 5, 1854, and died June 30, 1874. She was the mother of three children: William N., Minnie A. and C. E. Mr. Weldon's second marriage was September 13, 1876, to Miss Ellen Beard, daughter of William and Lucinda (Gullett) Beard, the former was born in North Carolina; the latter in Tennessee. Mrs. Weldon was born in Hamilton County, Ill., March 5, 1849, and is the mother of three children: Arby S., M. D. and Charles. Mr. and Mrs. Weldon are members of the Missionary Baptist Church.

R. W. WILSON is a native of Crittenden County, and one of its most successful business men. He was born December 29, 1829, and is a son of James and Rebecca (Bridges) Wilson, natives of Kentucky and Tennessee, respectively. Mr. Wilson's paternal ancestors were from North Carolina. His grandfather emigrated from that State to Kentucky about the beginning of the present century; he settled in the western part of the present county of Crittenden, and died in 1814. James Wilson was born in Crittenden County, and spent all his life within its borders. He was a farmer and a successful business man, and at one time represented the county in the State legislature. He died in 1866 at the age of about sixty-eight years. Mrs. Wilson died in 1854, aged about fifty-seven years. R. W. is the fourth of a family of five children, and is the only living representative of the family. His early education was received at the common schools, and in 1849 he entered Cumberland College at Princeton, where he took a two-years' course. He commenced active life as a farmer, a business which he carried on successfully until 1860, when he engaged in merchandising in partnership with his brother-in-law, A. Armstrong, with whom he remained four or five years, closing out in 1865. After quitting the mercantile business he turned his attention to farming and trading, in which he has been very successful, accumulating a fine estate and handsome competency, being one of the largest tax-payers in the county. In 1867 he was elected clerk of Crittenden County, serving one term, and in 1873 was elected to the lower house of the legislature, which position he filled two years. Mr. Wilson was married March 20, 1870, to Mary M. Witherspoon, daughter of Hiram and Jane Witherspoon, of Crittenden County. Four children have been born to this marriage: Effie; James, deceased; John, and Rebecca J. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson are members of the Presbyterian Church.

U. G. WITHERSPOON is among the oldest native born residents of Livingston County. He is a son of George and Martha (McClure) Witherspoon; both parents are natives of North Carolina. The father was born in 1776, and was a son of James Witherspoon, who came to America from Ireland in the above year. James Witherspoon enlisted in the American army some time after his arrival in this country, and served under Washington during the war for Independence. He died in 1837. George Witherspoon remained in North Carolina until his thirty-second year, when he immigrated to Kentucky, and settled in what is now Crittenden County, where he died in 1844. Subject's mother was a daughter of John McClure, also a native of Ireland. He came to America many years ago, and died in North Carolina in 1825. Mrs. Witherspoon was born in 1785, and died in 1845. Subject is the fourth of a family of seven children. He was born April 27, 1814, and remained with his parents until his twenty-second year, when he moved to Mt. Vernon, Ill., and engaged in the mercantile business, which he continued three years. He then moved to Washington County, Ill., and engaged in farming, and two years later came back to Crittenden County, Ky., and located on the old home place, where he has since resided, and which he owns. Mr. Witherspoon was married May 23, 1838, to Susan Johnson, a daughter of Lewis and Frankie (Stone) Johnson, of Jefferson County, Ill. Fourteen children have been born to this union, viz.: Amzi, deceased; Sofina, wife of Thomas Griffith; Caroline, deceased; George, deceased; Ellen, wife or Z. Terry; Joseph T.; Rufus; Mattie; Annie, wife of William Terry; the other children died in infancy. Mr. Witherspoon was elected magistrate of his district in 1868, and served a term of four years. He is independent in politics, voting for the man rather than the party. Mr. and Mrs. Witherspoon are members of the Presbyterian Church.

D. WOODS, county clerk, was born in Livingston County, May 20, 1839, and is a son of H. W. and Nellie Ann (Hodge) Woods, both natives of Kentucky. H. W. Woods was a son of David Woods. He was born March 30, 1811, and lived the greater part of his life in Livingston County, dying July 11, 1880. Subject's maternal ancestors were from North Carolina, his grandfather, Robert Hodge, emigrating from that State in an early day and settling in Livingston County, near the town of Salem, where he died in 1845. Subject's paternal ancestors were from Virginia. Subject's mother died when he was about six years old. She was the mother of four children, viz.: David, R. H., Dr. J. E. (of Augusta, Ark.), and Nellie (deceased wife of Dr. P. Y. McCoy, of Evansville, Ind.). Our subject was thrown upon his own rescources early in life, and at the age of fifteen, came to Marion and engaged as clerk in the mercantile house of his uncle, J. N. Woods, with whom he remained five or six years. In 1859 he engaged in merchandising in Marion and carried on a general store until 1878, at which time he disposed of his business in order to take charge of the county clerk's office, to which he was elected that year. He was re-elected in 1880, without opposition, a circumstance which attests his popularity as an officer with the people of the county. Mr. Woods was married November 16, 1859, to Miss Havana E. Perkins, daughter of Rev. George K. and Elizabeth O. (Gray) Perkins, of Decatur, Ala. Mr. and Mrs. Woods have a family of six children, viz.: H. K., Lena, Ina C., David E., Kittie B., and Sallie. Mr. Woods is a member of the Masonic order and K. of H., and votes the Democratic ticket. He and family are members of the Presbyterian Church.

J. N. WOODS, the veteran merchant of Marion, was born near Salem, Livingston County, June 15, 1816. He is a son of David and Sarah (Neal) Woods, the father a native of Albermarle County, Va., and the mother of Bourbon County, Ky. The grandfather, William Woods, emigrated from Virginia to Kentucky about 1810, settling in Livingston County, where he died in 1821. He was a farmer, and for a number of years preached for the Baptist Church. Subject's maternal ancestors were Virginians also. His grandfather, John Neal, left his native State before the beginning of the present century, and was one of the early pioneers of Bourbon County, where he died many years ago. David Woods, subject's father, came to Kentucky as early as 1804 or 1805, and settled in Bourbon County, which was his home until 1813, at which time he moved to Livingston County, locating near Salem. He purchased a large tract of real estate in the eastern part of the county, and became quite wealthy; he died October, 1825, at the age of fifty-seven years. His widow died in 1834. David and Sarah Woods were the parents of seven children, only two of whom are living: J. N. and T. N. The following are the names of the deceased children: Kitty, William S., H. W., David, and Maria Ann. J. N. Woods remained with his mother until his eighteenth year, when he was apprenticed to learn the tanner's trade; after serving his apprenticeship he opened a tannery near Salem, which he operated two years, after which he engaged in the mercantile business at Salem in partnership with Joseph Watts, with whom he remained about eighteen months. In May, 1846, he came to Marion and effected a copartnership in the mercantile business with S. Marble, whose interest in the store he purchased two years later, remaining in business until 1850, when he closed out and went back to Salem. He opened a store in Salem, which he ran about a year, when he moved to Princeton, Ind., where he sold goods for a time, then again moved to Marion and carried on a large mercantile establishment until the war, when he discontinued his business for some time. He afterward opened his store, which he has since operated, and is now the oldest merchant in the county. Mr. Woods has been very successful in his business enterprises, acquiring a handsome competency for his declining years. He was married in May, 1848, in Madison, Ind., to Mrs. Mary A. Marble, daughter of Samuel and Clementine (Musgrave) Crawford, of Jefferson County, by whom he had two children, one child who died in infancy. By previous marriage, Mrs. Woods had one child, Henrietta Marble, wife of T. J. Cameron, of Marion. Mr. Woods has been a stanch Republican ever since the organization of that party, and during the war was a strong Union man. He was elected to represent Crittenden County in the lower legislature in 1871, and served one term of two years.

HANCOCK COUNTY.

D. L. ADAIR, Hancock County, is a native of Hardin County, Ky., and was born November 26, 1824. His paternal ancestors were Scotch. They came to America in an early day, and settled first in New York and later in North Carolina, from which State subject's great-grandfather emigrated to Ohio about the beginning of the present century. He settled on the present site of Aberdeen, opposite Maysville, Ky., and made the original plat of that town, which he named for his native city in Scotland. Joseph Adair, subject's grandfather, was born in North Carolina. He moved to Montgomery County, Ky., many years ago and subsequently immigrated to Missouri, locating at Independence, of which city he was the original proprietor. Isaac C. Adair, subject's father, was born in Montgomery County, Ky., where he passed his youth and early manhood. He moved in 1820 to Hardin County, which he afterward represented in the legislature, and died in Elizabethtown in 1826. His wife, Milly (Edwards) Adair, our subject's mother, was born in Nelson County, Ky., and died in Hardin County about 1852. They had two children, viz.: D. L., and Mary C. Adair. By a previous marriage Mrs. Adair had a family of five children, two of whom are living. Our subject received a liberal education in his native county, and at the age of eighteen years began the study of law in the office of Morris & Wintersmith, at Hodgensville, La Rue County, under whose instructions he remained for three years. He was admitted to the bar in 1845, and moved to Hawesville the same year, where he engaged in the practice of his profession in the courts of Hancock and adjoining counties. In 1848 he enlisted in the Fourth Kentucky Regiment for the Mexican war, with which he served until the close of that struggle, participating in a number of engagements, in all of which he acquitted himself with distinction. At the close of the war he returned to Hawesville and resumed his practice, which he continued two years, at the end of which time he moved a short distance into the country, and engaged in farming and horticulture, which he has ever since continued. When the public school system of Kentucky, went into successful operation, Mr. Adair was appointed first school commissioner of Hancock County, a position he held for eight or ten years. He has done more to advance the educational interests of the county than any other individual, and the present efficient school system has been largely brought about by his efforts. He has at different times held other official positions, having been appointed county surveyor shortly after his arrival in Hawesville. He also established the first paper in the county, The Spirit of Enterprise, which he edited one year, and which had quite a good local circulation. In 1851 he took editorial charge of the Pick and Plow, established that year, and subsequently became editor of the Rural Record, which was afterward merged into the Messenger. In 1875 he took charge of the Plain Dealer, which sheet he edited until 1879, when he established the Hawesville Ballot, which was regularly issued for one year. He was for five years associate editor of the Southern Farmer, published at Memphis, and also agricultural editor of the Louisville Ledger for two years. In addition to his connection with the papers enumerated, Mr. Adair for three years published the Annals of Bee Culture, which had a circulation of 5,000 subscribers. Mr. Adair has made bee culture a special study, inventing a number of improvements in bee hives, etc., which have been generally adopted. In 1872 he issued his "Progressive Bee Culture," which is considered authority on that branch of industry, and which has been translated into all the languages of Europe. Mr. Adair has also given considerable attention to geology, and at different times has been employed to make geological surveys and locate mines, etc. He is a man of culture, and in every respect a refined and polished gentleman. He was married December 20, 1849, to Miss Sarah A., daughter of William and Eliza Sterrett, of Breckinridge County. Eight children have been born to this union, six of whom are living: William, John, Isaac, Eliza, Mary and Dood.

J. Q. ADAMS was born in Hancock County, May 31, 1845, and is a son of William and Mary Ann (Bright) Adams. The father was born near Frankfort, Ky., July 22, 1799, his people being natives of Pennsylvania. The grandfather, John Adams, made the journey from Pennsylvania to Frankfort on a raft. In 1808 he came to Hancock County and settled on a farm of 500 acres, which is now owned by his two sons, David and William Adams. The grandfather subsequently served as a soldier in the war of 1812, and resided in the county until a good old age. The father of subject is still living in this county. The mother was born in Madison, Ind., and was an own sister of the famous John Bright of early days. She died in the county in 1850. Our subject is the fourth of a family of eight children, of whom three are now living: Georgetta, Jesse and J. Q. The latter received the rudiments of his education in the county. He also attended Notre Dame University and Cecilian College. He began life for himself when twenty-two years old, and first settled on the home place. He remained only there a short time and then came to his present farm, where he now owns about 375 acres with about 225 in cultivation. He also pays considerable attention to stock raising, handling about 150 head per year. Mr. Adams was married in the fall of 1867 to Miss Nancy E. Hawes, a daughter of Benjamin Hawes, of Daviess County, Ky. This lady was also a native of Daviess County, and to her were born two children; Georgetta is the only one living. This lady died in 1872. Subject was next married December 16, 1875, to Miss Margaret J. Crockett, a daughter of Anthony and Susan (Robb) Crockett. This lady was born in Franklin County, June 15, 1850. One child blesses this union—Jesse Crockett.

CAPT. E. K. AYRES, Hancock County, was born in Jefferson County, Ky., March 13, 1839, and is the fourth child of Thomas H. and Sarah E. (Ebbert) Ayres, the father a native of Virginia, and the mother of Kentucky. Mr. Ayres' paternal ancestors were German people; his grandfather moved to Louisville as early as 1802, and died a number of years ago. Thomas H. Ayres was a resident of Louisville from early youth until about 1840, at which time he moved to Hancock County and settled on the place where his son-in-law, John Hughes, now resides in Hawesville Precinct. He was, by occupation, a brick mason, and worked at his trade until his death, in 1876, at the age of seventy-three years. Sarah E. Ayres was born in Jefferson County, Ky., and departed this life in Hancock County, in 1844. Thomas H. and Sarah E. Ayres reared a family of seven children, four of whom are still living; by a second marriage the father had five children, all living. Subject's parents came to Hancock County when he was but one year old. He received a good practical education in the common schools of the county, and subsequently became a student of St. Mary's College, Marion County, which institution he attended one year. At the age of twenty-three he engaged in farming for himself in Lewisport Precinct, where he resided for three years, at the end of which time he moved to Hawesvill Precinct and took possession of the paternal homestead, which he farmed for one year. In 1868 he moved to Lafayette County, where he remained a short time, afterward returning to Hancock County, where he has since continued to reside. In 1872 he purchased his present farm of 170 acres, on the Ohio River, opposite Tell City, which is one of the best cultivated farms in the county. A palatial residence stands a short distance from the river bank, above high water mark, from which a magnificent view up and down the river can be seen. Mr. Ayres is extensively engaged in stock raising and is also owner of the ferry which plies between the Kentucky shore and Tell City, Ind. Our subject was married February 4, 1862, to Miss Mary E. Tinsley, daughter of Willis and Sarah (Howell) Tinsley, of Shelby County, Ky. Three children have been born to this union: Samuel E., Sarah E., and Phillip. Mr. and Mrs. Ayres are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, belonging to the Lewisport congregation.

DAVID T. BEAUCHAMP, Hancock County, was born in this county, January 26, 1835, and is a son of Robert C. and Sarah A. B. (Stowers) Beauchamp. The father was born in the fort at Georgetown, Harrison Co., Ky., in 1800. His father, William Beauchamp, was a native of Delaware, and the great-grandfather, Jesse Beauchamp, came from France to this country in the time of the French revolution, being driven from that country on account of religious persecution. William Beauchamp was a soldier in the Revolution. He married Miss Sallie Morris, a neice of Robert Morris, of Revolutionary fame, and as early as 1790 came to Kentucky. About that time the father of subject was born, and settled on Elkhorn Creek, in Bourbon County. In that county the grandfather resided until 1818, when he came to Daviess County, and settled near where the present village of Yelvington is now situated, and there he died in about 1830. The father grew to manhood in Daviess County, and in 1826 he was married to Miss Stowers, who was born in Jefferson County, Ky., September 9, 1811. In 1827 he moved to this county, and settled on the farm now owned by his son, John Beauchamp. Here he first bought 160 acres, and at one time owned 5,000 acres in the county. He represented this county in the legislature in 1867 and 1868, 1870 and 1871. He died in this county September 9, 1884. The mother is still living. Subject is the third of a family of seven children, of whom four are now living: John W., David, Alexander D. and Julia, wife of James C. Robb. The schooling of subject was received in this county and at St. Mary's College, Marion County. He began for himself on the home place and came to his present farm in 1856. He now owns about 1,000 acres, with about 800 acres in cultivation. He pays some attention to stock raising. He was married September 25, 1866, to Miss Anna M. Crockett, a daughter of Anthony and Susan (Robb) Crockett, natives of Kentucky. This lady was born December 22, 1836, and to her were born five children, of whom three are now living, Robert C., Samuel R., and Joe A. This lady died May 11, 1878. Mr. Beauchamp was a soldier in the late war. He enlisted in Company E of the Seventh Kentucky Cavalry, Confederate States army, in June, 1864, and remained out one year. Among the battles in which he participated were Tupelo, Harrisburg, Guntown Hill, and Bull's Gap. At the latter battle he was wounded and confined at Emory Hospital, Virginia, for about six months. He then returned to his regiment and remained with it until its surrender at Christiansburg, Va.

ALEXANDER D. BEAUCHAMP is a native of Hancock County, and is the youngest or fourth son of a family of seven children born to R. C. and Ann (Stowers) Beauchamp. The Beauchamps were of French descent and early settlers of Kentucky, the grandfather of subject, William Beauchamp, dying in Daviess County, near Owensboro, a great many years ago. R. C. Beauchamp was born in Harrison County, in 1800, and eighteen years later moved to Daviess County, settling near Yelvington, where he resided until 1827; in the latter year he became a citizen of Hancock County, locating in Hawesville Precinct on the old home farm now in possession of his son, John W. He was a successful farmer and business man and represented the county in the legislature two terms. He died September 9, 1884, at the advanced age of eighty-four years. Subject's mother, Ann (Stowers) Beauchamp, was born in Jefferson County, Ky., in 1811, and is still living in Hancock County. She is the daughter of John Stowers, an early resident of Hancock County, whose death occurred in 1826. Alexander Beauchamp was reared in Hancock County and to agricultural pursuits. He spent the first twenty-one years of his life with his parents. He received a fair English education at the common schools, and later attended St. Mary's College, Marion County, where he was instructed in the higher branches. He commenced farming for himself in Hawesville Precinct, which has been his home ever since. In 1863 he enlisted in the Third Kentucky Cavalry, Confederate States Army with which he served until the close of the war. His regiment was in the Western Army Corps, under Gens. Breckinridge and Morgan, and saw a great deal of active service, participating in a number of bloody engagements. After the close of the war, Mr. Beauchamp returned to his native county and resumed farming, at which he has been very successful, and has become one of the leading farmers and stock raisers in the precinct where he resides. He was married December 13, 1867, to Miss Marietta, daughter of Enoch and Martha J. Kendall of Daviess County, by whom he has four children: Mary R., Enoch, Katie and Claribel.

GARLAND D. BLACK, attorney at law, Hancock County, was born August 27, 1847, in Ohio County, Ky., and is a son of Jesse and Louisa (Craig) Black, both natives of Kentucky, the former of Ohio and the latter of Muhlenburgh County. Robert Black, the grandfather of our subject, was a native of North Carolina. He came to Kentucky about 1800, and settled in the northern part of Ohio County, near the village of Hainesville, where his death occured in 1850. Mr. Black's maternal ancestors were early residents of Muhlenburgh County; his grandfather, James Craig, moving to that part of the State shortly after the Revolutionary war in order to take possession of a large tract of land, which he received from the government for services rendered in said war. Garland D. Craig, son of James Craig, subject's grandfather, was an early resident of Muhlenburgh County. He died near Greenville in 1874. Jesse L. Black was born in 1809, and lived all his life in Ohio County, dying there in the spring of 1878. Louisa Black was born in 1812, and died in 1857. The following are the names of the children born to Jesse L. and Louisa Black: Lutitia A. (deceased), James F., Felix H., Garland D. and Hiram C. Subject of this sketch remained in his native county until thirty years of age, and was reared a farmer. His primary education was received at the common schools and in 1869 he became a student of Leitchfield Academy, Grayson County, which he attended one year. He afterward attended the Cloverport Academy, Breckinridge County, one year, and then commenced teaching, which profession he followed ten years. In 1874 he began reading law, and later entered the law office of D. R. Murray and J. D. Powers, with whom he remained two years, and afterward prosecuted his legal studies one year under M. A. Mason; was admitted to the bar in 1878, since which time he has been practicing in the courts of Hancock and adjoining counties. He was elected attorney of Hawesville in 1882, serving two years, and in 1884 was called to the office of mayor, which position he fills at the present time. Mr. Black was united in marriage, December 15, 1881, with Miss Mary E. Carlton, daughter of Captain J. W. and Antoinette Carlton of Hancock County. The result of this union is one child: Nettie Louisa, born October 30, 1882. Mr. and Mrs. Black are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

EDWIN BRASHEAR, Hancock County, was born in Breckinridge County, Ky., December 29, 1842, and is a son of R. A. S. and Margaret (Cox) Brashear. The father was born in Breckinridge County about 1812. Subject's grandfather, Joseph Brashear, moved from Washington County to Breckinridge County, in 1806. The great-grandfather, William Brashear, came from Maryland, and settled at the old fort at Louisville, in 1782, where he remained until killed by the Indians. The father began life for himself as a merchant at Stephensport, and for upward of twenty years was one of the magistrates of the county. He was a member of the Baptist Church, and died in 1859. The mother was also a native of Breckinridge County, having been born there in 1814, and her people were natives of Virginia. She was a member of the Baptist Church, and died in 1874. Subject was the third of a family of eight children, seven of whom are now living: James C.; Mehitable, wife of Richard Robinson, of Jacksonport, Ark.; Edwin; Bettie; Nannie, wife of Wilbir Sills; R. A. and Josie. Subject began farming for himself when fifteen years of age, in Breckinridge County. He moved to Hancock County in 1867, and settled on his present farm, where he owns about 300 acres, with about 250 acres in cultivation. Mr. Brashear was married September 12, 1867, to Miss Jennie, daughter of George Younger, of Hancock County. She was born in Breckinridge County, in 1844, and was the mother of four children, one of whom, Minnie, is now living. This lady died in 1875. Subject was next married, June 7, 1877, to Mrs. Bettie Bowlware, daughter of Joseph Wright, of Daviess County. DR. ISAAC N. GREATHOUSE was born near Bardstown, Ky., about 1792. His father, Harmon Greathouse was born in Pennsylvania. In an early day, he and his two brothers started for Kentucky in a flatboat, and one of his brothers was killed by Indians while making the journey. The second brother settled in Shelby County, and the third brother, Harmon, settled in Nelson County. In an early Indian war he was captured by the Indians. He remained a prisoner some time, but finally escaping settled in Nelson County, Ky., where he resided until his death. Subject was reared in Nelson County and was there educated. He read medicine with Dr. Goodman of that place. In 1818 he went to Troy, Ind., where he practiced his profession. In the latter part of the same year he returned to Kentucky, and married Miss Elizabeth Lewis. This lady was born in Jefferson County, Ky., in 1799. Her parents were John and Hannah Lewis; the father came to Hancock County with his family in 1799, and settled in a fort which then stood on the banks of Yellow Creek. He was a surveyor by occupation, and and in an early day made a plat of the major part of the land lying between the Salt and Green Rivers. In 1812, he had listed for taxation over 199,760 acres. This land was, however, considered very cheap; as, speaking about it in a letter written to people in Virginia in 1788, he said that a tract of 2,000 acres on the Ohio River, in what is now Hancock County, could be bought for fifteen farthings, but he remarked that the land in a few months could be bought for ten farthings. Soon after his marriage Isaac Greathouse settled in this county, on the farm owned by his son William. Here he followed his profession and also paid some attention to farming until his death in 1832. His wife was born in 1799 and died in Hancock County in 1879. To her were born seven children, of whom three are now living: H. B., J. L., and William L. Harmon B. Greathouse was born May 2, 1822, in Troy, Ind., and was the second of a family of seven children. His schooling was received in Hancock County. He began life for himself when twenty-three years of age. He first bought a farm near Lewisport, where he resided about two years. From there he moved two miles below Lewisport, and here farmed for seven years. In 1859 he came to his present farm in Hancock County, where he owns about 173 acres, with about 150 acres in cultivation. Mr. Greathouse was married on February 10, 1840, to Miss Martha R., daughter of James and Catherine (Lewis) Haywood, natives of Henry County. This lady was born in Daviess County, in November, 1827, and was the mother of six children, of whom three are now living: Catherine E., wife of Milton C. Tracy, in Macon, Mo.; Martha H., wife of Thomas L. Henderson, and Isaac N. This lady died September 29, 1862. Mr. G. was next married, December 1, 1868, to Miss Martha E. Haywood, a daughter of George Haywood. This lady was born in Clark County, Mo. (first white female born in that county), in 1830, and to her was born one child, since deceased. She died September, 1878. Subject is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and has been identified with the Grange fraternity. J. L. Greathouse was born in Hancock County, Ky., March 17, 1828, and was the third of seven children. His education was received in Hancock County. He began life for himself at twenty-five years of age, in Lewisport Precinct. He settled on his present farm in 1864, where he owns 120 acres. In 1864 he erected a saw-mill on his farm, and is still running it. Mr. Greathouse was married, January 1, 1855, to Miss S. C. Smith, a daughter of Michael and Sarah (Scott) Smith, natives of Virginia. This lady was born in Henry County, Ky., in 1836. This marriage has resulted in the following children: Nicholas J., Sarah, wife of Stephen Emich; Susan, wife of Rufus Neel; Almenda O., wife of William Roberts; Laura Cooper, Vinson, Clark and Fannie Lou. Mr. Greathouse is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South; Mrs. Greathouse of the old school Presbyterian Church.

J. J. HOUSE was born in Hancock County, December 20, 1831, and is the son of Benoni and Hannah A. (Lewis) House, natives of Maryland and Kentucky, respectively. William House, grandfather of our subject, was a native of Maryland, which State he left in an early day, immigrating to Hancock County, and settling on the Ohio River, a short distance below the village of Troy. He was a farmer by occupation, and died a number of years ago. The Lewises were from Virginia, subject's grandfather being among the first permanent residents of that part of Hancock County, which still bears his name. He was a prominent and extensive land owner, having purchased from the government large tracts of land in various parts of the county. Benoni House was born in 1808, and died in 1849. The mother of subject was born in 1811, and died July 31, 1881. The family of Benoni and Hannah House consisted of eight children, only two of whom are now living: Hannah A., wife of William Moredeck, and John J., subject of this sketch. By second marriage, with Dr. F. Lewis, the mother had three children, only one of whom is living. John J. House was reared on a farm in Hancock County, two miles from the village of Lewisport, where he remained until his twentieth year. He received a liberal education in the schools of the country, and commenced life for himself as a salesman in the drug house of Raymond & Patten, Louisville, with whom he remained a short time. He subsequently engaged as a salesman on a store-boat which plied on the Ohio River, selling books, stationery and fancy goods, remaining the greater part of one year. After severing his connection with the enterprise he took service as clerk with W. P. Haywood, of Lewisport, in the general mercantile business, where he remained for several years, dealing in live stock on his own responsibility in the meantime. In 1857 he engaged in farming on a place he had previously purchased in Yellow Creek Precinct, and on May 25 of the following year he was united in marriage with Mrs. Nancy V. Simpson, daughter of Nathan and Nancy Hukill, of Maysville, Ky. In 1861 he purchased his present farm of 198 acres, on which he has since been living. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and of Lewisport Lodge, No. 303, F. & A. M.

E. P. McADAMS was born in Hawesville, Hancock County, Ky., July 23, 1847. His parents were G. W. and Dorcas (Comstock) McAdams, natives of Harrison County, Ind., and Ohio County, Ky., respectively. His ancestors on the father's side were of German descent, and early residents of Kentucky, Nelson County. G. W. McAdams was born in 1817. He came to Kentucky in his early manhood and resided in Jefferson County a number of years. He subsequently moved to Hancock, where he married, and where he lived until 1882, at which time he went to Louisville, his present home. His wife, subject's mother, died in 1861, aged about forty-seven or forty-eight years. The family of G. W. and Dorcas McAdams consisted of seven children, four of whom are now living: Josephine, Hester, E. P. and S. L. E. P. McAdams was reared in Hawesville. His early education was recived in the school of the town. At the age of sixteen, he entered Notre Dame College, South Bend, Ind., which he attended one year, and subsequently became a student in Washington and Lee College at Lexington, which he attended the same length of time. After quitting school, he returned to Hawesville, and engaged in the tobacco business as superintendent for his father, who was one of the most extensive and successful tobacco dealers on the river. He remained in the above capacity until 1874, at which time he was elected circuit clerk of Hancock County, which office he still holds, having been re-elected in 1880. Mr. McAdams was married December 19, 1869, to Miss Mary L., daughter of John and Theresa Pope, of Arkansas, and grand-daughter of ex-Gov. John Pope of that State. Seven children have been born to this union, viz.: Marie Louise, George W., John P., Lena B., Samuel L., Robert T. and Albert E. Mr. McAdams is a member of the I. O. O. F., K. of H. and independent in politics.

G. A. McGILL, Hancock County, was born in New Haven, Nelson Co., Ky., March 10, 1839, to B. J. and Mary Ann (Green) McGill. The father was born near Bardstown, Nelson County, in about 1820, and his people were natives of Maryland, and of Scotch extraction. The mother was also born in Nelson County. Subject was the only child, and, his mother dying when he was but seven months old, he was accordingly reared by his aunt, Mrs. Vawter. This lady came to Hancock County in 1850, with her husband, and here subject received his education. When twelve years old, he began clerking for his uncle. In 1863 he embarked for himself in general business in connection with W. B. Thorne, speculating in tobacco and produce. This partnership lasted about four years, and then subject carried on the business by himself. After about four years he also quit the business. Since that time, he has served in the following capacities at Lewisport: Agent for Louisville & Henderson Packet Company; agent of Adams Express Company, mail carrier, deputy clerk, notary public and insurance agent. Mr. McGill was married November 20, 1862, to Miss Lavinia, daughter of Judge Kincheloe and Lucy A. (Lewis) Patterson, natives of Jefferson County, Ky., but now residents of Lewisport. This lady bore seven children: Ben J., head clerk on Steamer "James Guthrie;" Annie C., Lucy, Zulu, Kincheloe P., Mary A. and Samuel T. This lady died, and subject was next married to Miss Mary Patterson, a sister of his first wife. He is identified with the Catholic Church and is a member of Lewisport Lodge, K. of H. Mrs. McGill is a member of the Baptist Church.

T. A. MACGREGOR, M. D., Hancock County, was born in New Orleans, La., December 16, 1840, and is the son of George and Jane (Christian) MacGregor, both parents natives of Scotland. His grandfather, Thomas MacGregor, was a lawyer of considerable ability in Scotland, and died in Edinburgh about 1862 or 1863, at an advanced age. His maternal grandfather was Thomas Christian, a native of Ireland. He was a lawyer by profession, and died in the city of Dublin, 1857. George MacGregor was born in Dinwall, Scotland, about 1809. He was graduated in law at the University of Edinburgh, and practiced the legal profession in his native city for several years. About 1830 he came to America and settled in Nashville, Tenn., where he engaged in merchandising for ten years, at the end of which time, 1840, he moved to New Orleans, where his death occurred in 1860. The subject of this sketch has had quite an eventful life, a mere outline of which is only attempted in this brief sketch. The first four years of his life were spent in his native State, after which he was sent to Nashville where for eight years he attended the schools of that city. He next went to Louisville, Ky., where he attended a boarding school for about four years, making rapid progress in his studies in the meantime, so at the age of sixteen he had a very liberal education. In 1856 he went to Europe, and for four years attended school at Vevay, Switzerland, and Paris, France, where he acquired a thorough knowledge of the German and French languages. He returned to America in 1859, and began the study of medicine in New Orleans, attending one course of lectures in the Louisiana University in 1859 and in 1860. In the latter year, he entered the medical department of Louisville University, and attended two full courses, then graduating in the class of 1861–62. After graduating, Dr. MacGregor commenced the practice of his profession in the city of Louisville, where he remained until 1874, at which time he moved to Kansas and located at Leavenworth, in the drug business, which he carried on in connection with his practice for one year. In 1875 he returned to Kentucky, settling at Hawesville, where he has since resided. Shortly after locating at that point, he retired from the active practice of his profession, and formed a copartnership with Z. H. Shelley in the milling business, which he still carries on. Dr. MacGregor was married January, 1871, to Miss Judelle Trabue, of Frankfort, Ky. They have a family of two children, viz.: Chasteen and Matilde, both living. Dr. and Mrs. MacGregor are members of the Episcopal Church, belonging to a congregation in Louisville.

J. H. MARSHALL (deceased), Hancock County, was born in Breckinridge County, April 10, 1828, and was a son of Alexander and Elizabeth (Hicks) Marshall, natives of Virginia, and probably of English descent. Subject was the second of a family of ten children. His education was received in his native county, and at the age of nineteen he commenced for himself. In 1866 he moved to Hancock County, and settled on the farm now owned by his widow. Besides the home estate he had landed interests in Hancock County, and farms in Mississippi and Indiana. He served at one time as magistrate of Hancock County, was identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church and was a member of Hardinsburg Masonic Lodge. He was twice married; first in 1849 to Miss Sarah, daughter of Charles and Elizabeth McKinney, of Mercer County, Ky. Four children blessed this union, of whom two are now living: Bettie D. and Taylor. J. H. Marshall, died April 30, 1881, and was buried by the Knights of Honor in the Hawesville Cemetery. His lady died in 1856. Mr. Marshall was next married January 6, 1859, to Miss Lucy Tate, a daughter of David and Lucy (Seaton) Tate, natives of Breckinridge County, their ancestors being early settlers from Virginia. Mrs. Marshall was born in Perry County, Ind., October 28, 1840, and is the mother of four children: David A., Lunie L., Maude D. and Humphrey H. The widow, assisted by her eldest son, is at present carrying on the home farm.

JOHN C. MERCER, Hancock County, was born in Wayne County, Ky., June 16, 1827, to Nathaniel and Mary (Castillo) Mercer. The father was born in North Carolina, near the northern boundary, in 1794. Nicholas Mercer, subject's grandfather, came from Ireland. When the father of our subject was but four years of age his father came to Kentucky and settled in Wayne County, about ten miles from Monticello. The grandfather was a farmer, and died about 1812. The father was a soldier in the war of 1812, and was engaged in the battle of the Thames under Col. Whitley. Returning to Wayne County, he was married in 1822 to Miss Castillo, who was born in Richmond, Va., in 1795. Her father, Matthew Castillo, was a native of Ireland and a tailor by trade. In 1839 Nathaniel Mercer settled in Breckinridge County, where he farmed until his death, December 13, 1839. The mother was the third of a family of seven children, all of whom are now living: Lageraldo, wife of Ezra Davis; Michael J.; John C.; Margaret, wife John Litsey; Joseph, in Robenson, Colo.; Nicholas, county judge of Breckinridge County; and Jane O., wife of Dr. John N. Moorman of Ohio County. Subject remained at home until twenty-two years of age, and then commenced farming for himself in Breckinridge County. In 1860 he bought tobacco and also sold goods on his farm. In 1864 he sold out there and moved to Cloversport, where he speculated in tobacco, merchandised and ran a livery stable in connection with his brother, Joe K. Mercer. He remained in business at that point six years, then returned to farming in that county six years, and then moved to Hancock County. From 1877 he lived two years in Hawesville, and then leased Dr. Green Sterett's farm, where he now lives. Mr. Mercer was married April 14, 1874, to Miss Emily, daughter of John L. and Catharine (Chamblins) Marlowe. This lady was born in Ohio County, June 10, 1851, and to her have been born four children, two of whom are now living: Mary C. and John L. Mr. and Mrs. Mercer are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

W. B. MILLER, Hancock County, was born in Rockbridge County, Va., March 15, 1815, to Joseph and Mary (Booker) Miller. The father was born in Virginia in 1793, his father, John Miller, being a native of Germany. The father was a millwright by trade, and was a soldier in the war of 1812. In 1822 he came to Kentucky, and settled in Shelby County, where he followed stilling for three years. He next moved to Daviess County, where he joined the Methodist Church and subsequently became a preacher. In 1860 he removed to Ohio County, where he died in 1874. The mother was also born in Rockbridge County, Va., in 1792, and died in this State in the spring of 1855. Our subject is the second of a family of nine children, of whom two are now living: Joseph S., in Ohio County, and William B. The latter began life for himself at the age of twenty-five, at farming in Daviess County. In the winter of 1854 he moved to Hancock County and settled at Lewisport, where he remained three years. He then bought a mill near Hawesville, which he ran two years and then sold out. He then erected a mill in Hancock County, opposite Tell City on the Ohio, but remained there only one year. In 1879 he settled on his present farm, where he now owns about 108 acres. Mr. Miller was married January 11, 1841, to Miss Rosa E., daughter of Capt. Ben and Nancy (Graham) Duncan, natives of Nelson County. Mrs. Miller was born in Daviess County, Ky., November 5, 1824. To her have been born three children, of whom two are living: Nannie, wife of James Freeman, and Cynthia, wife of John A. Freeman. Mr. and Mrs. Miller are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Subject served as assessor in Daviess County three years; in 1861 and 1862 he served as sheriff of Hancock County, and from 1876 to 1880 he served as assessor.

M. M. MORTON, Hancock County, was born in Richmond, Va., on April 26, 1817, to Mathias and Peggy (Cox) Morton. The parents were born in Pennsylvania about 1769 and in 1789, respectively. In 1820 the father came to Kentucky and settled about eight miles from Lewisport, Hancock County. About 1845 he moved to Union County, Ky.; he remained three years and then moved to Alexander County, Ill., where he died about 1854. Subject was the fourth of a family of fourteen children, of whom but two are now living: Matilda (widow of Allan Pate, in Louisville, Ky.) and Marshall M. The latter received his schooling in this county. He remained at home until twenty-two, in the meantime learning the trade of a house carpenter from his father, and then commencing life for himself followed his trade in Hancock County. In 1845 he went to Arkansas, remained about twelve months, then returned to Union County, where his father was then living. There he remained two years, and then came back to Hancock County. After following his trade two years, he bought a tract of 175 acres, and has been engaged in farming ever since. He also pays considerable attention to trading and stock dealing. Mr. Morton was married, in October, 1842, to Miss Mary, a daughter of James and Lucy (Baugh) Prentiss, natives of Virginia. This lady was born in Petersburgh, Va., about 1819, and was the mother of six children, of whom two are now living: Nettie, and Jennie (wife of Clinton Hancock). This lady died in 1857; subject was next married, in October, 1858, to Miss Annie, daughter of Harry White, a native of England. This lady was born in New York about 1839, and to her have been born seven children: Alice (wife of Mr. E. B. Hackett), Marshall, James, Annie, Henry, Joseph and Wallace. Mrs. Morton is a member of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. M. has been identified with the Masonic fraternity, and has served as deputy sheriff.

THOMAS M. NEWMAN, Hancock County, was born in Breckinridge County, Ky., December 17, 1819, to Thomas B. and Mary (McQuiddy) Newman. The father was born in Breckinridge County, January 18, 1795, and his people were natives of Virginia; the grandfather, Edmund Newman, was a soldier in the Revolution, and first immigrated to the fort at Louisville, but after a short time moved to Breckinridge County in the early part of the year 1795, settling near Cloverport. In 1826 he moved to Hancock County, and settled about four miles south of Hawesville, where he resided until his death in the fall of 1856. The father moved to Hancock County about the time his father did. He was a tanner by trade, and also followed farming. He died May 27, 1857. He was a member of the Baptist Church. The mother was born in Virginia in March, 1818, and her people were natives of Scotland. She died in October, 1835. Subject was the eldest of a family of six children, four of whom are now living: T. M., Eveline (wife of Dr. R. Lightfoot, of Carbondale, Ill.), Sarah E. (wife of Thomas Pate) and John (in Kansas). Subject learned the trade of tanner from his father, and followed it for several years. He commenced farming in Breckinridge, but in 1844 he moved to Hancock County. In 1850 he settled on his present farm, where he owns about thirty-three acres. Mr. Newman was married, December 31, 1840, to Mrs. Nancy J. Haynes, a daughter of Hardin Haynes. This union has resulted in eleven children, of whom seven are living: Henry, Charles, George, Mary (wife of Lewis Burke), Sarah, Elizabeth (wife of C. Brunet), and Nannie (wife of Taylor Marshall). Mr. Newman and family are members of the Baptist Church.

CHARLES C. NORMAN, M. D., was born July 15, 1842, in Henderson County, Ky. He is a son of Rev. Joseph C. and Virginia Norman; the former a native of North Carolina and the latter of Hopkins County, Ky. Dr. Norman's grandfather, Wesley Norman, was a native of North Carolina and a descendant of an old Huguenot family. He came to Kentucky about 1824, and settled in Henderson County, near the city of Henderson. He was a farmer and miller, and a very successful business man. His death occurred in 1845. Rev. Joseph C. Norman was born in 1819 in Caswell County, N. C., and came to Kentucky with his parents when but five years old. He was a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and sustained the reputation of being one of the most successful and popular pulpit orators of that denomination in northern Kentucky. He was in the active work of the ministry for twenty-five years, and died at Hawesville, November 21, 1878. He was married in 1841 to Miss Virginia Brooks, daughter of Col. William Brooks. Col. Brooks was a native of Prince Edward's County, Va., and of Irish descent, his father coming from the old country at an early day. Mrs. Norman was born in Hopkins County, Ky., in 1820, and is still living with the subject of this sketch in Hawesville. Joseph and Virginia Norman reared a family of eight children, seven of whom are living: Charles C., George W., Nancy V., Joseph C., L. A., Benjamin H., and Mary R. The subject of this sketch remained in his native county until his twentieth year, receiving a good education in the common schools and under the instruction of his father, who was a very brilliant scholar. In 1862 he commenced studying medicine with Dr. R. Linthicum, and the same year entered the Confederate service, enlisting in Col. Adam Johnson's regiment at Madisonville, with which he served three months. He remained with his preceptor about one year, and at the end of that time, in 1863, he entered the Medical University of Louisville, which he attended one session. The following year he prosecuted his studies in Brooklyn, N. Y., attending the Long Island Medical Hospital, from which he graduated in 1864. After graduation the Doctor located in Henderson County, and commenced the practice of his profession at Long's Landing, opposite Mt. Vernon, Ind., where he remained until 1866. In the latter year he went to New York City, and attended the Bellevue Hospital one session, after which he returned to his native county, and resumed the practice in the town of Corydon, where he remained five years, meeting with flattering success in the meantime. In 1871 he went to the State of Mississippi, and located at Friar's Point, where he practiced his profession one year, returning to Henderson County in 1872. He practiced medicine in partnership with his brother, Dr. G. W. Norman, for three years, at Smith's Mills, Ky., and in 1878 he located at Hawesville, where he has since resided. He was elected county physician of Hancock County in 1879, and held the position two years. In 1883 he was appointed a member of the State board of health, a position which he still retains. The Doctor is a close student, a most competent and trustworthy physician, and a refined and polished gentleman. He has never been married and is living with his mother, seeing after her interests.

J. H. PARKER was born November 11, 1830, in Woodford County, Ky., to Thomas and Elizabeth (Floyd) Parker. The father was born in King and Queen County, Va., in August 19, 1800. Subject's grandfather was also born in Virginia, and was of Irish and Dutch descent. His grandfather and father were both soldiers in the war of 1812, the latter being quite young. Thomas Parker came to Kentucky when eighteen years of age, went into the fort which stood where Harrodsburg now is, and remained there about two years with his father. Both then settled in Anderson County, near Lawrenceburg; the grandfather purchasing a farm of 600 acres for a rifle. In 1820 the father married Miss Floyd, of Anderson County. This lady was born in Stanford, Lincoln Co., Va., in 1803. Soon after his marriage he settled in Woodford County. Here he followed farming and also engaged in stilling until a short time before the war, and then moved to Shelby County. At the breaking out of the war he equipped a company, of which his son was captain, and also assisted the Confederate cause in other ways. He was finally compelled to leave the country and emigrated to Texas. There he died in 1881. The mother died in 1859; she was a member of the Christian Church. The father was a member of No. 41, Landmark Lodge, A. F. & A. M., of Versailles. Our subject was the second of six children, of whom four are now living: William W., James H., Mary, wife of John Satterwhite, and John. Subject was educated at St. Joseph College, at Bardstown, also attended the University at Lexington and the college at Georgetown. When eighteen he was made deputy clerk at Williamstown, Grant County, served about three years and then went to Alexandria, Campbell County, and served as deputy under county clerk Benjamin Bell. At the end of three years the office was made elective, and he was elected three consecutive terms. He then removed to New Liberty, Owen County, where he engaged in the manufacture of woolen goods, and also practiced law. At the breaking out of the war he quit the practice of law and devoted his attention to the mill for three years, as superintendent, under Col. A. P. Grover; then went to Carrollton, Carroll County, and engaged as traveling salesman for John Howe & Son, for about eleven years. In 1879 he removed to New Albany and traveled for Dunham, Buckley & Co., New York. In 1880 he came to Hancock County, and settled on the farm where he now resides. Mr. Parker was married in 1852 to Miss Caroline, daughter of Edmund Arnold. Three children blessed this union, all of whom have since died. This lady died in 1861. Mr. Parker was next married, in 1863, to Miss Abel L. Miner, a daughter of Edmund Miner, of Virginia. This union has resulted in two children: William and Lucy. This lady died in 1871. Subject's third marriage was May 11, 1874, to Miss Sallie E., daughter of Winston and Louisiana M. (Helm) Lowry. The father was born near Fredericksburg, Va., in 1797, and when sixteen years of age, with his father, came to Breckinridge County, Ky. In 1856 he settled in Hancock County on the farm now owned by Mr. Parker. Here he died in 1863. Mrs. Lowry was descended from the famous Helm family, all of the most noted in the early history of Kentucky. Her father was John Helm. The ancestors of this family came to Virginia, from England, with Lords Baltimore and Fairfax, in the early settlement of the early dominion. John Helm was born in Prince William County, Va., November 29, 1761, and was the eldest son of Thomas Helm, a soldier in the Revolution. The latter landed at the Falls of the Ohio in 1780. This was then known as Paul's settlement, and his family, together with the Roberts and Floyd families, founded the present city of Louisville. Thomas Helm resided there only about a year, and then made a settlement near where Elizabethtown now stands. Here he built a fort, which was called Helm's Fort, where he resided until his death. The farm was inherited by his eldest son, George. There Gov. Helm, a grandson of the latter, lived and died. John Helm came to Kentucky when he was nineteen years of age. He was well educated and followed the profession of a surveyor, traveling over Kentucky from the mouth of the Salt River to the mouth of Green River. While making one survey, his party was attacked by the Indians, and he was the only one who escaped. In 1791 he went out with Gen. St. Clair under Col. Oldham, serving as staff officer under the latter. A sword carried by him during this conflict is still in possession of his grand-daughter—Mrs Parker. Returning from the war, Mr. Helm engaged in surveying, being associated with John Lewis, another surveyor of that day. He received a large amount of land as his fees in this and other counties. A part of this land is now owned by Mr. Parker. His death occurred April 3, 1840, at Elizabethtown; Mrs. Parker was born March 30, 1834. She is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Subject is a member of the Masonic fraternity, being identified with the Blue Lodge at Williamstown, Royal Arch Degree at Newport, and Commandery at Covington.

Since the above was placed in type the following notice has been received: J. H. Parker died at his home, the Loury place, September 1, 1885, of typhoid flux. He was a splendid historian, both sacred and profane. An appointment was ready for him at Washington when his death was heard of at that city, JO. C. PELL, Hancock County, was born in Bracken County, Ky., June 5, 1822, to S. B. and Elizabeth (Curtis) Pell. The father was born in Virginia about 1796. According to the family legend there were four brothers of the Pell family in England, and many years prior to the Revolution; three of them came to the United States; one settled on Long Island, the second in New York City, and the third on the banks of the Potomac River in Virginia. From this last, William Pell, the grandfather of subject, was descended. He was a soldier in the Revolution, served as one of Washington's body guard, and participated in the battles of Cowpens, Brandywine, the surrender of Cornwallis, and elsewhere. In 1796 he came to Kentucky and settled in what is now Bracken County. He settled on a patent from Virginia. He died at Harrison County, Ind., at a good old age. S. B. Pell grew to manhood in Bracken County, and in 1814 was married to Miss Curtis, who was born in the State of New Jersey in 1796, and was of Welsh descent. Her father was a Quaker, and a civil engineer. During the Revolution, although his religion would not permit him to take any active part in the conflict, yet through his profession he was able to render considerable assistance in their construction work. After his marriage, S. B. Pell turned his attention to boating, but in 1839 settled in Lewisport. He afterward served as sheriff of Hancock County for fourteen years, and also represented this county in the legislature in 1855 and 1856. He died in 1864 while still holding the office of sheriff. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His wife died in 1844. Subject was the third of a family of nine children, of whom two are now living: Nancy Schoofield, of Spencer County, Ind.; and Jo. C. (our subject). The latter received his education in Trimble County. At his majority he began life for himself by boating, which he followed some ten years, and then began merchandising at Lewisport with his brother, W. C., since deceased. He is about the oldest merchant in Lewisport, and now carries a stock of about $18,000, and also has a farm of about 200 acres. Mr. Pell was married June 7, 1848, to Miss A. C., daughter of B. B. and Louisa J. (Daviess) Blincoe. Her father was from Virginia, her mother was a niece of Col. Joe. Daviess, from whom Daviess County was named. Mrs. Pell was born in Daviess County, July 18, 1832, and has borne ten children, of whom six are now living: Louisa J., wife of Dr. C. W. Brown; T. B., Ida C., J. C., Jr.; Edwin D. and Clara A. Mr. Pell and family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

DR. W. T. PRENTIS, Hancock County, was born in Petersburgh, Va., November 18, 1820, to James and Lucy W. (Baugh) Prentis. The father was born in Virginia, in about 1796. Subject's grandfather, William Prentis, was born in London, England; he was a printer by trade and edited the Virginia Gazette and Petersburgh Intelligencer, one of the first papers ever published in the colonies. He was at one time mayor of the city of Petersburgh. The father grew to manhood in Virginia, and was educated for the law, being a graduate of William and Mary's College, but never followed his profession. In 1845 he came to Kentucky and settled in Hancock County, owning at one time about 650 acres, and half of the lots in the original plat of the village of Lewisport. He was also magistrate in the county for some years, and in connection with some of his children, engaged in mercantile pursuits for a short time. He died April 15, 1874. The mother was also born in Petersburgh, Va., in 1800, and died in this county, August 28, 1865. Subject was the eldest in a family of ten children, of whom four are now living: W. T., A. B., in Petersburgh, Va.; Robert C., in Lewisport; and Margaret J. Our subject received his schooling at Petersburgh, Va.; read medicine with Dr. Walter F. Jones for one year and then attended lectures at the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia, graduating in the class of 1844. In December of that year he came to Lewisport, Ky., and entered upon the practice of his profession. He remained at that point until 1849, and then moved to Yelvington, Daviess County, remained one year and then returning to Lewisport, he remained five years. His next move was to Bloomfield, Nelson County, where he practiced two years and then again returned to Lewisport. In 1862 he removed to Grayville, White Co., Ill., and there practiced for five years. He next moved to Folsomville, Ind. In 1870 he again came back to Lewisport and remained until 1873, and then moved again to Yelvington, Ky. After practicing a short time he came back to Hancock County and practiced until 1877, when he again moved to Lewisport, where he has since remained. Dr. Prentis was married, in 1846, to Miss Maria, daughter of Joseph Stephens, of Bullitt County, Ky. This lady was born in Bullitt County, Ky., and died at Yelvington, in 1850. Subject was next married, in 1855, to Miss Sallie, daughter of George and Nancy (Connelley) Duncan. This lady died in 1857. The third marriage of Dr. Prentis was in December, 1859, to Miss Anne, daughter of Caleb and Lucy W. (Payne) Butler. Mrs. Prentis was born in Albion, Edwards Co., Ill., in March, 1836, and to her have been born six children: Earnest, at Golconda, Ill.; Halleck, Boisseau, William, Lucy and Robert B. Mr. and Mrs. Prentis are members of the Baptist Church. He has been a member of the S. of T. and G. T. fraternities and has also served as school examiner for Hancock County for a number of years.

C. E. PRICE, Hancock County, Ky., was born in Nelson County, Ky., December 3, 1825, to Francis and Elizabeth (Hansford) Price. The father was born in Germany in 1782. The grandfather, Edmund, came to this country when the father of subject was but a child and settled near Bloomfield, Nelson County. There the grandfather died. The father grew to manhood in that county, and subsequently followed the trade of a blacksmith near Bardstown Ky. He died of cholera, April 16, 1834. The mother died in Hancock County, December 6, 1850. Subject was the youngest of a family of eight children, of whom but two are living: Mary J., wife of Nathaniel Gist, of Hancock County, and C. E. The latter received his schooling in Nelson County. He remained at home until the age of nineteen years, and then commenced life for himself as a teacher in Spencer County, Ind. In 1849 he moved to Hancock County, Ky., and began teaching a school there. He continued this profession off and on for twenty-five years; teaching almost entirely in Hancock County, and both public and private schools. Soon after his arrival in Hancock County he also turned his attention to farming. He resided on a rented place first and in 1854 he purchased a farm. He continued farming until 1876, when he turned his attention to merchandising, and now carries a stock of about $2,000. Mr. Price was married March 10, 1849, to Miss Catherine M., daughter of John and Winifred (Crawford) Richey, natives of Breckinridge County, Ky. This lady was born May 23, 1827, and to her were born two children, both of whom have since died. She died July 18, 1852. December 25, 1853, Mr. Price married Miss Margaret J. Richey, a sister of his first wife. Mrs. Price was born August 19, 1833. The result of this marriage has been nine children, of whom five are living: Charles M., in Henderson County; Catherine A., wife of William Black; Ella, wife of Charles Matingly, of Henderson County; George M. and U. G. Mrs. Price is a member of the Baptist Church. Mr. Price has served as magistrate of Hancock County.

J. C. ROBB, farmer and stock raiser, residence three miles northeast of Hawesville, Hancock County, was born in Jessamine County, Ky., October 23, 1826, son of Frederick and Mary (Neet) Robb. Mr. Robb's paternal ancestors were among the early pioneers of Jessamine County, settling about five miles off Nicholasville, where the grandfather died a great many years ago. Frederick Robb was born in the State of Maryland, but was taken to Kentucky when a mere boy, and resided in Jessamine County until 1827, at which time he moved to Frankfort, where his death occurred in 1861. Subject's maternal ancestors were of German descent and among the early settlers of Maryland. Mary Neet was born in the latter State; she was married to Frederick Robb in Jessamine County, Ky., and died about 1858 or 1859. The subject of this sketch is the third of a family of eleven children, eight of whom are living. He was reared a farmer and received his education in the schools of Franklin County, where he resided until 1867. In 1861 he entered the Confederate army, enlisting in Company K, Ninth Kentucky Regiment, under command of Col. Thomas Hunt, with which he served until 1864. He participated in a number of hard fought battles, among which were Missionary Ridge, Jonesboro, Murfreesboro, Chickamauga and others. In 1864 he was transferred to the Fifth Kentucky, with which he served until the latter part of the same year, when he was mustered out of service. After leaving the army he returned to Franklin County, Ky., where he remained until 1867, at which time he moved to Hancock County, and in February, of the same year, was married to Mrs. Julia A. Barr, daughter of Robert C. and Ann Beauchamp. The following children have been born to this union: William, Martha, James, Anna B., and Katie (deceased). Mr. Robb is one of the leading farmers of Hancock County, and one of its most substantial citizens. He belongs to the I. O. O. F., and is an active member of the Presbyterian and his wife of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

W. S. ROBERTS, attorney-at-law, was born in Hawesville, July 7, 1851. His father was George H. Roberts, a native of Breckinridge County and a descendant of an old and highly respected Virginia family. George Roberts was for many years a successful coal trader, operating extensive mines in Hancock County, but later in life engaged in farming, which vocation he followed until his death, which occurred May 16, 1863. Subject's mother was Elvira Roberts, daughter of Thomas Patterson, one of the early residents of Hancock County. She was born in the State of Missouri, and died in Hancock County in 1861. W. S. is the eldest of a family of five children. He received his early education in the common schools of the county and Cloverport Academy, and later attended several terms at Cecilian College, Hardin County. After quitting school he engaged in farming, which he followed until twenty years of age, when he commenced reading law with G. W. Williams, Esq., of Owensboro, remaining in that city for one year. He then came to Hawesville and entered the office of E. E. Pate, with whom he prosecuted his legal studies until 1872, in which year he was admitted to the bar, receiving a license to practice from Judges Cofer and Stites. He at once took front rank as a practitioner, and at the present time is one of the most successful attorneys in Hawesville, having a large and lucrative practice in Hancock and adjoining counties. He was elected county attorney in 1874, which position he held two years, acquitting himself with the almost universal declaration that he made one of the best officials Hancock County ever had. He was re-elected to the same office in 1878, but refused to serve, and since that time he has been actively engaged in the practice of his profession. He belongs to the I. O. O. F., and is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, belonging to the Hawesville congregation. Mr. Roberts was married September 16, 1878, to Miss Mattie Miller, daughter of John A. and B. A. Miller, of Missouri. One child is the fruit of this union, Ruth, born December 6, 1881.

Z. H. SHELLEY, Hancock County, miller and merchant, is the first son of a family of seven children, one older and five younger. He was born April 23, 1827, in Gibson County, Tenn., on the father's of English descent and on the mother's of German parentage. His paternal grandfather was Thomas A. Shelley, an early resident of Gibson County, Tenn., and a hatter by trade. His father, Jacob Shelley, was born in Overton County, Tenn., and resided in that State until 1837, at which time he moved to Gibson County, Tenn., and afterward settled at Mills Point, Ky., now Hickman, where his death occurred many years ago. Subject's mother was Mary Cooch Shelley. She was born in Tennessee, and was the step-daughter of John Hardridge, an early settler of Madison County, that State, whose death occurred in 1838. Mrs. Shelley died in Fulton County, Ky., when subject was in his early manhood. Z. H. Shelley grew up a farmer's boy on his father's farm, attending such schools as the county afforded, and between the years of ten and nineteen received the sum total of his education. His youthful days were given to that ceaseless round of toil which attends farm life, having but few playmates or associates except his brothers and sisters. He grew up to the fullest requirement of that command, which says "man shall earn his bread by the sweat of his brow." He remained with his father until eighteen years of age, when, becoming tired of tilling the soil, he went to Hickman and learned the carpenter's trade, working in that city until attaining his majority, after which he located at Cannelton, Ind., where he followed his occupation one year. In 1852 he came to Hawesville, where he worked at his trade for eight years, at the end of which time (1860) he engaged in the manufacture of shingles and the distillery business, in both of which he was reasonably successful. After operating his factory and distillery about six years, he closed out and built the large steam flouring-mill near the river, which he owns at the present time, and which he runs in partnership with Dr. T. A. MacGregor. This is the largest mill in the county, and represents a capital of over $10,000. Mr. Shelley was married December 22, 1852, to Miss Rose Ann Davidson, formerly of Perry County, Ind. This union has been blessed with twelve children, the following of whom are living: Mary G. (wife of Dr. R. B. Oliver), Annie T. (wife of John P. Knasel), Hattie, Estelle and Hiram L. Mr. Shelley is a member of Hancock Lodge, No. 115, A. F. & A. M., and in politics votes with the Republican party.

BAIRD STERETT, Hancock County, was born in Hardinsburg, Ky., January 31, 1819, to John and Sallie (DeHaven) Sterett. The father was born in Pennsylvania, October 11, 1779, and was of Irish extraction. When quite young he moved to east Tennessee with his parents. When sixteen years of age he moved to Breckinridge County, and settled where the town of Hardinsburg now stands.

A fort had been erected there which was called Georgetown. A few years later he settled nine miles from Hardinsburg, but subsequently returned to Hardinsburg, and under the old constitution, purchased the office of sheriff from the senior magistrate, and held the office for eighteen years, buying out the office as the different magistrates came in. In 1811 he went to the legislature from Breckinridge County, and in a subsequent session was the means of having Hancock made a separate county. Between 1811 and 1825 he represented this county and Breckinridge in the legislature some six or seven terms. In 1820 he moved to Hancock County, and purchased a part of the farm now owned by subject. Here he at one time owned about 5,000 acres, but before his death, April 4, 1885, he had sold and given away all but 450 acres, which fell to his son (our subject). When Hancock was given a separate representation in 1844 he was the first man to be sent from this county to the legislature. At one time he merchandised at Hawesville for three years, but aside from that he devoted himself to agriculture almost exclusively. He was a member of the Baptist Church. The mother was born in Maryland in 1781 and died September 27, 1843. Our subject was the youngest of seven children, of whom five are now living: Rebecca P., widow of Charles V. Landser; Dr. Green B., of Hawesville; Eliza, wife of David Adams; Margaret, widow of A. J. Ashby, and Baird. The last named received his education in the public schools at Hardinsburg. He remained at home until he was twenty-nine years of age, and then settled on his present farm where he owns 450 acres. Mr. Sterett was married March 2, 1848, to Miss Elizabeth, daughter of Harden Haynes, of Ohio County. Mrs. Sterett was born in Ohio County, April 10, 1827, and to her have been born ten children, of whom seven are now living: John H., Sallie D., wife of Dr. Jesse Moorman, of Adairville, Logan County; Artelia F., wife of John C. Jarboe; William T., Frank F., Clarence G., and Baird, Jr. Mr. Sterett and family are members of the Missionary Baptist Church. He has been indentified with the Masonic fraternity, and has served as magistrate two terms.

W. W. TABER, one of the leading merchants of Hawesville, was born in Hancock County, June 6, 1838. His ancestors were natives of Virginia; his grandfather William Taber, coming from that State many years ago, and settling near Hardinsburgh, Ky., where he died in 1840. J. R. Taber, father of W. W., was a native of Breckinridge County, having been born there about the year 1800. He was a farmer by occupation and died in 1852. The maiden name of subject's mother was Eliza Nichols. She was a daughter of Shadrach Nichols, one of the early pioneers of Hancock County, and was born about 1805. Her death occurred about 1848. J. R. and Eliza Taber were the parents of seven children, only two of whom are living, viz.: W. W. and C. T. both residents of Hawesville. W. W. Taber spent the first sixteen years of his life on a farm, his father having been a successful farmer in Hancock County. Subject received a good education in the common schools and the Hawesville High School, the latter of which he attended for three years. At the age of eighteen he commenced clerking in the mercantile house of Uriah Martin & Bro., in Hawesville, with whom he remained five years, at the end of which time, in 1862, he opened a general grocery business of his own, which he continued for four years. He subsequently opened a general merchandise house which he has since carried on, and at the present time has the largest stock of goods in the city, representing a capital of over $10,000. Mr. Taber has built up his his large business unaided, as he commenced life without a dollar, as a clerk. He was married April 7, 1862, to Miss Elizabeth Prescott, daughter of William and Mary Prescott of Hancock County. Three children have been born to this union, viz.: Allie E., Clarence, and Houston (deceased.) In 1880 Mr. Taber was elected to represent Hancock County in the State legislature, holding the position one term. He is a Mason, K. of H.; and a Democrat. He and wife are members of the Hawesville Methodist Episcopal Church.

R. UNSEL, Hancock County, was born in Nelson County, Ky., near Bardstown, August 8, 1851, and is the son of William and Mary (Davis) Unsel. The father was born in Nelson County about 1820 and died in Meade County in 1866. He was a farmer by occupation, and a member of the Baptist Church. The mother was also a native of Nelson County and died there in 1856. Subject is the second of a family of six children, of whom four are now living: D. C., Raish, Napoleon and Charles. Subject received his education in Meade County. He began life for himself at thirteen years of age, and worked around for different farmers in Daviess County. For five years he was foreman in a tobacco stemmery at Owensboro. In February, 1884, he settled in Hancock County, and in connection with D. C. Wright is farming a tract of land of 150 acres. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

HOPKINS COUNTY.

JOHN T. ADAMS, county clerk, was born December 18, 1852, in Robinson County, Tenn. He is a son of T. J. and Martha (Gardner) Adams, also natives of the same county and State, and now residing in Madisonville, Ky. Our subject at the age of sixteen entered a store as clerk, where he remained two years, after which he engaged in railroading, and again returned to merchandising, continuing in this business and railroading until August, 1882, when he was elected to his present position. Mr. Adams was married in February, 1878, to Miss Mollie Robb of Webster County, Ky.; this union has been blessed with three children—two sons and one daughter. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., K. of H. and U. O. G. C. Mr. and Mrs. Adams are devoted members of the Baptist Church.

DR. E. T. ALMON was born May 18, 1850, in Hopkins County, Ky. He is a son of John L. and Mary (Sneed) Almon. The father was born in Hopkins County, and is now living in White County, Ill. The mother was born in Tennessee; she died in 1856. Our subject was reared on a farm, and received a good education in youth. At the age of twenty-one he engaged in school teaching, which he continued several years. During this time he also studied medicine, and later attended two courses of lectures at the Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn., from which he graduated in February, 1880. He then commenced practicing his profession at a point five miles east of Madisonville, and there remained one year; he then moved to Sacramento, McLean County, where he practiced about one year. His wife having died, he went to Louisville, and there attended a course of lectures at the University. In March, 1882, he came to Morton's Gap, where he has since been actively engaged in the practice of his profession, and where he is meeting with marked success.

BENJAMIN F. ARMSTRONG was born in Hopkins County, Ky., February 9, 1846; he is a son of Benjamin and Zelotus E. (Sugg) Armstrong, the former a native of South Carolina and the latter of Kentucky. They were of Irish and German descent respectively. At the age of seven years, Benjamin Armstrong removed with his parents from South Carolina to east Tennessee. At the age of eighteen, in 1814, he removed with his parents to Union County, Ky. In this county he married his first wife. After attaining his majority he bought a farm in Union County, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits for several years. He then removed to Henderson County, Ky., where he bought a farm and resided for about thirteen years. In that county he lost his first wife, and married his second wife, the mother of our subject. From Henderson he removed to Hopkins County, and bought a farm two and a half miles south of Providence, upon which he resided until his death. He taught school several terms during his life, and was for many years a captain in the State militia. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, having gone into the service at an early age, and participated in the battle of New Orleans; his death occurred January 8, 1873 (the anniversary of that battle) in his seventy-seventh year. He and wife were from early life devoted members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, in which church he was for many years a ruling elder; during the latter years of his life, especially, he took a great interest in church matters. Benjamin F. Armstrong was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority, after which he taught school two terms. He then bought a farm in the neighborhood of Dalton, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits for several years. In the spring of 1870 he sold out and bought the farm of 150 acres, two and a half miles south of Providence, upon which he now resides. Mrs. Zelotus E. Armstrong made her home with our subject after her husband's death, until her own death, September 20, 1877. Mr. Armstrong was married January 17, 1867, to Miss Virginia A. Dubyns, a native of Hopkins County Ky. Five children—two sons and three daughters—gladden their home. Mr. Armstrong and wife have from childhood been devoted members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, in which church he has been ruling elder for the past three years. He is a Democrat.

MRS. ELIZABETH J. ARNOLD was born in Williamson County, Tenn., December 24, 1815, and is a daughter of Thomas and Nancy (Wade) Carlton, natives of North Carolina and of English descent. Thomas Carlton was educated and married in his native State, where he was for several years engaged in farming. Afterward he removed to Williamson County, Tenn., where he remained until about 1820. He then removed to Bedford County same State, where he resided until his death, in 1862. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, and served in several campaigns against the Indians during that struggle. He and wife were devoted members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. At the age of sixteen, July 5, 1831, our subject was married to Noah Putman, who was born in North Carolina, November 25, 1809. He was a son of Jabel and Nancy Putman, natives of North Carolina, and of English descent. In about 1815, Jabel Putman removed with his family to Tennessee, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death. He and wife were members of the Baptist Church. Noah Putman received an ordinary education in youth, mainly in Tennessee, where he was married, and where he was engaged principally in agricultural pursuits for several years. He also followed the carpenter's trade to some extent in connection with farming. In 1851 he removed to Christian County, Ky., and in the following year removed to Missouri. During the same year, 1852, he returned to Christian County, Ky., and in the fall of 1853 came to Hopkins County, where he resided until his death, June 28, 1855. To Mr. and Mrs. Putman were born ten children, seven of whom—two sons and five daughters—are living. In 1873 Mrs. Putman sold her farm in Hopkins County, and in August of the following year removed to Christian County, where she bought another farm. Our subject was next married in October, 1874, to James E. Arnold, a native of the "Old Dominion." He was engaged in farming in Christian County, Ky., until his death in October, 1875; he was a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. In 1877 Mrs. Arnold sold her farm in Christian County, and in the fall of the following year returned to Hopkins County, where she bought a farm near White Plains, where she still resides. She is and has been for many years a devoted and consistent member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

WILEY ASHLEY was born in Granville County, N. C., May 29, 1824, and is a son of David and Polly (Ashley) Ashley. His father, who was also a native of North Carolina, was engaged in agricultural pursuits, and also followed the trade of chimney builder. After his father's death, the family came to Kentucky, and settled in Hopkins County in 1859, where our subject has since been engaged in farming. In 1872, he moved to his present farm, which consists of 198 acres, and is considered one of the best north of Madisonville for a distance of twenty miles. This valuable farm Mr. Ashley has acquired through constant attention to business and good management. He was married, in the fall of 1858, to Naomi Bowles; this union has been blessed with two sons and six daughters. They are members of the Baptist Church. Mr. Ashley has been a member of the Masonic fraternity since he was twenty-one years of age.

DR. P. J. BAILEY was born March 2, 1817, in Robertson County, Tenn. He is a son of John and Nancy (Rice) Bailey. The father was born in Pittsylvania County, Va., and when about five years of age, was brought to Kentucky by his parents, but on account of Indian troubles, they soon returned to Virginia. When about the age of seventeen, he returned and located at Russellville, where he followed the carpenter trade; he died in Robertson County, Tenn., in 1841, aged sixty-one. The mother was born in 1790, in North Carolina; she died in 1848. Dr. Bailey received a good literary education in youth, and in 1840, commenced the study of medicine, under the preceptorship of Dr. J. R. Bailey, of Logan County. In the fall of 1842, he attended the Medical Institute, at Louisville, and graduated at the Transylvania Medical College, Lexington, Ky., in 1844; he then went to Bawen Plains, Tenn., where he practiced about five years, after which he moved to Christian County, Ky., where he practiced about fourteen years. At the close of the war he returned to Logan County, and there practiced about six years; he then removed to Madisonville, practiced about eleven years, and part of this time he was also engaged in agricultural pursuits. In 1882, he came to Dawson, where he has since been engaged in the practice of his profession. Dr. Bailey was married, in 1848, to Miss T. C. Earle, of Hopkins County; this union has been blessed with five children, one son and one daughter now living.

WILLIAM N. BAILEY, M. D., was born in Hopkins County, Ky., May 24, 1858, and is the second of four children born to James B. and Hester V. (Stanly) Bailey, natives of Hopkins County, and of English descent. James B. Bailey was educated and married in his native county, where he was also engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death, in February, 1864, in his thirty-second year. Dr. William N. Bailey received a good classical education at Hartford College, of Hartford, Ky. In the fall of 1881, he commenced the study of medicine, under Dr. T. Reddick, of White Plains, Hopkins County, and graduated with high honors from the medical department of the University of Tennessee, at Nashville, with the class of 1883–84. He received the Paul F. Eve faculty medal, given for excellence in all branches, and the highest and most honorable medal in the gift of the institution; he also carried off the gold medal given for greatest excellence in physiology. He returned to White Plains, where he formed a partnership with his old preceptor. Here he is practicing with success. In politics he is a Democrat, and is one of the rapidly rising and prominent young physicians and surgeons in the county.

WILLIAM H. BAILEY was born in Hopkins County, Ky., October 12, 1861, and is the only son of Valentine and Dosia F. (Bailey) Bailey, natives of Hopkins County, and of English descent. When only two or three years old, in 1830, Valentine Bailey was brought by his parents from North Carolina to Hopkins County, Ky., which was then but a sparsely settled region. Here his father, James D. Bailey, bought wild land near the site of the present village of White Plains, erected a cabin and improved a farm, upon which he resided until his death. Valentine was employed on his father's farm until after his marriage. Before that time, however, he taught several schools. After his marriage he was engaged in agricultural pursuits for some ten years. He took up the carpenter's trade, and still later the blacksmith's trade, both of which he followed in connection with farming until within the last two years, when he removed to White Plains, where he has since been employed at blacksmithing. He has been three times married; first to the mother of our subject; second to Miss Nancy A. Stanly, and last to Miss Willie H. Perrigeon. He has had left him three children, one by his first marriage and two by the second. Our subject, William H. Bailey, received an excellent common school and academic education, and was employed on his father's farm until he was sixteen years old; he then taught and attended school several years. In 1883 he bought a farm near the old homestead, and is a successful farmer. He was married September 28, 1880, to Miss Sarah F. Lyon, a native of Hopkins County. One son has blessed their union—William V. Mr. Bailey is an earnest advocate of the temperance cause, and in politics is a Democrat.

J. L. BAKER was born in Hopkins County, July 10, 1840. He is a son of W. R. and Nancy (Whitfield) Baker, both born in this county. The father was engaged in farming and handling tobacco, and made the first shipment of that staple from this county; he held the office of constable and was sheriff several terms; he died in 1864, aged fifty. The mother still resides on her farm, about six miles west of Madisonville. Our subject enlisted in 1861 in the First Kentucky Cavalry, Confederate States army, and served about two years; he then returned and engaged in merchandising at Sulphur Springs, also handled tobacco; this union he continued about six years, after which he sold out and moved to Earlington, and there built a business house, which also contained the city hall; this building was afterward destroyed by fire; he then spent four years in Madisonville. In 1882 he came to Dawson, where he has since been engaged in the liquor business. He was married in 1864 to Fannie Head; she was born in Webster County. This union was blessed with five children—two sons and three daughters. Mr. Baker is a member of the A. O. of U. W. and I. O. O. F.

JOHN D. BARNHILL was born in North Carolina, July 12, 1829, and is a son of James B. and Emma (Wynns) Barnhill, natives of North Carolina, and of English extraction. James B. Barnhill was married in his native State, where he farmed until 1836, when he removed with his wife and family to Henry County, Tenn., where he remained one year. He then came to what is now Webster County, then a part of Hopkins County, bought wild land near Providence, and improved a farm upon which he resided until his death in October, 1880, in his seventy-fifth year; he and wife were for many years members of the United Baptist Church. John D. was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority, when his father gave him a partially improved farm, which he afterward sold. He then bought another farm adjoining, but in Nebo District, Hopkins County, upon which he still resides. He was married in 1853 to Miss Nancy F. James, a native of Tennessee; eight children—five sons and three daughters—all living, have blessed this union. Mr. Barnhill is a member of the United Baptist Church, and his wife of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He is an earnest advocate of the temperance cause. In politics he is a Democrat.

JOHN H. BARNHILL was born in Hopkins County, Ky., January 25, 1858, and is a son of John D. and Nancy F. (James) Barnhill, a sketch of whom will be found on p. 761. John H. was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority; his father then gave him a farm of sixty acres adjoining the old homestead, upon which he now resides, and to which he has since added, till he now owns a well improved farm of 100 acres, on which he follows farming and stock raising. He was married December 29, 1880, to Miss Ella C. Montgomery, a native of Webster County, Ky., and a daughter of Thomas G. Montgomery. They have one son and one daughter: Thomas K. and Mattie E. Mr. and Mrs. Barnhill are members of the United Baptist Church. He is a Democat.

J. T. BARNETT, Hopkins County, of the firm of Barnett & Barnett, Manitou, was born Novembor 10, 1857, in Christian County, Ky., seven miles from Hopkinsville. He is a son of Harvy and Mary (Walker) Barnett, both born in the same county and State. J. T. was reared on his father's farm, and received a good common school education in his youth. In 1880 he engaged in merchandising at Kelly, Ky., where he remained two years, after which he removed to Manitou, where he has since been engaged in general merchandising; he is also postmaster at that place. Mr. Barnett was married, in 1881, to Mary, daughter of Judge Green Wooldridge, of Christian County; they have two sons. David Alexander was born October 28, 1883; Johnnie Lee, January 25, 1885.

AMOS BASSETT was born September 15, 1815, in Bracken County, Ky. He is a son of John and Jane (Rogison) Bassett. The father was born three miles from Pittsburgh, and when a boy moved to Mason County, Ky., and later to Bracken County. There he lived many years engaged in agricultural pursuits, and was sheriff of that county twenty-eight years. He died in Webster County in February, 1865, aged seventy-two. His wife died in June, 1842. Our subject was reared on his father's farm, and served as deputy sheriff from 1834 to 1841, at which time he came to Hopkins County, and first bought eighty-five acres of land, and engaged in farming. He has bought and sold several tracts of land since, and now owns 112 acres, which join Madisonville on the east. Mr. Bassett was married, in 1842, to Lucy W. Nisbet, of Hopkins County. This union has been blessed with eleven children, ten of whom are living—six sons and four daughters. Mrs. Bassett is a member of the Christian Church. Their farm is one of the oldest in the county, and once owned by Mr. McGarey, in whose house the first county election was held.

ELIJA BASSETT, of the firm of Bassett Bros., livery, was born December 14, 1852, in Hopkins County, Ky. He is a son of Amos and Lucy W. (Nisbet) Bassett. He was reared on his father's farm and received a good common school education. At the age of twenty-one he secured employment in W. A. Nisbet's livery stable, and since that time has been engaged in this line of business. In 1882, he, with his brothers George and William, opened a stable opposite the Belmont House. Their stock consists of fifteen to twenty horses, and a like number of vehicles. Mr. Bassett was married, March 27, 1884, to Mrs. Rover, of Hopkins County.

JOHN W. BEAN was born in Todd County, Ky., February 9, 1850, and is the second in a family of seven children born to Brainard M. and Nancy A. (Oatts) Bean, natives of Todd County, Ky., and of Irish descent respectively. Brainard M. Bean was educated and married in his native county. In early life he learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed in connection with farming in Todd County for many years. His father, John W. Bean, Sr., was a native of North Carolina; immigrated to Todd County about 1808, and was among the earliest settlers. The father of Mrs. Nancy A. Bean settled in the same county in 1794. In 1869 Brainard M. Bean came to Hopkins County, Ky., and bought a farm three miles west of Madisonville, where he engaged in farming and teaching until his death, November 9, 1876, in his fifty-fourth year. In the early part of his life he had taught school for several years. During the war with Mexico he enlisted in one of the Illinois regiments, but saw no active service; his wife was a member of the Missionary Baptist Church. Mr. Bean, during the latter years of his life, was an earnest advocate of the temperance cause. John W. Bean's uncle, William R. Bean, was postmaster at Elkton, Ky., for twenty-seven years in succession, under all administrations, and served longer than any other man, except one, in the United States. John W. Bean, Jr., remained on his father's farm until attaining his majority. He then farmed on shares for a time, after which he bought a farm one and a half miles west of Madisonville, where he has since successfully followed farming. In August, 1884, he was elected constable for Kitchen Precinct. He was married, November 5, 1871, to Miss Viola J. Murrah, a native of Logan County, Ky.; to them were born three sons, all of whom are living. Mrs. Viola Bean died January 12, 1880; she was a member of the Missionary Baptist Church. Mr. Bean's second marriage was December 19, 1880, to Mrs. Lucy J. (Grubbs) Emberton, a native of Logan County, Ky. Mr. and Mrs. Bean are members of the Missionary Baptist Church. He is a Democrat.

WILLIAM H. BEAUMONT was born in Upper Canada, near Montreal, June 8, 1823, and is the second of six children born to Matthias and Hannah (Clay) Beaumont, natives of Uddersfield, England, and of French and English descent, respectively. Matthias Beaumont was married in England, and soon after, about 1820, removed to Upper Canada, where he took charge of a branch tobacco house for his father, Matthew Beaumont. In 1825 he removed to Lynchburgh, Va., where he bought and shipped tobacco exclusively for his father's manufactory in England about four years. He then returned to England, and in 1830 again came to the United States, and settled at Clarksville, Tenn., where he was extensively engaged in the tobacco trade until his death in 1858, in his sixty-seventh year. He and wife were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. William H. was employed with his father and uncle in the tobacco business until his father's death, when he took charge of a branch house for his uncle at Dyersburgh, west Tennessee, where he shipped the first hogshead of strips ever sent from that country. He remained in business at that place until the breaking out of the civil war, when he enlisted in the Forty-seventh Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, and served most of the time on detached service for six months, when he was discharged on account of disability. After the war he returned to Clarksville, Tenn. His uncle having died during the war, William H., in company with his cousin, Sterling F. Beaumont, continued the tobacco business at that place until 1872, when they started a branch establishment at Nebo, Hopkins Co., Ky., to which place William H. removed and has since conducted the business there under the firm name of W. H. Beaumont & Co. They have one of the largest stemmeries in the county and handle large quantities of tobacco, mainly for the English market. At the close of the season of 1884 they had shipped 420 hogsheads of strips to European markets. The Nebo District ranks third in the tobacco stemming districts of the United States. Mr. Beaumont was married in 1869 to Miss P. W. Hibbett, a native of Wilson County, Tenn. Five children have blessed their union, four of whom—one son and three daughters—are now living. Mr. Beaumont is a Democrat.

FRANKLIN H. BELL was born in Hopkins County, Ky., February 2, 1850, and is a son of Stephen H. and Minerva D. (Harvey) Bell, natives of Virginina and Kentucky, respectively. Stephen H. Bell, when a young men, came to Hopkins County, where he was afterward married. He learned the carpenter's trade, which he still follows in connection with farming. He is a ruling elder in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, in which his wife is also a member. Franklin H. Bell received a good common school and academic education in youth. After attaining his majority he taught for about eighteen months. He was then engaged in the tobacco business for about two years, after which he was employed as a salesman in a dry goods store at Dalton for some two years. In 1877 he embarked in general merchandising at the same place in company with H. W. Sisk, under the firm name of Sisk & Bell. In 1881 Mr. Sisk sold his interest to S. A. Frazer, the business being now conducted under the firm name of Bell & Frazer. They carry a well selected stock, amounting to some $5,000, their average annual sales being about $13,000. For the past four years Mr. Bell has also been quite extensively engaged in the tobacco business, owning in company with F. M. Kirkwood, a large stemmery at Dalton. He has been postmaster at that place ever since the office has been established. He was married May 21, 1878, to Miss Edmonia W. Givens, a native of Hopkins County. One bright daughter—Emma—has blessed their union. Mrs. Edmonia W. Bell departed this life July 13, 1881. She was a devoted member of the United Baptist Church. Mr. Bell is a consistent member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and also of the Masonic fraternity; in politics he is a Democrat.

REV. DAVID BERRY, Hopkins County, was born in Bourbon County, Ky., January 24, 1808, and is a son of John Berry, who was of English descent, and was born in Rockingham County, Va., June 24, 1766. John Berry was reared to farming, received his education in his native State, and in 1800 came to Bourbon County, Ky., where two years later he was married to the mother of our subject. In 1819 he removed to Muhlenburgh County, Ky.; in 1830 to Macoupin County, Ill., where he resided until his death, July 20, 1845. He professed faith in Christ and joined the Old School Presbyterian Church in early life; later he joined the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, remaining a devoted and consistent member of that organization until his death. David Berry was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority. In 1830 he removed to Greenville, Muhlenburgh Co., Ky., and in October, 1831, came to the south part of Hopkins County, where he bought a farm and engaged in agricultural pursuits until a few years ago, when he sold the place to his youngest son, Gilbert C., with whom he now resides, retired from active business. He married Miss Lenoro A. Earle. Seven children—four sons and three daughters—have been left to him; the family are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Mr. Berry professed religion and joined the church when only sixteen years old, or more than sixty years ago. He has been a licensed preacher for over forty years, and a regularly ordained elder in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church for the past four years, being a member of Anderson Presbytery of that sect. Mr. Berry has been a resident of Hopkins County for fifty-three years. He is liberal in his political views, but generally votes with the Republican party. Gilbert C., the youngest son of David and Lenoro A. (Earle) Berry, was born in Hopkins County, Ky., January 29, 1837. He has resided on the old homestead which he now owns, all his life. In July, 1863, he enlisted in Company A, Thirty-fifth Kentucky Mounted Infantry (Federal service) and served with it until December, 1864, when the regiment was mustered out. He was married January 22, 1863, to Miss Virginia A. Putman, a native of Tennessee. Three children have blessed their union: John D., Eller F. and Jesse G., all of whom are living. Mr. Berry and wife are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church; he is also an earnest advocate of the temperance cause; in politics he was first a Republican, and still remains a Republican.

MARCELLUS W. BISHOP was born in Madisonville, Hopkins Co., Ky., January 25, 1845, and is the second of four living children born to Orlean and Sarah J. (Woodson) Bishop; the former a native of Hopkins County, and the latter of Harrodsburgh, Ky., and of Irish and French descent, respectively. Orlean Bishop remained on his father's farm until he was eighteen years old, when he was appointed deputy county clerk of Hopkins County, which position he held until 1850; during a part of this time he was deputy circuit clerk. In 1850 he was elected county clerk, and held that office until his death, August 2, 1862, in his fifty-second year. In early life he was engaged in merchandising, and at the time of his death owned a well improved farm near Madisonville. He and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South; he was also a member of the I. O. O. F. Marcellus W., received a good education and was employed on a farm until he was seventeen years old. He then opened a drug store at Madisonville, and continued that business for some three or four years, after which he was employed as a salesman in a dry goods store at the same place for about two years. In 1872 he engaged in the coal business, being secretary of the Diamond Coal Company for six or seven years. In 1878 he opened a dry goods store at Madisonville, Ky., where he has since been doing an extensive business. He carries a large and well selected stock, averaging about $15,000; his annual sales run from $30,000 to $40,000. He also owns a farm near the city, and is engaged in fruit growing and breeding fine stock—horses, cattle and hogs. He was married in 1873 to Miss Annie Ruby, a native of Hopkins County, Ky., who died in June, 1874. She was a devoted member of the Christian Church. In politics Mr. Bishop is an independent Democrat.

AZARIAH B. BONE, Hopkins County, was born in Todd County, Ky., January 26, 1816, and is a son of Azariah and Nancy (Anderson) Bone, natives of Logan County, Ky., and of English and Irish descent respectively. Azariah Bone, subject's father, was married in his native county, and soon after moved to Todd County, Ky., where he followed farming until 1826. He then moved to Cooper County, Mo., where he bought a farm and resided for many years. In 1844 or 1845 he moved to Texas and purchased land where the city of Sherman now stands, where he resided until his death. He was from early life a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and was an ordained minister in that church for some years. He then joined the Protestant Methodists, and remained a member and minister during life. He was a prominent member of the Masonic fraternity. Azariah B. Bone was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority. He then farmed on shares in Missouri for about five years, after which he removed to Christian County, Ky., where he farmed about seven years. In 1852 he came to Hopkins County, Ky., and bought a farm of some 200 acres near Nebo, to which he added from time to time until he was owner of well improved farms amounting to over 1,000 acres, a part of which he has since deeded to his children. Here he has been for over thirty years extensively engaged in farming and stock raising. During the war he received a commission as captain of the home guards. He was married October 11, 1840, in Tennessee, near Keysburgh, Ky., to Miss Mary A. Johnson, a native of Christian County, Ky. Four children have blessed this union, three of whom—one son and two daughters—are living. Mr. Bone is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He is a Democrat.

JOHN W. BONE was born in Hopkins County, Ky., July 25, 1829, and is a son of Thomas and Louisa M. (Wilkins) Bone, the former a native of Madison County, the latter of Todd County, Ky., and both of Scotch-Irish descent. In 1812, when about ten years old, Thomas Bone moved with his parents to Muhlenburgh County, Ky. There his father, John Bone, a veteran of the Revolution, having served throughout the entire war, took up a military claim and improved a farm. There Thomas was married, and soon afterward in 1826 came to what is now Hopkins County, Ky., and bought wild land near the present site of Nebo, where he improved a farm, upon which he resided for some twenty-six years. He then sold out and bought another farm in the same vicinity, where he resided until his death in April, 1870, in his sixty-eighth year. He and wife were from childhood members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. He was an earnest advocate of temperance and a member of the old Washingtonian Society. John W., after attaining his majority, engaged as a salesman in a dry goods store at Madisonville for three years. In 1852 he went to California, crossing the plains with an ox-team. In California he followed farming on the Sacramento River for three years; he then returned to Hopkins County, and was engaged in farming for two years, after which he followed merchandising at Nebo for two years. He then learned the carpenter's trade, which he has since followed in connection with farming. He was for sixteen consecutive years one of the magistrates of Hopkins County. In August, 1855, he married Miss Marion J. Bowers, a native of Christian County, Ky. Nine children have blessed this union, five of whom—four sons and one daughter—are living. Mr. and Mrs. Bone are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, in which church he has been a ruling elder for more than twenty-five years. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, has advanced to the Royal Arch degree, and has served as W. M. of his lodge for several years; he is now and has been for the past seven years secretary of his lodge, in which he is one of the oldest Masons. He is also a member of the I. O. G. T., and in politics a Democrat.

JOHN S. BONE, Hopkins County, was born in Christian County, Ky., June 19, 1842, and is the second of four children born to John M. and Elizabeth (Johnson) Bone, the former a native of Muhlenburgh County, the latter of Christian County, and both of English descent. John M. Bone, when a young man, removed to Christian County, Ky., where he was married, and where he bought a farm and resided for four or five years. In 1845 he came to Hopkins County, Ky., and bought a farm near Nebo, where he followed farming until his death, August 9, 1884, in his seventy-second year. He was for several years one of the magistrates of Hopkins County. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity. John S., our subject, was employed on his father's farm until he was nineteen years old, when his father deeded him a farm adjoining the old homestead, where he has since been extensively engaged in farming and stock raising. He was married October 22, 1860, to Miss Sarah E. Bone, a native of Missouri. Ten children have blessed this union, seven of whom—two sons and five daughters—are living. Mr. Bone is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and his wife of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He is a Democrat.

PROF. H. BORING, Hopkins County, was born March 10, 1825, in Brooke County, W. Va. He is a son of Eli and Cecilia (Loudenslager) Boring, both natives of what is now Carroll County, Md. The father died in 1851, aged fifty-eight, the mother died in 1878, aged seventy-eight. Prof. Boring was reared in his native county, and in 1846 accidentally lost both arms while assisting with a wheat thresher; after recovering from these wounds he attended Bethany College, West Virginia, presided over by Alexander Campbell, from which he graduated in 1853, sharing first honors with W. B. Smith of Madison County, Ky. In the fall of 1853 he came to Hopkins County and established a female boarding school in Madisonville; he sold out this school in 1860, and during the war taught in Christian and Trigg Counties. In 1867 he entered Eminence College as professor of Mathematics, which position he held until 1873, after which he returned to Madisonville, where he taught a select school ten years; he is now occupying the chair of Mathematics in Eminence College, Kentucky, his residence being in Madisonville. For the past thirty-one years the professor has been engaged in teaching, and is the oldest teacher in Hopkins County, and perhaps one of the oldest in the State, as well as one of the most proficient. He was married in 1854 to Mattie Collins, daughter of Elder O. Collins, of Madisonville. He uses artificial arms of his own invention, by means of which he assists himself, and manipulates in the school rooms successfully.

DAVID BOURLAND was born March 11, 1819, in Hopkins County, three miles south of Madisonville, and was reared on his grandfather's farm, six miles east of that place. There he lived until the age of twenty-four, when he moved to Marion, Ky., and there carried on the saddle and harness business twenty-two years; he then came to Madisonville and continued this business a few years; he then opened a hardware store and has since been engaged in this business. He owns a farm one mile east of Madisonville, consisting of 160 acres, and there he resides; this farm is improved with a desirable frame residence, which cost about $5,000. Mr. Bourland was married in 1838 to Susan Browning, of Hopkins County. She died in 1839, leaving one daughter, now the wife of James Fowler, of Union County. Mr. Bourland's second marriage, in 1841, was to Elizabeth Vickers, since deceased. To her were born thirteen children, of whom four sons and five daughters are living. His third marriage was to Jula Sharp, of Franklin County, Ohio; this union has been blessed with five children, three sons and one daughter, now living. Mrs. Bourland is a member of the Presbyterian Church, having connected herself with that denomination in Columbus, Ohio. Mr. Bourland has always been a strong Union man, and has always voted the Republican ticket, and is a strong advocate of temperance; and also a strong atheist—has been for many years and expects to die in the same belief.

DUDLEY M. BROOKS was born in Webster County, Ky., July 19, 1847, and is a son of John W. and Jane (Walker) Brooks, natives of Webster and Henderson Counties, Ky., respectively. After attaining his majority, John W. Brooks bought a farm near Slaughterville, within a mile of the place where he was born, upon which he still resides, engaged in farming. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South and of the Masonic fraternity. Mrs. Jane Brooks died November 22, 1882. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Dudley M. was employed on his father's farm until he was twenty-three years of age, when he bought a partially improved farm near Providence, but in Hopkins County, upon which he still resides. He was married December 22, 1869, to Miss Jennie C. Brooks, a native of Webster County, Ky. They have one son and three daughters. Mrs. Brooks is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Mr. Brooks belongs to no church but favors the doctrines of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In politics he is a Democrat.

DR. BENJAMIN G. BROWN was born in Hopkins County, Ky., April 20, 1851, and is a son of William and Parthenia (Armstrong) Brown, natives of Hopkins and Henderson Counties, Ky., respectively. William brown was educated and married in his native county, where he is still engaged in agricultural pursuits, and also in the coal business, owning and operating a coal bank near Dalton. He belongs to no church, but is a member of the Masonic fraternity. Dr. Benjamin G. Brown received a good common school and academic education in youth and also attended Neophogen College, of Gallatin, Tenn., for one year. He then taught for two years at Fountain Head, Tenn., after which he commenced the study of medicine, at the same place, under the preceptorship of Dr. E. M. Durham. He graduated with high honors from the medical department of the University of Tennessee, at Nashville, with the class of 1881–82, since which time he has practiced his profession with excellent success at Dalton. He is a member of the Hopkins County Medical Association, and is universally conceded to be one of the rising and most successful young physicians and surgeons of the county.

SIDNEY F. BROWN was born in Hopkins County, Ky., July 30, 1853, and is the youngest of eleven children born to William P. and Mary E. (Bourland) Brown, the former a native of the "Old Dominion," the latter of Kentucky and of Irish and English descent, respectively. William P. Brown, at the age of twelve years, in 1816, came with his parents to what was then Hopkins, now Webster County, then an almost unbroken wilderness. Here his father, Willian Brown, bought a large tract of military land in what is now the south part of Webster County, erected a log-cabin and subsequently improved a farm. William P. Brown was married soon after attaining his majority. He then bought wild land some three miles east of Madisonville, where he afterward improved a farm and engaged in farming until his death in February, 1883, in his seventy-ninth year. He and his wife are members of the Missionary Baptist Church. Sidney F., after his mother's death, which occurred when he was only twelve years old, lived with his brother, Robert H., until he attained his majority. During this time he attended and taught school during the winter seasons. He then bought a part of the old homestead, where he followed farming and the stock business until 1882; he then came to Madisonville, where he opened the only agricultural implement store that has ever been in the town, and is doing a thriving trade. He handles all kinds of implements from threshing machines down, and carries a stock of about $4,000 or $5,000. His average annual sales amount to about $15,000. He was married October 12, 1874, to Miss Aggie B. Fugate, a native of Hopkins County, Ky. Five children have blessed their union, four of whom—two sons and two daughters—are living. Mr. and Mrs. Brown are members of the Christian Church. He is a member of the K. of H. In politics he is a Democrat.

W. F. CAMPBELL was born September 21, 1856, in Hopkins County, Ky. He is a son of M. A. and E. J. (Seely) Campbell. The father was born in Tennessee, the mother in Missouri. About 1848 they came to Hopkins County, where they have since resided. Our subject, at the age of twenty, entered the store of W. H. Sisk as clerk, where he remained about five months, after which he attended the Dixon Normal School about three months; he then taught school about fifteen months and again attended the high school at Cadiz, taught by Prof. W. L. Woodson; he then taught school in Caldwell County about five months; he then returned home and worked on his father's farm one year, and also farmed one year in Union County. In 1882 he came to Dawson, was engaged in the liquor business one year, and was one year in Beulah, Mo. In 1884 he returned to Dawson, where he has since had charge of the business of Williams & Powell, dealers in general merchandise. He was married September 21, 1882, to Hattie Morton, of Madisonville. One bright daughter gladdens their home.

WILLIAM W. CARDWELL was born in Hopkins County May 31, 1822, and is the second of five children born to Thomas and Catherine (McGary) Cardwell, natives of Mercer County, Ky., and of English and German descent, respectively. Thomas Cardwell, about 1812, came to what is now Hopkins County, Ky., then almost an unbroken wilderness. Here at Madisonville, then a very small village, he engaged in merchandising for seven years, when he was married; after which he bought a partially improved farm of 200 acres eight miles north of Madisonville, moved into a log-cabin and subsequently improved a farm, on which he resided about twelve years. He then sold out and bought another farm of seventy-five acres adjoining Madisonville on the east, to which he afterward added 200 acres. He also owned property in the town. His death occurred March 11, 1867, in his eighty-seventh year. He served under Gen. Jackson during the Florida war. William W. Cardwell was employed on his father's farm until he was thirty years old, when his father deeded him a part of the old home farm adjoining Madisonville. Here he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1881, when he retired from active business and is now residing in the town of Madisonville. On the lot where he now resides was erected the first house (a rude log-cabin) ever built in Madisonville. Mr. Cardwell was married November 25, 1851, to Miss Nancy J. Woodruff, a native of Hopkins County, Ky., and a daughter of David and Elizabeth Woodruff, who were among the earliest pioneers of the county. To Mr. and Mrs. Cardwell have been born three children—two sons and one daughter—who all died within five years after having attained their majority. Mrs. Nancy J. Cardwell departed this life May 9, 1881, in her fiftieth year. She was a devoted member of the Christian Church. Mr. Cardwell is also, and has been for over forty years, a member of the same church. In politics he is a Democrat.

WILLIAM E. CARDWELL was born November 11, 1825, in Mercer County, Ky. He is a son of James and Nancy (Egbert) Cardwell, natives of the "Old Dominion." They came to Kentucky at an early day, and settled in Hopkins County in 1827. Our subject was reared on his father's farm, and received a good common school education. At the age of twenty-two he commenced farming on rented land, where he remained three years. He then bought 160 acres of land and continued farming. He added other lands by purchase as his means would allow, and now owns about 3,500 acres, he being one of the largest land owners in the county. This large amount of property Mr. Cardwell acquired by constant attention to business and judicious management. This farm is located eight miles east of Madisonville, and he employs twenty hands. He raises more hogs than any other in the county; disposes of them to home buyers, and also ships in car lots to Louisville. Mr. Cardwell was married, in 1859, to Amanda Cardwell, of Hopkins County. One daughter has blessed their union—Katsie, now wife of Peter Laffoon, who resides here and assists Mr. Cardwell on his farm. Mr. and Mrs. Laffoon were married October 22, 1882. He was born in this county May 4, 1861.

PROF. J. S. CHEEK, president of the Madisonville Normal School and Business College, Madisonville, Hopkins Co., Ky., is a native of Havanna, Ill. He is a son of John L. and Mary S. (Donley) Cheek. The father was born in Kentucky, and died in 1868, aged forty-seven. The mother was born in Kentucky, and now lives in Cumberland County. Our subject at the age of sixteen entered the Burksville Normal School, where he remained about two years; he then taught a district school, and attended the Holly Grove Academy a short time, after which he accepted a position as clerk in a store, where he remained nine months. He then went to Lebanon, Ohio, and attended the National Normal University, from which he graduated in 1883. In August of that year he came to Madisonville, and, with Prof. McCulley, became owner of the Madisonville Normal School and Business College. He now owns one-fourth interest in this college, the value of which, with grounds, is about $10,000. Prof. Cheek has charge of the branches of letter writing, natural sciences and rhetoric. This institution employed thirteen teachers.

T. W. CLARK, Hopkins County, of the firm of Price & Clark, druggists, was born February 22, 1848, in Hopkins County, Ky. He is a son of L. W. and Eliza J. (Kirkwood) Clark, both born in this county, and residing on their farm in Dalton District. Our subject at the age of twenty-one settled on sixty acres of land which he improved and two years later sold, and bought a farm of 170 acres on Trade Water; there he lived five years and still owns the land. In March, 1882, he came to Dawson, and, in company with Mr. Price, engaged in their present business. Mr. Clark holds the office of magistrate, having been elected in 1882. He was married, in 1869, to Hattie Wilson, of Hopkins County. One bright son gladdens their home—Dennie M.

MERIWETHER CLEMENTS was born June 29, 1804, in Wilkes County, Ga. When three years old he was taken by his parents to Virginia, but at the age of fourteen returned to Georgia, where he remained about thirty years. About 1854 he came to Hopkins County, Ky., and settled on 1,000 acres of land, this being part of a survey of 3,000 acres, which were deeded to his uncle, Dr. Mace Clements, by the government, for seven years' services in the Revolutionary war. He exchanged 1,000 acres of this land for land in Georgia, with his brother, who afterward died; the mother then deeded this land to our subject; about 400 acres of this, the latter has since given to his children. Mr. Clements was married in 1828 to Elizabeth Kidd, of Georgia; she died in 1864, aged sixty, leaving three sons and one daughter. Mace now lives with the father, and has general charge of the farm.

JOHN M. COLEMAN was born in Logan County, Ky., January 22, 1815, and is a son of Archibald and Elizabeth D. (Moreman) Coleman, the former a native of North Carolina, and the latter of Virginia; they were of Irish and English descent respectively. Archibald Coleman was educated and married in his native State, and some two years afterward, in about 1812, moved to Logan County, Ky., where he resided until 1820; he then came to Hopkins County, Ky. Here he bought wild land near the present site of the village of White Plains, moved into a rude log-cabin, and subsequently improved a farm, upon which he resided for some sixteen years. He then bought another farm in the same neighborhood, on which he resided for twelve years. During his residence on this farm he lost his first wife, the mother of our subject, and some four or five years later married his second wife, soon after which he removed to the western part of the county, near Providence, where he resided until his death in October, 1860, in his sixty-eighth year. In early manhood he learned the blacksmith's trade, and followed it in connection with farming and teaming until the last twenty years of his life, when he was exclusively engaged in agricultural pursuits and stock raising. He fought under Gen. Jackson at the battle of New Orleans, and during the whole of that engagement occupied a position on the top of the breastworks, but escaped without a wound. For the last twenty years of his life he was a devoted member of the Missionary Baptist Church. John M. Coleman was employed on his father's farm until he was twenty years old. He then bought his father's old homestead near White Plains, where he has since been engaged in farming and stock raising. He was for four years one of the magistrates of the county. April 9, 1836, he married Miss Martha A. Oates, a native of Muhlenburgh County, Ky. Of nine children, the fruit of this union, two sons and three daughters are living. Mrs. Martha A. Coleman died January 14, 1884, in her sixty-fifth year, a member of the Missionary Baptist Church. Mr. Coleman is a zealous member of the same church, and in politics a Republican.

REV. SAMUEL D. COMPTON was born in Hopkins County, Ky., March 19, 1829, and is a son of Thomas A. and Martha H. (Hutchinson) Compton, natives of Virginia, and of English descent. Thomas A. Compton, at the age of twenty-two years, about 1816, and while yet a single man, came to Hopkins County, Ky., where he bought wild land near Nebo, improved a farm, upon which he resided until his death in 1849, in his fifty-fifth year. He served during the latter part of the war of 1812, at Norfolk, Va. He was a natural mechanic, and, although he had never regularly learned any trade, he could turn his hand to almost any branch of mechanism, and made all his own wagons, agricultural implements and furniture. He was for many years an officer in the Kentucky State militia. He and wife were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. After her husband's death, however, Mrs. Martha A. Compton joined the Baptist Church, of which she was a member until her death in 1874, in her seventy-fourth year. Reuben Compton, the grandfather of our subject, was a veteran in the Revolutionary war, having served for over three years with Gen. Morgan's riflemen. After his father's death the care and support of his widowed mother devolved upon our subject, Samuel D. He continued to farm the home place on shares for several years, and in 1859 bought a part of the old homestead, to which he has added from time to time until he now owns a well improved farm of some 400 acres, where he is extensively engaged in farming and stock raising. He was a magistrate for this district for one term of four years. He was married February 23, 1859, to Miss Ella A. Townsend, a native of North Carolina and a daughter of Wilson and Elizabeth (Ramsey) Townsend. Eight children have blessed this union; four sons and three daughters are living. Mr. and Mrs. Compton are members of the Missionary Baptist Church, in which he has been a licensed preacher for nearly thirty years, and a regularly ordained elder for more than fifteen years. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, has advanced to the Royal Arch degree, and has been W. M. of his lodge. In politics, Mr. Compton is a Democrat. His eldest son, Theodore N. Compton, at the age of seventeen, was six feet and five inches in height, and weighed 210 pounds. He joined the church at the age of eleven, was licensed to preach at the age of sixteen, and regularly ordained at seventeen years of age. He has had official charge of three different churches, and is at present pastor of the Clayville Baptist Church, of Webster County, although only in his nineteenth year.

MINOS R. COTTON was born in Christian County, Ky., June 21, 1841, and is the ninth of twelve children born to William and Sallie (Lindley) Cotton; the former was a native of North Carolina and the latter of Kentucky, and of English descent. When only seven years old, in 1813, William Cotton removed with his parents to Christian County, Ky., then almost unbroken wilderness. Here his father bought military lands, erected a log-cabin and subsequently improved a farm. William, after attaining his majority, bought wild land in Christian County, and subsequently improved a farm, to which he added from time to time until he was the owner of some 500 acres. He was engaged in agricultural pursuits and stock raising, and also for a time in merchandising. His death occurred October 3, 1869, in his sixty-third year, and that of Mrs. Cotton in the following November. Both were members of the Christian Church. Minos R. Cotton's early life was passed on his father's farm. At the age of twenty-one he engaged in teaching, and taught and attended school for some six or seven years, by which persevering industry he became a good classical scholar. In 1868 he came to Hopkins County, Ky., where for several years he was engaged in the live stock trade, and the tobacco business. In 1875 he came to Madisonville, the county seat of Hopkins, where he erected a large tobacco stemmery, and has since been extensively engaged in the tobacco trade. He has the largest stemmery in the place, and does the most flourishing business in that line in the city. Mr. Cotton also owns several well improved farms near Madisonville, and is prominently identified with the agricultural and stock interests of the county. He is at this writing a member of the council and treasurer of the city of Madisonville. He was married April 22, 1874, to Miss Nannie I. Ramsey, one of Kentucky's fairest daughters, a native of Hopkins County. One son has blessed this union—Maurice R. Mr. Cotton is a member of and deacon in the Christian Church, and in politics is a Democrat. Mrs. Cotton is also a member of the Christian Church.

WILLIAM B. COURTNEY was born April 16, 1846, in Christian County, Ky. He is a son of Thomas and Easter (Biggerstaff) Courtney. The father was born in Virginia and died in 1874, aged sixty-six. The mother was born in Muhlenburgh County, Ky., and died in 1853, in Christian County. The following year the family moved to Hopkins County. Our subject assisted on the farm until the age of twenty-three, when he engaged in the saw-mill business, which he has since continued. He is employed with Williams & Dulin, as head sawyer, and has general supervision of the business. No more competent and trustworthy man for this business could be found in the county. He was married in 1877 to Miss S. A. Harlson, of Muhlenburgh County. One daughter gladdens their home.

JOHN W. COX was born in Mecklenburgh County, Va., July 31, 1827, and is a son of Eli and Jane (Winstead) Cox; the former a native of the "Old Dominion," and the latter of North Carolina, of Irish and English descent respectively. Eli Cox was educated in his native State. He went to North Carolina, where he was married, but soon returned to Virginia, where in early life he engaged in merchandising and trading, and afterward in farming, which he continued until his death in 1846, in his fifty-second year. He was a veteran in the war of 1812. In 1848 the family removed to Hopkins County, Ky. John W. received but very little schooling in his youth, but acquired a good, practical business education by his own exertions. In 1852 he went to California to seek his fortune, and was not entirely unsuccessful. He was engaged in mining there three years, after which he returned to Kentucky, and bought 330 acres of wild land near Nebo. He has since improved the farm upon which he now resides, and to which he has added from time to time, now owning well-improved farms amounting to some 1,500 acres. He is one of the most extensive and successful farmers and stock raisers in the county. For the past twelve years he has been extensively engaged in the tobacco trade, owning two large stemmeries in Nebo. He was married in 1856 to Miss Sarah A. Ramsey, a native of Hopkins County, Ky. Six children—two sons and four daughters—have blessed their union. Mr. Cox is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and in politics a Democrat.

HEZEKIAH R. COX was born in what is now Webster County, Ky., September 27, 1844, and is the eldest of eight children born to Alexander B. and Martha A. (Pryer) Cox, the former a native of Webster County, Ky., and latter of the "Old Dominion," and of Irish and German descent respectively. Alexander B. Cox was married in Hopkins County, Ky. After attaining his majority he bought wild land in Webster County, Ky., and improved a farm upon which he resided for a number of years. He has followed farming and stock raising in Webster and Hopkins Counties all his life, still owning a well improved farm near Nebo. In the fall of 1883 he rented a farm and came to Nebo, where he is living a retired life. He and wife are and have been for many years, members of the Christian Church. Our subject, H. R., received a fair common school education in youth and has acquired a good, practical business education by his own exertions. When nineteen years old he engaged in farming on his own account, and continued the same for eleven years. In 1878 he rented his farm near Nebo, and engaged in the dry goods and grocery trade at that town, and has since been doing a thriving business. He carries a well-selected stock amounting to from $4,000 to $5,000, and his annual sales average about $8,000. He was married October 21, 1867, to Miss Martha J. Chandler, a native of Webster County, Ky. Eight children have blessed this union, four of whom—one son and three daughters—are living. Mr. and Mrs. Cox are members of the Christian Church. He is a Democrat.

WILLIAM T. CRAFTON was born in Lunenburg County, Va., June 24, 1850, and is a son of Richard and Sallie (Rutlidge) Crafton, natives of the "Old Dominion," and of English descent. Richard Crafton was educated and married in his native State, and still lives on the farm where he was born. He is now in his eighty-seventh year, and has been all his life engaged in agricultural pursuits. His father, James Crafton, was a veteran of the Revolutionary war, having served under Washington throughout that struggle. Richard Crafton is a member of the Missionary Baptist Church, and Mrs. Crafton is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. William T. Crafton was employed on his father's farm and in the stave business until he attained his majority, after which he continued the stave business on his own account in Virginia until July, 1872, when he came to Hopkins County, Ky., where he continued the same business for some six years. In 1878 he bought a farm near White Plains, Hopkins County, where he has since been engaged in agricultural pursuits and in stock raising, making breeding and raising a specialty. He was married in December, 1878, to Mrs. Cynthia C. (Littlepage) Williams, a native of Hopkins County, Ky., and a daughter of Epps and Nancy A. (Dobins) Littlepage, who were among the early settlers of the county. Mr. and Mrs. Crafton have no children; Mrs. Crafton, however, has one son by her former marriage. Mr. Crafton is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and in politics a Democrat.

NOBLE A. CRAIG was born in Hopkins County, Ky., August 21, 1851, and is the youngest of nine children of Eden and Jane A. (Harralson) Craig, the former a native of Virginia, and the latter of North Carolina, and of Irish and English descent, respectively. At the age of twelve years, about 1816, Eden Craig removed to Kentucky with his parents, who settled near Lexington, where his father, Samuel Craig, bought a farm. After a few years the family moved to what is now Hopkins County, where Samuel Craig bought wild land near Madisonville and improved a farm, upon which he resided the remainder of his life. He erected one of the first grist-mills there, a horse-power mill. Eden Craig was married soon after attaining his majority, and shortly bought a partially improved farm near Nebo, upon which he resided until his death, May 7, 1869, in his sixty-fifth year. He and his wife were members of the Christian Church. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity. Mrs. Jane A. Craig died July 21, 1884, in her seventy-seventh year. Noble A. remained on the home farm until he was twenty years old, then engaged in saw-milling and the lumber business for two years, after which he went to Kansas, where he remained six months. He then returned to Kentucky, and has since resided on the old homestead, which he now owns, and where he is extensively engaged in farming and stock raising. He was married September 2, 1875, to Miss Mollie E. Cox, a native of Hopkins County, Ky., and daughter of Charles W. Cox, a native of the same county. Two daughters have blessed their union, Grace L. and Janie B. Mrs. Craig is a member of the Christian Church. Mr. Craig is a member of the Masonic fraternity, in which he has held various official positions. He is a Democrat. Charles W. Cox was born in Hopkins County, Ky., April 20, 1831, and is one of eight children born to Champion S. and Sallie (Winstead) Cox, the former a native of the "Old Dominion," and the latter of North Carolina, of Irish and English descent, respectively. Champion S. Cox, when twelve years old, about 1811, came with his parents to what is now Hopkins County, Ky. There his father, William Cox, bought military lands, erected a cabin and improved a farm. On attaining his majority, Champion S. Cox bought a partially improved farm near Nebo, upon which he resided for a number of years, then sold out and bought another farm in the same neighborhood, where he resided until his death in 1853, in his fifty-fourth year. He and his wife were from youth devoted members of the Christian Church. Charles W. Cox remained on the home farm until he was twenty-two years of age, when he bought a farm near the old homestead, where he remained several years. He then sold out and bought wild land about five miles south of Nebo, where he improved a farm, on which he resided for seven years, after which he sold the place and again bought wild land, northwest of Nebo, where he improved the farm upon which he now resides, and where he is extensively engaged in farming and stock raising. He was married October 7, 1852, to Miss Elizabeth B. Harralson, a native of what is now Webster County, Ky. Thirteen children have blessed this union, ten of whom are living—six sons and four daughters. Mr. and Mrs. Cox are members of the Christian Church. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and a Democrat.

JOHN W. CROW was born in Hopkins County, Ky., November 11, 1836, and is a son of John S. and Nancy S. (Hutchinson) Crow, natives of Virginia, and of English and Irish descent, respectively. John S. Crow was educated and married in his native State. Being left an orphan at the age of thirteen years he was thrown upon his own resources, and in eary life learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed in Virginia for several years. He served during the early part of the war of 1812 at Norfolk, Va. About 1813 or 1814 he came with his wife and family to Hopkins County, Ky.; he located military lands near the present village of Nebo, and improved the farm upon which he resided until his death, January 28, 1877, in his eighty-eighth year. He and wife were for more than half a century members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Our subject, John W., was employed on his father's farm until the close of the late war, when he engaged in farming on his own account, on a farm which he had bought some years before adjoining the old homestead. Here he has since resided, engaged in farming and making the culture of tobacco a specialty. He was married in 1859 to Miss Nancy M. Compton, a native of Hopkins County, Ky., who bore him five children—four sons and one daughter—all living. Mrs. Nancy M. Crow died in May, 1874; she was a member of the Baptist Church. Mr. Crow's second marriage was December 20, 1880, to Mrs. Fannie F. (Ramsey) Hopgood. Two children have blessed their union—one son and one daughter; the son is living. Mrs. Fannie F. W. D. CROW was born July 12, 1839, in Mecklenburgh County, Va., and is a son of U. S. and Jane (Townsend) Crow, both natives of the "Old Dominion." The father died in his native State in 1870, aged sixty-two, and the mother two years later, aged about sixty-five. W. D. was reared on his father's farm and received a good literary education. In 1869 he came to Hopkins County, and in 1873 removed to his present farm, consisting of 111 acres, largely improved. He enlisted in 1861 in the Fifth Battalion Heavy Artillery, Confederate States army, and served till the end of the war. He was elected justice of the peace in August, 1881, and is still serving in that capacity. Mr. Crow was married in 1867 to Martha S. Reames, of Virginia, and four sons and three daughters have blessed their union.

J. J. CROWDER, Hopkins County, was born October 16, 1850, in Dinwiddie County, Va., and is a son of John N. and Minerva J. (Hudson) Crowder. The father was born in the same county and State, and still resides there on his farm. The mother was born in Lunenburgh County, Va., and died in Dinwiddie County, June 14, 1865, aged thirty-four years. J. J. was reared on his father's farm, and received a good common school education. In 1872 he came to Hopkins County and worked seven years for John S. Crow, after which he rented a farm two years. In August, 1880, he bought his present farm of eighty-seven acres, mostly improved, on which he has recently completed a very comfortable residence. Mr. Crowder was married June 15, 1878, to Nancy S. Cates, of Hopkins County; they are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

DR. J. P. CULLOM, Hopkins County, was born March 10, 1848, in Robertson County, Tenn. He is a son of J. P. and Amanda (Hooper) Cullom, also natives of Tennessee. The father died in 1852; the mother now resides in Christian County. Our subject having received a good common school education in youth, at the age of seventeen commenced the study of medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. J. H. Hooper, of Davidson County, Tenn., and graduated in 1868 from the old University of Nashville, Tennessee, after which he came to Calloway County, Ky., where he practiced about five years. On account of ill health he returned to Tennessee, there remained two years; he then moved to Trigg County, Ky., where he practiced until 1880. He then moved to Hot Springs, Ark., and there practiced three years. May 1, 1884, he came to Dawson, where he has since been physician for the Arcadia Hotel. Guests from all parts of the United States are attracted to these wells; the water has a national reputation and is considered the finest combination in the world. The Doctor has fitted up, at a great expense, hot, cold, vapor, iron, salt, and electric baths—the electro-therapeutic bathing apparatus costing about $500; he has a patent heater that has a capacity of heating 250 gallons in thirty minutes; he has leased the salt well, and is about manufacturing salts water of the same medical properties as the Crab Orchard salts; the water produces one ounce to the gallon; the well produces about 100 pounds of salts per day, and the Doctor has under contemplation the establishment of a sanitarium at this point on an extended scale. He was married January 4, 1870, to Henrietta, daughter of the late R. D. Hughes, of Highland, Ky., and niece of Gen. S. P. Hughes, now governor of Arkansas; their union has been blessed with one child, Willie, now attending the South Kentucky College, Hopkinsville. The Doctor is a member of the Masonic faternity and I. O. O. F.

DR. A. G. DARBY, Hopkins County, was born August 25, 1839, in Caldwell County, Ky. He is a son of F. W. and Mary (Wyatt) Darby. The mother was born in Caldwell County and is now living at Princeton, at the advanced age of seventy-eight. Our subject was reared on his father's farm and received a good literary education. At the age of twenty-two he was employed as overseer, later he opened a grocery store at Fredonia, Ky.; this he continued one year, and then opened a drug store, which he carried on about five years; his health became poor and he took up the study of medicine; in 1870 he attended the Louisville Medical College; the following year he came to Dawson, where he has since been engaged in the practice of his profession.

WILLIAM T. DAVES was born in Hopkins County, Ky., December 31, 1843, and is the eldest of nine children born to Randolph and Sarah J. (Robinson) Daves. The former a native of North Carolina and the latter a native of the "Old Dominion," both of English descent. Randolph Daves, at about the age of eleven, in 1830 came with his parents to Henderson County, Ky., then almost an unbroken wilderness. There his father bought military lands, erected a rude log cabin, and subsequently improved a farm. After attaining his majority, Randolph bought a farm in Henderson County, Ky., there he remained eight years. He then sold and came to Hopkins County, Ky.; where he has at different times owned three or four different farms. For the last eighteen months he has resided in Madisonville. For the last fourteen years he has been nearly blind, having lost his sight from the effects of neuralgia in the head. He and wife are devoted members of the Baptist Church. William T. remained on his father's farm until he was twenty-five years old. In 1862 he was conscripted for the Confederate service, was never mustered and consequently saw no active service. After the war he engaged in farming in Hopkins County for some ten years. In 1875 he came to Madisonville, where he opened a shop and commenced repairing and manufacturing wagons, continuing alone for some two years; he then had a partner, R. Q. Thomson, for two years, after which he worked for Capt. T. B. Jones three years. In January, 1883, he commenced the manufacture of wagons on a large scale in company with A. A. Riggin, under the firm name of Riggin & Daves. He was married June 11, 1869, to Miss Mary E. Davis, a native of Hopkins County, Ky., and daughter of William Davis, one of the early settlers of the county. Six children blessed their union, five of whom—four sons and one daughter—are yet living. Mr. Daves is a member of the Baptist Church, and of the K. of H. In politics he is identified with the Greenback party.

W. D. DAVIS was born September 15, 1820, in Hopkins County, Ky. He is a son of Joseph and Lucy (Herrin) Davis, the former a native of North Carolina and the latter of South Carolina. They immigrated to Hopkins County at an early day, and engaged in farming. The father died in December, 1869, aged seventy-four. Our subject at the age of twenty-one worked on his brother's farm one year; he then bought a farm of fifty acres, and has since engaged in farming; he added other lands as his means would allow, and now owns about 400 acres, also his residence in Madisonville, all of which he has acquired by constant application to business. Mr. Davis was married in 1845 to Jane Goodloe of Hopkins County. These parents have had four children, three of whom are living—two sons and one daughter. Mrs. Davis is a member of the Christian Church.

HON. ELDRED G. DAVIS, M. D., was born in Hopkins County, Ky., June 5, 1832, and is the seventh in a family of eight children, born to William and Anna (Earle) Davis, natives of Mississippi, and of English descent. William Davis, when but a boy, and while Kentucky was yet a county of Virginia, came with his parents to what is now Hopkins County, Ky., then almost an unbroken wilderness, where his father, Richard Davis, bought about 2,000 acres of military lands, about nine miles south of the present site of Madisonville, where he erected a rude log-cabin, and subsequently improved a farm. He afterward built the first brick house in Hopkins County, Ky. William Davis was a veteran in the war of 1812, serving throughout that struggle under Gen. Harrison; after the war he returned to Hopkins County, where he was married, and where his father gave him a farm on which he resided until his death in 1849 or 1850. in about his sixty-second year. Our subject, Eldred G. Davis, received a good common education, and afterward graduated in the English and scientific course at Shurtleff College, Alton, Ill. In 1853 he commenced the study of medicine under Dr. Peter J. Baley, of Adairville, Logan Co., Ky., and in the spring of 1855 graduated with high honors from the Nashville Medical College. That same spring he commenced the practice of his profession near Madisonville, where he remained until the breaking out of the late war, when he removed to the town of Madisonville, where he remained until 1873, having an extensive practice. In 1873 he came to Earlington, being induced to do so by the St. Bernard Coal Company. Here he became physician for that company and also has a large and lucrative practice outside. In 1880 and 1881 he represented Hopkins County in the lower house of the Kentucky legislature. He was married, in 1855, to Miss Susan V. Baker, a native of Hopkins County, and daughter of William R. Baker, who was sheriff of the county for a number of years. One son and one daughter have blessed this union. The Doctor is a member of the I. O. O. F. In politics he is a Democrat.

Still later he engaged in contracting, preparing material for an iron company, which he continued until his death, September 3, 1879, in his seventy-seventh year. Both he and wife were members of the Independent Church; he was also a member of the order of Foresters. Isaac Davis was employed with his father in the iron works until he attained his majority. In April, 1870, he immigrated to the United States, first settling in Coalton, Ky., where he remained about four months; then he came to Earlington, Hopkins Co., Ky., where he engaged in coal mining for about two years. He then opened a saloon, at the same place, which he conducted for some six years. In 1878 he opened a dry goods store at Earlington, and has since been doing a flourishing business in that line. He carries a large and well selected stock of dry goods, amounting to about $9,000, his average annual sales amounting to at least $12,000. Mr. Davis was married January 11, 1883 to Miss Necie W. Williams, a native of Christian County, Ky. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and also of the I. O. O. F., having taken the Encampment degrees. He is a Democrat.

EPHRAIM R. DILLINGHAM was born in Muhlenburgh County, Ky., December 11, 1833, and is a son of Vachel L., and Elizabeth (Oates) Dillingham, natives of South and North Carolina, of English and Irish descent, respectively. When only a small boy, in the latter part of the last century, Vachel L. Dillingham was brought by his parents to Christian County. Here his father, Jesse M. Dillingham, located military land and subsequently improved a farm, upon a part of which the town of Hopkinsville was afterward built. He was for several years surveyor of Christian County; after his wife's death he lived with his children and relatives in Kentucky and Illinois until his death, which occurred at the home of his son Vachel L., near Greenville, Muhlenburgh Co., Ky., in about his eighty-seventh year. Vachel L. Dillingham, after his mother's death, which occurred when he was only six or eight years old, lived with his uncle, Jackson Earle, who resided at the Pond River Ferry, in Muhlenburgh County, He remained with his uncle until his marriage when he bought a farm near Greenville, where he resided until his death, in August, 1852, in his fifty-eighth year; he was sheriff of Muhlenburgh County eight years. Ephraim R. Dillingham was employed on his faher's farm until the latter's death, after which he came to Hopkins County, and bought wild land near White Plains, moved into a log-cabin and subsequently improved the farm on which he now resides, and which is one of the best improved farms in the neighborhood. He has added to his original purchase from time to time, now owning 230 acres. After his father's death his mother made her home with our subject until her death, July 25, 1884, in her eighty-fourth year. She was for over fifty years a devoted member of the Baptist Church. Mr. Dillingham was married, April 30, 1858, to Miss Mary J. Yeargin, native of DeKalb County, Tenn., and a daughter of John and Judy (Bennett) Year-gin, natives of Virginia and North Carolina respectively, and of English descent. To Mr. and Mrs. Dillingham have been born six children, five of whom—three sons and two daughters—are living. W. T. DOCKREY was born October 26, 1854, in Hopkins County, Ky. He is a son of A. and Mary (Mock) Dockrey. The father was born in North Carolina, and when a child came with his mother to Hopkins County, Ky., where he has since resided, now living on his farm in the Dalton District. The mother is also a native of Hopkins County. Our subject was reared on his father's farm, and at the age of seventeen went to Charleston, where he attended school about one year. He then entered a store there as clerk, and remained about two years. In 1876 he came to Dawson and opened a grocery store; this he continued two years, after which he engaged in farming two years; he then returned to Dawson and has since been engaged in the hotel and liquor business. He owns the property known as the "Southern Hotel," which is conveniently located near the depot. Guests visiting this house will receive good accommodations at reasonable prices. Mr. Dockrey was married in 1875 to Josephine Chapple, of this county; this union is blessed with one bright daughter—Ora M.

R. S. DULIN, Hopkins County, was born August 26, 1837, in Christian County, Ky. He is the son of Rice and Catharine (Myers) Dulin, both natives of the same county and State. The mother died in 1875, aged sixty-two. The father is now living on his farm in Christian County. At the age of sixteen our subject came to Hopkins County, and here assisted his brother on his farm. In 1859 the brother died, but R. S. still continued to carry on the farm until the close of the war, after which he went to Evansville, Ind., and was engaged in the hotel business six or eight months; he then returned to the farm and bought out his brother's interest, and continued farming there for several years; he then moved to a point near Nortonville, and there carried on farming and milling. In March, 1877, he moved to Morton's Gap, and, in company with Chesley Williams, engaged in the saw-mill business, which they have since continued. They own a tract of 1,320 acres with this mill, also houses and lots at the "Gap," and property elsewhere. Mr. Dulin was married, in 1860, to Miss Mary Clements of Hopkins County; this union has been blessed with five children—three sons, Walter J., Hanson L. and Robert S., and two daughters, Kate C. and Mollie E. Mrs. Dulin is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

DAVID M. DUKES, Hopkins County, was born in Muhlenburgh County, Ky., March 6, 1838, and is a son of Josiah and Nancy (Moore) Dukes, natives of South Carolina and of English descent. When but a boy, Josiah Dukes came with his parents to Muhlenburgh County, Ky. Here his father, Benjamin Dukes, bought wild lands, erected a log-cabin, and subsequently improved a farm, upon which he resided until his death. Josiah Dukes, after his marriage, inherited his father-in-law's old homestead, where he was engaged in farming and stock raising until his death in March, 1883, in his eightieth year. He and wife were devoted members of the Baptist Church. David M. Dukes, after attaining his majority, was engaged in various pursuits for two years. He then farmed on shares for some seven or eight years, after which he bought a farm in Christian County, Ky., where he remained four or five years, when he lost his farm in consequence of a defective title. In December, 1878, he came to Hopkins County, where he rented for one year. He then bought the farm near White Plains, upon which he now resides. He was married January 25, 1860, to Miss Nancy J. Hill, a native of Muhlenburgh County, Ky. Ten children were the fruit of this union, of whom five sons and four daughters are living. Mr. Dukes and wife and four of their children are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. In politics he is a Democrat.

GEORGE A. EUDALEY, Hopkins County, was born in Jefferson County, Tenn., June 13, 1842, and is the youngest of sixteen children born to David W. and Sarah J. (Baldwin) Eudaley, the former a native of Virginia, and the latter of the North Carolina, and of Irish and Scotch descent, respectively. David W. Eudaley was married in his native State, where he followed farming for several years. He was a veteran in the war of 1812, and was stationed most of the time at Norfolk, Va. About 1820 he moved to Jefferson County, Tenn., where he held the office of county trustee, and various other official positions during his life. He was also extensively engaged in farming. He died in September, 1878, in his eighty-seventh year. He and his wife were from early life members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in which he was for many years a local preacher. George A. remained on his father's farm until he was nineteen years old, and in the fall of 1861, enlisted in the First Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, Confederate States army, in which regiment he served until January, 1863, when he was transferred to the artillery service, and served until the close of the war. He took part in the battle of Stone River, and many other engagements. In the spring of 1865 he came to Nebo, Hopkins Co., Ky., where, with the exception of five years, he has since been engaged in the brick business. For the past five years also he has carried on a general merchandising business at that place. He is in partnership with Leroy Graham, under the firm name of Eudaley & Graham. They carry a well selected stock in their line, and are doing a good business. Mr. Eudaley was married July 24, 1865, to Miss Mary M. Winstead, a native of Hopkins County, Ky. Eight children have blessed their union; three sons and four daughters are living. Mr. Eudaley and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal and Christian Churches, respectively. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and a Democrat.

WYATT L. FOARD, Hopkins County, was born in Halifax County, Va., July 13, 1833, and is the eldest of seven children born to Robert and Jane W. (Hewell) Foard, both of whom were natives of the "Old Dominion," and of English and Welsh descent, respectively. Robert Foard was married in his native State, where he engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1836. He then moved to Trigg County, Ky., and the following year to Christian County, Ky., where he purchased a farm and was engaged in farming until his death in March, 1870, in his sixty-eighth year. Both he and wife were from early life devoted members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was also a member of the Masonic fraternity. Wyatt L. received a good common school education, and was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority. In 1860 he removed to McCracken County, Ky., where he engaged in agricultural pursuits for some thirteen years. In 1873 he came to Hopkins County, Ky., and assisted in the orgaization of the Hecla Coal & Mining Company, of which he is one of the principal stockholders. He also assisted in opening the mine and is now, and has been from the start, weighmaster of the same. Mr. Foard is as yet unmarried. He is a member of the A. O. U. W. In politics is a Democrat.

JO. F. FOARD was born in Halifax County, Va., May 19, 1836, and is the third child in a family of seven children born to Robert and Jane W. (Hewell) Foard, a sketch of whom will be found on page 776. Our subject received a good classical educationin early life, and was employed on his father's farm, and in attending school, until he was seventeen years old. He then commenced the study of medicine under Dr. J. H. Caldwell, then of Christian County, Ky., but now of Waco, Tex., and attended the Kentucky School of Medicine in 1855-56. In the latter part of that year he went as a clerk to the Bank of America at Rogersville, Hawkins Co., Tenn., and in 1857 was made cashier of that institution. In 1859 he went into the mercantile business (boots and shoes) at Leavenworth City, Kas., then a Territory. He was married to Cornelia M. Young, daughter of John Young, of Hawkins County, Tenn., in November, 1860. He raised a company of Confederate soldiers in Hawkins County, and was elected captain in 1861. He served throughout the entire war in the capacity of captain in line and quartermaster, and was surrendered and paroled at Washington, Ga. He came back to Christian County, Ky., in 1866, and engaged in farming there, acting also as sheriff in that county until 1873, when he organized the Hecla Coal & Mining Company, in Hopkins County, Ky.; he was elected secretary and treasurer of that company, and has remained in that capacity ever since. In 1882 he removed to Nashville, Tenn., where he now resides. He has four children—three daughters and one son. One daughter, now married, resides in Murfreesboro, Tenn. Mr. Foard is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

MRS. JANE M. (COLEMAN) FOX, Hopkins County, was born in Logan County, Ky., July 14, 1819, and is a daughter of Archibald and Elizabeth D. (Moreman) Coleman. Our subject was married, October 3, 1847, to Mr. William M. Fox, who was born in Hopkins County, Ky., September 22, 1814. His father was one of the early settlers of Hopkins County, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death, which occurred, while William M. Fox was quite young; the latter then made his home with his paternal grandparents until he attained his majority. Mr. Fox early made two trips down the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers to New Orleans with flat-boats loaded with provisions and live-stock. Afterward he was employed as a blacksmith on a steamboat for one year, and on a tobacco-boat for two years. Still later he was engaged in getting out wood for boats near New Orleans for some three or four years. He then returned to his farm, and remained until the winter of 1847. He then made the third trip down the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers to New Orleans with a flat-boat loaded with stock, and returned in the spring of 1847. After his marriage he bought a farm near White Plains, Hopkins County, upon which his widow still resides. Here he was engaged in agricultural pursuits and stock raising until his death, which occurred August 23, 1883. Our subject is, and has been since she was seventeen years old, a devoted member of the Missionary Baptist Church. She became the mother of six children, five of whom—two sons and three daughters—are yet living. Both sons, Andrew J. and Archibald D., are yet unmarried, and reside with her on the old homestead. The former was born March 6, 1859, and the latter November 9, 1860. Andrew J. received an excellent English education at the common schools and academies of the country, and has been engaged in teaching for the past six years. Archibald D. also received a good education and has taught two terms of school. In politics they are both Democrats, and are among the enterprising young business men and farmers of the district.

E. B. FROST, Hopkins County, was born in Montgomery County, Tenn., October 10, 1828. He is a son of Isham and Mary W. (she was an Allen before marriage) Frost, both natives of the same State and county. The father died in 1868 in Madisonville, aged sixty-three. The mother died 1876, aged seventy. The family came to Madisonville in 1840, and here our subject, at the age of fifteen, entered as clerk in the dry goods store of Frost & Lyon, where he remained about four years, after which he, with his father, sold goods about two years; he then worked at the carriage-making and carpenter trade from 1850 until 1863; he was then appointed assistant United States assessor in the territory embracing the counties of Hopkins, Henderson, Muhlenburgh and Webster; he held this office under the administrations of Lincoln and Johnson (except about six months) and Grant's till 1873, when the statute expired; he then acted one year as deputy collector. In September, 1874, he was appointed postmaster at Madisonville, which office he has since acceptably filled. In July, 1883, this became a third-class office. Mr. Frost was married in 1851 to Mary H. Porter, of Hopkins County; this union has been blessed with four children, of whom only one is now living—Mary A., now wife of James T. Alexander, merchant of Madisonville. Mr. and Mrs. Frost are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

JOHN C. GIVENS was born in Hopkins County, Ky., June 17, 1828, and is the fourth of ten children born to James K. and Elizabeth (Christian) Givens, the former a native of Virginia, the latter of Kentucky, of Irish and English descent, respectively. James K. Givens, when about eighteen years old, in 1813, came with his parents to Hopkins County, Ky., where his father, Thomas Givens, bought military lands and improved a farm. James K. bought wild land near the old homestead, where he improved the farm upon which he resided until his death, in 1855. For the last twenty years of his life he was almost entirely helpless, being affected all that time by rheumatism. He and his wife were from early life members of the Baptist Church. John C. in 1850 went to California, by the overland route, and was successfully engaged in mining and teaming there for nearly three years. He then returned to Kentucky and bought a farm near Nebo, Hopkins County, where he has since been engaged in farming. He was married November 24, 1854, to Miss Artemisia Barnhill, a native of Bertie County, N. C. Seven children have blessed their union, four of whom—two sons and two daughters—are living. Mr. and Mrs. Givens are members of the Missionary Baptist Church. He is a Democrat.

PROF. J. J. GLENN, Hopkins County, was born in Lyon County, Ky., March 3, 1842. He is a son of Samuel P. and Mary G. (Brown) Glenn, both parents born in the same State and county. The father was engaged in farming; he died in June, 1884, aged sixty-nine; he neither sought nor held any office beyond that of deputy sheriff. The mother now lives with her son in Madisonville. Prof. Glenn was reared on his father's farm, and received a good common school education. At the age of twenty he entered a dry goods store as clerk, where he remained one year; he then taught school at Poplar Creek three months, and continued teaching at various other schools several years, after which he went to Trigg County, and taught in the Wallonia Institute two years; he then taught two years in the Montgomery Academy, and taught several years in Nebo. He has recently been elected county superintendent of schools of his county, and has been a member of the board of education several years. He is vice-president of the State Teachers' Association, president of the Kentucky Reading Circle, also editor of the Madisonville Times. He was married February 1, 1865, to Sallie M. Prewett, of Lyon County. This lady has since died, leaving one son. Prof. Glenn's second marriage was on February 28, 1877, to Parthenia Fox, of Dalton; this marriage has been blessed with one daughter. The Professor is a member of the Masonic fraternity, K. of H., and U. O. of the G. C; he has been grand scribe of the grand division of the S. of T. of southern Kentucky, and has always taken an active part in all temperance and educational interests; he is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and superintendent of the Sunday-school.

W. L. GORDON, attorney, Hopkins County, was born in Madisonville, Ky., November 23, 1837, and is a son of Ambrose G. and Sarah (Dobyns) Gordon, both of whom were natives of the same county and State. John Gordon, the grandfather of subject, was a native of the "Old Dominion," and of Scotch descent. He was by profession a civil engineer, being the first surveyor of Hopkins County, which he helped survey in 1808. Ambrose G. Gordon was a lawyer by profession, and was among the early and successful attorneys of the county; his death occurred June 20, 1856, in his fifty-eighth year, and that of Mrs. Sarah Gordon, in 1873, in her sixty-seventh year. W. L. Gordon at the age of fifteen engaged in civil engineering, which he followed for a time. Afterward he took up the study of law, and was admitted to the bar in 1859. Soon after his admission to the bar he was appointed attorney for the Henderson & Nashville Railroad; this road has undergone several changes since its first organization, now being known as the Henderson division of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, but through all the various changes, Mr. Gordon has continued to be the company's attorney, and still holds that important position. He was also for a time president of the Madisonville & Shawneetown Railroad. Mr. Gordon is one of the ablest jurists and most skillful attorneys in central Kentucky. His eldest brother, Lysander G., was a gentleman of rare attainments and an eminent lawyer. His death occurred in January, 1860, in his thirty-seventh year. Another brother, Dr. J. F. Gordon, graduated with high honors from the medical department of the Louisville University. His death occurred in Crittenden County, Ky., in 1867, in his thirty eighth year. Still another brother, Frank, now a resident of Simcoe, Ontario, is by profession a civil engineer, but is now engaged in the hardware business at that point. Mr. Gordon was married February 29, 1860, to Miss Cordelia Arnold, a native of Hopkins County, Ky. Six children—three sons and three daughters—have blessed their union. Mr. Gordon is a member of the K. of H. Mrs. Gordon and family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Their eldest son, William L., was admitted to the bar in April, 1884, and is now practicing with his father, and is a member of the law firm of W. L. Gordon & Son.

TRAVIS S. GRADDY was born March 11, 1821, in Hopkins County, Ky. He is a son of Louis and Treacy (Benley) Graddy. Both parents were born in Duplin County, N. C., and came to Hopkins County at an early day. The father died in about 1824. The mother died in 1852. Our subject was reared on his mother's farm, and received a good common school education. At the age of twenty-one he engaged in teaching school, which he continued at intervals for several years. On the adoption of the new constitution he was chosen constable, which office he held two years. After his mother's death he bought out the heirs of the estate, which consisted of about 150 acres; he now owns about 205 acres, a large part of which is now improved. Mr. Graddy was married December 7, 1848, to Sarah F. Hampton, of Hopkins County. These parents have had nine children—four daughters are now living. Mr. Graddy is now the oldest native living in this part of the county.

JOHN G. B. HALL, Hopkins County, of the firm of Givens & Hall, editors of Hopkins County Gleaner, was born September 23, 1857, in Hopkins County. He is the son of the late Judge Dixon Hall, received a good education in the common schools of this county, and completed his literary studies at Lincoln College, Lincoln, Ill., in the session of 1877 and 1878; he then returned to Madisonville and commenced the study of law under the preceptorship of Laffoon & Gordon, and was admitted to the bar in October, 1879. He was a candidate for county attorney in 1882, receiving strong support, but being the youngest of three candidates was defeated. Later he became a partner with Polk Laffoon, member of congress, in the practice of law, and this partnership continued one year. October 12, 1883, he, with Mr. Givens, established the Hopkins County Gleaner at Madisonville, and it is said that this paper obtained the largest circulation of any in the State, outside of Louisville. In March, 1885, he retired from the editorial staff of the Gleaner, and is giving his whole attention to his profession.

WASHINGTON I. HAMBY, proprietor of the Hamby House, was born July 18, 1843, in Christian County, Ky. He is a son of M. R. and Charlotte (Hamby) Hamby. The father was born in the same county and State; he engaged in farming, and was one of the oldest tobacco dealers in Hopkins County; he died January 17, 1864, on Johnson's Island, having been taken prisoner on account of his Southern sympathies. The mother was born in Livingston County, Ky., she died September 15, 1875. Our subject was reared on his father's farm, six miles northeast of Dawson; he enlisted in September, 1861, in Company A, Kentucky Cavalry, Confederate States army; was discharged July 5, 1863, having served his enlistment; he returned home and worked his father's farm one year; he then moved to a farm adjoining Dawson, owned by his brother-in-law, and remained there one year; he then moved to the Utley farm three miles east of Dawson, and farmed there with his brothers three years; he then moved to Christian County, where he was engaged in the coal business about three years; then moved to Crittenden County, where he was engaged in farming five years. In 1877 he came to Dawson; soon after engaged in merchandising, and kept a railroad eating house; before the expiration of his lease he bought a lot where the Arcadia Hotel now stands, and built a hotel on the southwest corner; this house was afterward destroyed by fire. After the completion of the house he commenced digging a cistern, and, July 2, 1881, accidentally discovered the most wonderful well in the world, and now known as the Arcadian Well. Among the diseases cured by the waters of this well are liver troubles, kidney diseases, dyspepsia, rheumatism, sore eyes and skin diseases. Mr. Hamby has since disposed of this well with the grounds attached, retaining free access to him and his heirs, and all guests he may desire to accommodate, forever. Parties visiting Dawson will receive good attention at reasonable rates by calling at the Hamby House. Mr. Hamby was married September 18, 1863, to Stacey Menswer, of Hopkins County; this union has been blessed with seven children, of whom two sons and three daughters are living.

WILLIAM P. HARDWICK was born in Hopkins County, Ky., February 10, 1833, the son of Benjamin F. and Mary E. (Tolbert) Hardwick, natives of Kentucky, and of Irish and English descent, respectively. Benjamin F. Hardwick, at the age of nineteen, came to Hopkins County, married, bought a farm near Nebo, which he sold after a few years, and bought another near St. Charles, same county, upon which he resided only a few years. He then removed to Henderson County and bought a farm near the city of Henderson, upon which he resided until his death in the fall of 1852. He and wife were from early life devoted members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. His father, Christopher C. Hardwick, was a veteran of the Revolutionary war, served under Washington throughout that struggle, but died while making his way homeward on foot, immediately after the war. William P. Hardwick, at the age of sixteen, was bound out to learn the blacksmith's trade, and served an apprenticeship of four years at Henderson, Ky., where he followed the business one year afterward. He then removed to Madisonville, where he followed the trade for a few months, after which he was employed at Greenville, Muhlenburgh County, for one year, and at South Carlton, same county, for six months. He then returned to Madisonville, where he remained two years; he then opened a shop on the banks of Clear Creek, remaining one year. From thence he went to what is now St. Charles, same county, where he remained two years. He then opened a shop near Nortonsville, where he remained for seventeen years. In 1878 he came to White Plains, where he has since resided and where, in company with his son, Thomas L., he has been doing a good business at his trade. He was married in December, 1856, to Miss Mary J. Hardwick, a native of Hopkins County. Four children were the fruit of this union, three of whom, all sons, are living. In politics, Mr. Hardwick is a Democrat, and is one of the native born and prominent mechanics of the county. His eldest son, Thomas L., was born in Greenville, Muhlenburgh County, January 6, 1857; he learned the blacksmith's trade while with his father, and has worked at the business ever since he was able to lift a hammer, or since he was eight years old. For the past six years, or since they came to White Plains, he has been a partner in the business. He was married March 18, 1877, to Miss Frances P. Smith, a native of Crittenden County, Ky. Two sons have blessed their union: William T. and Walter E. In politics Mr. Hardwick is a Democrat.

JOHN H. HARKINS was born in Christian County, Ky., August 27, 1833, and is a son of John and Eunice (Mitchell) Harkins, both natives of Christian County, and of English descent. John Harkins, after attaining his majority, bought a farm in Christian County, where he was engaged in farming for many years. Later, he sold the place, and moved to Muhlenburgh County, Ky., where he bought another farm, on which he resided until his death, in 1870, in his sixty-seventh year. He was for several years constable in Christian County, and was a member of the United Baptist Church. Mrs. Eunice Harkins died in 1843. John H. Harkins was employed on his father's farm until he was twenty-two years old, after which he learned the shoemaker's trade, which he followed at Providence for some twenty-three years. He then engaged in the saloon business at the same place, which he continued for about three years, after which he opened a grocery store at Providence, and continued that business for two years. He then farmed on a rented farm for two years. In the fall of 1882, he bought a farm of 190 acres, two miles south of Providence, upon which he now resides. He was married August 2, 1855, to Miss Amanda M. Walker, a native of Todd County, Ky. Nine children were the fruit of this union, seven of whom—three sons and four daughters—are living. Mr. and Mrs. Harkins are members of the United Baptist Church. In politics he is a Democrat.

WILLIS W. HARRIS was born in Jackson County, Tenn., December 12, 1822, and is a son of Jordan K. and Rebecca (Emery) Harris, the former a native of Virginia, the latter of Kentucky, and of English and Scotch descent, respectively. Jordan K., when a young man, in 1818, removed to Jackson County, Tenn., where he was soon afterward married, and where he bought wild land, and improved a farm, on which he resided for several years. In December, 1827, he removed to Livingston County, Ky., where he engaged in the live-stock business about three years, during which time, Mrs. Rebecca Harris died; she was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He then returned to Jackson County, Tenn., where he married again, and where he engaged in the stock business until his death, in 1880, in his eightieth year. He was a member of the Old School Baptist Church. The grandfathers of our subject were veterans in the Revolutionary war, and served under Washington. After his mother's death, which occurred when he was about seven years old, Willis W. made his home with his grandfather Emery, until he was twelve or thirteen years old. He then worked at farm labor for about three years. At the age of sixteen, he commenced to learn the brick and stone-mason's trade, which he followed until 1845. He then moved to a tract of 400 acres of wild land, in Crittenden County, Ky., which he had bought some time before, and commenced improving a farm, but after living one year on the place, he lost it on account of a defective title. In 1847, he came to Hopkins County, where he farmed on rented lands for two years. In January, 1849, he bought fifty acres of wild land, one mile south of Nebo, and improved the farm upon which he now resides, and to which he has added, now owning 800 acres. He is extensively engaged in farming and stock raising. Mr. Harris was, for a number of years, captain in the old State militia, of Kentucky. He was married, February 20, 1845, to Miss Rachel Roland, a native of Hopkins County. To them were born eight children; three sons and two daughters are yet living. Mrs. Rachael Harris died March 17, 1863, in her thirty-ninth year. She was a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Mr. Harris' second marriage was November 12, 1863, to Miss Nancy W. Crow, a native of Hopkins County. Mr. and Mrs. Harris are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, in which church he has been a ruling elder for about twenty years. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity. In 1868, he lost his dwelling house and the entire contents by fire. He is a Democrat.

CHARLES C. HARRISON was born in Hopkins County, Ky., January 3, 1834, and is the only child of Benjamin F. and Penelope (Clark) Harrison, the former a native of Christian and the latter a native of Hopkins County, Ky., and of Irish and English descent, respectively. Benjamin F. Harrison was educated in his native county, was married in Hopkins County, and soon afterward returned to Christian County, where he inherited the old homestead, upon which he resided until his death in 1835. He was for a time one of the magistrates of Christian County, and was a member of the Old School Presbyterian Church. The death of Mrs. Penelope Harrison occurred in August, 1837. She also was a member of the Presbyterian Church. Charles C., after his mother's death, was reared by his uncle, James Clark, with whom he resided until the latter's death, August 23, 1848; he then lived with another uncle, David Clark, in Muhlenburgh County, until he was twenty-seven years old. He then bought wild land in Hopkins County, near the present village of White Plains, where he subsequently improved the farm upon which he still resides. He was for four years one of the magistrates of his precinct. He was married January 8, 1861, to Miss Elizabeth Williams, a native of Perry County, Ill. Four children blessed their union, two of whom, one son and one daughter, are living. Mr. Harrison and family are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. He is also an earnest advocate of the temperance cause; in politics he is a Democrat.

E. L. HENDRICKS is a native of Johnson County, Ind. He is the only son and third child of a family of four children born to Dr. W. C. Hendricks and Sarah P. Hendricks, nee Hardin, both born in Shelbyville, Ind. The father's early life was spent in the practice of his profession; he afterward became a very successful banker, but during the panic of 1873 his losses were so large that he was forced to close the bank; he then resumed the practice of his profession in which he is still engaged. Our subject received a good literary education in his youth, after which he took up the study of telegraphing, and soon became master of this profession; he then entered the Wabash Classical College, where he remained five years, and graduated with honors in the class of 1876. Being thrown upon his resources on account of his father's failure, he was compelled to abandon the study of law, which it had been his intention to pursue, and accepted the position of operator for the general manager of the Gould system at Sedalia, Mo. Sometime later the general office was transferred to St. Louis, Mo., Mr. Hendricks accompanying the change, and after perfecting himself in stenography became secretary for the general attorney of the Gould system at that point, which responsible position he held about four years. He was married, in 1882, to Miss Mollie Belmont, a daughter of John G. Morton, of Madisonville, Ky.; this union has been blessed with one daughter, Helen E. Soon after marriage he settled at Madisonville, Ky., it not being agreeable for Mrs. Hendricks to reside elsewhere. He at once became proprietor of the Belmont House, which is first-class in all its appointments; the gas used for this hotel is manufactured on the premises, and the sleeping apartments are large, airy and well furnished. While at college Mr. Hendricks pursued the study of music with marked success, being endowed by nature with extraordinary talent in that direction; he soon became proficient in both vocal and instrumental music and is a composer of no ordinary ability; he is also a member of the Masonic fraternity.

U. J. HOLLAND was born March, 1820, in Fluvanna County, Va. He is a son of Richard and Lucy (Diggs) Holland; both parents were natives of Virginia. The father died in 1863, aged sixty-two, in Christian County, from injuries received from a fall off of a horse. The mother died about 1872, aged eighty-two. Our subject was reared on his father's farm, and at the age of twenty-one commenced working at the wagon-maker's trade, and has also worked at various other kinds of business. In 1846 he went to Tennessee, where he remained until 1860, when he came to Hopkins County, and engaged in farming; he owns from 300 to 400 acres; he remained on his farm ten years, when he moved to Madisonville and built a flour, planing and saw-mill; he has rented out the grist-mill and is operating the other mills. Mr. Holland was married in June, 1842, to Miss A. Yates, of Montgomery County, Tenn. Four children have blessed this union, one son and three daughters. Mr. and Mrs. Holland are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

LIEUT. JAMES W. HOLLOMAN was born in Hopkins County, Ky., September 12, 1832, and is a son of Miles B. and Amanda (Headley) Holloman. James W. Holloman was employed on his father's farm until the latter's death, which occurred in March, 1852. In the following fall he made a trip to Texas, and in the spring of 1853 came to Providence, where he was engaged in carpentering until the fall of 1859. He then bought a farm four miles south of town, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits and at carpentering until January, 1867; when he sold out and bought the farm, two and one-half miles south of Providence, upon which he now resides. In September, 1861, he enlisted in Company F, Eighth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, Confederate States army, being elected second lieutenant at the organization of the company, and was soon after promoted to first lieutenant. At the battle of Fort Donelson he was taken prisoner, being first retained at Camp Chase, Ohio, but soon removed to Johnson's Island. He was exchanged at Vicksburg in September, 1862, after which he was engaged in the recruiting service until the close of the war. Mr. Holloman was married in September, 1855, to Miss Altha E. Castlebery, a native of Hopkins County. Eight children were the fruit of this union, seven of whom —five sons and two daughters—are now living. Mr. and Mrs. Holloman are devoted and consistent members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. He is also a bright member of the Masonic fraternity. In politics he is a Democrat.

W. C. JENKINS, salesman for the St. Bernard Coal Company, St. Charles, was born March 3, 1844, in Monongahela County, W. Va. He is a son of Bartholomew and Nancy (Baker) Jenkins, both of whom were born in the same county and State. His father died in 1863, at the age of sixty-six. His mother still lives in her native State. Mr. Jenkins came to Kentucky, October, 1873, and has since been in the employ of the St. Bernard Coal Company at this point. He received a good literary education in youth, and has been connected with the various town offices the greater part of the time since coming here.

GEORGE W. JENNINGS was born in Hopkins County, Ky., May 26, 1843, and is a son of Gabriel W. and Martha H. (Mathews) Jennings, natives of the "Old Dominion." Gabriel W. Jennings was educated and married in his native State, where he learned the tanner's trade, which he followed in connection with farming several years. In 1826 he came to Hopkins County, Ky., where he bought a farm, on which he resided until his death in January, 1862, in his sixty-seventh year. He was a soldier of the war of 1812, having served in Virginia in the latter part of that struggle. George W. Jennings was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority. He then bought a farm in the Silent Run neighborhood, where he remained for eight years. He then sold the farm and engaged in the drug and grocery trade at Beulah City, continuing the same for some eighteen months. He was then engaged in the same business in Cairo, Henderson Co., Ky., for eleven months. After this he moved his store to Charleston, Hopkins County, where he remained for eighteen months. In 1880 he moved to Dalton, where he has since been engaged in the same business. He was married in November, 1864, to Miss Nancy S. Kirkwood, a native of Hopkins County. Two sons and one daughter have been left them. Mr. Jennings belongs to no church, but is a member of the Masonic fraternity. In politics he is a Democrat.

ALEXANDER T. JOHNSON was born in Louisa County, Va., May 12, 1822, and is a son of Louis W. and Nancy (Graven) Johnson, natives of Virginia and of Irish descent. Louis W. Johnson learned the brick-mason's and plasterer's trades in early life in his native State, where he was married and followed his trades for several years. In March, 1837, he came to Hopkins County, Ky., and bought a farm near Nebo, where he resided and farmed in connection with his trades until his death, in 1858 or 1859. He was a veteran in the war of 1812, and was at the burning of Fredericksburgh, Va. Alexander T. was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority. He then attended school in Tennessee for about three years; then returned to Hopkins County, Ky., where he taught for a time and made one trip to New Orleans with a flat-boat. In 1847 he bought wild land near the old homestead in Hopkins County, Ky., where he improved the farm upon which he still resides, and to which he has added the old home farm and several other places, now owning well improved farms amounting to some 600 acres. He also owns some valuable property in the town of Nebo. He has for many years been extensively engaged in farming and the live-stock business. In the early part of the war with Mexico he enlisted, but was rejected on account of the quota being complete. He was married October 14, 1847, to Miss Mary Lamson, a native of Hopkins County and a daughter of John Lamson, a native of Massachusetts, who was among the early pioneers of Hopkins County. To Mr. and Mrs. Johnson were born six children, three of whom are living. Mrs. Mary Johnson died in 1863. She was a member of the Missionary Baptist Church. Mr. Johnson's second marriage was in 1866 to Miss Bettie E. Smith, a native of Hopkins County. Seven children blessed their union, four of whom are living—one son and three daughters. Mr. Johnson is a member of the Missionary Baptist Church; he is a member of the Masonic fraternity and in politics a Democrat.

R. F. Johnson

DR. WILLIAM L. JOHNSON was born in Simpson County, Ky., October 25, 1825. He is a son of Luther and Sarah (Harris) Johnson, daughter of Rev. William Harris, one of the founders of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church; of this family six sons were preachers. Our subject was reared on his father's farm and received a good common school education; at the age of twenty-one he engaged in teaching school; this he continued for about five years and during this time he also studied medicine and taught classical studies; he then went to Louisville and attended medical lectures. In 1855 he commenced the practice of medicine in Hopkins County, and this profession he has since followed; he graduated from the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in 1857. The Doctor owns upward of 2,000 acres of land in this county, and has been engaged in merchandising and handling tobacco about twenty years. In 1882 he removed to Dawson; he owns and occupies one of the most attractive and comfortable residences at this point; he is a strong advocate of prohibition, and has delivered temperance lectures from time to time for many years. Dr. Johnson was married in 1865 to Miss N. J. Lamb, of Hopkins County; this union is blessed with one son and one daughter. The Doctor is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and Mrs. Johnson is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

BENJAMIN F. JOHNSON, Hopkins County, was born in Christian County, Ky., October 20, 1832, and is a son of David and Elizabeth D. P. (Bradley) Johnson, natives of Christian County and of English descent. David Johnson engaged in agricultural pursuits all his life, and for many years was a major in the State militia of Kentucky. He died May 20, 1848. Benjamin F. Johnson, after his father's death, commenced to learn the carpenter's trade, but did not complete the same, serving only two years. He was then employed as a salesman in a general store at Hopkinsville and Stuart's Mills for some two years, after which he engaged in business on his own account in company with John A. Louis, under the firm name of Johnson & Louis, in the northeastern part of Christian County, on the Hopkinsville and Greenville road, now known as Johnson's store. After four years Mr. Johnson's brother, Louis H., bought the interest of Mr. Louis in the business, which was conducted for another year under the firm name of Johnson Bros. In 1873 they moved their store to White Plains, where they bought an interest in another store, and for a time were associated with other parties. Ultimately, however, our subject bought out the interest of the others, and conducted the business alone for some six or seven years. In January, 1883, he sold the store and has since been engaged in agricultural pursuits, and also in the lumber and live stock business. He was married December 20, 1876, to Miss Maria L. Atkinson, a native of Christian County, Ky. Four children—three sons and one daughter—have blessed their union. Mr. Johnson is a member of the Universalist Church, and also of the Masonic fraternity, having advanced to the R. A. degree; he is also a member of the I. O. O. F.; in politics he is a Republican.

REV. SOLOMON W. JONES was born in Granville County, N. C., and is the eldest of five living children born to Henry W. and Sarah (Parker) Jones, both natives of Granville County, N. C., and of English descent. Henry W. Jones was educated and married in his native county, where he was all his life extensively engaged in planting. He enlisted near the close of the war of 1812, and was taken to Norfolk, Va., but saw no active service. He was for many years a magistrate in his native county. He died in the early part of 1874, in his seventy-sixth year. Solomon W. was employed on his father's farm until he was twenty-one years old. His father then deeded him a small farm near the old homestead, where he engaged in farming until the fall of 1840, when he came to Hopkins County, Ky., and bought wild land four miles west of Madisonville. Here he commenced to improve a farm; after one year he sold the place and bought a partially improved farm near Hanson in the same county, where he engaged in farming and stock raising until 1877. He then sold the farm and moved to Madisonville, where he owns a handsome residence in the suburbs of the city, where he has since lived a retired life. He was married December 19, 1838, to Miss Mary B. Gooch, a native of Granville County, N. C. Seven children blessed their union; five sons and one daughter are yet living. Mr. Jones and wife are devoted members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, he having been a member of that church for more than forty years, and a minister in the same for some thirty-five years. In politics he is a Democrat.

ALEXANDER R. JONES was born in Hopkins County, Ky., August 13, 1848, and is the fifth child of the Rev. Solomon W. and Mary B. (Gooch) Jones. A. R. received a good common school and academic education in youth, and was employed on the home farm until he was twenty-five years old. He then engaged in the manufacture of wagons and carriages at Madisonville in company with two of his brothers, under the firm name of Jones Bros. After three years he withdrew from the firm and opened a large dry goods store at the same place, where he has since been doing an extensive and thriving business. He carries a well selected stock in his line, valued at $7,000, his annual sales amounting to about $12,000. Mr. Jones was married November 15, 1877, to Miss Linna L. Murphy, a native of Hopkins County, Ky. They have one daughter —Ruby. Mr. and Mrs. Jones are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and he is a Democrat.

JOHN F. JONES was born in Hopkins County, Ky., March 12, 1853, and is the youngest of seven children of Rev. Solomon W. and Mary B. (Gooch) Jones, a sketch of whom will be found above. John F., upon attaining his majority, learned the wagon and carriage-maker's trade with his brother, T. B. Jones, of Masonville, and followed the same for about six years. He was then engaged in the dry goods business at the same place in company with another brother, A. R. Jones, for two years. In October 1883, he removed to Nebo, where he engaged in the tobacco stemming business in company with J. W. Cox, under the firm name of Cox & Jones. They are doing an extensive business, having shipped to the European markets during the last season 337 hogsheads of strips. Mr. Jones was married December 13, 1882, to Miss Cora M. Cox, a native of Hopkins County, Ky., and a daughter of J. W. Cox, a sketch of whom will be found elsewhere. In politics Mr. Jones is a Democrat.

HON. RICHARD J. KEY was born in Ballard County, Ky., October 3, 1825, and is a son of Jefferson and Drucilla (Baley) Key, both natives of the "Old Dominion," and of English descent. Jefferson Key at the age eighteen or nineteen years, came with his parents to Henderson County, Ky., and soon afterward to Hopkins County, Ky., where he was married, and where he opened a general store on the Madisonville and Henderson road, about eleven miles from the former place. He remained there for a short time, then moved to the Purchase District, where he followed merchandising and shipping salt until his death in 1827, in his thirty-fifth year. He and his wife were members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Richard J. was employed on his mother's farm until he attained his majority, when he came to Hopkins County, Ky., and bought 200 acres of wild land near Nebo, where he improved a farm and has since been extensively engaged in stock raising. In 1881–82 he represented Hopkins County in the lower house of the Kentucky legislature. He was married November 24, 1847, to Miss Rebecca W. Pruyear, a native of Mecklenburgh County, Va. To them have been born eleven children, four of whom, all daughters, are living. Mr. Key is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and Mrs. Key of the Christian Church. In politics Mr. Key is identified with the national Greenback party.

R. P. KILLICK, druggist, was born in Centerville, Hickman Co., Tenn., on July 3, 1863. He is a son of Dr. A. C. Killick and Martha P. Griner. His father A. C. Killick is a son of George H. Killick (one of Gen. Marion's fifteen-year-old, soldiers of the Revolution) and Mary Dezelle. He was born in 1830 and moved with his parents and two brothers and a sister, George W., Thomas J. and Jane C. Killick, in 1836 to near Centerville, Hickman County, were he resided until of age, when he attended medical lectures at the university, Nashville, Tenn., and graduated under Drs. Paul F. Eve., W. T. Briggs, J. B. Lindsley and others, in 1853, when he returned to his former home, and followed his profession in Hickman and adjoining counties until his death in 1866, at the age of of thirty-six. R. P. Killick at the age of fourteen came to Madisonville and worked at the printer's trade about eighteen months, also about seven months at the marble business. In 1880 he secured employment with C. H. Murphey in the drug business. He continued in this employ until January, 1884, when he established his present business.

JAMES W. KIRKWOOD was born January 29, 1823, in Hopkins County, Ky. He is a son of Hugh Kirkwood, Jr., and Polly (Henson) Kirkwood. The father was born in Kentucky in 1800, and died in 1868. The mother was born in North Carolina and is now living in Hopkins County. James W. was reared on his father's farm, and at the age of twenty-one commenced farming on 175 acres of land, part of which was paid for by his father. He has continued to increase these acres from time to time, as his means would allow, and now owns from 1,200 to 1,400 acres, all of which he has acquired by constant attention to business and judicious management. He is largely engaged in raising live-stock, principally hogs. Mr. Kirkwood was married November 11, 1845, to Martha A. Clark, of Hopkins County, and three sons and six daughters have blessed their union. They are members of the Missionary Baptist Church. In 1851, when Mr. Kirkwood moved to this place, it was all a dense forest.

FRANCIS M. KIRKWOOD was born in Hopkins County, Ky., December 10, 1827, and is a son of Hugh, Jr., and Mary (Henson) Kirkwood, natives of Hopkins County, Ky., and of English descent. Hugh Kirkwood, Jr., was reared a farmer, and at his majority bought a partially improved farm in Charlestown District, and also erected a horse-power grist-mill. There he was engaged in farming and milling for many years. In about 1847 he sold his place and bought wild land in Kitchen Precinct, where he subsequently improved a farm, upon which he resided until his death, which occurred in 1867, in his seventy-first year. He and wife were devoted members of the Missionary Baptist Church, and he was also a member of the Masonic fraternity. Francis M. Kirkwood was employed on his father's farm until he was twenty years old. He then bought a partially improved farm in Dalton District, Hopkins County, on which he still resides, and where he has since been extensively and successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits and stock raising. He has probably raised more stock than any other man in Dalton Precinct. For the past fifteen years he has also been extensively engaged in the tobacco trade. He was married March 16, 1848, to Miss Misaniah Potts, a native of Green County, S. C., and of English parentage. Nine children were the fruit of this union, seven of whom, five sons and two daughters, are yet living. Mr. Kirkwood is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and in politics he is a Democrat.

WILLIAM H. KIRKWOOD was born in Hopkins County, Ky., June 24, 1833, and is a son of James and Mary (Sisk) Kirkwood, respectively natives of Hopkins County, Ky., and North Carolina, and of English descent. Hugh Kirkwood, grandfather of subject, was among the earliest pioneers of Hopkins County, having come to the country when a small boy; he was a veteran in the war of 1812, having served under Gen. Jackson during that struggle, and having participated in the battle of New Orleans. James Kirkwood was all his life engaged in farming and in the grist-mill business. He erected one of the first horse-power grist-mills in Hopkins County, on Silent Run. His death occurred May 20, 1858, in his sixty-seventh year. William H. Kirkwood was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority, he then bought wild land adjoining the old homestead, where he subsequently improved the farm on which he now resides, and to which he has since added the home farm, and also other land, now owning a well improved farm of 370 acres. For the past eleven years he has also been extensively engaged in the steam saw-mill and lumber business. He was married in 1858 to Miss Eliza A. Kirkwood, a native of Hopkins County; five children are the fruit of this union, two sons and three daughters, all of whom are living. Mrs. Eliza A. Kirkwood departed this life December 24, 1873. She was a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Mr. Kirkwood remains a widower; in politics he is a Democrat.

POLK LAFFOON was born October 24, 1844, in Hopkins County, Ky. He is a son of John B. and Susan E. (Henson) Laffoon, natives of North and South Carolina, respectively. His father came to Hopkins County in 1801, and engaged in agricultural pursuits; he represented the county in the legislature in the session of 1851 and 1852, he being the first representative after the adoption of the new constitution; he died September 23, 1873, at the age of eighty-four; the mother died in 1863 at the age of forty-nine. Our subject was reared on his father's farm and received a good literary education in youth. At the breaking out of the war he entered the service as second lieutenant Company I, Eighth Kentucky Confederate States army. At the battle of Fort Donelson he was taken prisoner; seven months after he was exchanged; he then became a member of Morgan's command, and was again captured during the Ohio raid, and held a prisoner until the end of the war, after which he returned to Hopkins County and taught school two years; he then took up the study of law and was admitted to the bar in 1867, having followed this profession since. He is recognized as one of the leading attorneys of the county and State. Mr. Laffoon was elected in 1884 to represent the Second Congressional District of Kentucky in the forty-ninth congress. He was married in 1869 to Miss Hattie E. Parker, of Hopkins County; two sons and two daughters have blessed this union. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, I. O. O. F., and K. of H.

JOHN H. LANGLEY, Hopkins County, was born in Henderson County, Ky., November 23, 1826, and is the second of five children born to Walter C. and Hannah E. (Weir) (Doxcy) Langley, the former a native of the "Old Dominion," and the latter of Tennessee, and of English descent. Walter C. Langley was first married to a Miss Young and then to our subject's mother, in his native State, and for many years kept a tavern at Petersburg, Va. About 1810 he removed to Henderson County, Ky., where he bought military lands five miles east of the city of Henderson, and improved a farm upon which he resided until his death in 1835, in about his fifty-fifth year. The grandfather of our subject, William Weir, was a veteran of the Revolutionary war, having served throughout until its close. Our subject, after his father's death, made his home near Nebo with his uncle, Absalom Weir, who was a veteran in the war of 1812, until he attained his majority. He then bought a farm near Madisonville, where he followed farming about two years; then moved back in the Nebo section and farmed for nineteen years, and in 1873 he sold his farm and removed to Nebo, where he engaged in the tobacco stemming business, which he has since followed. He is doing an extensive business, handling on an average, about 300,000 pounds of leaf and strip tobacco every year; he also owns a farm near Nebo. He is now and has been for the past ten years deputy county clerk. He was married April 23, 1850, to Miss Agnes E. Frost, a native of Tennessee. Seven children have blessed their union, six of whom—four sons and two daughters—are yet living. Mr. and Mrs. Langley are members of the Christian Church. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity; in politics he is a Democrat.

JOHN W. LOVAN was born November 22, 1828, in Hopkins County, Ky. He is a son of R. P. and Talitha (Foley) Lovan, both parents born in this county. The father died in July, 1858, aged fifty-two; the mother is now living at Morton's Gap. Our subject was reared on his father's farm and attended the schools of the neighborhood. At the age of nineteen he commenced farming on rented land, and six years later bought a farm of 190 acres. He continued at this business until 1871, when he moved to Morton's Gap and established a general merchandise business, which he has since continued. When on his farm he served as magistrate. He was married December 16, 1847, to Nancy A. Fugate, of Hopkins County. This union has been blessed with four children—two sons and two daughters—by whom they have twenty-three grandchildren living. Mr. and Mrs. Lovan are exemplary members of the Baptist Church.

JAMES D. W. LOVAN was born October 23, 1838, in Hopkins County, and on the farm where he now lives. He is a son of Gabriel G. and Forancies (Willson) Lovan. The father was born in North Carolina. He came to this farm in 1827, then an unbroken forest. He died in 1867, aged sixty-six. The mother was born in Fayette County, Ky. She died in 1876, aged seventy-one. Our subject was reared on this farm, which he now owns, and which consists of 366 acres, and which he has recently improved with a very comfortable residence. He has long been engaged in handling tobacco, and has followed the gunsmith's trade in connection with agricultural pursuits. Mr. Lovan was married, in 1883, to Oeller Gamllin, who was born in Hopkins County.

J. H. LUNSFORD was born March 23, 1834, in Person County, N. C. He is a son of Alexander and Naria (Cozash) Lunsford, both parents natives of the same county and State. In 1836 the family immigrated to Hopkins County, and engaged in farming. The father died in 1864, aged sixty-five. The mother died in 1867, aged fifty-nine. Our subject was reared on his father's farm, and at the age of twenty-one his father gave him a small farm. He now owns seven farms, which include about 1,600 acres; also a flouring-mill and a number of business houses and other property in town, and all of this valuable property he has acquired by strict attention to business and constant work. He is also engaged in live-stock, owning at present 100 head of cattle, 400 sheep, 300 hogs, etc. Mr. Lunsford was married January 14, 1864, to Anna Mitchell, of Hopkins County. This union has been blessed with three children—two sons and one daughter. William A., the eldest son, graduated in the winter of 1884.

O. G. McNary

N. G. McNary

PROF. E. McCULLEY was born in Hopkins County, Ky., March 30, 1859. He is a son of J. S. and Jane F. (Cox) McCulley. The father was also born in the same State and county, and now resides in Madisonville. Our subject, at the age of nineteen, went to Ohio and entered the National Normal University at Lebanon, remaining five years; part of that time was spent at the normal school at Valparaiso, Ind. He graduated in the scientific course in Lebanon in 1883, and in the phonographic and special mathematics in 1881, at Valparaiso, Ind. In 1882 and 1883 he taught phonography in the National Normal University at Lebanon. In the fall of 1883, the Madisonville Normal School and Business College was organized with Prof. McCulley as president, which position he has ably filled, giving special attention to the mathematical department, which he has built up to a high state of excellence. He has lately resigned his position at Madisonville and has accepted a more lucrative place at Malvern, Ark.

L. McGREW was born February 10, 1861, in Hopkins County, Ky. He is a son of I. T. and Sallie (Hibbs) McGrew, natives of Nelson County, Ky. The father is now living in Madisonville with his son; the mother died in 1874. Subject at the age of sixteen entered the store of J. S. Whittinghall, where he remained as clerk three years, and later was clerk in a store in Owensboro. In 1881 he established his present business, in which he handles wool and all kinds of country produce, also groceries, queensware, etc. He controls his father's farm, which consists of 300 acres located eight miles from Madisonville. Mr. McGrew was married in 1879 to Miss Lillian Hanner of this place. One son gladdens their home.

EDWARD G. McLEOD, Hopkins County, was born in Spottsylvania County, Va., November 2, 1856, and is the second of four children born to Edgar A. and Margaret L. (Moss) McLeod, natives of the "Old Dominion," and of Scotch and English descent, respectively. Edgar McLeod was married in his native State, where he learned the shoemaking trade, and followed it in connection with farming and merchandising for a number of years. He owned a large and well improved farm in Virginia, on which he also conducted a general store and all kinds of mechanical operations. In 1867 he removed to Todd County, Ky., where he bought a farm and engaged in agricultural pursuits. He afterward engaged in the hotel business at Trenton, Ky., for three years. In December, 1873, he came to Earlington, where he engaged in the hotel business for one year; he then opened a shoe shop and has been engaged in that business ever since. He was a soldier in the Confederate service for a short time during the late civil war. He and his wife are members of the Christian Church. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, the I. O. O. F. and the A. O. U. W. Our subject, Edward G. McLeod, from the time he was fifteen years old until 1878, was employed as a salesman in a general store, and in attending school. In January, 1878, he opened a general store on his own account, and has since been doing a good business. He carries a large and well selected stock, amounting to from $4,000 to $5,000. His average annual sales amount to about $16,000. He was married in January, 1883, to Miss Kate C. Dulin, a native of Hopkins County, Ky. They have one daughter, Lanna E. Mr. McLeod is a member of the Christian Church and Mrs. McLeod is a member of no church. He is a Democrat.

WILLIAM C. McNARY was born September 12, 1801, in Fayette County, Ky. His parents, William and Ann (Campbell) McNary, were of Scotch descent. In the year 1812 his father removed to Muhlenburgh County, thirteen miles west of Greenville, where he died and was buried in the family graveyard, where also sleeps the subject of this sketch together with a good many members of at least three generations of the family. William grew up on the farm, and when he arrived at the age of manhood he purchased a tract of land containing 500 acres adjoining his father's farm, where he lived until his death, which occurred on September 19, 1875. All through his long life he was prominently identified with all measures tending to improve the condition of his county. He represented his county in the lower house of the Kentucky legislature, five years, and four years in the senate. He was for several years a member of the board of internal improvement for Green River. In 1858, he accepted a call to the presidency of the Greenville Female Collegiate Institute, which position he filled with honor for three years, 1857, 1858 and 1864. It was owing to his exertions that the iron bridge on Pond River, connecting Hopkins and Muhlenburgh Counties was built. He made two trips to Louisville at his own expense to see the manufacturers and was present at several courts both in Muhlenburgh and Hopkins Counties before he could secure an appropriation for the erection of the bridge. He was for twenty-five years an elder in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. He died full of years and honors, beloved by all who knew him.

DR. WILLIAM T. McNARY, Hopkins County, was born in Muhlenburgh County, Ky., May 14, 1848, and is a son of William C. and Ann B. (Wilkins) McNary, the former a native of Lexington, Fayette County, and the latter of Hopkins County, Ky., of Scotch-Irish and English descent respectively. William C. McNary at the age of ten years, in 1811, removed with his parents to Muhlenburgh County, Ky. There his father William McNary bought military lands and improved a farm. William C. McNary bought wild land adjoining the old homestead, and improved the farm, upon which he resided until his death. He was extensively engaged in farming and stock raising, also in flat-boating on the river to New Orleans. He landed at that place eighteen flat-boats loaded with tobacco, stock and various other produce. For nine years between 1835 and 1850 he was a member of the lower house of the legislature and senate of Kentucky. For several years before and during the war he was president of the Greenville Female Seminary. It was through his influence that the iron bridge across Pond River was erected. He was for a time a member of the board of internal improvement for Green River. He died in 1875 in his seventy-fourth year. He and wife were members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. William T. McNary received a good classical education at Greenville College, and at the age of twenty years commenced the study of medicine under Dr. Thomas H. Moore, of Madisonville, Ky., afterward attended the Medical College of Ohio at Cincinnati. In January, 1871, he commenced the practice of his profession at Nebo, where he has since secured a large and lucrative practice. He was married in December, 1875, to Miss Fannie J. Hoffman, a native of Hopkins County, Ky. Two daughters have blessed their union: Annie L. and Aileen. The Doctor and wife are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church; he is a member of the Masonic fraternity, Royal Arch degree, and also of the I. O. G.T. He is a Democrat.

J. M. MILLS, Hopkins County, was born January 16, 1848, in Christian County, Ky. He is a son of C. W. and Mary A. (Miller) Mills, also born in the same county. The father was born June 24, 1824, and now lives at Nortonville; he has been engaged in agricultural pursuits, and has owned as high as 1,000 acres of land. His health failing him, he engaged in merchandising, and during the civil war lost all by fire and robbery. He had taken an active part in suppressing and bringing to justice a band of outlaws and murderers, who infested Christian County previous to the war. In 1863 he engaged in the saw-milling business, which he successfully carried on for four years. In 1870 he came to Nortonville, and has since been acting as agent in buying and selling lands. He and a party of five compose what is known as the Hopkins Coun y Land & Mining Company, and own about 3,000 acres of land in this locality. Our subject has been engaged in farming and now owns several hundred acres of choice land in Christian County. In 1876 he came to Nortonville, and carried on a drug store and eating house about four and a half years. In 1883 he engaged in general merchandising at this point and still continues the business.

EBENEZER V. MOORE was born in Hopkins County, Ky., October 3, 1857, and is a son of James A. and Sardinia (Hibbs) Moore, natives of Hopkins County, and of Irish and German descent respectively. James A. Moore was reared to farming. His father, Bryant Moore is among the oldest early settlers of the county. Soon after his marriage, James A. Moore bought wild land near the old homestead, and subsequently improved a farm, upon which he resided and was engaged in agricultural pursuits for several years. In early life he learned the carpenter's trade, and followed the same in connection with farming nearly all his life. About 1872 he built the first houses ever erected in the present village of White Plains, where he was engaged in general merchandising for some two years. He then returned to his farm, where he remained for three years, when he rented a farm, and again removed to White Plains, where he built another house and engaged in business for a short time. Here he resided until his death, March 16, 1881, in his fifty-sixth year. He and wife were members of the Baptist Church. Ebenezer V. Moore was employed on the old homestead until he attained his majority, after which he engaged in farming on his own account, and has been so employed ever since. He was married January 9, 1879, to Miss Narcissa A. Whitfield, a native of Hopkins County, Ky. Three children have blessed their union, of whom Felix and Sophronia L. are living. In politics Mr. Moore is a Democrat.

SIDNEY T. MORROW, Hopkins County, was born in Person County, N. C., July 16, 1830, and is a son of John and Mary (Winstead) Morrow, both natives of Person County, N. C., and of Irish and English descent respectively. John Morrow was married in his native State, where in early life he learned the hatter's trade, which he followed in connection with farming for many years. In 1840 he came with his family to what is now Webster County, Ky., where he bought a farm and remained some fifteen years. He then removed to Union County, Ky., where he remained about three years. In 1858 he came to Hopkins County, and bought a farm one mile west of Nebo, where he resided until his death, November 14, 1877, in his eighty-fourth year. Sidney T. remained on his father's farm until he was eighteen years old, then followed teaching mainly for some three or four years. During and after this time he took two trips to Arkansas and Texas. In 1856 he returned to Kentucky and engaged in general merchandising at Vanderburgh, Webster County, for four years. In the spring of 1861 he came to Hopkins County, and bought a farm in the vicinity of Nebo, where he has since been engaged in farming and stock-raising. He has also been in the live-stock trade to some extent. For the past two years he has manufactured brick near Nebo. He was for a time one of the magistrates of Webster County. He was married July 13, 1856, to Miss Drucilla Chandler, a native of Hopkins County, who bore him four children, two of whom, one son and one daughter, are living. Mrs. Drucilla Morrow died January 15, 1865. She was a member of the Christian Church. Mr. Morrow's second marriage was in December, 1865, to Mrs. Bettie L. (Bailey) Laffoon, also a native of Hopkins County, who died in January, 1867. She was a member of the Baptist Church. Mr. Morrow married his present wife, Mrs. A. A. (Mitchell) Morrow, March 30, 1869. Mr. Morrow is a member of the Christian Church, and also of the Masonic fraternity. He is liberal in his political views.

H. H. MORTON was born May 4, 1813, at what is now Morton's Gap, Hopkins County, and in the house where he now lives. This house was built by his father, and was the first brick house built in this county. It is in as good condition as when first built. He is a son of Thomas Morton, Sr., and Elizabeth (Davis) Morton, both natives of Virginia. They came to Kentucky in an early day, and settled in what is now Morton's Gap and bought a large quantity of land in this vicinity. The father was born September 25, 1764, and died May 3, 1844. The mother was born September 14, 1776; she died October 7, 1869. After the father's death the property was divided. Our subject retained the homestead with 123 acres of land. This land he has since disposed of with the exception of five acres with the homestead, where he has always resided. Mr. Morton was married January 18, 1849, to Julia A. Littlepage, of Hopkins County. Mrs. Morton is a member of the Christian Church.

O. H. P. MORTON, Hopkins County, was born July 6, 1815, at Morton's Gap, Ky., and is a son of Thomas Morton, Sr., and Elizabeth (Davis) Morton. At the age of twenty-five he commenced farming on eighty-six acres of land given him by his father. He afterward increased this land to 220 acres. This he has since disposed of, except sixty-six acres, where he now resides. He has recently completed a very comfortable house on the farm, which cost about $500. He was married in 1840 to Susan Whitfield, of Hopkins County. She died in 1874, aged fifty-two. This union was blessed with ten children, four of whom are now living, two sons and two daughters: Nancy, Needham, George and Belle. The deceased are Alonzo, William, Matilda, Edith, Athaliah and Inez. Mr. Morton is a consistent member of the United Baptist Church.

JOHN G. MORTON, banker, was born June 8, 1822, in Hopkins County. He is a son of Samuel and Minerva (Gordon) Morton. The father was born in Jessamine County, Ky., and came with his parents to Henderson (now Hopkins) County in 1798. They settled at Morton's Gap, where Thomas Morton, grandfather of our subject, built the first brick house ever built in this county, which, as an evidence of honest labor performed in these early days, still remains in an excellent state of preservation. Samuel Morton died in 1865, aged sixty-nine. The mother was born in Henderson (now Hopkins) County, in 1805; she died in 1848. The father was engaged in farming and merchandising; he also held the office of justice of the peace, and represented this county in the legislature in 1846, held the office of sheriff in 1850, and in 1856 was elected county judge, which position he held at the time of his death. Our subject was reared on a farm, and at the age of twenty-one was appointed postmaster at Madisonville; this office he afterward resigned and was appointed constable; he held this office about eight years, and as deputy sheriff two years, after which he was engaged in merchandising three years. During the war he handled tobacco and traded generally. At the close of the war he engaged in banking, which he has continued; he is also largely engaged in farming, and owns over 2,500 acres, which are divided into eight farms, employing from twenty to thirty hands. Mr. Morton was married, in 1846, to Miss N. E. Young, of this county. This union has been blessed with six children—three sons and three daughters. Mrs. Morton is a member of the Christian Church.

DAVID A. MORTON, cashier of the Madisonville Bank, was born in Madisonville, Hopkins Co., Ky., June 10, 1850, and is a son of John G. and Nancy E. (Young) Morton. He received a good classical education in youth at the Illinois Military Academy at Fulton, Ill., and at Washington Lee University, of Lexington, Va. At the age of seventeen he was appointed both deputy circuit clerk and deputy county clerk of Hopkins County, which positions he held about two years. He has been identified with the Morton private bank of Madisonville as book-keeper, teller and cashier, ever since its organization in 1869, which positions he still occupies. He was married, September 15, 1874, to Miss Mary H. Ashby, a native of Hopkins County, and a daughter of Columbus Ashby, who was one of the early and prominent merchants of the county. Mr. Morton belongs to no church, but is a member of the I. O. O. F., and of the Masonic order, having attained to the degrees of knighthood and membership of Henderson Commandery, No. 14, K. T. In politics Mr. Morton is a Democrat.

M. M. MORTON was born October 25, 1832, in Hopkins County, Ky. He is a son of Thomas and Elizabeth (Graddy) Morton, natives of this county. The father was born December 25, 1805; he died May 22, 1871. The mother was born in 1810, and died August 22, 1884. Our subject worked on his father's farm until the age of twenty-five, after which he rode as constable four years; he then returned to farming, and buying and shipping tobacco, which he has since continued. He handles about 100 hogsheads annually, usually shipping to New York. Mr. Morton owns about 500 acres of land. With the exception of fifty acres, he has acquired this by his own exertions and judicious management. He was married, December 22, 1880, to Miss Melvina Fugate, of this county. This union has been blessed with three children—one son and two daughters.

JOHN MUNNS was born April 26, 1823, in England. He came to America in 1865, and located at Evansville; there he followed draying ten years; he then moved to Warrick County, Ind., bought 133 acres of land and engaged in farming two years, after which he sold his farm. In 1877 he came to Hopkins County and purchased a farm of 173 acres, one and three-quarter miles from Madisonville, and known as the Thomas Yates farm; this fine farm he still owns. In 1881 he moved to Dawson and built a hotel, which has since been destroyed by fire; he owns three and one-eighth acres of land at this point, which he bought from Mrs. Alexander. On the completion of his hotel, on digging a well, he accidentally discovered the celebrated salts well, the water from which is used for bathing and medicinal purposes in conjunction with the Arcadia Well, the properties of which are not excelled in the world. Mr. Munns was married June 11, 1844, to Eleanor Robinson; this union has been blessed with eight children—three sons and five daughters. They are members of the Missionary Baptist Church. Mr. Munns' farm is situated near the Heckley mines, and is underlaid with coal; in many places on this farm it is exposed on the surface.

C. H. MURPHEY was born November 9, 1857, in Hopkins County, Ky. G. W. Murphey, his father, was also born in the same county; his mother, Mary M. (Porter) Murphy, was born in Todd County, Ky. Her father, Henry Porter, came to Hopkins County when his daughter was a child. G. W. Murphey was first a farmer, but when about thirty-three years old joined the Louisville Methodist Episcopal Conference South, and traveled the Dixon Circuit; after preaching one year he lost his voice on account of exposure, and was compelled to abandon his chosen field. He lived in Ashbysburg, on Green River, Hopkins County, at the time of the loss of his voice. The next business he engaged in was dry goods and trading in tobacco at Ashbysburg; he followed this for about two years, when he returned to his farm seven miles east of Madisonville, Ky.; after two years' hard work and exposure he lost his health, and was compelled to abandon his farming. In the fall of 1870 he was elected school commissioner of Hopkins County, and filled that position with credit to himself. In 1874 he made the race for county clerk, and was defeated by less than forty majority; the defeat being caused by the combination of the other candidates for the same position, one withdrawing and giving his strength to the other candidate. In 1876 he filled out the unexpired term of Judge J. M. Compton as school commissioner, Compton dying that year. In 1875 he engaged in the drug business and continued the same until his death, which occurred January 11, 1878. C. H. Murphey commenced in the drug business when fourteen years old, and clerked for Messrs. Holeman & Nesbit one year. In 1875 he again went into the drug business as clerk in his father's house, and continued until his father's death. D. Elta Cardwell and he bought the drug store February 1, 1878, and continued the business till November, 1880, when Mr. Cardwell died. Mr. Murphey then bought Cardwell's half interest, and has since continued in the same business. He was married December 20, 1882, to Miss Georgia Lee Darnall, of Cadiz, Trigg Co., Ky. To this marriage no children have been born. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and of the K. of H. Mr. Murphey had a brother, Robert William, and a sister, Ella Morgan, that are dead. He has also two sisters living—their home in Madisonville. The youngest is Lubbie Jackson, living with her mother; the other is Mrs. Linnie Lee Jones, wife of A. R. Jones, a dry goods merchant. All are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

W. A. NISBET was born January 2, 1834, in Hopkins County, Ky., and is a son of James and Mary E. (Pritchett) Nisbet, natives of South Carolina and Virginia, respectively. At the age of twenty-one he hired out to William Love, a Scotch farmer, for one year, receiving $13 per month wages, and during this time he lost but one Saturday afternoon, while attending a church meeting; after which he engaged in trading in livestock, also farming. April 4, 1860, he opened a livery stable at Madisonville, and has since carried on this business; this is the oldest stable in this or the adjoining counties. He has always been engaged in agricultural pursuits, and now owns over 2,000 acres, in which are included seven farms; also several store-rooms and other property in Madisonville; he is also a member of the firm of Kirkwood & Nisbet, druggists at this point. Mr. Nisbet commenced life with no assistance, and by constant application and untiring energy has become one of the wealthiest and most honored citizens of the county. He was married June 28, 1870, to Miss Nannie Jagoe, of Muhlenburgh County. Three sons and one daughter have blessed this union. Mr. and Mrs. Nisbet are members of the Christian Church.

DR. GEORGE W. NOEL, of Madisonville, Hopkins County, was born June 25, 1810, in Madisonville, Ky., and is now the oldest resident living here, i. e., who was born here. He is a son of William and Ann (Word) Noel, both natives of Virginia. The father kept the hotel here for a number of years. He came here from near Lexington, Ky., about the year 1806 or 1807. He also held the offices of sheriff, constable, magistrate, and auctioneer. Dr. Noel commenced the study of medicine at the age of twenty, with Dr. Francis Jett, of this place. After studying about two years, his father died; he then abandoned the study for a time, and married a beautiful and accomplished lady of Christian County, Ky., by the name of Emma M. Summers, and in 1835 he resumed the study of medicine, and attended a course of lectures in the Transylvania University at Lexington, Ky. In the spring of 1836, he commenced the practice of his profession, which he has since followed. When he commenced he was too poor to own a horse, but fortunately an old friend, Col. William Brooks, loaned him one for one year, at the end of which time, he having made but little, was still too poor to pay for it, but his old friend said to him: "Doctor, keep the horse and pay me for him in twelve months." He did so, and at the end of the time he paid the Colonel for his horse, and will always feel grateful to him for his kindness. About this time he was blessed with two sweet and lovely children, the eldest a daughter (Cordelia A.), and the other a son (William T.). He purchased two acres of land in 1837 or 1838, and added other lands as his means would allow, and now owns about fifty-five or sixty acres, all lying inside the corporation. He occupies a very comfortable brick residence, which he built in 1857, at a cost of about $3,580. During the war he was appointed provost marshal at Madisonville. Dr. Noel's wife died August 17, 1883, aged seventy-three, leaving a son, William T. Noel, of Evansville, Ind., an extensive tobacco broker at that point. The Doctor is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is favorably known not only in this place, but also in the adjoining towns and counties. In politics he was always a Whig, and an uncompromising friend and admirer of the great patriot and statesman, Henry Clay. The first vote he ever gave for president of the United States was for Mr. Clay, and the last one was for Hon. James G. Blaine.

THOMAS Y. NORTHEN was born in Sumner County, Tenn., September 20, 1828, and is a son of Peter and Elizabeth (Fitzhugh) Northen, natives of the "Old Dominion" and of English descent. Peter Northen was married in his native State, and soon after moved to Sumner County, Tenn., where he bought a farm and resided until 1842; he then moved to what is now Webster County, Ky., and bought a farm near the town of Providence, where he resided until his death in 1874, in his seventy-fifth year. Thomas Y. remained on his father's farm until he attained his majority, and then bought a farm of 100 acres adjoining the old homestead in Webster County, to which he afterward added seventy-five acres. He followed farming successfully there until May, 1884, when he sold the farm and came to Nebo, where he is living a retired life. He has been four times married; six children—four sons and two daughters—all living, are the fruits of the first two marriages. For more than thirty years, Mr. Northen was a member of the Missionary Baptist Church, but for the last four years has belonged to the old school Baptist Church. In politics he is a Democrat.

REV. JOHN O'BRYAN was born April 4, 1828, in Hopkins County, Ky. He is a son of Redick and Elizabeth (Bourland) O'Bryan. The father was born May 22, 1792, in North Carolina. In 1810 the family immigrated to Hopkins County, Ky.; he died September, 1881, aged eighty-eight. The mother was born in South Carolina, December 9, 1796. At the age of four years she came with her parents to Hopkins County, where she died in 1866. These parents were life-long and devoted members of the United Baptist Church, having united themselves with this body in 1811. Our subject was reared on his father's farm. At the age of twenty-three, he bought 136 acres of land on Richland Creek, which he afterward improved and where he lived for over thirty years; in 1882 he came to Dawson, having exchanged his farm for property here; he owns the Dawson House and four other dwellings, and is engaged in the furniture business at this point. Mr. O'Byran is a Baptist Minister and since the age of twenty-six has been engaged in preaching. The past twenty-five years he has had charge of the Richland Church; he also has charge of the Harmony Church at Dawson, and one in Webster County. He was married December 4, 1850, to Louisa J. Sisk, of Hopkins County; this union was blessed with nine children—five sons and four daughters. Mrs. O'Bryan died September 26, 1876, aged forty-five. Mr. O'Bryan's second marriage was April 9, 1878, to Mary A. Sisk, widow of Lee Harrison, and to this union have been born two children—one son and one daughter. Mrs. O'Bryan has one daughter by her former marriage, Mrs. J. D. Meaders.

S. W. OFFUTT was born March 4, 1838, in Christian County, Ky. He is a son of John M. and Nancy (Wright) Offutt, both parents born in Richmond, Va. The father was brought by his parents to Fayette County, Ky., in 1792. He died in Hopkins County, September 15, 1862, at the advanced age of ninety-eight years. He followed the carpenter's trade, and assisted in erecting many of the buildings in Madisonville. The mother died in 1878, aged seventy-three. Our subject, at the age of twenty-one, bought a farm containing 214 acres, located three and one-half miles south of Madisonville. This farm he has since owned. Rich veins of coal run through this land, and for the past twenty years Mr. Offutt has furnished coal to the mills and other places from his land. He has never sought or held an office beyond that of jailer, which he now holds, having been elected in 1882. He was married May 1, 1862, to Miss R. A. Kinnett, of Marion County, Ky. Six children have blessed this union—four sons and two daughters. His father served in the war of 1812, and immigrated to Hopkins County in 1838.

JOHN W. OLIVER, Hopkins County, was born in Anderson County, Ky., October 30, 1845, and is the seventh in a family of thirteen children born to James B. and Mary A. (Hyeatt) Oliver, natives of Anderson County, Ky., and of Irish and English descent, respectively. James B. Oliver was educated and married in his native county, where he was, for many years, engaged in agricultural pursuits. In 1857 he came to Hopkins County, Ky., bought a farm near Nebo, and engaged in farming until his death in November, 1875, in his sixty-third year. He and wife were members of the Christian Church. John W. Oliver, when twenty years old, went to work at the carpenter's trade, which he followed eight or nine years, after which he went to the Indian Territory, where he farmed one year. He then returned to Kentucky and farmed the homestead two years. In the spring of 1878 he opened a grocery store at Manitou, where he remained about eighteen months. He then moved the store to a point near the Hopkins County fair grounds, about one mile west of Madisonville, where he still continues business, having a fair trade. He was married September 28, 1879, to Miss Theresia Canady, a native of Hopkins County, Ky. Three children have blessed their union, two of whom—both daughters—are living. In politics Mr. Oliver is a Democrat.

W. D. ORR, county attorney of Hopkins County, was born September 28, 1856, in Webster County, Ky. He is a son of Judge L. D. Orr, of the same county. In 1872 our subject came to Madisonville, and entered Prof. Boring's select school, where he remained four years. In July, 1877, he commenced the study of law with Laffoon & Gordon, was admitted to the bar in October, 1878, since which time he has been engaged in the practice of his profession. In the spring of 1880 he was elected city attorney, of Madisonville, and re-elected in 1881. In August, 1882, he was elected county attorney, which office he has since creditably filled. Mr. Orr was married in 1880 to Miss Annie G. McGary, of Madisonville. One daughter has blessed this union. Mr. Orr was a delegate to the National Democratic Convention in 1884, representing the Second Congressional District of Kentucky.

DR. JOHN J. OUTLAW was born March 5, 1829, in Duplin County, N. C. He is a son of Louis and Elizabeth (Whitfield) Outlaw, natives of the same State. In 1847, the family immigrated to Hopkins County, Ky. The father, when in his native State, was engaged in merchandising, also in farming. He first settled two miles north of Nortonville, but after remaining two years, moved to a point one mile south of the village; there he died July 19, 1859, aged seventy-one. The mother was born December 2, 1795; she died in August, 1876. Dr. Outlaw received a good literary education in youth, after which he entered his father's store as clerk, since which time he has been identified in merchandising and dentistry; the latter profession he has followed the last twenty years; is thoroughly skilled in all details pertaining to the profession, which is a safe guarantee that all work intrusted to him will receive skillful attention; twelve years of this time he rode as deputy sheriff and constable. In 1880 he, with his brother, Needham H., established a general store at Nortonville, which they have since successfully managed, and are doing a business of about $10,000 a year. Their parents had a family of thirteen children, six of whom are living, viz.: Louis, Joseph, Caroline (now Mrs. Rodgers), Narcissa (now Mrs. Whitfield), John J. and Needham H. Dr. Outlaw was married, December 4, 1878, to Jertie Whitfield, of Tennessee; they have one son. Needham H. Outlaw was married, April 20, 1880, to Georgia A. Whitfield, of Tennessee. The Doctor is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and I. O. O. F. Needham H. is also a member of the Masonic fraternity.

W. B. PARKER was born March 15, 1820, in Essex County, Va., and is a son of Thomas and Harriet (Burton) Parker. His father, who was born in the same county and State, was a farmer and speculator, and died in 1832, aged fifty-two. His mother, who was born in Cumberland County, died in 1873, at the age of sixty-nine years. Our subject, at the age of twelve years, commenced to learn the millwright's trade, which he has since followed, in connection with farming. In 1836, he went to Alabama; in 1841, he moved to Christian County, and in 1846, built the first flouring-mill in the county, located on Little River, about one mile from the court house. In 1853, he came to Hopkins County, and built the first double circular saw-mill in the county or State. He owns a farm of 425 acres, located five miles west of Madisonville, on which he has built a saw-mill, which he runs in connection with his farm. Mr. Parker represented Hopkins County in the legislature during the sessions of 1857 and 1858. He was married, in 1841, to Mary J. Crabtree, of Christian County; she died in 1849, at the age of twenty-three, leaving two daughters—Emily, wife of Martin Rice, and Harriet, wife of Polk Laffoon. His second marriage was in 1852, to Martha A. Crabtree, also of Christian County; she died in 1878, aged fifty-two, leaving three children: William H., Capitola, now wife of William Bradley, and Jessie, now living with her sister, Mrs. Laffoon. Mr. Parker's third marriage was in 1880, to Mrs. Martha A. Oldham, of Hopkins County. Mrs. Parker has one son, James, by her former marriage. Mr. Parker is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

JEFFERSON J. PARRISH was born in Granville County, N. C., May 25, 1829, and is a son of William and Mary (Jones) Parrish, natives of North Carolina, and of English descent. William Parrish was married in his native State, where he was extensively engaged in planting for many years. In the fall of 1851, he came to Hopkins County, Ky., and bought a farm near Nebo, upon which he resided until his death, in November, 1872, in his seventy-third year. He was a member of the United Baptist Church. His father, William C. Parrish, the grandfather of our subject, was a veteran of the Revolutionary war, and served under Gen. Washington. His death was caused by injuries received from a hogshead of tobacco rolling over him. Jefferson J. Parrish remained on his father's farm until he attained his majority, and in the fall of 1850 came to Hopkins County, Ky., and bought a farm near Nebo, where he resided until 1862. He then sold and bought wild land in the same neighborhood, where he has since improved the farm on which he now resides, and where he has farmed successfully. He was married, in 1852, to Miss Lucretia Roberts, a native of North Carolina. To them were born four children, of whom three sons are living. Mrs. Lucretia Parrish died in October, 1862. She was a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Mr. Parrish's second marriage was in 1865, to Miss Victoria A. Boyd, a native of Tennessee. Seven children have blessed this union, six of whom—four sons and two daughters—are living. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and his wife of the Missionary Baptist Church. He is a Democrat.

NICHOLAS J. PARRISH was born in Orange County, N. C., April 23, 1850, and is the son of William and Charlotte (Madison) Parrish. He was employed on his father's farm until twenty years of age, after which he learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed for about three years. His father, at his death, willed him a part of the old homestead, to which he has since added the interest of the other heirs in the old place, and also other lands, now owning 250 acres of land. He follows farming and stock raising, and makes the raising of tobacco a specialty. He was married October 4, 1874, to Miss Myra J. Mitchell, a native of Hopkins County. Two children have blessed their union—Georgie A. and William N., both living. Mrs. Parrish is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Mr. Parrish belongs to no church, but is a devout Christian and holds to the doctrines of the Cumberland Presbyterians. He is a member of the C. S. Hoffman Lodge, No. 252, A. F. & A. M. and is at present J. W. of that lodge. He is a Democrat.

THOMAS B. PARTER was born in Hopkins County, Ky., March 11, 1845, and is a son of Bradford and Martha (Rodgers) Parter, the former a native of Butler County, Ky., and the latter a native of the "Old Dominion," and of English and Irish descent, respectively. Bradford L. Parter, when a young man, removed to Logan County, Ky., where he married and engaged in farming for many years. In 1837 he removed to Iowa, where for two years he was engaged in teaching the Indians. He then returned to Kentucky and bought a farm two miles east of Nebo, in Hopkins County, where he was extensively engaged in farming and stock raising until his death in May, 1865, in his fifty-sixth year. He was one of the magistrates of Hopkins County for a number of years. Although a stanch Whig in politics he twice represented Hopkins County in the lower house of the Kentucky legislature. He and his wife were devoted members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Thomas B., after his father's death, inherited a part of the old homestead, upon which he still resides, and to which he has added from time to time. He is a successful farmer and stock raiser. He was married in 1878 to Miss Susan Morgan, a native of Muhlenburgh County, Ky. To them were born two sons, both of whom are living. Mrs. Susan Parter died in September, 1881. She was a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Mr. Parter's second marriage was in August, 1883, to Mrs. Laura (Booth) Head, a native of Hopkins County, Ky. One son has blessed their union. Mr. Parter is a member of the Presbyterian and his wife of the Baptist Church. In politics he is a Republican.

REV. CHARLES M. PENDLEY was born in Hopkins County, Ky., April 22, 1853, and is a son of Benjamin and Emily Pendley, natives of Butler County, Ky., and of English descent. Benjamin Pendley was married in his native county, and was there engaged in farming for several years. About 1848 he came to Hopkins County, Ky., and bought a farm near Nortonville, upon which he still resides. He served for a few months in a Kentucky regiment, in the Federal service, but was discharged on account of disability. Rev. Charles M. Pendley received a good common school education in youth and was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority. He then bought a farm near Nortonville, where he resided and was engaged in agricultural pursuits for six years. In 1880 he sold this place and bought another near White Plains, where he still resides, and is engaged in farming, in connection with the ministry. He was married July 13, 1874, to Miss Eliza M. Shelton, a native of Muhlenburgh County, Ky., and a daughter of William G. and Mary A. (Fuller) Shelton, who were among the early settlers of Muhlenburgh County. Five children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Pendley, four of whom—three sons and one daughter—are living. Mr. Pendley and wife are members of the United Baptist Church, in which church he has been a regularly ordained minister for the past six or seven years. In politics he is a Democrat, and is one of the enterprising farmers as well as one of the well-known and respected citizens of the district.

The father was born in Butler County, Ky., July 8, 1823; the mother was born in Lincoln County, Tenn. These parents have had eleven children, nine of whom are living, viz.: Richard F., Nancy C. (now wife of J. T. Day), John W., George H., Mattie M., Virginia C., Everhardt G., Sophia E., and Robert. Mr. and Mrs. Pendley are consistent members of the United Baptist Church. John W. Pendley, at the age of seventeen, engaged in teaching, and at intervals attended the Hill Grove Academy. Later he attended the West Kentucky College. By dilligent study and having a natural talent in this direction, he has placed himself foremost in the profession of teaching, being competent now to take charge of any of the graded schools. The past five years he has been engaged in the work, and at present has charge of the school at Dawson.

GEORGE M. PRICE, Hopkins County, was born December 14, 1854, in Webster County, Ky. He is a son of W. A. and Nancy A. (Jenkins) Price, both parents born in the same county and State, and living in Clay, Ky. Our subject, in youth, received a good literary education; at the age of eighteen he entered a dry goods store in Clay as clerk; there he remained one year, after which he attended school about two years. He then became deputy sheriff; this position he held a short time, after which he went to Dixon, and was clerk in a drug store there about three years. He then was appointed deputy county and circuit clerk, which position he held about one year. He then became public administrator for the county; this office he held two years. In March, 1883, he moved to Dawson, and, in company with T. W. Clark, opened a grocery and drug store. They have discontinued handling groceries and are now engaged in a general drug business. Mr. Price is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

HORACE PRITCHETT was born June 15, 1804, in Spottsylvania County, Va. At the age of four years he came with his parents to Garrard County, Ky. In 1819 they moved to Hopkins County and engaged in farming. At the age of twenty-three our subject rented a farm, on which he lived one year, then purchased a farm of fifty acres, about two miles east of Madisonville, and as his means would allow added other lands, and now owns 300 acres. He continued to reside on that farm until 1851, when he moved to town and built the first steam flour-mill here. This he sold after running it five years. He attached a carding machine to this mill, which he still owns. He owns another carding machine which is run by his son. He owns eight houses and lots, also several vacant lots in Madisonville, and has paid security debts to the amount of about $5,000. Mr. Pritchett commenced life without any assistance, and as a reward of honesty, integrity, and strict attention to business, he has succeeded in acquiring this valuable property. Mr. Pritchett has neither sought nor held any office, beside that of magistrate when on his farm. He was married, in 1827, to Lucy Goodloe, of Kentucky. Five children have blessed this union—three sons and two daughters. He and his wife are life long and devoted members of the Christian Church, and are the only surviving members of the church with which they first became members. Mr. Pritchett is known as the daddy of prohibition. At the breaking out of the war he owned ten or twelve slaves, but voted for the abolition of slavery and has always voted the Republican ticket.

J. W. PRITCHETT was born December 3, 1840, in Hopkins County, Ky. He is a son of Horace and Lucy W. (Goodloe) Pritchett, of Madisonville. JOHN H. SHAW, Hopkins County, was born September 19, 1844, in Duplin County, N. C., and is a son of George W. and Sarah E. (Outlaw) Shaw. The father was born in Virginia, and was engaged in agricultural pursuits. In 1849 he visited Hopkins County and purchased land; two years later he sold this land and returned to his native State, (North Carolina) where he engaged in farming, but principally raising turpentine. In 1867 he again came to Hopkins County, and continued farming, he died in September, 1883, aged seventy years. The mother was born in Duplin County, N. C.; she died in October, 1881, aged sixty-eight years. Our subject enlisted in April, 1861, in Company B, Third North Carolina Infantry Confederate States army, and served to the end of the war. He participated in the battle of Seven Pines, in the seven days' battle in front of Richmond, and the battles of Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville,—the last was where Gen. Stonewall Jackson was killed. Mr. Shaw also participated in all the principal battles of the Shenandoah Valley, Va. On December 13, 1864, the army left for Petersburg; there he fought in the trenches until April 2, 1865, at which time they evacuated Petersburg and continued fighting each day until the surrender of General Lee, April 9, 1865. During the latter part of the war, Mr. Shaw acted as adjutant of the First and Third North Carolina Regiments, they being consolidated. At the close of the war he returned to his native State and engaged in raising turpentine, and trading in live-stock. In 1867 he came to Hopkins County, and in company with J. J. Outlaw engaged in dentistry and photography one year, since which time he has been engaged in farming. He owns four farms of about 100 acres each, three of which he has rented out. He was married in 1870 to Fannie Taliaferro, of Hopkins County; she died in 1875, leaving one daughter—Eula Lee. In 1876 Mr. Shaw married Lucy Lee Williams, of Tennessee; she died May 7, 1883, leaving two daughters —Eva and Emma. Mr. Shaw is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

CHRISTOPHER C. SHELTON was born in Muhlenburgh County, Ky., February 2, 1848, and is a son of William G. and Mary A. (Fuller) Shelton, natives of Virginia and Muhlenburgh County, Ky., and of Irish and English descent, respectively. When but an infant, in about 1825, William G. Shelton was brought by his parents to Muhlenburgh County; there his father, John Shelton, who had served in the war of 1812 under Gen. Harrison at the battle of Tippecanoe, located military lands and subsequently improved a farm, on which he resided until his death. William G. Shelton was employed on his father's farm until he was about eighteen years old. He was then employed as an overseer on a farm until his marriage, after which he bought a farm in Muhlenburgh County; altogether he bought and settled on three different farms. In March, 1864, he came to Hopkins County, and settled on a farm, which he had bought some years before, and where he still resides. Mrs. Mary A. Shelton departed this life in March, 1864, a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Mr. Shelton is a member of the Missionary Baptist Church. Christopher C. Shelton was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority; he then farmed on shares for two years; then bought seventy-six acres of wild land near White Plains, which he has since improved, and to which he has added from time to time, now owning 121 acres, on which he is successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits, and stock raising, making the culture of tobacco a specialty; he is also to some extent engaged in butchering. He was married August 9, 1870 to Miss Malisse A. Clark, a native of Hopkins County, Ky. Six children—four sons and two daughters—have blessed their union, all of whom are living. Mr. Shelton is a devoted member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. In politics he is a Democrat.

HORACE B. SIPPERLY, Hopkins County, was born in Rensselaer County, N. Y., March 18, 1821, and is a son of John and Eve (Keiser) Sipperly, natives of New York and of German descent. John Sipperly was educated and married in his native State, where he was engaged in farming until his death, which occurred when our subject was only three or four months old. Horace B. Sipperly lived with his mother in the East until he was about sixteen years old. He was employed at various pursuits in the Eastern and Middle States until 1851. He then came to Hopkins County, Ky., and located at Madisonville, where he was employed at farming and in a woolen-mill for some six years, after which he was employed in the saw mill business for four years, and then engaged in the flouring-mill business for one year, after which he steam-boated on the Ohio and Green Rivers for about six months. He then returned to Madisonville, where he was employed in the turning business for three years, after which he was engaged in the grocery and dry goods business at the same place for some six or seven years. He was then mainly engaged in the saloon and saw-mill business for a short time, and at other pursuits at Madisonville, Slaughterville, Earlington and Henderson, until December 18, 1883, when he came to Nortonville, where he has since had charge of a restaurant or lunch stand for the Southern News Company. He was first married in December, 1852, to Miss Jane Crenshaw, a native of Virginia; she was a member of the Baptist Church. He was next married in December, 1858, to Mrs. Mary P. (Wright) Rains, a native of Hopkins County, Ky. To this union were born three children, none of whom are now living. Mrs. Sipperly is a member of the Christian Church. Mr. Sipperly is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and also of the I. O. O. F., having advanced to the degree of the encampment, and has passed all the chairs in the subordinate lodges. In politics he was formerly a Republican, but is now identified with the national Greenback party.

A. J. SISK, SR., county judge, was born November 27, 1824, in Hopkins County, Ky. He is a son of Andrew and Mary Sisk. The father was born in North Carolina, and the mother in Virginia, and were of English origin. They came to Kentucky about 1815, and settled in what is now Hopkins County. The father served in the war of 1812, and participated in the battle of Tippecanoe; he also represented Hopkins County three terms in the legislature, and four years in the State senate—this district then comprising the counties of Union, Hopkins and Henderson. He died in the fall of 1857, aged sixty-seven. The mother died in 1854, aged sixty-four. Judge Sisk was reared on his father's farm, and at the age of twenty-two commenced farming on land which he inherited; in 1852 he was elected constable and served four years; he then served four years as deputy sheriff and in 1866 was elected sheriff and served four years; in 1870 he was elected county judge, served eight years, and in 1882 was again elected county judge, which position he still honorably fills. He was married in April, 1848, to Martha C. Hampton, of Hopkins County; she died in January, 1858, leaving three children—two sons and one daughter—one son since deceased. His second marriage in April, 1860, was to Narcissa I. Morton, of Hopkins County; she died in December, 1864, leaving three children—two sons and one daughter—one son since deceased. His third marriage in December, 1869, was to Mary F. Leach, of Hopkins County; this union is blessed with five children—three sons and two daughters.

WILLIAM H. SISK was born in Hopkins County, Ky., November 4, 1832, and is a son of Travis H. and Kesiah (Sisk) Sisk, natives of Hopkins County, and of English descent. Travis H. Sisk was educated and married in his native county, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits all his life. Robert Sisk, the grandfather of our subject, was a veteran in the war of 1812, and served in the Canadian campaign under Gen. Harrison. Travis Sisk's death occurred January 27, 1882, in his seventy-second year. William H. Sisk was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority. He then bought a partially improved farm seven miles southeast from Madisonville, upon which he remained one year. He then bought 100 acres of wild land in what is now Dalton Precinct, twelve miles west from Madisonville, where he now resides and to which he has added from time to time, now owning well improved farms amounting to some 1,100 acres. His home farm, of 240 acres, is one of the best improved places in the district. In the fall of 1871 he erected a store building near his residence, and has since been successfully engaged in merchandising in connection with farming. He carries a well selected general stock, amounting to an average of about $3,000. He was one of the magistrates of the Dalton District for sixteen consecutive years, and for the last six years has also been postmaster at Silent Run. He was first married December 28, 1852, to Miss Pernecy O'Bryan, a native of Hopkins County. To this union were born thirteen children, eleven of whom, seven sons and four daughters, are living. Mrs. Pernecy Sisk departed this life April 26, 1880, in her forty-third year. She was a devoted and consistent member of the Missionary Baptist Church. Mr. Sisk was next married in September, 1880, to Mrs. Martha H. (Holloman) Shackelford, also a native of Hopkins County. Two daughters have blessed this union: Gippa L., and an infant not named. Mr. Sisk and wife are and have been from early life members of the Church; he of the Missionary Baptist and she of the Cumberland Presbyterian. For the past six years Mr. Sisk has been a deacon, and for more then twenty years has held various positions in the Church. In politics Mr. Sisk is a Democrat.

ELISHA W. SISK was born December 30, 1833, in Hopkins County, Ky., and is a son of Harrison D. and Martha (Williams) Sisk. The father was born in Hopkins County; he died in 1859, aged fifty-one. The mother was born in Tennessee; she died in September, 1839. Our subject, at the age of eighteen, hired out to act as overseer, and continued two years. In 1853 he was taken ill with measles, which rendered him unfit for agricultural pursuits; he then entered a store as clerk at Madisonville, where he remained two years; he then carried on his father's farm one year, after which he rented one for ten years. In 1866 he bought his present place, consisting of 125 acres, about sixty-five of which are now improved. He had the misfortune of losing two horses, the first year he bought this farm, their loss being greater than he could well afford at that time, as payments on this farm were coming due; he succeeded in meeting all obligations, however, and has placed himself in comfortable circumstances. In 1880 he was elected constable without opposition; he was re-elected in 1882 by a majority of 300; in January, 1885, he became deputy sheriff, which position he now holds. Mr. Sisk was married, in 1856, to Margaret A. Oldham of Hopkins County. These parents have had thirteen children (eleven now living),four sons and seven daughters. They are members of the United Baptist Church.

EB. W. SISK was born January 2, 1834, in Hopkins County, Ky. He is a son of E. D. and Mary (Fox) Sisk. They were also born in this county. The father died August 26, 1854; the mother died June 13, 1859. At the age of twenty-one our subject commenced farming on his own account; this business he continued until 1870, when he engaged in merchandising in Morton's Gap, and has successfully carried on this business till 1882, when he sold out his stock to George M. Davis, and has since been engaged in agricultural pursuits. He now owns a very valuable farm consisting of 269 acres, situated about half a mile east of Morton's Gap, on which he has recently completed one of the most attractive residences in this part of the county. Mr. Sisk commenced life with no assistance, but by constant attention to business and judicious management, he has placed himself in comfortable circumstances. He was married in 1856 to Christina Williams, of Hopkins County.

CLIFTON H. SLATON was born in Hopkins County, Ky., November 22, 1846, and is the third of fourteen children born to Arthur W. and Pollie E. (O'Bryan) Slaton, also natives of Hopkins County. They were of Welsh-Irish and Irish descent, respectively. Arthur W. Slaton, after attaining his majority, bought wild lands four miles west of Madisonville, upon which he erected a rude log-cabin and subsequently improved a farm, upon which he still resides, now owning a well improved farm of some 200 acres. He was married when thirty years old, and he and wife are members of the Baptist Church. Clifton H. Slaton was employed on his father's farm until he was twenty years old, when he bought wild land near the old homestead and conducted a farm four years. He was then employed at various pursuits for about seven years. In the spring of 1876 he came to Madisonville, where he was employed as salesman in a dry goods store for eighteen months. He then became a partner in the wholesale and retail saddlery and harness business with the firm of Bourland & Slaton, of Madisonville, where he remained nine months. He then engaged in the grocery trade at the same place, continuing until March, 1881, when he sold out and again engaged in farming, which he pursued until February, 1884. He then returned to Madisonville and again embarked in the grocery business in company with W. H. Jernigan, under the firm name of Jernigan &'Slaton. They carry a large and well selected stock in their line and are doing an extensive business. In 1864 he enlisted in Company H, Twenty-first Volunteer Infantry, Kentucky, United States service, and served until the close of the war. He was first married in October, 1866, to Miss Armina F. Henry; a native of Webster County, Ky. To this union were born two children, only one of whom, Martha A. is now living. Mrs. Armina Slaton departed this life in May, 1871. She was a devoted member of the General Baptist Church. Mr. Slaton was next married in 1879 to Miss Cynthia A. Scott, a native of Grayson County, Ky. Two children—one son and one daughter—have blessed this union. Mr. Slaton is a member of the Baptist Church, and Mrs. Slaton of the Christian Church. He is also a member of the Masonic fraternity, and in politics is a Republican.

PROF. THOMAS H. SMITH was born April 24, 1846, in Morgan County, Ga. He is a son of Henry and Jane (Winfrey) Smith, both natives of the same county and State. His father was engaged in agricultural pursuits; he died in 1852, aged sixty. The mother died in 1863 aged fifty-seven. Prof. Smith enlisted in 1861 in Company D, Third Georgia Infantry; about fifteen months later he was promoted adjutant; this position is held until the end of the war, after which he returned to Georgia and soon after moved to Keysburgh, Logan Co., Ky., where he engaged in teaching about four years; he then removed to Robertson County, Tenn., taught school two years, and also taught about three years in Butler County, Ky. In 1873 he came to Madisonville, and has since been engaged in teaching. In November, 1882, he was elected county school commissioner, which office he still holds; he has also been vice-president of the State Teachers' Association, and is now principal of the Madisonville Graded School. He was married September 16, 1869, to Mildred A. Shaw, of Montgomery County, Tenn. This lady died May 9, 1884, aged thirty-eight years, leaving three children—two sons and one daughter. The professor is a member of the I. O. O. F., Masonic order, G. T. and K. of H.; he is also engaged in preaching, having charge of many of the Christian Churches throughout the county.

W. L. SMITH, Hopkins County, agent and operator. Chesapeake, Ohio & Southwestern Railroad, was born March 8, 1861, in Hart County, Ky. He is a son of Dr. J. and Catherine (Highbaugh) Smith. The father was born in Taylor County, Ky., and for over thirty years has been engaged in the practice of his profession. He resides on his farm in Hart County. The mother was a native of Hart County. She died in 1872. Our subject received a good education in youth. At the age of sixteen he taught school one term, after which he took up the study of telegraphy. In 1878 he entered the store of A. J. Upton, at Uptonville. There he remained as clerk one year, after which he entered the telegraph office at that point, and there completed this art. In 1880 he came to Dawson, and was appointed to his present position, which he has since acceptably filled. The population at that time was about fifty. It has since increased to about 1,000.

ROBERT C. SPEED was born in Hopkins County, Ky., July 5, 1844, and is the eldest of a family of six children born to Robert B. and Laura A. (Summers) Speed, both of whom were natives of Kentucky, and of English descent. Robert B. Speed, when a young man, came to Madisonville, Ky., where he engaged in general merchandising and the tobacco trade for a number of years, with excellent success. In 1864 he removed to Evansville, Ind., where he engaged in the wholesale grocery trade for about one year. He then went to New Orleans, where he opened a large commission house under the firm name of Speed, Summers & Co., and did an extensive and flourishing business until his death from yellow fever in October, 1867, in his fifty-sixth year. He was a most successful business man, and a member of the I. O. O. F. Robert C. Speed received a good common school education, and also an academic education, having attended Eminence College, of Henry County, Ky., for two years. At the age of eighteen he embarked in the retail dry goods trade on his own account at Madisonville, Ky., continuing the same until 1870, when he was appointed deputy county clerk, which position he held for eight years. In 1878 he was elected county clerk, and held that office for four years. In the fall of 1883 he was appointed weighmaster of the Hecla Coal & Mining Company, and soon after became book-keeper for the same company, which position he now holds. He served for a short time in the Federal army during the late civil war. He was married April 8, 1868, to Miss Martha E. Walden, a native of Union County, Ky., and daughter of the Rev. J. C. Walden, one of the leading ministers of the Christian Church. Six children—four sons and two daughters, all of whom are now living—have blessed this union. Mr. Speed is a member of the I. O. O. F., and also of the Masonic fraternity. In politics he is a stanch Democrat.

MOSES W. STANLEY was born in Hopkins County, Ky., February 20, 1841, and is the youngest of four living children born to Moses and Lucinda W. (Bobbitt) Stanley, natives of North Carolina and of Christian County, Ky., respectively, and of English descent. At the age of twelve years, in 1818, Moses Stanley came with his parents to what is now the south part of Hopkins County, but was then a part of Christian County.

Here his father, Moses Stanley, Sr., bought a farm near the present village of White Plains, upon which he resided until his death. His son Moses, father of our subject, was employed on the home farm until he attained his majority. His father then gave him wild land adjoining the home place, where he subsequently improved a farm upon which he has ever since resided. For the past five years he has not been engaged in active business, and has resided with his son, the subject of our sketch. Mrs. Lucinda W. Stanley departed this life in August, 1842, in her thirty-eighth year. She was a devoted member of the Old School Baptist Church. Our subject, Moses W. Stanley, received a good common school education in youth. He keeps fully abreast in all the improvements in agriculture, taking and reading several agricultural papers. He was employed on the old homestead by his father until he was twenty-one years old, after which he farmed the place on his own account for some ten years, and then bought the farm. Here he has been successfully and extensively engaged in agricultural pursuits all his life. He has also given considerable attention to breeding fine stock—cattle, hogs and sheep. He was married November 19, 1862, to Miss Theodosia A. Reddick, a native of Rutherford County, Tenn. Five children blessed their union, three of whom are living: Dudley R., Eva U. and Alma V. In politics Mr. Stanley was formerly a Whig, but is now identified with the Republican party.

JOHN C. TAPP was born February 12, 1845, in Henderson County, Ky., and is a son of Joel H. and Sarah F. (Rice) Tapp, natives of North Carolina and Kentucky, respectively. At the age of twelve, Joel H. Tapp came with his parents to Kentucky, where he was educated and married, and where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death in 1880, in his fifty-fourth year. He belonged to no church but was a bright member of the Masonic fraternity, having been W. M. of his lodge for many years. John C. Tapp, at the age of eighteen, enlisted in the Tenth Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry (Confederate service), attaining to the rank of sergeant-major and serving under Gen. John H. Morgan until the command was captured at Cheshire, Ohio, after which he was retained as a prisoner of war at Camp Chase and at Fort Delaware for twenty-two months. After his return from the army he was employed as a salesman in a general store at Lamasco, Lyon Co., Ky., for four years. He then engaged in the commission business at Parkersville Landing for some three years, and next in boating on the Cumberland River for one year, being captain of a fleet of flats. In April, 1874, he removed to Dalton, Hopkins County, where he was engaged in the general mercantile trade for about two years. He then bought a flouring, grist and saw-mill at that place, and has since been successfully engaged in the milling business. For the past two years he has held the office of magistrate. He was married February 22, 1875, to Miss Minnie J. Bell, a native of Hopkins County. One son and one daughter gladden their home. Both Mr. Tapp and wife are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. He is also a bright member of the Masonic fraternity, having advanced to the select master's degree of the council. In politics he is a Democrat.

JOHN C. THOMSON was born April 28, 1859, in Hopkins County, Ky. He is a son of Qualls and Ella (Christy) Thomson; the father was born in Virginia, the mother was born in Lexington, Ky. They came to Hopkins County in about 1844, and father and sister reside in Madisonville, mother having died on August 1, 1885. Our subject received a good literary education; at the age of about fifteen he entered a store as clerk, continuing in this capacity until 1880, when he established a book and stationery business in Madisonville, where he had a good business, but on December 6, 1884, he sold out and went to his farm about five miles west of Madisonville. Mr. Thomson was married November 15, 1882, to Miss Ambie Lunsford, a native of Madisonville one daughter, Tevis Curtis Thomson, gladdens their home.

THOMAS D. WALKER was born in Wheeling, W. Va., May 3, 1828, and is the youngest of ten children born to John and Mary Ann (Daggs) Walker, natives of the "Old Dominion," and of English and French descent respectively. John Walker was married in his native State, where in early life he learned the tanner's trade, which he afterward followed. He died in 1833, in his fiftieth year. He was a member of the Presbyterian and Mrs. Walker of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Thomas D., at the age of seventeen years, began the tinner's trade, serving an apprenticeship of three years. He then followed his trade as a journeyman, in several different States, until 1873, when he came to Earlington, Hopkins Co., Ky., where he opened a shop, and has since followed his trade in connection with the hardware business. He was married, in 1857, to Miss Amanda Suttle, a native of Virginia. Seven children were born to them, none of whom are now living. Mr. Walker is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is also a member of the Masonic fraternity (having attained to the degrees of knighthood), the I. O. O. F., the K. of P., and the K. of G. C. He is a Democrat.

WILLIAM H. WEIR was born in Hopkins County, Ky., April 26, 1851, and is the second of twelve children born to James H. and Mildred J. (Thomson) Weir; the former a native of Todd County, Ky., and the latter a native of the "Old Dominion," and of German and English descent, respectively. When a boy, William Weir, the grandfather of our subject, came with his parents to the United States, and settled in South Carolina, where he was educated and married. In the latter part of the last century he moved to Todd County, Ky., where he was engaged in farming and teaching all his life. During his latter years, however, he retired from active business, and lived with his daughter in Hopkins County, where he died in 1835, in his sixty-fifth year. James H. Weir was born May 31, 1818. At the age of eighteen he was employed as a salesman in a dry goods house at Madisonville, where he remained four years. He then taught for a year, after which he was engaged in the dry goods trade at Ashbysburgh for thirty years, with the exception of two years, when he was engaged in farming. In 1874 he removed to Hanson, where he was engaged in merchandising and the tobacco trade for three years. In 1879 he moved to Nebo, where he has since had charge of a store and the tobacco business for his sons. He was postmaster at Ashbysburgh for some twenty years, and was also a magistrate for several years. He was married in 1849, and eleven children—five sons and six daughters—have been left to him. He is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and his wife of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. From early manhood he has been a member of the Masonic fraternity, and was for several years W. M. of his lodge. He is a Democrat in politics, and is one of the old business men and respected citizens of the county. William H. Weir was employed in his father's store and tobacco factory until he was twenty years old. In January, 1872, he took charge of his father's store and tobacco business at Hanson, which he continued to manage until September, 1876. He then engaged in merchandising and the tobacco trade at the same place on his own account, and has continued with good success ever since. During a part of this time his brother, James L., was in partnership with him in both branches of business. His tobacco stemmery at Hanson is the finest and largest in the place, and he probably handles more tobacco than any other dealer in that part of the country. In August, 1884, he sold his interest in the store at Hanson, and bought his brother's interest in a store at Nebo, where he is also engaged in the tobacco trade. For the past thirteen years he has been both postmaster and express agent at Hanson, and for five years was also agent of the Louisville & Nashville Railway at the same place. He was married, December 9, 1874, to Miss Sophie A. Girod, a native of Hopkins County, Ky. Three children—two sons and one daughter—have blessed their union. Mr. Weir and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. In politics Mr. Weir is a Democrat.

ISAAC K. WHITFIELD, Hopkins County, was born in Wayne County, N. C., April 15, 1822, and is a son of John and Nancy (Kornegay) Whitfield, natives of North Carolina and of Irish and German descent, respectively. John Whitfield was a farmer and died in June, 1823, in his thirty-third year, a devoted member of the Baptist Church. Isaac K. Whitfield, after his father's death, was bound out to his uncle, Joshua Loftin, with whom he remained until he attained his majority. He then engaged in farming on his own account, and continued the same in North Carolina for four years. In December, 1847, he came to Hopkins County, where, the next year, he bought a farm seven miles northwest of Madisonville, on the Princeton road, where he resided some four years. About that time there was quite an excitement in the county caused by the construction of several railroads through the country, and as a consequence, real estate materially advanced, during this time, for one year. Mr. Whitfield was engaged in the real estate business and bought and sold several different farms. In 1853 he bought a farm near White Plains, upon which he has since resided, and to which he added until he was the owner of well improved farms amounting to about 800 acres. Here he is extensively engaged in agricultural pursuits, and stock raising. In October, 1864, he enlisted in Company B. Eighth Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, Confederate States army, and served until the close of the war. He was married April 30, 1846, to Miss Narcissa Outlaw, a native of North Carolina. Ten children were the fruit of this union, eight of whom, four sons and four daughters, are living. In politics Mr. Whitfield is a stanch Democrat.

WILLIAM H. WHITFIELD was born in Hopkins County, Ky., May 19, 1849, and is the second of eight children born to Isaac K. and Narcissa (Outlaw) Whitfield. Our subject was employed on the home farm until he attained his majority. He then bought a farm adjoining the old homestead, to which he has added by subsequent purchase, and upon which he has since resided, quite extensively and successfully engaged in farming and stock raising. He was married December 28, 1871, to Miss Florisa M. Graddy, a native of Hopkins County, Ky., and a daughter of Jackson H. Graddy, also a native of the county, of which his father, Henry Graddy, was among the early pioneers. Five children are the fruit of this union, four of whom, two sons and two daughters, are living. Mrs. Whitfield is a member of the United Baptist Church; Mr. Whitfield is a member of the I. O. O. F.; he has been V. G. of Mt. Carmel Lodge No. 246, and is at present treasurer of the same. In politics he is a Democrat.

ISAAC D. WHITFIELD was born in Hopkins County, Ky., September 2, 1857, and is a son of Isaac K. and Narcissa (Outlaw) Whitfield. He was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority. His father then gave him a partially improved farm adjoining the old homestead, where he has since been successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits. He was married November 11, 1878, to Miss Mary L. Stanly, a native of Christian County, Ky. Three children have blessed their union, two of whom are living: Effie V. and Franklin B. In politics Mr. Whitfield is a Democrat.

GEORGE W. WHITFIELD was born September 17, 1832, in Hopkins County. He is a son of B. W. and Seania (Graddy) Whitfield. The father was born February 17, 1793, in North Carolina; he came to Hopkins County in about 1816, and settled on the farm where our subject now lives; here he died December 6, 1863. The mother was born November 17, 1802, and now lives at the old homestead with her son—Bryant H. This original tract of land consisted of about 400 acres, which has since been divided; of this our subject owns 100 acres, also about 1,000 acres elsewhere in this county, all of which he has acquired by strict attention to business and judicious management. During the late civil war Mr. Whitfield served about four months in Gen. Forrest's command. He was married in 1855 to Martha S. Utley, of Hopkins County; she died in 1857, leaving one daughter. In 1859 Mr. Whitfield married Susan G. Browning, of this county; she died in the spring of 1874, leaving three sons and two daughters. His third marriage, in January, 1875, was to Mrs. Taliaferro, formerly Mary E. Shaw. This union is blessed with two sons and four daughters. Mrs. Whitfield has two daughters by her former marriage.

BRYANT H. WHITFIELD was born on the farm where he now resides, February 17, 1847, and is a son of B. W. Whitfield and Seania Graddy. On the death of his father, being then seventeen, he took charge of this farm, which he has since managed and now owns, and which consists in all of about 210 acres. His mother still lives here at the advanced age of eighty-two. She is a life-long and devoted member of the Baptist Church. Mr. Whitfield was married in 1869 to Nancy C. Shaw; she was born in Duplin County, N. C. This union has been blessed with three daughters. The parents are members of the Christian Church.

W. R. WILKIRSON was born August 20, 1846, in Scott County, Ky. He is the son of William M. and Martha F. (Black) Wilkirson. The father was born in Fayette County, Ky.; the mother in Scott County; they now reside on their farm in Franklin County. Our subject was reared on his father's farm; at the age of twenty-one he commenced this business on his own account: this he followed several years. In April, 1883, he came to Dawson and kept the Dawson House one year. February 1, 1884, he, with Mr. Hayes, opened a general grocery store, which they have since continued. He was married October 1, 1874, to Miss Sallie Jones, of Union County. Two sons have blessed this union.

CHESLEY WILLIAMS was born February 2, 1834, in Perry County, Ill. He is a son of Simpson and Margery (Dixon) Williams. The father was born in South Carolina, and died in Illinois in 1840, aged forty. The mother was born in Tennessee. Soon after the father's death the family moved to Christian County, where they engaged in farming. Our subject, at the age of seventeen, commenced doing for himself; he followed farming, teaming, and various kinds of employment several years, after which he bought 200 acres, and has since increased this to about 800 acres in Christian County. In 1868 he came to Hopkins County, where he has since resided; he owns 1,300 acres of land where he resides, also 118 acres on Pond River, and property at the "Gap," a half interest in the Williams & Dulin Mill property, with 1,320 acres of land and other valuable estates. This large amount of property Mr. Williams has acquired by his own exertions. He was married in 1864 to Miss M. J. Davis, of Hopkins County. Two children have blessed this union—one son and one daughter. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity. Mrs. Williams is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

WILLIAM H. WINSTEAD was born September 10, 1824, in Hopkins County, Ky., one and a quarter miles of where he now resides. He is a son of Charles T. and Nancy (Brown) Winstead. Charles T. Winstead was born in North Carolina, and came to this county in 1818, where he engaged in farming until his death in 1862, at the age of sixty years. His wife, who was born in Virginia, also died in Hopkins County. William H. was reared on his father's farm, and attended the schools of the neighborhood. At the age of twenty he commenced farming for himself, having had no assistance from any source. He has, by strict attention and hard work, been enabled to provide himself with this farm, where he now resides, consisting of 260 acres of land largely improved. There was no clearing here when he moved on this land. He was married in March, 1845, to Sarah Gore, of this county. She died in 1868, leaving four sons and four daughters. His second marriage was in 1869, to Sallie C. Oliver, of this county. This union has been blessed with eight children, of whom two sons and five daughters are now living. Mr. Winstead is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

MANDLEY B. WINSTEAD, M. D., was born in Hopkins County, Ky., May 22, 1826, and is the third of five children born to Charles T. and Ann C. (Brown) Winstead, the former a native of North Carolina and the latter of the "Old Dominion," and both of English descent. In 1818, at the age of sixteen years, Charles T. Winstead came with his parents to Hopkins County, Ky. His father, Mandley Winstead, who was a veteran of the Revolutionary war, having served under Gens. Green and Washington, and who was present at the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown, bought a farm near the present site of the village of Nebo, where he resided until his death, in 1846. Upon attaining his majority, Charles T. Winstead bought wild land near the old home place, and improved a farm, which he afterward sold, and bought another in the same neighborhood. Here he engaged in farming until his death in 1862, in his sixty-first year. Our subject, Mandley B., received a good classical education in his youth, having attended Cumberland College, Princeton, Ky. He was employed on the home farm until he was twenty-one years old, when he commenced the study of medicine under Dr. A. P. Shackelford, and graduated from the Kentucky School of Medicine of Louisville, with the class of 1859-60. In the fall of 1861 he enlisted as a private in the First Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, Confederate States army, but was soon after promoted to the rank of first sergeant. He served in that regiment in all its engagements until the expiration of his term of service in 1862, participating in the battles of Fort Donelson and Shiloh, and many other lesser engagements. Late in the fall of 1862 he re-enlisted as captain in the Tenth Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, Confederate States army, under Col. (afterward Brig.-Gen.) Adam Johnson, and served with Gen. Morgan until the capture of the latter, after which he served under various commanders until the close of the war. After the war he returned to Nebo, where he has since followed his profession, and has a large and lucrative practice. For the past ten years he has also been engaged in the drug business. He has been married four times. His first marriage was March 11, 1847, to Miss Susan R. Cox, who bore him eight children, none of whom are living. She died in 1865. His second marriage was in December of that year, to Miss Eliza C. Young, who bore him four children, three of whom, one son and two daughters, are living. Mrs. Eliza C. Winstead died January 10, 1872. His third marriage was November 15, of the same year, to Miss Sue Sasseen, who died February 2, 1875; she was a member of the Baptist Church. One child, now dead, was the fruit of this union. The Doctor married his present wife, Miss Mary R. Bassett, July 28, 1875. One son and one daughter, both living, have blessed their union. Mrs. Winstead is a member of the Christian Church. The Doctor is a member of the Masonic fraternity, Blue Lodge and Chapter. He is a Democrat, true, bold and unflinching.

FRANCIS M. WIOTT was born in Hopkins County, Ky., January 6, 1846, and is one of ten children born to Enoch and Nancy L. (Kirkwood) Wiott, also natives of Hopkins County, Ky., and of English descent. Enoch Wiott was born December 28, 1818, and was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority, after which he bought wild lands in Dalton District, Hopkins County, and improved a farm on which he resided for some ten years. He then sold out and bought the farm upon which he now resides. His parents were Charles and Phebe (Tadlock) Wiott, the former a native of South Carolina, and the latter of Kentucky. At the age of about thirty years, but while yet a single man, in 1798, Charles Wiott removed to Warren County, Ky.; after about two years, in 1800, he removed to what is now Hopkins County, Ky., then a part of Henderson County. He was among the very first settlers in the county, there not being more than eight or ten persons there before him. He located and bought wild land in the present Dalton District, erected a rude log-cabin and subsequently improved a farm upon which he resided until his death in 1874. He was a veteran in the war of 1812, and served under Gen. Harrison in the Canadian campaign. Francis M. Wiott was employed on his father's farm until he was twenty years of age; he next bought a farm in Dalton District, upon which he resided for ten years. He then sold out and bought another farm in the same district, upon which he still resides and where he is extensively engaged in agricultural pursuits. He was married January 11, 1865, to Miss Geneva C. Sisk, a native of Hopkins County. Five children—two sons and three daughters—have blessed their union. Mr. Wiott and wife are members of the Missionary Baptist Church. In politics he is a Democrat.

ISAAC T. WITHERS was born in Muhlenburgh County, Ky., June 1, 1848, and is a son of Thomas C. and Martha I. (Ingram) Withers, the former was a native of Christian County, and the latter of Muhlenburgh County, Ky. They were of English and German descent respectively. Thomas C. Withers remained on the home farm with his mother until he attained his majority, his father having died six years previously. He then removed to Muhlenburgh County, where he married his first wife, the mother of our subject, and for several years engaged in teaching in connection with farming. Afterward he was exclusively engaged in farming and stock raising. Here he lost his first wife, in 1857, and in the following year married his present wife. He has been for the past twenty-five years a regularly ordained minister of the Christian Church. For the past ten years he has been pastor of the church near his home, in Muhlenburgh County. He is also a member of the Masonic fraternity and the I. O. O. F. Isaac T. Withers was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority, after which he taught and attended school some five or six years. He was then employed as salesman in a general store at Arthur, Moultrie Co., Ill., for one year. He then came to White Plains, Hopkins County, where he has since been engaged in merchandising and in the hotel business. He was married May 23, 1878, to Miss Katy A. Arnold, a native of Logan County, Ky. Two sons have blessed their union—Harry B. and Thomas L. Mr. Withers and wife are members of the church, he of the Christian and she of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He is also an earnest advocate of the temperance cause, and politicaly is a Democrat.

ROBERT W. WOOD was born in Paisley, Scotland, August 2, 1837, and is the elder of two children born to Robert and Letitia (Gorely) Wood, natives of Scotland. Robert Wood acquired an excellent scientific education in Scotland, where he married and for several years engaged in farming. In 1838 he immigrated to the United States, first settling at Evansville, Ind., then only a small village, where he remained about two years. He then removed to Philadelphia, where he engaged in the manufacture of drugs and chemicals until 1849, when he was burned out, losing nearly all his property. Soon after he returned to Evansville, Ind., where he died March 24, 1850, in his forty-first year. He and wife were members of the Episcopal Church. Robert W. Wood received a good common school and academic education and at the time of his father's death, at the age of thirteen, commenced to learn the carpenter's trade, serving an apprenticeship of three years. He then followed the trade until the breaking out of the late war. In August, 1861, he enlisted in Company A, Forty-second Indiana Volunteer Infantry, was soon after promoted to color-sergeant; he served with his regiment in all its marches and engagements until the battle of Chickamauga, when he was taken prisoner, and kept at the prisons of Libby, Belle Isle, and Andersonville for fourteen months. He participated also in the battles of Perryville, Ky., and Stone River, Tenn., as well as many other lesser engagements. November 17, 1864, he made his escape from Savannah, Ga., and was mustered out of the service at Indianapolis, Ind., February 14, 1865. In 1868, he was appointed agent for a New York tobacco house, and continued in their employ about three years. He then came to Madisonville, Ky., where he had charge of the warehouse of the Henderson branch of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, for two years, after which he was weighmaster for the Diamond Coal Company at Earlington and Morton's Gap for eight years. He then engaged in the culture of small fruits, and the breeding of fine stock, horses, cattle and hogs, near Madisonville, in company with M. W. Bishop, and is still so engaged. Mr. Wood was married in 1872 to Miss Ava Fox, a native of Hopkins County, Ky. Three children have blessed this union, two of whom, both daughters, are living. Mr. and Mrs. Wood are members of the Missionary Baptist Church; he is a stanch Republican.

David Adams

ZENO F. YOUNG, editor of the Madisonville Times, was born November 28, 1848, in Hopkins County, Ky. In 1863 he enlisted in Company A, Seventeenth Kentucky, Union army, served out his enlistment and received an honorable discharge, after which he was engaged at various kinds of employment till 1870, when he commenced to learn the printer's trade. In 1872 he became editor and proprietor of the Times, which was established in 1868, and now has a circulation of about 1,000. Mr. Young was married in June, 1873, to Anna Morgan of Muhlenburgh County. This lady died April 10, 1881, leaving one son and one daughter. Mr. Young's second marriage occurred April 11, 1883, to Miss Jessie Turner, of Hickman; this union is blessed with one daughter. In politics Mr. Young is a Democrat.

LIVINGSTON COUNTY.

G. W. ADAMS, Livingston County, is a native of Dixon County, Tenn., and was born February 11, 1824. He is the fifth of a family of eight children born to George and Sallie (Boyd) Adams, both parents natives of Halifax County, Va. George Adams' parents came from Ireland and were among the early settlers of the Old Dominion State, subject's grandfather dying there shortly after the Revolutionary war. George Adams emigrated from Virginia to Tennessee in 1823, settling in Dixon County, where he resided until 1832, at which time he moved to Livingston County, Ky., locating near the town of Old Salem. He was a successful farmer, and died in Crittenden County in 1845. Sallie (Boyd) Adams, died of cholera in the year 1833. The subject of this sketch was reared on a farm, and remained with his parents until their death, when he commenced life for himself as a common laborer, finding employment on different farms for the small sum of $8 per month. Part of the time he worked in a mill, and later was employed as overseer on a plantation, for which service his wages were increased to $13 per month. He was next engaged with his brother, Richard, with whom he farmed in partnership until 1849, since which time, with the exception of three years spent in California, he has been farming in Livingston County. In 1854, after returning from California, he located in Livingston County, one and a half miles from where he now lives. One year later he purchased his present place of residence, a beautiful farm of 266 acres, in Carrsville Precinct, to which he has added at different times until he now owns 350 acres, the greater part of which is in a high state of cultivation. Mr. Adams belongs to the Masonic fraternity, and is a member of the United Baptist Church. Mr. Adams was married March 28, 1850, to Sophronia, daughter of Anthony and Sallie Franklin, of Livingston County. The following children have been born to this union: Henry I., Mary H., wife of W. H. Kidd; Sallie, wife of William Rutter; Kit C., George E., Florence, Jefferson D. (deceased), Ida A. (deceased) and Robert E. (deceased). Since the above was written Mr. Adams was killed in his own yard by one whom he had employed to work for him.

DAVID ADAMS. The gentleman whose name introduces this sketch and whose portrait appears in this work, was born January 19, 1834, in Livingston County, Ky. Of his parents, but little can now be learned, as they died when he was a mere child. Their names were George and Jennie Adams, and they were probably natives of the State of Virginia. They settled in Livingston County, Ky., soon after their marriage, and at the time of their death had four children, viz.: Ellen, wife of R. R. Hastings, of Livingston County; David; Jackson, since deceased, and William H. Adams, now of Florida. After the death of his parents, the subject of these lines found a home and kind friends in the family of John and Mary A. Neely, then living in southern Illinois. He continued as a member of this family until he had attained to the age of sixteen years, at which time he returned to his native county and engaged as a farm hand with Joseph Watts, who then owned the land now comprising a part of the farm of Mr. Adams. This esteemed gentleman, whose memory is tenderly cherished by our subject, soon discovered the merits of his young employe, as was evidenced by the fact of his retaining him from year to year with increased wages. His wife also, whose name is Lucinda D. Watts, and who is still living, proved herself a devoted wife and mother, whose many deeds of kindness are as a bright page in the book of memory. When about twenty-four years old, Mr. Adams purchased the first tract of land he ever owned; it consisted of 200 acres and was bought wholly upon credit. With this land, a yoke of oxen and a cart, and 50 cents in money, he began the battle of life on his own merit. Having early in life acquired habits of industry and honesty, which have ever been his chief characteristics, he found the road to success open before him, and these virtues have combined to elevate him to the distinction of "king of farmers" in his county. As an evidence of his appreciation of and attachment to Mr. Adams, Mr. Watts, in his will, made him an equal heir to his homestead farm. He now owns 1,400 acres of land and is devoting especial care to the breeding of "short-horn" cattle. On March 4, 1863, Mr. Adams married Miss Georgia, daughter of Lewis and Cynthia Hunter; the father now of Texas, the mother long since deceased. Mrs. Adams died January 26, 1883, the mother of the following named children: Susie, wife of Henry H. Hibbs; Lizzie (deceased), Lula, Cora, Lewis Hunter, Nettie and David L. Adams.

W. H. ADCOCK was born June 19, 1828, in Livingston County, and is a son of John C. and Margaret (Wilson) Adcock, natives of South and North Carolina respectively. John C. Adcock, in an early day, immigrated to Tennessee, where he lived until the breaking out of the war in 1812, when he enlisted in the American army and served until the close, when he came to Livingston County, and settled not far from Salem, where he followed his occupations of hatter and shoemaker. He died in 1825, at an advanced age. Subject's maternal grandfather was James Wilson, a native of Caswell County, N. C. He held the position of captain in Washington's army, and was an early pioneer of Livingston County, settling on the Ohio River, opposite Golconda, Ill., where he died a number of years ago. Margaret (Wilson) Adcock, subject's mother, was born in North Carolina and died in Livingston County, Ky., about the same time as her husband. Four children were born to John C. and Margaret Adcock: Mary James E., and an infant not named and W. H., who is the only one of the family now living. Our subject was deprived of his parents by death at the early age of eighteen months, after which he was taken by his uncle, James Pringle, with whom he made his home until his twenty-seventh year. He commenced farming on his own responsibility about 1855 or 1856, purchasing his present place in Carrsville Precinct, which at that time was an unbroken piece of woodland; he soon succeeded in making a comfortable home, owning at the present time a good farm of ninety-six acres. Mr. Adcock was married August 15, 1855, to Miss Clarissa I. Trimble, daughter of Isaac and Jane (Hosick) Trimble, of Livingston County. This union has been blessed with five children: James P., Isaac T., Izetta, Leona and Sophronia.

C. E. ALLARD was born August 31, 1851, in Harrison County, Ind., and is a son of L. B. and Columbia (Beach) Allard, natives of Vermont and Indiana, respectively. L. B. Allard, came West a number of years ago, settling in Indiana when but nine years of age. He was reared a farmer, and died in Harrison County, Ind., in April, 1863. His wife, Columbia Allard, died in 1863 also, a few days previous to her husband. They were the parents of seven children: Columbia, Phebe, Joseph L., C. E., Caroline (deceased), Allie (deceased) and Ada (deceased). Our subject remained with his parents until their death, after which, for five years, he resided with his uncle, C. T. Allard, in Hardin County, Ill., where he received the benefits of a good education in the schools of that State. He commenced working for himself at the age of sixteen, choosing farming, which he followed for three years, with success, after which he engaged as clerk in the mill of his uncle, J. L. Allard, at Paducah. Later he went to Florida, where he remained a short time, and upon his return commenced teaching, which profession he followed one year, after which he worked two years at the store of Shetler & Allard, at Parker's Landing. Later he purchased a half interest in the house, and with Mr. Shetler in partnership, sold goods until 1874, at which time he sustained a very heavy loss by fire. He rebuilt in the following year and resumed business, continuing until September, 1876, when he moved to Carrsville, Ky., and opened his present large general store. His stock of merchandise is the largest in Carrsville, and represents a capital of over $8,000. He is engaged in the mill business also, being partner with N. B. Beard in the manufacture of lumber, staves, heading, etc. February 4, 1874, he married Miss Fannie Bailey, daughter of L. B. and Catherine Bailey of Paducah, Ky. Mr. and Mrs. Allard became the parents of four children, two of whom are living: Rubie and Orlando; the deceased were Roy and Herbert.

ASA ALVIS, Livingston County, was born June 17, 1812, in Sumner County, Tenn. Mr. Alvis traces his paternal ancestry to Virginia, but has no definite knowledge of the family beyond the grandfather, whose name was Ashley Alvis. Ashley Alvis was born in Buckingham County, Va., but left his native State as early as 1806, immigrating to Sumner County, Tenn. He served in the war of the Revolution, and was with Washington's army during the seven years of that struggle. Abraham Alvis, subject's father, was born in Virginia and immigrated to Tennessee two years after his father. He served in the war of 1812, and in the Indian campaigns of Florida. He was a farmer by occupation, and died about 1854. Love (Ventress) Alvis, subject's mother, was born in North Carolina, and was a daughter of David Ventress. She died in 1836. The family of Abraham and Love Alvis consisted of two children, viz.: infant (deceased), and Asa, subject of this sketch. Asa Alvis was reared in his native county, and at the age of twenty years commenced working for himself at different vocations. In 1837 he purchased a farm in Sumner County, and May 3, of the same year was married to Blanche Jackson, daughter of Bartholomew and Martha (Clark) Jackson, of North Carolina. After marriage he commenced farming, and resided upon his farm for a period of nine years, at the end of which time he disposed of it and purchased other tracts of real estate in different parts of Tennessee. In 1858 he moved to Kentucky, and purchased his present farm of 369 acres of choice land in Livingston County, one-half mile from Salem village. By his first marriage, Mr. Alvis had a family of ten children, four of whom are living, viz.: Abraham B., Zachariah H., W. O., and Ashley G. The deceased children were named as follows: David L., Robert H., Martha D., Mary C., James G. and Charles L. After thirty years of wedded life Mrs. Alvis died March, 1869. Mr. Alvis' second marriage took place in the latter part of the last named year, with Mrs. Mabel Baxter, daughter of Henry and Charlotte Alley, of Livingston County. This marriage has been blessed with the following children: Alda, Asa, Ada, Electa, Ophelia and Mabel. Mr. Alvis is a very successful farmer and stock raiser, and his life has been characterized by an untiring industry. He is a member of the Baptist Church, to which he has belonged for about forty years, and also belongs to the Masonic fraternity.

JUDGE CASWELL BENNETT is a native of Halifax County, Va., and a son of Ambrose and Frances Bennett, the father a native of Virginia and the mother of North Carolina. Ambrose Bennett was educated for the bar, but never practiced his profession. He moved to North Carolina when subject was a small boy, and died in that State about 1847 or 1848. He was an active business man, and during his life held various official positions. Frances Bennett, subject's mother, was a daughter of Mr. Wadlington, a native of North Carolina, and of Irish descent. She died in 1882, at the age of eighty years. Ambrose and Frances Bennett reared a family of seven children, whose names are as follows: Richard, Susan (deceased), Lafayette, Ada, Elizabeth (deceased), Caswell and Belle. Judge Bennett received a fair education in the common schools of the country, and later attended the Milwood Institute, Tennessee, for three sessions, and in 1853 commenced the study of law. One year later he entered the Lebanon law school at Lebanon, Tenn., after which he read law in the office of Judge Underwood, of Bowling Green, Ky., with whom he remained several months. From Bowling Green he went to Elkton, Ky., where he completed his legal studies, and in 1857 was admitted to the bar, receiving his license from Judges Graham and Dabney. After obtaining his license he came to Smithland, where he commenced the practice of his profession, in which he has achieved eminent success, being considered one of the leading jurists in west Kentucky. In 1867 he was elected common pleas judge for the Third Judicial District, a position he held for fourteen years. At the present time he is the senior member of the law firm of Bennett & Cruce, and has an extensive practice throughout the State. November 22, 1867, Judge Bennett married Miss Anna T., daughter of James W. and Sarah (Young) Cruce, of Crittenden County, Ky. To this marriage were born three children: Caswell, Jr., Ada and Anna. Mrs. Bennett died July 19, 1883. Judge Bennett is a member of the Masonic fraternity and a stanch supporter of the Democratic party.

RUTLEDGE T. BERRY. The Berrys were among the earliest settlers of Livingston County. James Berry, subject's grandfather, was born in Virginia, which State he left as early as 1795, immigrating to Tennessee and settling on the Holstein River. Later he moved to Alabama, in which State his death occurred about the year 1825. John Berry, the father of Rutledge, was born in Tennessee prior to 1800. He came to Kentucky in his early manhood, settling in Livingston County, near the town of Old Salem, where he became an extensive farmer. He kept a store at that place also, and from 1829 to 1840 ran a ferry across the Ohio River to Golconda, Ill., which is still known as Berry's Ferry. In 1820 he was elected representative of Livingston County and served several sessions, besides filling other positions of trust, the duties of which he discharged with honor to himself and credit to the county. Mr. Berry succeeded in accumulating a fortune which, during his life, was second to none in the county. He was eminently successful in all his business enterprises and died in the year 1840 full of years and honors. The maiden name of subject's mother was Maria Hodge. She was the daughter of Henry G. Hodge, a native of Virginia, and one of the earliest permanent residents of Salem Precinct. He settled three miles north of that village and died on his home farm as early as 1820 or 1825, at a good old age. Maria (Hodge) Berry was born in Edgecomb County, N. C., and died in Livingston County, Ky., in the year 1870. Rutledge Berry is the eldest of a family of ten children born to John and Maria Berry, his birth occurring March 24, 1816, in Livingston County. His early history was marked by no extraordinary event, but like the majority of the early residents of the new country, his life has been an active one. He attended the common schools for a number of years, in which he obtained the rudiments of a good education, completing his studies later in Princeton College, Caldwell County. His first business on his own responsibility was as a merchant at Salem Village, a business which he followed successfully for a period of five years, closing out about 1860. After retiring from the goods business Mr. Berry commenced farming where he now lives, in Carrsville Precinct. He is one of the substantial yeomen of the land, and is now passing down the shady side of life honored and respected by all who know him. Mr. Berry was married in March, 1840, to Miss Sarah Rondeau, daughter of William and Anna Rondeau, of England. The following are the children born to this marriage: Ann M., wife of Jefferson Greer, C. R., Alice, Emily, Serene, wife of Elder W. M. Weatherford, William (deceased), Pringle (deceased), Julian, Mettie, Jefferson and Lewis. Mr. Berry is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and has been a life-long Democrat.

J. T. BOYD was born in Salem Precinct, Livingston County, Ky., October 31, 1811, and is a son of Robert and Martha (Wiley) Boyd. The father was born in the Abbeyville District, S. C., in 1790, and was of Irish descent, his ancestors coming to this country some time prior to the Revolution. The mother was also born in the same district. The father came to Livingston County in 1809, and settled at Salem, which was at that time the county seat. He was a carpenter and cabinet-maker by trade, and resided at Salem for about four years. He moved to a farm about four miles from Salem, where he made a settlement, and continued to farm in Livingston County until his death, which occurred March 17, 1847. The mother died about 1818. Our subject is the second in a family of four children, of whom but two are now living: Sarah, wife of Charles Halstead, of the Driscoll Precinct, and subject. The latter, when about fifteen years old, commenced to learn the blacksmith trade, and followed it for upward of thirty-five years, when failing health forced him to try some other business. In 1852 he began merchandising with P. C. Barnett, at Carrsville, but only remained with him about one year. About 1862 he began selling goods in Salem District, and continued in business at that point until the close of the war. He next moved to Pope County, Ill., where he sold goods for about two years. Returning to Livingston County, he bought a farm near Salem, and turned his attention to the cultivation of the soil. In 1874 he came to his present farm, where he now owns about 117 acres. Mr. Boyd was married December 8, 1858, to Miss Hannah J. Boyd, a daughter of James and Cagy (Woodyard) Boyd, natives of South Carolina. Mrs. Hannah J. Boyd was born in Livingston County in 1829, and is the mother of one child—Martha I. In 1870, Mr. Boyd was elected to the office of magistrate for the Dyer's Hill District, and served eight years. He is a member of Salem Lodge No. 81. Mrs. Boyd is a member of the Missionary Baptist Church.

JOSEPH BRIDGES is a native of Boone County, Ky., born on the 6th of April, 1823. His grandfather, John Bridges, was a native of Virginia, and of Welsh descent. He served in Washington's army during the war of the Revolution, and distinguished himself by many acts of bravery during that struggle. He came West several years after the war, making the journey by flat-boats down the Ohio River, landing at the site of Maysville, Ky., and making his first settlement at Old Dover, in Mason County, being one of the first permanent residents of the section. He afterward moved to Boone County, and settled at Cobb's Station, now known as Richwood's Station, where he died at an early day at the advanced age of one hundred and six years. His widow, Jenny Bridges, died in Covington, Ky., a few years later, aged one hundred and three. Joseph Bridges, Sr., subject's father, was born in Virginia, where he lived until after marriage, when he came to Kentucky with his uncle and father, settling first in Mason County. Later he moved to Boone County, where he lived until his death, which occurred in 1832, at the age of forty-five or forty-seven years. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, and served under Gen. Harrison; he was taken prisoner by the Indians at Fort Meigs, remained in captivity a short time, being afterward delivered from his enemies by a detachment of the American army. He was an active business man, and during his life accumulated a handsome competency. Subject's mother, Celia (Cooper) Bridges, was a daughter of Nyras Cooper, of Norfolk, Va. She died in Newport, Ky., in 1881, at the age of eighty-eight years. Joseph and Celia Bridges' children were Jane, John N., Caroline, Joseph (subject), William M., Seth C. and L. P., all of whom are living; the deceased children were Joseph and Slatie. Joseph Bridges, whose name heads this sketch, passed his youth upon the farm, and in school during the winter months. He afterward attended schools in Cincinnati, and commenced life on his own responsibility as a tobacconist, serving an apprenticeship several years with W. B. Murphy. He afterward worked at his trade at Napoleon, Louisville, Cincinnati, Covington and other places for a number of years, and, later, purchased a farm in Kenton County, four miles from Independence, on which he resided until 1856. In that year he disposed of his farm and moved to Livingston County, locating about four miles from Smithland, where he engaged in farming for one year, at the end of which time he moved to Carrsville, where he engaged in the tobacco business, opening a large factory in partnership with P. C. Barnett. They continued the business until 1861, at which time the partnership was dissolved by mutual consent, Mr. Bridges engaging in buying and shipping tobacco, in which he was very successful. He opened a hotel at the same time, also, and has kept public house ever since, his hotel being one of the best in the county at the present time. He discontinued the tobacco business in 1874, and since that time has been engaged dealing in stock, buying and shipping for the markets of Cincinnati and other places. Mr. Bridges has been a very active business man, but, like many others, he sustained heavy losses during the war, which interfered materially with the river trade. He was married, in the year 1846, to Mary G. Pavy, daughter of P. H. and Lucy Pavy. The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Bridges: Lucinda J., America A., M. F. (deceased), Josie, J. R., Belle, Ruth, L. E., R. L. and Willie. Mr. Bridges belongs to the Masonic fraternity, and is also a member of Boone Lodge No. 1., I. O. O. F., the first society of Odd Fellows constituted in Kentucky. In politics he was originally a Whig, but since the dissolution of his party, he has been independent, generally voting with the Democrats.

W. F. BUTLER was born December 1, 1840, in Crittenden County, Ky., and is a son of D. A. and M. W. (Green) Butler, natives of Virginia and Kentucky, respectively. Armstead Butler, subject's grandfather, left Virginia in 1823, and settled in Barren County, Ky., and later moved to Missouri, where he lived a short time. He afterward returned to Kentucky, and settled in Crittenden County, about half way between Fredonia and Marion, where he lived until his death in 1837. D. A. Butler was born in 1819. He was a farmer and tobacco dealer, and died in Crittenden County in 1873. Mrs. Butler was a daughter of George Green, a native of Virginia. He came West in his early manhood and settled near Piney Fork Camp Ground, Crittenden County, dying there in 1880, at the age of ninety years. Mrs. Butler was born in 1822, in Crittenden County, and died in 1872. The following children were born to D. A. and N. W. Butler, viz.: T. M., W. F., George B., Polly Ann, Sarah J. (deceased), Jasper N. (deceased), Albert, Gideon D., and Mary R. (deceased). W. F. Butler was reared in Crittenden County, and brought up to agricultural pursuits, his father being a farmer. He lived on the home place until the age of twenty-six, when he purchased a farm in Livingston County, near the village of Salem, where he has since resided. He was married October 7, 1866, to Miss Elizabeth F. Loyd, daughter of Isaac Loyd, of Crittenden County. Eleven children blessed this union, viz.: Isaac A., Mary M., Ada A., Rose L. (deceased), Sarah A. (deceased), William B., Thomas E., Eddie G., Effie M., Myrtle L. and Josie C. Mr. Butler owns a beautiful farm of 283 acres of choice land, and is extensively engaged in stock raising which he has made very remunerative. He is a member of the Piney Fork Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and in politics votes with the Democratic party.

JAMES W. CADE, Livingston County, was born in Fayetteville, N. C., January 18, 1820, and is a son of Waddle and Sarah (McDaniel) Cade. The father was born at Snow Hill, N. C., November 25, 1775; his father was a clergyman of the Church of England, and a very early immigrant to this country. The mother was born at Halifax, N. C., in 1774. The father was a hotel keeper at Fayetteville, and resided there until his death, in August, 1865. The mother died in 1829. Subject is the youngest of a family of eleven children, of whom two are now living: Sarah and J. W. The latter left home when he was sixteen years of age, and went to Jackson, Tenn., where he clerked for the firm of Burns & Stewart for about one year and a half. He next went to Mississippi but remained there about a year, and in December, 1839, he arrived at Salem, which was at that time the county seat of Livingston County. There he taught school and made teaching his profession until 1854. He was then appointed to the clerkship of the Livingston Circuit Court, and by appointment and election held the office continuously until 1880. During the first twelve years of his office he was also county clerk. During his whole term of office as circuit clerk he was master in chancery and trustee of the jury fund. At present he is farming, and now owns about 300 acres with about 150 acres in cultivation. He is a lawyer by profession, but spends but little time in practice before the courts. Mr. Cade was married in April, 1846, to Miss Helen M. Miles, a daughter of Col. Richard and Kittie (Neale) Miles. The father was born in South Carolina, the mother in Virginia. The parents were early settlers of Livingston County, the father represented the county in the legislature and subsequently served as magistrate many years. Mrs. Cade was born in 1825, and is the mother of five children, of whom three are now living: Ida wife of C. B. Davis, Cora, wife of C. W. Conant, and Laura. Mr. Cade and family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He is a member of Smithland Masonic Lodge No. 138.

ALBERT CHAMPION, son of Theophilus and Agnes (Nelson) Champion, was born September 15, 1837, in Livingston County. Mr. Champion's ancestors on his father's side came from England and were early settlers in North Carolina, where his great-grandfather, Benjamin Champion, died before the beginning of the present century. Benjamin's two brothers, Charles and Jesse, also came to North Carolina at the same time. Willis Champion, son of Benjamin and grandfather of subject, was born August 28, 1765, in North Carolina, which State he left as early as 1806, immigrating to Livingston County, Ky., and settling near Salem Village. He had three brothers: Wesley, John and William. Willis was a farmer, and died February 10, 1846, aged eighty-three years. His wife, Sarah, was born November 27, 1775, died September 11, 1836. They are both buried on the farm he settled near Salem. Subject's maternal grandfather was William Nelson, a native of Virginia, born in 1777; immigrated to what is now Boone County, Ky., where he married Sarah Smith. He moved to Livingston County about 1815, and settled in what is now Dyer's Hill Precinct; died there February 4, 1844; Sarah, his wife, date of birth not known, died November 20, 1814, and is buried in Boone County, Ky., near Florence. The names of their children are Lucy, Garland, James, Mary, William, Washington and Sarah. Theophilus Champion, father of Albert, was born December 27, 1802, in Edgecomb County, N. C. He came to Livingston County, Ky., with his parents in 1806, and resided in Livingston County during the remainder of his life, and died in 1858. His brothers and sisters are as follows: William, Lucinda, Drewry, Martha, Willis, Sarah E., Blake, Nancy, Joseph B., Joshua, Frandlous and Temperance. Theophilus Champion married Agnes Nelson, December 27, 1827. She was born January 28, 1808, in the northern part of Kentucky, and died March 8, 1865. She and her husband are both buried near Salem, this county. The following are the names of the children born to Theophilus and Agnes Champion: Harrison (deceased), Louisiana, Sarah (deceased), Joseph B. (deceased), Albert, Almeda, infant (deceased) and Willis S. Albert Champion's life has been spent within the limits of his native county. He was reared a farmer and remained with his parents until their death, and commenced life as a farmer on the homestead place. He received a fair education, and in his early manhood engaged in teaching, a profession he followed several years. After his parent's death he came into possession of a part of the old homestead, which he still owns and on which he has since resided. He owns a farm of 200 acres, and gives much attention to stock raising. He was married February 16, 1866, to Sarah Jameson, daughter of Bluford and Nancy (Hibbs) Jameson. One child has been born to this marriage, Cora Lee. Mr. Champion is not a member of any church, but a warm friend to the Masonic fraternity and Christian religion.

W. S. CHAMPION, Livingston County, youngest son of Theophilus and Agnes Champion, was born May 1, 1847. He remained at home until his parents' death, when, at the age of seventeen years, he commenced life for himself, choosing the vocation of farming. He received more than an average English education in the common schools, and during all his life has been a warm friend of the cause of public instruction. In 1868 he came in possession of his present farm, a part of which originally belonged to the old homestead. Mr. Champion's place numbers 200 acres of fine land, which, under his skillful management has been brought under a high state of cultivation. He deals extensively in live-stock, and every year ships heavily to the large markets of the North and East. He was married March 10, 1881, to Miss Sarah E. Dixon, daughter of Thomas K. and Julia (Huffman) Dixon, of Boone County, Ky. Mrs. Champion was born March 25, 1849, and is the second of a family of four children, all of whom are living. Mr. Champion belongs to Carrsville Lodge No. 387, A. F. and A. M., and votes with the Democratic party.

SAMUEL G. CLARK, Livingston County, is a native of Roane County, Tenn., and a son of George M. and Hannah (Grinnette) Clark, both parents born in the same State. His ancestors on the father's side were from North Carolina; his grandfather, John Clark, immigrating to Tennessee many years ago and settling in Roane County, where he was one of the early pioneers. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, and died in the county of his adoption about 1827. George M. Clark was born in 1823. He moved to Crittenden County, Ky., in 1852, and settled in Dycusburgh, where he followed the occupation of wagon-making and blacksmithing. In 1869 he came to Livingston County, locating at Pinckneyville, where his death occurred in 1875. Hannah Clark, subject's mother, was a daughter of Samuel Grinnette, of Lynchburgh, Va. She was born in 1827, and is still living. Mr. and Mrs. George M. Clark reared a family of ten children: Caroline, Samuel G., Anna J., Martha L., Philip A., Sarah (deceased), John, William, Charles and an infant (deceased). Samuel G. Clark, our subject, was born August 6, 1847, and remained with his parents until his twenty-fourth year, learning the wagon-maker and blacksmithing trades with his father. He was educated at the common schools and at Salem Academy, and commenced life for himself as a mechanic, working at the carpenter's trade, which he learned after his eighteenth year. He followed carpentering for seven years, at the end of which time, in 1872, he purchased a farm and engaged in agricultural pursuits. Mr. Clark is in every respect a self-made man, as he commenced life with no capital, except a pair of willing arms and ready hands, backed by an untiring energy. He was married December 29, 1875, to Ellen Dorroh, daughter of C. C. and Nancy Dorroh. Five children were born to this union, viz.: Buena (deceased), Ernest R., Frank E., Clara and Emmett (deceased). In 1878 Mr. Clark was elected magistrate of Salem District, a position he still holds. He and wife are members of the Pinckneyville Baptist Church, of which he is also clerk, and in politics votes with the Democrats.

J. M. CLARK, Livingston County, is a native of Lauderdale County, Ala., and was born February 18, 1831. His father, Richard Clark, was born September 15, 1806, in North Carolina, which State he left in his youth, immigrating to Alabama, where he resided until 1836, when he came to Kentucky, locating in Marshall County. He subsequently moved to Livingston County, settling near Smithland, where he engaged in farming and where he died about 1848. Mary (Brown) Clark, subject's mother, was born in North Carolina, December 24, 1805, and departed this life in 1848, one week after her husband's death. J. M. Clark is the third of a family of nine children born to the above. He was early in life thrown upon his own resources, commencing life for himself at the age of sixteen years, as a farmer in Livingston County. He purchased a tract of land near Smithland, and followed agricultural pursuits for ten years. Later he disposed of his farm and moved to the county seat, where for a number of years he followed draying and teaming, in which business he was very successful, accumulating a handsome competency. In 1880 he discontinued teaming to take charge of the Scyster House, of which house he has since been proprietor. The Scyster House, under Mr. Clark's successful management, has achieved a reputation among the traveling public, which is State wide, and it is pronounced by many to be the best hotel in western Kentucky. Mr. Clark is very popular among the citizens of his town, and his house is a favorite stopping place for all. February 4, 1855, Mr. Clark was united in marriage with Miss Emily Lucas, daughter of William H. and Merida Lucas, of Connecticut. Mr. and Mrs. Clark are the parents of two children, viz.: Mary, wife of E. T. Conant, and William F., deputy clerk of Livingston County.

J. N. CLEMENS, M. D., is a native of Livingston County, Ky., and was born April 5, 1835. His father, Jonathan R. Clemens, was born in Livingston County, May, 24, 1811, and died in 1862. Subject's grandfather, Guershom Clemens, was a native of Virginia; he came West in an early day, settling in Livingston County, near the village of Carrsville, where he followed his trade of wagon-making and farming, and died as early as 1840. The maiden name of subject's mother was Minerva Robertson; she is the daughter of Walter Robertson, one of the early settlers of Livingston County; was born in 1815 and is still living, making her home in subject's family. Mr. and Mrs. Clemens were the parents of seven children, as follows: W. P., J. N. (subject), W. W. and infants deceased. Dr. Clemens was reared on a farm, where he early learned those lessons of thrift and industry which have characterized his later years. In the common schools of the country he received a good practical education, and in 1853 entered Princeton College from which he graduated with the class of 1857. After graduating, Mr. Clemens engaged in teaching, which profession he followed for a period of two years in Livingston and other counties, reading medicine in the meantime under the preceptorship of Dr. F. L. Sim, of Golconda, Ill. In 1858 he entered the Louisville University, graduating from the medical department of that institution in the year 1860. After completing his medical course the Doctor commenced the practice of the healing art at the village of Weston, Crittenden Co., Ky., where he remained one year, and at the end of that time came to Carrsville where he has since resided. In 1863 the Doctor opened a drug and grocery store, which he still conducts in connection with the practice of his profession, in both of which he has been remarkably successful. The Doctor was married May 24, 1867, to Sophia, daughter of Allen Crotser of Livingston County. Dr. C. is an active member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and for a period of sixteen years has held the position of deputy clerk of Livingston County and notary public. He belongs to the Masonic fraternity, and is a Democrat.

H. A. COLEMAN, Livingston County, was born December 2, 1854, and is a son of R. W. and Martha A. (Green) Coleman. The father was born in what was then Livingston County, the place of his birth is now known as Crittenden County, June 19, 1822. The mother was a native of Livingston County, and was born March 19, 1826. The father was a farmer by occupation and resided in the Smithland Precinct one-half mile from Green's Ferry, on Cumberland River, until his death November 14, 1871. He was for a short time also engaged in merchandising at Smithland, and acted at one time as deputy sheriff. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and was identified with the I. O. O. F. and Masonic fraternities. The mother is still living at Smithland. H. A. is the fourth of a family of ten children, of whom seven are still living: S. F., in Evansville; H. A., Laura, wife of Frank Rudy, of Union County, Ky.; Eva, Annie, Clara and Edwin. H. A. remained on the home farm until he was fifteen years of age, when he came to Smithland and attended the Smithland High School two years, he then learned the cooper's trade. This he followed for about four years, and then served as deputy sheriff under sheriffs T. J. Lay and D. A. Dunn. He was then elected constable in the Smithland Precinct, and served two terms. In January, 1881, he opened a grocery store and began merchandising. He now carries a stock of about $1,500. Mr. Coleman was married October 23, 1878, to Miss Tinie Elizabeth Ellis, a daughter of James and Sarah (Clement) Ellis. Mrs. Coleman was born in Livingston County, July 22, 1858, and is the mother of two children: Bertie and Sallie. Mr. Coleman and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He is a member of the K. of H., Livingston Lodge No. 2063.

REV. J. W. CREWDSON, Livingston County, was born July 23, 1828, in Logan County, Ky. His grandfather was James Crewdson, a native of Virginia, and of Welsh descent. James Crewdson came to Logan County, Ky., as early as 1801, and was a resident of that part of the State until 1831, at which time he moved to Illinois and died at Beardstown in 1833. He was a teacher by profession, and later in life engaged in farming, which was his business at the time of his death. Samuel B. Crewdson, subject's father, was born in 1802, and spent the greater part of his life in Logan County. He moved to Beardstown, Ill., with his father, and died at that place one year after his arrival, in 1832. Subject's maternal grandfather was George Miliken, a native of Chatham County, N. C., He came to Kentucky about 1807 or 1808, and settled in Logan County, where he died in 1820. Nancy H. (Milliken) Crewdson, subject's mother, was born in 1808 and died in 1839. She was the mother of four children, viz: William N., J. W., John, deceased, and S. B., deceased. Rev. Mr. Crewdson was thrown upon his own resources early in life, his father dying when he was four years old, and his mother when he was eleven. After his parents' death he made his home with an uncle, Amos Milliken, with whom he lived until twenty years of age, serving as an apprentice to a tanner in the meantime. He worked at the tanner's trade about eighteen months. In 1849 he moved to Pope County, Ill., where he found employment at different occupations. One year later he moved to Hardin County, where he purchased a farm and engaged in agricultural pursuits, teaching during the winters for about nine years. He joined the United Baptist Church at the age of sixteen, and was licensed to preach in 1856, and since that time he has been actively engaged in ministerial work in Illinois and Kentucky. He preached in Pope and Hardin Counties, Ill., about fifteen years, and ministered to almost all the churches of his denomination in the above and adjoining counties. In 1861 he was elected county judge of Hardin County, which office he held for four years. He moved to Kentucky in 1871, settling in Livingston County, between Birdsville and Carrsville, purchasing a farm, which he still owns. Since coming to Kentucky he has been exclusively engaged in his ministerial labors, having served, as pastor, most of the Baptist Churches in Livingston County. Mr. Crewdson is an able theologian and a popular pulpit orator. He has been twice married; the first time, September 9, 1849, to Miss Amanda Jackson, daughter of George and Susan (Vineyard) Jackson, of Hardin County, Ill. The following are the names of the children born to this marriage: Nannie B., wife of G. T. Threlkeld; G. B.; Jennie, wife of T. M. Lay; James M., deceased; William E. and John L., deceased. Mrs. Crewdson died in November, 1872. December 17, 1873, Mr. Crewdson's second marriage took place with Mrs. S. C. Wiley, daughter of J. L. and Mary Rutter, of Livingston County.

R. CROTSER, Livingston County, is a native of Montgomery County, Tenn., and was born near the city of Clarksville, October 8, 1836. His father, Allen Crotser, was born in Rowan County, N. C., March 12, 1812, and left his native State when but six years old, moving with the family to Tennessee and settling in Montgomery County, where subject's paternal grandfather, Jacob Crotser, died in 1848. Allen Crotser remained at Tennessee until 1853, at which time he immigrated to Kentucky and settled one mile from Salem Village, dying in that locality May 3, 1861. Subject's mother was Nancy (Powers) Crotser, daughter of Valentine Powers, a native of Pennsylvania, and an early pioneer of Montgomery County, Tenn. Mrs. Crotser was born in 1812, and died November 17, 1857. Mr. and Mrs. Crotser reared a family of seven children, named as follows: Martha, deceased; Robert (subject); Elizabeth, wife of L. F. Barrett; Sophia, wife of Dr. Clemens; Jacob; George (deceased) and William (deceased). Robert Crotser remained with his parents until after attaining his majority, receiving a fair education in the common schools of the country, and commenced life for himself as a clerk in the store of Leander Berry, at Salem, selling goods at the village for a period of three years. In 1860 he came to Carrsville, where he ran a store for his employer one year, and at the end of that time discontinued the business on account of the war. In 1862 Mr. Crotser opened a business of his own at Carrsville, which he conducted for two years, when he disposed of his store and engaged as clerk with J. C. Barnett, and later clerked for other parties until 1871. In the latter year he was again engaged in merchandising, which he has since continued, and at which he has been very successful. He has a large trade and carries a general stock of goods aggregating a capital of over $3,000. In addition to merchandising Mr. Crotser is also extensively engaged in buying and shipping tobacco, grain, stock, etc., and at one time ran a very successful milling business at Carrsville. Mr. Crotser was united in marriage, November 28, 1862, to Joann, daughter of Barnett and Maria (McElroy) Robertson, of Carrsville. The result of this union has been six children, as follows: Lenna, wife of C. J. Lemon; Nanna B.; William F.; Mattie B.; Myrtle and Maud, deceased. Mr. Crotser is a member of the I. O. O. F., and belongs to the Christian Church, as does also his wife.

J. T. CROUCH, Livingston County, was born in Casey County, Ky., in September, 1813, and is a son of George W. and Nancy (Thomas) Crouch. The father was born near Wyeth Court House, Va., and was of German descent. The mother was born in South Carolina. The father came to Kentucky about 1805, and settled first in Casey County. In 1813 he moved to Hopkins County, where he died in January, 1814. The mother continued to reside in Hopkins County until 1851, when she moved to Golconda, Ill., where she died in 1860. Subject is the youngest of four children, and is the only one now living. He remained at home until he was twenty years old. He then settled down for himself in Hopkins County, but remained there only three years, and then moved to Missouri. In that State he remained about five years. Returning to this State he settled again in Hopkins, where he remained until 1849. In that year he moved to Pope County, Ill., and made a settlement. In 1859 he came back to Kentucky and settled on a farm of 145 acres, where he has since resided. Mr. Crouch was married October 2, 1833, to Miss Sarah M. Clark, a daughter of George W. and Eunice (Franklin) Clark, natives of South Carolina. Mrs. Crouch was born January 28, 1819, and to her and her husband were born twelve children, of whom five are now living: Huldah, wife of G. B. Glass, of Bay City; Rhoda Ann, wife of David M. Metcalf, of Pope County, Ill.; Mary B., wife of Joseph Blankenship, of Livingston County; Th. P., of Eastport, Miss., and Ruth, wife of Ford Hardy. Mr. Crouch and family are members of the Old School Baptist Church. He has been identified with the Masonic fraternity.

F. M. CULVER was born in Union County, September 13, 1836, and is a son of Robert and Caroline (Phipps) Culver. The father was born probably in Virginia; the mother in Union County, Ky. Both parents died in that county, the father in October, 1844, and the mother in February of the same year. Subject is the eldest of a family of four children, of whom three are now living: F. M., Margaret E., wife of William Pool, in California, and J. W., in Texas. When F. M. was but ten years old, his parents died, and he was reared by his grandparents. He received a common school education in Union County. In February, 1863, he came to this county, and first settled four miles from Smithland. Here he remained only about one year, and then settled near Bertsville. In May, 1872, he came to his present farm, where he now owns about 180 acres of land, of which there are about 115 acres in cultivation. He has also paid some attention to stock raising. Mr. Culver was married in December, 1859, to Miss Matilda Able, a daughter of Washington and Ellen (Overall) Able. The parents were natives of Bourbon County, Ky. Mrs. Culver was born in Meade County, Ky., and to her have been born ten children, of whom nine are living: Carrie E., Robert L., Eliza E., Herbert, Frank, Lou, Minnie, Howard and Maggie.

CHARLES B. DAVIS was born in Smithland, Ky., January 30, 1845, and is a son of Thomas M. and Emily (Roach) Davis. The father was born in Smithland in November, 1822; his father, John Davis, came from Ireland to this county when a young man. The grandfather was a hotel keeper at Smithland for many years. Thomas M., grew up in this county, and first served as deputy sheriff. About 1843 he began merchandising, and followed it until his death, in January 4, 1869. He was also president of the Southern Bank of Kentucky, at Smithland. He was a member of the Smithland Masonic lodge. The mother is still living at the age of fifty-seven. Charles B. is the eldest of three living children: C. B., Kate, wife of Dr. W. H. Sanders; and Dr. Frank, at Paducah. Charles B. clerked in his father's store until he was about twenty-five years of age, and then embarked in business for himself. He now carries a stock of about $5,000. He also pays considerable attention to farming, owning about 1,500 acres. Mr. Davis was married January 18, 1872, to Miss Ida Cade, daughter of J. W. Cade (see sketch). Mrs. Davis was born February 14, 1851, and is the mother of five children. Mr. Davis and family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and he is a member of the Felulah Lodge, No. 70, I. O. O. F., of Smithland.

C. C. DORROH, Livingston County, is a native of Caldwell County, Ky., and was born August 16, 1828. He is the son of William and Mary (Stone) Dorroh, both parents born in the State of South Carolina. William Dorroh's father, John Dorroh, was a native of Ireland. He came to America when a young man, and lived in South Carolina for a number of years, afterward moving to Livingston County, Ky., settling near the present site of Dycusburg Village, he died in Alabama about the year 1852. The maternal grandfather of our subject was Caleb Stone, a native of South Carolina; he was an early settler of Fredonia Precinct, Caldwell County, where he died about 1836. William Dorroh was born in South Carolina. He came to Kentucky when a small boy and was a resident of Caldwell County until his death, which occurred about 1835. Mary Stone Dorroh was born in South Carolina also, and died in 1876 at an advanced age. C. C. is Early and Morgan. Mr. Ellis was with his regiment in all its campaigns, which were very severe, and participated in battles at Knoxville, Perryville, Mt. Sterling, Cynthiana, and a number of others. He was captured with Morgan at Cynthiana and taken to Lexington, and later to Indianapolis, where he was kept in close confinement for a period of ten months, until his exchange in 1864. At the close of the war Mr. Ellis returned to Carroll County, where he engaged in farming and where he lived until 1875. In the latter year he moved to Crittenden County, and in 1877 came to Livingston County, purchasing his present beautiful home on the Ohio River, above Carrsville, where he has since resided. Mr. Ellis at the present time is engaged in farming, trading and boating, in all of which he is meeting with a reasonable degree of success. He was married, September 9, 1873, to Joanna, daughter of G. W. and Sarah A. (Blesssing) Ross, of Carroll County. Mr. and Mrs. Ellis are the parents of four children: Clara S. (deceased), Esther I., Mary Agnes and Willie (deceased). Mr. Ellis belongs to the Masonic fraternity and is a consistent member of the Christian Church.

ROBERT R. FARRIS, Livingston County, was born in Maury County, middle Tenn., October 21, 1821, and is a son of Robert and Charlotte Farris. The father was killed by the fall of a tree before subject was born. When at the age of twelve, the latter was adopted by his paternal grandparents. When Robert R. was nine years old his people came to Kentucky, and settled in Caldwell County. He remained at home until he was twenty-one, and then, commencing life for himself, settled down on a farm in Crittenden County. He remained there about a year, and then returned to Caldwell County, where he resided until January, 1860. He then came to Livingston County, and settled near Old Salem. There he bought a farm of 200 acres, and gave his attention exclusively to farming until October, 1874, when he was elected jailer of Livingston County, and came to Smithland. Here he has since resided, having been elected to the office of jailer three times in succession. Mr. Farris was married in March, 1842, to Miss Elizabeth Turley, a daughter of John and Margaret (Crane) Turley, natives of Virginia and early settlers of Caldwell County. Mrs. Farris was born December 15, 1822. The result of this marriage was seven children, six of whom are now living: Margaret, wife of L. Greer; John R., W. G., Thomas H., Jacob A. and James D. Mrs. Farris died in April, 1856, and August 21, 1856, Mr. Farris married Mrs. Caroline Brooks, nee Weller, a daughter of James C. and Mary C. (Williams) Weller; the father was a native of Kentucky, the mother of Virginia. Mrs. Farris was born October 5, 1830, and is the mother of seven children, of whom two are living: Charles E. and Richard R. Mr. and Mrs. Farris are members of the Missionary Baptist Church; he is a member of Salem Lodge, No. 81, A. F. & A. M.

J. A. FARRIS was born April 13, 1852, in Lyon County, Ky., and is a son of Robert R. and Elizabeth Farris, natives of Tennessee and Kentucky, respectively. Subject's paternal ancestors were of English descent, and among the early settlers of Tennessee. Robert R. Farris came to Kentucky when an infant, and for a number of years resided near Hopkinsville, Christian County. Later he moved to Caldwell County, where he lived until 1860, at which time he moved to Livingston County, locating near Salem, where he engaged in farming. In 1870 he was elected jailer of the county, and at the present time he resides in Smithland, attending to the duties of his office. Subject's mother, Elizabeth (Turley) Farris, was a daughter of one of the early pioneers of Caldwell County. She was born in that county, and died about 1854. The following are the names of the children of Robert R. and Elizabeth Farris: Margaret J., John R. Jr., William Thomas, J. A., J. D. and Macklin B., deceased. By a second marriage Mr. Farris had born to him two children: Charles and Richard. The subject of this sketch has been a resident of Livingston County since 1860. At the age of sixteen years he commenced clerking at Salem in the store of William Knouer, with whom he remained for five years, and at the end of that time he effected a co-partnership in the goods business with M. D. Coffield, which was continued four years. In 1876 the partnership was dissolved, and since that time Mr. Farris has been engaged in carrying on a large general store for himself, and now has a very extensive and lucrative trade. He commenced life a poor boy, and by skillful management has accumulated a handsome fortune, owning beside his store a fine farm in Salem Precinct. His stock of goods represents a capital of $4,000, and his business is constantly increasing. Mr. Farris was married October 14, 1875, to Lucy E. Threlkeld, daughter of Willis B. Threlkeld, of Crittenden County. Three children have been born to this union: Norborn R., Jessie L. and Robert Duke, all of whom are living.

T. J. FAULKNER was born October 2, 1832, in Whitley County, Ky. His grandfather, Francis M. Faulkner, was a native of North Carolina, but moved to Kentucky, locating near Boston, Whitley County, and was among the first pioneers of that division of the State, clearing the first farm in the county. Later he moved to Alabama, and died in that State in 1859, at an advanced age. Mr. Faulkner's grandfather on the mother's side was Thomas Hodge, also a native of North Carolina. He came to Kentucky shortly after the arrival of the Faulkner family, and later moved to Alabama, where he died in 1845. Reulen Faulkner, subject's father, was born in Whitley County, Ky., where he lived until his marriage with Priscilla Hodge in 1833, at which time he immigrated to Tennessee, settling in McMinn County. He is a successful farmer, and for a number of years has filled various official positions. Mrs. Faulkner died in 1867. The family of Reulen and Priscilla Faulkner consisted of eleven children, of whom are living James R., Thomas, Malinda, Daniel K. and Mary A. The deceased children are Nancy, William, George, Easter, Elizabeth and Francis M. Our subject lived on the old homestead until he was twenty-six years of age, when he chose farming as his vocation, and followed it in McMinn County, Tenn., until 1858, at which time he moved to Daviess County, Mo., where he remained a short time, afterward coming to Livingston County, Ky., and purchasing a part of his present farm in Carrsville Precinct, where he now owns a tract of 215 acres of choice land. He was married December 27, 1860, to Nancy E., daughter of Alexander and Martha (Vick) Dixon, of Livingston County, by whom he has had nine children: Sallie D., William A., James T., John V., Reulen A., Edgur, Mary E., Grace F. (deceased) and Martha P. (deceased).

J. L. FLEMING was born in Warren County, N. C., December 22, 1822, and is a son of Peter and Elizabeth (Turner) Fleming. The father was born in 1795 in the same county, as was also the mother. Her death occurred in 1825. To her and husband were born four children, our subject being the third, and of that number but two are now living: J. L. and Hon. A. J. The father came to this county in 1837 and purchased 400 acres near Salem, where he resided until his death, which occurred January 8, 1846. Our subject received his education in the common schools of that day, and commenced life for himself when nineteen years old. He devoted the first few years to trading and stock raising. After his father's death he inherited a part of the home farm, and there resided about one year. In 1848 he came to his present farm, where he first bought 125 acres. He subsequently owned about 500 acres, but at present has only 200 acres on the home farm. Beside farming he has also devoted considerable attention to tobacco speculating and merchandising. Mr. Fleming was married in this county December 22, 1846, to Miss Temperance Champion, daughter of Willis and Sallie (Pippin) Champion. The father was born in Edgecomb County, N. C., in 1779, and came to Livingston County in 1795. He settled in Salem Precinct and there resided until his death in March, 1858, the mother died in 1833. Mrs. Fleming was born in this county October 8, 1822. To Mr. and Mrs. Fleming were born seven children, all of whom are since deceased: Sarah, Linley, Fannie, Lewis and three infants unnamed. Mrs. Fleming is a member of the Missionary Baptist Church. He is a member of the Carrsville Lodge, No. 145, I. O. O. F.

HON. A. J. FLEMING was born in Warren County, N. C., December 27, 1824, and is a son of Peter and Elizabeth (Turner) Fleming, the parents being natives of the same county. The father was born October 28, 1795, and his grandfather immigrated to this country from Turkey in a very early day. July 19, ——, subject's father arrived at Salem, Livingston County. He soon after purchased a farm of 400 acres, and there resided until his death, which occurred January 8, 1846. The mother died in North Carolina January 3, 1825. Subject is the youngest of four children, of whom but two are now living: J. L. and A. J. The latter remained on the home farm until his father's death, and then moved to North Carolina, but there he remained only about one year, and then returned to this county. He first bought about 233 acres, and now owns about 400 acres, with about 250 in cultivation. He began merchandising about 1864, at Birdsville, but owing to war troubles he sold out in about five months, and never renewed the business. Mr. Fleming has been three times married; first, on November 18, 1847, to Miss Catherine Hawkins, a daughter of Capt. Abraham and Maria (Foot) Hawkins. The father was a captain in the war of 1812. Mrs. Fleming was born in Hardin County, Ill., February 13, 1823, and to her were born three children, only one of whom—Peter—is now living. Her death occurred November 8, 1852. Subject's second marriage took place September 22, 1853, and was to Miss Nancy

L. Burgess, a daughter of James and Elizabeth (Champion) Burgess, natives of Edgecomb County, N. C. Mrs. Nancy L. Fleming was born May 12, 1831, and died December 3, 1878; the result of this second marriage was the birth of nine children, of whom four are now living: James, Fred, in Corsicana, Tex.; Frank, in Dresden, Tex.; and May. Mr. Fleming's third marriage took place July 27, 1880, to Mrs. Mary A. Cox, nee Isbell, daughter of James R. Isbell, of Warren County, Ky. Mrs. Fleming is a member of the Christian Church. Mr. Fleming is a member of Salem Lodge, No. 81, A. F. & A. M. He served as school commissioner in this county for twelve years. In 1875 he was elected to the Kentucky legislature for Livingston and Crittenden Counties, and served during the years 1875 and 1876.

PHILIP GRASSHAM, Livingston County, is a native of Tennessee, having been born in Roane County, that State, December 27, 1827. His father, Nehemiah Grassham, was born in the same county and State in 1802. He was a skillful mechanic, and resided in his native State until 1851, at which time he came to Kentucky and located in Dycusburg Crittenden County, where he died July 27, 1868, at the age of sixty-six years. Th, maiden name of subject's mother was Mare Clark. She was a daughter of John Clarky of Tennessee, and was born in 1808. Her, death occurred in 1858, ten years previous to that of her husband. The following are the names of the children born to Nehemiah and Mary Grassham: John C., deceased; Mary, deceased; Nancy, Caroline, Jane, Montgomery, James M. and Philip (subject). The last named commenced making his own living when but ten years of age, working at anything he could get to do for the insignificant sum of ten cents a day. He continued as a common laborer for several years, working part of the time on a farm, and a part in a tanyard, reserving a portion of his hard-earned wages for his parents, after whose interests he looked as long as they lived. By industry and rigid economy he succeeded in accumulating a sum of money sufficient to enable him to make a payment on a tract of land in Crittenden County, which he purchased and on which he worked for two years, when he sold out at a good figure. After this transaction he followed farming and trading in real estate until 1865, at which time he moved to Salem, Livingston County, and engaged in the hotel keeping and mercantile business, the latter of which he still continues. Probably no merchant in the county has sold as many goods as Mr. Grassham, and certainly no one has been more successful. From a very meager beginning he has built up a large trade, and is at present doing an extensive business, with a general stock of merchandise representing a capital of about $10,000. In 1874 Mr. Grassham purchased his home farm, consisting of 700 acres, three miles south of Salem Village. This is one of the best improved farms in the county. He was married, December 17, 1851, to Miss Catherine Grimmett, daughter of Samuel and Fannie (Rankins) Grimmett, of Monroe County, Tenn. Mr. and Mrs. Grassham are the parents of eight children, viz.: Mary E., dedeased; P. T., Sarah, wife of W. A. Bryant; Washington, deceased; Jeannette, Elizabeth, Robert H., Washington, deceased.

W. H. GREEN, Livingston County. The paternal ancestors of Mr. Green were Hollanders, and the first trace we have of the family is in 1776, at which time Conrad Green came from his native country as a soldier in the British army, in the wár of the Revolution. He was captured by the Americans shortly after landing, and afterward joined the patriot army, in which he served until the close of the war. He settled in Virginia as a planter, and died in that State in 1817. His son, George Green, subject's grandfather, was born in Virginia. He came to Kentucky in early manhood, and settled in the northern part of Livingston (now Crittenden) County, where he died in 1879. His wife was Polly Crider, daughter of Jacob Crider, a native of Virginia and an early settler of Livingston (now Crittenden) County, locating here about 1812, and dying in Caldwell County in 1861. Jacob Green, subject's father, was born November 13, 1817, in Livingston (now Crittenden) County, where he still resides. He is a large farmer and stock raiser, and one of the leading citizens of Salem Precinct. He was married September 10, 1837, to Miss Elizabeth Bennett, by whom he had eleven children, the subject of this sketch being the eldest. Mrs. Green died July 15, 1856, in Livingston County. W. H. Green was born October 31, 1839, in Crittenden County. He was reared on a farm, and spent the first fourteen years of his life in Lyon County, to which place his father moved when he was in infancy. W. H. enlisted in 1861, in the First Kentucky Cavalry, Confederate States army, under the command of Col. B. H. Helm, with which he served one year. He participated in the battle of Fort Donelson, where he was captured and taken to Columbus, Ohio, and later to Johnson's Island, remaining in confinement for six months. From the latter place he was exchanged, and immediately rejoined his company, which had been reorganized and attached temporarily to the Eighth Kentucky infantry, with which he served in the Mississippi department, under corps commanders Johnston, Van Dorn and Pemberton; and in 1863 was transferred to the command of Gen. John H. Morgan, and participated in the principal battles in which the Tennessee army was engaged, including Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, and others. He was with Morgan in his southwest Virginia campaign and Kentucky raids, and at the battle of Cynthiana was again taken prisoner and kept in confinement on Johnson's Island until the close of the war in 1865. After the war he returned to Kentucky, and engaged in farming in Livingston County, purchasing his present beautiful farm in Salem Precinct, three and a half miles south of Salem Village. He owns a farm of 200 acres, and makes stock raising a specialty, in which he has been successful. He was married December 14, 1865, to Miss Susan C. Miles, daughter of Col. Richard and Kittie N. (Woods) Miles, of Livingston County. The fruits of this marriage are five children, namely: Charles B., Kittie M., Ida D., William N. and George, all of whom are living. In 1879 Mr. Green was elected to represent Livingston and Crittenden Counties in the legislature, and served one term of two years. He is a member of the United Baptist Church, as is also his wife, and holds the office of deacon in the Pinckneyville congregation.

C. L. HARRIS, M. D., Livingston County, is a native of Scott County, Va., and one of the oldest and most successful medical men of Livingston County. He was born in October, 1821, and is the son of John and Ellen (Strong) Harris, both natives of Virginia. Subject's paternal grandfather, Lewis Harris, came West about the year 1832, and settled in Vincennes, Ind., where he died a short time afterward. Thomas Strong, subject's maternal grandfather, was born in North Carolina, from which State he emigrated in an early day, going to Scott County, Va., where he died in 1855. John Harris was born in Scott County, Va., and died at his home in Spencer County, Ind., about 1852. Subject's mother, Ellen (Strong) Harris, died in the year 1863. Mr. and Mrs. Harris were the parents of three children: C. L. (subject), Joseph, deceased, and Thomas. C. L. Harris remained with his parents until the age of ten years, when he went to live with the family of his grandfather, with whom he remained until his sixteenth year. He received the rudiments of an education in the common schools of the county, which, at that time, were of a very inferior grade, and in his sixteenth year entered Emory and Henry College, which institution he attended two years. Upon leaving school he became a clerk in a mercantile establishment at Estilville, Va., where he remained for five years, and after attaining his majority, he began the study of medicine at the same place under the preceptorship of Dr. Herron. In 1848 he entered the Louisville Medical University, which he attended one year, and later attended the Transylvania University at Lexington, from which institution he graduated in the class of 1851–52. After graduating he returned to Virginia and commenced the practice of his profession at Scott Court House, remaining there but a short time. He afterward moved to Kentucky, locating at Lewisport, Hancock County, where he resided until the year 1855, or 1856, when he came to Carrsville, which has since been his home. Like almost all of our successful Western men, he began life in an humble sphere, and has made his own way by dint of perseverance, integrity and business capacity. He has a large practice in Livingston County and adjoining counties, and at the present time is senior member of the medical firm of Harris & Stewart. The Doctor was married in September, 1853, to Jane, daughter of Jesse and Rebecca Pill, of Livingston County. Eight children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Harris, only three of whom are living: Thomas, Fannie and Roxie. The Doctor is an ardent Democrat in politics, but never aspired to official position. His wife is an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Carrsville.

W. A. HAYDEN, Livingston County, was born October 19, 1826, in Trigg County, Ky. He is a son of Henly and Elizabeth Hayden, natives of Virginia and Kentucky, respectively. Anthony Hayden, the father of Henly Hayden, was also a Virginian and an early pioneer of Bourbon County, Ky.; he afterward moved to the southern part of the State and died in Christian County, December 26, 1866. Henly Hayden was born in Virginia, September 26, 1766. He came to Kentucky with his parents when a small boy, and lived in Christian County until early manhood, when he moved to Trigg County, and later, in 1850, moved to Caldwell County, where he died about 1867 or 1868. Elizabeth Hayden was a daughter of Mr. Shipp, a native of Virginia, and one of the early prominent business men of Hopkinsville. Mrs. Hayden was born in Bourbon County, Ky., and died in 1846, at the age of sixty years. The family of Henly and Elizabeth Hayden consisted of twelve children—only three of whom are living: Turner R., Mary and W. A. The last named was reared in Christian County, and at the age of nineteen commenced farming, which he carried on for four years in Kentucky, and at the end of that time went to Missouri, locating in Cape Girardeau County, where he engaged in farming and stock raising. At the end of two years he returned to Kentucky, and in 1854 purchased his present farm in Crittenden County, where he resided until 1884, at which time he moved to Salem Village, Livingston County, and retired from active life. Mr. Hayden has been twice married; the first time, November 30, 1846, to America E. Finch, of Tennessee, by whom he had three children: Robert M., Dr. John V. and William O. His second marriage occurred November 30, 1858, to Sarah A., daughter of Thomas and Lydia (Owen) Threlkeld, of Crittenden County. Mr. Hayden is a member of the Masonic fraternity in which he has taken all the degrees to the council. He belongs to the I. O. O. F., and is a prominent member of the Christian Church. John V. Hayden, M. D., second son of the above, was born May 22, 1850, in Pope County, Ill. At the age of twenty-three he commenced the study of medicine under Dr. F. M. Dunning, of Rosebud, Pope Co., Ill., pursuing his studies at that place for a period of two years. He entered Miami Medical College at Cincinnati, in 1876, and graduated from that institution two years later. He commenced the practice of his profession at Columbus, Ill., where he remained until 1879, moving to Salem, Ky., in the latter year, and effecting a copartnership with Dr. J. D. Threlkeld, which still continues. Dr. Hayden has been very successful in his practice. He belongs to Salem Lodge, No. 81, A. F. & A. M., and is also an Odd Fellow.

J. L. HIBBS was born in this precinct and county, November 30, 1825, and is a son of Zachariah C. and Sallie (Crossley) Hibbs. The father was also born in this county, November 17, 1799. His father, Jonah Hibbs, was a native of Pennsylvania, and came to this county about 1797. He remained here until about 1832, when he moved to Arkansas, where he died. The father grew to manhood in this county, and in about 1823, he was married to Miss Crossley, who was born in Christian County, Ky., January 1, 1800. He settled down in this precinct, and first bought about 300 acres, and finally owned about 800 acres. He died May 8, 1858, a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. The death of the mother occurred April 12, 1878. Subject is the second of a family of three children, of whom two are now living: Nancy (wife of Buford Jimeson, and J. L. The latter remained at home until the age of twenty-two, and then commenced life for himself. He moved to St. Francis County, Ark., when he was twenty-three years of age, and remained there three years. He then returned to this county, and settled on a farm near the present site of Birdsville. Here he first bought about 250 acres, and now owns about 1,200 acres, with about 400 acres in cultivation. In 1860 he commenced merchandising, and erected the first store in Birdsville. He remained in business until 1864, when, owing to the war, he was compelled to close. In 1882, he began merchandising again, and is still in the business. He carries a general stock, averaging about $2,000. He is also the grain buyer at this point, handling about 5,000 bushels a year. In past years he has engaged quite extensively in tobacco speculating. Mr. Hibbs was married March 7, 1848, to Miss Emma Lena Branch, a daughter of Jesse Branch, of North Carolina. Mrs. Hibbs was born in North Carolina, November 25, 1825, and to her and husband have been born ten children, of whom but eight are now living. Mr. Hibbs and family are members of the Baptist Church. He has served as magistrate in the Dyer's Hill Precinct. In 1869 and 1870 he represented this county and Marshall in the legislature. He is a member of Salem Lodge, No. 81, A. F. & A. M.

J. C. HODGE was born November 4, 1843, in Livingston County, Ky., and is a son of Blount and Elizabeth Hodge. The father was a native of North Carolina and the mother of Kentucky. The father of Blount Hodge was Robert Hodge, a native of North Carolina and one of the early settlers of Livingston County. He was a farmer, and died near Salem Village about 1848. Blount Hodge was born in North Carolina, and came to Kentucky, when but seven years of age. He was one of the successful business men of Livingston County, having been extensively engaged in merchandising, farming and banking, in all of which he was very successful, accumulating a large estate. His death occurred in Smithland in 1877. Subject's mother was a daughter of William Rice, a native of Kentucky. She was born in 1808, and died in 1864, aged fifty-six years. J. C.

J. K. Hunt

is the third of a family of four children. He enjoyed good educational advantages, attending the public schools, and in 1858 entered Centre College at Danville, Boyle County, where he remained one year. He next became a student in St. Joseph's College at Bardstown, from which he graduated at the age of seventeen years. After graduating Mr. Hodge returned to Smithland, and commenced the study of law with Judge C. Bennett, in whose office he remained until after attaining his majority, when he received license to practice from Judges W. P. Fowler and C. S. Marshall. After being admitted to the bar, Mr. Hodge effected a co-partnership with Judge Bennett, with whom he remained until the latter's election to the judgeship, since which time he has been alone. As an attorney, Mr. Hodge takes a high rank, and is one of the readiest orators in west Kentucky. He has a large and lucrative practice. He was married September 7, 1876, to Miss Julia Scantland, daughter of John and Amanda Scantland, of Franklin County, Ky. Mr. and Mrs. Hodge have a family of four children: Laura C., Blount, Annie E. and James C.

COL. JAMES K. HUEY was born in what is now Dyer's Hill Precinct, Livingston County, Ky., March 27, 1827, and is a son of Robert and Eliza (Calhoun) Huey. The father was born in what is now Fairfield District, S. C., in 1784. His parents, John and Ann (Kincaid)) Huey, were both natives of Ireland, and came to the United States about the year 1780. In 1796, when the father of subject was but twelve years old, the grandfather came to Christian County, what is now Livingston County, and settled the place now known as the Rutter farm, about two miles from the present village of Hampton. There the grandparents and parents of subject all lie buried. John Huey entered about 1,000 acres of land, on one tract of which he resided until his death. The father of our subject grew to manhood in this county, and about 1818 was married to Miss Eliza, daughter of Patrick and Ellen (Pickens) Calhoun, the latter was a daughter of Col. William Pickens, of the Revolutionary war. Patrick Calhoun was a cousin of John C. Calhoun, the noted statesman of South Carolina, To this union were born Ellen (who married J. C. Love), and Maria (who married S. R. Nunn), and subject. The father of subject, about 1833, was married (again) to Mrs. Malinda Morris, of Illinois, by which marriage were born unto them Rebecca, Lizzie, Angie and Sallie. Angie died at the age of twelve. Rebecca, Lizzie and Sallie made happy marriages with men of high position in Alabama. Robert Huey settled on the farm now known as the Joseph Wright farm, in Livingston County, and there resided until his death, in the summer of 1842. He was a successful farmer, and one of the largest stock raisers in the county, and was a true example of the early pioneer of this county. His first wife, the mother of subject, died in 1829. Subject is the youngest of three children by the first marriage and the only one of them now living. Subject, James K., being fifteen years of age when his father died, went to McCracken County, Ky., where he entered Wilmington Seminary, near Paducah, and remained for one year at school. In 1844 he commenced the duties of deputy sheriff in said county under his uncle, James C. Calhoun, who was then sheriff, and continued to perform all the duties of said office for five years. Returning home to Livingston County 1st of January, 1849, he purchased the office of sheriff from H. A. Harmon, who was the oldest magistrate. This office he held for two years. In 1851 the constitution of the State was changed, and the sheriff made elective. He became a candidate, and was elected in 1851, and again in 1853 without opposition. While he was acting as sheriff he found time to read law, and in 1856 he was admitted to practice. In 1857 he was elected as a Democrat, from Livingston and Marshall Counties, to the legislature, and served in the session of 1857 and 1858. His opponent, Hon. James Brian, of Marshall, also a Democrat and a man of ability, was defeated in the contest by a large majority in each of said counties. Returning home he continued the practice of law until 1860, when he was nominated by his party for the office of State senator for the counties of McCracken, Livingston, Lyon and Caldwell. He was defeated by Dr. John M. Johnson by eighty-five votes. He ran ahead of his ticket, however, several hundred votes. At the opening of the war he raised a company of cavalry in the counties of Hopkins, Webster and Livingston. He was elected captain, and reported for duty in the Confederate service. At the battle of Fort Donelson he refused to surrender with Gen. Forrest's men. He united and marched out in defiance of the enemy. He participated in many of the leading fights of the war, having four horses killed under him in battle. He distinguished himself for bravery and opposition to a guerrilla warfare. He retired with the rank of colonel May 19, 1865; marching into Paducah with ninety men, surrendered to Gen. Meredith, who was then in command of the post. Returning home he found himself debarred from the practice of law by an act of congress passed during the war. He accordingly embarked in the commission business in New Orleans. He continued in business there until 1872, when he returned home to Livingston County, and re-engaged in the practice of law until he was elected county judge in 1874, again in 1878, and in 1882, which position he continues to hold. Judge Huey was married in Canton, Miss., July 14, 1870, to Miss Alice Powell, a daughter of Robert and Frances (Smith) Powell. The father is one of the largest planters of the South. Mrs. Huey was born 14th of February, 1845, and is the mother of six children, of whom three are living: Fannie P., James K., Jr., and Jessie. Mr. and Mrs. Huey are members of the Missionary Baptist Church. He is a member of Smithland Lodge, No. 138, F. & A. M. Since the death of the Whig party in 1855, he has been a firm and consistent Democrat, taking a prominent part in every political contest. In every capacity in which Judge Huey has served, he has shown ability, and established great character for energy and honesty, and for a life of pure morals he has no superior. Col. Huey contributes liberally to every cause of charity. During the ten years he served as sheriff, he expended all that he made in educating and accomplishing his half-sisters, who were left penniless. He is firm, out-spoken, and a true friend, a devoted husband and affectionate father. It can be truly said that honor has always been dearer to him than life. See portrait.

P. G. JONES was born in Owensboro, Daviess County, Ky., December 13, 1852. He is a son of Thomas and Frances (Griffin) Jones. The father was born in North Carolina, December 14, 1818; when he was two years old his parents settled in Daviess County, Ky., where they resided until their death. The father of subject grew to manhood in that county, and on June 20, 1850, he married Miss Griffin; she was born in Nelson County, Ky., June 30, 1822. They settled down in that county and there the father followed carpentering. He is still living, but his wife died January 11, 1864. Our subject is the eldest of five children, of whom four are now living: P. G., Vitula, Cleopatra and Clinton M. P. G. moved in 1873 to Marion, Ky., where he attended school for two years and taught for three years. He thence came to Hampton and embarked in the general merchandise business. He only remained at this place about ten months, and then went to Shawneetown, Ill., where he engaged in the furniture business for six months, and then moved to Morganfield, Ky., where he remained a short time, and then returned to his home in Owensboro, Ky. At that point he merchandised and also farmed. In December, 1883, he returned to this county and settled at Hampton, where he is at present farming and running a hotel. Mr. Jones was married September 5, 1877, to C. I. Jones, daughter of James and Mary H. (Walker) Jones. The father was born near Little Rock, Ark.; the mother in Crittenden County, Ky. The father died on January 8, 1877; the mother is still living with subject. Mr. and Mrs. Jones are the parents of three children: Laila, Nellie F. and James H. Mr. J. and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

J. W. JORDAN, Livingston County, was born February 12, 1842, in Tompkinsville, Monroe Co., Ky., and is a son of Charles and Amanda (Ladd) Jordan, both natives of Virginia. Dr. Jordan's grandfather, William Jordan, was an early settler of Sangamon County, Ill., having moved from Virginia to that State many years ago. The Ladd family came to Kentucky about the year 1810, settling in Monroe County, where Robert Ladd, subject's grandfather, died in 1840. Subject's father, Charles Jordan, was born in 1807, and is still living in Barren County, Ky. Amanda (Ladd) Jordan was born 1810, and is also living. Mr. and Mrs. Jordan are the parents of eight children, subject being the fifth. He remained with his parents until attaining his majority, when he engaged in business for himself as a trader in live stock, in which he was very successful. In 1865 he commenced the study of dentistry under the instructions of Dr. E. A. Herman of Nashville, Tenn., and one year later commenced practice in partnership with Dr. McGuire, working at Nashville, and different points in middle Tennessee. In 1867 he moved to Springfield, Mo., and the year following went to St. Louis, which he made his headquarters for a short time; afterward locating at Concord, where he remained one year. From the latter place he moved to Nevada City, Mo., and from there, in 1871, came back to Kentucky, locating at the village of Fredonia, Caldwell County, where he practiced his profession for a short time; he also spent a great many years going from place to place, but wherever he has gone, he established a lucrative practice. Among the different towns where he has located are the following: Smith's Grove, Marion, Princeton (Ky.,) Enfield, McLeansboro, Flora and Elizabethtown (Ill.,) Denver (Col.) and at various points in the Indian Territory. In 1880 he came to Livingston County, Ky., locating near Salem Village, where he has since resided, practicing his profession among the neighboring counties and towns. Dr. Jordan was married September 4, 1872, to Miss Sallie A. Alley, daughter of Henry and Charlotte Alley, of Salem, Ky. To this marriage one child was born—Charley. December 8, 1874, Mrs. Jordan departed this life in Denver, Col. In the year following, his second marriage occurred to Missouri Alley, a sister of his former wife. To this marriage six children were born: Frank C., Maggie T., John H., Charlotte M., William L., and Lily M. (deceased). The Doctor is an active member of the Christian Church, to which he has belonged since 1873, and in politics votes the Democratic ticket.

ISAAC LINLEY was born April 26, 1855, in Livingston County, and is a son of Dr. Thomas and Maria M. Linley. The Linleys were English people; subject's grandfather, Joseph Linley, came from the "Old Country" in an early day, and settled in Lewis County, Ky. He was a skillful mechanic, and in his native country worked at the cutler's trade. After coming to America he engaged in the blacksmithing trade, which he followed for many years. His death occurred in Illinois, some time between 1840 and 1850, at the age of seventy-six. Thomas Linley was born in 1806 in Mason County, Ky., and was a physician. He practiced medicine in the counties of Mason, Lewis and McCracken, and came to Livingston County in 1840, locating at the town of Salem. He was eminently successful in his profession, and during his residence at Salem became quite wealthy, accumulating a handsome estate. He died at his home place one-half mile from the village, March 29, 1880. The maiden name of subject's mother was Maria M. Barker. She is a daughter of William Barker, of Virginia, and dates her birth from the year 1812, and is living with her son. Thomas and Maria Linley were the parents of thirteen children: Mary M., Martha, James M., Joseph W., Alice, deceased; Savilla F., Charles H., Maria, Laura, Isaac, Henry C., deceased; Frelinghuysen and Thomas, deceased. Isaac Linley was reared on a farm, and received his early education at the schools of Salem. He attended the Princeton College, Caldwell County, a short time; in 1871 he went to Atchison, Kan., where he attended the high school for a period of two years. Later he attended school at Waterloo, Iowa, for one year, and in 1874, returned to his native county, and commenced the study of law at Smithland, under W. D. Greer, with whom he remained a short time. He afterward entered the office of Bush & Hendrick, under whose instruction he pursued his reading for two years, at the end of which time, in 1876, he was admitted to the bar, receiving his license from Judge B. P. Cissell. He commenced the practice of his profession at Marion, Crittenden County, in partnership with L. H. James, where he remained two years. In 1879 he went to Nebraska, and located at Columbus, where for one year he practiced law successfully, but at the end of that time he was called home on account of his father's death. At the present time he is running the home farm, which is one of the best in the county. He practices his profession in connection with his farm and stock interests and is one of the most active business men in the county. He was elected magistrate of Salem Precinct in 1882, and holds the position at the present time. Mr. Lindley was married September 1, 1880, to Miss Belle Patterson, daughter of Samuel and Margaret (Coffield) Patterson, of Crittenden County. Three children are the fruits of this union, viz.: Ada, Thomas and Grover C. James M. Linley is a successful physician of Atchison, Kan., he graduated, at the Miami Medical School at Cincinnati, Ohio, also at the Bellevue Medical College, New York City. Charles H. Linley, graduated at the Miami Medical College, Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1876, and is a physician of high standing in Mt. Pleasant, Atchison Co., Kan. Joseph W. Linley graduated in medicine at the Medical College of Ann Arbor, Mich.; he did not like the profession however, and soon abandoned it and went into the stock business in Colorado, where he now lives, and has a fine cattle ranch and large herd of cattle.

T. W. LOWERY was born September 15, 1837, in Caldwell County, Ky. He is the seventh of a family of eleven children born to John and Grace (Ordway) Lowery, natives of Virginia and New Hampshire, respectively. James Lowery, subject's grandfather, moved from Virginia to Kentucky in an early day, and settled in Caldwell County, where he lived a number of years. He afterward moved to Hopkins County, and died in 1854, at the age of eighty-three years. John Lowery came to Kentucky when a small boy, and lived in Caldwell County until his death, which occurred about 1874. He was a farmer and during his life accumulated a large estate and became quite wealthy. Subject's mother, Grace Lowery, is a daughter of Daniel Ordway. She was born in New Hampshire, and is still living, making her home with her daughter, Mrs. Charles Miles, in Caldwell County. T. W. Lowery was reared on a farm and spent the first twenty-three years of his life in his native county, and after attaining his majority chose farming as his life work. He was married October 23, 1862, to Sallie Butler, a daughter of D. A. and Matilda A. (Green) Butler, of Crittenden County. One year after his marriage, Mr. Lowery moved to Livingston County, and located in Salem Precinct, where he purchased a farm of 160 acres. He has been a very successful farmer and now owns a farm of 600 acres, the greater part of which is in cultivation. His first wife died in March, 1879, aged thirty-four years. She was the mother of six children, viz.: Alice, wife of D. R. Steward; Willie, deceased; Emma L., John H., Mary D. and Leonard. September 14, 1882, Mr. Lowery married Mrs. Sallie Madlock, daughter of James and Ellen Isbell, of Warren County, Ky. One child has been born to this union—Ollie. Mr. Lowery gives his attention to his business affairs and is considered one of the best farmers in the precinct. He is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, belonging to the New Salem congregation. Mrs. Lowery is an active member of the Christian Church.

JUDGE ISAAC W. McCOLLUM, Livingston County, was born in Spartansburg District, S. C., March 8, 1815. His parents were Robert and Nancy McCollum, both natives of South Carolina. Booth McCollum, subject's grandfather, was a Carolinian and a descendant of an old Scotch family, which came to America before the formation of the Federal Government. Robert McCollum was born March 1, 1779 in South Carolina, and moved West in 1817, settling in what is now Trigg County, Ky., nine miles from the town of Cadiz. He was a farmer and a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and died in Dycusburg, Crittenden County, in 1856, moving to the latter place in 1850. The maiden name of subject's mother was Nancy Haines. She was born May 5, 1772, and died in 1833. Isaac McCollum is the fifth in a family of seven children. His early life was spent on a farm, and at an early age engaged as overseer on a large plantation of Col. Hobbs', in Christian County, where he remained until after arriving at his majority, when he was married October 4, 1836, to Martha Wilson, of Edinburgh, Scotland. After marriage he moved to Montgomery County, Ill., where he entered a tract of land and engaged in agricultural pursuits for three years. At the end of that time he came to Kentucky and settled in Crittenden County, purchasing a farm of 220 acres, which he still owns, and on which he resided from 1839 to 1876. In 1856 Mr. McCollum was elected judge of Crittenden County, serving one term of four years. He was re-elected in 1864, completing his second term in 1868. While attending to the duties of his office he lived in Marion, but on the expiration of his term he removed to his farm. In 1875 he removed to Carrsville, Livingston County, and engaged in merchandising, which he continued till the spring of 1884. In the latter year he retired from active life and purchased a neat home in Salem, where he now lives. Mr. McCollum has filled the office of magistrate, besides practicing law in Crittenden and adjoining counties. He is an active member of the Masonic fraternity, and a Democrat in politics; during the war his sympathies were with the Union. Mr. and Mrs. McCollum are the parents of six children, the following of whom are living: Susan A., wife of R. S. Threlkeld; Amanda J., wife of Joseph Parker; Finis B., M. D.; and Martha W., wife of Joseph Ward. The names of the deceased children were: Nancy M., wife of J. C. Foster, and Dr. Thomas R.

B. MARKEY was born in the County of Monaghan, Province of Leinster, Ireland, July 1, 1817, and is a son of Patrick and Elizabeth (Boyle) Markey, also natives of Ireland. The father died in Ireland about 1837; the mother came to this country about 1843, and died in Brooklyn in 1859. Subject was the second of a family of nine children, of whom four are now living: Francis, in Brooklyn, N. Y.; William in Washington, D. C.; Bridget, wife of John Boyle, and Barney. When the last named was about fifteen years of age he was apprenticed for seven years to learn the tailor's trade, but at the end of five years he ran away. In 1835 he came to the United States, and first settled in Westchester County, N. Y., where he followed his trade; next he worked in New York, and the leading towns in New Jersey and Pennsylvania, until he came to Pittsburgh. He subsequently started on a trip down the Ohio, working in different towns, and finally stopped in Caseyville. He then walked through to Smithland, working for different farmers along the road; he next went to Memphis, then a small village; then to Raleigh, Tenn. In the spring of 1840 he returned to Livingston County, and settled on his present farm, having received at first fifty acres from his father-in-law, which he has since increased to about 400 acres, about 200 of which are in cultivation. Mr. Markey was married in this county, November 29, 1839, to Miss Malinda Peyton, a daughter of William and Lucinda Peyton, natives of Maryland. They came to Kentucky in an early day and first settled in Boone County. In 1833 they moved to Livingston County, Ky., where they resided until their deaths. Mrs. Markey was born May 23, 1822, and is the mother of eleven children, of whom nine are living: Thomas A., James B., John S., Elizabeth A. wife of William Akers, Ruth A. wife of S. F. Foster), Margaret, wife of Gillam Bobb), Sarah wife of James Coyle, Mary J. and Catherine. Mr. Markey and family are members of the Catholic Church, and services are held at his residence at stated occasions. He has been identified with both the Masonic fraternity and I. O. O. F.

W. W. MAY was born October 10, 1828, in Livingston County, Ky. His father's name was Jacob May, his mother's, Jane Hosick. The Mays were of German descent, and among the first settlers of what is now Crittenden County, subject's grandfather dying there many years ago. Jane (Hosick) May was born in Kentucky, but sprang from an old Scotch family, her father emigrating from Scotland at an early day and settling in Boone County, Ky. He afterward moved to Livingston County, settling about six miles from Salem, where he worked at his trade of tailoring until his death. Jacob May was born in North Carolina, but came to Kentucky as early perhaps as 1804, locating near Salem Village, on land adjoining that of his father. He was an active citizen, and at one time was probably the largest real estate owner in Livingston County. Mr. May died March, 1880 or 1881, at an advanced age. W. W. May is the fifth of a family of nine children. He remained with his parents until eighteen years of age, at which time he commenced business on his own account as a fisherman on the Cumberland, Tennessee and Ohio Rivers, supplying the markets of Nashville and other places. He continued fishing as a business for a period of six years, and at the end of that time he engaged in steam-boating; running the Ohio and tributaries for about fourteen years as pilot. In 1860 he commenced farming in Crittenden County, purchasing a tract of 202 acres, on which he resided three years. In 1864 he purchased a farm in Carrsville Precinct, near the river, and in 1873 moved to this precinct, where he has since resided. Mr. May owns valuable tracts of real estate, aggregating 1,300 acres. He gives his attention principally to stock, in which he is one of the largest dealers in the county. Mr. May's first marriage occurred about the year 1852, with Miss Nancy M. Wilson, daughter of Jerry Wilson, of Crittenden County. Seven children were the result of this union: William R., George W., Lucinda E. wife of John Smith, Margaret J. wife of C. Green, Lilly deceased, Dollie deceased, and an infant deceased. Mrs. May died about the year 1862 or 1863. In 1866 Mr. May was married to Missouri, daughter of James Hosick of Livingston County; to this marriage have been born three children: Ida, James J. and Cora.

REV. R. P. MITCHELL, Livingston County, is a native of Stewart County, Tenn., and was born October 30, 1840. His ancestors on the father's side, were natives of Ireland, the grandfather coming many years ago to North Carolina, where his death occurred at an early day; subject's father, Rev. M. F. Mitchell, was born in that State in 1817, but immigrated to Georgia in his early manhood, and later to west Tennessee, where his death occurred in 1868. He was a preacher in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, a profession he followed all his life; he married a Mrs. Martha Taylor, her maiden name was Randall, daughter of Rev. Thomas Randall of Tennessee. She was married to a Mr. Taylor first, by whom she had two children—Adaline, and Sarah Ann. After the death of Taylor, she and Rev. M. F. Mitchell were married. Mr. Randall immigrated to America in an early day, and settled in Virginia. He afterward moved to Tennessee, and was among the pioneer Methodist preachers of that State. Mrs. Mitchell was born in Virginia, in about 1819, and died in March, 1881. By her marriage with Mr. Mitchell, she had four children, as follows—R. P. (subject), Rosener F. (deceased), Tennessee (deceased), and William McKendree (deceased). R. P. Mitchell received his primary education in the common school of his native county, and later took a course at an academy in Benton County, where he received instruction in the higher branches of learning. After leaving school he turned his attention to teaching, and followed that profession in Graves County, for a period of ten years, meeting with flattering success as an educator. In 1861 he joined the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and four years later received license to preach. He ministered to a number of congregations in Tennessee and west Kentucky, until 1875, when he came to Livingston County, settling in Carrsville Precinct, four miles from Lola Village. In 1880 he moved to Lola, and engaged in the mercantile business, which he at present carries on. He has been actively engaged in his ministerial labors, but at the present time, is pastor of but one congregation, New Salem. Mr. Mitchell is a member of the Masonic fraternity, belonging to Carrsville Lodge, both Royal Arch. He is also an Odd Fellow, belonging to a lodge in Mayfield, Graves County. September 6, 1859, Mr. Mitchell was united in marriage with Miss Mary Jane Watson, daughter of William Watson, of Graves County, Ky. Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell have a family of five children, Lorenzo P., William M., Mary G., Lola E. L. and Henry F.

HAYDON NELSON was born October 25, 1834, in Livingston County, Ky., and is a son of William and Nancy (Robinson) Nelson. William Nelson was born in Virginia, in 1778, and his parents moved to Boone County, Ky., when he was a boy. There he married his first wife, Salley Smith, who bore him eight children, and died November 20, 1816. About 1820, he married his second wife, Polley Doyal, who bore him four children, and died November 20, 1827. William Nelson came to Kentucky about 1820, and in 1832, married his third wife, Nancy Robinson; she first married a man named Cope, by whom she had one child, Mary Cope, born July 13, 1821. Mrs. Nancy (Robinson) Nelson bore her husband six children, as follows: George, born February 10, 1833; Haydon, October 25, 1834; Patsey A., March 25, 1836; Melissa, January 7, 1838; Frances Marion, February 10, 1840; Narcissa Caroline, January 25, 1842. William Nelson died February 11, 1844. Haydon Nelson is the second eldest of the six children, and January 28, 1855, married Mary J. E. Spell, daughter of Wiley and Cynthia (Hurley) Spell; she was born January 29, 1839, and to her and husband have been born six children: William Wiley, born August 25, 1856; James Haydon, December 31, 1857; Cynthia A. Medora, September 10, 1859; Henry Jefferson, November 26, 1861; Elizabeth Caroline, January 26, 1863; Nancy Louisa, January 25, 1865. Mrs. Mary J. E. Nelson died June 21, 1866. Haydon Nelson married his second wife, Almeda Hosick, June 3, 1868, and to them have been born four children: Lee Emanuel, born March 21, 1869; Charley C., May 29, 1870; Albert Willis, August 7, 1874; Bruce, February 24, 1876. Mrs. Almeda J. (Hosick) Nelson was born December 29, 1841, and is a daughter of James and Margaret (Wofford) Hosick. Mr. Nelson owns about 300 acres of land; is a farmer, and the present county assessor; he has acted as constable for ten or twelve years.

WEBB OWEN was born February 15, 1829, in what is now Crittenden County, Ky., and is a son of David and Anna (Buckley) Owen. Robert Owen, grandfather of subject, was one of the early residents of Shelby County, where he died. David Owen was born some years before the present century in northern Kentucky, and in an early day moved to Crittenden County, settling near Marion, being one of the first pioneers to make a home in that locality. He was a farmer by occupation, and served as major in the American army during the war of 1812. He died of cholera, in the year 1832. Anna (Buckley) Owen, subject's mother, was a daughter of Rev. William Buckley, one of the pioneer Baptist ministers of Livingston County, who died as early as the year 1838. Mrs. Owen departed this life May 16, 1883, at the advanced age of eighty-three years. The family of David and Anna Owen consisted of six children, named as follows: Mary, James, Webb (subject), David (deceased), Jackson (deceased), and Narcissa (deceased). Webb Owen was reared on a farm, and remained with his mother, looking after her interests, until after attaining his majority, when he commenced farming for himself, purchasing a fine tract of land in the western part of Livingston County, on which he resided from 1854 until 1869, accumulating a handsome competency. He disposed of his farming interests in 1869, and moved to Carrsville, where he engaged in the milling business, erecting a large flouring-mill, in which he still owns an interest. In connection with the milling business, he is engaged in farming and trading, shipping stock, tobacco, grain, etc., in which he has been very fortunate, and is now considered one of the substantial business men of Livingston County. September 15, 1852, Mr. Owen was married to Miss Frances Kidd, daughter of Philip and Teresa Kidd, of Crittenden County, Ky. Three children were born to this union, viz.: Julia, wife of Henry Adams; Serene, wife of Robert Threlkeld, and Mary (deceased). In 1867, Mrs. Owen departed this life, at the age of about thirty years. Two years later, Mr. Owen was married to Octavia, daughter of James and Susan Harrison, by whom he had two children, Charles and Gertie, both of whom are living. Mrs. Octavia Owen died in 1875, and in 1878, Mr. Owen was united in marriage with Mrs. Lucy Mantz, a sister of his second wife. Mr. Owen belongs to the Masonic fraternity, and is an active member of the Baptist Church.

J. M. PAVY is a native of Kenton County, Ky., and a son of Peter H. and Lucy (Bobbitt) Pavy. The Pavy family were of Scotch descent, and among the earliest pioneers of Kenton County. Peter H. Pavy, subject's father, was a mechanic, worked at cabinet-making near the town of Independence, and died there about the year 1836. Lucy Bobbitt Pavy was born in Virginia, and died in 1836, a short time after her husband. Our subject is the youngest of a family consisting of the following children: Alfred (deceased), Anna M. (deceased), Eliza J., Mary G., Rebecca W. and Frances M. By a previous marriage, Peter Pavy had one child: Nancy, wife of Henry Marshall. Subject's parents died when he was about three years of age, and from that time until fourteen years of age, he made his home at various places, working during the summer and attending the common schools a few months during the winter. At the age of fourteen he secured employment at a tobacco factory at Covington, Ky., where he remained two years, a portion of which time was spent on a farm in the vicinity of the city. In 1856 he went to Adams County, Missouri, where he found employment as a farm laborer, and later attended the college at Canton, in the same county, several sessions. From Missouri, Mr. Pavy returned to his native county and in 1858 came to Livingston County, locating at Carrsville, where he engaged with his brother-in-law, Joseph Bridges, in the tobacco business, with whom he worked a short time. In July, 1858, he became a student in the commercial department of the Louisville University, from which he graduated in the fall of the same year. After graduation he returned to Carrsville, and engaged as clerk with John Ward, with whom he remained the greater part of the year, after which he commenced working at the carpenter's trade, following that vocation until 1860. In the latter year he commenced farming near the village, and later formed a partnership with I. T. Creely in the plastering and bricklaying business, which he continued one year. He next opened a shoe shop, which was conducted until 1876, when he engaged in merchandising, which he still continues. He handles a miscellaneous assortment of goods, valued at $4,000, and is doing a good business. Mr. Pavy was appointed postmaster at Carrsville in 1876 and held the position until 1881. He has been successful in his various business ventures, and at the present time carries on farming, carpentering, trading, shipping, etc., in connection with merchandising. Mr. Pavy was married September 6, 1860, to Mary E., daughter of Thomas P. Jones of Livingston County. Mr. Pavy votes the Democratic ticket.

C. O. PILES was born in Panhandle Precinct, Livingston County, August 7, 1849, and is a son of George C. and Rosa Cooley Piles. The father was born in Daviess County, Ky., in 1810; his people were natives of South Carolina, and cousins of the Calhouns. The mother was born in Columbus, Hickman Co., Ky. The father came to this county about 1833, with his parents. He made a settlement about five miles from Paducah in this county and turned his attention to farming. He died in January, 1880; the mother in 1850. C. O. is the youngest and the only one now living of a family of four children. At the age of seventeen he began clerking for T. S. Lee & Co., at Paducah. He remained there some time and then returned to this county, where he rode as deputy sheriff two years for his uncle, D. H. Piles. He then went into the milling business at Cairo, but only remained a short time, when he returned to Smithland, and served as deputy circuit clerk, under J. W. Cade, for about four years. He then went to Arkansas, where he remained about seven months. He returned to Smithland, where he remained a short time, and then moved to Pueblo, Colo., where he acted as deputy clerk for about one year. Returning to this county he farmed for about a year, and then made another trip West. He was absent about thirteen months. Returning to this county, he was elected to the office of circuit clerk in August, 1880, and is still serving. Mr. Piles was married in December, 1882, to Miss Maggie Handlin, a daughter of Judge I. T. and Rosa B. (Clark) Handlin. Mrs. Piles was born December 23, 1866, and to her and husband have been born one child—George H.

A. J. RAMAGE, Livingston County, was born in the Dyer's Hill Precinct, December 17, 1845, and is a son of Jackson and Sallie (Edwards) Ramage. The father was born in 1811, in North Carolina. When Jackson Ramage was a young man he moved to this county with his mother, and settled in the Dyer's Hill Precinct. There he farmed until his death in April, 1882. The mother died about 1860. The parents were members of the Salem Baptist Church. Subject is the sixth of a family of eight children, of whom six are now living: Frances wife of Rafe Moss, died February, 1885, Harriet wife of Joshua Alsbrook, Mary E., Sarah J. wife of Michael McElmury, John and W. C. A. J. Ramage commenced life for himself when twenty years of age, and began clerking for C. B. Davis, at Smithland. He remained with this gentleman until October, 1873, when he opened a store for himself and has since been in the business. He now carries a stock of about $1,900. Mr. Ramage was married September 2, 1873, to Miss Susan E. Dunlap, a daughter of Robert and Mary A. (Hampton) Dunlap, natives of Pennsylvania. Mrs. Ramage was born in Livingston County, April 8, 1856, and is the mother of three children, two of whom are living—Hallie and Fannie.

JAMES RICE is a native of Kenton County, Ky., born March 9, 1832. His father was William Rice, a native of Virginia, who settled in Kenton County, Ky., about the beginning of the present century. He was a farmer and died late in 1831. Subject's mother, Martha Rice, was a daughter of one of the earliest settlers of northern Kentucky. She was born in Bracken County and died in Kenton County about 1857. James Rice is the last of a family of seven children, and is a posthumous child. At the age of nineteen he was called upon to part with his mother. He then commenced the battle of life as a common laborer, finding employment on different farms in his native county, until arriving at his twentieth year. December 26, 1850, he married Miss Lucy Rice, daughter of Stephen and Henny (Huffman) Rice, of Kenton County. After marriage Mr. Rice began farming on a part of the paternal homestead, on which he resided for a period of five years. He then went on a tour of inspection through the States of Indiana and Illinois for the purpose of securing a location, but not being pleased with the country, he came to Livingston County, Ky., in the spring of 1866, and purchased his present farm of 125 acres, in Carrsville precinct, on which he has since lived. He is a good farmer and a highly respected member of the Baptist Church. Mr. and Mrs. Rice are the parents of the following children: Lavinia wife of E. Pickett, Ulysses A., DeWitt C., Ida, William, Jefferson (deceased), George W. and Samuel.

URIAH W. ROBERTSON was born in Livingston County, October 19, 1848, and is a son of George M. and Nancy (Crawford) Robertson, natives of the same county and State. The paternal ancestors of Mr. Robertson were North Carolinians, his grandfather, Walter Robertson, coming from that State and settling in Livingston County, when the country was very new. He died at his home place near Salem, about 1844. George M. Robertson was born in 1817, and is still living in Crittenden County, near the village of Salem. Subject's mother, Nancy Robertson, was a daughter of Frank Crawford. He was born in South Carolina, and came to Kentucky in 1803, settling in Livingston County, where he died in 1864. Mrs. Robertson was born in 1827, and died in about the year 1864. The following were the children born to George M. and Nancy Robertson: Louisa J., Martha F., U. W. (subject), Arminta (deceased), Agnes (deceased), and Serene P. Uriah Robertson was brought up to agricultural pursuits, and received his early education in the common schools. He afterward attended Princeton College, Caldwell County, where he fitted himself for teaching, which profession he followed at intervals until 1876. At the age of twenty-one he purchased his present farm, and February 23, 1870, was married to Miss Jerrie, daughter of Jeremiah Clemens, of Livingston County. Since his marriage Mr. Robertson has given his attention to agriculture and stockraising, and at the present time owns a farm of 156 acres in Carrsville Precinct. He is a member of the Hopewell Cumberland Presbyterian Church, to which he has belonged since 1870. His wife is a member of the same congregation. Mr. and Mrs. Robertson have had born to them the following children: Nellie (deceased), George O., Clemens U., Robert A., Nora E., Bertie (deceased) and Thomas M.

DR. EBENEZER RONDEAU, Livingston County, was born in Manchester, England, December 16, 1818, and is a son of William and Ann Rondeau. His father's family was of French descent. His mother's maiden name was Arkenstall, the name of a very old Welsh family, from whom she was descended. William Rondeau was born April 15, 1779, in the city of London. He was a lawyer by profession, and for a number of years practiced in the city of Manchester. In 1819 he came to America, settling first in Philadelphia, where he lived a short time, afterward moving to Pope County, Ill., and locating at the town of Golconda. After coming to America he discontinued the legal profession, and entered the ministry of the Baptist Church, which calling he followed until his death in 1852. He was a man of brilliant attainments, and during his residence in this country, ministered to a number of the earliest churches of his order in Illinois and Kentucky. While a resident of Philadelphia, he assisted in the organization of the second Odd Fellow's lodge in America. Ann (Arkenstall) Rondeau was born in 1780, and died in November, 1865. Mr. and Mrs. Rondeau reared a family of ten children, only three of whom are living: Charles Augustus F., Ebenezer and Sarah A., wife of R. T. Berry. The following are the names of those deceased: John, William H., Theophilus, Mehetabel, Mary, Emanuel and James S. Ebenezer Rondeau was quite a small boy when his parents came to this country, and his first five years in America were spent in Pope County, Ill. At the end of that time his father moved to New Orleans, where our subject lived for a period of four years, the family returning north in 1830, and settling on Golconda Island. At the age of eighteen years Mr. Rondeau commenced reading medicine with Dr. William Sim, of Golconda, under whose instructions he continued three years, when he entered the Louisville Medical Institute (1839) and graduated from that school in the class of 1841. After completing his studies, Dr. Rondeau located in the practice of his profession at the farm of A. H. Wallace, where he remained four years. He then went to Salem, and after one year there he settled at Berry's Ferry, opposite Golconda, where he practiced for seven years. At the end of that time he moved to Delta, Miss., where he engaged in merchandising, which he carried on in connection with his profession, selling goods for about two years. He then engaged in the wood business, in Arkansas, buying and selling wood and timber for a period of four years, when he was obliged to give it up, owing to failing health. In 1858 he returned to Kentucky, locating in Livingston County, where he engaged in farming for a short time, afterward moving back to Illinois, where he remained during the war. At the close of the war he opened a store at Berry's Ferry, and ran it until 1869, from which date until 1875 he was engaged exclusively in farming. Since the latter year the Doctor has been dividing his time between his profession and his farm, in both of which he has been rewarded with a flattering degree of success. The Doctor has held several official positions, serving as treasurer and assessor in Pope County, Ill.; during the war, and while a resident of Mississippi, had charge of the postoffice at Delta. The Doctor was married December 2, 1840, to Mrs. Mary A. Sterling, daughter of John and Maria Berry. Mrs. Rondeau was born in 1819, and by a previous marriage had two children: Ferdinand R. and Samuel L. Sterling, the former deceased.

C. A. F. RONDEAU, Livingston County, was born November 17, 1858, on an island in the Ohio River, two miles above Golconda, Ill. He is a son of James S. and Charlotte (Hawkins) Rondeau. The father was born in Pope County, Ill., in 1825. His father, William Rondeau, came from England about 1818, and settled first in Philadelphia, and later moved to Illinois, buying, in 1830, the island on which our subject was born. William Rondeau subsequently left his family on the island and went to New Orleans, where he engaged in steam-boating. He was a lawyer in England, but after his arrival here abandoned that profession and became a minister. After residing in New Orleans for a number of years he came north and again turned his attention to farming. James S. Rondeau, father of subject grew to manhood on the island, and in 1855 he married Miss Hawkins, who was born in Hardin County, Ill., about 1827. Her parents were emigrants from Connecticut, and her father was a soldier in the war of 1812. Subject's father continued to reside on the old homestead until his death in May, 1867. The mother is still living on the home farm. C. A. F. is the third of a family of seven children, of whom six are living: Isabel, C. A. F., Katie, James, Will and Henry. Subject remained on the home farm until about eighteen, and then began life for himself. His first venture was clerking for J. C. Baker at Golconda. He remained with him two years, and then again turned his attention to farming. In the fall of 1884 he assumed the editorship of the Livingston Sentinel, a paper published by J. C. Hodge, of Golconda. The first number was issued September 16, 1884, aud is at present in a flourishing condition. It is a weekly, being printed every Thursday, at Golconda, but mailed at Smithland.

RUTTER BROTHERS. J. C. Rutter, the senior member of this firm, was born in this county, May 9, 1856, and is a son of Jonathan O. and Mary Ann (Coleman) Rutter. The father was born in this county about 1810, the mother was born about 1820. The father was a farmer by occupation, and died in June, 1863; the mother died in 1862. Our subject is one of the nine children, of whom all are living: Emily (wife of W. M. Threlkeld), Sallie, James, Mary (wife of J. M. Davis), William, Carrie, Edward (in Crittenden County), J. C. and Charles. J. C. remained on the home farm until his twenty-fourth year. His first venture for himself was acting as deputy sheriff for two years. In 1882 he formed a partnership with his brother Charles, at Hampton, under the firm name of Rutter Brothers; they carry a stock of about $3,000, and do a very fair business. He is a member of the Baptist Church. Charles Rutter, the junior member of the above firm, was born in this county, June 15, 1858. His education was received in this county and at the Marion Academy. He remained at home until 1879, and then went to Florida, where he embarked in the orange business, and also taught school. In 1882 he returned from that State, and embarked with his brother in the mercantile business. He is at present also teaching the public school at Hampton.

J. H. RUTTER was born in Dyer's Hill Precinct, Livingston County, March 10, 1852, and is a son of James L. and Julia A. (Hodges) Rutter. The father was probably born near Salem, Livingston County, in the winter of 1813. His parents came to Livingston County from North Carolina. He was a farmer by occupation, and was also engaged at one time in merchandising and tobacco speculating at Marion, Ky. His death occurred in this county in 1855. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The mother was born in this county in 1812, and is still living at Evansville, Ind. Our subject is the younger of two children: Susan, wife of R. C. Robenson, and J. H. The latter, at the age of sixteen, turned his attention to farming, and followed it for about seven years. In 1876 he went to Marion, Ky., where he embarked in the grocery business, which vocation he followed for about fifteen months. He then turned his attention to farming in Livingston County, and followed it for about four years. In the fall of 1881 he came to Hampton, and embarked in the general mercantile business. He now carries a stock of about $2,500, and also speculates some in tobacco. Mr. Rutter was married in Livingston County, February 12, 1871, to Miss Belle Olive, a daughter of Jesse and Barbara Ann (Gray) Olive, who were probably both born in Livingston County; their parents were emigrants from North Carolina. The father died in 1864. The mother is still living, with subject. Mrs. Rutter was born February 14, 1853, and is the mother of six children, of whom five are living: Harry D., Jesse O., Fannie N., Louis V. and James R. Mr. Rutter has been acting as postmaster at Hampton for over three years; he has also served as school trustee, being chairman of the board. Mrs. Rutter is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

W. H. SANDERS, M. D., was born in Smithland, Livingston Co., Ky., February 13, 1843, and is a son of Dr. D. B. and Jane W. (Lillard) Sanders. The father was born in Bullitt County, Ky., in 1805, his people being natives of Virginia. The father attended lectures at the Cincinnati Medical College, and graduated from that institution in 1827. He subsequently attended the Transylvania University at Lexington, graduating from that institution also. He then came to Livingston County, and immediately entered upon the practice of his profession. He was one of the most successful practitioners in this portion of the State, his practice extending over this and several adjoining counties. He was also a very successful planter, owning many thousands of acres of land in this and other counties, including a 5,000-acre tract in the immediate vicinity of Smithland. He died August 7, 1867. He was a member of the I. O. O. F. His widow is still living in Paducah. W. H. is the third of a family of eight children, of whom four are now living: Dr. W. H., Lizzie wife of Dr. F. H. Enders, of the Sandwich Islands; David and Katie wife of J. A. Rudy, of Paducah. W. H. received his education in this county and at the St. Joseph College at Bardstown, Ky. He read medicine with his father for about two years, and then attended lectures one year at the Louisville Medical College. He subsequently graduated in the class of 1864, at the Long Island College Hospital medical school. Returning to Livingston County he began the practice of his profession with his father. After practicing two years his health failed, and he abandoned the practice of medicine and turned his attention to farming. At present he owns about 1,050 acres, with about 550 acres in cultivation. He pays some attention to stock raising, handling about seventy-five head per year. Dr. Sanders was married in Livingston County, January 26, 1871, to Miss Kate Davis, a daughter of T. M. and Emily (Roach) Davis. Mrs. Sanders was born in this county January 7, 1851, and to her and husband have been born nine children, of whom seven are now living: William D., Lillard D., Thomas, Irene, David B., Laura, Sallie. Mrs. Sanders is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He is a member of Smithland Masonic Lodge, No. 138, and Felula Lodge, No. 70, I. O. O. F., and of the K. of H.

THOMAS SENOUR is a native of Boone County, Ky., and was born July 29, 1842. He is a son of Adam and Martha Senour, both Kentuckians. Mr. Senour's grandfather, Philip Senour, was a native of either Virginia or North Carolina, and of Welsh descent. He was one of the first permanent settlers of Boone County, and died in that part of the State as long ago as 1817. Adam Senour was born about the beginning of the present century in Kenton County, where were passed his youth and early manhood. After his marriage he moved to Boone County, where he lived until his death in 1882. Subject's mother was a daughter of Henry Dixon, one of the early pioneers of northern Kentucky. She was born in Boone County and died in April, 1878, aged about seventy-two years. The following children were born to Adam and Martha Senour, namely: Charlotte, William H., Edward, Mary J., Diana (deceased), Thomas (subject), Sarah A., John R. and O. B. Thomas Senour lived with his parents until the age of twenty-one years, attending the common schools at intervals, in which he obtained a fair English education. He chose agriculture as his life work, and commenced farming in his native county on the old homestead. In 1871 he came to Livingston, and settled on a farm of which he had become the possessor some time previous. In 1876 he returned to Boone County, where he lived until 1881, when he a second time moved to Livingston County, and purchased his present farm in Carrsville Precinct. Mr. Senour makes stock raising a specialty, in which industry he has no superior in the county. He buys and sells largely, and on his farm may be seen some of the finest breeds of hogs and cattle in the country. Mr. Senour was married to Miss Lizzie J. Dixon, daughter of Thomas K. and Julia Dixon, on the 9th of December, 1869. One child is the result of this marriage—Florence.

JOHN C. STANDFORD, Livingston County, second son of John and Sarah (Richeson) Standford, was born in Sumner County, Tenn., July 27, 1836. His father was a native of North Carolina, and in early manhood immigrated to Tennessee, and settled near Gallatin, Sumner County. He was a hatter and shoemaker, but for a number of years previous to his death, followed the occupation of farming. He died in April, 1861, aged seventy-three years. Subject's maternal grandfather, was Samuel Richeson, a native of Virginia. Sarah Richeson Standford was born in Albemarle County, that State, and died in February, 1882, at the age of seventy-five years. The subject of this sketch was reared a farmer, and remained with his parents until his twenty-fourth year. His parents moved to Todd County, Ky., when he was but six years old; he lived in that part of the State until 1859, when he came to Livingston County. After his father's death he came in possession of part of the home place, and later purchased the entire farm, which he now owns. Mr. Standford's farm lies in one of the richest parts of Livingston County, and is well adapted for general agriculture and stock raising, in both of which he has been remarkably successful. March 29, 1860, Mr. Standford married Miss Nancy F. Taylor, daughter of Isaac B. and Lucinda (McGaughey) Taylor, of Sumner County, Tenn. Seven children have been born to this union, viz.: Merida F., Joseph L., Ulysses C. (deceased), William C., Robert H. (deceased), Allie D. and Vandalia (deceased). Mr. Standford is a member of the General Baptist Church, to which he has belonged since 1874, and in politics he is an independent Democrat, having been a strong Union man during the war.

SAMUEL G. STEVENS was born in Elizabethtown, Hardin Co., Ill., February 14, 1848, and is a son of Samuel G. and Drusilla (Knight) Stevens, the father born in Caldwell County, Ky., and the mother in North Carolina. Samuel G. Stevens, Sr., was born in 1813, and lived in his native county until after his marriage, when he moved to Elizabethtown, Ill. He was a farmer and a successful physician, and died in 1874 in Crittenden County, Ky. Subject's mother, Drusilla Stevens, is a daughter of John Knight, of North Carolina. Mr. Knight came to Kentucky a number of years ago and settled near Old Union Church, in Crittenden County, where his death occurred before subject's birth. Mrs. Stevens was born in North Carolina in 1817, and is still living near the old home farm. Samuel G. Stevens is the fourth of seven children, five of whom are living. He was reared on a farm and received his education in the public schools. He commenced farming for himself in Crittenden County, and on April 2, 1872, was married to Serene P., daughter of G. M., and Nancy (Crawford) Robertson, of Livingston County. Mr. Stevens was a resident of Crittenden County until 1882, at which time he sold his farm and moved to the village of Lola, Livingston County, where he opened a general mercantile business, which he still carries on. He owns a nice property in the village and has a very lucrative trade, which is constantly increasing. Mr. and Mrs. Stevens have three children—Henry W., C. C. and Loren L.

R. STEWART, M. D., was born August 4, 1855, in Livingston County, and is a son of W. W. and Caroline (Travis) Stewart, natives of Crittenden and Livingston Counties, Ky., respectively. Subject's paternal grandfather was Washington Stewart, a native of Georgia, and an early settler of Crittenden County. He was a successful physician and an active business man, and died about the year 1832. William W. Stewart, subject's father, was born in Livingston County, November 19, 1819, and is still living in his native county, about four miles from Salem Village. Caroline (Travis) Stewart, subject's mother, died in 1860. Dr. Stewart is the only child living of a family of four born to the above parents. He spent his youth principally in Dycusburgh and Salem, attending the schools of those villages for a number of years. In 1874 he commenced the study of medicine in Smithland, under the instruction of Dr. Duley, with whom he remained for a period of six months, after which he entered the Louisville University, which he attended two years, but did not graduate on account of being under age. After leaving the University a five years' certificate was granted to him by the State Medical Board at Henderson, whereupon he commenced the practice of his profession at Salem with Dr. Threlkeld, carrying on a general drug business at the same time. In 1879 he purchased his partner's interest, and continued the business in connection with his practice until 1881, at which time he again entered the Medical University at Louisville, graduating in the class of the same year. After graduation he returned to Salem and resumed his practice, remaining there until 1883, when he removed to Carrsville, where he has since resided in the active practice of his profession. He is also proprietor of a handsome drug store, representing a capital of about $3,000 and is doing a successful and lucrative business. Dr. Stewart was married September 5, 1876, to Miss Alice Lowery, daughter of Thomas and Sarah Lowery, of Livingston County. Three children have been born to this union—Washington, Allen T. and Rally, all of whom are living. The Doctor is an active member of the I. O. O. F., and in politics a stanch Democrat.

R. F. THRELKELD is a son of B. L. and Sarah (Anderson) Threlkeld, natives of Virginia and New York, respectively. The father came from his native State in an early day, and settled in Brandenburgh County, Ky. He moved to Livingston County about 1832, and opened the farm on which subject is now living. He was a farmer and mechanic, and died in 1880 at the age of seventy-three years. Subject's mother was a daughter of James Anderson, a native of New York. She died in 1875 at the age of about fifty-four years. Mr. and Mrs. Threlkeld were the parents of twelve children, eight of whom are living—Adaline, Willis, Mary, James, William, Norah, Arminta and R. F. The subject of this sketch was born March 8, 1853, in Livingston County. He remained with his parents until their death, and commenced life for himself as a farmer, at the age of nineteen years. After his parent's death he took possession of the home place, which he now owns. The farm consists of over 200 acres of choice land, the greater part of which is in a high state of cultivation. December 20, 1871, Mr. Threlkeld was married to Serene Owen, daughter of Webb and Mary Owen, of Livingston County. Six children have been born to this union—Infant (deceased), Webb, Ollie, Richard, Lucy and Carrie.

M. H. THRELKELD was born in the Dyers Hill Precinct, Livingston County, November 8, 1818, and is a son of Gabriel and Mary A. (Rice) Threlkeld. The parents were born in Virginia, and came to this county in about 1817. The father settled on the farm now occupied by William Threlkeld where he purchased 400 acres. There he resided until his death, which occurred in 1835; his widow died in 1847. Subject is the sixth in a family of nine children, and of this number five are now living: Mary, wife of Robert Foster; Nancy, wife of J. C. Foster; Lucinda, wife of David Glenn; James and Moses H. At about the age of thirty-two years, Moses H. Threlkeld made a settlement about one mile from his present farm, and in December 1864, came to where he now resides. Here he owns about 260 acres, of which there are 225 in cultivation. Mr. Threlkeld was married in November, 1864, to Miss Anna Sansberry, a daughter of George Sansberry, of Kentucky. This lady was the mother of one child, since deceased, and died in July, 1867. Mr. Threlkeld is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

J. P. THRELKELD was born on the farm where he now resides January 16, 1821, and is a son of Gabriel and Mary Ann Rice Threlkeld. The father was born in Virginia in 1779, the mother in the same State in 1782. In a very early day the parents came to this State, and made a settlement on Kentucky River. In 1817 the father came to this county, and purchased the farm now occupied by subject. He bought about 400 acres of land and there resided until his death, which occurred December 5, 1835. He was identified with the Baptist Church. The mother died in September, 1847. Subject is the seventh of a family of nine children, of whom five are now living: Mary, widow of Robert Foster; Nancy, widow of John Foster; Lucinda, wife of David Glenn, of Caldwell County, Ky.; Moses in Carrsville Precinct, and J. P. When the latter was fifteen years of age his father died, and shortly after he commenced life for himself, but continued to reside on the home farm. After his mother's death he obtained control of the entire homestead, and has since resided there. He has now about 275 acres in cultivation. Mr. Threlkeld was married August, 1850, to Miss Agnes Parmely, a daughter of Ephraim and Permelia (Wilson) Parmely. Mrs. Threlkeld was born in this county, and is the mother of ten children, of whom eight are now living: Permelia, James M., at Birdesville; Sarah, wife of Collin Ramage; Robert, Martha, Jefferson, Kittie and Lee. Subject and family are members of the Presbyterian Church. He has served as school trustee of the township, and has been identified with the Grange and Masonic fraternities.

J. D. THRELKELD, M. D., is a native of Crittenden County, Ky., and descendant of an old and highly respectable Virginia family, of the same name. He was born June 1, 1851, and is a son of W. M. and Sarah (McCollum) Threlkeld; the father a native of Kentucky and the mother of Tennessee. Thomas Threlkeld, subject's grandfather, came from Virginia many years ago and settled in the northern part of Crittenden County, on the Ohio River, and was among the earliest pioneers of that county. He was a very successful farmer and trader, and died in 1853, at an old age. W. M. Threlkeld, father of our subject, was born in 1820, and died May 4, 1864. He was a farmer and speculator and one of the leading business men of Crittenden County. Mrs Threlkeld died in 1854. The following children were born to W. M. and Sarah Threlkeld, viz.: W. T., J. D., R. G., and Lucy E., wife of J. A. Farris. By a second marriage Mr. Threlkeld had three children, two of whom are now living. The early years of Dr. Threlkeld's life were spent upon his father's farm, where he worked during the summer, while the winter season was spent attending the common schools. In 1869 he entered the Marion Academy, which he attended two years, and in 1871, he commenced reading medicine under Dr. C. L. Harris, of Carrsville, with whom he remained one year. In 1874 he entered the medical department of Louisville University, which he attended two years, graduating with the class of 1874. After graduation he commenced the practice of his profession in Crittenden County, where he resided until 1875, at which time he moved to Salem where he has since resided. He was married January 18, 1878, to Miss Ella LaRue of Salem. Three children have been born to that union: Roy, Lal and Hayden. Dr. Threlkeld is one of the leading physicians of the county and has a large practice. At present he is associated in the practice of his profession, and in the drug business, with Dr. John V. Hayden, under the firm name of Hayden & Co.

JOHN N. TOLLEY was born in Livingston County, February 9, 1830. His grandfather, John Tolley, Sr., a Virginian, was one of the first white men to penetrate the wilderness of west Kentucky, having come to the "Dark and Bloody Ground" at a time when there were but one or two permanent settlements within the area of the entire State, and for several years participated in the bloody battles with the savages around Boonesborough, and was an intimate friend and valuable aid to Daniel Boone in his efforts to plant a colony. As the number of settlers in northern Kentucky increased, Mr. Tolley penetrated farther into the savage country, and chanced to pass through that part of Livingston County now known as Carrsville Precinct, as early as 1792 or 1793; he determined to and did secure a location, choosing the tract of land now occupied by the subject of this sketch. After marking out his claim and designating it by a few improvements, our pioneer went to Kentucky Purchase, where he raised a company of settlers, and, as their recognized leader, returned to his backwoods home in 1796. After locating he abandoned his adventurous life to some extent, although fond of the excitement of hunting, which sport he carried on until his death, which occurred many years ago. James M. Tolley, subject's father, was born in Livingston County in 1801. He was a farmer and stock raiser, and during his life acquired a handsome fortune. He spent his entire life on the farm where he was born, and died in 1852. The maiden name of subject's mother was Sarah Davis. She was the daughter of David Davis, one of the first pioneers of Livingston County, he having settled near the Tolley farm a few years after John Tolley came to the country. Sarah Tolley was born in Livingston County, and died in the fall of 1863. The family of James M. and Sarah Tolley, consisted of the following children: Louisa, Joseph, John N., William L., Elizabeth, James D., Sarah M., George (deceased), Henry C. (deceased), and two infants not named. The subject of this sketch has lived all his life on the old homestead, which has never been outside the family. He was educated in the country schools and looked after his parents' interests until after their death, after which he came in possession of the paternal estate. He now owns 400 acres of land and is one of the most successful stockmen in Livingston County. He was married February 8, 1859, to Almeda, daughter of Theophilus and Agnes (Nelson) Champion, of Livingston County. Mrs. Tolley was born June 29, 1840. Mr. and Mrs. Tolley are the parents of the following children, whose names are as follows: Louvenia, Willis N., James R., Fannie (deceased), Addie and Mary D. Mr. and Mrs. Tolley are members of the Hopewell Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

G. A. TRAIL, Livingston County, was born in Boone County, Ky., March 25, 1824, and is a son of William T. and Mary M. (Sampson) Trail. The father was born near Baltimore, Md., September 7, 1800, and was of English descent. The mother was born in Woodford County, Ky., May 17, 1804. When the father was but an infant, the parents moved to Kentucky, and settled on the present site of the city of Covington. In March, 1837, subject's father came to Livingston County, and made a settlement near where the present site of Hampton now stands. Subsequently he settled on a 200-acre farm, two miles east of his first site. He afterward resided on other farms in Livingston County, and finally settled on a farm about two miles west of Hampton. Here he died February 27, 1862. The death of the mother occurred January 2, 1869. The father served as constable in Livingston County for some years; he was also identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church. Subject is the eldest of a family of twelve children, of whom seven are living: G. A., Frances, wife of Levi L Hosic; James O., in Carrsville; Mary, wife of John Vogle, of Mound City, Ill.; Margaret, wife of David Ferrell, of Crittenden County; Woodford M., and Louisiana, wife of Samuel Kremmer, of Dongola, Ill. Subject remained at home until he was twenty-one. He then settled on the Cumberland River, where he resided about three years, and then came to his present location. Here he now owns about 227 acres of land, with about 100 acres in cultivation. In 1856 he began running a saw-mill, and continued in that business about ten years. Mr. Trail was married June 25, 1846, to Miss Calister R. Williams, daughter of George and Martha L. (Line) Williams, natives of Virginia. Mrs. Trail was born in Clark County, Ky., in 1829, and is the mother of ten children, of whom four are now living: Alvin L., in Smithland; Lucien W., Isadore and Sydney A.

A. L. TRAIL, attorney at law, was born in Livingston County near the village of Hampton, January 23, 1849, and is a son of G. A. and Calister (Williams) Trail, the father a native of Boone County, Ky, and the mother of Clark County. Subject's paternal ancestor, William T. Trail, was a Marylander, and his grandmother was a Kentuckian, his grandfather Willian T. moving from that State in a very early day, and settling, on the present site of the city of Covington, Ky., a part of the original plat of which was owned by him. He came to Livingston County about 1837, locating near the present village of Hampton, where he lived until his death, which occurred February 27, 1862. George C. Williams, subject's maternal grandfather, was a native of Virginia. He came to Kentucky in 1840, locating at Smithland, where he followed the profession of teaching in graded schools, in which he achieved considerable eminence. He died in 1839, and is buried in the Smithland Cemetery. G. A. Trail, subject's father, was born in Boone County, and came to Livingston about 1837. He is still living in this county, about ten miles north of Smithland. The mother is also living. Mr. and Mrs. Trail are the parents of ten children, four of whom are living, viz.: Alvin L., Lucien W., Isadore and Sydney A. The names of the deceased members are: Henry, Elzy, Thomas R., George L., Lynn and an infant not named. Alvin L. Trail was reared on a farm. At the age of twenty-one he became a student of the Southern Normal School at Carbondale, Ill., which he attended one year. In 1872, he entered the Evansville Commercial College, from which he graduated the same year, after which he engaged in teaching in Kentucky, following that profession for ten years, reading law in the meantime under the instruction of Capt. John W. Bush and J. K. Hendrick, of Smithland, Ky. In 1880 Mr. Trail was admitted to the bar, since which time he has been practicing his profession in Livingston and other counties, and is now one of the law firm of Bush & Trail. As an attorney he has achieved flattering success. He is regarded, by all who know him, as an honest, upright, faithful friend, and will do more to accommodate a fellowman, than any man in the county. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., and a stanch supporter of the Democratic party. November 23, 1873, he married Miss Nancy Bennett, daughter of John and Lucinda Bennett, of Livingston County. To this union have been born three children: Eldred E. who was born October 22, 1874; Ora O. who was born September 15, 1877; Blanche, who was born February 23, 1878; all of whom are now living.

ISAAC TRIMBLE was born in Livingston County, Ky., December 4, 1810. His ancestors were South Carolinians and of English descent. His father, James Trimble, settled in what is now Crittenden County, in 1803, near the Sulphur Springs, where he engaged in farming. He was also a wagon-maker during the early years of his life among the pioneer settlements of Livingston County, where he died in about 1808. Margaret (Gillespie) Trimble, subject's mother, was a daughter of William Gillespie of South Carolina. She died in Livingston County in 1855, at the age of about sixty years. Isaac is the youngest of a family of five children, and is the only one living. His life has been spent within the limits of his native county, where for seventy-four years he has been an honored and respected citizen. At the age of two years he was bereft of his father, and at seventeen commenced life for himself as a farmer. He purchased a part of the home farm, on which he lives, soon after arriving at manhood, and has never resided in any other locality. He commenced business without a cent in his pocket, but such was his energy, that by the time he was twenty-one years of age he had saved sufficient capital to enable him to make a fair start in the world. He now owns a beautiful tract of land in Carrsville Precinct, consisting of 400 acres, 200 of which are under a good state of cultivation. October 1, 1833, Mr. Trimble was married to Jane Hosick, daughter of Alexander and Hannah (Wilson) Hosick. The fruits of this marriage were nine children, named as follows: James A., Clarissa (deceased), Narcissa, Sarah C. (deceased), William J. (deceased), Hannah L., Uriah. Margaret and Benjamin F. Mrs. Trimble died in 1851. Six years later, on December 18th, Mr. Trimble's second marriage was solemnized with Miss Mary Barnes, daughter of James and Tempy Barnes of Crittenden County. This union has been blessed with three children: Mary E., Luella (deceased), and Cordelia. Mr. Trimble has been a consistent and active member of the Methodist Church South, for a period of about forty years.

JAMES A. TRIMBLE, eldest son of Isaac and Jane Trimble, was born November 14, 1834, in Livingston County, Ky., where he still resides. He was reared on a farm, and remained on the home place until 1852, when he joined a company made up in Livingston and Crittenden Counties, with which he went to California for the purpose of mining. Like many others, Mr. Trimble returned, after an absence of three years, poorer in pocket than when he went, but rich in a varied experience. Upon his return to his native State in 1855, he commenced farming in Livingston County, on the farm where he now lives, and which has been his home for a period of thirty years. Mr. Trimble is an active go-ahead citizen, and a successful farmer and stock raiser. He has been twice married; the first time, on the 29th of October, 1856; to Eliza, daughter of Joseph and Polly Davis, of Ballard County, Ky. The following children were born to this marriage: David E. (deceased), Mary A., Iola, wife of William Rhodes; Isaac N., William J., Belle, James R., Barren F. and Carlton. Mrs. Trimble died in January, 1876, aged forty-two years. Mr. Trimble was afterward married to Maria Young, daughter of Frank Young, of Caldwell County, Ky. One child is the fruit of this union, namely, Kate E. Mr. Trimble is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, belonging to the Carrsville congregation, and in politics votes with the Democratic party.

A. D. VICK was born July 12, 1823, in Livingston County, Ky., and is a son of Arthur and Nancy Vick. Mr. Vick spent his early years amid the active scenes of farm life, and in the common schools of the country received much more than an ordinary English education. He commenced farming on his own responsibility at the age of twenty-two years, devoting what leisure time he could spare from his labors in preparing himself for the profession of civil engineer, for which he early displayed a strong liking. Such was his progress in mathematical studies that in 1866 he was elected county surveyor of Livingston County, a position he filled with credit for a period of eight years, his last term expiring in 1874. He has made his home on a part of the homestead farm, and at the present time, in addition to his farming interest, is filling the position of deputy county clerk under his brother, John L. Vick. Mr. Vick was married December 24, 1845, to Mary Ann Buchannan, daughter of Patrick and Celia (Hale) Buchannan, of Missouri. Mr. and Mrs. Vick have reared a family of eight children, namely: Lucy J., wife of T. H. Peck; Nancy A., deceased; Patrick R., James, John F, William R., Eliza R. and Silas.

J. D. WOODMANSEE was born in Monmouth County, N. J., Oct. 13, 1816. His father, John Woodmansee, was a native of New Jersey, also, and by occupation a shoemaker and farmer, which vocations he carried on until his death. Subject's paternal grandfather was a native of England, and during the war of the Revolution served as surgeon in the British army. At the close of the war he located in New Jersey, where he married and reared a family. The maternal ancestors of subject, the Marks family, came from Germany shortly after the struggle for Independence, and located in one of the eastern States. Catherine (Marks) Woodmansee, wife of John Woodmansee, and mother of subject, was born in New Jersey, and died in 1880 at an advanced age. J. D. Woodmansee is the eldest of a family of six children. After receiving a common school education in his native town, he learned the shoemaker trade with his father, at which he worked at different places in his native State for a period of eight years, when he came West and located at Rome, Ind., where he did a good business for seventeen years. He next engaged in merchandising at Rome, where he carried on a successful trade for a period of seven years. In 1856 he came to Livingston County, Ky., locating at the mouth of Bayou Creek, on the Ohio River, where he carried on merchandising, selling goods from a large boat, and did a fine business. In 1860 he located at Carrsville, where he engaged in general merchandising, selling from a boat for one year, at the end of which time he moved into the village and erected a large business house, which he has since occupied. He carries on a good business, and has a stock representing a capital of about $4,000. Mr. Woodmansee has been twice married—the first time in October, 1841, to Miss Mary Whitehead, daughter of Isaac Whitehead, of Rome, Ind., by whom he had five children, as follows: Infant (deceased), Otho (deceased), Harriet, Julius and Mary E. Mrs. Woodmansee died in October, 1873, at the age of fifty-two years. In the year 1879 Mr. Woodmansee married Mrs. C. E. Hodge, daughter of Mr. Doneky, of Smithland. Mr. Woodmansee has never aspired to political preferment, but is a firm supporter of the Democratic party. His wife is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

JAMES WORTON is a native of west Tennessee and dates his birth from the tenth day of July, 1834. He is the only child of John and Lavinia (Dale) Worton, both of whom died the same year subject was born. Young James was taken by his grandmother, Mary Dale, with whom he remained until the age of fourteen years, when he started out in the world to make his own fortune. He commenced as a farm laborer, working at different places in his native State until he came to Livingston County, Ky., settling near where he now lives on a tract of land which he purchased in 1858. He early manifested an aptness for trading, a tact which he soon turned to good account by dealing in real estate, in which he has made a fine fortune. Mr. Worton is in every respect a self-made man, and one whose citizenship is a benefit to any community. He owns a beautiful tract of 347 acres, and at the present time is largely engaged in stock raising, which he makes a specialty. Mr. Worton, on the 21st of July, 1857, was united in marriage with Margaret F., daughter of Joseph Handlin, of Livingston County. Eleven children are the fruits of this union. six of whom are living, namely: James M., Lacy T., Divonos, Henry, Sydney and Mary, Mr. and Mrs. Worton are active members of the Missionary Baptist Church, belonging to Good Hope congregation.

LOGAN COUNTY.

MADISON E. ALDERSON, M. D., is a son of Benjamin Alderson of Russellville, Ky., and was born in that town in the year 1852. His father, Benjamin Alderson, was born in Warren County, Ky., in 1822, and in early life he learned the trade of hatter, and removed to Russellville, Ky., where he pursued his trade for several years. He married in Logan County, Ky., Mary A. McCarty. The father of this lady was George McCarty, a native of Virginia, but of Irish ancestors. He first settled in Clark County, Ky., where Mary A. was born. Soon after her birth the family removed to Logan County, where George McCarty became well and favorably known, and where he died in 1875, at the age of eighty-four years. Dr. M. E. Alderson is the second of five children born to Benjamin and Mary

A. Alderson, both of whom are among the honored citizens of Russellville, Ky. He was educated in the Bethel College of Russellville, where, in 1874, he received the degree of A. M. Having decided on the profession of medicine, he performed the usual preparatory reading under Dr. Byrne, of Russellville. In the fall of 1875 he entered the Starling Medical College of Columbus, Ohio, receiving the degree conferred by that institution in March, 1878. He then located in the town of his nativity and soon sprang into notice for proficiency in his chosen profession. Though young in years, he enjoys a lucrative practice, and the confidence of a large circle of friends. Dr. Alderson is a member of the Kentucky State Medical Association, a contributor to some of the leading medical journals, and a member of the Board of Censors of his medical alma mater.

GEORGE T. BLAKEY, Logan County, was born February 5, 1822, three miles west of Russellville, Ky. He is the second of two boys and one girl, born to William M. and Susan C. H. (Breathett) Blakey, who were natives, respectively, of Culpeper County, Va., and near Hagerstown, Md. William M. Blakey was a farmer, and a son of George and Margaret (Whitsett) Blakey, who were natives of Albemarle County, Va. George Blakey was a soldier in the Revolution; he was a farmer, and a son of Thomas Blakey, who was born and reared in Wales, and married Ann Haden, of England. He and wife immigrated to the United States about 1730 or 1740, and located in Virginia. Thomas Blakey was a farmer, and a son of Churchill Blakey, of Wales. Thomas Blakey's wife, Ann (Haden) Blakey, was a daughter of Anthony Haden, of England, who married Margaret Douglass, of Scotland. The mother of our subject was a daughter of William Breathett, who married a Miss Whitsett. From this family, some of the leading and distinguished families of Kentucky are descended. George T. Blakey was reared principally on a farm; he received a good education at the Russellville Academy. His father died in 1824, and his mother in 1830. George T. then went to live with his uncle, George D. Blakey; at the age of twenty-two he engaged in farming for himself, which he has followed all his life. He was elected sheriff of Logan County, and held that position from 1863 to 1868. He has been police judge of Auburn for three terms. In 1884, he was appointed government store-keeper, which position he still holds. He is the owner of 280 acres of fine land near Auburn, Ky. He was married, February 15, 1844, to Sarah E. McLean, of Logan County, daughter of E. L and Mary B. (Ewing) McLean. He had born by this union four children: Susan B., now Mrs. Gen. B. W. Heard; William M., an attorney at Evansville, Ind.; George D., an attorney in California; Lucille, married to T. W. Blakey. Mr. Blakey and wife are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. He is a Mason, and a member of the I. O. O. F., in high standing. He cast his first presidential vote for Polk in 1844. When his party advocated secession, he left it, and since the war, he has been a leading spirit of the Republican party; and in August, 1885, was elected to represent his county in the Kentucky legislature, overcoming a Democratic majority of 500, with a majority for himself of 300.

WILBUR F. BROWDER. Among those who early settled in the vicinity of Olmstead, Logan Co., Ky., was Richard Browder, who came from Virginia to that county in 1819. He engaged in the pursuits of the farm, at which he was very successful. He lived to a ripe old age, and was an honored representative of pioneer Methodism in this county, in the faith of which he trustingly died in 1867. He had a family of five children, the eldest of whom was David Browder. David was born in Virginia, and when the family removed to this State, was but an infant. He was reared upon his father's farm; married Elizabeth Irvine, and in early manhood abandoned the farm to pursue merchandising. He removed to Clarksville, Tenn., where, on the 12th of December, 1848, was born the subject of this sketch, Wilbur F. Browder. He afterward moved to Montgomery, Ala., where he died in 1871, and where Wilbur F. was chiefly reared. When sixteen years old, he entered the Randolph Macon College, of Virginia, where he pursued his studies for one year, at which time he became a student in the University of Virginia, graduated from that institution in 1868. He then entered the law department of the University of Lexington, Kentucky, graduating therefrom in 1869; was admitted to practice in November, 1869, and at once established an office in Russellville, Ky. Mr. Browder enjoys an extensive reputation as an able lawyer. He is a pleasant speaker, and in his practice has demonstrated the fact, that personal abuse and tonguy sarcasm are not elements of success in law practice. He has occupied several positions of trust, in all of which he has justified the confidence reposed in him. During the existence of the Logan County National Bank, he was for several years its president, and is now a director in the Logan County Bank. In 1874, he was appointed to the office of register in bankruptcy, which he filled until the office was vacated by the repeal of the bankrupt law in 1878. Mr. Browder was, until he resigned recently, master in chancery of the Logan circuit court, and is chairman of the executive Democratic committee of his county and senatorial district. He was married in 1871, to Bettie Wills, daughter of John W. and Eliza (Bibb) Wills.

WILLIAM BRYAN. Among the pioneers of Kentucky, and contemporary with Daniel Boone was the grandfather of William Bryan, of Russellville, Logan County. The first record now known of the family of Bryan dates back to the colonial days when a William Bryan emigrated from England to America and settled in North Carolina. He espoused the cause of the Colonies and fought in the Revolution and probably died in North Carolina. He reared a son, William, and it was he who removed from North Carolina to Kentucky shortly after the coming of Boone. He doubtless hunted and trapped with that celebrated pioneer; and it is definitely known that they traded one with the other, as Mr. Bryan married Barbara, a sister of Boone's, while the latter secured in marriage the hand of Rebecca Bryan, the sister of William Bryan. Mr. Bryan soon wearied of the wild life in the wilderness of Kentucky and removed to what is now Beaver County, Penn., where he reared his family and passed the residue of life, which terminated in the close of the eighteenth century. He reared one daughter and five sons, the second of whom was named William, he being the father of the subject of this sketch. He was born in Pennsylvania, there reared to maturity and married Miss Phœbe Inman, which union resulted in the birth of six children. He finally settled in Ohio, where he died in 1860; and where his widow is now living, in her eighty-seventh year. William Bryan, of Russellville, Ky., was born in Beaver County, Penn., in 1840. When nineteen he located in Russellville. He was educated by Horace Mann, in the Antioch College of Yellow Springs, Ohio, and before removing to Kentucky, had learned the art of photography, at which he engaged for several years after going to Russellville. In 1875, he abandoned this to embark in merchandising, and is now doing a thriving dry goods business. He is an official member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, a director of the Logan County Female College; a member of the Masonic order, and in politics a Democrat. Mr. Bryan was married in Russellville, Ky., in 1865, to Miss Sallie, daughter of George W. Weller. Their union has resulted in the birth of four children, viz.: Ida, Frederick W., Fannie M. and Frank Bryan.

HON. EDMUND BURR, M. D., Logan County, was born in Jefferson County, Va., February 4, 1828, and is the only child of Edmund and Mary (McKnight) Burr, natives of Jefferson County, Va. The father was a farmer and a son of James and Nancy (McGary) Burr, both natives of Jefferson County, Va., and of Scotch and Irish origin. The grandfather, James Burr, was a full cousin of James Buchanan. Our subject comes from the same family as Aaron Burr, who is so well known to the readers of United State History. The mother of our subject was a daughter of Harmon McKnight, who died in Smithfield, Va. of Irish parentage. She died the day of subject's birth. In 1831, the father came to Logan County, Ky., where he purchased a farm and engaged in farming; here he married Courtney Boyd, a daughter of John Boyd. One boy and two girls were born to this union. In May, 1843, Dr. Burr came to Logan County, where he lived with his father for a short time in the south part of the county. He had received a fair common school education, and depending on his own exertions for a livelihood, after coming to Logan County he entered a store as salesman at Adairville where he remained six years; in the meantime when a spare moment could be found read medicine with Dr. James B. Bowling, a distinguished physician of Logan County. In 1853, he commenced reading with Dr. R. N. Beauchamp. In the spring of 1855, he graduated from the medical department of the University of New York City; located at Middleton, where he practiced three years. In June, 1858, he married Ellen E. Harding of Logan County, a daughter of Walter P. and Elizabeth (Rice) Harding. Three children were born to their union, but one now living: Willie R. Burr. After his marriage, Dr. Burr located on a farm three miles from Middleton, where he resided and followed his profession with merited success until 1879, when he moved to Auburn, Ky., where he continued his practice. In 1869, he was elected to represent Logan County in the legislature, filling the place with honor to himself and satisfaction to his constituents; was again sent in 1877. His wife died in March, 1875, a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. The Doctor was next married in May, 1878, to Sallie R. Winlock, who was born and reared in Shelby County, Ky. The Doctor and wife are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and the Methodist Episcopal Church, respectively. He is a Mason, a member of the I. O. O. F. in high standing; was made a Mason at Russellville in 1849; assisted in founding Adairville and Middleton lodges of Masonry; was a Whig previous to the war, casting his first vote for Gen. Scott. Since the war has been a Democrat.

HON. GEORGE W. EWING, Logan County, was born November 29, 1808, within one quarter of a mile of where he now resides on Red River, to two miles north of Adairville. He is the youngest of five boys and five girls born to Robert and Jane (McClean) Ewing, natives of Virginia. The father, Robert Ewing, immigrated to the West, where lands were very cheap, and between 1785 and 1790, located on Red River, where he entered a large tract of land, and afterward laid out the town of Adairville, which is located in the most fertile part of Logan County; he was born in 1763; his wife, Jane, in 1773. They had two sons in the war of 1812. George W. was reared on a farm; was educated at Russellville and Princeton Colleges, and at the age of twenty-one commenced the study of law with his brother Judge Ephraim M. Ewing; attended law lectures at Russellville; then located and practiced law at Russellville until the breaking out of the war. He represented Logan County in the legislature for seven terms, and was a member when the great conflict came between the North and South. On his journey home, on leave of absence, he was arrested at Harrodsburgh, and detained until a committee from both branches of the legislature could be appointed to investigate the charges against him, and the object of his arrest; the only charge was that he was strongly in sympathy with the Southern cause. He was elected to the Confederate congress from his district, and served until the surrender in 1865. After the surrender of Richmond he made his escape to a farm house in western North Carolina. There he lay sick for some time, and remained at the place until a pardon was procured, for which his son paid $600, and for which he (subject) afterward paid an additional $400, the total amount of which his son agreed to pay for his pardon. After his return to Logan County, he moved to his farm of 400 acres near Adairville on the Red River banks. The Ewing family have always been among the wealthy and distinguished families of Logan County. Mr. Ewing was first married to Susan Moss, of Russellville, who died five years later. He then married Nancy L. Williams of Montgomery County, Ky., a daughter of Gen. Samuel Williams, who married Fannie Kluke, both natives of Virginia. Mr. Ewing had born to him by this union one child: John Anna Ewing, deceased wife of Lou T. Brawner. Mr. Ewing cast his first presidential vote for Henry Clay, in 1832; since 1860, has voted the Democratic ticket.

JUDGE WILLIAM W. FRAZER, a prominent member of the Russellville bar and judge of the Logan County court, was born October 24, 1833, in Logan County, Ky. William Frazer and Mary A. Perkins, his parents, came to this county in their childhood; he from Maryland and she from the State of Virginia. Here they grew up and were married; he learning the trade of brick mason with which he combined farming. He lived but a few years, however, to gladden the little family of which he was the honored head, but died in December 1833, when William W., his second child, was a mere infant. His widow afterward married W. N. Grinter, and died in 1881. The childhood days of Judge Frazer were passed upon the farm, and when about twelve years old he became "a store boy" in a Russellville business house, soon acquired ability as a salesman, and when a young man, engaged in the mercantile business in the village of Allensville, Ky., which was his home for many years. In connection with his mercantile business he began the study of law, was admitted to practice in 1866, and has since devoted his time to its practice when not engaged with the duties of public office. In 1869 he was elected to the lower house of the Kentucky legislature, and at the expiration of his term in 1871, was the choice of his district to represent them in the senate, serving with acceptance for four years. In August, 1882, he was elected to the office of county judge which he now holds, residing in Russellville which has been his home since 1872. Judge Frazer was married in Todd County, Ky., in 1854, to Ann J. Wims, daughter of P. A. Wims, by which union he has eight children. He is an honored member of the Baptist Church; a Royal Arch Mason; member of the K. of H., and C. F.

JAMES HENRY FUQUA, the eldest son of Joseph M. and Lucy A. Fuqua, was born in Logan County, Ky., the 27th of September 1837. His ancestors were French Huguenots who, at an early day immigrated to Virginia, then a colony of Great Britain. When three years old his father moved to Montgomery County, Tenn., where he purchased land and became a successful farmer. He required his son to work regularly on the farm when not in school, and thereby James was made physically very robust and healthy, so much so that since childhood he has never been sick, and to-day he scarcely knows what bodily pain is. His father was a fast friend of higher education, and gave his son while young all the advantages offered by the common schools of the country. At the age of seventeen he entered the freshman class in Bethel College, Russellville, Ky. He took the full classical course and at the end of four years of diligent study, he graduated with honors in a class of twelve young men. In the summer of 1858, immediately after graduating, he was elected by the trustees as principal of the preparatory department of Bethel College. He held this position two years, during which time he developed remarkable powers, both as disciplinarian and teacher. A vacancy then occurring in the chair of mathematics, he was, without soliciting it, unanimously chosen by the board of trustees to fill it. In this position he gave great satisfaction to trustees, students and patrons. In 1863 the college building was taken possession of by the military authorities of the United States, and hence the college organization was broken up. In July 1859, Prof. Fuqua married Miss Martha A. Walker, of Scottville, Ky., a daughter of Dr. A. S. Walker, an eminent physician and surgeon. Immediately after the college was occupied by the military authorities, he with his family moved to Olmstead, Logan Co., Ky., and established there the celebrated high school, Browder Institute. It soon took rank with the best schools of the country, and its pupils took high rank for thorough scholarship and broad culture wherever they went. Prof. F. was principal of Browder Institute twelve years, and during that time he was instrumental in training and educating more than six hundred boys and girls. His school was extensively patronized by students from Kentucky, Tennessee, Illinois, Arkansas and Missouri. In June, 1875, he was elected president of Liberty Female College, Glasgow, Ky. He held this position five years, and added largely to his reputation as teacher and disciplinarian. He rerequired the young ladies to pursue a course of study equal to that of any college in the southwest, and hence those who graduated under his presidency are very proficient in scholarship and conspicuous for their attainments in literature and art. In June 1880, his services were again demanded by the trustees of Bethel College, and he was offered the chair of Ancient Languages, which he accepted. He has won a very enviable reputation as teacher of ancient languages. His pupils are unusually well drilled in the fundamental principles of language, and thoroughly understand the construction and genius of the ancient classics. In 1883 Leslie Waggener, L. L. D., president of the college, resigned to take a chair in Texas University, and Prof. Fuqua was unanimously elected his successor, which position he now holds, and is giving great satisfaction to all the friends of the college. By his indominable energy, extensive and varied scholarship, and winning social qualities, he is rapidly extending the influence of the college, and increasing its patronage. Under his administration the future of the college seems very bright. Prof. Fuqua has been a member of the Baptist Church thirty-two years, and has been placed by his brethren in many prominent positions in its deliberative assemblies. He is now forty-seven years old. He is six feet high, weighs 220 pounds, and seems to be in perfect health. He has a very favorable prospect for many more years of usefulness, and is loved and respected by all who know him, for his many social and religious virtues. He is very happy in his family relations. He and his lovable wife have been blessed with six children, four of whom are living, who by their affection, obedience, and superior accomplishments of mind and heart afford light and joy to the household.

GEORGE E. GARRETSON, a carriage manufacturer, of Russellville, Ky., was born January 10, 1833, in Crawford County, Ohio. Nathan Garretson, his father, was born in 1809, in Wheeling, Va., and is still living and a resident of the State of Iowa. George E. Garretson is the third of a family of ten children born to Nathan and Amelia Garretson. Though born in Crawford he was reared in Jefferson County, Ohio. He served as an apprentice to his trade of carriage-maker, working in Zanesville, Cincinnati and Columbus, Ohio, and in 1858 he removed from Hickman, Ky., to Russellville, Ky., and there opened a shop, where, with slight exceptions, he has conducted business since. No words of ours commendatory of the moral and business worth of Mr. Garretson are necessary, for he is extensively known and appreciated by a large circle of friends. On March 12, 1855, he was married in Cincinnati, Ohio, to Matilda A. Smith, who bore him four children, and who died May 24, 1864. The year following he married his present wife, Amanda R. Smith, of Covington, Ky. This union has been blessed with the birth of two children. Following are the names of the children: Millard F., born October 28, 1856; George W., born December 24, 1858; Harry A., born January 15, 1861, died August 26, 1862; Eddie Orin, born January 17, 1863; Neva M., born June 17, 1871, and Charles S. Garretson, born October 21, 1872.

ALEXANDER G. GOOCH was born March 29, 1843, in the south part of Logan County, Ky. He is the seventh child of five boys and three girls (seven now living) born to Thomas G. and Julia (Washborne) Gooch, who were born respectively in Shelby and Washington Counties, Ky. The grandfather of our subject was born in Charlotte County, Va., and was a descendant of Gov. Gooch, who was a governor of Virginia in colonial times, and in whose honor Goochland County, Va., was named. The mother of our subject was a daughter of Philip Washborne, who married a Miss McNeil; both were natives of Albemarle County, Va. Philip Washborne came to Washington County, Ky., about 1795; about 1820 located in Logan County, ten miles east of Russellville. He was surveyor of Washington County. Subject's grandfather, Gooch, settled in Shelby County, Ky., about 1790. His father, Thomas G. Gooch, located in Logan County, in 1821, and was one of the pioneer preachers of the Methodist Episcopal Church; he was county surveyor of Logan County twelve years. Alexander G. Gooch received a good English education, and attended Cave Spring Academy in Logan County, Ky. June 17, 1863, he enlisted in Company E, First Tennessee Confederate Cavalry; was in the battles of Chickamauga, Resaca and New Hope Church; was in a skirmish every day for many days before the fall of Atlanta; was in Gen. Johnson's command, and surrendered at Charlotte, N. C. He returned to his home and in 1866 went to Louisville, and engaged as traveling salesman with Kahn & Wolf. In 1882, he went to Cincinnati, where he engaged in same business with Fechheimer Bros. & Co. He has the reputation of being one of the best salesmen out of Cincinnati. He is a man of more than ordinary ability, and is ever ready to forward any enterprise that will be of advantage to his community. He was married April 10, 1872, to Lucie A. Owen, of Louisville, Ky., a daughter of John W. and Lydia (Friddle) Owen, who were born respectively in Franklin County, Ky., and Louisville, Ky. John W. Owen is a son of William Owen, of Virginia, who came to Franklin County, Ky., in an early day; located in Louisville about 1830. Lydia Friddle was a daughter of Jacob and Lucy (Brown) Friddle, who were born respectively in Bullitt and Nelson Counties, Ky. Jacob Friddle was a son of John and Elizabeth (Miles) Friddle, who were born and reared in Virginia, and immigrated to Bullitt County, Ky., in 1794. They were of German extraction. Mr. Gooch has had born to him four children: Owen G., Norman A., Mattie O. and Neville K. He and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He is a Mason and one of the leading members of the order in Kentucky; he is senior grand deacon of the Kentucky Masonic fraternity for the years 1884 and 1885.

ROWLAND H. KEENE, M. D., of Russellville, Ky., was born in Scott County Ky., March 10, 1821. He was educated at Frankfort, Ky.; studied medicine under Dr. W. T. Price, after which he entered the medical department of the Transylvania University, of Lexington, Ky. He graduated from this institution in 1847, and began his profession the same year, removing the following year to Russellville, Logan County, where he has practiced continuously every since. The doctor is a man of advanced views, an extensive reader, having a valuable library of miscellaneous as well as scientific works.

JOHN R. McCLELLAN, M. D., Logan County, was born in August, 1821, in Springfield, Washington Co., Ky., and is the third of five boys and three girls born to Joseph G. and Mary A. (McGaughey) McClellan. natives respectively of Lexington, Ky., and Shelby County, Ky. Subject's father was a tailor by trade, and a spy for Gen. Harrison during the war of 1812. He was a son of John McClellan, who came from Cork, Ireland, and settled in Fayette County, Ky., at a very early date, when he had to be protected from the Indians while hauling timber for a cabin at Lexington, Ky.; this was about 1775. The mother of our subject was a daughter of John McGaughey who married a Miss Hopkins. He came from Ireland, was one of the first settlers of Shelbyville, Ky., and fought through the great struggle for Independence. Dr. McClellan was reared in Springfield, Ky., where he received a good common school education, and afterward attended St. Marie's College, Marion County, Ky. At the age of seventeen he engaged as a salesman in a dry goods house in Springfield. In 1837, his father moved to the north part of Logan County, and one year later the Doctor went to the same county, and entered a dry goods store at Russellville, remaining five years. In 1843, he went to Jackson, Miss., where he remained a year; returned and engaged as clerk until 1848, when he commenced the study of medicine. He graduated from the Kentucky School of Medicine at Louisville, and located where he now resides, where he follows the practice of his profession and owns a farm of 300 acres, where he lives, which he has purchased by his daily earnings, having started in life without a dime. He was married September 5, 1855, to Maria H. Kenaily of Logan County, a daughter of Dr. James C. and Catherine B. (Smith) Kenaily, who were born respectively in Logan County, Ky., and Charleston, S. C. Dr. J. C. Kenaily was a son of Rev. Philip Kenaily, who married a Miss McCathey; both came from Berks County, Va., and were of English origin. Rev. Philip Kenaily was one of the pioneer preachers of Logan County, Ky., where he settled about 1808. To Dr. and Mrs. McClellan were born four children, two living: George B. and Wilson V. The Doctor and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is a Mason of long standing. He cast his first presidential vote for Henry Clay; since the war he has been voting the Democratic ticket.

JOHN R. F. MILES, attorney at law, Russellville, Ky., was born in Macoupin County, Ill., in 1860. He is a son of Jonathan R. and Eliza A. (Stratton) Miles. The parents were both natives of Logan County, Ky., but in childhood, with their respective families, removed to Illinois, settling with a colony in Macoupin County in 1831. They there attained maturity, married and still reside. John R. F. Miles was educated at Carlinsville, Ill.; read law in Springfield, Ill., and was admitted to practice his profession in June, 1883. He immediately moved to Russellville, Ky., and opened an office. He is a Republican in his political preferences and though young in the legal profession bids fair for a successful career. On June 13, 1883, Mr. Miles was married to Carrie Bailey, daughter of G. H. Bailey of Logan County, Ky.

JOHN G. ORNDORFF, clerk of the Logan County courts, was born in the south portion of that county in 1838. About 1805, his grandfather, Christopher Orndorff, came from Maryland and located in the south part of Logan County, on Red River, where he improved a farm, and where he also established an early mill, an interest which has engaged the attention of his descendants. He died about 1845. Christian Orndorff, the father of John G. was born in Maryland but a short time prior to the removal of the family to Kentucky. He was, therefore, reared in Logan County; he married Lucy Grubbs, daughter of Capt. John Grubbs, who was a prominent farmer and stock dealer and who died in the county about 1874, at an advanced age. Christian and Lucy Orndorff had a family of three sons and three daughters, all of whom are now living. The parents are both deceased; the mother died in 1865, and the father in 1872. John G. Orndorff is the second of this family. He was educated in Bethel College, and in 1857, began merchandising in Adairville, Logan County, which, with slight exceptions, he continued until 1877. He became a candidate for the office of county court clerk, to which he was elected in August, 1878. At the expiration of his term in 1882, he was again the choice of the people, and was re-elected, and is now serving with perfect acceptance. Mr Orndorff is a Mason of high standing, and occupies the position of grand master of the State. In 1868, in Logan County, he married Lucy Harding, daughter of W. P. Harding, and a descendant of one of the oldest and most honored families of Kentucky.

MATTHIAS R. PERRY, M. D., a successful and prominent physician of Russellville, Ky., was there born on February 22, 1844. His family was first represented in that county by his grandfather, who in the first part of the present century removed from Virginia. James M. Perry, the father of Dr. M. R. Perry, was born in Logan County, Ky., in 1817, and is now among the venerable citizens of Russellville, engaged in the banking business. Dr. Perry received a liberal education, chiefly in the Bethel College of his native town, and in 1863, entered the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia, from which he graduated in 1865. He at once began the practice of his profession in the town of his birth, where he has since continued, each year adding to his popularity and sphere of usefulness. Dr. Perry, though unassuming, possesses rare social qualities, and requires only to be known to be appreciated. He was married in Maryland, in 1868, to Marian Robinette, of French ancestry. Their children are Morton R. and Monroe Robinette Perry.

THEODORE F. SMALL. In 1808, the grandfather of this gentleman, John Small, settled in the southern portion of Todd County, Ky., near the village of Allensville. He was immediatedly from Shelby County, Ky., though formerly from the State of Maryland. At the time of settlement in Todd County, James Small, the father of Theodore F., was but a mere boy. Attaining his majority, he married Nancy H. Boone, a relative of the pioneer hunter, Daniel Boone. He is still living near the scenes of his boyhood, and though in advanced life is yet hale, and a leading farmer in his community. Theodore F. is the ninth of a family of thirteen children, and was born in Todd County, in 1844. In 1862, having attained the age of eighteen, he espoused the cause of the Southern Confederacy, in the civil war then pending; enlisted in the Ninth Kentucky Cavalry, under Gen. John Morgan, with whom he did service until captured with the command in Ohio, in 1863. He effected his escape from Camp Douglas, and returning South rejoined the Confederate army in Georgia, serving until the close of the war. After the war closed, Mr. Small returned to his home in Todd County, devoting himself to the pursuits of agriculture, in which he was very successful. In 1883, however, he gave up the pursuits of farming and removed to Russellville, Logan County, where he engages in the livery business, associated with George C. Price. Mr. Small is a worthy member of the Baptist Church, and of the K. of H. He was married in 1868, to Mary T. McLean, daughter of Andrew J. McLean, of Logan County. They have a family of five children.

ROBERT M. WARDEN, sheriff of Logan County, Ky., is a native of that county, and was born in 1844. His father, Byram Warden, was a Virginian by birth, and a son of the Rev. Philip Warden, a Baptist minister, well and favorably known in the early organization of the Baptist Church in Logan County. Byram Warden, in this county, married Margaret Grinter, who was a native of Kentucky. Byram Warden followed the pursuits of the farm; he was a member of the Baptist Church, in the faith of which he died, in 1857. His widow is still a resident of Logan County. Robert M. Warden is the third of their family of six children, was reared on his father's farm, educated in the common schools of the county and in 1870 was appointed to the office of deputy sheriff of Logan County, a position which he filled with credit to himself for twelve consecutive years. In 1882 he was elected to the office of sheriff, and re-elected in 1884, and as an evidence of his popularity, both these elections were the unanimous voice of the people, he having no opposition whatever. Mr. Warden is a member of the Masonic order, and is sergeant-major of the Third Regiment of Kentucky State Guards. He was married in 1866, in Logan County, to Elizabeth, daughter of William E. Young. She died in 1869, leaving one child, Laura Warden. His present wife, to whom he was married in 1877, was Sansie V. Reynolds. Two children bless this union, viz.: Hewitt and Alleyne Warden.

LYON COUNTY.

GOV. CHARLES ANDERSON. In the latter part of the seventeenth century, Robert Anderson came to America from Scotland, and purchased an estate, in what is now Hanover County, Va., called "Goldmines" from the fact that some earlier settlers had there made search for the precious metal. His son Robert, born January 1, 1712, succeeded him in possession of the property and was known, and is remembered as "Anderson of Goldmine." Richard Clough Anderson was the fifth child of this second Robert and Elizabeth Clough, whose father, Richard Clough, was a colonist from Wales. He was born January 12, 1750, and like his father was a great lover of field sports. At sixteen he entered the family of Patrick Cootes, a wealthy merchant, against the protest of his father, who never forgave him. While with Cootes, and acting as supercargo on a tobacco ship, he saw the tea thrown overboard in Boston Harbor, and at the breaking out of hostilities, he espoused the cause of the colonies, his employer siding with the British, but the two were always friends. He was made paymaster-general of the Virginia forces by Gov. Patrick Henry, but by his own personal request was, January 6, 1776, appointed a captain of regulars from Hanover County, and in March following was commissioned to that grade in the Fifth Virginia Continental Regiment, under Col. Peachy and Lieut.-Col. William Crawford. He was reputed for his bravery, and was often selected for special duties, when judgment and discretion were required. December 24, 1776, by order of Gen. Stephens, he reconnoitered Trenton; was discovered by the British and driven off, thus temporarily spoiling a contemplated attack of Washington. But this blunder brought success to the American army, for the enemy, relaxing their vigilance, were attacked and surprised the next day in full force, and an easy victory won. In this battle Capt. Anderson was severely wounded, and taken to Philadelphia Hospital. He served with the Fifth Virginia in the battles of Brandywine and Germantown, and February 10, 1776, was promoted to major of the First Virginia, and with his regiment took part in the battle of Monmouth. While with Count D'Estaing in the attempted reduction of Savannah, he was wounded by a saber thrust through his shoulder. At Charleston he was taken and held a prisoner for nine months; upon his release joined Gen. Morgan, and went to Richmond; then joined La Fayette, with whom he served six months, the two becoming personal friends. Anderson next assisted Gov. Nelson in organizing the Virginia State troops.

During the campaign against Cornwallis, Richard C. Anderson was promoted to lieutenant-colonel in the Continental army, and at the same time brigadier-general of Virginia militia. In April, 1783, the army being disbanded, Anderson was chosen by brother officers and confirmed by the State legislature, as surveyor-general of lands reserved to pay the Virginian Continental Line, within the present States of Ohio and Kentucky, and in June, 1784, opened his office at the falls of the Ohio River, since called Louisville, and here, on Main and Fifth Streets, he built the first house in Louisvile —perhaps in Kentucky—which was not made of logs—a small stone office. In 1787, Gen. Anderson married Elizabeth Clark, a sister of Gen. George R. Clark, of Kentucky, and the following year, settled in the wilderness, ten miles from Louisville, and called the place "Soldier's Retreat," and in 1793, built a fine stone residence. In 1824, on the occasion of La Fayette's visit to America, he was one of the veteran soldier companions of the national guest, chosen to accompany him in his tour through Kentucky. The first wife of Gen. Anderson died January 15, 1785, leaving one son, Richard C. Anderson, Jr., who represented his district in congress, and the nation as its first minister to Columbia, and as commissioner to the congress of American States at Panama; on his way to meet that congress, he died at Carthagena in June, 1826. His father's death occurred at Jefferson County, Ky., on October 16, 1826. Col. Richard C. Anderson was twice married: his second wife was Sarah Marshall, who survived him, and died in Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1852. Gov. Charles Anderson is the youngest of a large family born of this marriage, at "Soldier's Retreat." Among those were Larz Anderson, of Cincinnati, "a scholar and the conscientious steward of his large fortune;" Gen. Robert Anderson, of Ft. Sumter fame; William M. Anderson, who, when over sixty years of age, made a scientific exploration in northern Mexico; John R. Anderson, of Chillicothe, and Charles Anderson. Gov. Anderson was born June 1, 1814, at "Soldier's Retreat," Ky. In 1829, he was sent to Miami University, Ohio, and graduated in 1833, from that institution. When a youth he was distinguished among his fellow students for nothing so much as his earnest national patriotism, and the climax of his graduating speech was an encomium on George Washington, as the founder of the national Union, and all its priceless principles and privileges. This sentiment seems, indeed, to have always been almost a religion with him, and is a clear key-note to his whole conduct and character. Whoever threatened the Union, at any time or place, directly or indirectly, was sure to find in him an open, ardent opponent. After taking his degree of A. B., he returned to Kentucky. At nineteen, after exploring several counties of his native State for the selection of a farm, he visited his brother, Robert, then a lieutenant in the United States army, at the arsenal near St. Louis, Mo. There, in partnership with his brother, in the winter of 1834, he purchased and settled on a farm on Gravois Creek, near Jefferson Barracks, at present, the property of the late Gen. Grant. At this post he made the acquaintance and personal friendship of Jefferson Davis, whom he then much admired.

The panic in the financial affairs of the country, prevented the brothers from meeting the payment of the farm, and so frustrated the cherished plans of both, to live and die among the quiet scenes and privacy of rural life. Upon this disappointment, Mr. Anderson returned to Kentucky, and began the study of law in the office of Pirtle & Anderson, at Louisville. On the completion of his professional studies, and procuring his license, he was married in the fall of 1835, to Miss Eliza J. Brown, of Dayton, Ohio, in which place he settled and lived ten years, "half lawyer and half farmer." The living children of this marriage are a son and two daughters. The son, Col. Latham Anderson, is a graduate of West Point, and was captain of the Fifth Artillery, United States army. He was in several engagements with the rebels, notably among which was the battle of Valverda, N. Mex., where he quite distinguished himself, as also afterward, in many campaigns against the Novajos and Appache Indians. In early life, Gov. Anderson was an ardent Jackson boy, but having heard Henry Clay in June, 1829, deliver one of his great speeches, at Hamilton, Ohio, he became a sudden and ardent convert to the principles of that great statesman, which, of course, threw him into the Whig party, and the only party, without exception, to which he ever professed to belong. Since its dissolution he habitually disowns all party allegiance whatsoever, and fights with every or any body who is for the national Union and against all who in any way oppose it. Owing to the pronounced friendship of Mr. Anderson for the common school system, upon the passage of the "new school law" in 1836, and for the purpose of carrying it thoroughly into effect, he was elected township clerk for Dayton Township. He was next elected prosecuting attorney of Montgomery County, and during his term of office persistently caused the grand juries to present the old court house as a nuisance, and thereby compelled the commissioners to build their present most beautiful and classic edifice.

In 1844, he was elected to the State senate from the district of Montgomery and Warren. In that body he was distinguished in being the first member from southern Ohio, who dared to propose and vote for the repeal of the provision disqualifying all negroes and mulattoes as witnesses in legal trials, civil and criminal. He was in advance of others in the advocacy of railroads, and was instrumental in the passage of nearly all the original railroad charters for the road centering in and passing through Dayton. The late Daniel Becket was the sole one of his constituents, who ever encouraged him in this course of legislation. He was also a very zealous and successful advocate in revising the act for erecting the new State House.

On account of infirm health, Mr. Anderson was compelled to visit Europe in 1845. He went by way of New Orleans and Havana, in a sailing vessel, to Spain; thence traveled through the northern part of Spain and southern part of France, and down the Rhone, around the Mediterranean shores through Italy, Sicily, Greece, into Asia Minor and Turkey, by way of the Black Sea, and the Danube through Germany, through the north of France and England to Boston. Upon his return to the United States, and the completion of his senatorial term, he settled in Cincinnati, Ohio, in a law partnership with Rufus King, Esq. There he lived ten years, until feeling again a decline in health, especially troubled with a bronchial affection, he abandoned his profession and sought a home in some healthy Southern clime, where he could pursue his favorite rural vocations. In 1858, he went to Texas and finally settled on the river, four miles north of San Antonio. There he purchased and improved a ranche which he called "River Springs," one of the most picturesque and beautiful country seats on the globe. Gov. Anderson was always a zealous Whig, and an earnest opponent of that party's dissolution, as well as of the Know-nothing and Republican parties that were successively organized from its ruins. When it came to the issue between the Republicans running the Democrat, John C. Fremont, and the Democrats, James Buchanan as their candidate, Mr. Anderson, as a strictly Union man, thought it more consistent for him to support the latter Democrat, as his party had the merit to have an existence throughout the country, whereas the former could, at that crisis, be none other than sectional. This course, however, he took under a published protest, that he acted merely as an ally of that party, and was not and never was expected to be a member of the Democratic party. He severely denounced the "infamous" repeal of the Missouri compromise, and fully justified the Republicans in their denunciation of the Democrats for that colossal crime against the Union. Looking upon this question in its then light, it is perhaps difficult to imagine how Gov. Anderson could with consistency have acted differently. He could scarcely have been expected to foresee, what nobody else foresaw, all the intervening course of events. Gov. Anderson has since been heard in public speeches to denounce President Buchanan as either a "senile dupe," or a "hoary-headed traitor," and to admit that the defeat of Fremont was a great public calamity. But the published documents of 1884, show this accusation of President Buchanan to have been rather unjust. Gov. Anderson was tendered the appointment of assistant-secretary of State under Buchanan, but declined the offer. Before treating of those events in Gov. Anderson's Texas life, we deem it proper to show how early, earnest and persistent he has been in his peculiar devotion to what may be called his nationality in politics. In an address delivered before the society of alumni of Miami University, at their anniversary, August 13, 1837, we find the following: "One of the first reflections which presses itself upon the observations of our reviewing its history is, that the original design of those who gave life to this university was part of a great national scheme. The grandeur of whose conception, has in the history of man, only been equaled by its rapid and complete accomplishment, etc." Again, in a funeral oration on the character, life and public service of Henry Clay, delivered in Cincinnati, November 2, 1852, at the request of the Clay Monument Association, he gave expression to sentiments on this subject far in advance of the times. In this same address he says: "Of all the public men of our country, this man (Clay) was too (and this is his highest eulogy) the most essentially and intensely National-American, etc." Again in an address on Anglo-Saxon destiny before the Philomathesian Society of Kenyon College, Ohio, August 8, 1849, he was no less decisive on the same principle. Having shown Gov. Anderson's intense nationality in political principles, we find him, in 1860, in the State of Texas, "an absolute witness of a conspiracy to dissolve the Union." Accordingly, we hear him declaring himself in a speech at a meeting of the people of Bexar County, at San Antonia, Tex., November 24, 1860, called for the purpose of discussing the question of seceding from the Union. Of the Union, he said: "Oh may it stand, my friends, as deep in the earth and as high in the heavens as the grandest mountain, as wide and glorious as old ocean, and as all enclosing and vitalizing to its generations, as the circumambient air. Whilst ever these fair, blue and blended skies, with their kindling lights of day and night, shall surround our earth, Oh! may this dear Union of our native land—the next most wise and pure and grand of all the creations—alike continue to encompass us and ours forever." In the same speech, he said: "We are here and now informed, as a fixed and certain fact of history, that our national destiny is fulfilled; that like dead leaves in the wind, our institutions have drifted away into the past forever, and that we are not here assembled to consider of their further existence or perpetuity, but to divide the spoils and take administration of the effects. Whilst we were so entertained with the vast and various thoughts and feelings and images of horror, that trooped thronging through my brain and heart, thrilling me with chilliness from scalp to soles, there was always mingled one sad and dreadful picture—the children of our loving mother—a mother hale and well, though not happy, with the bloom yet in her fair cheek, the lovelight yet in her calm eye, a gray hair only here and there silvering with a single thread her radiant locks, (God bless the mother who bore us!) and the daughters born of such a mother, circling in a conclave over a plan of matricide and the parting of her raiment among them. And yet, in all this tide of new and sudden emotions, whilst he so calmly spoke, there came to me no flush of fiery anger, no choking of bursting indignation, no throb for instant vengeance. A deep and bitter grief—a most melting pity and sadness—filled me until I thought I could weep—weep tears of blood—to see such treason in such men." This and other bold denunciations of the course of the seceding States, made it impossible for him to live there. He was, therefore, a "marked and doomed man." He remained in Texas ten months longer. During that time, he talked, thought, wrote, published and even conspired in the "holy cause of the Union." At length the Confederate congress passed an act called "the forty days' alien enemy act." This gave him forty days in which to leave the South. Disposing of his goods and property as best he could, he started for the United States, by way of Mexico. He was, nevertheless, pursued by an armed force, captured, brought back to San Antonio and thrown into prison. A month later he escaped and went to Europe. Returning to the United States, he raised the Ninety-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry, of which he was colonel. It very greatly distinguished itself at the battles of Stone River, Chickamauga, Chattanooga and many other battles. The Colonel himself was twice wounded, and was compelled by ill-health, after the battle of Stone River, to leave the service. Upon resigning his commission he was, contrary to his expressed wishes, nominated and elected lieutenant-governor of Ohio. This office he held until the death of Gov. Brough, when he was installed governor. After the expiration of his gubernatorial office, in an attempt to regain his shattered fortunes, he bought a large tract of land in Lyon County, Ky., for the purpose of stock raising. The location struck him as favorable for a town, and accordingly he laid out himself the now beautiful little city of Kuttawa. The town is located on the east bank of the Cumberland River, on a level plain extending northeast to the base of some small picturesque mountains. The Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad runs through the town. It has a population of about 900. Mr. Anderson has made an artificial lake, embracing several acres, aside from opening a very tasty park. He has been moderately successful of late years in financial affairs, and now lives in a quiet and contented retirement.

WILLIAM M. BOWMAN, one of Eddyville's leading business men, was born February 7, 1831. His grandfather, Leonard Bowman, was from Maryland, and was among the first settlers of Clark County, Ind., where he lived on a farm until his death. His son, Ransom, William M.'s father, was born in Clark County, where he always resided. He married Mary Ann Applegate, an estimable Christian lady, and a member of the Methodist Church. Both parents died before their only child, William M., was two years old. After the death of his parents, William M. went to live with his grandfather, Aaron Applegate, who reared him to the age of eighteen or twenty. He then flat-boated to New Orleans and other intermediate points; he afterward chose merchandising as a business, which he learned with H. B. Polston, of Jeffersonville, Ind. In 1855, he came to Eddyville, and clerked for his uncle, James Lester, several years. In 1868, he started in business for himself at his present stand; he carries a heavy stock of general merchandise, and enjoys a large and growing trade. His business ventures have been very successful, having started without capital, and now aside from his interest in business, owns three residences and two business houses in Eddyville, two farms and other property. On the 7th of February, 1867, he married Mary Smith, who died September, 1869, leaving one child, Effie. November, 1870, he married Mattie Hunter. They are members of the Methodist Church, in which he is steward. Mr. Bowman is an ardent temperance advocate; a member of the K. of H., of which he is treasurer, and is commander in the K. of the G. C.

JOHN BOYD was born May 10, 1832, in Caldwell County, Ky., and is a son of John and Mildred (Goodall) Boyd. The father came with his parents to Barren County, Ky., from Virginia, and was raised on a farm; with two of his brothers, came to Lyon, then part of Caldwell County. He acquired a large property, and died in 1863; his wife died two years previous. They had twelve children, three living: Mary A. (Young), James, and John, who is the seventh child. He was educated in the local schools, and at Pittsfield, Ill., where he lived four years with a sister. At nineteen, he returned to Kentucky and clerked two years for William Long. He next was appointed deputy sheriff under his brother-in-law, J. T. Young, from 1861 to 1864, at a time when such was the danger to life that none could be found willing to take the office. In March, 1864, he was appointed sheriff by the court, and in August of the same year; was re-elected in 1868–72–74. Since going out of office in 1876, he has been variously engaged in trading and speculating. March 12, 1872, he married Eliza Henry, nee, Gracy. They are blessed with two children, Marie and Bessie. Mr. and Mrs. Boyd are highly respected in the community.

ACHILLES CALLAWAY, Lyon County, was born in Bedford County, Va., January 27, 1814. His parents, Achilles, Sr., and Elizabeth (Hudson) Callaway, came to Christian County, Ky., in 1817. They were Methodists, and were the parents of eight children. The father died in February, 1841; the mother in 1853. Achilles is the youngest child, attended school until sixteen, when he left home and worked at various mechanical employments until twenty-five years of age, when, having in the meantime read medicine for six years while working, he began the practice in Trigg County. After ten years he took a course of lectures at Louisville Medical College; practiced six years longer in Trigg County; then went to Paducah, where he accepted a position in the United States Marine Hospital; was then under the presidents, Pierce, Buchanan and Lincoln. He returned to Tennessee Rolling Mills in 1866, and practiced until coming to Eddyville in 1882. June 22, 1843, he was married to Elizabeth McWaters of Trigg County, who bore him one child. Mrs. Callaway died January 22, 1845, a member of the Christian Church. His second marriage was with Amanda Lawson, February 22, 1846; she died on July 28, 1884, the mother of one child, a daughter (Amanda) who died April 25, 1884.

WILLIAM M. CAMPBELL was born in Trigg County, Ky., October 3, 1842, and is a son of William and Sarah J. (Baker) Campbell, both natives of Kentucky, the former of Scotch and the latter of French descent. William Campbell, Sr., was born in Bourbon County, Ky., October 26, 1797, where he lived for some time, then removed to Tennessee, where he spent one year, then came to Christian County, and thence to Trigg County, where he still resides, at the advanced age of eighty-seven years, the oldest man in Rock Castle Precinct, and the second oldest in the county. When Mr. Campbell came to Trigg County it was unoccupied save by wolves, bears and wild game. In youth he learned the tanner's trade, but made farming his occupation instead. William M. Campbell our subject, received a good common school education, but was forced to leave school early on account of ill health. At the beginning of the war troubles, though barely old enough for enrollment, he was elected captain of Company A, First Regiment Kentucky Volunteers. In September, 1861, he enlisted in Capt. T. G. Woodward's squadron, Kentucky Cavalry, Confederates States army, which subsequently composed Companies A and B, First Kentucky Cavalry, commanded by Gen. Ben Hardin Helm. Mr. Campbell served throughout the war, rising through successive grades from private to lieutenant commanding company. He was desperately wounded in front of Columbia, S. C., February 15, 1865. After the war he taught school one year. He was married November 16, 1865, to Rebecca C. Holland, a native of Kentucky, by whom he has had nine children, of whom Nannie, John S., David W., William M., Jr., and Richard are living. After his marriage Mr. Campbell again engaged in merchandising; later was employed as head salesman for Hillman & Son's Iron Works, and at present is head salesman for Ewald & Co.'s store (Iron Works), and also superintends his farm. He is a member of the P. of H. and A. F. & A. M., and of the Missionary Baptist Church. He has served as sheriff of Trigg County four years; has also figured conspicuously in politics, and is one of the leading influential business men of the county.

GEORGE M. CASH, the son of George G. and Nancy (Savage) Cash, was born February 9, 1829, in Caldwell County, Ky., he being the seventh in a family of twelve children, only four of whom are now living. He attended the district schools during the winter, and helped his father during the summer at farming. His grandfather, Howard Cash, left his home in Virginia and settled on a farm in Caldwell County, on which both he and his son, George G., lived continuously until their deaths; George G. died in 1873; his wife, whom he married in Hopkins County, died in 1842. Both George G. and his wife were Methodists. March 29, 1851, George M. married Sarah Lewis, of Caldwell County, a daughter of Buford Lewis, and commenced life on a rented farm, but, being too ambitious to be satisfied with accumulating money by farming, he, in 1852, made an overland trip to California, and during a residence of four years in Nevada County, engaged in mining, acquired a competency and returned to his home in Kentucky. Soon after he purchased a farm of 130 acres in Lyon County, where he lived for seven years. He sold his farm, and four years later purchased his present farm of 150 acres, which he bought unimproved, and has brought to its present high state of cultivation. Mr. and Mrs. Cash have four children, viz.: Joseph M., married Mattie Rucker and settled on a farm; Alice, wife of James A. Maloy, a farmer; May, wife of W. A. Grisson, also a farmer, and James A., who is still at home assisting his father on the farm. All are located in Lyon County. Mr. Cash is a Methodist, and formerly affiliated with the Grangers and Good Templars, and is a moderate temperance man. He is a stanch Republican.

DANIEL B. CASSIDY, attorney, was born September 3, 1822, in Baton Rouge, La., and is the eldest of ten children of Howard and Mary G. (Hayworth) Cassidy. Subject's grandfather, Henry Cassidy, was born in Ireland, and his grandmother, Rebecca Woods, was an English woman. Howard Cassidy was a native of Philadelphia, Penn., and came to Princeton, Ky., in 1818, when a young man. He was a tailor by trade, and while in Princeton married, and soon after, with a brother, went to Baton Rouge, La., where Daniel B. was born, and when but three months old his parents returned to Princeton, and lived there and in the vicinity until the father's death, February 2, 1864. He was many years a justice of the peace in Caldwell County. About 1838 he removed from Princeton to Eddyville, and resided there until 1854. He was a justice at Eddyville until the organization of Lyon County. In 1854 he moved to Dycusburg, Crittenden County, where he was justice of the peace and postmaster; was a strong Unionist, a Whig, and a well-read man. He was a Methodist, as is also his widow, who is still living at the age of eighty years. Daniel B. lived in Princeton with his father until his thirteenth year; attended school constantly; then went to Columbus, Ky., and learned the mercantile business with H. B. Cresap. He remained in his store six years; then, at nineteen, came to Eddyville, where his father had moved, and acted as salesman in various stores until coming of age, when he was appointed constable (it was all Caldwell County at that time), and served as such for seven years. He then taught school two years, the last two terms in Dycusburg, where he had moved. While teaching, and having then a wife and two children he began the study of law. After his school teaching he was employed as cashier and book-keeper in a store at Dycusburg for two years (during that time he read law, also). In 1854 he went into business in Dycusburg with Daniel Head, one of his former employers; continued with him until 1862, when he went into business for himself—dealing in produce—until 1865, when he was variously engaged until 1866, when he came to Eddyville and began the practice of the law, but had practiced law in connection with other business before coming. He has been in practice here ever since; was county attorney ten years; has been engaged in all important cases in the county, and given special attention to real estate litigation. He is now a notary public of the county. He has been a Mason since twenty-one years of age. His father was the master of ceremonies at the burial of Chittenden Lyon. December 15, 1846, he married Clara Wolf, of McCracken County. They have five children: Henry H., John W., Frank, Daniel H. and Maie, wife of Ed. James. Mrs. Cassidy is running the Cassidy House. Aside from their family he has reared a niece, Miss Ruth Wolfe, from infancy.

GEORGE CATLETT was born December 9, 1859, near Eddyville, Lyon County, and is a son of Thomas W. and Mary L. (Clark) Catlett. The father, when a young man, came with his parents from Winchester, Va., and located in Morganfield, Ky. He finally settled in Lyon County and engaged in milling and farming for a while, and then went into the mercantile business at Eddyville, which he conducted with eminent success for twenty years. Owning a great many slaves he operated a large plantation, but lived retired from business for a time before his death, which occurred April 28, 1879, in his eighty-first year. He sided with the South during the civil war, and lost heavily in slaves and money, but at the time of his death was in affluent circumstances. He was married twice; the first wife was Isabelle Helm. Of this union there were seven children born, six living. There were but two children born to the second union: Oliver and George (our subject), who, having chosen merchandising for a vocation, devoted his studies and time to qualifying himself for the business. His literary training was received in the schools of Eddyville and Smithland, and he commenced his business training as clerk during school vacations for his father for a period of five years. At seventeen he had entire charge of H. B. Lyon's business for two years; then with a firm in Christian County; then traveled for a Louisville notion house and then returned to Eddyville to assist his father. While assisting in managing the latter's business he opened a store at Kuttawa, with Thomas Glenn as partner, until the death of his father. He then opened a store in Eddyville with John W. Clark, and a year later bought him out, and has since carried on the business by himself. He carries a general assortment of goods, which is not surpassed by any in the same line in the county. He is highly esteemed in the community. He is a member of the K. of H., of the town board and is town treasurer.

ALFRED H. CHAMPION was born November 11, 1815, in Smithland, Livingston Co., Ky. His father, Thomas, came from North Carolina when a young man, and here married Frances Williams, of Virginia. He was elected sheriff of Livingston County, when Caldwell County was formed; in 1818 went to Princeton and carried on business until his death, in 1821. His mother lived to be seventy-seven years old; she was a Cumberland Presbyterian. They had five children, of whom Alfred H. is the second child. He was thoroughly educated at the Caledonia Academy, in which institution he afterward taught for two years; then taught six months near Fredonia, and then began the study of medicine at Princeton under Dr. P. B. McGoodwin. In 1839, he came to Eddyville, where he has since been in active practice. Dr. Champion is a strong temperance advocate, having been a member of every society from the Washingtonians down to the Murphys. November 26, 1844, he married Mary Scott, who bore him eight children, and who died March 14, 1872; she was an affectionate wife and mother. Only three children are now living: Mattie E. (wife of E. S. Bringhunt), George M. and Ora, now at school.

JOHN W. CLARK was born November 7, 1826, in Adams County, Ohio. His father, William, was brought to America in 1802, when seven years old, by his father, John, who settled in Lancaster County, Penn., where he died. In 1823, William came to Greenup County, Ky., where in September, 1825, he married Elizabeth Warnock. He next moved to Adams County, Ohio; then in 1828 he moved back to Greenup County, Ky., thence to Montgomery County, Tenn. in 1834, where he remained twelve years, and in 1846 he moved to Caldwell County (now Lyon), Ky., locating on a farm, where December 23, 1866 he died. His widow is still living at the age of seventy-eight years, a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. His father's limited circumstances prevented him

(John W.) from obtaining an early education, but at twenty-four, having sold a horse, which he raised from a colt, he was enabled to attend school at Bethlehem Academy two sessions, in 1851 and 1852. He then taught school in Lyon and Caldwell Counties in 1853 and 1854. In 1855 he attended Jones' Commercial College in St. Louis, and obtained a certificate of qualification. In 1855 he came to Eddyville, and accepted a position as salesman in a clothing store. He was deputy county clerk under M. M. Tyler, and one year with N. T. Boswell as salesman; was next salesman for Robert Black in the wholesale and retail grocery business for the year 1857, and buying out Black conducted the business himself up to 1861, during three years of the time he was postmaster. In 1862 he was county superintendent of common schools, and in 1863 was deputy sheriff. In May, 1864, he was appointed clerk of Lyon County Court and also of the Lyon Circuit Court, and in June, 1865, he was appointed master commissioner of the Lyon Circuit Court, which position he held for sixteen years. In August, 1865, he was elected by the people to the offices of county court clerk and circuit court clerk, which position of county court clerk he held for six years, and he has held the position of circuit court clerk for the past twenty-one years. He is a member of the town board, as well as trustee of Academy, is also a member of the A. F. & A. M. March 11, 1857, he was united in marriage with Lucy A. Boyd, of Eddyville. They have one child living—James F. Mrs. Clark is a Methodist.

MIMS COTTON was born near his present residence, February 18, 1837, a son of Winfree and Sarah (Davis) Cotton, natives respectively of North and South Carolina. The father followed farming as his occupation during life. He was a son of Littleberry Cotton. Our subject has always remained in this county, engaged in farming pursuits. His farm of 180 acres is devoted to farming in its general branches. During the war Mr. Cotton lost many horses, and was otherwise troubled by guerrilla bands passing through the country, and as he was not allowed to work at home, he joined the Federal army, and served six months in the field. He married Martha A. Van Zant, a daughter of James and Rebecca Van Zant. This union has given eight children, five of whom survive: Josephine, Flora A., Franklin E., Martha A. and Fred. Mr. Cotton is a man of spirit and enterprise, and is one of the substantial farmers of this section.

GEORGE W. CRUMBAUGH was born and reared in Russellville, Logan Co., Ky. His father, Conrad Crumbaugh, was a potter and brewer by occupation, and came to Kentucky from Hagerstown, Md. George W. was five years learning the tailor's trade, and at nineteen began the business for himself; first at Danville, Ky., and soon after at Louisville, where he carried on his business. He studied for the ministry and preached as a local minister. In 1840 he was admitted to the Conference on probation, and two years afterward to full membership, and was ordained elder of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the Louisville Conference. He was subject to appointment by the Conference for fifty years, but now is superannuated; was recently appointed chaplain of the penitentiary at Eddyville, to which place he moved in 1880, and three years later to Kuttawa. During his ministerial service he added to the various churches 3,000 members. He belongs to the Odd Fellows and Masonic fraternities, and was formerly a Good Templar. He has been twice married; his first wife was Zella Hall, of Bullitt County, Ky. There is but one child living to this union—Rev. G. C. Crumbaugh, of Paducah. His present wife is Emma S., nee Crandell, of Hardin County. They are blessed with three children: Dora E., wife of Press Wood; Mary C., wife of E. S. Menard, and Earnest W. The last named was born July 18, 1860, in Carrollton, Ky., and thoroughly educated at the Louisville High School. He came to Eddyville with his father and bought an interest in the Lyon County Democrat, of which he was editor. He has since been associated as editor of the Kuttawa Gazette which he started, and soon after consolidated with the Democrat. At the same time he owned and published the Dawson Ripplings, all in partnership with Scott Brothers. Upon dissolution they took the Dawson paper, and he the Kuttawa Gazette-Democrat, which was suspended in June, 1884. December 6, 1884, he started his present paper the Saturday Evening Echo, of which he is sole editor and proprietor, and which is in a flourishing condition.

WILLIAM S. DYCUS, of the firm of S. H. Cassidy & Co., was born July 5, 1858, in Dycusburg, Crittenden County., Ky., and is a son of William E. and Louisa (Cassidy) Dycus. The father was a native of Tennessee; came to Dycusburg at an early day, and engaged in mercantile business, in connection with which, during the war, he was joint owner in a large steamboat line on the Cumberland, Ohio and Tennessee Rivers; was eminently successful in his business career, amassing a large competence by industry, good management and economy, having started in life with no capital but personal energy and a determination to succeed. By trade he was a carpenter, and as such erected many of the now old residences of Eddyville and vicinity. He died some years ago. His wife was a devoted, consistent member of the Methodist Church, and lived an exemplary and pure life. They left three children: Mollie, who married Samuel L. Yancey, a dry goods merchant of Dycusburg; she is deceased; William S., the second child; and Frank B., who is connected in the tobacco business with his brother, in the firm of Cassidy & Co. William S. was reared in Dycusburg, attended school there, and by the improvement of his opportunities secured a thorough business education. At fifteen years of age he began as salesman for Cassidy & Gellatly of that place, working in the store during the summer, and attending school in the winter. Under the instruction of Mr. Gellatly he secured a thorough knowledge of book-keeping. In connection with the store, the firm continued a commission business of which branch of trade Mr. Dycus had almost the exclusive charge. He continued thus engaged about five years, then entered the business under the firm name of Cassidy & Co., and has since continued under the same firm name and style. They are extensively engaged in tobacco and grain, also in wagons, buggies and agricultural implements, doing an extensive business in Kuttawa and Dycusburg, of which W. S. Dycus has full control and management of the business at Kuttawa, Ky., at which latter point is located the main office. Mr. Dycus is yet a young man of set sterling business qualities, and high personal standing, and bids fair to occupy in business and social circles a leading position, not only in his community, but throughout western Kentucky. In June 27, 1882, he married in Paducah, Ky., Bobbie P. Paine, daughter of T. P. and Mary K. (Cassidy) Paine. They are the parents of two children: May L. and Edward Haward. He is a member of the K. of H., and in politics affiliates with the Democratic party.

JAMES M. EARLY was born in Caldwell, now Lyon County, July 30, 1838. His father, James Early, was for many years a regular pilot and captain of keel and flat-boats, which were the only means of shipping on the Western waters. He was a Kentuckian by birth and was known as Maj. Early, having served in the regular State musters. He was engaged principally in buying up stock, etc., and shipping the same to New Orleans on boats, which he either owned or controlled, and upon his return would bring sugars and provisions, which the people here needed. He was an experienced pilot, and oftimes beside his own boats, he would take with him and pilot other vessels bound for the same place. His wife, Rebecca (George) Early was also a native of Kentucky. To them were born twelve children, of whom three are living: Caroline, wife of James Holland of Trigg County, this State; Mary C., married to Leander Baker of this county; James M. the subject of this sketch. The last received his education at the Bethlehem, Harmony and Cumberland Academies, Caldwell County, this State, after which he taught school and did a large amount of surveying in this county. He then engaged in farming, and two years later purchased and removed to his present place of 240 acres. He erected the first business house in Lamasco, and merchandised there during the war. He has since devoted his attention mostly to farming, and the saw-mill business. He has also a brick yard, which gives employment to some ten hands, and is producing a superior brick for building purposes. He has also devoted, for the past ten years, considerable attention to tobacco dealing. He is one of the leading spirits of the country, and is actively interested in the material development of it. He was first married to Miss Jennette A. Dunning, a daughter of Levi and Jennette M. Dunning; she died in 1863, leaving one child, Alva, who married David Porter. Mr. Early was subsequently married to Miss Fannie E. Smith, a daughter of Ransford Smith. Of this union there are seven children living: Lola, Walter, Kate, Maggie, Clarence, Firman and Nellie.

Z. D. FRASER, Lyon County, is a native of Missouri. He is the son of John E. and Rebecca S. Fraser, who were early settlers in that State. The parents removed to Lyon County, Ky., about 1860, and again in 1867, after returning to Missouri, and residing in that State seven years. While here the father was employed in the Tennessee Rolling Mills. His son, Z. D. has been connected with the mills about two years, and is an enterprising young man of superior social and intellectual worth.

THOMAS C. GLENN was born April 29, 1849, in Lyon County, Ky., and is a son of W. V. and Sarah (Leech) Glenn; the father was a native of Georgia, and his father Samuel was from Pennsylvania. The mother was a native of Virginia. Of their children there are five now living, and four dead. The parents were Cumberland Presbyterians. The father for years was assessor of Lyon County. He died August 2, 1860, his widow died in March, 1881. Thomas C. was reared and educated in Lyon County. By the improvement of the limited school advantages afforded by the public schools, and close attention to study, he secured a thorough business education. At seventeen years he began for himself, worked for a time by the month at farm work, and at eighteen accepted a situation as salesman with John Leech in Eddyville, in 1869; remained with him three years, when he entered a partnership with T. W. Catlett in the dry goods business at Eddyville, and continued four years. He then bought Mr. Catlett out, and conducted business by himself at the same stand till 1880, when he moved his stock to Kuttawa, and now continues the same business, carrying a heavy stock of dry goods, queensware, boots, shoes, clothing, hats, caps and general merchandise. January 6, 1881, he married Lillian Huggans of Eddyville, daughter of Dr. G. F. and Sarah (Winton) Huggans. They are parents of two children; Mabel L. and Ruby W. Mr. and Mrs. Glenn are members of the Methodist Church South, in which he holds the office of trustee. He is a member in the orders of K. of H. and C. F. His business career and success is the result of personal industry and good management; starting with no capital he now occupies a leading position among the financial men of the county.

JAMES A. GLENN was born October 28, 1856 in Caldwell County, Ky., and is a son of David B. and Lucinda (McCarrell) Glenn, nee Threlkeld. David B. Glenn was a native of Caldwell County; his father, Samuel, was a native of Georgia, and in the prime of life settled in Livingston County, Ky., and for many years was prominently connected with the public affairs of the county. David B., was a farmer and died in 1861, a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, of which his widow is also a member. Mrs. Glenn's maiden name was Threlkeld; her first husband was Mr. McCarrell; he died leaving one child; her second husband was Mr. Glenn, to whom she bore six boys and two girls—four boys now living; she was Mr. Glenn's third wife and the mother of James A., who was reared on a farm in Caldwell County, and attended the district schools at Bethlehem, Caldwell County, where by close application to study, and a course at the Kentucky Normal School at Carlisle, he secured a thorough business education. At twenty years of age, he began for himself, teaching school in Lyon County. He taught continuously for nine years until 1881. The last three years, he taught in the city schools of Kuttawa. In 1881, he formed a partnership with A. J. Conant in Kuttawa, in the commission business, continuing until January, 1884, when he sold out and opened his present hardware and grocery establishment. May 16, 1883, he married Lou Wilson, daughter of Alexander Wilson, Sr., and Perlina (Guess) Wilson, of Caldwell County. Alexander Wilson is now engaged in agricultural pursuits; he came from Scotland at eighteen years of age. Mr. and Mrs. Glenn are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. He is a member of the K. of H., Kuttawa, and in politics affiliates with the Democratic party.

JAMES N. HOLLOWAY was born September 26, 1819 in Warren County, Ky., son of Thomas and Jane (Cowles) Holloway, both from Virginia. James N. is the eldest of six children, and now the only survivor; he was reared on a farm near Eddyville until twenty-eight years old. His father having died when he was seventeen years old, he assumed the management of affairs and support of the family which consisted of his mother and five sisters. Two years after the death of his mother in 1848, he came to Eddyville and conducted a hotel until 1855. He spent three years in the liquor business on the river and at Paducah, and settled permanently in his present grocery and liquor business in 1858. Mr. Holloway has accumulated a large property as the result of personal industry, and ranks high in local, financial, and social circles. He was united in marriage, March 31, 1858, with Ellen Dix, of Eddyville. They have one child, Cora, the wife of Dr. Euclid M. Duncan, one of Eddyville's best physicians.

WILLIAM T. HUTCHINSON was born in Clinton County, N. Y., March 3, 1829, the eldest child of William and Mary (Taylor) Hutchinson. The father was born in England; came to America in 1812. He was an iron-worker, and was engaged at his trade in various States. The parents had nine children, five of whom survive: W. T., Henry R., Alice, Edward J. and James A. Our subject remained with his father in early life, and learned the latter's trade. In 1859 he came to this county, but shortly afterward went to Cincinnati, Ohio, where he remained until 1866, when he returned to this county, and has since been connected with the Tennessee Rolling Mills, acting at present in the capacity of general machinist. He married Miss Ellen E. Gilbert, a daughter of Alexander Gilbert, deceased, formerly of Pittsburgh, Penn. This union has given ten children, seven of whom are living: Eva A., Elmore D., Lotta A., Nellie G., Mary E., Maggie B. and W. Edna. Mr. Hutchinson is a member of the Methodist Church South, and is one of the most respected citizens of the county.

HENRY R. HUTCHINSON was born in Delaware County, Penn., March 3, 1833, a son of William Hutchinson. Our subject was moved around by his father, who was an iron worker, through various States, in which the latter secured employment, and finally locating in Cincinnati, Ohio; the son was there employed in some steel works. He afterward followed painting four years, but coming to this county in 1866, he has been mostly engaged at the rolling mills. He has farm property near Kuttawa, this county, and gives some attention to farm pursuits. He is one of the substantial citizens of the county, and gives active support to all enterprises of public interest and importance. He married Miss Mary Barrock, a daughter of John and Rebecca Barrock. Of this union there are three children living: Eliza R., Elmore B., and William R.

JOHN W. JACKSON was born September 15, 1815, in Bourbon County, Ky., and is the fifth child in a family of eight children born to Thomas and Ann (White) Jackson. The parents were both natives of Louisa County, Va. They were married in Virginia, and came to Kentucky about 1808, and settled in Bourbon County, where they resided seven years; then came to Caldwell County, where John W. now resides. He was about the first to settle in the Fredonia Valley; he opened a farm from the timber and was fairly successful in his agricultural pursuits. John W. Jackson was reared on the farm, and given fair educational advantages, working in summer and attending school during the winter. His father died in 1833, when he was seventeen years of age. John W. Jackson the next year took charge of his mother's business and continued with her until 1844, when she died, since which he has been in business for himself. In 1843 he bought 160 acres of land where he now lives, and which was partly improved. He owns 300 acres of land. He set out an orchard of 300 trees, built a fine residence and out-buildings, etc. In 1840 he married Jane A. Adamson. Of this union there are now living, Sarah L., wife of Samuel McElroy; Charles W. and Fannie A., wife of William Koon. There are some deceased who reared families, of these Isabella, who was the wife of James White, left two children; Mary J., wife of M. G. Young, left five children. Mr. Jackson's second wife was Agnes, widow of R. C. Groom, nee White. His present wife is Sarah E., widow of E. B. Hamilton, nee Buckner. She is the mother of five children: Emma, wife of W. N. Billington; Maud M. wife of C. S. Jackson; Thaddeus B., Elealsor P. and Alex L. Mr. and Mrs. Jackson are members of the Missionary Baptist Church, in which he is a deacon; he has been a member since 1834. He was formerly a Whig, but now a Democrat. On temperance he stands with the anti-liquor cause; at one time he was a member of the Washingtonian Temperance Society, and lent his influence to building up the cause in this part of the country. He is now seventy years of age, well-preserved in mental strength and fair bodily vigor, although he has been an invalid a good part of his life. C. W. Jackson, son of J. W. Jackson, was born February 2, 1850, in Lyon County, on the father's homestead. He was afforded such advantages for an education as the neighborhood schools provided, and attended three sessions at Russellville. In January, 1875, he married Virginia Rice, of Caldwell County. They have three children, as follows: Virginia B., Sarah E. and William R. Jackson. Mr. Jackson and wife are Baptists. He owns 156 acres of finely located land in Fredonia Valley, and has 130 acres under cultivation, on which he raises all varieties of farm produce. He built a fine cottage residence in 1878.

JAMES L. JAMES, JR., was born in Stewart County, Tenn., July 15, 1855, and is the eldest son of James L. and Eliza (Smith) James. The father is a native of Bridgeton, N. J., and was born in 1829; when a child, his parents, James L. and Charlotte James, moved to Montgomery County, Tenn. There the son was reared and educated, and in 1856 came to Lyon County, Ky., where for several years he was prominently identified with the iron manufacturing interests, from which he retired during the war, and has since given his attention to mercantile business. Mr. and Mrs. James are related to some of the renowned American historic characters; Gen. Hall and Liddie Darrah, both of Revolutionary fame, are related to Mr. James, and Mrs. James is a direct descendant of John Randolph, of Virginia; also related to Hon. John F. House, member of congress from Tennessee; she is a member in high standing of the Methodist Church. They have four children living: Bettie, wife of Hon. F. A. Wilson, whose sketch is given; James L., Jr., Edward H., a talented young attorney, reputed for thoroughness in his profession and holding the office of county attorney; was lately married to Maie Cassidy, of Eddyville; and Claud N. R., attending school. James L., Jr., attended school until he was fourteen years of age. He then entered the mercantile establishment of Bowman & Smith, as salesman, where his affable bearing won the esteem and confidence of his employers, and all others to whom he became known. After four years he took a position as traveling salesman for three years from Louisville; then clerked on a steamboat and engaged in wholesale trade, hardware line, for an Evansville firm, continuing until January 1, 1884. He then opened his present business, drugs and groceries, in Eddyville. Mr. James' social temperament has gathered around him a large circle of friends, and brought a liberal patronage to his business. September 18, 1883, he married Sallie Woods, of Livingston County, Ky. She is a Presbyterian.

THOMAS G. JONES was born July 7, 1844, in Caldwell County, Ky. His father, William Jones, was the son of John Jones, of South Carolina; was born in Caldwell County; was a well-to-do farmer; was united in marriage with Malinda D. Holmes, and died June 20, 1877. His widow survives, and is now sixty-nine years of age. Thomas G. is third of ten children. He attended the district schools, and at sixteen began supporting himself by working on his father's farm, and raising tobacco as pay for his services; continued thus employed until his marriage, August 18, 1864, when he moved to a place by himself; two years later he bought his present farm of 200 acres, upon which he has made many substantial improvements. He still retains an interest in his father's estate. His wife was Mary H. Gatewood, of Eddyville; she died in February, 1877, a member in high standing of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, of which Mr. Jones is also a member. Mrs. Jones was of a kind, devoted nature, and beloved by all who knew her. In 1884, Mr. Jones was elected to the office of sheriff, and was the first Republican ever elected to that office in Lyon County; he has since resigned and retired to his farm.

JAMES D. KIRKPATRICK, physician, son of Dr. William D. Kirkpatrick, of Fredonia, Ky. (whose biography will be found elsewhere), was born December, 3, 1850, in Fredonia, Caldwell County. At nine and one-half years of age he entered the dry goods store of John F. Harris as salesman, with whom he remained six years; during a part of the time he worked on his father's farm during the summer. The schools at that time were closed, owing to the war. In 1865–66 he attended school near Fredonia, and in the spring of 1866, re-entered Harris' store, and remained until the fall of 1867; then entered Bethel College, at Russellville, Ky.; remained there until 1869, when he returned to Fredonia and the same evening was sent for by Maj. E. F. Neal, the partner of Mr. Harris, to come and take charge of the store. He went, worked with the firm two months; then went to Paducah in compliance with a previous arrangement with J. J. Guthrie, dry goods merchant, and remained from September, 1869, to March, 1872. He then went to Houston, Johnson & Co., in Paducah, for a year; then engaged in grocery business for himself in Paducah, until April, 1875; then attended the State University at Louisville for the sessions of 1875–76, and then returned to Fredonia and practiced with his father as an under-graduate; then returned to the university at Louisville and graduated in March, 1879, from the medical department of that institution. As an undergraduate he spent two years as assistant practitioner, assisting all the physicians and acquiring a practical knowledge of the profession. After graduating he came direct to Kuttawa, April 7, 1879, where he has since been engaged in practice. He has been a member of the Odd Fellows, etc., at Paducah. Since coming to Kuttawa, Dr. Kirkpatrick has been instrumental in building roads, churches and schools, and securing general improvements. He opened the first drug store. He also tried to secure a line of railway and has been identified with every public improvement.

JOHN E. KIRTLEY, prison inspector, Eddyville, Ky., was born December 17, 1838, in Henry County, Ky., and is the son of E. B. and Jennette (Montgomery) Kirtley. The father was born in Ohio, April 10, 1809, and when sixteen years old, came to Woodford County, Ky., and learned the trade of blacksmith. After learning his trade, he married and went to Henry County, where he worked at his trade until thirty-three years old, when he engaged in farming in Henry County, where he lived until 1854, when he moved his family to Buchanan County, Mo., and farmed until 1861; then moved to Columbia, central Missouri, where he left his family and went to Virginia City, Montana. At the close of the war he returned to Buchanan County, where he owned a large tract of land, which he sold, and went to Platte County, Mo., where he still resides. He had nine children, five now living: Anna, wife of Dr. L. Watson, of Maryville, Mo.; John E., our subject

Jephtha, at Maryville, Mo.; Sallie, wife of Woodson Bryant, and Phillip R., in Buchanan County, Mo. The father has been a deacon and member of the Baptist Church thirty-five years. His wife, who died April 10, 1877, was also a member of long standing. John E. was principally reared on a farm, and acquired a thorough education in the common schools. Being the eldest son, he managed the home place for his father until the breaking out of the war, when, in 1861, he enlisted in the Confederate service, under John A. Boyd, State guard of Missouri, as second-lieutenant of a mounted infantry company, which took part in the skirmish at Lexington, Mo., and there captured Mulligan. After this battle, he was transferred to cavalry service, Cornell regiment; then went South; was in the battle of Pea Ridge; then south to Van Buren, Ark., where he was taken sick, and went to Jacksonport, Ark.; then returned to north Missouri for the purpose of recruiting; was captured and confined at St. Joseph for six weeks, and tried as a bushwhacker; was paroled after six weeks; ran off and came to Kentucky, where he remained until the close of the war. February 14, 1866, he married Maria Taylor, of Frankfort, Ky., a daughter of William and Minorha (Luckett) Taylor. Her father ran, with Maj. B. Luckett, the Mansion House at that place. After marriage, he farmed a year in Scott County, and then went to Missouri and opened a feed and sale stable at St. Joseph, which he conducted for eight months; thence went to Platte County, where he engaged in mercantile business for fourteen months; then farmed for two years, and then returned to Kentucky, and took charge of the chair factory and cooper shop at the penitentiary for seven years, and then, after the death of Col. J. W. South, the lessee, he ran the factory one month in the interest of the State; then made the race for deputy warden, and was defeated by one vote; then elected by the city council of Frankfort, as city collector for a term of two years; then traveled in the interests of the Kentucky River Mills until 1884, when he accepted his present position of prison inspector. Mr. Kirtley has three children, Lena R., Albert T. and Sallie T., all at home. Mr. and Mrs. Kirtley and Lena, are members of the Baptist Church, at Frankfort, in which he is a deacon. Politically he is a Democrat, and a member of the Masonic fraternity.

JAMES LESTER was born in Adair County, Ky., September 15, 1810. His father, Thomas, was from Pittsylvania County, Va., and mother, Isabella (Hay) Lester, was also from Virginia. The father was a farmer and surveyor, and came to Kentucky in 1792, where he married. He was deputy sheriff, and under his brother-in-law, Dryden, assisted in the survey of the Cumberland River, and later farmed in Clark and Washington Counties, Ind., where he died. His widow died a few years later. They were parents of ten children, three living. James is the fourth child. At seventeen, he began learning the stone-cutter's trade, at Louisville, after completing which, in 1829, he went to the lead mines in Galena, Ill., through the Black Hawk country; then returned to Louisville, worked on a canal for a season, and then in line of his trade, finished the portico on the State capitol at Frankfort. He next engaged for four years in the liquor business; then in the dry goods business at Mississippi County, Mo. The flood of 1844, compelled him to move his stock on a store-boat, with which he came to Eddyville, in 1846. He rented a room in which he moved his stock. In his business undertakings he met with eminent success, now being one of the largest property owners in Eddyville. May 11, 1837, he united in marriage with Mary Jane Applegate, of Clark County, Ind. They were parents of eleven children. Of these, George C., who was born in Norfolk, Mo., March 20, 1842, is now in business with his father; he was married June 23, 1861, to Julia Cable, of Louisville, Ky. She was exceedingly proficient in music, and a true Christian lady. She passed away January 18, 1884. George Lester is a Presbyterian. Mary M. I. Lester, present postmistress of Eddyville, married Edward Baker, an Englishman, who came to America in 1857. During the war, Mr. Baker served in Company B, Third Kentucky Cavalry, Federal service; was severely wounded, and died October 4, 1876, from the effects. They had four children. The Lesters, senior and junior, were stanch Republicans, and Union men during the war. The father, through his influence with the Federal authorities, saved the city from a bombardment, and was of great service in many ways to his country. The son, although a cripple, recruited a company, but was not permitted to enter the service.

JOHN LONG was born in Culpeper County, Va., December 5, 1791. When five years old his father moved to Nelson County, Ky. At twenty or twenty-two John Long volunteered in the war of 1812, under Capt. Martin H. Wickliff, Col. Rennick, Gen. Harrison, Fourth regiment, Fifth Brigade, under Gen. Shelby; went from Newport, Ky., to Lake Erie, crossing the Ohio River at Cincinnati, and Lake Erie into Canada, about five miles from Fort Moldon; pursued the Blackfeet Indians through Amherstburg to the Moravian towns, where was fought the battle of the Thames, where Tecumseh was killed; he saw the dead Indian chief. Mr. Long came home in 1813; was in the service three months. He returned to Nelson County, where he lived until 1815, when he came to Eddyville, then the county seat of Livingston County. In June, 1827, he married Maria Goodall in Eddyville; she was born in Danville, Ky. In 1872 he was the last survivor of the first settlers of Eddyville. William H. Long was born March 14, 1828, in Eddyville, Caldwell, now Lyon County, and is the eldest child in a family of eight children born to John and Maria Long, whose sketch appears above. William H. was reared in the town of Eddyville and secured his education in the common schools. At about sixteen years of age, he began clerking in his father's store, where he remained until eighteen. He then went to Cincinnati: there he was salesman for an uncle, and remained nearly a year; then returned to Eddyville and entered the store of J. G. & M. M. Lyon, and was employed by the latter to take his place while he went to the Mexican war. Up to 1855, he was engaged in clerking for various parties, when he opened a dry goods store and continued the business until after the breaking out of the war. During the war he was provost marshal under the United States, and arrested deserters, etc. In November, 1866, he moved to Tennessee Rolling Mills in Lyon County, and was with Hillman Bro. & Sons, later with D. Hillman & Sons, and remained with them until they closed their works in 1878. They had three stores which Mr. Long kept the books and purchased for. While with them the present railroad was built, and Mr. Long shipped the first stock of goods over the line to Eddyville. In 1878 he returned to Eddyville and opened his present store, under the firm name of Long & Holloway, and carries a general stock: Mr. Long occupies a beautiful residence, on a hill overlooking the town. Of his brothers and sisters, there are but two of the family living, our subject, and James T. Long, of Yates City, Knox Co., Ill., a gentleman of great ability and of national prominence in the temperance cause, having visited many parts of the Union, lecturing and otherwise using his influence for the promotion of the temperance cause. Mr. Long made his start by buying a bankrupt stock of goods on credit; he has made everything by his own industry. Mr. Long was reared a Democrat, as was his father, but changed their views when the first gun was fired on the old flag, and has since been a stanch Republican. February 9, 1853, he married Julia A. Prince, of Caldwell County. To them were born three children, two living—John E. and Helen M., now Mrs. George Locker of Birmingham. Mrs. Long died May 6, 1861, she was a member of the Baptist Church and a devout Christian. October 21, 1862, Mr. Long married Mary L. White, of Evansville, Ind. They have eight children living: Nellie N., Addie B., Maria Lillian, Luie D., Grace Ione, William H., Carrie May and Ruby. Mr. Long was an Odd Fellow.

GEN. HYLAN B. LYON was born in Lyon County, Ky., February 22, 1836. His grandfather, Mathew Lyon, was born in Ireland about 1750. At eight years of age, he ran away from home, and took passage in a vessel for America; arriving in America the captain of the vessel sold him to a Vermont farmer for a yoke of oxen, to pay passage money, which Lyon soon refunded to the farmer from earnings at the printer's trade. By correct deportment and industry, he acquired distinction and wealth, and was sent from Vermont to congress. There he opposed the foreign policy of President Adams, and delivered a speech of such bitter denunciation that he was fined $1,000, and imprisoned. Vermont endorsed his course, and while yet in prison elected him to another term in congress (the $1,000 with the interest has since been returned to his heirs). Finishing his term in congress about 1799, Mr. Lyon came to Eddyville, Ky.; two years afterward returned to Vermont and brought out a colony, and at the same time a printing press, and started a paper. He built government gun-boats; operated a nail factory and engaged extensively in shipping between New Orleans and Eddyville. He was elected to the State and afterward to the national legislature, serving in Kentucky from 1803 to 1811, when he was appointed Indian agent, or as then called, factor, among the Cherokees in Arkansas; was sent by that territory in 1822, as its first delegate to congress, but died en route. His remains were brought to Eddyville and there buried. His (Matthew's) wife was Beulah, daughter of Gov. Chittenden, of Vermont. They had seven children, of whom Chittenden Lyon was elected to congress, and in honor of whom Lyon County was named; Matthew, Jr., father of subject, was born in Vermont, and came to Kentucky in 1801; was captain of State militia, and represented his district in State senate. He married Elizabeth Martin, a native of Vermont, and the union was blessed with eight children, Hylan B., being next to the youngest. Both parents died when Hylan B. was yet a child (the father in 1839 and mother in 1844). Hylan B. was left a large estate, which his guardian, Fred. H. Skinner, applied in securing him a liberal education. After the common schools, he attended the Masonic University of Kentucky, at La Grange, Cumberland College at Princeton, and at sixteen years of age was admitted as a cadet at West Point, from which he was graduated in 1856, being the nineteenth in a class of forty-eight. Soon after he was brevet second lieutenant of Second Artillery, and was assigned to duty at Fort Myers during the Seminole war, and there first met Gen. Hancock. At the close of the war he was promoted to full rank of second lieutenant of Third Artillery, and ordered to Ft. Huyma, Cal. After one year was ordered to Washington Territory, where he was in two battles with the Indians. During that expedition he witnessed an act of treachery on the part of Col. Wright wholly uncalled for. Chief Qualshan, the Indian commander, was sent a polite invitation to visit the soldiers' camp; complying with which he with his wife were seized and in ten minutes hanged. In 1859, Gen. Lyon was a volunteer with Col. John Miller's expedition opening a wagon road from Walla Walla to Ft. Benton. He was detailed to a special duty with a Flat-head guide, who deserted him among the hostile Blackfeet; was captured, but was saved by addressing them in their own tongue. Returning to Ft. Vancouver, he secured a leave of absence and returned home; while there the civil war broke out, and he was appointed first lieutenant of Third Artillery, but resigned and raised Company F, Third Kentucky Infantry, and went into the Confederate service, which was detached from the regiment, and organized into an independent battery known as Lyon's—afterward as Cobb's Battery, which the general himself equipped. He was promoted in January, 1862, to lieutenant-colonel, Eighth Kentucky Infantry; commanded that regiment at Ft. Donelson, and was there taken prisoner; first confined in Camp Morton at Indianapolis, then at Camp Chase, Ohio, and lastly with other Confederate officers was taken to Ft. Warren, Mass., and was exchanged. His regiment was reorganized as the Eighth Kentucky, and he was made colonel. He was with Van Dorn against Grant at Coffeyville, Champion Hill, etc.; was assigned to Pemberton and guarded his retreat to Vicksburg; was in the siege of that place, but with 250 of his men escaped; joined Johnston, who attempted to relieve Vicksburg; failing in this went to Jackson, Miss., from whence after a severe battle fell back and went into camp at Meridian, Miss. Lyon was placed by Gen. Bragg in command of two regiments of cavalry under Wheeler, in the rear of Longstreet's army at Knoxville; was placed in command of Bragg's artillery immediately after the battle of Missionary Ridge, during the retreat of Bragg, and saved the artillery from capture. He was next placed in charge of cavalry belonging to Forrest in Mississippi in 1864; then assigned to command in western Kentucky and Tennessee, his special duty being to gather provisions and men to facilitate a raid by Hood, but which failing he with 800 men retreated south and regained Forrest's command in Mississippi. Near the close of the war, Gen. Lyon was surprised in his tent, and taken prisoner by strategy by a young Lieut. Lyon, of the Fifteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry; the General succeeded in killing the Lieutenant and making his escape. After the close of the war, Gen. Lyon went with Gov. Harris of Tennessee to Mexico, intending to join Maximilian, but instead united with a civil engineer corps; was in Mexico nearly a year. In the winter of 1865–66 returned to Eddyville. After farming for a while he was one of the lessees of the State Penitentiary, and cleared as his share of the profits $150,000. He now manages his various farms, and does a mercantile business in Eddyville. He was recently appointed one of the commissioners to build a branch penitentiary, the location of which he secured for Eddyville. General Lyon has been twice married; his first wife, Laura O'Hara, to whom he was married in 1861, died in 1865, leaving one son: Hylan F., now deceased; his second wife was Grace Machen, to whom he was married in August, 1869, died in 1873, leaving four children; Grace, Frank, Hugh and Earnest.

EX-UNITED STATES SENATOR, WILLIS B. MACHEN was born April 5, 1810, in Caldwell, now Lyon County, Ky. His parents, Henry and Nancy (Tarrant) Machen, came from South Carolina in 1809, located on a farm near where subject now resides. The father was a prosperous farmer, and a man of much energy and good sense. His death occurred in 1860; that of his wife in 1852. There are only two of their children living—subject, and Frank, of Princeton, Ky. The Machens are the out-growth of intermarriages on one side of Huguenots and Irish, and Scotch and English on the other. Many of the ancestral connection, of Mr.

Machen served the colonies with distinction during the war of Independence, among others was his great-grandfather Woods, who was killed by the Tories, and whose death was severely avenged by his brother, Col. Woods, of South Carolina. Mr. Machen's early training was that common to farmer boys, attending the county schools in the winter and working on the farm in summer, but at the age of twenty entered Cumberland College, Princeton, Ky. Leaving school, he engaged in the manufacture of iron with C. C. Cobb, in Livingston County, in which he was engaged for seven years, and in 1838 entered the mercantile business with no capital but a good name; meeting with reverses he failed three years after, but paid all debts, &c. He then went to contracting and building turnpikes at which he was successful, but being severely hurt while thus engaged, he withdrew from hard labor, and in 1843, began the study of law; was admitted to the bar, and almost immediately built up a large clientage, practicing until 1850 in both Lyon and Caldwell Counties, when he retired to assume the management of a farm he had purchased where he now resides. His fine brick residence is situated on a small hill, at the foot of which runs the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, and the Cumberland River, and on either side not over a mile distant are the towns of Eddyville and Kuttawa. In 1849 Mr. Machen was a member of the convention that framed the present constitution of Kentucky, and in 1853 defeated his popular opponent, George W. Barbour, for the State senate. He was elected to the lower house in 1855–60–61. After the outbreak of the war he was elected by the convention while at Russellville, a member of the Provisional State Government, and served as chairman of that body for some months. He was then elected a member of the Confederate congress by soldiers in the field and residents of his district, and served two terms; was re-elected by the soldiers in the field alone the second time, and was a member of that body at the close of the war, when he made his escape to Canada. He was soon after joined by his family, but was pardoned in three months by President Andrew Johnson, and returned home. In 1872, upon the death of Garret Davis he was first appointed and then elected to fill his unexpired term in the United States senate. In 1870, he was very strongly urged to accept the nomination for governor, but declined as there was a question as to his eligibility. He has since refused to allow his name to be used before conventions for same office, although indorsed by many of the State papers. In 1882, he was appointed by Gov. Blackburn one of the State railroad commissioners, which position he held two years. Mr. Machen was first married to Margaret A. Lyon, youngest daughter of Chittenden and Nancy Lyon. Two children of this union are still living. His second wife was Eliza N. Dobbins of Eddyville. His present wife, Victoria T. Mims, he married in 1859. They are blessed with five children: Frank P., Willis B., Charles V., Minnie, now Mrs. A. D. Sayers, of Alabama, and Marjorie, his youngest child.

MATTHEW C. MARSHALL, merchant, Kuttawa, son of John W. and Martha (Gracey) Marshall, was born February 3, 1847, in Eddyville, Ky., the youngest of thirteen children. The father, a leading wealthy merchant of Eddyville, was identified with all public enterprises and a member of the Masonic fraternity. December 8, 1822, married Miss Martha Gracey. This lady is the daughter of George and Mary (Patton) Gracey. She was born September 13, 1806, in Eddyville; is still living, and is the oldest resident of the county. Of her children, there are six living, viz.: Euclid, a telegraph operator in Bowling Green, Ky.; John, a farmer in Lyon County; Henry, of Kuttawa, a telegraph operator; Matthew, a merchant in Kentucky, and our principal subject; Mrs. Anna Poindexter, Mrs. Nellie Espie. Mrs. Marshall, with her husband, before his death, were members of the Methodist Church. Matthew C. Marshall's early life was spent in attending school. At fifteen years of age he went to Camp Boone, Tenn., to enlist in Confederate service; was there rejected, owing to age and size, but being determined, again subsequently went to Bowling Green, and was there a messenger for Gen. Albert S. Johnston; served with him until surrender of Ft. Donelson; when he was given a pass and returned home. Upon returning to Eddyville he accepted a situation as a salesman with James O'Hara, where he remained until 1869, when he accepted a position with the Mississippi Railroad as assistant agent at Vaiden, Miss., holding that position till June, 1870, when he went to Evansville, Ind., taking a position with Morgan, Read & Co., wholesale boots and shoes. Then retiring from business, subject engaged with Simmons, Dixon & Co., wholesale boots and shoes, where he remained until February, 1873, when he returned to Eddyville and bought the stock of dry goods, etc., belonging to the estate of James O'Hara, and continued there till January, 1881, when he moved his stock to Kuttawa, and has since conducted the business, carrying a general stock of dry goods, boots, shoes, etc. July 20, 1876, he married Miss Helen M. Shelby, of Lyon County, daughter of Clark and Helen Shelby, both parents deceased. Subject has one child, Miss Mary P., at home. Subject and wife are members of the Episcopal Church, and he is now the lay reader of the parish. Has been town trustee of Eddyville two years, and while in that position suppressed the sale of liquor. He is a member of A. F. & A. M., and holds the position of reporter in K. of H. He is also one of the vice-presidents of the State Sunday-school Association of Kentucky for this county, and aside from his business, this subject demands most of his attention, and in this, as in all educational and other public enterprises, he takes a leading and prominent part.

MARCUS P. MOLLOY was born November 29, 1845, in Caldwell, now Lyon County, Ky., and is a son of Samuel B. and Maria J. (Reed) Molloy, also of Caldwell County. The father was principally engaged in farming, but for several years before his death dealt in leaf tobacco. He died June 1, 1856; his widow April 4, 1877; she was a member of the Methodist Church. They were parents of five children. At twenty-three, Marcus P. came to town from the farm, and took a position as salesman for N. T. Braswell; was in the mercantile trade some time until August, 1873, when he was elected county clerk, and has held the office by election continuously since. He is a member of the city school board, of the Masonic and K. of H. fraternities, and with his wife a member of the Methodist Church. Mr. Molloy is a leading citizen and stands high in the estimation of the public. January 14, 1874, he was united in marriage with Maria A. Wilcox, of Lyon County. They are the parents of one child—Tylene.

SAMUEL C. MOLLOY was born August 3, 1860, in Caldwell County, on a farm near Princeton, a son of Warren P. and Mary E. (Cash) Molloy. The father was a physician, a native of Caldwell County, where he was reared, and where he resided until his death, December 4, 1876, his widow surviving until the following 4th of July. They were both members of the Methodist Church. They were parents of six children, four of whom are living. Samuel C. is next to the youngest child; was reared on the farm; attended school at Princeton and Eddyville, where he received a good literary education. At eighteen years he left school and entered the mercantile establishment of M. C. Marshall, Eddyville, as a salesman, continuing thus for two years, when he again attended a five months' term of school at Eddyville, and then engaged with A. Hunter & Son, Eddyville, until January, 1881, when he again engaged with M. C. Marshall, until May 16, 1882, when he opened his present drug establishment in Kuttawa, under the firm name of Molloy & Molloy. They now have a large and well-arranged line of goods, together with an extensive and ever-increasing trade, a result of the affable bearing and just dealing of Samuel C., who is sole manager of the business. November 7, 1883, he married Annie Coleman, of Smithland, Ky., a daughter of William Coleman. They are pleasantly situated at Kuttawa. In all public enterprises, etc., Mr. Molloy takes an active and leading part. He is a young man of sterling business qualities and high social standing, widely reputed for his energy and business enterprise, and bids fair in the near future to take rank among the first in financial and business circles, not only in his county, but throughout western Kentucky.

BRUCE L. MURPHY, merchant, was born June 15, 1846, in Dixon County, Tenn., and is a son of Thomas and Sarah (Bartee) Murphy. The father was a native of Pennsylvania, and mother of Tennessee. The father came to Tennessee when a child, with a friend of his family, was reared in Tennessee, and by occupation was forgeman in a refining furnace; he is now engaged at farming in Lyon County, Ky. The mother died in 1864. She was a member in high standing of the Methodist Church South. They were parents of eight children, three of whom are still living—Bruce L., Florence, now Mrs. J. W. Evans, of Kuttawa, and Jesse J., in Henry County, Tenn. Bruce L. was reared in Tennessee until seven years of age, when he came to Lyon County, Ky., with his parents, locating at the Tennessee Rolling Mills, in Lyon County. There, by the improvement of the facilities the locality afforded, he gained a good literary and thorough business education. At twenty years of age he began life for himself by farming on a rented farm, following that for three years. Then he learned the blacksmith and wagon trade, and after learning the trade, in December, 1872, came to Kuttawa and opened a shop and built a residence—the first business place and first residence built in the town; carried on this business about ten years, when he sold out and engaged in his present business of grocer, under the firm name of Murphy &

Mays. In 1866 Mr. Murphy married Maggie Brown, of Missouri, a native of Tennessee. They are both members of the Methodist Church in good standing. They have three children living—James, Jesse and Bruce L., Jr., all at home. Mr. Murphy has held the offices of town marshal and town trustee. He is a strong advocate of prohibition, and in politics affiliates with the Democratic party.

WILLIAM C. O'HARA. James O'Hara, who came from Ireland in an early day, settled at Pittsburg, and was the first manufacturer of glass. He sent back to Ireland and brought out subject's grandfather, John O'Hara. The latter left Pittsburg and came to Princeton, Ky., conducted a tanyard and became magistrate and sheriff of the county under the old constitution of the State. He also lived in Eddyville awhile, and accumulated a good deal of land, negroes, etc., and was locally very prominent. He was a man of thorough education and scholarly attainments. William C. O'Hara was born June 16, 1851, in Eddyville, Lyon Co., Ky., a son of Reuben and Mary A. (Lyon) O'Hara. The father was an attorney at Princeton, Caldwell County, finally permanently located at Eddyville, Lyon County, and was the first county attorney for Lyon County after it was formed. Giving up the practice of law he engaged extensively in mercantile business with his brother-in-law, James N. Gracey; while refusing public office he was still a strong Democratic partisan, and a leader in politics, and about the close of the war, September 8, 1864, he was shot and killed (while in citizen's dress), by Federal soldiers in the streets of Eddyville. In life he was a member in high standing of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church and a prominent Mason. There were six children, all of whom are dead but William C. One of the daughters married F. A. Wilson (see sketch), and another married Gen. H. B. Lyon (whose sketch is also given). William C. was given all the advantages the schools of Eddyville afforded, and was then sent to Russellville, where he finished the junior year. At eighteen years of age he was compelled to leave school on account of his health failing. After returning home he went into the mercantile business with his brother James for two years, during which time he employed himself studying law, and later entered the practice, which he continued six years. His health again failing he retired from practice. He was elected school commissioner for four years from 1876, and for three years was deputy sheriff and master commissioner under J. C. Holloway. In January, 1883, he was sheriff one year by appointment; in January, 1884, was again appointed sheriff, which office he still holds.

ARCHIBALD D. PURDY, M. D., was born April 28, 1852, in Hopkins County, Ky. When fourteen years old, with 30 cents, and very scant clothes, and unable to read or write, he left his uncle against the protest of his mother; working by the month and trading, he was enabled to buy 100 acres of land, upon which he moved his mother, brother and sister. At sixteen he went to Charlestown, Hopkins County, and boarded with M. M. Lynch and attended school. Then he clerked for M. M. Lynch eight months, and with his earnings attended school another season; then taught and attended schools alternately for some time then clerked for Lynch two years, and studied during that time. He again taught school in Hopkins County, and read medicine eighteen months. He originated a short system of mathematics which he traveled with and taught eighteen months. In 1882 he graduated from the medical department of the Tennessee University, and in April of the same year came to Kuttawa with just $50, borrowed money, and three other established physicians to compete with. He has now 460 families upon which he attends. He is a member of Suwanee Lodge, A. F. & A. M., Kuttawa. Dr. Purdy is entirely a self-made man and occupies a high social and financial position.

NOAH N. RICE was born in Hopkins, now Webster County, Ky., December 23, 1830, a son of James R. and Elizabeth (Nichols) Rice, natives of North Carolina and Kentucky, respectively. The father served an apprenticeship to the carriage-maker's trade, but in later years gave his attention to farming pursuits. The parents had eight children, all of whom grew to maturity, and of whom there are five living: N. N., Laban M., Mary, Nancy and James L. Our subject remained in his native county until becoming of age, when he removed to Caldwell County, where he was engaged in farming until 1867, when he came to this county, and has since resided here engaged principally in the mercantile, saw-mill, and tobacco business. He has served eight years as justice of the peace, and is the present police judge of Lamasco. He married Miss Mary A. Kevil, a daughter of Thomas and Sarah Kevil. Of this union there are seven children now living: Sarah E., now Mrs. J. J. Nall; James T.; Fannie A., wife of John W. Jackson, of Caldwell County; Macie A.; Manson K.; Isabella L. and William C. The squire is a man of public spirit and is highly respected by the community.

WILLIAM J. RICE was born March 6, 1842, in Spencer County, Ind., and is the third child in a family of nine children born to John C. and Jennie (McDonald) Rice. The father was born and reared in Fayette County, Ky., but moved with his father, John L., to Trenton, Todd County, and resided there until his father's death. He moved to Indiana, where William J. was born; resided there five years; returned to Kentucky and in 1870 went to Texas, where two years later he died. His wife died in August, 1869. William J. was principally reared in Todd County, and well educated. When twenty-eight years of age, he was given charge of his uncle's (Clay Rice) business for three years. December 27, 1868, he was united in marriage with Sarah C. Martin of Crittenden County, and, after five years. moved on his present place. He owns 426 acres of land, 300 under cultivation, upon which he has many substantial improvements. In October, 1864, he enlisted in Company M, Seventeenth Kentucky Cavalry, and served until the close of the war. He is a strong Republican; member of the Fredonia Masonic Lodge 327, and with his wife a Baptist. Mr. and Mrs. Rice have five children: Henry C., Sarah J., Walter J., Mary Z., and James W.

W. C. RICE, Lyon County, was born March 5, 1843, in Todd County, Ky., and is the third child in a family of seven children born to Edmond R. and Eveline (Goran) Rice of Todd County. He was reared on a farm, poorly educated, and at seventeen years of age enlisted under Capt. Wilcox, Confederate service; was taken prisoner at Fort Donelson. but made his escape and went to California, where he remained until 1865, and then returned, and went to farming in Lyon County. In 1872 he bought his present magnificent farm of 437 acres, splendidly improved, and has since added 158 acres. He is a general farmer and stock raiser. October 28, 1868, he married Susan Martin, of Crittenden County, Ky. They have five children, viz.: Henry E., Eulah E., Willie S., John F., and Reginald. Mr. Rice is now an extensive dealer in leaf tobacco.

REGINALD L. SHELBY was born in Lyon County, Ky., July 23, 1861, and is a son of Clark M. and Helen (Lyon) Shelby. The father was born in Montgomery County, Tenn.; the mother was a sister of Gen. H. B. Lyon, whose sketch is given elsewhere. The founder of the Shelby family in America was a Welshman, who immigrated to America about 1740, and settled in Maryland. He had two sons, the younger—Evan Shelby—the progenitor of our subject's family, was a captain in the English army during the French and Indian war of 1754; was later captain in the Provincial army, which reduced Fort DuQuesne, now Pittsburgh, in 1758. In 1772, he went West, and in 1774, commanded a company under Lewis and Dunmore against the Indians in the Scioto River country; was in the sanguinary battle of October 10, 1774, at the mouth of the Great Kanawha, and near the close of the action became commanding officer; in 1776, was made a major, under Col. Christian, against the Cherokees, and in 1779, led a strong expedition against the Indians on the Tennessee River, destroying their town, etc., at the precise period of Clark's victory at Vincennes. He (Evan Shelby) was father of three sons: Isaac, Evan and John. The eldest son, Isaac, was a colonel in the American army during the war of Independence; was twice governor of Kentucky and declined the offer of secretary of war in Monroe's cabinet. Evan Shelby settled in Montgomery County, Tenn., and his son John, was one of the commissioners that laid out the counties of Tennessee, one of which is named after him. John's son, Clark M., the father of Reginald L. (our subject) came to Kentucky in 1847, when a young man, from Stewart County, Tenn., where he had been extensively engaged in the manufacture of iron, but upon coming to Lyon County, located in Eddyville and bought a large plantation, having brought with him a large number of slaves, which he lost during the war. He then sold his place and bought a beautiful fertile tract of land consisting of 1,000 acres in the Fredonia Valley, with a large, fine residence and surrounding lawn tastefully kept. Mr. Shelby was a polished, scholarly gentleman, who shunned public life and found his greatest pleasure with his family and well stocked library. His death occurred October 5, 1871. His widow survived until October 20, 1875. They were parents of nine children, only four of whom are now living: Maud, now wife of J. G. Leech, of Caldwell County; Helen M., wife of M. C. Marshall, of Kuttawa, Ky., whose sketch is published elsewhere, Reginald L., and May L., a highly cultured lady, residing on the homestead with her brother, Reginald L., who bought the homestead and manages the large plantation; he is doing an extensive tobacco and mercantile business aside from his farm interests. October 13, 1881, he was united in marriage with Nannie Marshall of Evansville, Ind. They are blessed with two children: Eveline and Alford.

JOHN O. SHROPSHIRE, was born in Greenup County, this State, January 17, 1834, a son of John W. and Nancy (Campbell) Shropshire; both of them were of Virginia birth. The father came to this county in 1847, and for eighteen months was employed in the Tennessee Rolling Mills. The parents had eight children, of whom two are living: John O. and Joseph H. The former came here with his father, but in 1850 removed to St. Louis, Mo., where he remained four years, after which he returned, and up to 1878 worked as a heater in the Rolling Mills. At the latter date he went to Cincinnati, Ohio, but shortly afterward returned, and has since been employed in the mills. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and is a gentleman of substantial worth in the community. He married Ann G. Palmer, and has a family of thirteen children: Rebecca, Ida M., John H., Joseph H., Maggie B., William, A. Laura, Grace, Minnie, Nettie, James, C. Edna and George K.

ALFRED J. SILLS, Lyon County, was born in Trigg County, this State, March 11, 1848, the eldest son of Lemuel and Elizabeth (Wallace) Sills, natives respectively of North Carolina and Tennessee. The father was a farmer, but at various times was in the employ of the Tennessee Rolling Mills, situated in Lyon County on the Cumberland River. His widow still survives him, as do also the nine children of the family: Fatie, A. J., Elbert G., Francis L., Emma C., Charlie H., Douglas, Blanche C. and Mattie M. Our subject came with his parents to Lyon County, when about four years old. At nine years of age he was employed by the Tennessee Rolling Mills, and has since been connected with those great industrial works, being the present superintendent of them. His success in life has been due to his own efforts, which have been sufficient to place him among the respected and most enterprising of citizens. He married Mary Ovey, and has a family of five children: William L., Alfred O., Wilfred C., Maude M. and Eddie K. Mr. Sills is a member of the A. F. & A. M., Joppa Lodge, No. 167.

FREDERICK H. SKINNER was born in Eddyville, Ky., where he still resides, June 22, 1815. He descends from and is connected by marriage with distinguished Kentucky families, and some of her most renowned historic characters. His father, Henry Skinner, was a native of Baltimore, Md., and was there educated for the medical profession. He was appointed surgeon in the regular army, and about 1810 was stationed at Fort Massac, Ill. At Eddyville, Ky., he married Aurelia Lyon, a daughter of Matthew Lyon (whose sketch is published in connection with that of Gen. Hylan B. Lyon elsewhere), having made her acquaintance at Washington City, whilst her father was a member of congress, and became a resident of Eddyville, Ky. He retained his army position up to the time of his death, which occurred June 22, 1819. His widow survived him but two years. This union had given two children—Beulah L. and F. H., the subject of this sketch. The father of Henry Skinner was Frederick, a native of England, born in 1750. He came to America in his youth and married a Miss Stuart, of Virginia, and afterward located in Baltimore, Md., in the vicinity of which he engaged in agricultural pursuits and was also connected with business enterprises in the city. His family consisted of six children, three daughters and three sons; one of the latter, John S. Skinner, rose to positions of eminent trust and distinction; he edited various agricultural and stock journals at different times, in Baltimore, and for many years was postmaster of that city. In 1856 he was appointed first assistant postmaster general, which position he occupied until his death, two years later. F. H. Skinner, the subject of this sketch, was four years old at his father's death; he was taken charge of and reared by his uncle, Matthew Lyon, who sent him to the country schools, and afterward to Princeton, where the youth obtained a competent business education, and thereafter, until becoming of age, filled the position of book-keeper and salesman for the firm of Lyon & Cobb. At twenty-one he went East and purchased a stock of goods for the new firm of Lyon & Skinner—the senior member being Chittenden Lyon. The firm continued a successful business until the death of Mr. Lyon, when Mr. Skinner assumed control of the entire business, together with its heavy mail contracts. Mr. Skinner gave the people a daily instead of a tri-weekly mail, as called for in the contract, running very successfully a line of four-horse coaches on the route between Smithland and Nashville, Tenn., and controlled this route, besides many other mail contracts throughout the First Congressional District, until selling out at the completion of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, in 1860. In 1854 Mr. Skinner began the study of law, and was admitted to the bar the following year; and the same year was elected county judge, a position he held for sixteen years. Upon his retirement from the judgeship he gave his attention to business enterprises, doing a general brokerage business and dealing in agricultural implements. He has served the people as town trustee, and was a justice of the peace when the county was first organized. He is a member in high standing of the Masonic fraternity, belonging to the Royal Arch Chapter. His influence is actively given in behalf of prohibition, and enterprises calculated for the good of the general masses received his willing and material support. He possesses fine farm property in the county to the extent of 1,200 acres, and owns a large amount of town property. June 16, 1842, he married Helen Catlett, a daughter of Thomas and Isabella (Helm) Catlett. Her father was a farmer but interested himself also in mercantile business. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Skinner has been blessed with four children, of whom three are living: Thomas C. (in business at Kuttawa, whose sketch is published), Aurelia wife of W. T. Bartley, of St. Louis, Mo. and Hylan. Their daughter, Isabella Skinner deceased wife of G. V. Bryan, died a year after her marriage.

THOMAS C. SKINNER, of the firm of Irwin & Skinner, Kuttawa, and son of F. H. Skinner, was born in Eddyville, Lyon Co., Ky., June 14, 1844. He attended the local schools until thirteen years old, when he went to Bethel College, Tennessee. At the age of seventeen he enlisted in the Confederate service, and served until the close of the war. He participated in the battle of Fort Donelson, where he was taken prisoner and held on Johnson's Island in Lake Erie, for six months. After being exchanged he returned to his command and was appointed a cadet in the Confederate army, and assigned to duty with Gen. H. B. Lyon, as aid, with the rank and pay of second lieutenant. He took part in the siege of Vicksburg, where he with Gen. Lyon's command made his escape. He was wounded at Guntown. Lieut. Skinner participated, with his command, in their numerous sanguinary battles, until their final surrender at Columbus, Miss. After the close of the war, he returned home and read law and graduated in this branch of study from the Lexington law school in 1867, as an essential to a thorough business training. He then went with his father into the commission business in Eddyville, until the city of Kuttawa was laid out, when he moved there and entered business under the present firm name. They carry a general stock, and enjoy a flourishing business. June 23, 1869, Mr. Skinner married Bell Anderson, youngest daughter of Gov. Charles Anderson, whose biography will be found elsewhere. This union has been blessed with four children: Charline, Eliza, Marion and Bartley. Politically Mr. Skinner has always been a Democrat, until 1884, when he supported the Republican candidate for president, because of his protective tariff views, and will always hereafter affiliate with the party of protection. He and wife are members of the Episcopal Church.

CALEB STONE, brother of the Hon. William J. Stone, was born September 29, 1826, in Lyon County, Ky. He is the eldest of the two sons and was his father's main assistance in opening a new farm from the raw prairie. He remained with his father until twenty-three years old, when in July, 1849, he married Lucy Cruce of Crittenden County, Ky., and in a year and a half bought 250 acres of land in the woods, where his now magnificent farm is located. He now owns 470 acres of fertile land in the celebrated Fredonia Valley, 300 acres of which are under cultivation. He has built a large residence, fitted with every convenience; has a carefully selected orchard of choice varieties of fruits, and in farming raises corn, wheat, tobacco, hay in large quantities, aside from many other varieties of grain. He makes a specialty of raising fine stock; has the premium short-horn bull of western Kentucky, valued at $800, and a picture of which was on exhibition at the New Orleans World's Fair of 1885; he also makes a specialty of the Poland China hogs of which he has many fine specimens. With the exception of about $1,000, Mr. Stone, with the assistance of his frugal wife, has made his large property by indefatigable industry, good management and keen trading. As a citizen no one holds a more respected place in the public esteem than Mr. Stone, and in personal bearing he is genial and cordial. Mr. and Mrs. Stone were blessed with two children: Sarah J. deceased; and George, who owns a good farm of his own, but with his wife Susan (Grace) Stone and their little son, Rubie, are living with his parents on the homestead.

HON. WILLIAM J. STONE, M.C. The paternal and maternal grandparents of Mr. Stone came to Kentucky from Spartanburgh District, South Carolina. The former, Caleb Stone, with his family in 1806, and the latter, William Killen, with his family in 1802, both located in Fredonia Valley, in Lyon County, where Mr. Stone and many others of their descendants still reside. Leasel Stone was four years old when his father, Caleb, moved to Kentucky. He was reared on a farm and eventually became a large land owner. He was united in marriage with Nancy Killen, and with her was a member of the Baptist Church; his death occurred January 11, 1872. His widow survived until November, 1877. They were parents of six children, of whom two were sons, viz.: Caleb (whose sketch is published) and Hon. William J. Stone, who was born June 26, 1841, at the homestead where he now resides. He received a thorough school training at the schools of the neighborhood and at the Cadiz Institute. At the beginning of the late civil war, he assisted in recruiting several companies and enlisted in 1861, under Capt. Wilcox, First Kentucky Cavalry; was under Gen. Forrest at the battle of Fort Donelson, and was with that part of his command which escaped before the surrender under the same general; he was in the battle of Shiloh and the retreat to Corinth. After exchange of prisoners taken at Fort Donelson, the company to which he belonged was reorganized and attached to the Eighth Kentucky Infantry, of which Mr. Stone was made orderly-sergeant, and with his company did duty in northern Mississippi five months; while stationed there with others, was but a few moments too late to take Gen. U. S. Grant a prisoner at Holly Springs—the General having just evacuated the place. After five months his company was transferred to the 5th Kentucky Cavalry; and placed under Col. D. H. Smith, and participated in the battles of Chickamauga and Missionary Ridge; was with the celebrated John Morgan during his raid into Indiana and Ohio, and with Morgan at the time of his capture in Ohio, but he (Mr. Stone) escaped. June 11, 1864, Mr. Stone was made a captain by John Morgan on account of his proficiency in army tactics and valiant conduct in battle. The next day at Cynthiana he was wounded in the leg, while on a charge inside the Federal lines, and was taken prisoner. He lay in the Federal hospitals three months, it having become necessary to amputate the limb. While Mr. Stone speaks highly of kind treatment by the Federals, it was due to the skill of a Confederate surgeon, permitted with the Southern wounded, that he attributes his recovery, after being given up to die. In May, 1865, Mr. Stone was paroled and returned home, making his home thereafter with his parents, the other children having married and left. In 1867 he was elected a member of the State legislature, and was active in bringing about a conciliatory policy between the two sections late at war; was again elected to the State legislature of 1875–76, and was elected speaker of the house over Hon. J. W. Carney of Louisville, who was supported by the Hon. Joseph Blackburn, Henry Watterson, Col. Adams, et al. In 1883–84 he again represented his district in the same body and was chairman of the Committee on Penitentiaries, and secured the passage of a bill establishing a branch penitentiary, and to prevent the contracting and hiring of convict labor outside the prisons; he used his strong personal influence in this behalf and to secure the location of the penitentiary at Eddyville. In 1884 Mr. Stone was elected a member of the Forty-ninth congress of the United States, defeating the Hon. Oscar Turner, who had served three terms—defeating the Hon. Judge Trimble, Maj. Tice and John R. Grace. At the nominating primary election he received 2,750 votes out of a little over 3,000 cast, still his opponent, Mr. Turner, ran as an independent candidate. Mr. Stone was elected by a plurality over Mr. Turner of 3,063 votes and over Mr. Houston, the Republican candidate, of 3,287. October 29, 1867 Mr. Stone was united in marriage with Cornelia Woodyard, daughter of Thomas B. and Susan (Wetzel) Woodyard of Cynthiana, Ky. This union has been blessed with two children, both girls, Sudie and Willie, both at home. Mr. Stone is a Baptist, in which church he is clerk, and has been moderator or presiding officer of Little River Association for two years. Mrs. Stone is a Methodist.

WILLIAM W. THACKER, Lyon County, was born in Coffee County, Tenn., April 25, 1835, a son of Joel and Rachel (Roper) Thacker; the former a native of South Carolina and the latter of Tennessee. The father was a mechanic but devoted his late years to farm pursuits. The parents of our subject were blessed with thirteen children, eleven of whom are now living. In 1858 Mr. Thacker was married and left Christian County, this State, and spent thirteen years in Mississippi, after which he returned and located in Lyon County. He has always been engaged at the blacksmith trade and carriage business, but he also owns a farm, which he has worked. During the war he served in the Thirty-ninth Mississippi Regiment, with the exception of six months spent in prison, having been captured. He married Miss Tennessee Maum, daughter of Edward L. Maum, now deceased. There are nine children living to this union: Walter L., Addie P., Kate and Eddie, twins; William B. and Harriet, twins; Mary, Ida, and Thomas. Mr. Thacker is a member of the Masonic order and of the Baptist Church; he is one of the most respected and substantial citizens of the county.

LOUIS A. VOGLE was born March 31, 1836, in the city of Brussels, Belgium, and is a son of Gabriel L. and Josephine (Dumortier) Vogle. The father was a native of Alsace, then belonging to France, but lived in Belgium; he was an overseer for a nobleman, for twenty years, and after the nobleman's death, served his sister for two years. He then returned to Alsace, where he took a government contract up to 1852, when he came to America, and settled on a farm near Sellersville, Clark Co., Ind.; was there five years; then moved to Charleston, Ind., where he resided until his death. Louis A. was thoroughly educated in the old country, attended school eleven years, and learned the French, German and English languages perfectly. He began for himself by farming in Clark County, Ind. In 1861, at the commencement of the war, he enlisted in Company I, Twenty-third Indiana Volunteer Infantry as a private; was promoted sergeant-major and served three years, participating in the battles of Ft. Henry, Donelson, and the Atlanta campaign, Kenesaw Mountain, etc. After the close of the war he went to Paducah and was there three years. Then he bought his present farm, located on the Tennessee River, at the Star Lime Works. Beginning with 200 acres entirely unimproved he has cleared and put in cultivation ninety acres; has a peach and apple orchard and also a vineyard; has built a neat cottage residence, which he has surrounded with many adornments; has in operation extensive lime works, known as Star Lime Works and is carrying on a large country mercantile business at the same place. He has been thrice married; first to Mary A. Francis; second to Kate Thompson, who bore him one child—George E., still living with his father; his present wife is Celia E. Nickell, of Lyon County. They have four children: Florence M., Ida R., Minnie and an infant. Mr. Vogle is a member of the Masonic fraternity, K. of H. and Chosen Friends; is postmaster at the town of Star Lime Works.

JAMES W. VINSON was born in Caldwell County, Ky., January 19, 1844, the eldest child of Coleman C. and Permelia A. (Johnson) Vinson, both of whom were natives of this State. The father was a blacksmith by trade but farmed some during late years. He was a son of Ezekiel Vinson of South Carolina. The parents of our subject were blessed with ten children, six of whom survive: James W., William R., Finess C., Thomas E., John W., and David W. Our subject learned the trade of his father and has devoted his life to its prosecution. He also has farm property, which is operated by renters. Mr. Vinson is a member of the Masonic order and of the Baptist Church. He married Miss Lucinda E. Jones, a daughter of Levi Jones, deceased, formerly of this county. This union has given six children, of whom three are living: Isabel L., James A. and Elsie A.

RUSSELL W. WAKE was born August 5, 1834, in Hopkins County, Ky. He is a son of Ambrose, who was a son of John Wake, of Fauqueir County, Va., who came to Kentucky in an early day; was appointed judge of Federal court of Purchase District by Thomas Jefferson, and was accidentally killed by his slave while en route to New Orleans. His son Ambrose studied medicine, graduating from Transylvania University, Lexington, Ky.; practiced in Clark, Christian, Hopkins and Trigg Counties, in which latter he died in 1839, from effects of a sting of a yellow jacket. His wife Alice (Colmus) Wake, was a member of Baptist Church and died in 1858. They had three children, Russell W. being the youngest. He was liberally educated, attending the Franklin, Cumberland and Center Colleges, paying his way by teaching during his vacations. At twenty years of age he began the study of law under G. B. Cook, of Princeton, and was admitted to practice April, 1855. He began the practice in Murray, Calloway County, but soon after came to Ohio County, where he has since remained. Mr. Wake was county attorney for six years, and has been strongly urged to accept other public positions, but declines, etc. He is one of the leading attorneys of Lyon County bar and enjoys a lucrative practice. He is a member of the A. F. & A. M. and K. of H.

H. C. WALLIS was born in Trigg County, this State, March 4, 1836, a son of William and Elizabeth (Wallis) Wallis, both of whom were originally from South Carolina. The father is yet living, a prosperous farmer of Trigg County. The parents were blessed with nine children, six of whom survive. Our subject was reared upon the farm, and in 1855 removed to this county and taught school, and worked at plastering and farming. He commenced in business with a wagon loaded with goods and did a general trading business throughout the country. He has now a large store-house situated near the Trigg County line, a few miles west of Lamasco, where he does a thriving and constantly increasing business. He married Miss Nancy A. Piercy, a daughter of Allen Piercy. Of this union there are three children living; Irvin J., Elizabeth C. and Clara A.

THOMAS J. WATKINS, judge of the county court, was born in Caldwell, now Lyon County, Ky., October 4, 1838. His father, Thomas G. was a native of Franklin County, Ky., and was a farmer by occupation. When about eight years old he came in 1806, with his father, Samuel, to Tennessee (Maury County), and remained until 1814, when the family moved to Caldwell County. Samuel was a farmer also and came from Virginia. Subject's mother's maiden name was Nancy Dyer, of Trigg County, Ky. She was a daughter of John and Martha Dyer. They had six children—Thomas J. is next to the youngest; all are still living. Thomas J. was reared on a farm. He attended the country school and worked on the farm until he was sixteen years of age; then went to Princeton and attended school there ten months; then attended Bethel College, Tennessee, where he graduated in 1859. After leaving school he went to Alabama and taught mathematics as an assistant in the schools at Summit, Blount County, for fifteen months. At the breaking out of the war he married, and in 1861 returned to Kentucky. Then began the study of law. He had no preceptor, but borrowed law books and studied by himself. In 1862 he was examined by two judges and admitted to practice; then spent a year in the South with his wife, and in January, 1864, returned to Eddyville and opened a law office, and has been in the practice since. In August, 1870, he was elected county judge, and re-elected in 1874–78–82; also practiced in the circuit court. January 1, 1861, he married Sarah C. Arnold, of Summit, Blount Co., Ala., daughter of A. W. Arnold, a planter in Alabama and Arkansas. They are the parents of three children—Willie A., now Mrs. T. W. Adams, of Milan, Tenn.; Helen M., wife of R. S. Lander, and Maud E., at home. Judge and Mrs. Watkins are members of the Methodist Church. He is a temperate man, and a member of the K. of H. Judge Watkin's mother died in October, 1860; his father November 27, 1873.

DAVID K. WILLIAMS was born November 8, 1845, in Lyon County, Ky., and is a son of Samuel and Harriet (Doom) Williams. The father was born in South Wales, and at five years of age was brought by his parents to America. They first settled near Columbus, Ohio, but later in Licking County, where he was reared and there his parents died. He learned the iron-worker's trade or "puddling," and in 1835 came to Lyon County. After following his trade for some time he went to farming, his present vocation. With his wife and six of his children he is a member of the Methodist Church. David K. Williams was reared on a farm and assisted his father until nearly of age. He acquired the rudiments of an education through the kindness of Clay Rice, and his uncle David E. Davies, who gave him his board and sent him to school. After teaching a term, with his earnings together with the proceeds of a sale of a horse, which his father had given him when of age, he went to Denison University, at Granville, Ohio, for one year; returning to Rock Castle, Trigg County, he clerked for D. Hillman & Son, and taught school for seven years. He then came to Lyon County and now owns 136 acres of bottom land, all but twenty acres under cultivation. He also owns the livery stable at Kuttawa, and in partnership with T. C. Walker, built a substantial two-story brick store-house in Kuttawa, which they occupy with a stock of groceries, queensware, clothing, etc. Mr. Walker died in April, 1885, and subject bought out the heirs, and now conducts the business alone. September 29, 1875, he married Eliza J. Boughter, of Lyon County. They have four children—Mary E., Charles A., Warren A. and Sam Joe. Mr. Williams is a member of the A. F. & A. M., and secretary of Suwanee Lodge, No. 190. He is also a member of the Baptist Church. His property is entirely the result of the industry and economy, of himself and wife.

FINIS A. WILSON, one of the leading attorneys of Lyon County, and favorably reputed in the profession throughout western Kentucky, was born February 18, 1837, in Caldwell County. His paternal grandfather, Thomas Wilson, came to America from Scotland, with his family, in 1818, and first located on Prince Edward Island, where he remained three years. He then came to the States, locating in Caldwell County, Ky., where he died soon after, in 1821. His son, James Wilson, was born in Scotland, and came with his parents to Caldwell County, where he was reared to farming—his principal business in life. His wife was Amanda Wyatt, of French descent. They were members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and the parents of nine children, of whom Finis A. is the third. He was raised on a farm, attended district schools until seventeen, when he went to Cumberland College, Princeton, from which institution he graduated in 1856. He then studied law in the office of Judge Linsey, at Princeton, and in 1858, was admitted to practice, and formed a partnership with R. W. Wake. He held the office of State's attorney three times, resigning the office to take his seat in the State legislature, to which body he had been elected in August, 1871. With scarcely a week's notice, he contested a seat in the State senate, but was defeated by a small majority, having received in his own county an almost unanimous vote. Mr. Wilson was united in marriage with Florence O'Hara, May 8, 1866; she was a sister of Will O'Hara, whose sketch is published. She was a member of the Presbyterian Church; a lady of fine mental endowments and culture, whose death by accident, February 28, 1883, was mourned by the entire community. In February, 1885, Mr. Wilson and Bettie James were married. Mrs. Wilson is a sister of James L. James, whose sketch is also published. Mr. Wilson has been fairly successful in business, having acquired a large farm, consisting of 400 acres, which is finely improved, near Eddyville. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

OWEN B. WITHERS, M. D., was born in Jefferson, now Oldham County, this State, September 27, 1827, the only son of Hiram B. and Maria W. (Cates) Withers, natives respectively, of Virginia and Kentucky. The father was a physician, graduating in 1819, from the Transylvania University. He served as a colonel in the war of 1812; was only seventeen years old at the time; served on the staff of Col. Degarneth, of Jefferson County; he, with two of his brothers, Charles, aged twenty two, and Valentine, aged twenty, were in Dudley's defeat, but made their escape. Hiram was a son of John Withers, who, with his father, James, and five brothers, served in the war of the Revolution. James was a son of James Withers, who was of English descent. The parents of our subject had four children, of whom the Doctor is the only one now living. The latter was removed when young, to Logan County, Ky., and there read medicine under his father. He afterward attended the Louisville Medical Institute, and later the University of the City of New York. After practicing in New Orleans and in Missouri, he returned East, and continued his medical studies at Philadelphia. Returning to Kentucky, he volunteered for the Mexican war, but stopped in New Orleans, and shortly after came back to his native State, and engaged in the active practice of his profession in various parts of the State, finally coming to Lyon County, where he has since remained and enjoyed a most liberal patronage. He has presided over many medical associations, and has been favored with numberless positions of honor and distinction in those bodies. He married Martha G. Clinton, a daughter of George C. and Susanna F. Clinton. Mrs. Withers died, leaving six children: Granville, S. P., Mary M., Hiram B., Harrison C., John C. B. and Ellwood F. Dr. Withers has been a member of several benevolent societies, and has long been a member of the Catholic Church. Capt. Joshua Cates, the maternal grandfather of Dr. Withers, was in the battle of King's Mountain, under Shelby; three days after that battle, came with Boone to Kentucky. Capt. Cates was often heard to say that he (Cates) and Maj. William Stewart were the pioneers of south Kentucky. Capt. Cates became one of the largest land holders in the State, owning tracts in Christian, Logan, Todd and other counties. He had several encounters with the Indians, and many narrow escapes. He was the father of A. G. Cates, formerly attorney-general of Kentucky, an eminent lawyer, who died in St. Louis about the close of the war. Capt. Cates had quite a large family, but only one son; he is buried in the Baptist burying ground, at Russellville, Ky.

McLEAN COUNTY.

MARSHALL G. ASHBY, one of the live business men of Beach Grove, McLean County, was born September 16, 1839, in Hopkins, now Webster County, Ky. He is the eldest of six children born to Jesse and Julia (Sellers) Ashby, natives of Nelson and Henderson Counties, respectively. He lived with his parents on a farm until he was twenty-one years old, and attended the common schools, when not employed on the farm. Possessing a patriotic spirit, and believing secession to be wrong, he enlisted in October, 1861, in Company K, Twenty-fifth Kentucky Federal Infantry, and was in the battles of Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Mission Ridge, Altonia Mountain, Dalton, Resaca, Atlanta and Nashville. He went as far south as Jonesboro, returned to Nashville, and was discharged as corporal, February, 1865, when he returned to his home, and Cincinnatuslike, again betook himself to the plow until 1869, when he embarked in mercantile business at Wrightsburg. In 1871, he located at Beach Grove, where he has since followed the same business with good success. He also engaged in the milling business for three years. In 1871, he was appointed postmaster at Wrightsburg, which position he held for ten years; in 1883, was appointed at Beach Grove and is the present incumbent. He was married in April, 1871, to Lola McDaniel of McLean County, a daughter of Charles and Bettie (Brown) McDaniel, born and reared in Daviess and Oldham Counties, respectively. Six children bless this union: Osceola (deceased), Sciota, Alpharetta, Othello E., Tullahoma and Nedawah M. Mr. and Mrs. Ashby are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church ; he is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and in politics a Republican, but gave his first presidential vote for Bell and Everts in 1860. Mr. Ashby is considered one of the best business men in the county. He has a large stock of goods, also a good mill, and one of the finest residences in the county.

MADISON L. BAIRD, McLean County, was born May 5, 1865, in Daviess County, Ky., and is the fourth of four boys and one girl (all living) born to John H. and Emily Baird, of Daviess County. He was reared on a farm, and attended the common schools when not engaged in the duties incident to pioneer life; attended Lexington College one term. His parents died in the spring of 1881, when he engaged in farming one year, then engaged in the livery business at Sebree, in Webster County, for six months; in November, 1883, he located in Calhoun, and engaged in the livery business. He was married November 13, 1884, to Bell Cox, of McLean County, a daughter of O. M. and Sophronia (Collins) Cox, of Nelson County, Ky. Mrs. Baird is a member of the Baptist Church. He cast his first presidential vote for Cleveland in 1884, good proof that he is a Democrat.

MARCUS L. BOARD, McLean County, was born January 14, 1833, in Breckinridge County, Ky., and is a son of Jubal and Sally (Dent) Board, native of Virginia; the former was a son of William Board, who married Miss Maize, and who came to Kentucky and settled in Breckinridge County, about the year 1810; the latter was a daughter of William Dent, a native of Virginia, who came to Kentucky and settled in the north end of Breckinridge County in a very early day. He owned a large number of slaves, and was one of the wealthy farmers of the county. Marcus L. was brought up on a farm, and had only such advantages for mental culture as were afforded by the common schools of his native county. He remained with his parents until he was twenty-four years of age. In March, 1857, he married America Vickers, a daughter of John Vickers, who married a Miss Landers. They had one child: John W. Board. Mr. Board upon his marriage located in McLean County, near Sacramento, and engaged in farming, which he continued for eight years. He then went into the insurance business and after trying other branches of business and making a trip to Texas, he settled down to the drug business in 1874, in Sacramento, a business in which he is still engaged. Mrs. Board was a member of the Baptist Church; she died in May 1865. He is a Mason and politically a Democrat.

DR. WILLIAM H. BOSTON, McLean County, is a native of Jefferson County, Ky., was born August 30, 1831, and is the eldest of twelve children born to William and Virginia (Oglesby) Boston, who were natives of that county. The grandfather was James Boston, who married Anna Finley, and settled in Jefferson County, in an early day—about the time Louisville was first settled. The Finley family came to Kentucky about the time of Daniel Boone, or very soon after—James Finley being associated with Boone in pioneer days. Dr. Boston's mother was the daughter of Micajah Oglesby, who married Catherine Philips, and were early settlers in in Oldham County, Ky. Dr. Boston was reared on the farm, receiving but a common school education. He came with his parents in 1846, to this county, where his father purchased 400 acres of woodland and opened and improved a farm. At the age of twenty-five years, the Doctor engaged in farming for himself; he commenced the study of medicine in 1860, and five years later began practice, which he has continued ever since. He owns 100 acres of good land, well improved. In October, 1861, he enlisted in Company H, Seventeenth Kentucky (Federal) Infantry, and was in the battle of Shiloh, and in August, 1862, was discharged on account of disability. He was married November 5, 1856, to Elvira Green, of Daviess County, by whom he had three children: Olive K. (Bohannen), Lilly J. (Thomas) and Ellen (Williams). Mrs. Boston died in September, 1864, and October 7, 1868, the Doctor married Louisa M. Davis, of Henderson County, a daughter of John and Mary (Overten) Davis, natives of Virginia. The result of this second marriage is six children: Inda, Elizabeth B., Charles H., Virginia, Carrie B. and Myrtle. Dr. and Mrs. Boston are members of the Christian Church. He is a member of the A. F. & A. M., and was a member of the Grange. He is a Democrat, but in 1880, voted for Weaver for president.

JOHN W. BOYD, McLean County, is the eldest of two children, and is the son of James and Senora (Sharp) Boyd, and born May 2, 1843, in Ohio County, Ky. He was but two years old when his father died; his mother afterward married George Dodson, by whom she had six children. After her second husband's death she married Dr. George Chapman. John W. Boyd received a limited education, and in August, 1862, at Hartford, enlisted in Company E, Twelfth Kentucky (Federal) Cavalry, and participated in all the engagements of the regiment during his term of service; he was discharged in one year as brevet second lieutenant. He afterward re-enlisted in the Seventeenth Kentucky Mounted Infantry, at Owensboro, and served until September, 1865, when he was discharged at Louisville, Ky. He then returned home, and engaged in farming, and in 1867 located where he now resides, on 114 acres of land, which he has improved; he now owns 187 acres of good land. He was married in February, 1869, to Fannie Waltrip, of this county, a daughter of William and Susan (Hoover) Waltrip, natives of Breckinridge and Ohio Counties. They have had five children, four of whom are living, as follows: Valeria, William L., Lonada, Daisy P.; James R. is dead. Mr. and Mrs. Boyd are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian and Baptist Churches, respectively; he is a Democrat in his political sentiments, but gave his first presidential vote in 1864, for Abraham Lincoln.

BENJAMIN BRACKETT, McLean County, was born November 29, 1833, and is the youngest of two children born to John and Sallie (Keith) Brackett, who were born respectively in Muhlenburgh and McLean Counties, Ky. John Brackett was a son of Thomas Brackett of Irish descent, and one of the early settlers of Muhlenburgh County. The family came originally from Virginia. Benjamin Brackett was reared on a farm, and received a common school education; has taught penmanship to a considerable extent. His mother died in 1834, and his father married Nancy Roark of Muhlenburgh County. a daughter of John Roark, by whom he had two children. By his third wife, Minerva Hambly, he has one child. His fourth wife was a Miss Fireline. Benjamin Brackett was married in January, 1855, to Elizabeth France, of McLean County, a daughter of Samuel and Rachel (Landers) France, who were born in Muhlenburgh County, Ky. Five children were born to this union: Rachel F. (Browning) Anna K. (Phillipps), Samuel R., John A. and Sallie. Mr. and Mrs. Brackett are members of the Baptist Church. Mr. Brackett enlisted in October, 1861, in Company F, Third Kentucky Federal Cavalry, under Col. Jackson; was in the battle of Shiloh, Murfreesboro, and in all the engagements from Atlanta to the Sea. In December, 1863, he was discharged at Savannah, Ga., and returned to his family in McLean County, where he has been engaged in farming since. He located where he now resides in 1867 on fifty acres of land. In politics he is a Republican.

JAMES CATE is one of McLean County's enterprising citizens, and was born June 15, 1835, in Lima, N. Y. He is a son of William and Fanny (Scoville) Cate, natives of Vermont and New Hampshire, respectively. He was reared on a farm and attended the common schools until he was fifteen years of age, when he went to work in the woolen-mills in Mumford, N. Y.; four years later he went to Albion, N. Y. In 1853 he migrated to Louisville, where he started the first power looms ever in the city; he remained there but one winter. In 1854 he built a woolen-mill on Rough Creek, in Grayson County, which was the first in southern Kentucky. In 1860 he went to Daviess County and built a woolen-mill and distillery three miles below Owensboro. In 1864 he sold his distillery and moved his woolen-mill to Owensboro. In 1868 he sold out and located in Rumsey, McLean County, where he purchased a mill belonging to Dr. W. D. Stirman, of Owensboro. In 1881 he went to Henderson, Ky., and organized a joint stock company with a capital of $50,000, and built a woolen-mill, where he remained as president and manager for one year, and then returned to Rumsey and bought new machinery of latest improvements, and opened a woolen-mill in the spring of 1884. In connection with his manufacturing was engaged in mercantile business for three or four years in Rumsey. He was married to Mary W. Phipps, of Ohio County, in March, 1860. She was a daughter of Elijah and Sallie (Nickolls) Phipps, natives of Kentucky. The result of this union has been three children: Fannie (King), James Henry and Sallie. Mrs. Cate died in 1870; she was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is a member of the Masonic order, and cast his first Presidential vote for Fillmore in 1856, and has since voted the Democratic ticket.

WALTER S. CLARK, McLean County, was born February 11, 1848, in Louisville, Ky., and is the only child of Charles G. and Mary (Hollock) Clark, of Maryland. He removed with his parents to Wrightsburg, Ky., thence to Rumsey, thence to Gosport, Ind., where they lived one year, when they removed to Rumsey, and lived there ever since. He enlisted in October, 1861, in Company C, Twenty-sixth Kentucky Federal Infantry, and was in the battles of Shiloh and Nashville, and numerous skirmishes in which the regiment was engaged during its term of service. He was discharged from the service as drum major at Salisbury, N. C., in July, 1865; he returned to Rumsey and went to work in the woolen-mills for a short time; then engaged in flat-boating and lumbering until 1878, when he opened a store in Rumsey, a business in which he is still engaged. In June, 1874, he was married to Nancy Josephine Landrum, of McLean County, a daughter of James Landrum, who married a Miss Blacklock. The result of this union is one child—Mary Eva. His wife is a member of the Roman Catholic Church. He first voted at the presidential election of 1864 for George B. McClellan, and has since voted the Republican ticket.

EPHRAIM A. COFFMAN, McLean County, was born February 5, 1835, in Muhlenburgh County (now McLean), and is the fourth of seven children born to Benjamin and Elizabeth (Gosset) Coffman, natives of Botetourt County, Va., and of German origin. Benjamin Coffman's father was also Benjamin Coffman, and a native of Virginia. He immigrated to Muhlenburg, now McLean, County, in 1804, where he purchased and entered 1,000 acres of land; he brought his relatives with him from Virginia. The mother of our subject was a daughter of Daniel Gosset. Ephraim A. was reared on a farm, and lived with his parents until twenty-one; attended the subscription schools, and when of age, engaged as a salesman in a dry goods store at Sacramento for five years. At the beginning of the war he engaged in farming, which he has continued to the present time; he was also engaged in the leaf tobacco trade for eight years. In 1875 he was elected to represent his county in the legislature. His is the owner of 110 acres of good land near Sacramento. Mr. Coffman belongs to one of the influential families in Muhlenburgh and McLean Counties; had four brothers in the Confederate army. He was married May 27, 1857, to Susan Henry, of Logan County, a daughter of Robert and Nancy (Marshall) Henry, both of Virginia. Mr. Coffman has had born to him eight children: Kent W., Everett E., Robert B., William C., Mattie J., Joseph F., Vara E. and John M. Mr. and Mrs. Coffman are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; he has been a leading member of the Masonic fraternity for twenty-eight years; was master of his lodge at Sacramento for eleven years.

DR. THOMAS W. COOPER, McLean County, was born January 1, 1845, in Meade County, Ky., and is a son of Leonard and Nancy (Bryan) Cooper, who were born respectively in Marion and Nelson Counties. Leonard Cooper was a son of Philip Cooper, who was a farmer by occupation; the mother of our subject was a daughter of Ignatius Bryan, of Irish descent. Dr. Cooper was reared on a farm, and resided with his parents until 1863, when he commenced farming for himself, At the age of twenty-five he commenced selling drugs, and the study of medicine. In 1874 he entered the University of Louisville, and graduated in June, 1875, from the Kentucky School of Medicine; located at Beach Grove, where he has been engaged in the practice of medicine ever since with good success. In 1880 he opened a drug store, and has added gents' furnishing goods. He sold out in 1884, and engaged in general merchandising. He was married March 21, 1876, to Olivia Caloway, of McLean County, a daughter of Samuel and Rebecca (Boston) Caloway, of Jefferson County. They have one child—a boy—Franklin Kelley Cooper. Dr. Cooper is a member of the Roman Catholic Church, a Democrat in politics, and gave his first presidential vote in 1872 to Horace Greely.

CRANDELL, McLean County, was born August 16, 1844, in Bullitt County, Ky., and is the son of Dr. Samuel W. and Margaret (Goff) Crandell, natives of Brandenburg and Nelson Counties, Ky., respectively. Dr. Samuel W. Crandell (subject's father) was first lieutenant in the Eight Kentucky Federal Cavalry for eighteen months, after which he became assistant surgeon of the regiment; he resigned in 1864, and returned home. The mother of subject was a daughter of Edwin Goff, who married Elizabeth Thurman, both natives of Virginia. Subject received a common school education, and in June, 1862, enlisted in Company I, Sixth Kentucky Cavalry, under Capt. Ed. Penn. He participated in the battles of Chickamauga, Resaca and Nashville and was in numerous skirmishes with Morgan's men; went with Sherman on his march to the sea, as far as Macon, Ga. He was discharged in June, 1865, at Nashville, as second sergeant, and returned to his home in Louisville, Ky., where he engaged as salesman in a general store for ten months. Then moved to Sacramento, McLean, County; engaged in saw-milling one year, and then returned to Louisville, and attended a course at the Kentucky School of Medicine in the winter of 1867–68; same spring he located in Ashbysburgh, Hopkins County, and commenced practice. In 1870, he moved to Hamilton County, Mo., and in 1872, to southern Illinois; in 1874, he located in Slaughterville, Webster County, and one year later located at Beach Grove, where he has been engaged in his profession ever since, except eighteen months at Lewisport, Hancock County. He was married December 21, 1870, to Mrs. Mary Saunders of Saline County, Mo., a daughter of Lemuel G. Tucker; she died in February, 1876. He afterward married May 21, 1878, Georgia E. Harper, of McLean County, a daughter of John H. and C. E. (Walters) Harper, who were born respectively in Pennsylvania in 1812, and Wheeling, W. Va., in 1822. Two children were born to this union, one of whom is still living. Dr. Crandell is a member of the Masonic order, and a Democrat. He gave his first vote for George B. McClellan, and his last for Grover Cleveland. He is at present chairman of the board of village trustees, and the board of education.

DR. NATHAN H. EVERLY, McLean County, a native of Muhlenburgh County, was born May 15, 1827, and is one of twins born to Simeon and Elizabeth (Everly) Everly, natives of West Virginia, and McLean County respectively. Simeon Everly was a son of Simeon and Prudence (Howard) Everly, the former a soldier in many early Indian wars, and a son of Jasper Everly who emigrated from Germany and settled in Monongahela County, now West Virginia, and reared a large family. The maternal grandfather was Jesse Everly, who married Catherine West. They came to Kentucky and settled on the Island in this county about the year 1806. Subject's father came to this State about the year 1825. Dr. Everly received a good common school education, and remained at home with his parents until 1852, when he began the study of medicine with Dr. N. Everly, and graduated from the Eclectic Medical Institute of Cincinnati in the spring of 1858. Soon after he located where he now lives. He was married December 15, 1859, to Mrs. Amanda C. McRae, nee James, of Ohio County, and a daughter of Samuel and Elizabeth (Reno) James, by whom he had two children: Lillian W. (Shacklett), and George Lovel. Mrs. Everly died September 29, 1862, and Dr. Everly next married, October 13, 1864, M. H. Martin, a daughter of Hugh H. and Elizabeth (Roark) Martin. This union was blessed with three children: Robert Scott, Hugh Martin and John Scudder. He and wife are members of the Methodist Church. They are both members of the Grange, she holding the office of Ceres. He owns a fine farm of 335 acres, well improved. He was formely a Whig, but since the war a Republican.

DR. WILLIAM C. FOWLKES, McLean County, was born December 26, 1849, in Henderson County, Ky. He is the fourth of five children born to David W., of Nottoway County, and Paulina A. (Watkins) Fowlkes, of Lunenburg County, Va., of German and English descent respectively. Dr. Fowlkes was but seven years old when his father died; he lived with his mother and received a common school education until eighteen years old; at twenty commenced the study of medicine in Calhoun, Ky. In the spring of 1873 he graduated from the Medical University, of Louisville, Ky.; located in Curdsville, Daviess County, where he practiced until 1879, when he located in Calhoun, McLean County. He met with marked success. January 30, 1876, he married Latta Little, of Calhoun, a daughter of Judge Douglass and Martha A. (Wright) Little, who were born in Muhlenburgh County. Four children have been born to this union: Lycurgus L., Lucius E. (deceased), Lucius E. and Woodford B.

GUERDON W. GATES, McLean County, was born September, 13, 1855, in Louisville, Ky. He is the eldest of two children, and the only one living, born to Lloyd W. and Frances E. (Ward) Gates, natives of Paris, Ky., and Susanville, Cal., respectively. Lloyd W. Gates was an attorney, was engaged in the mercantile business, and later in the tobacco trade, and was county commissioner and attorney of McLean County. He now resides near Louisville on a farm; he is the son of Rev. Guerdon Gates, a Baptist minister of Louisville, Ky., who married a Miss Rice, a native of Connecticut, all of English origin. Subject's mother, Frances E. Ward, was a daughter of William Ward, of California, who was engaged in mining and agriculture. G. W. Gates was reared in Calhoun, received a good English education, attended Kentucky University two years. He was deputy county clerk in 1875–76. In 1878, after returning from school, he commenced the study of law with his father, and was admitted to the bar January 15, 1879, by Benjamin P. Cissell, circuit judge. He has followed his profession in Calhoun with much success. He was married October 25, 1883, to Lizzie D. Houston, of McLean County, a daughter of Benjamin and Attie M. (Calhoun) Houston, who were born in Daviess and McLean Counties, Ky.

J. E. GIBSON, a prominent farmer of McLean County, was born December 31, 1835, in Daviess County (now McLean County), and is the third of seven children born to William T. and Jemima (Baird) Gibson, the former a native of this county, and a son of John Gibson, and the latter a native of Bardstown, Ky. The subject of this sketch was brought up on a farm, and received a good common school education; he lived with his parents until he was twenty-one years of age, when he commenced the battle of life for himself. He now owns 400 acres of good land, his father gave him 150 acres and the remainder he has accumulated by his own energy and industry. He was married in January, 1856, to Mary P., a daughter of Rutherford and Jane E. (Cunningham) Mitchell, natives of Meade County, Ky. They have three children, viz.: W. R., Jennie P. (now deceased), and Mans. Mrs. Gibson died May 27, 1866; she was a consistant member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Mr. Gibson next married, May 25, 1867, Mrs. India I. Crewdson, daughter of C. W. and Mary A. Reeks, of this county. Four children were born of this union: Lee, John R., Mamie, and Lillian. Mr. and Mrs. Gibson are members of the Baptist and Methodist Churches. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and a Democrat in politics, casting his first vote for president, in 1860, for John C. Breckinridge.

WILLIAM F. GILLIM, M. D. The gentleman whose name introduces this sketch and whose portrait is herein contained, was born on the 29th day of June, 1846 in Daviess Co., Kentucky. The immediate ancestry of Dr. Gillim traces back to the Virginia yeomanry, though originally of French descent. The Gillim family was first represented in the State of Kentucky about the year 1820, when John Gillim, grandfather of our subject, removed from Virginia and settled in Logan County, where was born James L. Gillim, the father of Dr. Gillim. His maternal parentage was first represented in Kentucky about the year 1810, when William Newsom and his wife, whose maiden name was Shown, settled in the State in what is now Daviess County, where Elizabeth Newsom; our subject's mother, was born. James L. and Elizabeth Gillim reared a family of seven children, of whom the Doctor is the second, and among whom may be numbered some of the best families of the "Green River region," At the breaking out of the civil war in 1861, Dr. Gillim, though a mere boy, manifested a strong desire to champion the cause of the Confederacy, by entering the army, but was dissuaded by the ripe judgment of his parents, who put him in school instead. This seems to have been the pivot on which his future turned. He soon acquired a thirst for knowledge, and early displayed a natural desire for the study of medicine; to gratify which he taught school successfully for two years. He was thus enabled to push his studies in the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia, and the University of Louisville, graduating from the latter in the year 1871. The same year he located in Livermore, McLean Co., Kentucky, his present home, where he at once obtained a lucrative practice, and where he is appreciated, not only for his professional ability but for his natural courtesy and true citizenship, enjoying the confidence of a large circle of friends, as well as an enviable reputation with his professional brethren. On the 4th of March, 1875, Dr. Gillim married Miss Alice, daughter of John and Sallie (French) Douglas, of McLean Co., Kentucky. They have a family of four children living and one dead—Gwendoline, the eldest. The others are as follows: Mamie, Abbie, Parvin D., and Willie F. Gillim.

DAVID W. GISH, McLean County, was born May 30, 1853, in Muhlenburgh County, and is the eldest in a family of twelve children—six boys and six girls—of Daniel J. and Susan (Turner) Gish, natives of Muhlenburgh County. David W. received but a limited education, his studies being confined to the neighboring schools. He resided with his parents until he was grown, when he went to farming for himself. In the fall of 1879 he engaged in the dry goods business, but the close confinement of the store injured his health, and in the fall of 1881 he purchased a flouring and saw mill at Sacremento, to which he has since given his attention, and which he has operated with considerable success. He was married in November, 1874, to Louisa Anna Miller, a daughter of Simon and Maria M. (Harvey) Miller, natives of Virginia and Tennessee, respectively. Three children have blessed this union: Alva, Idella and

W. F. Gillins M.D.

Anna L. In the spring of 1876, he moved to Kansas, but remained only a year, and then returned to McLean County. In the politics of the day he holds to the Democratic faith.

WILLIAM A. GLENN, McLean County, was born February 22, 1827, in Todd Co., Kentucky, and is the second in a family of eight children, born to George F. and Nancy (Christian) Glenn, natives of Virginia and North Carolina; his paternal grandfather was James Glenn, who married Rachel Finley, a native of Virginia. The maternal grandfather was John Christian, who married a Miss Harris, born and reared in North Carolina. They came to Todd County about 1800. William A. was reared on a farm with but limited opportunity for mental improvement. He remained at home with his parents until he was twenty-six years of age, when he turned his attention to mercantile pursuits, engaging in business in Columbus, Mo., to which place he moved in 1853, remaining there until 1868, when he sold out and returned to Kentucky. He engaged in the dry goods and leaf tobacco business in Todd County until 1870, when he removed to Eminence, Henry County; from there he went to Columbia in 1874, where he edited a paper—the Columbia Spectator—for one year. He then went to Hopkinsville and engaged in the leaf tobacco business and as salesman in a store. He next went to Trenton where he is engaged in the dry goods business with T. M. Smith. He was married in June, 1855, to D. Ella, a daughter of Milton and Mary (Daniel) Beauchamp, natives of Kentucky. They have had four children, all of whom are dead. He and wife are members of the Christian Church. He is a Democrat in politics.

COL. ROWLAND E. HACKETT, a prominent citizen of Livermore, McLean County, was born October 25, 1825, in Minot, Me., and is a son of Salmon and Lorana (Noyes) Hackett, natives of Massachusetts; the former was a soldier of the war of 1812. Col. Hackett was brought up in his native town until he was eighteen years of age, when he went to Massachusetts. He received a good education, attending the common schools and spending two years at Philip's Academy. At the age of twenty-two he went to Hollis-ton, Mass., where he remained until he came to Kentucky in 1858, locating in Livermore, in this county. Here he engaged in the timber and lumber business, which he has followed ever since, with the exception of three years spent in the service of his country. He enlisted on October 22, 1861, in Company A, Twenty-sixth Kentucky (Federal) Infantry, of which he was elected first lieutenant. He was in the battles of Shiloh, Saltville and Nashville, and in the latter battle was severely wounded, the ball entering his mouth, knocked out two of his teeth, split his tongue, and passed entirely through him. The peculiar wound, and his almost miraculous recovery from it, is one of the many remarkable incidents of the late war. After the battle of Shiloh he was promoted to captain, and after the battle of Nashville to lieutenant-colonel; he was in all the battles and skirmishes in which his regiment participated, except while confined in the hospital. He was discharged in September, 1865, at Louisville, and returned to Evansville, to which place his family removed during the war; afterward returned to Livermore. He was married November 19, 1846, to Charlotte S. Mason, of Maine, a daughter of James and Mary A. (Everett) Mason, of that State. They have had seven children, five of whom are living: Cora E. Lashbrook, Edgar B., Iola L., Everett M. and Frank F. Delmon R. and Eva A. are dead. Col. Hackett is a Republican in politics, formerly a Whig, but gave his first presidential vote in 1848 for Taylor.

JOHN C. HANCOCK, one of the enterprising young farmers of McLean County, was born April 19, 1844, in Oldham County, Ky., and is a son of James M. and Mary A. (Boxley) Hancock, natives of Kentucky and Virginia. He was reared on a farm, and received a good English education at Calhoun High School. He remained with his parents until about twenty-five years of age. At about twenty-three he engaged in the dry goods business, and remained in it for over eighteen months. October 18, 1870, he was married to Ara L. Moseley, daughter of R. C. and Nancy (Archibald) Moseley. The result of this union is one child—James M. Mrs. Hancock died in February, 1872, and Mr. Hancock next married in October, 1873, Emma E. Goode, of McLean County, a daughter of James Goode. They have three children: Ernest E., Clarice C. and John C. Mr. and Mrs. Hancock are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. After his first marriage he located where he now resides on 107 acres of good land.

WILLIAM H. HARDIN, one of the leading and wealthy men of McLean County, was born January 4, 1832, in Jefferson County, Ky., now Oldham County, and is a son of William J. and Emily (Brown) Hardin, of Oldham County; the former was a son of Henry and Mary (Smith) Hardin

The father of our subject, William J. Hardin, settled in McLean County in 1847, where subject was brought up on a farm, and received a common school education. In 1853 he crossed the plains to California, where he engaged in the mining and lumbering business for four years, and then he returned to Kentucky and engaged in farming, which he has carried on ever since with good success. In 1876 he commenced merchandising and dealing in leaf tobacco in Beach Grove, in which he has also been successful. He owns six farms in McLean and Webster Counties, and operates two stores in Beach Grove. He was captain of the first company organized in this community for the protection of their homes during the Rebellion. He was married February 10, 1858, to Mattie J. Boston, of Jefferson County, a daughter of William and Virginia (Oglesby) Boston. They have had born to them eight children, seven of whom are living, viz.: Edward E., Katie, William J., Emma V., Marcus R., Anna M. and Edith; Frances M. is deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Hardin are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is a Mason; was master of the Grange; was elected justice of the peace in 1863; re-elected in 1867, and elected police judge of Beach Grove 1882, for one term. He cast his first presidential vote for Fillmore in 1856, and has voted the Democratic ticket since 1864.

JAMES M. HAY, McLean County, was born in Muhlenburgh County, September 17, 1842, and is the eldest of four children of K. G. and Sally A. (Eads) Hay, both natives of Muhlenburgh County; his grandfather, Kinnard Hay, was a native of North Carolina, and his grandfather, Barnett Eads, of Virginia. James M. Hay received a common school education, and lived with his parents until grown. On July 16, 1863, he enlisted in Company D, Thirty-fifth Kentucky Mounted Infantry, and was in all the fights and skirmishes in which the regiment was engaged after he joined it. He was discharged in 1864, at Louisville, and returned home and engaged in farming. In 1867, he located on seventy-five acres of timber-land, which he has improved, and to which he has added, until he now owns 100 acres of excellent land. He was married February 22, 1866, to Amanda J. Ford, a daughter of Walter H. and Sallie E. (Chapman) Ford, natives of Virginia. They have had eight children, seven of whom are living, viz.: Samuel W., Sallie E., Charles F., Walter K., Volney B., Archie D., Jeanetta, Maud M. (deceased). Mr. Hay was a master of the Grange and is a Democrat in politics.

DR. J. E. HAYNES, McLean County, was born February 5, 1841, in Grayson County, Ky., and is the oldest of three boys, but one girl older than he, all born to Henry and Lurana (DeWees) Haynes who were born in Ohio and Grayson Counties, respectively. Henry Haynes was a son of John B. Haynes, who married a Miss Huff; they were born and reared in Virginia, were of English extraction, and settled in Ohio County, Ky., about 1812. The mother of our subject was a daughter of Benjamin F. and Phoeriba (Roberts) DeWees who were born respectively in Virginia and Tennessee, and of French and Scotch descent respectively. Henry Haynes married as his second wife Rebecca DeWees, a sister of his first wife. One boy and three girls were born by this second marriage. Dr. Haynes was reared on a farm until twelve years of age, when his parents moved to Cloverport; five years later to Litchfield. In 1862, the Doctor moved to Whitesville, Daviess County, where he took charge of a school for six years; in 1867, with Rev. Bernard Sickel, took charge of Hart's Seminary, Owensboro, Ky.; in 1868, went to the falls of Rough, in Grayson County, and took charge of a school; soon after was appointed school commissioner of the county; in 1870 he resigned, to take charge of Cromwell Seminary, Ohio County; in 1873, went to Hartford, where he was engaged as principal of the college for two years; thence to Dixon, where he taught until the fall of 1876, when he took a course of lectures at the Medical University of Louisville, located and practiced two years in Dixon; then moved to Pool's Mills and engaged in the drug business, and taught school at Carlow, Webster County; in 1881, moved to Mt. Vernon, Ind., where he engaged in the practice of medicine for one year, when he moved to McLean County, and purchased a farm. In 1884, he moved to Calhoun, and took charge of the college. He has taken a great interest in education, and has conducted institutes and normals since 1871. He was married October 18, 1860, to Laura B. Robinson of Grayson County, a daughter of Elijah N. and Letitia (Davisson) Robinson, who were born in Virginia and Grayson County, Ky., respectively. To Dr. and Mrs. Haynes have been born five children: William L., Lelia, Eugene E., Mollie, Kate T. The Doctor and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South; he is a member of the F. & A. M. and I. O. O. F. After conducting the Calhoun College one year and a half he resigned, moved back to his farm, five miles north of Calhoun, where he has again located in the practice of medicine, in which he has met with most decided success and enjoys flattering prospects as a physician with the full confidence of all who know him.

HENRY H. HEAD, McLean County, was born in Franklin County, Ky., October 3, 1813, and is a son of John A. and Polly (Head) Head, natives of Virginia. He received such an education as was to be obtained in the early days; lived with his parents until manhood, when he commenced working for himself. He went to Owen County in 1842, and there improved a farm; in 1869 he located where he now lives on 120 acres of land. When twenty-one years of age, he was appointed constable in Scott County, which office he held three years; he was elected justice of the peace in Owen County, in 1851, and was re-elected four terms consecutively; also held the office of examiner ten or twelve years. He was married January 21, 1840, to Elizabeth Long, a daughter of Benjamin and Mary (Long) Long, both native Kentuckians. They had two children: Mary (Mrs. Blythe), and Helena (Mrs. Bramlette) now dead. Mrs. Head died in 1843, and in June, 1844, Mr. Head married Lucy Clayton of Bath County. The result of this union was ten children, as follows: Malinda C. (Mrs. Hall), John W. (deceased), Sarah Elizabeth (Mrs. Cox), Nancy P. (Mrs. Heisler), Henry H. (deceased), Lucy (Mrs. Head), Benjamin J., Maggie H., George R. and Harriet C. Mr. and Mrs. Head are Baptists; he is a Mason, and a Democrat politically, gave his first vote for president to Martin VanBuren. Mr. Head's grandfather was John A. Head, who married a Miss Tunly, both were Virginians; his mother was a daughter of Benjamin Head, who married Milly Long, also Virginians. Mr. Head's grandparents immigrated to Kentucky soon after the close of the Revolutionary war.

ISAAC H. HENRY (deceased), McLean County, was born October 22, 1828, in Hopkins County, and was the second of six boys and four girls born to James and Margaret (Witherspoon) Henry, natives of Virginia, and South Carolina, respectively. James was the son of Joseph Henry who was born in Dublin, Ireland. He came to the United States between 1785 and 1790. When nineteen years of age he immigrated to Hopkins County, Ky., (about 1790) where he improved a farm. He was a great reader, with a mind well stored with useful information. He married Lucy Shoemaker, who was born and reared in Virginia. The mother of our subject was a daughter of Isaac Witherspoon, who married a Miss Potts, both born and reared in South Carolina. He immigrated to Hopkins County about 1818, and improved a farm on Rose Creek. Isaac H. was reared on a farm, and educated at the public schools; when twenty, he attended school at Owensville, Ind., for four months; went two months to a Mr. Lacy of Hopkins County. When he became of age he engaged in farming for himself, and purchased 159 acres of woodland, which he improved; operated a farm three miles west of Madisonville. In 1869, he moved to Sebree, Webster County, and engaged in the grocery business for a short time; in 1881, located where he afterward resided and where he died August 25, 1885, in north McLean County, on 100 acres of land well improved. He was ordained to preach in the Baptist Church, in November, 1859, by John Onyett and J. D. Gregory, and William Wilikan; preached in all the counties from Green River, west to Tenn see; was compelled to quit preaching on account of ill health. He was married Decem- 1, 1849, to Martha A. Foxwell, of Hopkins County, and daughter of Jonathan and Martha A. (Baldwin) Foxwell, who were born and reared in North Carolina, and immigrated to Kentucky in a very early day. To Mr. and Mrs. Henry were born two children: Arminia F. and James William. Mrs. Henry died December 6, 1854, and he next married January 7, 1862, Harriet E. Crenshaw, of Hopkins County, a native of Tennessee, and a daughter of William and Rebecca (Jackson) Crenshaw, natives of South Carolina and Virginia, respectively. They had born one child by this marriage, George P. Henry. Mr. Henry was a member of the Masonic order and cast his first presidential vote for Gen. Scott, and since 1860 voted the Republican ticket. George P. Henry, son of Isaac H. and Harriet E. (Crenshaw) Henry, is now twenty-two years of age. His life has been principally spent in schools of high grade and colleges. At the age of twelve he entered the Madisonville Academy and there remained in school until his sixteenth year. Then engaged in the mercantile business about twelve months. Then entered West Kentucky Normal College, situated at South Carrollton, Ky., in the year 1881, and remained in college until he graduated, and had confered upon him the honorary degrees of A. M. and M. A. in the year 1883. After that accepted a position in Hartford College as professor of mathematics and commercial law.

JOSEPH G. HENRY, McLean County, was born September 12, 1843, in Logan County, and is one of twins born to James and Caroline (Worthington) Henry, the former a native of Virginia and the latter of Muhlenburgh County. James Henry, a son of John Henry, was born in June, 1802, and died at the age of fifty-eight years. John Henry was born in Scotland, and immigrated to the United States near the close of the last century; settled in Virginia and in an early day, came to Logan County, Ky. The maternal grandfather was Thomas Worthington, who married Mary E. Barnes of Ohio County. He was a son of William Worthington, an early settler of this county. Joseph G. with his parents located where he now resides, in 1846; he made his home with them during their lives; he now owns the homestead, a fine farm, and in good condition. He was married in September, 1883, to Lou Bell Curl of Louisville, and a daughter of Parker and Mary (Rutledge) Curl. This union has been blessed with two children Hubert W. and ————. Mr. and Mrs. Henry are members of the Methodist Church; in the political questions of the day he acts with the Democratic party.

DR. WILLIAM H. HILLSMAN, a prominent and influential citizen of Livermore, McLean County, was born July 15, 1819, in Amelia County, Va., and is the youngest of seven children of James and Lucy (Clements) Hillsman, who were natives of Virginia and of English descent. The mother was a daughter of Isham Clements who married a Miss Scott. Subject received a good education and at eighteen years of age went to Granada, Miss., where he engaged in the mercantile business for two years and then returned home and went into business. He commenced the study of medicine at the age of twenty-two with Dr. J. B. Anderson, of Amelia County and took his first course of lectures at Hampden, Sidney College in 1846, and in the spring of 1848 graduated from Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia. He located in Amelia County, Va., and in 1851 returned to Philadelphia and took another course at the University and at Jefferson College. In 1860 he located at Livermore, where he has followed his profession since, and in connection has carried on a drug store and a farm. He is a member of the McDowell Medical Society; was the first president of the Green River Medical Association, which was organized in 1870, at Owensboro; was also president of the McLean County Medical Association one year. He is one of the leading physicians of the Green River Valley, and stands deservedly high in his profession, and as a citizen. He represented McLean County in the popular branch of the legislature at the session of 1877–78. He owns 1,000 acres of land, one half of which is improved; he also owns some valuable property in Livermore. He had some $25,000 or $30,000 invested in slaves, all of which he lost through the results of the late war. He was married June 17, 1852, to Pattie J. Townes, a daughter of Rev. Paschal L. and Mary Harwood (Overton) Townes of Virginia. Her father was high sheriff of Amelia County, Va., for sixteen years, and one of the earliest ministers of the Reformed Church. Dr. and Mrs. Hillsman are the parents of seven children, only three of whom are living, viz.: Nannie Lula (now Mrs. Edmunds), William P. and George A. Lillian, Charles, J., Henry W. and Mary Elizabeth are deceased. Dr. and Mrs. Hillsman are members of the Baptist Church and their children also. He is a Mason, a Knight Templar; was an old line Whig in politics and gave his first presidential vote for Gen. Harrison in 1840; since the late civil war he has voted the Democratic ticket.

NATHANIEL HOWARD, McLean County, was born January 12, 1830, in Ohio County, Ky., five miles east of Hartford, and is a son of Samuel T. and Nancy (Montgomery) Howard, respectively of Ohio County, and Maryland. His paternal grandfather, Thomas Howard, was of English descent, and a soldier of the Revolutionary war. The maternal grandfather was Thomas Montgomery, who came from Maryland and settled in Ohio County very early. Nathaniel Howard was reared on a farm, and received but a limited education: he was a small boy when his father died, aad was early compelled to rely on his own exertions. At the age of sixteen, he commenced the battle of life working by the month. With his mother he went to Warrick County, Ind., in 1838, where they lived for about ten years; then returned to Kentucky and settled in McLean County, near where he now resides. He was married in November, 1853, to Frances A. Tanner, a daughter of Frederick and Julia (Flint) Tanner, both of Boone County. They have one child, Julian, now Mrs. Crow. He and wife are members of the Baptist Church; he is a Mason and was a member of the Grange; politically he is a Democrat. He is one of the substantial citizens of the county, and commands the respect of the people of the community. He owns 300 acres of land highly improved and in a fine state of cultivation. His father followed flat-boating to New Orleans some years, and on one of his return trips (1834) took the cholera and died just below Owensboro.

HON. RALEIGH E. HUMPHREY, McLean County, one of the leading and enterprising men of the time, was born August 29, 1824, in Washington County, and is a son of John and Mary (Lockhart) Humphrey, natives respectively of Washington and Woodford Counties. The paternal grandfather, Raleigh Humphrey, married Mary Ferguson; he was reared in Virginia, and immigrated to Kentucky about the year 1790. The father of subject was born in 1800, and died at the age of thirty-six years; his mother was born in 1802, and died at the age of forty; her parents were among the pioneers of Kentucky. Hon. R. E. Humphrey was reared on a farm with the ordinary educational advantages. He came with his parents to Muhlenburgh, now McLean County in 1829, and settled south of Island Station, where our subject now resides. Hon. R. E. Humphrey owns 206 acres of the old homestead, which he has improved by the erection of good buildings, making himself a pleasant and comfortable home. After his mother's death, which occurred in 1842, the family scattered, and lived among the people of the neighborhood until grown. Mr. Humphrey was one of the first commissioners of the county after its organization in 1854; and in 1869, was elected to the lower house of the State legislature, a position he filled with honor and credit. He was married August 8, 1848, to Mary Susan, a daughter of Felix G. and Hannah (Kittinger) Nall. Felix Nall was a son of James N. and Susan (Kendrick) Nall, of Washington County. Mr. and Mrs. Humphrey have had six children, only two of whom are living: John Thomas and Mary Elliston. Mr. Humphrey and wife are members of the Baptist Church; he was at one time master of the Grange; he was originally a Whig, and gave his first vote for president for the old "Rough and Ready" soldier, Gen. Taylor, in 1848; since the late civil war he has voted the Democratic ticket.

BEN. JOHNSON, one of McLean County's most respected and honored citizens, was born April 25, 1817, near Sorgo, Daviess Co., Ky., and is the eldest of eight children, seven boys and one girl (all living), born to John and Lucy (Huston) Johnson. John Johnson was a farmer, a son of Samuel Johnson, who married Elizabeth Johnson, natives of Philadelphia, and Chesterfield County, Va., and were of Irish parentage. He was a soldier in the war for Independence, in Capt. Ben. Snipe's company, and was in the battle of Guilford Court House. He came to Ohio County, Ky., in 1811, from North Carolina, and settled near Pleasant Ridge, where he died in 1837, at the age of ninety-three years. He was the son of John Johnson, who was born in Ireland; and was a cooper by trade. Ben. Johnson was reared on a farm, with few advantages for an education. When seventeen he was sent to Augusta College, above Cincinnati, Ohio, for three years sessions; after his return he taught school for eight or ten years; taught two sessions in Calhoun, Ky., during the war. Believing he could better his condition, in the spring of 1855, he immigrated to White County, Ark., where he purchased and entered 360 acres, where Kensett, Ark., is now located; exchanged his farm for the homestead in McLean County, Ky. of 450 acres. In February, 1861, he landed in McLean, where he has resided ever since; has given all his lands to his children. In 1830, he was appointed by President Jackson, a cadet to West Point; but did not enter West Point on account of the oppsition of his father, He spent one year as a salesman in Morganfield, Union County; was colonel of militia from the time he was eighteen to twenty-six years old. In 1843, he was solicited to make the race for representative of the county, was defeated by Judge Crow; in 1849, he was again solicited by friends; made the race with three other candidates and was successful, receiving a majority of all the votes cast. In 1857, was elected to the legislature in Arkansas for one session. At the close of the war in 1865, he was elected county surveyor of McLean County; was repeatedly elected till he refused to serve any longer. His repeated appearance before the public, and his successful campaigns are sufficient evidence of his popularity and unimpeachable character. He was married October 18, 1843, to Mary B. Taylor, of Union County, Ky., and a daughter of Dr. Gibson and Mary (Reeves) Taylor, natives of Winchester, Va., and Franklin County, Va., respectively. Dr. Gibson Taylor was a surgeon of a regiment under Col. Dudley in 1812; was at the battle of River Raisin. His father was one of thirteen boys, who were all commissioned officers in the Revolutionary war. The Taylors were among the early settlers of Kentucky. Mr. Johnson has had born to him nine children: John G., Lucy M. (Lancaster), Ben. H. (deceased), Mary T. (deceased), Samuel J., Anna B., Jeptha C. (deceased), Ridge, Susan V. Mrs. Johnson died January 29, 1883, aged fifty-nine years; she was of the Roman Catholic faith. Mr. Johnson is a member of the Baptist Church, and cast his first presidential vote for James K. Polk in 1844; has voted Democratic since.

JUDGE JEP. C. JONSON was born September 10, 1833, in Daviess County, Ky. He is the eighth of seven boys and one girl, all living, born to John and Lucy (Houston) Jonson (see biography of Benjamin Jonson). Judge Jonson was reared on a farm and received a good English education, attended St. Mary's College, near Lebanon, Ky. In 1855, immigrated to Arkansas, where he raised cotton until the breaking out of the war, when in April, 1861, he enlisted in McRae's cavalry for a term of three months; in June 1861, received a commission as captain of infantry; was assistant inspector for the State of Arkansas; was assigned to duty with Brig.-Gen. N. B. Pierce; was engaged in the battles of Wilson Creek. In October, 1861, the regiment was re-organized. In April, 1862, Judge Jonson, organized a company, and joined the Twenty-ninth Arkansas Infantry; was in the battle of Prairie Grove, Ark.; in that battle he had his left leg broken by a shot. In March, 1863, he was promoted lieutenant colonel, after which he participated in the battle of Helena, July 4, 1863. There he was taken prisoner, and confined on Johnson's Island until February, 1865, when he was exchanged. In June of the same year he went to Mexico; he did not wish to surrender, but preferred to wait, and see what was done with officers who had taken an active part with the South. In 1866, he returned to Arkansas, where he remained until 1868, when he located in Calhoun, Ky.; was admitted to the bar in 1866, and has been engaged in the practice of law since; in 1870 was elected judge of McLean County, for a term of four years; was married in 1866, to Mary E. Gibson, of Little Rock, Ark., a daughter of Dr. Lorenzo and Caroline (Thomas) Gibson, who were born respectively in Clarksville and Nashville, Tenn. To this union eight children were born: Lucy C., Len. J., Mary (deceased), Jephtha (deceased), Jerrold A., William C., Corinne G. and Jamie. Mrs. Johnson died in June, 1879, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Judge Johnson is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, also of the I. O. O. F., K. of P., and Masons.

JOHN P. JOHNSON, McLean County, was born March 19, 1838, three miles east of Calhoun on Green River, and is a son of Edmund M., and Elizabeth (Huston) Johnson, the former a native of Virginia, and the latter of Daviess County, Ky. The grandfather was Philip Johnson, who married Lucy Herndon; they were both born near Norfolk, Va. He came with his family to Kentucky about 1818, and settled in Ohio County; he died in July, 1850, aged seventy years. The maternal grandfather was John Huston, who married Mary Sumaker; both were born and reared in North Carolina; he died in 1854, at the age of sixty-five years. He came to Kentucky when a young man, and located in Louisville; shortly after settled in Daviess County and purchased several thousand acres of land in what is now McLean and Muhlenburgh Counties. Edmund M. Johnson came to this county in 1837, and purchased 600 acres of land, on which he settled. At his death he owned about 2,000 acres. John P. Johnson received a good education at Hartford Academy, and spent several years teaching. He was elected justice of the peace and county surveyor in 1878; has been engaged in merchandising at Livermore a short time; has also carried on the timber and lumber business extensively for some years; he now owns 176 acres of fine land. In the political affairs of the country he works with the Democratic party, though his first vote for president was cast in 1860, for John Bell.

JOHN S. H. KIGEL, one of the leading merchants of McLean County, town of Glenville, was born April 10, 1840, and is a native of Ohio County, Ky. He is the only child of Solomon and Susan (Spence) Kigel, the former of Pennsylvania and the latter of Kentucky. His grandfather, Jacob Kigel, came from Germany and settled in Philadelphia County, Penn. Subject's mother was a daughter of John Spence, of Ohio County, a teacher and farmer. Solomon Kigel immigrated to Jeffersonville, Ind., about 1820; thence to Hartford, Ky., in 1839, and in 1842 he went to Owensboro, where he engaged in the mercantile business, and died in 1856. John S. H. Kigel received a common school education, and for three years after his father's death taught school; his mother died when he was an infant. In 1867 he built the first residence and ran the first store at Newville, Daviess County, where he did a successful business for nearly ten years. In 1876 he bought the place where he now lives, and one year later located. He is a prosperous business man, and owns two farms, in addition to his store, of 100 acres each. He commenced life a poor boy, and by close application to business has amassed a handsome property. He was married February 20, 1863, to Ann Boyd, a daughter of William and Elizabeth (Fitts) Boyd, of Daviess County. Four children were born to them: G. L., Lizzie O., Susan C. and A. H. Mrs.

J. C. Johnson

Kigel died March 4, 1873, and March 12, 1874, he married Virginia Shackelford, a daughter of James and Amelia (Settle) Shackelford, natives of Virginia. She died April 5, 1876, and November 3, 1876, he married Mattie Cocke, of Daviess County, a daughter of Stephen and Scythia (Foxworthy) Cocke. Mr. Kigel is a Mason and politically a Democrat.

WILLIAM H. KIZER, a successful farmer of McLean County, was born March 10, 1835, in Moore County, Tenn., and is the son of Gabriel and Elizabeth (Hancock) Kizer, natives of Tennessee. He was reared on a farm, and never attended school but three days in his life. What education he has, he obtained without any assistance. He was but ten years old when his mother died; resided with his father until his marriage, in April, 1854, to Pollie Noblet, of Moore County, Tenn., a daughter of Thomas and Rebecca Noblet. They have had born to them three children: William J., James (deceased), and Robert D. Mrs. Kizer died about six years after marriage, and he was next married December 17, 1865, to Sallie of Chasteen, of Butler County, Ky., a daughter William and Roxanna (Thompson) Chasteen, of Tennessee. This union has resulted in the birth of seven children: James D., Mima J., Albert C., George W., Sarah E., VanBuren and Andrew J. (deceased). His wife is a member of the Baptist Church. Mr. Kizer was conscripted into the Confederate army in 1863, and was in the Fifteenth Tennessee Infantry; was in the battle of Murfreesboro. After a service of thirteen months he came home and joined the Union army; enlisted in Company A, Fourth Tennessee Cavalry under Col. Blackburn. His service was mostly scout duty, and he was in numerous skirmishes. In June, 1865, he was discharged and returned home and moved to Butler County, and engaged in farming. In 1869, he moved to McLean County, Ky., and located where he now resides, on 183 acres of good land, which he has acquired by his own efforts.

JOHN R. LEACHMAN, one of the leading and enterprising farmers of this county, was born December 26, 1822, in Daviess, now McLean County. He is the second of ten children born to George and Matilda (Robertson) Leachman, natives of Virginia, and Nelson County, Ky., respectively. COL. ABSALOM R. SHACKLETT, McLean County, was born December 7, 1826, in Meade County, Ky., and is a son of Gen. Blancet and Rachel (Ashcraft) Shacklett, natives of Fayette County, Penn.; the former was a soldier in the war of 1812, and a brigadier-general of Kentucky State militia, when the position was one of honor and responsibility. Gen. Shacklett immigrated to Kentucky, and settled in Meade County in 1806; he was a son of John and Barbara (Quick) Shacklett. Barbara Quick was born on shipboard in 1744, when her parents were on their way to the United States. After her husband's death in 1808, she removed to Kentucky with her family; it is said there is but one family of Shacklett in the United States. Col. Shacklett's maternal grandfather was Richard Ashcraft, who married Elizabeth Carr, and settled in Nelson County, Ky., in an early day, participating in the Indian wars of pioneer days in Kentucky. Col. Shacklett was brought up to farm life, received a common school education, and at the age of eighteen, commenced business for himself. In 1847, he enlisted in Company A, First United States Voltigeurs Rifle Infantry for service in Mexico (with eight others same name), and while out was in three engagements of that war; was wounded in battle of Molino-Del-Rey. In August, 1848, he was discharged and returned home and engaged in farming. He moved to this county in 1859, and settled on a farm of 187 acres. In October, 1861, he enlisted in Company H, Eighth Kentucky (Confederate) Infantry, and in November following his enlistment, was elected captain of his company; he took part in the battle of Fort Donelson and was there captured. After his exchange he was promoted to lieutenant-colonel, (in September, 1862), and afterward participated in the battles of Coffeeville, Fort Pemberton, Champion Hill, Big Black, Vicksburg and Jackson (Miss). In February, 1864, the regiment was mounted and joined Forrest's Cavalry. In July, 1864, he was commissioned colonel, and was in all the battles of Forrest's Cavalry until the surrender at Columbus, Miss., in May, 1865. He was a brave and gallant officer, and with his sword boldly maintained the principles he believed to be right. When the Confederacy went down he boldly accepted the situation, and quietly returned, Cincinnatus-like, to his plow, and, though still in the prime of life, the hero of two wars. He was married January 25, 1849, to Minerva J., born in Meade, a daughter of George, born in Washington, Fayette Co., Penn., and Barbara (Jenkins) Humphrey, born and reared in Washington County, Ky. Colonel and Mrs. Shacklett had six children: William W., Sallie C., Stonewall, Jesse K., Mary C. and Sophia H., all living. Mrs. Shacklett died January 26, 1882. Col. Shacklett was a Whig, and gave his first presidential vote to Gen. Taylor in 1848. WILLIAM J. SMITH a native of Ohio County, was born September 28, 1825, and is a son of John and Elizabeth (Stewart) Smith, natives of Shelby County, Va., and who were of Irish descent. He received but little schooling, and resided with his parents until the age of eighteen, when he commenced farming for himself; was but three years old when his father lost his life by drowning. He was married May 4, 1848, to Mahala Stewart of Ohio County, a daughter of Carter S. and Lydia B. (Malin) Stewart, natives of Woodford and Ohio Counties, Ky. They have had four children: Carter Z. (deceased), William W., Carter W. and John L. Mr. and Mrs. Smith are members of the Baptist Church; moved from Ohio County, Ky., in 1874, and located where they now reside, on 250 acres of land; he has added to it until he now owns 302 acres, accumulated by his own industry. He is rearing three orphan children: Robert L. Stewart, son of Jacob and Louis A. Stewart, and Lavinia and John G. Hill, children of James W. and Nannie (Gillian) Hill, of Crittenden County.

W. W. SMITH, McLean County, is a son of William J. and Mahala M. (Stewart) Smith, and was born June 25, 1850, in Ohio County. He was brought up on the farm and with but few educational advantages; his parents being in limited circcmstances, he was compelled to assist in their maintenance. When twenty-two years of age, he left home and commenced farming on shares and for wages. In 1875 he rented a farm of 150 acres for two years, then bought seventy acres, five miles north of Calhoun. Since then he has purchased two additional tracts —one of 111 acres and one of twenty-six acres, the latter he purchased in 1881. It had good buildings on it, and he located there the same year. Soon after he bought another tract of sixty-six acres, and now owns in all 273 acres, purchased within the past ten years. He was married January 19, 1875, to Lucy T. Robinson, of Grayson County, and a daughter of Elijah and Letitia (Davidson) Robinson, the former of Virginia and the latter of Grayson County. The result of this union is five children: Cyrus V., Elvis C., Charles R., Mary O. and Forrest G. Mr. and Mrs. Smith are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and he is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and was also a member of the Grange. Politically he is a Democrat, and his first presidential vote was given in 1872, to Horace Greeley.

THOMAS M. SMITH, McLean County, one of the representative business men of Sacramento, was born August 22, 1845, in Henderson County, Ky., and is a son of Marshall and Harriet (Williams) Smith, natives of Virginia and Alabama; his grandfather, Nathan Smith, was reared in Virginia, and came to Kentucky about 1815, locating in Henderson County. Thomas M. was brought up on the farm and attended school as his farm duties would permit, until he arrived at maturity, when he left home and engaged in farming for himself for three years. He then went into the grocery business at Robert's Station, in Henderson County. In 1876, he located in Calhoun, where for two years he carried on the grocery, saddlery and harness business; he then went to Riley Station, then to South Carrollton, and engaged in a general mercantile business. In 1880 he went to Stephensport, Breckinridge County, and in 1882, returned to South Carrollton; soon after he located at Sacramento, and is engaged in mercantile and leaf tobacco business, in which he is very successful. In the fall of 1862 he enlisted in Company A, Col. Hall's Confederate regiment, and was in the battle of Red River Bridge, Tenn., and at Snow Hill, where he was wounded in the right knee. After a service of eighteen months he returned home and to farm life. He was married January 9, 1867, to Mary E. Fowlkes, a daughter of David and Pelina (Watkins) Fowlkes, of Henderson County, but natives of Virginia. This union has been blessed with five children: Anna F., Byron A., Lillie, Virga and Mary. He and wife are members of the Christian Church. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., and also of the K. of H.; politically a Democrat.

JACOB SNIDER, McLean County, an enterprising farmer, was born December 20, 1831, in Spencer County, Ky., and is the second child in a family of ten born to George W. and Ruth (Goodwin) Snider, natives of Kentucky. The paternal grandfather was Jacob Snider, whose parents came from Germany and settled in Spencer County, and where his mother died at the age of ninety-five years. Jacob remained on the farm with his parents until attaining his majority, receiving a good common education. In 1860 he located where he now lives, on a farm of 186 acres of land; to this he added until he now owns 520 acres, well improved, and on which are good dwellings, and 325 acres of cleared land. He has never sought office, but was elected a justice of the peace, an office he declined; he is one of the commissioners on the railroad debt voted by Livermore Precinct. He was married April 2, 1860, to Mary Foster, a daughter of Francis and Elizabeth (Skinner) Foster, natives of Virginia and Kentucky. They have four children—George McClellan, Frank Lee, John William and Lizzie. Mr. and Mrs. Snider are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church; he was Master of the Grange in its day, was a Democrat in politics, and voted that ticket until 1880, when he changed to the new departure—Greenbacker—to which he has since adhered.

VIRGIL P. STATELER, McLean County, was born September 1, 1847, and is a son of Ignatius P. and Senie (Stevens) Stateler, born and reared in Ohio County, Ky. His paternal grandfather was Stephen B. Stateler, who married Rhoda Pigman, a native of Maryland; he was born in Pennsylvania, and came to Kentucky when Hartford was but a small fort. His maternal grandfather was John G. Stevens, who was born in Ohio County. Virgil P. Stateler received a good education, having had the advantages of the common schools, and also attended Hartford Academy several terms. He was engaged several years teaching. He was married March 10, 1870, to Sue A. Johnson, a daughter of Edmond and Elizabeth (Houston) Johnson; they have had four children, three of whom are living, viz.; Willie S., Lizzie L. and Laura B. Mr. and Mrs. Stateler are members of the Baptist and Methodist Churches, respectively. Politically Mr. Stateler is a Democrat, having cast his first national vote in 1872, for Horace Greeley.

L. F. STILES, McLean County, was born November 15, 1829, in Nelson County, Ky., and is a son of Charles and Ann (Willett) Stiles, of New Jersey, and Nelson County, Ky., respectively. Charles Stiles was born in 1788, and was a son of David Stiles, who immigrated and settled with his family in Nelson County, Ky., about 1808. The mother of subject was a daughter of Griffith Willett, who came from Maryland to Kentucky, about 1810. L. F. Stiles was reared on a farm, received a fair common school education and resided with his parents until twenty-nine years of age, when he married (February, 1858) Mary P. Thomas, of Nelson County, Ky., a daughter of Washington and Mary (Bodine) Thomas, both of Nelson County. They have by this marriage four children, two living—William and Nannie C. Mrs. Stiles died in 1870, and he was next married to Mrs. Martha M. Tanner, of McLean County, a daughter of William and Louisa Settles, natives of Washington County, Ky. By this marriage he has two children—Albert and Clifton. Mr. and Mrs. Stiles are members of the Methodist Episcopal and Baptist Churches. Mr. Stiles has farmed all his life, working at the carpenter trade during the winter. He moved from Nelson County to McLean in 1860, and settled about four miles north of Calhoun, where he owns 200 acres of good land; he also owns another good farm of 250 acres, all of which he has accumulated by his own industry and perseverance. He is a Mason; was also a member of the Grange.

WILLIAM G. STROUD, McLean County, was born in the village of Rumsey, May 16, 1840, and is the only boy in a family of eight children born to Reuben and Caroline (Pitt) Stroud, natives of McLean and Muhlenburgh Counties. Reuben Stroud was a son of Lot Stroud, who married Nancy Grimes; Lot Stroud immigrated to Kentucky in an early day, about 1806, and settled near South Carrollton, on Green River. Benjamin Pitt, the maternal grandfather, married Mary Busby; emigrated from Tennessee to Kentucky, and settled on Pond River. William G. remained at home until grown, attends the common schools, when his father's duties would permit him. Imbued with a patriotic zeal to serve his country, he enlisted October 4, 1861, in Company H, Eleventh Kentucky (Federal) Infantry, and was in the battles of Shiloh and Stone River, and at the siege of Knoxville; also in the Atlanta campaign. In December, 1864, he was discharged as sergeant, his term of service having expired; he returned home and betook himself to farming, which he has continued ever since. He was married January 17, 1867, to Karaezeik Plain, a daughter of John and Tamer (Ross) Plain. Nine children were born of this union, of whom eight are now living: Effie L., Benjamin E., Cora, Jesse A., Delia May, Clara Ann, Mary Alma and Charles E. He and his wife are members of the Baptist Church.

HARVEY STROUD, McLean County, was born June 7, 1854, in this county, and is a son of Jesse G. and Catherine (Harrison) Stroud, natives respectively of Muhlenburgh and Nelson Counties. Jesse G. Stroud is a son of Lot and Nancy (Grimes) Stroud, of North Carolina, who immigrated to Kentucky about 1800, and settled in Muhlenburgh County. The maternal grandfather was Grove Harrison, who married Elizabeth White; Mr. Harrison came to Muhlenburgh County in 1830, and settled in the western part of the county. He was a soldier of the war of 1812, and was in the battle of New Orleans; his widow still survives him, and is supposed to be one hundred years old. Harvey Stroud has always lived on a farm; in his early life he had few advantages, and hence received only a common school education. His farm, which is one of the finest in the county, contains 170 acres and is in good condition; in addition, his brother and he own 1,000 acres on what is called the "Island," where their father had located. Mr. Stroud was married March 24, 1880 to Susan Jane Brumley, a daughter of John and Emoline (Eaton) Brumley, natives of Shelby County. They have three children: Clarence, James and Gertrude. He and wife are members of the Baptist Church; in politics he is a Democrat and gave his first National vote in 1884 for Cleveland and Hendricks.

Mr. Adkins received a common school education, and located where he now resides in 1866. He was married in December, 1866, to Mary A. Wilcox, of Muhlenburgh County, a daughter of George and Tabitha E. (Hughes) Wilcox. To this union eight children were born, six living: Rufus, Highland H., Elmer, Alva, Lillie, May, Oscar and Cleveland. Mr. and Mrs. Adkins are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

PROF. WAYLAND ALEXANDER, Muhlenburgh County, was born June 26, 1839, near Louisville, Ky., and is the fifth son of six boys and three girls (seven lived to man and womanhood) born to Joseph W. and Caroline

E. (Wells) Alexander, natives of King and Queen County, Va., and of Jefferson County, Ky., respectively. Joseph W. Alexander settled in Jefferson County in 1833, and spent the greater part of his life in agricultural pursuits; in 1856 immigrated to Daviess County, where he engaged in farming until his death in 1876; his wife (mother of our subject) was a daughter of Gen. Y. P. Wells, of Irish descent, who attained considerable distinction in the early Indian wars of Kentucky. Prof. Alexander was reared on a farm until he was fourteen. He had attended the district schools, and being of a studious turn of mind, at that age had made sufficient progress to enter Asbury, now DuPaw University at Greencastle, Ind., where he remained two years. In 1855, he left Greencastle, and came to Shelbyville, Ky., and entered college; there, having for his preceptor Dr. William I. Waller, a man of fine talent as a teacher; he continued his studies for two years. While in Shelby County, he commenced the study of law with Judge Joseph P. Foree; from this office he went to Louisville, Ky., and attended law lectures at the University. About that time he was obliged to discontinue his studies on account of lack of necessary funds; but having early determined to become a teacher, he opened a school in 1858, at Sacramento, Ky. In this undertaking his untiring energy and indomitable perseverance were at last crowned with success; he soon commanded a liberal and extensive patronage, which steadily increased; he has taught twenty-eight years in the thickly settled country on the Green River, and is widely known and universally respected for his talents and virtues. Having by his industry accumulated the necessary means, he established a college in 1873, in South Carrollton, called the South Carrollton Male and Female Institute, in which enterprise he met with the hearty co-operation of the public. This institution was conducted under his supervision, assisted by an able corps of teachers till 1880, when he was elected President of the Hartford College for a period of three years, where he met with the greatest success; during his stay in Hartford, in 1882, by a special act of the legislature, the South Carrollton Male and Female Institute was changed to West Kentucky Classical and Normal College. To this Prof. Alexander returned in 1883, and was elected president. The College is in a flourishing condition, and ranks as the largest in the State. The institution is conducted under his direct supervision, assisted by an able corps of teachers, and embraces in its curriculum all the studies of an advanced education, including the classics, modern languages and the higher mathematics. The college is one of the largest Normals in the state. Prof. Alexander was married September 4, 1860, to Jennie Davis, of Muhlenburgh County, Ky., and a daughter of Dr. Charles W. and Mary (McConnell) Davis, who were natives of Nelson and Muhlenburgh Counties, respectively. Dr. Charles Davis was the son of Elijah Davis, who is said to be one of the first white children born in Nelson County, Ky. He was born in 1787; was a farmer and represented the county in the legislature; he died near Bloomfield, in 1873. To Professor and Mrs. Alexander were born seven children: Nannie Sue, now nineteen, alone survives. The Professor and wife are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. He is without doubt one of the most popular educators in the country.

Luther Bard was a son of Rev. Isaac Bard, who married Matilda M. Moore, natives of Nelson and Muhlenburgh Counties, respectively. Rev. Isaac Bard was also a farmer. The mother of our subject was the daughter of William M. Steger, who married Maria L. Sergent. William H. was reared on a farm, and received a common school education; he lived with his parents until the age of twenty-two, when he commenced life for himself at farming. The grandfather Bard came to Muhlenburgh County about 1824, and purchased and entered about 10,000 acres of land. He died in 1878, aged eighty-two years; his widow is still living at the age of eighty-three years. William H. Bard, when but six years old, moved with his parents from McLean to Muhlenburgh County; he was married February 20, 1883, to Mary J. Williams, of Muhlenburgh County, a daughter of George H. and Sarah (Williams) Williams, natives of Virginia and Muhlenburgh County, respectively, and of German descent. One child blessed this union: George Luther Bard. Mr. and Mrs. Bard are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

WILLIAM BENNETT was born in Muhlenburgh County, January 23, 1821, and is the seventh of eleven children—four boys and seven girls—born to Philip and Nancy (Forster) Bennett, natives of North Carolina. Philip Bennett is the son of Francis and Lydia (Dossett) Bennett, of Ireland and North Carolina, respectively; the latter of English descent. He came to the United States about 18—; was superintendent of a plantation in South Carolina. The father of our subject came to Muhlenburgh County from Tennessee, about 1815, and settled on Pond River. The mother of our subject was a daughter of Edmond Forster, who was born in North Carolina, and came to Muhlenburgh County about 1812 or 1815. He was a farmer. William Bennett received a limited common school education and lived with his parents on a farm till he was twenty years old, when he married America Lewis, of Muhlenburgh County, a native of Christian County, and a daughter of Liston and D. (Fuller) Lewis, natives of Virginia and of Irish descent. No children were born to this union. After his marriage Mr. Bennett engaged in raising and canning fruit. In 1872 he sold and moved to South Carrollton, where he purchased twenty acres and cultivated fruits till 1878, when he engaged in real estate business for three years. He then engaged in the tinning business. In June, 1884, he bought a hardware store in which he is now engaged. He and wife are members of the Baptist Church, in which he was ordained to preach in 1847.

THOMAS H. BLADES, Muhlenburgh County is a native of England; born in Durham, November 9, 1842. He is a son of James Blades, who was of Irish birth born in Dublin, and died in England in 1846, aged twenty-eight years. He was married to Mary J. Hardy, of County Durham, in 1841. She died in 1850, leaving three children: Elizabeth, (who died in England in 1855); Mary Jane and Thomas H., who came to America in 1860. James Blades was a son of Thomas Blades, a native of Ireland. Joseph Hardy, the grandfather of our subject, was an Englishman, and by profession a soldier; his wife was Elizabeth Burdale, she died in 1869, aged seventy years. Thomas H. Blades was left an orphan at the age of three years, and in the seven following years had no fixed home, but was cared for by his friends, living for a short time with each one who would care for him. When ten years old, he became an inmate of the home of William King, with whom he lived for twelve years, and was employed in various kinds of work, principally mining, which he has followed ever since; he came, with Mr. King, to America in 1864, came to Kentucky and on the 9th of September of that year, married Elizabeth Foster, of Muhlenburg County. They have four children living: Robert B., Thomas, Mary J. and William. Mrs. Blades is a member of the Christian faith. Mr. Blades is a liberal thinker in religious views, and is a member of no church. He bases his religious views on honesty and fair dealing. He votes with the national Greenback party, but is not a politician, and has no political aspirations. He is a reader and is interested in the cause of education and temperance. He had a considerable property left him by his mother's people in England, but through the dishonesty of those who had it in charge, he never received but a small portion of it. He is now, however, in comfortable circumstances.

JOHN H. BOGGESS, Muhlenburgh County, was born in Greenville, Ky., June 28, 1848. He is a son of Thomas Boggess, who is also a native Kentuckian, born in 1834. He was engaged in merchandising for many years; later in life kept a hotel, and died in 1876, in Skilesville, Ky. He married Delilah Mathies, of Muhlenburgh County, who died at the early age of thirty-three years, leaving three children. The grandfather was Robert Boggess, a Virginian by birth; he came to Kentucky in 1812, and died in 1842. His wife, Rosa Boggess, departed this life in 1883, aged eighty-two years. John H. remained on the farm with his parents until he arrived at the age of twenty-five years. His early education was obtained at the common schools, and he acquired a fair knowledge of the English elements. In 1873, he began business in groceries and hardware; this he continued for two years, then discontinued the grocery trade. In his early business life, he met with reverses, but by strict attention to business and untiring energy, has established himself in a safe and lucrative trade in stoves and hardware in Skilesville. In his business he carries about $1,000 in stock-in-trade. December 20, 1880, he married Elizabeth Newman, daughter of Thomas P. and Patience Newman, of Butler County, Ky.; they are blessed with one child—Nellie Elbert, born February 4, 1882. Mr. and Mrs. Boggess are active and consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Politically, Mr. Boggess is a Democrat, and cast his first presidential vote for Horatio Seymour. He has been a member of the I. O. G. T., and yet extends his influence to the cause of temperance.

DR. J. G. BOHANNON, Muhlenberg County, was born in Shelby County, Ky., October 9, 1852, and is the first of two boys and one girl born to Harvey and Cynthia Ann (Scroggin) Bohannon, natives of Woodford and Shelby Counties, respectively, of Scotch descent. The father was a farmer and surveyor, a son of Henry Bohannon, who married Philadelphia Gale, of French origin. Henry came to Kentucky from Maryland in a very early day; he was a farmer and held the offices of surveyor, justice and sheriff in Shelby County. He had been married three times, and during his latter years was secretary and treasurer of Georgetown College about twelve years; he was a Baptist. The mother of our subject was the daughter of Samuel and Malinda (Miles) Scroggin of Scotch and English extraction; her father was a farmer and an early settler of Kentucky. Dr. Bohannon was reared on a farm and received a classical education at Georgetown College. He commenced the study of medicine with Dr. John R. Hall, of Georgetown, Ky.; graduated in medicine from the University of Louisville in the spring of 1874, and the same year located at Georgetown. In 1878, he moved to Greenville, where he has since practiced with success. He was married September 2, 1879, to A. M. Haden, of Muhlenberg County, Ky., a daughter of G. W. and Lucy R. (Slaughter) Haden. This union is blessed with the birth of George Harvey and Joseph Haden Bohannon. Dr. and Mrs. Bohannon are members of the Christian Church. He is a Mason.

DR. CHARLES A. BOURLAND, Muhlenburgh County, was born in Madisonville, Hopkins Co., Ky., and is the fifth of seven children—five boys and two girls—born to Thomas O. and Patience (Julin) Bourland, natives of Kentucky, respectively; on the mother's side of Irish descent, and on the father's descended from Pocahontas. Thomas O. was engaged in the grocery and furniture business in Madisonville, and died in 1854. Dr. Bourland lived with his mother in Madisonville after his father's death, later moved to Murray, in the Purchase. In 1859, he returned to Madisonville, where he attended Prof. Phipps two sessions; taught one term and then engaged as salesman in a dry goods house in Madisonville for eight years; was one year in a notion store in Evansville; in 1866, engaged in the dry goods business with Thomas Finley, in Madisonville, for one year; thence to Mulenburgh County, where he sold goods at Earl's Postoffice with Thomas C. Summers, and read medicine at the same time for two years with Dr. Hays. In 1868, he attended lectures at Nashville, Tenn., and located in Muhlenburgh County; two years later located in Hopkins County, where he practiced for two years; then again engaged in the dry goods business for two years: finally returned to Muhlenburgh County, where he has practiced his profession with success ever since. His grandfather, Slaton Bourland, a native of Kentucky, was a speculator and farmer, was the son of John Bourland, who was a Baptist minister. The mother of our subject was the daughter of John Julin, who was reared in South Carolina. Dr. Bourland was married in October 3, 1871, to Eudora J. Hays, of Muhlenburgh County, a daughter of Dr. John B. and Anna (Bell) Hays, natives of Tennessee. To this union four children were born: William O., Elma M., Anna W. and Effie. Dr. and Mrs. Bourland are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He is a member of the F. & A. M.

SILAS H. BREWER, Muhlenburgh County, was born in Shelby County, Ky., September 1, 1819. He is a son of John Brewer, a native of Holland, who immigrated to the United States when a young man, and settled in Pennsylvania, where he married Mary House. He afterward, in 1810, removed to Kentucky, where he died in 1821. He left a family of six children. Silas H. Brewer, at the age of eighteen years, was launched on the sea of active life, and from that time has made his way in the world unaided. His early education was such as could be obtained at the schools of the period, and was quite limited. At the age of twenty-one he became proficient as a mercantile book-keeper, and in that capacity was employed by the Union Saw Mill Company, of Louisville, Ky., for ten years. In 1848, he erected a flouring-mill, carding factory and saw-mill at Skilesville, on Green River, and up to the present time (1885), he has been employed in the milling and carding business, in connection with the superintendency of his farm of 100 acres of well-improved land, lying in Muhlenburgh County. His dwelling house, barns, warehouse, orchards and other improvements are among the best in the county; he also has the most excellent water-power privilege on Green River, and a location that is conducive to health. February 21, 1843, Mr. Brewer married Ann E. Downing, of Louisville, Ky. Nine children have been born to them, five of whom are living: James F., S. Herbert, Phœbe, Elizabeth and Anna D. Mr. and Mrs. Brewer and four children are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Mr. Brewer is a member of the Rochester Lodge, No. 270, of the ancient order of Masonry, through which he has passed to the chair of master. He is a Democrat and takes a lively interest in the political issues of the day.

Charles Eaves

Greenville. Two children bless this union, Miriam and Robert H. Mrs. Eades is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Mr. Eades is a member of the F. & A. M. and I. O. O. F. and K. of P.

CHARLES EAVES was born January 20, 1825, at his father's home, nine miles west of Greenville, Ky. His father was John S. Eaves, who was born in Virginia, in 1783; removed to Kentucky in 1805; was a farmer; a man of sterling integrity, thrifty, intelligent, sagacious; serving his county as justice of the peace, as sheriff, and twice as representative in the legislature; dying at the age of eighty-five, honored and respected by all who knew him. His mother, Lurena Eaves, nee Ingram, was remarkable for domesticity and admirable household ways; for hospitality dispensed without ostentation, yet with a heartsome welcome, so that no one ever visited the house who did not wish to repeat or prolong the visit. Charles, the subject of this sketch, the youngest of five sons (he had three sisters), was educated chiefly at home. In early boyhood he became a voracious reader. He gathered books and spun his own web of knowledge. On his father's farm, his habit was to read half the night, after working on the farm all day. At the age of eighteen, he took up the study of law on the farm, reading Blackstone, Kent, Story, Chitty, Steven, Starkie, Greenleaf, and numerous other text books, and, after three years' reading, obtained license to practice law. He was admitted to the Greenville bar in September, 1846. Since then he has devoted his life to the study and practice of the law, and to a pretty thorough study of literature. He is now a ripe, thorough lawyer, ranking high in his profession. His knowledge is encyclopedic. As a pleader, he is skillful, accurate, thorough; as a speaker, never rhetorical, but plain, direct, compact and clear; always fair and honorable in the conduct of a case, and generally successful. If eloquence he has, it is the eloquence of conviction and clearness. He wins his cases by careful preparation, clearness of statement and fairness of argument. He served his county (Muhlenburgh) one year as county attorney; one year as school commissioner, and one term as representative in the legislature. In 1865, he removed to Henderson, Ky., and after a residence there of twelve years, returned to Greenville, where he now resides in his quiet tree-embowered suburban home. At Henderson he was city attorney three years. The office was unsought, and he held it until he resigned it. From having frequently presided as special judge in the circuit courts, he is generally known as Judge Eaves. Not old at sixty; six feet high, and, though not obese, weighing 200 pounds, healthy and strong, with a memory like a chronicle, with a love of books unabated—opening a book with a swift glance whether it has a message for him—reading a new law book with as much zest as a novel, drinking its meaning up as a sponge absorbs water—Judge Eaves is likely to survive the present century as an active member of his profession, honored and respected by the bench and the bar, as well as by the people, and after his death, his ghost may possibly be seen by his confreres about the purlieus of the courts, with a law book or a bundle of papers under its arm. Judge Eaves married, March 24, 1852, at Greenville, Ky., Miss Martha G. Beach, daughter of Rufus and Rhoda Beach, who was born at Rochester, N. Y. Her maternal grandmother, whose maiden name was Olive Ann Stoddard, was a descendant of Anthony Stoddard, who came to Massachusetts Colony from England in 1638, among whose descendants—President Edwards, and his grandson, Aaron Burr, of a generation passed away, and Gen. W. T. Sherman and John Sherman of the present day, may be named. Judge Eaves and his wife are members of the Protestant Episcopal Church. They have four children. Judge Eaves is a member of the I. O. O. F.

GEORGE W. EAVES, JR., Muhlenburgh County, was born February 5, 1840, in Hopkins County, Ky., and is the fourth of ten children (two living) born to John S. and Hannah (Turbeville) Eaves, natives of Muhlenburgh and Hopkins Counties, respectively. John S. Eaves, was the son of John S., Sr., who married Lurena Ingram, natives of Brunswick County, Va., and of English descent (see biography of Hon. Charles Eaves). Subject's mother was the daughter of James Turbeville, who married Elizabeth Clark; they were natives of Virginia and North Carolina, respectively, of French and Scotch-Irish origin. James Turbeville was a farmer and immigrated to Hopkins County, Ky., about 1810, where he owned about 500 acres of land. Our subject's father moved to Hopkins County, where he lived from 1834 to 1847; then returned to Muhlenburgh County, and settled on Pond River; in 1862, moved to Livermore, McLean County, and died in 1872, aged fifty-nine years; the mother of our subject died in 1854, aged forty years. George W. Eaves, Jr., was reared on a farm; received a good education, and attended Greenville College from 1856 to 1858; was engaged on the farm as superintendent two years, after his school days, to recruit his health. In 1861, with his father, he engaged in mercantile business on Pond River for six years; also engaged in the tobacco business until 1876; was a general trader; has since been engaged in the timber business and farming. He was married in October, 1864, to Sarah J. McNary, of Muhlenburgh County, daughter of Hugh W. and Sarah (Scott) McNary, natives of Fayette County, Ky., and Columbia, S. C., respectively, and of Scotch-Irish descent. Hugh McNary was a son of William and Ann (Campbell) McNary, natives of Virginia. William was a soldier of the Revolution; had a brother killed at Vincennes, Ind., in the war of 1812; another starved on an English vessel while a prisoner at Charleston, S. C. Mr. Eaves had born to him nine children, eight named: John H., James T. (deceased), Lynn (deceased), Scott (deceased), St. Clair, Mattie F., Sarah G. and Nellie N. Mr. and Mrs. Eaves are Presbyterians; he is a Mason; was a member of the Grange. Mr. Eaves owns 1,300 acres of land, 400 acres cleared, all of which he has acquired by his own energies.

DAVID J. FLEMING is a native of Muhlenburgh County, Ky., and was born January 10, 1834. His father, Samuel C. Fleming, was a Tennesseean, born near the site of the present city of Knoxville, in September, 1806; he was a farmer, and died in 1876; his wife, Ann (Kimball) Fleming, whom he married in 1832, survived him some years. They were the parents of five children, David J. being the eldest. The father of Samuel C. Fleming was of English descent; he was one of the pioneers of Kentucky, and served in the war of 1812. David J. Fleming was born and reared on the farm. At the age of twenty-one years he had made considerable progress in the study of books, and took up teaching, which he followed for several years. May 9, 1858, he married Elizabeth, a daughter of Jacob Garst, of McLean County, Ky.; she died February 24, 1873, leaving six children: George Q., Mary W., Jacob T., Samuel M., Margaret A. and James G. Mr. Fleming's second marriage occurred March 7, 1875, with Virginia E. Westray, of Muhlenburgh County; to this marriage have been born two daughters: Lena C. and Carra S., and one son, Lewis E. Mr. Fleming joined the Federal army in 1861. He was a member of Hewitt's battery of the First Kentucky Light Artillery. At the battle of Murfreesboro he was captured by the enemy, and after four days, was "paroled" by Gen. Forrest. He was soon after exchanged, and joined his command in time to take part in the battle of Stone River, and later in the siege of Tullahoma, after which with his command he was assigned to garrison duty. October 24, 1874, he received an honorable discharge and returned to his farm, which he soon after exchanged for 200 acres, where he now resides; afterward he added 250 acres to the purchase; then lost all by going security for a friend. He then set to work to repair his losses, and has regained his farm of 450 acres, which he has improved with good buildings, fences, two large orchards, etc. The farm has good water, and produces abundant crops of grass, and Mr. Fleming gives a good share of his attention to the raising of stock. Politically his views are very liberal, he takes little interest in politics, but takes a strong position in favor of temperance, in which cause he devotes much of his time. His religious views are based on the Universalist doctrine, of which faith he has been a minister for twenty-five years. Mrs. Fleming is also a member of the same church.

ROB C. FRAZER, M. D., Muhlenburgh County, was born November 6, 1822, in Todd County, Ky., and is the eighth of three boys and six girls born to Joseph C. and Locky (Ewing) Frazer, natives of Virginia and Kentucky respectively, and of Scotch and Scotch-Irish descent. Joseph C., was the son of Culton Frazer, who was born in Scotland; was a farmer, a captain under Washington, and received the sword of Lord Cornwallis at his surrender. Joseph C. Frazer was a colonel of a regiment in the war of 1812, but did not get into the service; he immigrated to Kentucky about 1797, and settled near Lexington; he and his father, Culton Frazer burned the first brick for the first brick house in Lexington, Ky., Joseph C. came and settled in Todd County about 1805, about four miles south of Elkton, where he entered and improved lands; was a slave-holder, and justice of the peace nearly all his life in Todd County; his latter years were spent with our subject; he died in 1860, aged eighty years. Rob C. Frazer was reared on a farm, and lived with his father until the age of eighteen years, when he commenced the study of medicine with Drs. Grooms and McReynolds of Elkton Ky., later with Dr. Haskins of Allensville, Todd County; attended his first lecture, in 1841–42, at Louisville Medical College; practiced with his preceptor for one year, and in the latter part of 1844 located in Greenville, Ky., where he has since continued his practice successfully. In 1859, he graduated from the St. Louis Medical College. He owns 450 acres of land two miles east from Greenville, Ky., which he has acquired by his own industry. He was married November 5, 1850, to Sarah C. Quesenberry of Muhlenburgh County, and a daughter of James T. Quesenberry, who married Miss Garnett of Christian County; James T. was a son of James Quesenberry of Virginia, all were farmers. To Dr. and Mrs. Frazer were born six children; they reared five: Joseph J., Rob E., Thomas J., Curtis G., and Mary J. (Wood); first and second sons are railway men in Alvarado, Tex. Dr. Frazer and wife are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. The Doctor is a Mason. He owned slaves to the amount of about $18,000 when the war broke out.

GEORGE W. GISH, Muhlenburgh County, was born July 15, 1841, where he now resides. He is the eldest of five children, three living —two boys and one girl—born to John M. and Susan (Danner) Gish, who were natives of Muhlenburgh County, and of Dutch descent. The father was a son of George and Elizabeth (Peters) Gish, who were respectively natives of Pennsylvania and Virginia. George Gish was the son of Cristial Gish of Pennsylvania, who had three brothers in the Revolution, came to Kentucky about 1800, and settled near Bremen. The mother of our subject, Susan Danner, was a daughter of Samuel and Catharine (Noffsinger) Danner, of Dutch descent. George W. Gish received a common school education, and remained with his parents until he was twenty-four years old, when he commenced business for himself. He was married March 20, 1865, to Rhoda Divine of Muhlenburgh County, a native of Washington County, and a daughter of William H. and Elizabeth (Shurley) Divine, who were born in Mercer County, Ky., and of Irish and Dutch descent. They came to the county in 1856, and settled near Bremen. Mr. Gish had born to him seven children: Ida L., Ollie D., Claude S., Florence E., Eliza D., Alderreta and Arom. Mr. and Mrs. Gish are members of the United Baptist Church. He is a Mason.

GEORGE GORDON, Muhlenburgh County, was born December 1, 1831, in Stockport, England. He is the first of nine children (four sisters and one brother living in England) born to Joshua and Hester (Combs) Gordon, of Stockport, England. Joshua was the son of John Gordon. They were all weavers from grandfather. George Gordon sailed from England, August 23, 1856; landed in New York, October 2; went immediately to Fall River, Mass., where he took charge of forty-eight looms. In April, 1857, he moved to Perry County, Ind., and took charge of seventy-five looms at Cannelton; there he remained most of the time for nine years. January 11, 1862, he enlisted in Company G, Fifty-third Indiana Volunteer Infantry, commanded by W. O. Gresham; was discharged in December, 1862, at St. Louis, on account of disability, caused by a fall; was at Shiloh, siege of Corinth; at the siege of Memphis, and the battle of Davis Bridge on Latache River, Tennessee. He was discharged as sergeant. He returned to Cannelton where he resided until April, 1865, when he went to Gallatin, Tenn., where he worked until July of the same year. In 1863 he was compelled to leave Owensborough, because of his being a Yankee. On leaving Gallatin, he with his family proceeded to Cincinnati, where he worked for Gould, Pierce & Co., till January; then took charge of the building of looms for Brommull. In April, 1868, he moved to Milan, Ind., and took charge of woolen-mills. In November of the same year he moved to Owensborough, where he was general superintendent of the woolen-mills until 1870, when he went to Cannelton, Ind., for five months; thence to Casaville, where he ran a factory one winter; thence to Ownesborough, where he took one-fourth interest in the mills a short time. He then engaged in the saloon business for four years and a half. In April, 1876, he moved to where he now resides in Central City, Ky.; purchased Central City park grounds and engaged in the hotel and saloon business. In June, 1881, he made a trip to England and returned in the following November. Mr. Gordon has lived a very eventful life. During the war he was on several occasions employed as a spy; he boarded the tug Pink Barble and ascended the Cumberland as far as Nashville, Tenn. On the return trip the tug was taken by the Confederates at Dover, and the men blindfolded and transferred to Tennessee River. Mr. Gordon was married July 31, 1857, to Agnes Gibson, of Cannelton, a native of Glasgow, Scotland, and a daughter of Daniel and Margaret (Duncan) Gibson, natives of Cannelton and Lenox, Scotland, respectively. To this union were born six children, two living: Lucinda (Fitzgibbons) and George E. Mr. and Mrs. Gordon are church members, he of the Episcopal and she of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Gordon was formerly a member of the I. O. O. F.

G. W. HADEN, Muhlenberg County, was born December 6, 1813, in Maryland, and is the eldest of two children born to Joseph and Ellen (Thomas) Haden, natives of Logan County, Ky., and Washington County, Md., respectively. Joseph Haden was the son of Capt. William Haden, who first married Jane Moman of Virginia, and who died about six months after marriage. He then married Nancy Johnson of Virginia; six boys and four girls were born to this union. William Haden and wife immigrated to Kentucky and settled near Lexington; in 1778, moved to Logan County, and settled on Black Lick Creek, where he entered and improved a farm and built the first brick house in Logan County. He died in 1819, after rearing one of the most interesting and influential families of Logan County. William Haden was a son of John Haden, who had four sons. John Haden was the son of Anthony Haden of England, who married Margaret Douglas of Scotland. Their sons were John, William, Joseph. Thomas and Zachariah. George W. Haden was reared on the farm. When but six months old, his mother carried him on horseback from Maryland to Logan County, Ky., where his parents lived until he was four years old, when they moved to Todd County, and lived three years. Then they went to Maryland where his father died in a short time. After a residence of four years in Maryland, George W. returned to Logan County, Ky., with his mother. In 1837, he moved to Muhlenberg County, where he owned about 500 acres of land and about thirty negroes at breaking out of the war. He was married April 29, 1850, to Lucy R. Slaughter, a native of Russellville, Logan County and a daughter of Clayton Slaughter and Amanda P. (Morton) Slaughter, born in Logan County, Ky., in 1808, and Virginia in 1809, respectively. Clayton Slaughter was the son of Thomas Slaughter, who was born in Kentucky. To Mr. and Mrs. Haden were born ten children, eight receiving names: Joseph C., Alice (deceased) Amanda M. (Bohannan), Nellie (deceased), Harriet (deceased), George (deceased), Kelley (deceased) and Roy. Mr. Haden cast his first vote for Martin Van Buren in 1836; voted the Whig ticket from 1840 to 1860. JESSE S. HILL was born March 14, 1841, in Muhlenburgh County, near Bremen, and is the first of four boys and two girls, born to Jacob and Nancy (Danner) Hill, both natives of Muhlenburgh County. Jacob Hill was a son of Thomas Hill. Thomas Hill was a native of Maryland, of English descent; came to this county about the year 1812, where he purchased and improved land; his wife, Nancy (Noffsinger) Hill, was a native of Virginia, of Dutch descent. The mother of our subject was a daughter of Samuel Danner, who married Catherine Noffsinger, natives of Virginia and of Dutch descent. They came to Muhlenburgh County about 1812, and settled near Bremen. Samuel Dannar was a Dunkard preacher. Jesse S. Hill was reared on a farm, received a common school education, and taught several terms. He lived with his parents until the breaking out of the war, when he enlisted in October, 1861, in Company H, Eleventh Kentucky Volunteer Infantry; was promoted second lieutenant in August, 1862, after the battle of Shiloh; resigned in October, 1862, on account of disability; returned home and engaged in farming and teaching till 1864, when he engaged as a salesman in South Carrollton; in a few months he went to Bremen, where, in 1867, he went into business for himself; in 1869 went into business at South Carrollton, where he was engaged, except one year at Bremen, until 1875, when he was appointed store-keeper for the government eighteen months; in 1877 went to Hanson, Hopkins County, and engaged in the mercantile business; in 1879 returned to South Carrollton, where he has since been successfully engaged in the mercantile business. He was married to Kate Nichols, of Muhlenburgh County, September 14, 1870; she is the daughter of James and Margaret (Lee) Nichols, who were born and reared in Muhlenburgh and Daviess Counties, and their parents were among the earliest settlers of the country. Mr. and Mrs. Hill are Baptists. Mr. Hill is a member of the K. of H.

JEREMIAH M. HOPE was born April 7, 1819, in Muhlenburgh County, Ky., near the sight of the present village of Penrod. His father, James J. Hope, was a native of Virginia, from which State he removed to Georgia when a young man, and there married Susannah Jago, whose father was a native of Maryland, and of Irish descent. James J. Hope, after his marriage, came to Kentucky and located in Muhlenburgh County, where he resided, and where he followed the vocation of farming until the time of his death, which occurred August 30, 1870, at upwards of the age of one hundred and two years. Susannah (Jago) Hope died in 1854, aged seventy-two years; she left six children, four of whom are living. Jeremiah M. remained with his parents until he was twenty-one years of age. His father, being a farmer, required his assistance, so that he had few advantages for an early education. He received an elementary education in the subscription schools of his neighborhood; this he improved in after life, and acquired a fair business education. March 20, 1842, he married Nancy Jane Newman, of Muhlenburgh County. Eight children were born to this marriage; three are now living: Alfred T., William C. and Susan E. Mrs. Nancy J. Hope died December 8, 1863, and on the 13th of September, 1866, Mr. Hope married Sallie, daughter of John and Elizabeth Wood, of Muhlenburgh County. To this marriage are born three children: John F., Porley J. and Jeremiah. Mr. Hope has lived where he now resides for forty-five years; the farm contains 200 acres, seventy of which are in cultivation, and well improved. The farm is adapted to grass, and Mr. Hope carries some stock, but gives more attention to the growing of grain and tobacco. The farm is underlaid with a bed of iron ore fifteen feet in thickness, with an area of one-half a square mile; the lower four or five feet of the vein yields over forty-five per cent of metallic ore, with twenty-two per cent of alumina, silica and phosphorus; the ore can be obtained by the simplest kind of mining. Mr. Hope is a liberal Republican, but takes more interest in his farming than in politics. He is known among his friends and neighbors as one of the most charitable men in the county, to those requiring assistance. He is a member of the Christian Church, in which for twelve years he held the office of clerk, and is now an elder and trustee. He is a member of the Anti-Railroad Organization of Muhlenburgh County. He was one of the pioneers of Muhlenburgh County, and is an expert hunter and a "crack shot." He is the possessor of a rifle that is over forty-five years old, and that never was beaten on a close shot when handled by Mr. Hope.

JOHN C. HOWARD was born August 19, 1828, in Butler County, Ky., and is the youngest child and only son of three children born to James P. and Ann D. (Carson) Howard, natives of Butler County, Ky., and of English and Welsh descent on his father's side, and of English descent on the mother's. James Howard was the son of John Howard, who married Martha Bridges, natives of North Carolina. They moved to Butler County between the years 1785 and 1790; located four miles south of the junction of the Green and Barren Rivers, at a time when there were but few settlers, and had to go forty miles for breadstuffs; lived there until 1822; had up to this time reared eight children. He moved to Calloway County, where he lived until his death. John Howard was the son of Stephen Howard, who married Mary Powell; the latter moved from New River, N. C., to Deep River, forty miles from Cross Creek, where John Howard was born. Stephen Howard and wife died in North Carolina. Stephen's father had four sons: Edmund, Stephen, Nehemiah and Obadiah. J. C. Howard was reared on a farm, and was but four years old when his mother died. At fifteen years of age he engaged as salesman for two years at Morgantown, and acted as deputy sheriff for four years. He then engaged in the mercantile business at Morgantown until 1865, when he moved to Sugar Grove, where he lived one year; in 1866 he moved to Greenville, where he has been engaged in business ever since. He was postmaster for a number of years in Morgantown. He was married in June, 1851, to Amanda Austin, of Butler County, and daughter of Dr. John M. and Zerelda (James) Austin, natives of Maryland and Butler County, and of English descent. To Mr. and Mrs. Howard were born five children: Lillian R. (Yonts), Charles M., John P., Alverda (deceased) and Ana Z. (Eades). Mrs. Howard died in October, 1867, a member of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Howard was next married in October, 1869, to Anna Albert, of Muhlenburgh County, a native of Louisville, and a daughter of James Albert. By this marriage three children were born: Arthur C., Albert (deceased) and Lizzie B. Mr. and Mrs. H. are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. He is a member of the K. of H.

ROLLEY E. HUMPHREY, Muhlenburgh County, was born December 10, 1842, in Webster County, Ky., and is the ninth of six boys and five girls (ten living), born to Rolley and Jennie (Cain) Humphrey; the names of their children are: John, James M., Benjamin W., Rolley E., Samuel C., A. W., Elizabeth, deceased, Rebecca, Amanda, Sallie and Matilda. The parents were born and reared in Ohio County, Ky., were of Irish descent; the father was born in 1802. The grandfather, Dr. Benjamin Humphrey, was a native of Virginia, and came to Ohio County about 1800; the grandfather Cain, was in the battle of New Orleans, and died soon after his return. Rolley E. Humphrey was reared on a farm, and received a fair common school education. He lived with his parents until the age of twenty-one, when he engaged in the saw-mill business, which he followed until 1878; in 1876, he moved to South Carrollton, and built a grist-mill, which he has conducted ever since with success; he and two brothers ran a saw-mill in Evansville for three years, and dealt extensively in timber. In 1878, he lost 12,000 bushels of wheat in Evansville elevator. October 8, 1861, he enlisted in Company A, First Kentucky Confederate Cavalry; took part in the battle of Perryville, Ky., and numerous skirmishes; was wounded in the left foot at Perryville, and discharged in the spring of 1863; was drafted in the Federal service, but was exempted on account of wound; his two brothers were also in the Confederate army. Mr. Humphrey was married, December 25, 1865, to Bethany Ramsey of Webster County, daughter of Alexander and Perthenia Ramsey of Webster County. Mrs. Humphrey died October 25, 1866, a member of the Baptist Church. Mr. Humphrey next married, March 7, 1877, Cordie Ashly, of Hopkins County, daughter of Jackson and Elizabeth (Pritchett) Ashly, of Hopkins County, Ky. WILLIAM E. ROBINSON, Muhlenburgh County, was born in Granger County, Tenn., 1826, and when yet a small boy, removed to Kentucky with his father, Feeling Robinson, whose wife was Susan Shelton, whose parents were natives of Muhlenburgh County, Ky. Feeling Robinson was a farmer; was engaged in the Seminole war in 1818, and died in 1863; his wife died in 1858. W. E. Robinson remained with his parents until he attained the age of twenty-two; then made a trip to New Orleans and to Lake Pontchartrain. In the summer of 1849, raised a crop of corn on his father's farm, and continued farming in connection with flat-boating until he was twenty-eight years; then discontinued the river trade and settled on a farm that he had purchased in 1850; this he subsequently sold and bought a farm on Green River, where he now resides, and which is in a good state of cultivation, and improved with good fencing, dwelling, barns and orchard. The excellent water privileges adapt this farm to stock raising, but Mr. Robinson gives most of his attention to grain and tobacco. In the year 1850, he married Eliza Kimmel, a native of Muhlenburgh County. Their union proved to be a happy one. They are the parents of eight children, seven of whom are living, viz.: Irene J., David M., Pallas G., Ellen, Theodosia, Sherman and John. Mr. Robinson inherited no part of his property, but has gained all by his own labor and management. He is a public-spirited citizen, and is interested in the improvement of the country. His religious views are based on the rule of doing unto others as he would have others do unto him. Politically he is a Republican, and served as a soldier in the war of 1861; was a member of Company I, Eleventh Kentucky Infantry; was discharged for disability in 1862, and is now a pensioner.

DAVID B. ROLL was born in Muhlenburgh County, Ky., September 16, 1827, and is a son of Abraham and Rachel V. (Rhoades) Roll, the former of whom was a native of Hardin and the latter of Muhlenburgh County, Ky. Abraham Roll was educated and married in his native county, where he was engaged in farming for several years. He then removed to Muhlenburgh County, where he bought a partially improved farm, upon which he resided until his death, which occurred in January, 1838, in his fortieth year. His father, Michael Roll, Sr., the grandfather of our subject, was a veteran of the Revolutionary war. David B. Roll received such an education in youth as could be obtained at the early schools of Kentucky. His father died when he was ten years old. He was then employed as a laborer at various pursuits until he was seventeen years old. After that he was engaged in flat-boating on the Green, Ohio and Mississippi Rivers for some nine years. He then bought 260 acres of wild land near the Green River, in Muhlenburgh County, Ky., where he subsequently improved a farm and resided for some three years, when he sold this place and again bought wild land adjoining, where he commenced to improve other farms. There he remained only one year, when he again sold out and bought another farm in the same neighborhood, upon which he has ever since resided. Mr. Roll now owns some 1,100 acres of choice agricultural land, about 300 acres of which are improved. Mr. Roll was a magistrate in his county for ten years in succession. He was married, July 12, 1849, to Margaret A. Jackson, also a native of Muhlenburgh County, Ky. Eleven children were the fruit of this union, nine of whom—six sons and three daughters—are still living. Mr. Roll and wife have been for forty years members of the United Baptist Church, in which he now holds the office of deacon. He is also a member of the Masonic fraternity. He is largely engaged in the live stock business, both as a stock-raiser and a stock dealer. He owns some of the best and most valuable live-stock in Muhlenburgh County. In politics Mr. Roll is a Democrat.

ERASTUS P. RUST, Muhlenburgh

County, was born February 1, 1852, in McLean County, Ky., and is the sixth of seven children—six boys and one girl, five now living—born to John J. and Sallie J. (Coffman) Rust, natives respectively of Muhlenburgh and McLean Counties, and of German descent. John J. Rust was the son of John Rust, who married a Miss Anthony, both natives of Virginia. He was a farmer and distiller, and one of the first settlers of Kentucky. The mother of our subject was a daughter of Benjamin Coffman, a farmer and distiller, who married A. Noffsinger; they were Virginians. Erastus P. was reared on a farm and attended the common schools. He lost his father and mother on the same day, of milk sickness, in October, 1858. He lived with Benjamin Pla until he was seventeen years of age, when he engaged in farming for himself until 1881, when he engaged in the mercantile business in Bremen, which he still continues with success; he was also engaged in the tobacco trade for two years. He owns ninety-five acres of land in McLean County. He was married February 24, 1873, to Fannie Coffman, of McLean County, daughter of Samuel and Martha (Deever) Coffman, natives of McLean County. By this union six children were born: Sallie J. (deceased), Flora M., Mollie S., Nannie S. (deceased), Lillie M. and J. J. Blocher, born June 16, 1885. Mrs. Rust is a member of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Rust is a Mason and formerly a Granger.

CAPT. JAMES BUCKNER RYAN, Muhlenburgh County, was born in Bath County, Ky., June 24, 1838. He is a son of Maj. Moses Ryan, who is also a native of Kentucky, born in Mason County about the year 1796; his wife, Dulcinea, whom he married in 1820, was a daughter of William Payne, of Mason County. They were the parents of six daughters and one son, all of whom were born and educated in Kentucky and Tennessee. Three are now living: Mrs. D. C. Payne, of Kansas City; Mrs. M. A. Hall, of Omaha, Neb., and James B. Moses Ryan, in 1853, removed to Nashville, Tenn., where he resided until his death, which occurred in April, 1862. During his life-time he accumulated a large property, and was in affluent circumstances. James B. Ryan received a collegiate education, and is well versed in the literature of the day, as well as in the English classics. In 1861, he entered the Confederate army with the rank of second lieutenant, in the First Battalion of Tennessee Cavalry, which office he resigned in 1862, and soon after recruited a company for the Confederate service. He was chosen and commissioned a captain, and with his company joined the command of Gen. John H. Morgan, with whom he served until the close of the war. He returned to his former home in Nashville, Tenn., where he remained until 1870, when he sought the solitude of the wilds of Kentucky, and entered the coal business on a limited scale, and settled on Mud River in Muhlenburgh County, where for three years his leisure time was spent; his constant and sole companions were his gun and dog, but in this seclusion he found the quietude he so much craved, and spent the time in hunting and fishing, and in the study of various subjects, from the books that he could procure from time to time. In 1873, having discovered that the locality was rich in minerals and ores, he set to work assiduously to develop the resources of that section, to which purpose he devoted every energy, and through this means was organized the "Mud River Coal, Coke & Iron Manufacturing Company," and since that time he has been the superintendent of the operating force at the mines. His wife, formerly Miss Steele, of Muhlenburgh County, is a lady of rare accomplishments; they are the parents of one daughter, Carrie, and two sons, Herbert and Buck. The captain is a Master Mason of Rochester Lodge No. 270, of the order of A. F. & A. M. Politically he is a Democrat, and cast his first vote for Bell and Everett in 1860, and has voted on two occasions only since. He was opposed to the secesssion movement, and voted against it first, but when his adopted State went out of the Union, he went out with it. In religious matters he is a liberal thinker, and his principles are based on justice and fair dealing.

WILLIAM H. H. SANDUSKY was born October 22, 1837, in New Geneva, Fayette Co., Penn., and is the only child of James and Nancy (Dunum) Sandusky, who were born and reared in Fayette County, Penn. James Sandusky was a son of Jacob Sandusky, who married Sallie Way. They were natives of Washington County, Ky., and Manchester, Penn., respectively. Jacob was by occupation a stonecutter and farmer; was in the Indian wars in Kentucky, Ohio and Indiana; was a brother of Gen. Sandusky and a son of Nathaniel Sandusky, who came from Poland with nine children (original name Sowdosko); he was president of a fur-trading company. Subject's great-grandfather settled in Sandusky City, Ohio, while a fur-trader. The mother of our subject was the daughter of Abraham Dunum, a son of Col. Dunum, of Revolutionary fame

William H. H. Sandusky, at the age of ten, commenced steam-boating on the Monongahela River. In 1848, he attended bar for his uncle, in the fall of 1848, went to New Orleans; thence to Louisville, St. Louis and to Boonville, Mo., from which place he started across the plains with an ox-team to Salt Lake City. At Ogden, in the winter of 1849–50, he joined the Hudson Bay Fur Company. In the spring of 1850, he went to Fort Hall, and remained there until 1851; thence to American Falls on Snake River; thence to Salmon River, where the summer was spent in trading. While there he carried the private mail to Oregon City. He spent the winter in Salt Lake City, and in 1852, he made the first whisky in the Mormon city. August 4, 1854, he was wagon master when Albert Sidney Johnson crossed Jordan River into Salt Lake City. In 1854 he returned to the States; first to St. Louis and then to Cairo. While at Cairo, he transferred the government mail for one year. Then engaged at steam-boating until the war broke out, when he engaged in steamboating for the government; was a scout for Gen. Lew Wallace; was pilot of the steamboat "Chancellor, No. 2," at Belmont. He landed the first transport at Birds Point, Mo.; assisted in towing the pontoon bridge under Gen. Fremont; was pilot of dispatch boat to Gen. Oglesby at Norfolk, Mo.; was on "Lake Era, No. 2," carrying dispatches from Cairo to Paducah; went on steamboat, "United States," and towed gun-boats to the battle of Ft. Henry; thence to Shiloh or Pittsburgh Landing. He carried dispatches for Gen. Grant up the Tennessee River, and while thus engaged found the body of George Denney, of Wisconsin; was on a transfer at Cairo, and carried all government stores to Columbus, Ky., also supplies to army on Island No. 10; was in a guerrilla fight, when Gen. Faulkner was captured at Reel Foot Lake. Mr. Sandusky continued thus in the government employ until the close of the war. He was in Memphis during Forrest's raid into that city, and was severely wounded by having a pile of cartridges thrown upon him. Mr. Sandusky has led an eventful life, and has all the orders he received from numerous generals carefully preserved. At the close of the war he went to Cairo, and engaged in steam-boating; in 1878, he moved to Central City, Ky., where he has been engaged in the hotel business, and is now building one of the finest hotels between Louisville and Paducah. In 1858 he married Katie Mangin, of Cairo, a native of Belfast, Ireland; to them was born one child, Alonzo (deceased). Mrs. Sandusky died in 1864, and Mr. S., in 1876, married Miss F. A. Logan, of Marion, Ky., and a daughter of J. B. and Lucy (Payne) Logan. To this union one child was born, Genava. Mr. Sandusky is a member of the K. of H.

JAMES H. SCOTT, one of the pioneers of Muhlenburgh County, was born in Roanoke County, Va., September 14, 1800, is the tenth of six boys and six girls, and the only one now living, born to Nathan and Sarah (Pogue) Scott, natives respectively of Ireland and Virginia. Nathan Scott came to America a short time before the Revolution with his mother and family, and settled in Roanoke County, Va., from whence the family went to different parts of the country, to South Carolina, and to Kentucky. Subject's uncle, William Scott, took an active part in the Revolution, and at one time with ten others (two being Indians), took twenty-two British prisoners without firing a gun. Nathan Scott was a weaver and a farmer; was married during the Revolution, and died in 1818, at the age of seventy-seven years; his wife died in 1812. James H. Scott had two brothers in the war of 1812. He received a fair English education, and after he was eighteen years of age began to work by the month for four years, when he began the cabinet-maker's trade, which he followed until 1860, when his health compelled him to quit work. In 1828, he immigrated with three brothers to Kentucky, and settled in Muhlenburgh County, where he has since been a constant resident, except two years he spent after marriage in Logan County. By energy and hard labor he accumulated about 500 acres of land, which he has given to his children. He was married November 6, 1834, to Virginia Kennerly, of Logan County, daughter of Philip and Jane (Carthra) Kennerly, who were reared in Rockingham County, Va. To Mr. and Mrs. Scott were born seven children, three living: John George, John W. and Nathan. Mr. Scott and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. John W. Scott was born December 29, 1849, where he now resides, and where he owns 270 acres of fine land. He is the fifth child of James H. Scott. He received a common school education; he is living on the homestead, caring for his parents in their old days. He was married, February 7, 1878, to Victoria Johnson, of McLean County, Ky., a daughter of Peter and Elizabeth (Coffman) Johnson, born in McLean County; four children were born to this union, two now living, May and William H.

THOMAS R. STOKES was born in Muhlenburgh County, November 1, 1854, and is the eldest of two children born to John and Susan (Raynolds) Stokes, natives of Muhlenburgh County, Ky. Thomas R. was reared on a farm, and received a good English education; attended Greenville College three sessions. He lived with his parents until he became of age. He was married, March 9, 1879, to Anna Morehead, of Muhlenburgh County, a daughter of Dr. John and Emma (Martin) Morehead. This union is blessed with two children: John R. and Lesse B.

JOHN K. SULLIVAN, Muhlenburgh County, was born December 17, 1836, five miles from South Carrollton. He is the second of eight children—five boys and three girls—born to Rolley and Lucy (Nall) Sullivan, natives of North Carolina and Washington County, Ky., respectively, and of Irish and Dutch descent. Rolley Sullivan was the son of Uriah Sullivan, who was born in North Carolina, and came to Kentucky in 1810, first settling in Christian County, and five months later came to Muhlenburgh County, and settled on Green River, on a farm of 200 acres, which our subject now owns; he died in 1816. John K. Sullivan was reared on a farm, received a fair English education, and taught school several terms in an early day. He made his home with his parents until he was twenty-eight years old, with the exception of two years he spent at Ceralvo, Ohio County, during the war. He has been extensively engaged in stock raising, in which he has been very successful; he owns 1,450 acres of land in good condition, which he has accumulated by his own industry, and resides in one of the finest residences in South Carrollton. He was married November 29, 1865, to Mary C. Rowan, of McLean County, Ky., and daughter of John and Lydia (Stevens) Rowan, natives of Ohio County. Six children were born to this union: John W., Robert, Lydia, Stephen (deceased) Minnie and Lucy. Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan are members of the Baptist and Methodist Episcopal Churches, respectively; he is a member of the K. of H., and was a member of the Grange.

EDWARD SWEATT, M. D., Muhlenburgh County, was born in Butler County, Ky., February 28, 1854, and is a son of William and Elizabeth Sweatt (Sweatt), the former of whom was a native of North Carolina and the latter of Tennessee, both of English-German and Irish descent. When a lad some ten years old, William Sweatt removed with his parents to Tennessee, where he was educated and married, and where he was engaged in farming for several years. In about 1843, he removed to Butler County, Ky., where he resided until his death, which occurred April 30, 1861, in his fiftieth year. He enlisted in the war with Mexico, but the war closed before he reached the field. He and wife were members of the Disciple Church. His father, George Sweatt, the grandfather of our subject, was a veteran of the war of 1812. Dr. Edward Sweatt received a good common school and academic education in youth, and was employed on his father's farm until he was seventeen years old, after which he was engaged in teaching and attending school until he was twenty-three. He then commenced the study of medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. J. F. Strother, of Rochester, Ky. He attended lectures at the Louisville Medical College of Louisville, and also at the Hospital Medical College of the same city, graduating with high honors from the latter institution in 1882. He practiced for a short time before graduation in Butler County, and in May, 1882, located at Paradise, Muhlenburgh County, where he has since practiced his profession with excellent success, having secured a large and lucrative practice. He was first married February 6, 1873, to Martha E. Tanner, a native of Butler County, Ky. Two children—one son and one daughter—were the fruit of this union. Mrs. Martha E. Sweatt departed this life September 18, 1876. She was a devoted and consistent member of the Methodist Protestant Church. The Doctor was next married November 7, 1883, to Charlena K. Stum, a native of Ohio County, Ky. One son, Charles E., has blessed their union. Mrs. Sweatt is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. The Doctor belongs to no church, but is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and is J. W. elect of his lodge, viz.: Paradise Lodge No. 312. In politics he is a Democrat.

CAPT. WILLIAM FLAM WARD, Muhlenburgh County, Ky., was born in that county January 22, 1835. His father died in Natchez, Miss., during the cholera scourge of 1851, while under the care of Dr. L. T. Blackburn, late governor of Kentucky. The mother died in 1853, leaving six daughters and one son, William F., who was then about fourteen years of age. He continued to reside on the farm, where he worked during the summer season, and in winter flatboated on the river between Rochester, Ky., and New Orleans, La. At the beginning of the civil war in 1861, he recruited a company and joined the Eleventh Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, in which he held the rank of lieutenant; after the engagement at Stone River, he was made captain, which rank he held until he was discharged at the close of his term of service, December 16, 1864. He was engaged in the battles of Shiloh, Stone River, siege of Knoxville, Atlanta and all the other engagements in which his regiment participated. While in the United States service he received two severe wounds, one in the right side at the battle of Stone River, the other in the left thigh, and received at an engagement near Knoxville, Tenn., on November 15, 1863. After the close of the war he returned home and resumed farming, which he has continued with extraordinary success up to the present time. He owns 1,700 acres of land in Muhlenburgh County, a large portion of it is fenced and in cultivation, and improved with good houses, barns and other modern conveniences, also an orchard of 400 trees in good bearing condition. The Captain's strong point is stock farming. He commenced life for himself with only $100, and has arrived at his present state of comfortable independence through his own labor and judicious management. He attributes much of his success to the assistance and encouragement of his wife, Minnie J. Nourse, to whom he was married on January 28, 1863; she is a native of Butler County; to them have been born four children: Farrell A. P., Atlanta Beatrice, Oma Lincoln, and James Garfield. Mrs. Ward is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Capt. Ward is not a member of any church, his religious views are founded on the principles of justice and fair dealing. He is a Master Mason, and a member of Rochester Lodge No. 270; he is a Republican, and takes a lively interest in the political questions of the day, more especially those that pertain to the interests of his own county. Flam Ward, his grandfather, was a native of Ireland and immigrated to Virginia, where he married Mary Reilly; at an early day came to Kentucky and settled on Gaspar River, in Warren County. He was killed by an ambushed assassin near Russellville in 1818. The maternal grandfather, David Kimmel, was of German descent, and a native of Pennsylvania; he died in 1878, aged upward of one hundred years.

WARREN P. WHITMER was born January 27, 1849 in Muhlenburgh County, Ky.; is the sixth of nine children—five boys and two girls now living—born to Samuel and Polly (Short) Whitmer, natives of Muhlenburgh County, and of German descent. Samuel was the son of John Whitmer, who married a Miss Sheets; they were born and reared in Virginia, and came to Muhlenburgh County about 1805 or 1808, and settled in the western part, where he died in 1854, at nearly eighty years of age. The mother of our subject was a daughter of Jacob Short, who married a Miss Scott; they were born and reared in Virginia, of German descent; came to Muhlenburgh County, about 1810, and settled in the western part of the county, where they subsequently owned a large farm. Warren P. was reared on a farm; he received a good common school education, and at the age of twenty-one, entered the academy at Sacramento for three years; attended West Kentucky College one year; taught one term of five months. In 1872, he moved to South Carrollton, where he purchased a livery where he has been engaged ever since, meeting with good success. Mr. Whitmer was married, April, 1879, to Mary Kate Jones, of Muhlenburgh County, Ky., daughter of Joshua and Amanda (Finch) Jones, who were reared in Muhlenburgh County. Their union is blessed with three children: Bessie, Marshall and Joshua. Mr. and Mrs. Whitmer are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church; he is a member of the K. of H.

WILLIAM B. WICKLIFFE, Muhlenburgh County, was born February 15, 1808, three miles from South Carrollton. He is the eighth of five boys and five girls—all of whom lived to man and womanhood—born to Arington and Catharine (Davis) Wickliffe, natives of Prince William County, Va., and of English descent. Arington was a soldier in the struggle for Independence, and came to Muhlenburgh County in 1801, and purchased and settled 400 acres of land near South Carrollton. He died, in 1820, at the age of sixty-eight years. W. B. Wickliffe was reared on a farm, and lived with his parents till their death; his mother died in 1836, aged sixty-eight years. Mr. Wickliffe has had considerable experience of life in the wilderness, and when a young man made several trips on flat-boats to New Orleans. When the war broke out, he owned 500 acres of land, and sixteen slaves; he now owns forty acres, where he resides, south side of railroad. He was married, February 16, 1837, to Sarah J. Bodine, of Muhlenburgh County, Ky., a daughter of Jacob and Jane (Wickliffe) Bodine, natives, respectively, of Nelson County, Ky., and Virginia, and of Dutch and English descent. To this union were born two children, both deceased. Mrs. Wickliffe died in 1842, and July 12, 1854, Mr. Wickliffe married Mrs. Margaret Nicholls, of Muhlenburgh County, a daughter of Abner and Margaret (Barnett) Lee, who were natives of North Carolina; three children were born by this marriage: Sarah (deceased), Carlisle (deceased), and William A., who is now county attorney, and ranks as one of the foremost young men of the county. Mrs. Wickliffe had five children by her former husband, viz.: Pamelia (King), Elizabeth (Glover), Catherine (Hill), James M. and Louisa (Grundy). Mr. and Mrs. Wickliffe are members of the Baptist Church; he is a member of the F. & A. M. since 1851.

JOHN A. WILLIAMS, Muhlenburgh County, was born in Wilson County, Tenn., April 28, 1840, and is the fifth of eight children born to Robert and Jennie (Williams) Williams, natives of North Carolina and Virginia, and of Irish descent. The mother of our subject was the daughter of James Williams, of North Carolina. He had been sheriff for one or two terms in Wilson County, Tenn. John A. Williams was reared on the farm, and attended the common schools; he was but six years old when his father died; he lived with his mother until twenty-one years of age, when he enlisted in Company K, Eleventh Kentucky Infantry, October 20, 1861, under Capt. M. J. Roark, P. B. Hawkins, colonel commanding; took part in the battles of Murfreesboro, Tenn., siege of Knoxville, Atlanta, Perryville, Ky., and numerous skirmishes; was discharged in December, 1864, at Bowling Green, Ky.; returned home and engaged in farming and trading in stock until 1881, when he engaged in the livery business in Greenville. In 1852 he moved, with his mother, to Muhlenburgh County. He was married, February 23, 1866, to Mary Eades, of Muhlenburgh County, a daughter of Robert and Mary (Colman) Eades, natives of Virginia. One child, Minnie, has been born to this union. Mr. and Mrs. Williams are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church; he is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

DANIEL H. WILLIAMS was born in Muhlenburgh County, Ky., March 5, 1843; he is a son of Daniel and Nancy (Shelton) Williams, who were natives of Virginia and Kentucky, respectively. They were married in Muhlenburgh County, in 1815. Daniel Williams was a farmer, and died in 1853, in Anderson County, Tex. He was a son of William Williams, who was also a native of Virginia, and served as a soldier in the Revolution. Daniel H. was the youngest of a family of thirteen children. He remained with his parents until their death, and improved what opportunities he had for procuring an education, after which he worked on the farm until 1861, when he enlisted as a soldier in Company B, of the Eleventh Kentucky Infantry, Federal; while engaged in the battle of Shiloh, Tenn., he received a gunshot wound in the right wrist, which disabled him for service, and on the 23d of April, 1863, he received an honorable discharge from the army, and returned to his home and resumed farming. He bought his first land in 1869; his farm is now one of the best of its area in the county; is productive, and improved with good comfortable dwellings, good barns, and a large orchard of flourishing trees; about 100 acres are well fenced, and in cultivation in grain and tobacco. Mr. Williams is a Democrat, though not a politician; his time and talent are expended on his farming interests and in the improvement of the country. Mr. Williams, in religious matters, is a liberal thinker, and is not a member of any church. He is a Master Mason, a member of the Rochester Lodge No. 270, and is unmarried.

JOHN H. WOOD, a native of Muhlenburgh County, was born May 4, 1846. His father, Zilman Wood, was also a native Kentuckian, a farmer and a boatman. He died in 1858, aged sixty years; his widow, Mary (Kirtley) Wood, of Muhlenburgh County, still survives him, aged fifty-nine years; she was born in 1826; her children were seven in number, four are living: James W., Elias, Sarah E. and John H. After the death of his father, John H. remained with his mother, and worked on the farm for her support, until after the close of the war in 1865. On the 25th of October, of that year, he married Mattie B., a daughter of William H. and Melissa C. Summons, of Muhlenburgh County; she was born March 22, 1846. One daughter, Ida, a young lady of seventeen, is their only child. Mr. Wood, in early life received a good education. After marriage he bought 240 acres of land in the county of Muhlenburgh, and continued farming, in connection with the log and lumber trade, in which he has been very successful. He is an energetic man of business; his farm and buildings are among the best in this section; his dwelling, an excellently built frame, is the work of his own hands, he having acquired the carpenter and joiner's trade, which he followed during the Rebellion. Mr. Wood is a Republican; he has no political aspirations, however, and has but little time outside of his business to devote to political affairs. He is a member of the Baptist faith, while his wife and daughter are members of the Methodist Church. Mr. Wood is an advocate of the temperance cause, though his views on the subject are not severe.

DR. BENJAMIN W. WOODBURN, Muhlenburgh County, was born May 7, 1834, in Christian County, Ky., and is the fourth of six boys and six girls, born to James and Amelia (Higgins) Woodburn, natives respectively, of Christian County, Ky., and South Carolina, of Irish and English descent. The father, who was a son of James and Mary (Wilkey) Woodburn, natives of Ireland and South Carolina, emigrated from South Carolina to Christian County about 1800, where he entered and improved 200 acres of land, on which he lived until his death, which occurred when our subject was nineteen years old; he was sheriff of Christian County under the old constitution. The mother of our subject was the daughter of William Higgins, who married Charity Compton. Mr. Higgins was a soldier of the Revolution, a farrier and moved to Tennessee; thence to Christian County in an early day; later to Trigg County. Dr. Woodburn remained with his mother on the farm until he was twenty-five years old; in 1858, he commenced the study of medicine under Dr. J. W. Morehead of Bremen, his mother having moved to the latter place in 1856; in 1860, commenced practicing in Trigg County, Ky.; in 1861, returned to Bremen, where he has been engaged in his practice ever since with good success; is the possessor of a good farm and a fine residence in Bremen. He was married January 5, 1862, to Cecilia S. Cosby, of Muhlenburgh County; born in Amelia County, Va., and the daughter of John D. and Mary L. (Bellmy) Cosby, of Virginia, and of English descent. To Dr. Woodburn and wife were born three children: Clarence, Anna Lee, and James C. He and wife are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. The Doctor is a Mason.

DR. W. H. YOST, one of the leading physicians of Greenville, Muhlenburgh Co., Ky., was born July 5, 1821, in Logan County, Ky. He is the third of five children born to Jacob and Matilda (Johnson) Yost, natives of Virginia. Jacob Yost was a son of Henry Yost, who married Miss Douthit. He was born and reared in Germany; was a gunsmith and made guns for the Revolution. Subject's mother was a daughter of William Johnson, a farmer. Dr. Yost was reared on a farm and received a good education; in January, 1845, he married Mary J. Brank, of Muhlenburgh County, Ky., daughter of Ephraim and Mary (Campbell) Brand, natives respectively of Garrard and Muhlenburgh Counties, Ky. The Doctor had born to him by this union five children, three of whom lived to be grown: Mary M., wife of T. J. Slaton; William H. and Ephraim B. (practicing medicine at St. Louis). Mrs. Yost died August, 1862, a member of the Presbyterian Church. Dr. Yost next married Tabitha Brank, sister of his first wife, who died in October, 1877. Dr. Yost is a Mason and a member of the Presbyterian Church. He cast his first presidential vote for Henry Clay, in 1844; since the war he has voted the Democratic ticket.

OHIO COUNTY.

WILLIAM HENRY ACTON was born November 4, 1834, in Ohio County, Ky., where he has always resided. His father, Bartemus Acton, a native of Charles County, Md., removed to Kentucky about 1825, and died in 1867, at the age of sixty-five years. He was the son of Oscar Acton, of Maryland. Bartemus married Sarah Robey, of Maryland, who died in 1850, and their children are Susanna C. (Mitchell), Mary J. (Bean), Thomas W., Gabriel, Chloe A. E. (Bean), William Henry, Fielder W., Martha A. (Crawford) and Eveline (Davis). January 24, 1856, William Henry Acton married Martha J., daughter of Hugh C. and Rebecca (Forman) Crawford, of Nelson County, Ky.; she was born April 28, 1838, and to them have been born William M., Stephen S., Sarah P. (deceased), Amanda E., Hugh C., Rebecca E., Robert B., and Ira W. Mr. Acton is a farmer, owning 240 acres of fine land in a good state of cultivation. In religion he is a Methodist, and in politics a Democrat.

WILLIAM PORTER ALLEN was born October 18, 1829, in Ohio County, Ky., where he has always resided. His father, Capt. Levi Allen, a native of Sumner County, Tenn., was born in 1794, a soldier in the war of 1812, and died in 1861. He was the son of Theophilus Allen, of Maryland, who died about 1835, at the age of sixty-five years. His father was Rhodom Allen, of Maryland. Levi was twice married; first, to Jane, daughter of John Esque, of Tennessee, and to them were born Alfred, Bradford and Franklin. He afterward married Elizabeth (Allen), and from this union sprang Elizabeth J. (Earp), Louisa (Clark), Amanda M. (Willson), William P., James H., David, Eli B., Margaret (Axton), Oscar and Caroline (Awtry). January 8, 1850, Mr. Allen married Martha A., daughter of Willis and Lucinda (Bratcher) Campbell, of Ohio County; she was born November 2, 1836, and their union has been blessed by the birth of Levi, Ledisca A. (Miller), James B., Franklin and Lueller. Mr. Allen is a farmer, having 126 acres of fair land in good condition, and in a high state of cultivation. He is a member of the Christian Church and of the Masonic fraternity. He is a Republican.

JAMES FERDINAND AMBROSE, Ohio County, was born February 6, 1845, on the place where he now resides, in Ohio County, Ky. His father was born November 24, 1801, in Ohio County, and died in 1873. His grandfather, a native of Germany, was a patriotic soldier, under Gen. Green, in the American Revolution. Subject's mother, Betsey Ambrose, died July 26, 1868. To her and husband were born Mary M. (Smith), Pricy S. (Medcalf), William L., James Ferdinand, Sallie A. (Johnson) and Annie E. In youth James F. was fortunate in receiving a common English education, and has, in a commendable manner, availed himself of every opportunity of seeking information. December 18, 1873, he was united in marriage to Charlotte, daughter of John and Charlotte (Smith) Midkiff, of Ohio County, born April 18, 1849, and this union has been blessed by the birth of two daughters, viz.: Iva and Myrtie. Mr. Ambrose is a farmer, owning 180 acres of well-improved land in a good state of cultivation. In politics he affiliates with the Democratic party.

HENRY FREDERICK ARMENDT, Ohio County, was born in Lawrence County, Ky., February 5, 1853, and in childhood removed with his parents to Ohio County, where he has since resided. His father, Henry F. Armendt, a native of the city of Darmstadt, was born April 30, 1826, and landed in the United States in 1848. His father, Louis, and his mother, Sophie, natives of Darmstadt, were intelligent and well educated. Henry F. married Margaret M., daughter of Dr. John and Magdalen (Lerg) Weinsheimer, of Bingen on the Rhine; she was born in Oppenheim on the Rhine, September 24, 1828, and from their union sprang Henrietta M. (Becker), Louis G., Henry Frederick, William B., John A., Laura I., Eleanor H. and Mary F. April 19, 1877, Henry Frederick Armendt married Ida E., daughter of Alfred T. and Sarah J. Hines, of Ohio County; she was born February 18, 1857, and to them have been born Clarence L. and F. Roy. Mr. Armendt was reared a farmer until his eighteenth year, when he labored at the carpenter's trade for three years. He served two years as guager in the United States revenue service and has recently been engaged in the distilling business. In 1881, he commenced a general merchandising business, in which he has met with encouraging success, being located at Hines' Ferry. He took the United States census in 1880. Politically is a Republican.

HARDIN ASHLEY, deceased, was born March 20, 1836, in Grayson County, Ky., and is a son of Carey and Matilda (Bratcher) Ashley. In September, 1859, he married Eliza, daughter of Jonathan and Mahala A. (Roach) Hoover, and moved to the farm where his widow now resides. He left an estate of 234 acres, divided in two highly improved farms, of which the widow has complete ownership. His death occurred June 13, 1884. He was the father of eleven children, viz.: Mahala Ann (wife of J. H. Ambrose), Matilda L., Elmore, Morgan, Elizabeth, Octavia, James Scott, Owan, Cordelia, Soporo and Hardin.

ALBERT S. AULL, Esq., was born in Owensboro, Ky., October 5, 1840, and was reared to manhood at that place. In 1861 he enlisted in the Fourth Kentucky Infantry, remaining in that service eighteen months, and in 1863 located in Ohio County, where he now resides. His father, Robert P. Aull, a native of Bardstown, was born in 1812; removed to Daviess County in 1833, and died in 1871; he was the son of James Aull. Robert P. married Sarah E., daughter of William and Ann (Kinney) Steele, of Owensboro, born in London in 1818, and died in 1852. Their offspring are subject, Alcinda (Luckett) and Henry. To him by a second marriage were born John A. and Belle (Springfield). Squire Aull obtained a good common school education and is a reading man. He was married June 17, 1864, to America, daughter of William G. and Amanda (Redding) Wallace, of Ohio County, born September 25, 1846, and to them have been born Thomas Henry, Eugene S., Ada L., Jennie L. and Edna. Squire Aull engaged in merchandising for some years. He also served as constable and postmaster, and is now magistrate and a member of the court of claims. In politics he is a Republican.

EDWARD G. AUSTIN, Ohio County. The ancestors of Mr. Austin were among those who came at an early day from Virginia to this State and have always been prominent citizens. His father was the celebrated Rev. Bishop James F. Austin, who was born in Ohio County in 1820, and baptized by the Rev. Alfred Taylor, one of Kentucky's earliest ministers. Bishop Austin was educated in the common schools, and later acquired a vast fund of information by close study and application, and at the age of twenty-two entered the ministry of the Baptist Church, and although his labors were mostly in Ohio, Muhlenburgh, Warren, Daviess and Butler Counties, he established a reputation throughout the entire State, and was for many years superintendent of the Association of Ministers. As a pulpit orator, financial manager and bishop his rank was second to none. He died of Bright's disease, October 4, 1883. Mr. Austin's mother was a Miss Corrinna Thomas, also a native of Ohio County, born in 1825. She obtained her education in the common schools, and was married in 1843. They had thirteen children, five of whom never reached the years of accountability: James P. married a Miss Phelps and has two children: Sally, wife of W. L. Rowe, has three children; Josephine, wife of F. J. Davenport, of Ellis County, Tex., has seven children; William T.; Luvena (deceased), Victoria, wife of Thomas Hendricks; our subject, and John W. The mother still lives at the old homestead, six miles southwest of Cromwell, where they have 340 acres of fine land.

WILLIAM McKENDREE AWTRY, Esq., was born April 20, 1842, near Rosine, Ohio Co., Ky., where he has always retained his residence. His father, William Awtry, a native of Metcalfe County, Ky., in youth removed with his parents to Ohio County, where he died in 1863, at the age of fifty-seven years. He was the son of John Awtry, who settled on the farm where the village of Rosine now stands, and died about 1835, at an advanced age. William, our subject's father, married Elizabeth, daughter of Samuel Wilson, of Ohio County; she died in 1851, aged forty-two years; and to them were born Polly A. (Pierce), Susan, Bethair (Sinclair), Sarah (Camp), John W., William McKendree, Nancy (White) and Almeda (Raley). In youth, subject's educational advantages were limited, but by careful application he has secured a good store of information and is a useful citizen. September 7, 1870, he married Mrs. Caroline, widow of Lorenzo D. Axton, and daughter of Levi and Elizabeth Allen, of Ohio County; born March 20, 1845, and their union has been blessed by the birth of Elizabeth, William L., Mahala (deceased), Thomas H., Oscar and John L. Squire Awtry is a farmer, having sixty-six acres of fine land in a good state of cultivation. His wife is a member of the Baptist Church. He served the public as constable for some time, and is now magistrate, and a member of the court of claims in Ohio County. He is a member in good standing of the Masonic fraternity; in politics he is an active Republican.

LEVI MARION AXTON, Ohio County, was born June 9, 1845, in Posey County, Ind., and in infancy removed with his mother to the place where he now resides, near Barrett's Ferry, Ohio Co., Ky. In 1861 he enlisted in Company A, Twenty-sixth Kentucky Infantry, and remained in the service during the war. His father, Levi C. Axton, a native of North Carolina, was a soldier in the war of 1812, and died about 1845. He was the son of Robert, of North Carolina. Levi C. married Sallie Jacobs, of Missouri, who died in 1850. Their family consisted of William (drowned), John J. (drowned), Olive (Dymond), James T., Mary E. (Shelton), Benjamin M. (died 1850), Lucy C. (Woodward), Isaac H. and Levi Marion. December 2, 1868, Levi M. married Amanda C., daughter of John F. and Nancy A. (Anderson) Park, of Ohio County; born September 10, 1845, and to her and husband have been born Mary C., Sarah E. (deceased), William L., Enola B., Jonny (deceased), John B., Jimmy (deceased) and Joseph M. At her birth, Mary C. weighed but one and one-half pounds. Mr. Axton is a farmer, having 174 acres of land in good condition and a high state of cultivation. In politics, he is a stanch Republican.

ALEXANDER B. BAIRD was born February 12, 1821, in Ohio County, Ky., a son of James and Rebecca (Barnett) Baird. James Baird, subject's father, was a native of County Derry, Ireland, and when a year old, in 1782, came to America with his parents, who first settled in Chambersburgh, Penn., and lived there seven years; they then moved to Bairdstown, now known as Bardstown, Ky.; this town was first settled by and named in honor of two of subject's grandfather's uncles, who were immigrants from Ireland, and settled the place, after serving through the Revolutionary war in behalf of the colonies. Subject's grandparents moved to Hartford in 1792, where they spent the remainder of their lives. James Baird, subject's father, when twenty-one years old, was appointed sheriff over a large area, now comprising several counties, and was one of the first magistrates of the county, a position he held many years. He was a commissioner in building court-house and jail, and was identified with all public enterprises. He died January 18, 1868; his wife died in September, 1859. They were Cumberland Presbyterians, and reared six children, the eldest and youngest alone survive: Rachael, now Mrs. Thomas Barrett, eighty years old, living in this county, and Alexander B. The latter was reared and given the rudiments of an education in Hartford and vicinity. At twenty-two years of age he was appointed deputy sheriff, and in the years 1844, 1845 and 1846, flat-boated to New Orleans during winters and farmed during summers. In connection with farming for three years, in 1847 he was assessor, and in 1851 was elected one of the first magistrates under the new constitution, but resigned before the expiration of his term, and was elected county judge in 1854, holding the office two terms of four years each. In 1861 he engaged in the tobacco business as agent for a New York firm, continuing until 1870, when he developed a coal mine on the then new Chesapeake, Ohio & Southwestern Railroad. Since 1883 he has been engaged in civil engineering and insurance business; he now holds the position of school trustee. December 24, 1844, he married Miss Sallie M. Barnett; their children are Laura, now Mrs. G. F. Purcell, of Denver, Col.; Clinton T., secretary of the Underwriters' Insurance Company, Louisville, Ky.; Naomi, now Mrs. Samuel E. Hill; Prudie, wife of Dr. V. W. Taylor, Litchfield, Ky.; Dr. A. B. Baird, Jr., of Hartford; Lillie and Ada at home. Mr. and Mrs. Baird are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, in which he is an elder. He has represented the church at the General Assembly at McKeesport, Penn. He is a Royal Arch Mason.

SAMUEL L. BAIRD was born January 27, 1824, in Ohio County, Ky., and is the sixth child in a family of fifteen children born to Thomas and Elizabeth (Ford) Baird. Thomas Baird was born in Bardstown, Ky., where his father, who was a native of Ireland, settled, but soon after moved to this county, and settled near where subject now resides. Thomas Baird was a farmer of limited means, and died in 1859. Samuel L. was reared to farm work, and attended the neighboring schools, and at twenty-one years of age hired out at farm labor for $8 per month. After four years he was overseer in Daviess County for a year, receiving much better pay, which he saved, and returned to this county; bought 100 acres of land (timber), which he improved and traded for his present farm. He now owns a farm in a high state of cultivation, of 228 acres, with large residence and fine surrounding improvements. The farm is well stocked with best breeds of cattle, horses and hogs, and has all the latest improved farm implements. August 28, 1850, he married Miss Tabitha A. Bennett, daughter of Joseph B. and Sarah Bennett. Mr. and Mrs. Baird are members of the Methodist Church. Mr. Baird has served several terms as school trustee. He is a Democrat.

HON. ISAAC H. BAKER, retired merchant, Ohio County, was born in the town of New Liberty, Owen Co., Ky., July 12, 1823. His father, Isaac Baker, a man of indomitable will and energy, quiet and unostentatious in manner, was a native of the same county, and there died in 1872, after an active life as farmer, saddler and grocer. His mother was born in Virginia, but removed to Kentucky when quite young. She died in 1874. Our subject was the eldest of eight children, of whom but one other is still living—Mrs. Pamelia Atherton, now of Ballard County, Ky. Judge Baker has been twice married, first to Charlotte Ann Render, daughter of Robert Render, now deceased. In 1859 Mrs. Baker died, leaving four children: J. W. Baker, a farmer of Beaver Dam Precinct; Laura A., the wife of F. O. Austin, a merchant in Beaver Dam; Naomi, wife of R. P. Hocker, the present sheriff of Ohio County, and Parmelia, wife of Leonard Bean, of Hartford, Ohio County. Judge Baker's second wife, Amelia Maddox, daughter of Samuel Maddox, died May 8, 1881, leaving no children. The Judge was engaged in farming until 1882, when he became a merchant at Beaver Dam. In the early winter of 1884, he sold out his business to Hocker & Co., and retired from active life. He had only such educational advantages as the schools of Kentucky afforded in his early youth. He, however, supplemented these by reading and close application to business, so that whatever was omitted in his training at school, has been acquired, to a considerable extent, by experience. Judge Baker is a firm believer in the doctrines of Alexander Campbell. He was a life-long Democrat until 1876, when he became an active Greenbacker, and in the presidential election of 1884 he voted for Gen. B. F. Butler.

J. W. BAKER, Ohio County. Among the most prominent and respected of the first settlers of Ohio County were the ancestors of this gentleman, whose father is the Hon. I. H. Baker, a sketch of whose life is given elsewhere. Mr. Baker is the only son, and was born April 21, 1846, in Beaver Dam Precinct. He has given his attention to farming, and now owns a good farm with substantial buildings near Mercer's Mine. He also owns a coal mine, which is worked by the Mercers, and has proven very remunerative. Mr. Baker was married June 19, 1867, to Ann Eliza, the seventh child of Thomas O. and Amelia Austin. They have seven children; John H., Amelia Belle (deceased), Thomas O., Robert Luther, William Cloud, Charlotte and Flavius Owen. Mrs. Baker is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and an earnest Christian lady.

AUGUSTUS BAKER, Ohio County, is a native of Tennessee, born in Wilson County, January 1, 1839; his father was also a native of Tennessee, born in 1812. The latter, when a young man, went to North Carolina, where he married Cynthia Robinson in 1838, and removed to Wilson County, Tenn., where he resided until 1852, then removed to Muhlenburgh County, Ky., where his wife, Cynthia, died, leaving six children. He subsequently married Elizabeth, daughter of James Hall, and in 1872 removed to Henderson County, where he resided until his death, which occurred October 3, 1879. Augustus Baker remained with his parents until the age of seventeen, at which time he began to make his own way in the world; worked by the month for about three years; then mined coal, farmed and ran a flat-boat on Green River for several years. In 1882 he bought 140 acres of land, where he now lives, and gives all his attention to farming. March 27, 1859, he was united in marriage with Paulina M., daughter of John E. Steele. Twelve children are the result of this union: Caledonia (deceased), Sophia, Edward, George, Robert, William, Nancy (deceased), Liny, Martha, John (deceased), Richard and an infant son unnamed. In September, 1861, Mr. Baker joined the Federal army; was a member of Company F, Eleventh Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and served in the command of Brig.-Gen. Thomas L. Crittenden until September 18, 1862, when he received an honorable discharge. Mrs. Baker is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Mr. Baker takes no active part in politics, but in principle is a Republican. His religious views are founded on the principle of charity to all and the fulfillment of personal obligations.

GEORGE W. BARNARD was born in Ohio County, Ky., August 10, 1832, and is a son of Loyd and Nancy (Hawker) Barnard, both of whom are natives of Kentucky, and of English descent. Loyd Barnard was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority. Soon after his marriage he bought wild land, near Hogg's Falls, and subsequently improved a farm, upon which he resided until his death, which occurred, in 1843, in his forty-fifth year. He continued to add to his possessions from time to time, owning at his death about 1,000 acres. He and wife were from early life members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in which he officiated for many years as a class leader. George W. Barnard received a fair common school education at the early schools of Ohio County. He has always resided on the old homestead, near Hogg's Falls, where he was born and which he now owns. The farm consists of 160 acres and is well improved. Mr. Barnard is successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits, making the culture of tobacco a specialty. He was married in September, 1854, to Mary J. Bennett, also a native of Ohio County, and a daughter of James and Julia A. (Igleheart) Bennett. Six children—three sons and three daughters—have been left to them, viz.: James S., Semiramis, Emma, Jacob H., Annie and Herman W. The two eldest daughters are married. Mr. Barnard and wife have been from early life church members, he of the Methodist Episcopal Church South and she of the United Baptist Church. In politics he is a Democrat.

IGNATIUS P. BARNARD is the son of Joshua Barnard and the grandson of Ignatius P. Barnard, who settled in Ohio County about 1820, having come to that place from Maryland. The great-grandfather was a Revolutionary soldier and served in the patriot army during that war. Our subject was born in Ohio County in 1846. He received a common school education, and at the age of fifteen years enlisted in Company C, Ninth Kentucky Regiment, Confederate army, Col. Thomas H. Hunt, Breckinridge's Old Brigade. He was brave and fearless as a soldier and met with many narrow escapes from death. He was twice a prisoner. While confined in the prison at Louisville, Gen. Burbridge, the Federal commander of the post, selected him with others as hostages, and as reprisal for the Federal soldiers killed by guerrillas, a certain number were drafted to be shot. Mr. Barnard escaped this draft three times, and was finally exchanged. After his first capture he was placed in a prison, which stood on the square where the Stamford Hotel now is, in Louisville, Ky., from which he succeeded in making his escape and finally surrendered at Washington, Ga. At the close of the war he commenced business at Buford. After teaching school and filling the office of constable, he bought and sold tobacco fourteen years, and subsequently became one of the owners and superintendent of the Taylor Coal Mine near Beaver Dam. He is now a resident of Beaver Dam and controller of an extensive business in general merchandise, tobacco and coal, and enjoys a high reputation in both commercial and social circles. January 23, 1868, Mr. Barnard was married to Bettie Bell, eldest daughter of Mrs. Mary Bell, and grand-daughter of Dr. A. R. Rowen, of Ohio County, Ky. This union has been blessed with three children. Mr. Barnard's mother was Rhoda Brown, daughter of James Brown (who was widely known as "Faith Dr. Brown," an old time practitioner), and a lady of many estimable qualities of mind and heart.

JOSEPH C. BARNETT was born September 4, 1818, in Ohio County Ky., and is a son of Robert and Elizabeth (Conditt) Barnett. Robert Barnett, came with his father's (Alexander Barnett's) family to Ohio County from Virginia in 1788. He was the only son in a family of seven children that lived to be grown. He was a successful farmer, was a captain in Hopkins' campaign against the Indians in the war of 1812, and afterward county surveyor for Ohio County for twenty years, in connection with farming; he died in August, 1865. Joseph C. was reared on the farm and was educated by his mother chiefly; a thorough scholar educated in the East. At twenty-two years of age he engaged in farming for himself, which has been his principal occupation since. He now owns 350 acres of land, one-half improved. He holds various positions in the Methodist Church. His wife, who was a Miss Frances D. Bennett, was a member of the same denomination. He was elected magistrate, and served four years. He was formerly a Democrat, and now a stanch Republican. He has five children living: Matilda E., wife of W. Tinsley; George W., a Methodist minister; William B., also a Methodist minister; Fannie M. now Mrs. J. W. Taylor, and C. M. attending De Paw University, Green Castle, Ind. His present wife was the widow of Capt. Henry M. Bennett, who was an officer in the Twelfth Kentucky Cavalry—her maiden name was Tinsey.

MRS. AMANDA PHIPPS BARNETT was born April 5, 1830, in Ohio County, and is a daughter of Elijah and Harriet (Robertson) Phipps. She was liberally educated at Hartford College, and May 24, 1850, married Robert Emmitt Barnett. His father, Robert Barnett, was county surveyor for thirty years; was a captain of State militia and participated in the war of 1812. His death occurred in 1865. His son inherited many of his traits of character, was a natural mathematician, thoroughly educated, and was for many years county surveyor. He was a man of great influence and highly esteemed by all who knew him. His death occurred December 25, 1874. He left eleven children, as follows: Elijah, who was educated at the State University, Louisville, and is now county surveyor; Pauline, wife of John L. Barnett; Alexander, a graduate of Hartford, now farming; Nestor, a graduate of Louisville Medical College, now practicing; Junius, a graduate of Carmi College (Ill.), now in New Mexico; Ledru R., teacher of vocal music; Victor, Andrew M., Robert J., Alzien and Uzal C. all in school. Mr. and Mrs. Barnett were members of the Methodist Church. They took a deep interest in the education of their children.

JOHN L. BARNETT is the eldest son of David L. and Sallie A. (Baird) Barnett, and was born July 8, 1850, in this county. David L. Barnett, who was also born in Ohio County, was a farmer and tobacco dealer, and for several years government storekeeper at Owensboro, Ky. He and wife were members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. He died at Owensboro, March 16, 1883, and his wife died January 9, 1879. They had nine children, seven living: Rebecca O., now Mrs. J. W. Marks, of Louisville, Ky.; Sallie M., now Mrs. Amos Shown, of Ohio County; John L.; Felix B., on the home place; James M.; Clarence M., now in Louisville; and Jennie A. John L. being the eldest son greatly assisted his father in the support of the family, which prevented him receiving a thorough school training, but by study and a few terms at school, he gleaned a practical education. At twenty-one years of age he began life for himself in the tobacco business, buying in this and other localities, as agent, until 1881, when he opened a tobacco establishment of his own, and is doing an extensive business. He was married November 12, 1874, to Miss Pauline Barnett of this county. They have two children—Luther C. and Zana. Mrs. Barnett is a member of the Methodist Church.

JAMES M. BARNETT, brother to John L. Barnett, was born in this county, October 6, 1854. At twenty years of age he commenced on his own account, entering the employ of Rhienhart & Co., tobacco dealers, at Owensboro, Ky., with whom he remained five years. He then engaged for himself in the same business in Grayson, and afterward in Daviess County, and in 1883 permanently located at Hartford, and established his present business. He has a thriving tobacco trade, and is successful in his line. Starting in life with no capital, his present financial standing is the result of his own unaided industry. March 10, 1884, he married Miss Alice Kimbley, of Hartford. She is a member of the Baptist Church. Mr. Barnett is a Cumberland Presbyterian and a stanch Republican.

THE BEAN FAMILY, Ohio County. Leonard Bean, the progenitor, a native of Maryland, was born about 1787; removed to Ohio County, Ky., in an early day, and was during many years an eminent Methodist class leader, and died near Sulphur Springs in 1841. He married Sarah Boswell, of Maryland, who died in 1868, at the age of seventy-two years. To them were born William R., Polley (Crawford), Rev. Gabriel J., Eveline (Barnes) and Noble. Noble Bean was born in the house where he now resides, in Ohio County, Ky., May 7, 1830. He obtained such an education as the common schools of the country afforded during his youth. He was married December 23, 1852, to Chloe A. E., daughter of Bartemus and Sarah (Robey) Acton, of Ohio County; she was born April 3, 1833, and to them were born Henry F., William T., Sarah E. (Thomas), Caleb W., Jane E. (Cole), Martha T., Gabriel B., Redford K., Tilden C. and Dresden P. Mr. Bean is a successful farmer, owning 425 acres of fair land in a good state of cultivation. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity; in religion is a Methodist and in politics is a Democrat. Rev. Gabriel J. Bean was born in 1823, and has been for a full quarter of a century a Methodist local minister. He married Mary J., daughter of Bartemus and Chloe (Robey) Acton, of Ohio County, born December 24, 1827. Their children are Josephine A. (Duke), Thomas H., Martha J. (Ross), Henry B., Leonard B., John E., Christina and William N. M. Thomas Henson Bean was born November 2, 1847, in Ohio County, Ky., where he has always resided. In youth he obtained a good business education. He was first married November 14, 1869, to Julia A., daughter of William and Julia A. (Neely) Duke, of Ohio County, born February 5, 1850, and died January 1, 1874. Their union was blessed with one child—William Jackson. Mr. Bean was next married May 5, 1875, to Amanda Z. Duke, sister to his first wife, born May 5, 1857, and to them have been born Henry P. (deceased), and Ira D. Mr. Bean is a farmer, owning 162 acres of good land in a high state of cultivation. In religion he is a Methodist, and in politics he is a Prohibitionist. Henry B. Bean was born July 20, 1852, in Ohio County, Ky., where he still resides. He obtained a fair English education in youth. He was married January 12, 1882, to Mary J., daughter of Fields and Amanda (Boswell) Harris, of Ohio County, Ky. She was born November 26, 1858. Mr. Bean is a neat and successful farmer, having 111 acres of good land in fine condition. He is an active Methodist and in politics a stanch Prohibitionist.

HENRY WILLIAM BEAN, Ohio County, was born near Sulphur Springs, Ohio County, October 6, 1846, and received his education in the same locality. He is the son of Henry and Martha (Birkhead) Bean, the former a native of Ohio County, born in 1820; the latter a native of Daviess County, born 1827. The father died about 1860; his family consisted of four children: Sarah Catherine, wife of Marion Madox: Lucy Jane, wife of William Leishbrooks; Irene, unmarried and Henry William, our subject. The last named was a very young man when his parents died. At the age of twenty years he commenced farming for himself, and in 1867 married Miss Laura Tichenor, the daughter of Peter and Maria (Shoemaker) Tichenor, of Daviess County. She is a native of that county, born November 28, 1850. Mr. and Mrs. Bean are the parents of seven children: William Thomas, Cora Etta, Irene, Marion Francis, Monroe, Leonard and Ollie. Mr. Bean is known as an upright, industrious farmer, and the farm on which he now resides is located in Ellis Precinct; Ohio County. Mr. Bean's grandfather, Leonard Bean, settled in Ohio County, from Maryland, at an early day. Mrs. Bean's ancestry were from Virginia. She is the youngest of three children. Her parents reside in Daviess County, Ky. Both Mr. and Mrs. Bean are faithful members of the Baptist Church, membership at Macedonia.

HENRY F. BEAN, M. D., was born in Ohio County, Ky., November 10, 1853, and is a son of Noble and Chloe A. E. (Acton) Bean, natives of Ohio County, and of Welsh and English descent, respectively. Noble Bean was educated and married in his native county of Ohio. He has always resided on the old homestead farm, near Sulphur Springs, Ohio County, which he now owns, having bought out the other heirs after his mother's death. He and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South; he is also a member of the Masonic fraternity, and an earnest advocate of temperance. Dr. Henry F. Bean received a good common school and academic education in youth. At the age of twenty he commenced the study of medicine, under the preceptorship of Dr. George F. Mitchell, of Sulphur Springs, Ky., now of Beaver Dam, and graduated with high honors from the medical department of the University of Louisville, with the class of 1875–76. He immediately commenced the practice of his profession at Sulphur Springs, Ky., where he remained until January, 1883, when he removed to Point Pleasant, Ohio Co., Ky., where he now resides, and is practicing his profession with abundant success, having secured a large and lucrative practice. He was married November 1, 1877, to Mary E. Tabor, also a native of Ohio County. One son gladdens their home—McPendleton. The Doctor and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South; he is also an active advocate of the temperance cause and in politics is a Democrat.

JOHN D. BELL was born in Ohio County, Ky., October 12, 1825, and is a son of David and Mary (Igleheart) Bell, both of whom were natives of Maryland, and of Scotch and German descent, respectively. David Bell, at the age of twenty, in the year 1815, came to Ohio County, Ky., then an almost unbroken wilderness, having driven a team all the way from Maryland. Here he was married and soon after bought a partially improved farm near the present site of Centretown, moved into a rude log-cabin, and subsequently improved a farm, upon which he resided until his death in 1871, in his seventy-seventh year. He made one trip down the Green, Ohio and Mississippi Rivers with a flat-boat load of provisions to New Orleans, returning on foot. Soon after this he walked to the State of Maryland on a business trip; he was a veteran in the war of 1812, having gone into the service at a very early age and participated in several of the battles of that war. He and wife were members of the United Baptist Church. Of Mr. Bell it may be said that he was the architect of his own fortune; he commenced at the bottom round of the ladder, having no inheritance, but a stout heart and willing hands, industry, economy and integrity secured to him a handsome fortune. John D. Bell received such an education in youth as could be obtained in the primitive schools of Kentucky. He was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority. His father-in-law then gave him some 200 acres of wild land near Hartford, where he commenced to improve a farm; this, however, he lost after about one year and a half in consequence of a defective title. Some two years later he bought a partially improved farm on Rough Creek, near Centretown, upon which he resided for four years, when he again sold out and bought another farm near Hartford. There he remained another four years, when he again sold out and bought a farm near McLean County; in 1876 he sold the farm in McLean County, and bought the farm near Point Pleasant, Ohio County, upon which he now resides, and which is one of the best improved places in the county. Mr. Bell owns well-improved farms amounting to some 1,500 acres. He is extensively and successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits and in the live-stock trade. He is decidedly the most extensive and successful stock grower in the county. He is also largely interested in the lumber trade, running large drives of logs down the Green and Ohio Rivers to Evansville, Ind. He was first married August 2, 1848, to Eliza E. Miller, a native of Ohio County, Ky.; she departed this life June 14, 1850. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Mr. Bell was next married, March 15, 1852, to Miss Sallie A. Barnard, also a native of Ohio County. Four sons and two daughters have been left to them. Mr. Bell and wife are members of the United Baptist Church. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and in politics a stanch Democrat.

CHARLES N. BENNETT was born in this county, June 23, 1811, and is the eldest of five children born to Samuel and Lucretia (Barnett) Bennett. Samuel Bennett came from near Baltimore, Md., when a boy, with his father's (John Bennett's) family, to Ohio County, Ky., in 1798. He was a well-to-do farmer, and died May 11, 1837; his widow died November 15, 1854. Charles N. received the early training common to pioneer life. December 24, 1835, he married Miss Martha Lindley, daughter of Daniel and Sallie Lindley, of Ohio County, and settled on his present farm, then all timber, which he has largely cleared and improved, and now has 355 acres with cottage residence, and all surrounding conveniences, the result of his personal energy and frugality. Mrs. Bennett died March 23, 1883. She was a member of the Methodist Church South, of which Mr. Bennett is also a member. They were blessed with five children, four now living: Lucretia M. (wife of E. Virgil), D. D., Stevens (farming), Amanda E. (at home), and Robert D. a Methodist minister. Mr. Bennett is a temperance Democrat.

ALEXANDER B. BENNETT and his brother, Charles N. Bennett, are the only surviving members of the family of Samuel and Lucretia (Barnett) Bennett. Alexander B. was born where he now resides, September 10, 1819, and was reared to endure the trials and vicissitudes of life in a new country, having as text-books in school the spelling book and Testament only. By home study, however, he afterward acquired a good practical education. When eighteen years of age his father died, and he took charge of the home place, and supported his mother until her death. He bought the interest of the other heirs in his father's estate, and has added to the farm from time to time, now owning 500 acres of fine land with homestead improvements. October 4, 1838, he married Miss Frances A. Benton, daughter of Benjamin and Altha (Chapman) Benton, of Ohio County, who formerly came from Maryland. For fifty years Mr. and Mrs. Bennett have been members of the Methodist Church South. They have seven children living: Wilber P., Lucy S. (now Mrs. A. Carson), Martha C. (wife of John C. Rowan), John S., Alelia E. (wife of A. Hoover), Leslie F. and Marenda J., at home.

B. M. BENNETT was born November 21, 1832, in Ohio, and is the son of Nathan and Martha (Ward) Bennett. The parents were both reared in this county; their parents came from Maryland. B. M. Bennett was reared on a farm, and at the age of eighteen learned his trade at Hartford for three years. He then came to Beda, hired out, and three months after bought out his employer and later bought the lot where he now lives, and on which he has since resided. He is one of the oldest residents of the place; was appointed postmaster in 1856, and served until 1861, when he resigned. He was then a Democrat. In 1874, he was appointed as a Republican and holds the office to-day; September 16, 1861, he enlisted in Company D, Twenty-sixth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, Federal service, and served until July 20, 1865, having veteranized in January, 1863; was in the battle of Shiloh, but was afterward detailed in the blacksmith department, and when he came out was quartermaster sergeant. January 29, 1856, he married Eleanor Tweddle, of Ohio County. They have had eight children, six now living: Marcus D. L., Stephen R., Herman E., Rupert, Bernice and Ethel. Mr. and Mrs. Bennett are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Mr. Bennett is a Republican, and a temperance man, and owes his position to his own industry.

JACOB T. BENNETT was born in Ohio County, Ky., November 17, 1837, and is a son of James and Julia A. (Igleheart) Bennett, natives of Virginia and Maryland, respectively. James Bennett received his early education in his native State. When a young man he came to Ohio County, Ky., where he was afterward married. Here he bought wild land near Centretown and commenced to improve a farm, which he soon after sold and again bought wild land in the same county, near Point Pleasant. There he improved a farm upon which he resided until his death, which occurred in 1839. In addition to farming he was also quite extensively engaged in flat-boating, having made several trips down the Green, Ohio and Mississippi Rivers to New Orleans. He always accomplished the return journey on foot, passing through several Indian nations on the way. In early life he learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed to some extent for several years. He was a veteran in the war of 1812. He and wife were from early life members of the United Baptist Church. Jacob T. Bennett received such an education as the schools of the time afforded. After his father's death he remained on the home farm with his mother until he attained his majority. In December, 1861, he enlisted in Company G, Seventeenth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry (Union service), and served in that company and regiment until April, 1862, when the Twenty-fifth was consolidated with the Seventeenth Kentucky, after which he served in Company I of the same regiment, in all its marches and engagements, until February, 1865, when the regiment was mustered at Louisville, Ky. He participated in the battles of Shiloh, Ft. Donelson, Perryville, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, the Atlanta campaign, Franklin, and Sherman's memorable march to the sea. After his return from the army he bought a farm on the Green River, where he remained for four years, when he sold out and bought the farm near Centretown, upon which he now resides. He was married September 23, 1859, to Fannie Jago, a native of Muhlenburgh County, Ky. Ten children have been born to them, eight of whom—three sons and five daughters—are living. Mr. Bennett and wife are members of the United Baptist Church. He is also a member of Hartford Post, G. A. R. In politics, he is independent, not being identified with either of the great political parties.

WILLIAM H. BLANKENSHIP, dealer in leaf tobacco in Ohio County, the son of Thomas and Sarah (Burgess) Blankenship, was born in Warren County, Ky., December 16, 1838. His grandfather, Drury Blankenship, immigrated to Kentucky from Virginia at an early day. His father was intelligent and industrious, and had by great energy and perseverance acquired considerable property, but just prior to his death, which occurred in Hardin County, Tenn., January 1, 1855, he lost the greater portion of it by putting his name to a security bond. Mr. Blankenship has been twice married. The first wife was Miss H. E. Parrott, of Ohio County, who died January 29, 1883, leaving four children; he was next married on the 30th of August, 1884, to Luretta Austin, daughter of A. J. Austin, of Ohio County. In 1866, Mr. Blankenship began farming, and continued in that occupation twelve years. He then engaged in his present business, and now has one of the largest warehouses in the county, and controls an extensive trade. His facilities for acquiring an education were somewhat limited, but he has gained a good knowledge of business, and has met with a large degree of success in all his undertakings. He and family are consistent members of the Baptist Church. Mr. Blankenship's political affiliations are with the Republican party.

JOHN B. BLANKENSHIP, farmer, Ohio County, is the son of Thomas H. and Sarah (Burgess) Blankenship, the former a native of Hardin County, Tenn., and the latter was born in Warren, Ky., and still lives in Ohio County at the advanced age of seventy-two years. The maternal grandfather, who died ten or twelve years ago was a Virginian. John B. Blankenship is the youngest of a family of five children: William, Thomas H., Sarah, wife of Asa Hodges, Francis Marion (deceased), and John B., who was born January 1, 1848, in Hardin County, Tenn. His early advantages were somewhat meager, and he started for himself in 1868, in Ohio County, to which place he removed in 1857. In 1868 he married Harriet Ann Parrott, daughter of Francis Marion Parrott, by whom he had four children: John, William Charles, Elvis and Bertie. Mrs. Blankenship died in 1874, and he was next married October 20, 1881, to Joanna Rogers, daughter of W. L. and Magdalen Rogers. She was born in Ohio County, September 27, 1857, and is the fourth of twelve children, ten of whom are living. Her ancestors were from Virginia. Mr. Blankenship owns a fine farm of 130 acres on the high road between Cromwell and Hartford, two miles from Beaver Dam. He has good buildings, and his farm is well timbered and well watered. With no other capital than his own industry and conscientious business habits, he has acquired a comfortable home and pleasant surroundings, and has been successful in all his undertakings.

THOMAS BOWLES, deceased, was born January 17, 1823, in Warren County, Ky. His father, Knight Bowles, was of English lineage, and about the year 1821, married Harriet Hines, of Bowling Green, Ky.; by this union five children were born, of which number Thomas was the eldest. Knight Bowles during his life was engaged in the vocation of farming; he died in 1840. Thomas Bowles, after the death of his father, remained with his mother, supporting her by his labor until the year 1853. On the 6th of October of that year, he was married to Prudence B., daughter of John and Rebecca (Anderson) Rone, of Warren County. After this marriage, Mr. Bowles continued farming until September 12, 1861, at which time he joined the Federal army; enlisted in Company B, Twenty-sixth Kentucky Volunteers, in command of Capt. A. B. Stanly, in which command he served for a term of three and one-half years. After receiving an honorable discharge, at the close of the war in 1865, he returned to his farm, on Green River, Ohio County, where he resided until his death, which occurred April 6, 1873. In connection with his farming interests, Mr. Bowles performed the duties of lock-keeper on Green River for about seven years. At his death he owned about 175 acres of land, which is very productive, and well improved with dwelling, barns, orchards, etc. The farm is now operated by the sons of Mr. Bowles, under the supervision of their mother. Mr. Bowles' death was caused by a lingering consumption; the declining years of his life were peaceful and happy, supported by the love and attention of his family. He was a kind and considerate husband, and an indulgent father; an active, consistent member of the Methodist church; was also a member of the order of A. F. & A. M., in which he had passed through all the honors to the Master's chair. His habits were temperate, and at the time of his death, he was a member of the I. O. G. T. Politically Mr. Bowles was a Democrat and took an active part in elections. He left seven children, five of whom are living: Thomas K., John W., Mary F., George L., and James C.

W. L. S. BRACKIN, deputy clerk, Ohio

County, is the only child of James B. and Eliza B. Brackin, and a grandson of William Brackin, who emigrated from North Carolina to Sumner County, Tenn., many years ago. His parents were persons of intelligence and good sense. The mother was born April 14, 1808, and died March 16, 1862, and the father was born in Tennessee in 1801, and died August 16, 1874. W. L. S. Brackin was born in Henry County of the same State, in 1825; was brought up in Sumner County. His advantages for an early education were somewhat limited, but he improved the opportunities he had by reading and study, and became in latter life a man of wide information. He also obtained a fair knowledge of business, and many years ago was elected deputy clerk of Ohio County, which office he has filled continuously since. He is widely known for his strict honesty and fair dealing. He owns a good farm on the Rosine and Pinchico road, about two miles and a half from Cromwell, Ohio County. He is a member of the Cromwell Masonic Lodge and is a life-long Democrat. On his mother's side he is descended from the Searcys, a very prominent and influential family, many of whom reside in Arkansas.

ISAAC BROWN was born in Ohio County, December 18, 1807. He is a son of Samuel Brown, who was born in Ireland in 1770, and immigrated to America with his father, when twelve years old, and settled in Winchester County, Va. In 1792, he came to Kentucky, and in 1796, married Miss Hannah, daughter of Harrison Taylor, of Ohio County He followed farming until his death, which occurred in 1847. Hannah (Taylor) Brown departed this life in 1853, leaving six children: Alexander, William, Isaac, Jane, James and Margaret. Isaac Brown, at the age of twenty-one, began to learn the trade of tanner, at Hartford, where he resided for about twelve years, working at his trade; during that time, December 24, 1833, he married Sallie Kitchen, with whom he lived happily for twenty-six years; she died August 26, 1859, leaving eight children: Garrard, Fannie (wife of Samuel Bennett), James, Thomas, Josephine (wife of H. Austin), Isaac, Luther and Alonzo. Isaac continued to work at his trade for several years; then sold merchandise until 1868; then farmed until 1873, when he was elected to the office of constable, which he held for six years, after which time he resumed farming. In 1883, he received a fall which rendered him unable to work, though he retains all his perceptive faculties, and now, though seventy-eight years of age, is able to read without the use of spectacles. Mr. Brown is a member of the Presbyterian Church. In politics he voted with the old Whig party; is now a Democrat, and takes an interest in all the issues of the day.

ISAAC SYLVESTER BROWN, Ohio County, was born March 7, 1847, on the place where he now resides, in Ohio County, Ky. His father, Isaac Brown, was born in 1807, on this place; was constable many years, and is still living. He was the son of Samuel Brown, of Virginia, a soldier of the Revolution. Isaac married Sally, daughter of Jared Tichenor, of Ohio County; she was born December 22, 1815, and died August 26, 1859, and to their union were born Jared, James M., Samuel T., Isaac S., Luther, Alonzo A., Fannie A. (Bennett), and Josephine (Austin). February 13, 1873, Isaac S. married Mary P., daughter of Joseph C. and Jane (Brown) Turns, of Ohio County; she was born in 1853, and died September 2, 1881, and to them were born Leslie B., Leo C. and Wesley F. He was next married June 21, 1883, to Mary E., daughter of Tolbert and Mary (Worden) Robertson, of Ohio County; she was born May 21, 1853, and their union has been blessed by the birth of one son, unnamed. Mr. Brown is a tanner, owning property in Rockport, and also 100 acres of good land. He is a member of the Baptist Church, and in politics a Democrat.

GEORGE A. BROWN was born August 15, 1819, in Nelson County, Ky., and is one of eleven children born to George and Barbara (Shales) Brown. The father was from Allegheny County, Penn., and farmed in Nelson County, Ky., until the death of his wife, in 1832, when his family was scattered, and he went back to Pennsylvania, returning to Nelson County a short time before his death, in 1838. George A., after the death of his mother, lived with his brother until sixteen years old, when he began farming on shares in the summer, and in the winter seasons flat-boating, making eight trips, and after seven years leased a farm for four years. He then rented land until 1847, when he came to Ohio County, and bought 280 acres for $200 cash. He has since lived in this county, and owned and improved numerous farms, now owning 400 acres, upon which he resides. Mr. Brown started in life with just 50 cents, and, unaided, has attained to a position among the leading farmers of the county. He was married December 25, 1842, to Julia A. Metcalf, who died August 16, 1867, leaving eight children: Melvina (wife of W. W. Hines), William, John F., Mary B. (wife of C. W. Stevens), Charles L., George B., Nettie and Julia; all but two are married, and all living in the immediate neighborhood.

JOHN SEP. BROWN was born in Ohio County, October 29, 1837. His father, Samuel Brown, was a native of Virginia, born in 1804, and came to Kentucky, when a boy, with his father, and in 1832, married Jane Taylor, of Ohio County; she died May 3, 1863. John G. Brown, the grandfather of our subject, was a Virginian; immigrated to Kentucky in 1810. He died in Ohio County in 1842. His wife, Elizabeth (Lewis) Brown, died in 1855. She was the mother of a family of four sons and three daughters, four of whom are now living: William L., John S., Washington T. and Eliza Jane (wife of John W. Moore). John Sep. Brown remained on the farm where he was born until 1873, superintending the farm after the death of his father, November 3, 1864. On the 28th of March, 1871, he was united in marriage with Miss Margaret, daughter of William D. Coleman, of Ohio County, Ky.; their union is blessed with three children: Thomas H., Samuel and Nellie May. In 1864 he bought 165 acres of land in Ohio County, since which time he has made various changes through the purchase and sale of lands; now owns about 450 acres, well improved with fences, dwelling, barns and orchard, and carries an average of $1,000 in stock. Mr. and Mrs. Brown are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Mr. Brown is a Democrat.

JAMES B. BROWN was born in Ohio County, September 8, 1838, and is a son of Joshua and Elmira (Humphrey) Brown, both of whom were natives of Ohio County, and of English descent. Joshua Brown was married in his native county. After attaining his majority he bought a small farm near Hogg's Falls upon which he resided until his death, which occurred in June, 1839. In early life he learned the cabinet-maker's trade and followed the same in connection with farming all his life. He and wife were, from early life, zealous and devoted members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he officiated as class leader for many years. He was also a great lover of music, and in early life taught singing school for some years. James B. Brown received such an education as the schools of Kentucky afforded in his youth. His father died when he was only nine months old, and at the age of nine years his mother died, after which he made his home with his grandfather and stepfather until he was twenty years old. He then farmed his grandfather's place, and sixty acres left him by his father, for one year, after which he bought a partially improved farm near Point Pleasant, remaining for four years, when he sold out and bought 100 acres of unimproved land adjoining, where he commenced to improve the farm, now known as the "Cave Spring Farm," so called from the fact of its having a cave in which a large spring is situated. After three years he sold the place and bought another in the Equality neighborhood, remaining on it some five or six years. In 1871 he again sold out and bought the farm of 200 acres, which is now well improved, near Point Pleasant, upon which he now resides, and where he is extensively and successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits, making the culture of tobacco and grass specialties. He has held the offices of school trustee, and also of bridge and road commissioner for Ohio County. He was married in November, 1860, to Altha C. Addington, also a native of Ohio County. Three sons and three daughters have been left to them. Mr. Brown and wife are, and have been since their childhood days, members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in which he has held various official positions. He is also a member of the Masonic fraternity, having held the office of J. W. in that order. In politics he is identified with the national Greenback party.

ASBERRY ANDERSON BRYANT, Ohio County, was born April 25, 1833, in Warren County, Ky., where he grew to manhood, and in 1858, located in Ohio County, where he has since resided. He was married December 13, 1860, to Nancy, daughter of Austin and Elizabeth (Carson) Harris, of Ohio County, born November 23, 1836, and to them have been born John M., Joicy E. (Acton) Cicero A., Mary L. (Miller), Alonzo C., Sylvester, Sarah S. (deceased), Edmonia (deceased), and Nancy A. (deceased). In early manhood Mr. Bryant engaged in the manufacture of boots and shoes, which he followed until married, when he commenced farming, his present calling, now owning 300 acres of fair land in good condition, well improved, and in a high state of cultivation. Mr. Bryant is a worthy example of what may be accomplished by industry, perseverance and economy. He is an active Methodist, and is identified with the Democratic party.

CHARLES W. BUTLER, Ohio County, was born in Hart County, Ky., May 1, 1831. He was reared in his native county, and in 1851, removed to Grayson County; to Breckinridge County in 1856, and to Ohio County in 1866, where he has since resided. His father, John Butler, a native of South Carolina was born in 1795, removed with his parents in 1805, to Hart County, Ky., and died in Grayson County in 1861. He was the son of Enoch Butler, a Virginian, who died in Hart County, Ky., in 1837, aged seventy-two years. His father was John Butler; his wife Mary A., daughter of Harry Clagett, of Grayson County, died in 1854, at the age of fifty-six years. From their union sprang Henry C., Minor E., Charles W., Joseph A., and John W. To subject's father, by a second marriage, was born Cynthia J. (Day). Charles W. Butler's educational advantages were such as the common schools of Kentucky afforded. February 13, 1855, he married Anne E., daughter of Moses W. and Matilda (Bishop) Stone, of Grayson County, born October 22, 1837, and to them were born Thomas E., February 13, 1866, and Mary A., June 19, 1868. Mr. Butler was reared a farmer, a vocation which he followed until 1865, when he commenced merchandising, and in 1866, came to Pattieville, where he engaged in general merchandising until 1878, when he, in connection with many others, failed on account of the defalcation of a Louisville commission house. With commendable zeal he continued his business as dealer in leaf tobacco, and is now a successful and useful member of the community; he has been engaged in the tobacco business for eighteen years. He owns and cultivates 106 acres of good land; is a demitted Mason; has been for fifteen years a ruling elder in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. He is a Democrat.

WILLIAM SPURRIER BYERS, Ohio County was born April 14, 1829, in Grayson County, Ky., where he grew to manhood; in 1856 removed to Jackson County, Ill., in 1858 returned to Grayson County; in 1866 settled in Gibson County, Ind.; and in 1883, located in Ohio County, where he now resides. In 1863 he enlisted in Company H, Thirty-fifth Kentucky Infantry, and remained in the service seventeen months. His father, Daniel Byers, a Baptist minister, was born in Grayson County, in 1803, was a Union soldier in the late war, and died in 1875. He was the son of John Byers, a native of Kentucky. His father, Daniel, was a pioneer from Pennsylvania. Daniel, Jr., married Margaret, daughter of William and Elizabeth (Avery) Bratcher, of Grayson County; born in 1805, and died in 1883, and their children are Anderson R., Avery, William S., James D., Elizabeth (Ford), John and Margaret (McSheery). Mr. Byres was married December 10, 1850, to Nancy M., daughter of Samuel and Sarah (Humphrey) Tanner, of Daviess County, born August 26, 1828, and to them have been born Daniel (deceased), Minerva J. (Williams), William A. (deceased), Samuel P., Alonzo C. (deceased), Kit Carson, Sarah A. (deceased), and Richard A. Mr. Byers is a farmer, owning fifty-three acres of good land in a high state of cultivation. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity; a Missionary Baptist, and a Republican.

MARCY T. CAIN, Ohio County, is the son of Charles S. and Minerva (Thomas) Cain. The father, a native of Grayson County, Ky., removed to Indiana about 1855, where he died, in 1864, of wounds received on the battlefield of Columbia, Tenn. He was a member of the Fourth Indiana Cavalry, having enlisted in 1861. The mother, Mrs. Minerva Cain, now resides in Spencer County, Ind. Marcy T. is the eldest of seven children, and was born in Grayson County, Ky., September 28, 1847, and when very young removed with his parents to Spencer County, Ind. There he received his education at the common schools and spent his youth on the farm. In January, 1872, in Grayson County, Ky., he married Annie Horn, by whom he had two children: Minnie and Cora. Mrs. Cain departed this life in July, 1876. January 18, 1878, Mr. Cain married Mary, eldest daughter of Rev. George P. and Margaret Jane Jeffries. The issue of this marriage is two children: Minerva Jane and Earnestine. Mr. Cain is the owner of more than 300 acres of good land, on which he has excellent improvements, a fine lot of stock, etc. He and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and he and wife are members of the Masonic fraternity, the latter of the Eastern Star Degree. The other members of his father's family are Sarah, the wife of Benjamin Meredith, a soldier in the Fifty-eighth Indiana Volunteers and also a spy; Nancy E., wife of Andy Jackson Persley; Hardin; Letitia, wife of Edward Roberts, of Indiana, formerly a soldier of the Fifty-fifth Indiana Volunteer Infantry; Kitty Ann, and Hester E. Mr. Cain is largely interested in buying and selling stock, and the large farm which he has lately purchased in Ellis Precinct is devoted largely to raising fine graded stock and cattle. His father's two brothers were officers in the Union army: Richard Cain, a captain in the Twenty-fifth Indiana; and Daniel Cain, a Baptist clergyman, and a major in the Forty-eighth Indiana.

JOHN WESLEY CANNAN, was born September 18, 1829, in Ohio County, Ky.,

where he has always resided. In 1861, he enlisted in Company F, Seventeenth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and remained in the national service three years and four months. His father, John Cannan, was born in 1804, in Mercer County, Ky., where he was reared to manhood, and then located in Ohio County, where he died in 1872. He was the son of William Cannan, a native of Ireland. John married Nancy, daughter of Daniel and Francis Iler; of Ohio County, who died in 1862, at the age of fifty-five years. The result of their union were the following named children: William, John Wesley, Cassia A. (McCord), Ellen, Debie (Raley) and James H., died in the Union army. John Wesley Cannan has been twice married; first, July 8, 1856, to Mrs. Artemissa McEntire, of Ohio County, born May 28, 1834, and died in 1867, and from this union sprang Thomas (deceased), Alonzo T., Florence (White), John (deceased) and William (deceased). He was again married, June 11, 1879, to Zelma F., daughter of Grandville and Mary (Bean) Crawford, of Ohio County, born June 11, 1857, and to them were born James Clarence and Ida Pearl. Mr. Cannan is a farmer, owning 144 acres of land in a good state of cultivation. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity and in politics a Democrat.

ARCHIE LITTLE CHICK, Ohio County, was born in Logan County, Ky., November 3, 1839. He remained in his native place until the age of fourteen, when, in 1854, he removed to Ohio County, and settled near the town of Beaver Dam, and there completed his education and made farming his business. His father was born in Louisa County, Va., in 1815; at the age of eighteen he immigrated to Wilson County, and settled on a farm. He married Eleanor Sanders, a native of the same county, in Virginia. There were five members of his father's family: James E., married to Clarissa E. Williams; Milton S., who died in childhood; Judith A., wife of W. A. Austin, a grocer in Beaver Dam; Caledonia, wife of Burgess Austin, of Beaver Dam. The mother died in 1872; the father still lives at an advanced age. Archie L. Chick married Lucy Ann Austin, on the 13th of October, 1864. She was the second child of A. J. Austin, and was born near Slaty Creek in the southern part of Ohio County. They have had four children: Ambler B., October 10, 1865; William B., January 1, 1867; Estelle C., July 14, 1869, and died May 19, 1878; Claudius D., October 4, 1876. Mr. Chick has a good farm near the town of Beaver Dam, on which he has a beautiful and convenient home. He affiliates with the Democratic party. His family, his parents and himself are faithful and consistent members of the Baptist Church.

ROBERT ENOS CHILDS may justly be placed amongst the enterprising citizens of Ohio County, Ky. He was born in Baltimore, Md., March 20, 1835, and in 1852, engaged with an engineer corps at McConnelsville, Ohio, after which, in 1855, was engaged in the construction of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, and its branches—part of the time as contractor. In 1870, he bought land near Rosine, and improved his present home. He is the son of Enos R. Childs, of Baltimore, Md., a midshipman in the United States navy, who had command of the "Thunderbolt," at Norfolk, in the late British war. He died in 1851, at the age of fifty-eight. His wife, Eleanor V., daughter of Capt. Goss, of the merchant marine, of Charleston, S. C., was born in 1805, and died in 1865. Their offspring are Virginia (Marsh), Mary (Lawrence), Cordelia F. (Macleod), Willie J. (Bestor), John E., Robert Enos and Stephen D. In youth Robert Enos Childs was favored with an excellent education. He was married December 30, 1863, to Mary D., daughter of John A. and Martha (Roberts) Cox, of Nelson County, Ky.; she was born May 12, 1837, and to them have been born Ida V., Mary L., Robert E., Agnes E., and Charles D. Mr. Childs is at present engaged in farming, fruit culture and wine making, owning 118 acres of productive land, well improved, and in a high state of cultivation. He has demonstrated the adaptability of a variety of fruits to this latitude. On his farm are strata of coal and fireclay, which he has developed to some extent. In politics, Mr. Childs affiliates with the Democratic party.

JOHN CHINN, farmer, Ohio County, was born March 31, 1842, and is the eldest of his father's family. His parents were Robert S. and Mary Masterson Chinn, who were both earnest and industrious people and members of the Methodist Church. The former died in December, 1860, and the latter in May, 1875. His grandfather, Rolla Chinn, came from Virginia and settled first in Scott County, and afterward near Hartford, Ohio Co., Ky. Game at that time was exceedingly plenty, as many as fifteen deer having been seen in one drove, and wild turkeys were so plenty that rail pens were built in which hundreds were caught. Mr. Chinn was married on Christmas day, 1867, to Temple D. Sublet, of Warren County, Ky., who was born in 1846. Her father died when she was only three days old, and she was brought up by her step-father, John Pirtle. They have seven children: Annie Lee, Eliza Bertie, Leslie T., Robert Pirtle, Thomas H., Bedford Forest, Grover Cleveland. Mr. Chinn enlisted in Company C, Ninth Kentucky Infantry, under the command of Capt. John E. Pendleton in the fall of 1861, and served two years and three months. He was captured in the fall of 1863, and was a prisoner two months. At the close of the war Mr. Chinn was penniless, and had his mother, two sisters and a brother to provide for. By industry and perseverance he has cared for them, and has now a pleasant and comfortable home.

JOSIAS CHINN, farmer, Ohio County, Ky., is the fourth of five children, whose parents were Charles and Nancy Chinn, of Bourbon County, Ky. The father was born in Virginia, January 21, 1800, and died in Ohio County in 1867. The mother, a Miss Berryman, died in 1837. One brother, Benjamin, is deceased; another, John, resides at Beaver Dam; Elijah, at Rochester, on Green River, and Octavia, the wife of H. B. Taylor, two miles east of Beaver Dam. Josias Chinn was born July 15, 1831, in Ohio County, Ky. After receiving a fair education at the public schools, he attended the college at Hartford, Ohio Co., Ky. His home was on a farm, and he has made farming his life work, and has been very successful. He was married, April 29, 1857, to Mary E. Tant, by whom he has five children: Mary, Emily, Charles, George and Eugene. The family are worthy members of the Christian Church, as were also their parents.

THE CHRISTIAN FAMILY, Ohio County. Walter D. Christian, the progenitor, a very worthy and honorable gentleman, was a Virginian by birth, a soldier in the war of 1812, and died in Kentucky about 1845, aged nearly seventy years. At what period he immigrated to this State is not definitely known, but his good standing is established by the fact that he filled various offices of honor and trust, among which was that of sheriff. He espoused in marriage Elizabeth Stewart, of Fayette County; she died in 1874, aged seventy-seven years. Their children are Samuel M., Charles V. and Sarah E. (married first to Daniel and afterward to Axton). Mrs. Christian had been formerly married to a Mr. Smith, and bore him the following named children: Granville T., Jennetta A. (Mitchell), James W. and Eliza C. Smith.

SAMUEL MERITT CHRISTIAN was born May 11, 1834, in Ohio County, Ky., on the inherited patrimony, where he now resides. He was married, October 23, 1856, to Phœbe E., daughter of Andrew and Elizabeth (Daniel) Tilford, of Ohio County; she was born August 22, 1836, and to them have been born Rebecca A., married to John Wilson; James M. and Granville J. Mr. Christian is a farmer, owning 138 acres of fine land in good condition. Mrs. Christian is a Baptist. Politically, Mr. Christian is a Republican.

CHARLES VALENTINE CHRISTIAN was born on the place where he now resides, in Ohio County, Ky., June 19, 1836. In 1861 he enlisted in Company B, Seventeenth Kentucky Infantry, and remained in service three years and four months. March 20, 1859, he married Mary E., daughter of Walker and Julia A. (Mitchel) White; born March 11, 1841, and from this union sprang Juda A. (Boyd), James W. (deceased), Mahala E., Julia A., Sarah E., Josie and Lizetta (twins, exactly alike and of equal weight). Mr. Christian is a farmer, having 103 acres of well improved land, in good condition and in a fine state of cultivation. In politics he is a Republican.

SQUIRE WILLIAM STEWART COLE, Ohio County, was born September 7, 1837, in Butler County, Ky., and in infancy removed with his parents to Ohio County, where he grew to manhood and still resides. In 1861, he enlisted in the Seventeenth Kentucky Infantry and in the capacity of blacksmith remained with the regiment until near the close of the late war. His father, Chesterfield Cole, was born in Butler County, and died about 1843, aged about thirty-two years. He was the son of William S. Cole, also a native of Butler County, who was a soldier in the war of 1812, a high sheriff, and also a Cumberland Presbyterian minister; he died at Bloomfield, Ind., about 1870, at an advanced age. Chesterfield married Luvisa, daughter of Jerry Ezell, of Ohio County; she died in 1845; their children are Sarah A., died in infancy; William Stewart; Martha, married first to Kessinger, who died in Andersonville prison, and afterward to Evans; and Nelson H., died in his thirteenth year. April 5, 1860, Squire Cole was married to Martha L., daughter of William M. and Mary (Mitchel) Miller, of Ohio County; she was born February 19, 1837, and to them have been born Joseph N., John S., Chesterfield M., Mary L., Arminta M., Nora F., James E., Jonathan L., Dorcas E., William O., Henry W. and Charles W. Squire Cole served one term as a magistrate of his district. He is still a blacksmith, and also farms, owning 116 acres of fair land in a good state of cultivation. He is a member of the United Baptist Church; also of the A. F. & A. M., and in politics a Republican.

WILLIAM D. COLEMAN, one of the respected citizens of Ohio County, was born in Bedford County, Va., on the 8th of October, 1822. His father, James Coleman, was a Virginian, born in 1789; married Miss Margaret Dowell in 1812; afterward served as a soldier under Gen. Wilkinson in 1814, and died in Campbell County, Va., in 1854. He followed the trade of a tobacconist for upward of thirty-four years prior to his death. John Coleman, the grandfather of William D., was a native of Ireland, and immigrated to America during the colonial period; he served as a soldier in the Continental army during the Revolution, as also did our subject's maternal ancestor, John Dowell, who was by birth a Scotchman. William D. Coleman left his Virginia home and came to Kentucky in 1838, and drove a team in Warren County for about a year, after which he traded in stock for five years, principally horses, which he shipped to Southern markets. In 1842 he married Henrietta D. Fox, who died in 1845, leaving two children: Callia W. and Mary D. Mr. Coleman soon after removed to Ohio County, where he leased land and turned his attention to farming, which vocation he has followed successfully up to the present time. In 1848 Mr. Coleman was married to his present wife, whose maiden name was May A. Shull. Time has proved them to be happily mated. Their union has been blessed with six children, five of whom are now living: Margaret E., James W., Peter S., Stonewall J. and Annie B. In 1849 Mr. Coleman bought 260 acres of slightly improved land, which he continued to improve and farm until 1861, when he entered the Confederate army and fought under Gens. Beal, Morgan and Lee, until the fall of the Confederacy. He then returned to what was once his home, but, of all of his former possessions, found nothing left except the land and his family, all else having gone with the "lost cause." Mr. Coleman is an uncompromising Democrat, and says, he "staked and lost all in the cause of the Rebellion." He at once set to work to repair losses, but again, in 1866, he suffered a loss of $3,000 by fire, which destroyed his dwelling and goods. His farm is one of the best improved in the county, and numbers 360 acres, all in cultivation. Mr. Coleman gives most of his attention to the raising of blooded stock. In 1873 Mr. Coleman was a candidate for election to the legislature; the election was gained by his opponent, J. W. Meadow, by 200 majority. In 1877 he was again defeated by J. W. Meadow, by a majority of fifty votes. Again, in 1883, Mr. Coleman was a candidate, and was elected by a majority of 269 votes, and during his legislative career introduced and passed four general and twenty-two local bills—most notably the bill entitled "A bill for the Ventilation of Mines, and the Protection of Miners." Mr. and Mrs. Coleman are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in which Mr. Coleman has been a steward many years. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and has passed all the honors of the Ancient rite. As a liberal and public-spirited citizen, Mr. Coleman has done much for the improvement of the country, and he commands the respect and esteem of all who know him.

LORENZO DOW COOPER was born March 31, 1819, in Daviess County, Ky., and is the only child of Joshua G. and Alice Rowan Cooper. The father was reared on the banks of the Susquehanna River, in Pennsylvania, till a young man; then came to Kentucky, first locating in Ohio County, and soon afterward married Mrs. John Douglas. After making several moves he settled in Ohio County, where he died in 1826; his widow survived until April, 1851. Lorenzo D., while yet a boy, materially aided his mother, and finally became her entire support, and continued so up to her death. At twenty-four years of age he married Mary P. Bennett, and to them were born nine children, only two of whom are now living: Samuel O. and Alice P. (wife of William J. Riley). Mr. Cooper's present wife was Mrs. Elizabeth Henry, nee Polley. They are members of the Methodist Church, of which he is a trustee. He is a Democrat politically, and renders much aid to the furtherance of the temperance cause, having in early life been a Good Templar. He has a fine, improved farm of his own making, upon which he has resided since 1847, and has given over 100 acres to his children.

J. WILL COOPER, Ohio County, is the son of W. P. and Catherine Cooper, both natives of Ohio County, Ky.; the former born in 1819, and died in September, 1884; the latter born in 1829, and is still living. Both were consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. J. Will Cooper was born near Beaver Dam, August 19, 1852; was brought up in the same county, and was educated in Hartford College, under the principalship of Prof. Griffin. He has two brothers and two sisters: Ed. W., deputy county clerk and farmer; Mrs. Mary Austin (deceased); Charles and Annie living on the old homestead, near Beaver Dam. Mr. Cooper went into business in 1868, at Beaver Dam, under the firm name of Cooper &

Brother. Theirs was the first business house in that town. In 1875, he removed to Cromwell and went into the hotel and saloon business; afterward engaged in general merchandising, and was one of the leading dealers in that town. His store comprises general merchandise, furniture, agricultural implements, hardware, etc., etc. He is a young man of energy and ambition, and is doing a fine business in town and county. June 7, 1874, he married Annie Tilford, eldest daughter of W. G. Tilford, a leading citizen of Cromwell, and for many years a hotel keeper in that town. They have one daughter—Tomie, born in November 1876. J. W. Cooper moved from Cromwell, July 4, 1885, back to Beaver Dam, and is now engaged in the hotel business under the firm name of Beaver Dam Hotel Company.

JAMES R. COPPAGE was born March 9, 1833, in Green County, Ky., and is a son of Hardin and Sarah (Robinson) Coppage. The father was born and reared in Marion County, to which county his parents, James and Polly Coppage, had come while yet Kentucky was a part of Virginia. The block-house in which they lived. still stands, James R. Coppage was reared on a farm, and given all the advantages the times in that locality afforded. At twenty years of age he rented a farm for three years in Marion County; after making numerous moves throughout Kentucky, and living awhile in Indiana, he finally settled on his present farm, consisting of 150 acres, nearly all of which is under cultivation, and well improved. June 8, 1852, he was united in marriage with Sarah A. Thornton; they have eight children living. Mr. Coppage is a member of the A. F. & A. M., Hudsonville Lodge No. 262. Politically a Democrat, and with his wife a member of the Christian Church.

SAMUEL K. COX was born June 16, 1838, in Hawesville, Ky., a son of Samuel K. and Caroline (Davidson) Cox. The father, a steamboat man on the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, was a native of Virginia, and came to Kentucky with his parents. He was born in 1799, in Norfolk, Va., and died at Lewisport, Ky., in 1860. The parents were for many years members of the Methodist church. They had nine children, four now living: Mrs. Margaret A. Jarboe (widow), Mrs. Jennie F. Mosely (widow), Samuel K. and William T., a carpenter in Hartford. Our subject was reared in Hawesville, attended the schools of that place, and at the age of fifteen began supporting himself by clerking in a store at Hawesville, and was thus chiefly engaged until twenty years of age. He then accepted a position as clerk on a steamboat one season, and came to Hartford in 1860. He entered the county clerk's office as deputy, under R. S. Mosely, and after five months went to Morgantown, and was there deputy county clerk one year. In September, 1861, he enlisted in Company A, Seventeenth Kentucky Infantry, as private. In May, 1862, he was promoted by order of Gen. Nelson, to second lieutenant, and transferred to Company F, same regiment. In the spring of 1863 he was made first lieutenant, and assigned to company E. In March, 1864, he was made captain and put in command of the old Company A, and served until January, 1865, in all three years and four months, and never lost a day from his command. He participated in the battles of Ft. Donelson, Shiloh (both days) Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, and in the Atlanta campaign. It was his regiment that brought on the fight at Franklin. After his return to Hartford he entered the county clerk's office as deputy in 1865, and served five years, when he was elected clerk. He was elected three times consecutively, and from 1870 to 1876 was master commissioner. In 1882, at the time of his expiration of office, he organized the Bank of Hartford, with Mr. McHenry, and took the position of cashier, which he still holds. April 20, 1870, he married Miss Irene Brotherton, of Owensboro, Ky., daughter of John and Rebecca Brotherton. They have four children living: Mary W., Ella W., Corinne and Samuel S. Mr. and Mrs. Cox are Methodists.

DR. LEONARD THOMAS COX was born May 3, 1843, near Cromwell, Ohio Co., Ky., where he was reared to manhood, and in 1870, located at Rosine, becoming the first merchant of the place. In 1861, he enlisted in Company H, Seventeenth Kentucky Infantry, and remained in the service until the regiment was mustered out at the end of three years and four months. His father Thomas J. Cox, was born in Ohio County, February 25, 1811, and is now living. He is the son of James Cox, a native of Maryland, and a Revolutionary soldier, who came to Ohio County in 1801, and died about 1840. Thomas J. married Marinda, daughter of William Leach, of Ohio County, born May 15, 1807, and died June 7, 1859, and their offspring are Mary E. (Pool), James W., Leonard T. and John B. (deceased). Dr. Cox was first married, December 24, 1865, to Emma E., daughter of Henry L. Iler, of Ohio County; she was born February 9, 1847, and died September 21, 1871, and to them were born Ola T., Mary M. and Ada. March 14, 1872, Dr. Cox married his second wife, Frances E., daughter of Henry and Louisa London, of Butler County; she was born February 8, 1847, and this union has been blessed with the birth of two children: Carrie E. and Emmett. Dr. Cox is now the police magistrate of Rosine. He was for thirteen years engaged in the drug business, in the meantime applying himself to the study of medicine. In 1883–84 he attended lectures at the Medical Universty of Louisville, and has now been engaged one year in the practice of his profession, with encouraging success. He served as Master of the Masonic lodge, and is a member of the I. O. O. F. His first vote was for Abraham Lincoln for president, and he still has faith in the tenets of the Republican party.

CHARLES WINTERSMITH CROMES, Ohio County, Ky., was born in 1850, in Hardin County, Ky.; removed in childhood with his parents to Grayson County, there he grew to manhood and in 1873 located in Ohio County, where he now resides. He is the son of William Cromes, a native of Breckinridge County, a tanner by trade, who is now over seventy years of age. He married Emily J. Modley, who is now about seventy years old. Their children are Albert, Louann (Patterson), who is a twin sister of Melvina (Parish), Jefferson, William (who died from exposure in the army), Charles W., Ada J. (Burkley), Thomas and Martha (Lawrence). Charles W. Cromes married, April 13, 1873, Sarah F., daughter of George W. and Emily E. (Iler) Wilson, of Ohio County; she was born March 27, 1853, and to them have been born Emily J., Sarah B., Ada May, Mary E. and George W. Charles Wintersmith Cromes is a farmer, owning 116 acres of fair land, well improved and in good state of cultivation. His enterprise is evinced by carefully furnishing shelter for all his live-stock. and he is reaping the reward of such prudence. In religion he is a Methodist and in politics a Republican.

ROBERT J. DANIEL, Ohio County. One of the leading industries of Kentucky is that of raising, packing and selling tobacco, and among the most extensive dealers in leaf tobacco in the county is Robert J. Daniel, who has been engaged in that business since 1850. His operations have extended throughout the entire State, to New Orleans, New York and during the last fifteen years to Louisville, now the largest tobacco market in the world. He owns a large tobacco warehouse, and is one of the most successful business men of the county. His ancestors came from Virginia, walking from their old homes to the new, bringing their slaves with them. He is the son of George M. and Nancy (Tilford) Daniel, born in Cape Gray, Lincoln Co., Mo., August 29, 1829, but returned when quite young to Cannon County, Tenn., and afterward removed to Ohio County, where he was educated. He was married on the 4th of October, 1857, to Amanda J. Boswell, fifth daughter of Henry Boswell, an old settler of Ohio County. She was born April 24, 1834, and received her education in the same county. They have four children: Ella, wife of Oscar Stevens, a druggist at Beaver Dam; Donnie, Robert Lee, and Freddie. Mr. Daniel's father died in 1880, and his mother in 1883. Mrs. Daniels' father died in 1870, and her mother in 1883. Mr. Daniel has associated with him in business, a brother, U. C. Daniel, who was a member of Company F, Seventeenth Kentucky Federal Infantry; enlisted October 3, 1860, severely wounded and left for dead, but subsequently recovered; was all through the Georgia campaign, in thirty-seven battles and skirmishes. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity; was married February 4, 1866, to Mary C. Austin, by whom he has four children; he was engaged in the mercantile business twelve years before entering into partnership with his brother. Robert J. Daniel was also a brave soldier, and an old line Whig in politics, and voted for Henry Clay; has ever since been a Democrat. He is a most prosperous farmer, owns ten farms of 1,600 acres, as well as one of 500 acres of the very best in the State of Kentucky. His corn yielded fifty bushels to the acre. He also has an extensive business in lumbering, and has a regular trade in stock between Kentucky and Atlanta, Ga. He was in the wholesale grocery business six years at Louisville, and had his residence in that city two years.

JOSEPH DANIEL was born in Halifax County, Va., August 1, 1832, and is a son of Royal and Elizabeth (Owen) Daniel, both of whom were natives of Virginia and of English descent. Royal Daniel was educated and married in his native State, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits, the hotel business and merchandising until the spring of 1839, when he removed to Muhlenburgh County, Ky., and bought a farm four miles east of Greenville, upon which he resided for several years. He then removed to Tennessee, remaining only two or three years, when he returned to Muhlenburgh County, where he engaged in farming and teaching until his death, which occurred

May 10, 1862, in his sixty-ninth year. Joseph Daniel received a good common school education in youth, and was employed on his father's farm until he was thirty years old, or until his father's death. He continued to farm until 1870, when he came to Rockport, Ohio Co., Ky., where he has been employed at the carpenter's trade, the grocery and saloon business ever since. In January, 1884, he opened a grocery store at Rockport, where he is doing a fair business. Mr. Daniel is as yet unmarried; he belongs to no secret society or church; in politics he is a Republican.

JOHN F. DAVIS, Ohio County, was born in Muhlenburgh County, Ky., August 7, 1818, and is a son of William H. and Sarah (Fisher) Davis, both of whom were natives of Virginia, and of Welsh and English descent, respectively. When only a boy, William H. Davis removed with his parents to Muhlenburgh County, Ky., then an almost unbroken wilderness, where the family were among the earliest settlers. There his father, William H. Davis, Sr., located a military grant near South Carrollton, and subsequently improved a farm, upon which he resided until his death. William H. Davis, Jr., at the age of about nineteen or twenty, enlisted in Col. Shelby's regiment, and served with the same under Gen. Harrison during that officer's campaign in the war of 1812. He was married soon after his return from the army, and soon after that event he inherited a part of the old homestead, upon which he resided until 1852, when he sold out and afterward made his home with his son, the subject of this sketch, until his death, which occurred March 17, 1865, in his seventy-fourth year. He was from early life a member of the United Baptist Church, in which he officiated as a deacon. John F. Davis received such an education in youth as could be obtained in the schools of the Kentucky frontier. His mother died when he was only twelve years old, soon after which he left home, and was employed as a laborer on a farm, and at various other pursuits for several years. In 1833 he was employed as a laborer in the construction of the Green River locks, and was soon appointed a foreman of the same works. In 1849 he went to California to seek his fortune, and was not entirely unsuccessful; accomplished the journey by the overland route in about four months and a half. In California he was successfully engaged in mining for some eighteen months. He returned via Panama and New York in 1851. In the following year he bought about 1,000 acres of wild land on the Green River, in Ohio County, near South Carrollton, a part of which he has since sold. Here he improved the farm upon which he still resides, and which is now well improved. He has since been extensively and successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits. He was married, February 12, 1852, to Agnes E. Wickliffe, also a native of Muhlenburgh County, Ky., and a daughter of Moses and Nancy (Young) Wickliffe, who were also among the earliest pioneers and most distinguished settlers of the country. Mr. Davis and wife have been for more than forty years members of the United Baptist Church. He is also a member of the Masonic fraternity. In politics he is a Democrat.

ELDER JAMES CLINTON DAVIS, Ohio County, was born March 29, 1834, in Roane County, Tenn. At the age of six years he removed with his parents to Warren County, Ky., and in 1848 to Ohio County, where he has since resided. His father, Alexander H. Davis, now living, was born in Roane County, Tenn., in 1815. He is the son of James Davis, of Roane County, who died about 1880, over one hundred years of age. Alexander H. married Sarah N., daughter of David and Polley (Tootles) Liles, of Roane County. She was born March 29, 1815, and died in 1850. This union was blessed by the birth of the following-named children: James C., William H. (died in the army), John T., Thomas L., Nancy J. (Sanderford), Benjamin M., George L. and Sarah (Raley). Alexander H., after his first wife's decease, married a second wife, and their offspring are Isaac N., Reuben W., Mary E. (Ranney), Alexander T., Jesse G., Martha (Douglas) and Luella. In December, 1860, James C. Davis married Melissa, daughter of George W. and Amanda (Thomas) Austin, of Ohio County. She was born June 20, 1845, and died May 30, 1870, and from their union sprang George J., Thomas H. (deceased) and Alexander H. Mr. Davis was next married, December 30, 1870, to Mrs. Mary, widow of George W. Sanderford, born in 1838, and to them have been born Oma, Gertrude, Judson B., Ophelia and Finis. Mr Davis is a farmer, owing 150 acres of good land in a fine state of cultivation. He is a Mason; has been for thirty years an elder in the United Baptist Church, and in politics a Republican.

EDWARD DAVISON, Ohio County, was born December 30, 1830, in Grayson County, Ky.; removed with his parents to Breckinridge County in 1836, where he was reared to manhood, and in 1854 located in Ohio County, where he has by industry, frugality and strict adherence to business become one of the leading business men in the county. His father, William Davison, a native of Washington County, Ky., born in 1804, and in childhood removed with his parents to Grayson County, where he served as magistrate for many years, and died in 1872. He was the son of Edward Davison, who died in 1830. William married Elizabeth, daughter of William Robinson, of Breckinridge County, born in 1812, and died in 1883. From this union sprang our subject, Margaret A. (married to Henry R. Dean) and Samuel. February 22, 1853, Edward Davison married Mary J., daughter of Francis and Jane (Mason) Lendrum, of Grayson County, born in 1832, and died in 1865, and to them were born William F. (deceased), Amanda (married to John Godsey), Samuel, Lillie B. (married to Cicero Whittinghill) and Charles. Mr. Davison was next married January 1, 1867, to Amanda F., daughter of William and Sallie (Herndon) Blaine, of Grayson County, born July 21, 1839, and to this union were born Edward W., Virgil, Henry, Anderson and Russell R. Mr. Davison has, on the place where he now resides, been engaged in merchandising, lumbering and general trading, in which he has met with encouraging success. He has always been a farmer and extensive dealer in stock, and is now the owner of 2,000 acres of land, 1,300 of which are in a good state of cultivation, well improved, etc. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity and a Democrat. Mrs. D. is a member of the Christian Church. Her father was a soldier in the war of 1812.

JOHN DOHERTY was born in the county Donegal, Ireland, in 1836, and is a son of Owen and Hannah (Sweney) Doherty. Owen Doherty was married in his native country, where he was engaged in farming and contracting all his life. He and his wife were life-long members of the Catholic Church. John Doherty received but little education in youth in his native land, where he was mainly engaged in farming until he was nineteen years of age. In April, 1855, he landed in the United States, first going to West Virginia, where he was engaged in railroading for several months. He then removed to Pittsburgh, Penn., where he was engaged in flat-boating down the rivers to New Orleans until the breaking out of the war. In 1861 he was employed in the ordnance department of the United States forces of Louisville, Ky., and immediately after the capture of Nashville, Tenn., by the Federals he was transferred to that city, where he remained about three years. He then engaged in the liquor business at Nashville, remaining about one year. In the summer of 1865 he made a visit to Ireland, remaining until the fall of that year. In 1867 he engaged in the liquor trade at Mt. Vernon, Ky., where he remained about two years and then returned to Nashville, where he was engaged in the same business for a time. In the spring of 1870 he came to Rockport, Ohio County, where he has since been engaged in the liquor and grocery trade. He is also engaged in farming and stock raising. Mr. Doherty was also engaged in the coal business in Ohio County. He, Smith, Keith & Co. opened the Rockport Mines, now known as the Echol Mines, of which he yet owns a portion of the stock. In addition to the above, Mr. Doherty also owns valuable property in Rockport. He was married, May 29, 1882, to Maggie Doherty, a native of Louisville, Ky. They have one child—Owen, born February 8, 1885. Both are members of the Catholic Church. In politics Mr. Doherty is a Democrat.

ROBERT J. DUFF, Ohio County, was born December 25, 1838, in Granger County, Tenn., and in 1851 removed to Ohio County, Ky., where, in 1861, he enlisted in Company F, Seventeenth Kentucky Infantry, remaining in the service of his country until the regiment was mustered out in 1865. Soon after his discharge from the army he removed to Spencer County, Ind., remaining there until 1868, when he returned to Ohio County, Ky., where he has since resided. His father, Robert R. Duff, a native of Virginia, died in 1848, aged fifty-five years. Robert R. espoused in marriage Caroline Walker, of Virginia, who died in 1848 at the age of forty-five years. Their offspring are Araminta (Long), Louisa T. (Mitchel), John W., Robert James, Hugh T., Rufus S., Temple H. and Carrie E. (Wedding). On May 28, 1858, Robert J. (subject), married Josephine, daughter of Robert G. and Mary A. (Hale) Wedding, Ohio County; she died in 1867. To their union was born one child—Emmer E. (Johnson). Mr. Duff next married, March 6, 1870, Mrs. Martha M., widow of Fleming R. Kuykendall and daughter of Calvin and Mary (Walker) Johnson, of Ohio County, born October 10, 1848, and to them have been born Ida F., Thomas T., James A., Charles P., Robert C., Carrie (deceased), and Ollie W. Robert M. Kuykendall is a son by Mrs. Duff's former husband. Mr. Duff is a successful farmer, having 195 acres of productive and well-improved land in good condition. He is an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in politics a stanch Republican.

ISAAC N. DUKE was born January 28, 1828. His father, Washington Duke, was a native of Virginia, where he was reared and married; then moved to Tennessee, and later came to Kentucky, locating in Ohio County, where he died. His wife, Elizabeth Vaught, of Virginia, is also deceased. They have twelve children—four living in Kentucky. Isaac N. is the seventh child, was reared on a farm, and at twenty-one began for himself, working by the month, and later bought a farm, where he now lives. He owns 150 acres, 100 under cultivation. He set out an orchard, built a residence, fenced and cleared the ground on which his residence now stands. He raises tobacco, wheat, corn and oats, etc., for which he finds a ready sale. He also raises stock. November 23, 1851, Mr. Duke married Martha J. Tinsley, of this county, daughter of Absalom and Mary (Kerns) Tinsley. She died December 4, 1881, a member of the Methodist Church. They were the parents of nine children, five living: John A., farming; Lucy, wife of Charles Wimpsatt; Stephen E., Prudie M., and Ada E., the last two at home keeping house. Mr. Duke, with his children, except Ada E., are Methodists. Politically Mr. Duke is a Democrat; prior to the war he was a Whig. He is a school trustee. He has taken all the degrees to Master Mason in the Masonic order. His personal standing is the result of his own industry.

JOHN D. T. DUKE, a carpenter by trade, was born in Ohio County, Ky., January 17, 1835, and is a son of Thomas Duke, who still survives at the age of seventy-eight years. He also is a native of Ohio County, Ky., and was born March 17, 1807. His vocation in life has been that of a farmer. He married Elizabeth Taylor, of Ohio, Ky., who died April 18, 1836, leaving two children, Margaret and John D. T. Afterward married Darcas Ann Addington, who died June 21, 1884, leaving eight children. John Duke, the grandfather of John D. T., was a native of Maryland, born in 1773. John D. T. Duke had but few advantages of early education, but by close application, has obtained a fair business education, and is quite an expert at the carpenter trade. At the age of twenty-one he began farming for himself. Rented land until 1866, when he bought thirty-three acres of land from Henry Thomson. He afterward bought 108 acres of land from Q. C. Shanks and John Stevens, and fifty-two and one-half acres from Frederick Schroader. In 1880 he bought an interest in a saw-mill, and was engaged in the manufacturing of lumber for two years, when he sold his interest in the mill and went into the drug business, with A. V. Thomson, at Horton, Ohio Co., Ky. Mr. Duke has not inherited any part of his possessions, but has gained it all through his own exertions and close application to business. Mr. Duke still retains a state of single blessedness. Politically he is a stanch Democrat; a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he holds the office of trustee, and favors the cause of temperance by example and precept.

WILLIAM HENRY DUKE, Ohio County, was born July 7, 1843, in Ohio County, Ky., where he has always resided. His father, William Duke, a native of Tennessee, was born in 1811, removed with his parents in youth to Ohio County, Ky.; was for many years an active Methodist, and died in 1870. He owned 644 acres of good land; he lost three slaves by the war. He was the son of Washington Duke, born near Blue Ridge, Va., and died about 1863, at the age of seventy seven years. William was married to Julia A., daughter of Matthew and Hannah (Sabine) Neely, of Ohio County, born August 23, 1815, in New York, reared in Warwick County, Ind. To them were born Mary E. (Berryman), Eliza E. (Moore), James N., Martha J. (Renfrow), William Henry, Jacob D., Robert N., Julia A. (Bean), Amelia J. (Mitchel), Thomas D., and Amanda Z. (Bean). December 25, 1864, William Henry married Josie A., daughter of Gabriel J. and Mary A. (Acton) Bean, of Ohio County; she was born August 17, 1845, and to them were born Venia P., Eva R., Edessa G., Zelma L. (deceased), Annie J. (deceased), Foy D., Edgar F., Henry O., Mary B and an infant daughter unnamed. Mr. Duke is a successful farmer, owning a farm of fine land in a good state of cultivation. He is a Methodist and a Democrat.

ROBERT N. DUKE, Sulphur Springs, was born June 18, 1848, in Ohio County, Ky., where he grew to manhood and still resides, (for ancestral history see biography of W. H. Duke). Robert N. Duke was married, December 10, 1874, to Sarah C., daughter of Gabriel and Cordelia B. (Lashbrook) Acton, of Ohio County; she was born September 2, 1855, and to them were born one child, Geneva, deceased. Mr. Duke is a farmer, and has 105 acres of productive land in a high state of cultivation. He is in religion a Methodist, and in politics a Democrat.

DAVID DUNCAN was born March 6,

1842, in Ayrshire, Scotland, and at the age of eleven years immigrated with his parents to Schuylkill County, Penn., where he remained until 1858, when he removed to Muhlenburgh County, Ky., engaging in mining. In 1861 he enlisted as a private in Company A, Seventeenth Kentucky Infantry, and served three years and four months. He was wounded three times, and was promoted to the position of captain, while in the service. His father, David Duncan, a native of Scotland, was a soldier in the Third Pennsylvania Cavalry, in the late war, and died about 1868. His father was also named David. Subject's mother, Jane (Malise) Duncan, was born in Glasgow, Scotland, about 1805, and is now living. Her marriage with subject's father was blessed by the birth of Andrew, Robert M. (a soldier in an Illinois regiment), David (subject), Daniel M. (a soldier in the Fourth New York Heavy Artillery) and Jane (married to James Kelley, who served in a Pennsylvania Regiment). In 1865 subject married Mary, daughter of John and Jane (Miller) McDugal, of Muhlenburgh County, and to them have been born David J., Jane, Daniel M., William G., Annie, Neil, Robert and Andrew. Mr. Duncan is a member and superintendent of the coal mining company at Echols, Ohio Co., Ky., and has met with encouraging success in his enterprises. In religion he is a Presbyterian, and in politics a stanch Republican. He is a member of the A. F. & A. M.

WILLIAM G. DUNCAN, superintendent of McHenry Mines, postmaster and express agent, Ohio County, is the son of Andrew Duncan, a native of Glasgow, Scotland, who came to America in 1855, and first settled in Pottsville, Penn. He remained there but a short time, however, but went to Airdrie, Muhlenburgh Co., Ky. Being a practical miner he took a contract to sink a shaft for R. S. C. A. Alexander, at Airdrie, Ky. Afterward he opened a mine at Paradise, and then went to Butler County, Aberdeen. Twelve years ago he came to McHenry and opened the first mine, becoming one of the owners, and was superintendent until his death, which occurred May 25, 1877. His widow is still living at McHenry. They had eight children, of whom William G. Duncan is the eldest, and was born in Hollytown, Scotland, September 4, 1851; Mary, wife of Oliver C. Roll; Jennie, wife of W. D. Hamilton; D. S. Duncan, druggist, at McHenry Mines; Andrew J., late superintendent of Echols Mine, killed at the age of twenty-one, October 23, 1882; Jennette, Ella and Maggie. Mr. Duncan was married, May 16, 1878, to Mary H., youngest daughter of William Hamilton, also of Glasgow, Scotland. Mrs. Duncan was born in Airdrie, Ky., October 12, 1860. They have two children: Katie Belle, born May 13, 1879, and Andrew Wallace, born July 27, 1880. Mr. Duncan began mining at the age of twelve years, and is a practical miner, thoroughly understanding all parts of the business. He is now one of the three owners of the mines, and is also secretary and superintendent. Mr. Duncan is a self-made man, honest and upright in all his business relations, and has the highest reputation in both commercial and social circles.

ALEXANDER C. ELLIS is the eldest child of Joel and Jane (Mason) Ellis. Joel Ellis was born November 17, 1784, in what is now Fayette County, Ky. His father, John Ellis, was a native of Virginia, born January 29, 1749; his father came from England and his mother from Wales. John Ellis came to Kentucky about 1780, and located near the present site of Lexington, where he died January 15, 1794, leaving twelve children, of whom subject's father was the seventh. Joel Ellis was bound out to the carpenter's trade, but upon coming of age gave his attention to farming, in Gallatin County, Ky.; he afterward moved to Henry County, and in 1839 he bought a large tract of land in Ohio County, with a view to stock raising, but owing to the undeveloped condition of the country, this was a failure, and he lost heavily by this venture and by the war. He possessed, however, a good competence at his death, in August, 1871. He was a man of great force of character, and held many responsible positions of trust, among which were those of magistrate and sheriff of Gallatin County. He was twice married; his first wife, Polly Smith, died February 21, 1841, leaving twelve children. His second wife, who died January 24, 1882, bore him four children, of whom Alexander C. is the eldest child, and was born July 27, 1842, in this county. He attended the district school, and afterward took a thorough course at the Hartford Seminary. When seventeen years of age he began teaching, which he followed during the winter months for nine years. March 31, 1868, he married Mrs. Mary E. Hill, nee Stevens, daughter of John B. and Jane (Baird) Stevens, and has since been trading, dealing in tobacco and farming. For two years he was deputy sheriff of this county, and in 1884 received the nomination for sheriff, but declined to make the race. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and he and wife are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Their children are Bennett S., Pearla, Charles H., Ernest and Everett (twins), Howard B., Z. Wayne and Samuel H.

HENRY M. ESKRIDGE, Ohio County, was born January 25, 1861, in Hardinsburgh, Breckinridge Co., Ky., where he grew to manhood. In 1880 he located at McHenry, Ohio County, and in 1883 at Echols, where he now resides. His father, Elijah R. Eskridge, was born September 19, 1812, in Grayson County; was a judge in Breckinridge County, and is still living. He is the son of Capt. George Eskridge, of Virginia, a Revolutionist, who suspected and abused Benedict Arnold, and died in 1824, aged over eighty years. The family are of Irish extraction. Elijah R. married Elizabeth, daughter of James W. and Sarah (Morris) Taylor, of Breckinridge County. She was born in 1813 and died in 1874, and to them were born Letitia (Haswell), James G., Morris, Mamie (Butler), Roscoe, Alfred, Jennie (Williams), Melville and Henry M. The last named attended the common schools and the high school at Hartford, improved his opportunities, and secured a good education. He is superintendent of the McHenry-Rockport Company's store at Echols, and in politics is a Republican.

JAMES EUDALEY was born in Jefferson County, east Tenn., October 24, 1827. and is a son of David and Sarah (Baldwin) Eudaley, both of whom were natives of North Carolina and of English descent. David Eudaley was educated and married in his native State. Soon after his marriage he removed to east Tennessee, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death, which occurred at the ripe old age of eighty-nine or ninety years. He was for several years a magistrate, and was a veteran in the war of 1812, having ranked as orderly sergeant, and served at Norfolk, Va. He and wife are life-long members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in which for many years he was a class leader, exhorter and superintendent of the Sunday-school. James Eudaley receiveda common school education in youth, and also attended a high school for a time. He was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority, after which he was employed as a salesman in a general store at Old Monroe, Overton Co., Tenn., for about two years. He then engaged in farming in the same county, which he continued until the breaking out of the late civil war, when, in consequence of his Union sentiments, he was obliged to leave Tennessee. He moved to Greenville, Muhlenbugh Co., where he was engaged at various pursuits for one year. He then removed to Daviess County, Ky., where he farmed for about three years. In the latter part of 1864 he removed to Ohio County, Ky., to his farm near Centretown, upon which he remained until the fall of 1884, when he sold out and bought the farm of 180 acres on Green River, near Ceralvo, known as the Baker Farm, upon which he now resides. In early life he commenced to learn the saddler's trade, but was compelled to abandon the same on account of failing health. About a year before the war he made a trip South, visiting Mobile and other Southern cities. In the early spring, just before the breaking out of the late war, he started for California, but abandoned the trip in consequence of the beginning of hostilities, remaining in Kansas and Missouri about six months. He was first married October 6, 1853, to Matilda J. Smith, a native of Overton County, Tenn. To this union were born one son and one daughter; David A. and Sarah A., both of whom are living and reside in Texas. Mrs. Matilda J. Eudaley departed this life February 27, 1858. She was a devoted member of the Christian Church. Mr. Eudaley next married, February 2, 1865, Elizabeth C. Render, a native of Ohio County. Eight children were the fruit of this union, seven of whom—six daughters and one son—are now living, viz.: Martha B., Orlena E., Robert E., Alice, Susan M., Launa and Adella L. Mrs. Eudaley is a member of the United Baptist Church; Mr. Eudaley belongs to no church, but is a zealous Christian worker, and holds to the doctrines of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is a member of the K. of H., and was a member formerly of both the S. of T. and the P. of H. In politics he is identified with the national Greenback party.

WILLIAM J. EVERLY, Ohio County, was born in what is now McLean County, Ky., May 15, 1827, and is the son of Simeon and Elizabeth (Everly) Everly, the former of whom was a native of Virginia and the latter of McLean County, Ky.; both were of German descent. Simeon Everly received his early education in his native State. When a young man, in about 1822, he removed to Muhlenburgh County, Ky., now McLean County. Here he was married, and soon after that event his father-in-law gave him sixty-five acres of wild land, which he subsequently improved, and to which he added from time to time, owning, at the time of his death, a well-improved farm of 165 acres. His death occurred May, 1855. He and wife were, in early life, members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. William J. Everly received such an education as could be obtained at the old schools of the time. He was employed on the home farm, remaining with his mother after the death of his father until he was thirty-three years of age. He then bought a part of the old homestead farm, upon which he resided for some twelve years. In January, 1872, he moved on to a farm of some 200 acres near Point Pleasant, Ohio County, which he had bought the year before. Here he has since been extensively engaged in agricultural pursuits. He was married March 25, 1860, to Nancy J. Bennett, also a native of McLean County, Ky. Five children—three sons and two daughters—have blessed their union, all of whom are living. Mr. Everly and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. In politics he is a Republican.

WILLIAM LOGAN FELIX was born October 10, 1828, in Ohio County, Ky.; at the age of ten years removed with his parents to Hopkins County, and in 1848 returned to Ohio County, where he has since resided. His father, Philip Felix, was born in 1802, probably in Franklin County, Ky.; was a stone mason; assisted in the construction of the penetentiary wall at Frankfort, and died in 1866. He was the son of John Felix, a German, from Virginia. John's children were Isaac, William, Charles, Philip, Josiah, Hannah (Bannon), Betsey (Carter), Susan (Christian), Mahala (Morris), Sallie (Howard) and Jane (Howard). Philip married Judith, daughter of Josiah and Judith (New) Haynes, of Ohio County, born in 1806, and still living. Their children are Emeline (Herring and Kelley), Josiah, William L., Sally (Johnson), James R., Artelia A. (Heverin), Mahala F. (Boswell), John I., Henry C. and Burch B. Mr. Felix was first married September 7, 1853, to Susan V., daughter of Frank and Nancy (Thompson) Black, of Ohio County; she was born September 7, 1828, and died May 24, 1860, and from their union sprang Antoinette E. (deceased) and Catherine J. Mr. Felix was next married, February 13, 1861, to Hannah A., daughter of Farmer and Nancy (Haynes) Deweese, of Grayson County, born February 3, 1843, and to them have been born Philip O., James C., Emeline H. (deceased) and Frances A. Mr. Felix is a farmer, having 136 acres of good land in a high state of cultivation. He is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and in politics a Republican.

JAMES THOMAS FELIX was born September 27, 1831, in the northeast part of Ohio County, Ky., in 1844 removed with his parents to Hopkins County, where he grew to manhood; in 1854 returned to Ohio County, and purchased the place where he now resides, upon which he placed his mother and her orphaned children, taking the place of his father in providing for their wants. His father, Charles Felix, a native of Woodford County, removed in childhood with his parents to Ohio County; was a stone mason, farmer and trader, and died in 1852, aged fifty-five years; he was the son of John, of Virginia (see sketch of William L. Felix). Charles married Mary R., daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth (Bell) Sullenger, of Grayson County; she died in 1856, aged fifty-five years. Their offspring are Sarah E. (Herring and Byers), Nancy J. (Wright), James Thomas, Martha H. A. (Hoover), Francis M., William H. and Charles B. B. James T. Felix obtained but a limited education in his youth, but is taking a great interest in the education of his children. He has been twice married; first, October 27, 1857, to Elizabeth, daughter of Frank and Jane (Mason) Lendrum, of Grayson County; she was born in 1838, and died in 1858. Their union was blessed with one son, Frank Lendrum, now superintendent of schools for Ohio County. Mr. Felix was next married, December 6, 1862, to Mary B., daughter of William and Matilda (Stateler) Duke, of Ohio County; she was born April 9, 1837; this union has also been blessed with one son—Charles William. Mr. Felix is a successful farmer and stock-raiser, owning 300 acres of productive and well-improved land, in a high state of cultivation. He is a Democrat and a Cumberland Presbyterian; his wife is a Methodist.

CHARLES B. B. FELIX, Ohio County, was born March 25, 1847, in Hopkins County, Ky., and in 1854 removed with his mother to Ohio County, where he has since resided. He is the son of Charles and Mary R. (Sullenger) Felix (a sketch of whom will be found elsewhere). Charles B. B. Felix, in childhood, procured such an education as the schools of the time afforded. He was married November 10, 1870, to Nancy J., daughter of Elias and Mary J. (Shearer) Walker, of Breckinridge County, born December 9, 1851, and to them have been born Mary Rollin, Bertha May, Ximena (deceased), Elias (deceased), Sarah Elizabeth and Susan. Mr. Felix's occupation is that of farming; he owns 250 acres of fine land, in good condition and in a high state of cultivation. He also engages in running lumber from Rough Creek during the rafting season. In politics, he is identified with the Democratic party.

FRANK L. FELIX was born September 29, 1858, in Ohio County, and is a son of James T. and Elizabeth Felix. He was reared on his father's farm and attended the district schools until he was eighteen years old, when, having obtained some means by dealing in stock, he attended Salem College, in Meade County, four months. He next attended school at Canmer, Hart Co., Ky., and finally graduated in scientific course from Hartford College in 1882, and the same fall was appointed by the county court as school commissioner, and in 1884 was elected county school superintendent, his present position, by the largest majority ever given to any candidate for that position in the county. Mr. Felix's natural ability and thorough education, together with the universal esteem in which he is held bespeak for him other positions of trust and honor.

CHARLES L. FIELD, Esq., was born in Buford, Ohio Co., Ky., August 11, 1852. In the common schools, at home and in the college at Hartford, he received a fair English education. December 27, 1876, he was united in marriage to Miss Lara A. Eden, a native of Paducah, Ky., born August 28, 1854. She received a liberal education in the public schools and in the College of the Sisters of Charity of the same city. His grandfather was William Field, born in Daviess County, Ky., in 1790, an extensive land owner and high sheriff of the county of Daviess for several years, also one of the earliest settlers in Ohio County. He lived to see all his children, to the number of ten, buried. He died in 1876. The father of our subject, Col. Benjamin Field, was the eldest of the family, and was born in Buford Precinct, Ohio County, in 1829, and died November 8, 1873. His mother was Josephine Austin, born near Hartford, Ky., in 1832. There were six children, of whom our subject is the eldest; the others are Henry, born August 14, 1854, married Carrie Rowe (they reside at Hartford, Ky.); Laura A. born August 31, 1856, married J. E. Magan, 1875; Edwin D., born November 17, 1858, educated at the South Carrollton Institute, unmarried; Benjamin L., born in 1862, a merchant and tobacconist, at Buford; James J., born in 1866. Our subject is a justice of the peace and his home is a large and commodious brick—one of the finest in the county—the home of his ancestors. The farm consists of 132½ acres of improved land. His mother is now the wife of the Rev. James S. Coleman, a well known clergyman of the Baptist Church.

JOHN A. FORD was born January 6, 1819, in Ohio County, Ky., where he has always resided. His father, Joseph Ford, a native of Pike County, was born in 1797, and died in 1868. He was the son of a Revolutionary soldier, who also served in the war of 1812, and died in Pike County about 1825. Joseph married Lucinda, daughter of John and Dolly (Piper) Awtry, of Ohio County, born in 1794, died in 1859, and from this union sprang John A.; Dolly (Likins); David, Joseph, and Isaac served in the late war, also William; Burrel, killed in battle; Angeline, Martha and Charlotte, who married three brothers named Kuykendall. October 15, 1840, Mr. Ford married Martha J., daughter of Nathan and Nancy (Likins) Keown, of Ohio County, born May 16, 1821, and to them have been born Mary (O'Bannon), Newton J. (served in the late war), John W. (in the late war, at the capture of Morgan), Margaret (Berkley), Narcissa A. (Lunsford), Alexander (deceased), Joseph N. (deceased), Thomas H., Jacob S., Lucinda J. and Nancy M. Mr. Ford is a farmer having 177 acres of fair land in a good state of cultivation. He has, for forty years, been a member of the Baptist Church and politically is a stanch Republican.

WILLIAM FORD, Ohio County, was born in Shelby County, Ky., September 19, 1824. His parents were John and Nancy (Garth) Ford. The father was born in South Carolina, and at the age of ten years came with his father, Elisha Ford, and settled in Shelby County, Ky. The mother was a native of Rockingham County, Va. The grandfather, Elisha Ford, served eight years as a soldier in the war of Independence. There were of John Ford's family eleven children, six of whom are living: Harvey Ford, resides at Fordsville, Ohio County; Mrs. Reuben Miller, a widow, residing in Ellis Precinct; Mrs. Truman, of Fordsville, also a widow; William, our subject; Milton Ford, who resides in Daviess County, and Mrs. William Bates, of Breckinridge County. An elder brother, now deceased, was a resident of Fordsville, and gave his name to the town and precinct; his son, James Ford, is a successful business man of Hartford. The father, John Ford, settled in Ohio County, near Fordsville, in 1833, and died in 1870; his wife in 1865. William Ford was married, December 9, 1846, to Elizabeth Whittinghill, second child of J. C. Whittinghill. She was born in Daviess County in 1830, and received a fair education. Mr. Ford, at the age of twenty four years, purchased a farm in Ohio County, subsequently sold it, and purchased another, which he sold, and soon afterward removed to Illinois, where he remained five years and prospered greatly as a farmer; he then sold his property in Illinois, and returned to his native State and settled on a farm in Breckinridge County. Wishing to give his children the opportunities of receiving a good education, he removed to the city of Owensboro, and subsequently purchased the beautiful farm on which he now resides, in Ellis Precinct, Ohio County. Mr. and Mrs. Ford are the parents of three children: James W. married Maggie Metcalf, daughter of William Metcalf, Sr.; Mary Jane, the wife of Virgil Miller, is an accomplished scholar and teacher; Sallie E., also well educated, is a teacher of music. The family are life long members of the Baptist Church. Our subject, prior to the late war, was an old line Whig, since that time he has been a Democrat. He has been successful as a farmer; has taken a deep interest in the education of his children, all of whom are intelligent members of society. His home is one of the best in the precinct, and his farm of 107 acres of good land is well improved. A brother, Elisha, now deceased, represented the counties of Ohio and Hancock twice in the Kentucky State legislature.

JAMES W. FORD was born January 25, 1842, at Fordsville, Ohio Co., Ky., a son of Elisha M. and Nancy (Hardwick) Ford. Elisha M. is a native of Shelby County, Ky., where he was reared and educated; when a boy his father moved to Ohio County. His parents were natives of North Carolina, and were among the first settlers of Shelby County. Elisha M. was a tobacconist and farmer by occupation, and served his district two terms in the State legislature. He was a leading citizen, and took a prominent position in all local enterprises. His death occurred in 1851; his wife died in 1852. They were Baptists; he was a Mason. They were the parents of five children, two living: Mrs. Eliza Ogelvie, of Charleston, Mo., and James W. The latter was reared in this county until fourteen years of age, when he went to Missouri to live with his sister. In company with four other boys he worked his way through to Pike's Peak in 1859. After his return from Missouri and Pike's Peak to Hartford, Ky., after an absence of about four years, he attended school until 1861, when he enlisted under Capt. Pendleton, in Company C, Ninth Kentucky Infantry (Confederate service), and served four years. "There were 140 enrolled in his company at its organization, and but twenty-six returned, and these bore forty-seven wounds." He enlisted as a private, was promoted to sergeant, later elected lieutenant. He participated in the battles of Shiloh, Baton Rouge, Murfreesboro, Vicksburg, Hartsville and in the Atlanta campaign, and never missed a battle of his regiment. Upon his return from the war he entered the drug business, at Hartford, in partnership with Mr. Taylor, whom he afterward bought out, and has since carried on the business himself, with the exception of a short term of partnership. He carries a large stock, is well located on the public square, and enjoys a flourishing trade. November 12, 1872, he married Miss Abbie R. Rowan, of Ohio County. They have one daughter—Jessie, ten years of age. Mrs. Ford is a Methodist.

WILLIAM FOSTER was born March 13, 1823, in County Down, Ireland. His parents, Richard and Nancy (Beaty) Foster, came to America in 1828, and located in Pittsburgh, Penn., where the father carried on his trade of boot and shoe-making. The mother died October 30, 1833, which scattered the family, and sometime after the father married again, and moved to Ohio, where he died. At the death of his mother, when he was ten years old, subject was thrown upon his own resources, and worked by day's labor at various kinds of employment until 1849, when, with his savings of $100, he came to Ohio County, Ky., and worked in a saw-mill. In August, 1850, he married Miss Susan Bennett, and engaged in farming. By indefatigable labor and economy he has gained a position among the first farmers of the county. He owns a large farm, well improved, with pleasant cottage residence, and has his farm stocked with the best breeds of stock, making a specialty of raising short-horn cattle. His first wife died September 18, 1861, leaving six children, five living. His present wife was a Miss Sarah J. Carson, and to them have been born five sons. Many of Mr. Foster's children are doing for themselves, and are very prosperous. He is a liberal temperance Democrat.

ISAAC FOSTER was born in County Down, Ireland, March 8, 1825, and is the third child in a family of six children. He came to America with his parents, and at the death of his mother, when about eight years old, went to live with John and Susanna (Castleman) Ross, and two years later came with them to Ohio County, Ky., and located on 800 acres of land on Caney Creek. His foster parents were kind and indulgent, and took a deep interest in his training and welfare until 1841, when he left them, and learned the carpenter's trade with Asa Bennett. He engaged in farming three years on an unimproved tract of land, which he cleared and improved. This place he sold and bought an improved farm, which he conducted until 1859, when he traveled over Texas prospecting for a location till 1860, when he returned to Ohio County and read medicine up to September, 1861. He enlisted as a private in Company D, Twenty-sixth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, Federal service, and, six months later, was promoted to hospital steward, and in this capacity, and that of assistant surgeon, served until July, 1865. He was in the engagements at Shiloh, Nashville, Ft. Anderson, at the surrender of Joseph Johnson, etc. At the close of the war he entered into mercantile business at Beda, this county, and continued fourteen years, during which he practiced medicine eight years. He then entrusted his son John B. with the management of the store, and moved on the farm, where he now resides, consisting of 600 acres with brick residence and otherwise well improved. He is a large dealer in tobacco. Mr. Foster has been married three times. His first wife was Miss Altha A. Bennett; by this union there is one child living, Joseph N., now an attorney at Marshfield, Mo. His second marriage was to Miss Eliza Tinsley, who left one son, John B. His third marriage was to Miss Nancy C. Carson, they have one child, Minnie, at home. He is a Methodist, and in politics a Prohibitionist.

ABSALOM P. FRAZIER, Ohio County, was born August 3, 1827, in Jefferson County, Ky., and in 1840, removed with his parents to Ohio County, where he still resides. In 1861 he enlisted in Company F, Seventeenth Kentucky Infantry, and remained with the regiment as teamster three years and four months, having an arm broken in the service. His father, Alexander Frazier, was born in 1793, in Shelby County, and died in Grayson County, in 1864. He was the son of Andrew Frazier, of Maryland, a Revolutionary soldier of Scotch-Irish descent. Alexander married Rosana, daughter of Absalom and Diademia (Webb) Pierce, of Shelby County, born in 1805, and now living, and to them were born Andrew J., Absalom P., Alfred (deceased), Allen L. (died a prisoner of war at Richmond, Va.), Gilbert H. (deceased), Ann A. (McDaniel), Elvira and John W., who was drowned while in the army. Mr. Frazier is a farmer, owning 100 acres of good land. Being unmarried he is living with his mother and sister. Mr. Frazier is a member of the Reformed Church, and in politics a Republican.

WILLIAM H. FULKERSON was born in Ohio County, December 13, 1822, and is a son of Fulkerd and Mary (Coleman) Fulkerson, the former of whom was a native of Mercer and the latter a native of Ohio County, Ky. They were of English and German descent, respectively. Fulkerd Fulkerson, when a young man, about 1812, came with his parents, who were among the early settlers, to Ohio County, Ky., then almost a wilderness. Here his father, Philip Fulkerson, bought several thousand acres of military lands and improved a farm, upon which he resided until his death. In this county Fulkerd Fulkerson was married, and after attaining his majority improved a farm on a part of his father's purchase, where he remained until the fall of 1823, when he sold and removed to White County, Ill., where he bought a farm, and resided for some thirty-five years. His wife died in 1850, and in 1858 he sold his farm and returned to Kentucky, making his home with his children until his death, which occurred in April, 1867, in his seventy-second year. He and wife were life-long members of the United Baptist Church. William H. Fulkerson received such an education as could be obtained in the early schools of the Illinois frontier. He was employed on his father's farm until he was sixteen years old. He then learned the cooper's trade, and followed the same in Illinois for about four years. In 1842, he returned to Ohio County Ky., where he was employed almost exclusively at his trade for some three years. In the winter of 1843 he got out and ran a flat-boat load of staves down the rivers to New Orleans. In 1845 he bought a partially improved farm near Rockport, where he was engaged in farming in connection with his trade. In 1855 he sold this place and bought another in the same neighborhood, upon which he resided for some ten years. In 1865 he again sold out and bought the farm of 320 acres, which is now well improved, near Hogg's Falls, upon which he now resides and where he is extensively and successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits and in stock raising. For many years he made the culture of tobacco a specialty. He was married, July 6, 1846, to Fannie R. McConnell, a native of Muhlenburgh County, Ky. Eleven children were the fruit of this union, ten of whom—six sons and four daughters—are yet living. Mr. Fulkerson is and has been for over forty years a devoted member of the United Baptist Church; is also a member of the Masonic fraternity, having taken his degree at Hartford Lodge, No. 156, and he has been W. M. of Ceralvo Lodge No. 253, for some seven of eight years. In politics he is a Democrat.

SEPTIMUS PHILIP FULKERSON was born February 11, 1845, in Ohio County, Ky., where he has always resided. His father, Alfred Fulkerson, a native of Ohio County, died in 1861, aged about fifty years. He was a son of Philip Fulkerson. Alfred married Hannah, daughter of Septimus I. Taylor, of Ohio County; she died in 1876, about the age of fifty years, and their children are Margaret E. (Wallace), William T., Eliza J. (Dexter), John C., James A., Septimus P., Charles W., Priscilla M., and Sarah C. (Maddox). April 16, 1878, Mr. Fulkerson was married to Mary L., daughter of Elijah and Nancy (Stateler) Maddox, of Ohio County, born October 20, 1858, and to them have been born Ida E. (deceased), Nannie Ettie, and Owen Pigman. Mr. Fulkerson is a farmer and miner, and on the farm is chiefly engaged in raising corn, tobacco and stock. He is a member of the Methodist Church, and in politics a Democrat.

WILLIAM W. GAINES, Ohio County, was born in Grainger County, Tenn., November 25, 1843. He is the son of Baylos E. Gaines, a native of Virginia, who immigrated to east Tennessee when a young man and married Eliza Baird, who died in 1836, leaving three children: Martha, Jane and James. His second marriage was in 1838, with Miss Rhoda Choram, who died in 1860, leaving nine children: Mary E., John P., William W., Rhoda E., Samuel S., Franklin P., Henry A., Melissa F. and Thomas J. His third marriage was with Mrs. Elvira E. Woods, nee Turner, who survives him, he having died February 9, 1883; by this marriage he left three children: Jasper N., Baylos E. and George C. (deceased). William W. Gaines removed with his father, in 1858, to Butler County, Ky., where he remained until 1862, when he joined the Union army; enlisted in Company D, Eleventh Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, in which he served three years under Gen. Sherman; was engaged in the battles of Rural Hill and Stone River, where he was wounded and his brother John was killed. He was also engaged in the siege of Knoxville, and through the Georgia campaign from Loudon, Tenn., to Atlanta, Ga., from which point he returned with his regiment to Louisville, Ky., and was discharged in June, 1865, after which he spent about four years in travel. April 18, 1869, he married Mary C., daughter of Philip and Martha Davenport; he resided on a farm of fifty acres belonging to his wife until 1879, when he bought 150 acres of land, where he now lives, eighty-five of which are under cultivation, and improved with fences, dwelling, barns, etc. Mr. Gaines prides himself in owing no man a dollar. In connection with the raising of grain and tobacco, Mr. Gaines gives his attention to the breeding of fine stock. He and Mrs. Gaines are members of the Baptist faith. Mr. G. is a Republican, but often votes for Democrats, at all times being governed by the character and qualifications of the man.

THOMAS GILLSTRAP, Ohio County, is the eldest son of Jesse Gillstrap, who was born in Butler County in 1813, and died in Cromwell in 1879. He was twice married; first to Mary S. Taylor, born in 1811, and who died in 1854, and second to Mary J. Taylor, also, but of another family. Of the first wife's seven children only four are now living, of whom Thomas is the eldest. He was born in Butler County, January 12, 1837, and brought up in Ohio County, to which county he went with his parents in 1839, and where he was educated in the common schools. He commenced mercantile life in 1858, as clerk for Charles E. Haynes, of Cromwell, continuing with him six months; then with A. H. Kahn, of the same place; then with L. S. Romans, in Butler county, ten months, and finally with R. J. Daniels about seven years. In 1870, he started for himself in general merchandise, and now has two large stores, dry goods, clothing and a grocery store, and is one of the leading merchants of Ohio County. His annual sales of $25,000 are among the largest in the county. He is noted for strict integrity and fine business ability, and is widely known throughout the town and country. His brother, F. M. Gillstrap, was a member of the Twenty-sixth Kentucky Regiment, and was captain of his company and Provost Marshal, and always proved himself a gallant soldier. He is now employed in his brother's store, as is also another brother, P. W. Gillstrap.

WILLIAM A. GORDON was born June 19, 1844, in Daviess County, Ky. His father, Obadiah Gordon, was a Virginian, who immigrated to Kentucky and settled in Daviess County in 1837, and in 1864 removed to Ohio County, where he died in 1883, aged about eighty-eight years. In early life he followed the trade of a carpenter and builder, but later took up the vocation of farming. Subject's grandfather was a native of Scotland; immigrated to America and died in Virginia in 1800. William Gordon, at the age of twenty years, rented a farm for two years, and began work for himself; afterward bought 130 acres and erected a dwelling, and in the same year, July 6, 1865, was united in marriage with Callia W., daughter of W. D. Coleman. They are the parents of twelve children, nine are now living: Henry B., Mary D., Lucy K., Annis G., William C., Bertie A., Carey C., C. Mabel and Paul B. In 1874 Mr. Gordon erected a tobacco warehouse and bought and shipped tobacco for several years in connection with farming. His farm of 85 acres is well improved and under cultivation. Mr. and Mrs. Gordon are members of the Baptist Church. Mr. Gordon takes a pleasure in saying that he joined the church at the age of fourteen and has been a member ever since, and never played a game of chance or swore an oath in his life; he takes a strong stand in favor of temperance, and is a member of the I. O. G. T. In politics he is a Democrat and takes an active part with his party.

GEORGE W. GORDON is a native Kentuckian, born in Daviess County, February 4, 1846. His father Obadiah Gordon, was born in Virginia, September 3, 1795. He followed the trade of a carpenter for forty years; died May 9, 1883. George W., at the age of twenty-two united himself in marriage with Cynthia E. Brooks of Muhlenburgh County; after marriage he followed the vocation of a farmer for eight years. In the year 1875 he engaged in the tobacco trade, which he has since followed in connection with farming. In 1876, he bought thirty-one acres of land, where he now resides, and now through trade and various business changes and close application, owns 227 acres of land, well improved and under cultivation, has good dwelling, barns and large tobacco warehouse, besides store, and stock of general merchandise. Mr. Gordon in merchandise and tobacco and on his farm carries from $4,000 to $5,000 in stock. Cynthia E. (Brooks) Gordon died August 4, 1883, leaving six children: Mary B., Elvada H., Lena L., Edna A., Finess W. and Georgie E., all of whom are living. In his second marriage Mr. Gordon was united with Mary Turley, of Ohio County, Ky. This union is blessed with one child—Lenna A. Mr. Gordon is in politics a Republican. He is a member of the Baptist Church.

SAMUEL H. GREER, Ohio County, was born in Nelson County, June 15, 1829. He is the son of Samuel and Minerva (Cooper) Greer and grandson of Samuel Greer, who was for seven years a Revolutionary soldier under Washington. He was a native of Ireland, and, about 1790, immigrated to Nelson County, Ky.—then a wilderness, where wild beasts and Indians roamed He was the father of three sons and five daughters, of whom the father of our subject was the youngest son. Many of the descendants now reside in Nelson and other parts of Kentucky, and are generally prominent and well-to-do people. Samuel H. is the second of a family of nine children. At the age of fifteen he lost his father by death, and the care of his mother and the younger members of the family devolved upon him. By industry and energy he overcame all difficulties, and acquired a good home and other property. He was married, January 5, 1854, to Mary Elizabeth Ward, the eldest daughter of James and Nancy (Cooper) Ward. She was born May 8, 1828. Their children are John, married to Olivia Jane Burks—they have one child: Millie; Nancy, born December 14, 1857, died April 28, 1878; Samuel, married to Mary Lee Allen Ralph; Bluford Thomas, Fanny Ann, James Marion, Mary Drucilla, Minerva Ellen, Rebecca Susan. Mr. Greer has been school trustee for several years, and is now overseer of roads. He owns a farm of 400 acres of productive land in Ellis Precinct, near the town of Whitesville. His farm house is large and pleasant. He owns a fine herd of cattle and horses and much other property. There are of his father's descendants, now living—including children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren—nearly 200 representatives. Mr. Greer takes a deep interest in the education of his children. In politics he is a Democrat.

JOHN C. GREER, Ohio County, was born in Spencer County, near Mt. Eden, Ky., June 17, 1831, and removed to Daviess County, Ky., with his parents, Samuel and Minerva (Cooper) Greer, at the age of one year. At the age of eight years, his parents removed to Bartlett Precinct, Ohio County, where he was reared on a farm and attended the common schools, and at the age of twenty-one commenced farming for himself. At a very early age, he was left, by the decease of his father, with the care of his mother and a large family of younger children. His father was born in Nelson County in 1805, and his mother in the same place in 1812. The father died in 1855 and the mother about seventeen years later, and to the close of their long lives were consistent members of the Christian Church. His father was a well-to-do farmer and a successful man of business. John C., subject, was married March 2, 1854, to Martha E., third daughter of James and Nancy Ward, the former of whom died May 13, 1883. Mrs. Greer was born May 26, 1837. To them were born nine children: Amanda Ann, wife of Thomas H. Westerfield; Sanford Marion, married to Elizabeth A. White; James William, married to Lucinda White; Manora Ellen, wife of Leonard Bunger; Mary Elva, wife of Cornelius Hoover; Margaret Elizabeth, wife of Hiram C. Powers; Coleman D., Mortina and John Thomas. Mr. Greer weighs 215 pounds, and is the lightest of his father's family. This family of eleven, including the parents, averaged in weight 260 pounds each, and were probably the heaviest family in the State. There are eight children, eight grandchildren and fifty-eight great-grandchildren. Mr. Greer, his wife and three children are members of the Christian Church. He owns 175 acres of good land, with comfortable buildings. He is well known as an intelligent and prosperous farmer. Mr. Greer himself has twenty-one grandchildren.

BLUFORD C. GREER was born in Ohio County, Ky., March 22, 1840, and is the seventh child born to Samuel and Minerva (Cooper) Greer; of their children, eight are now living, viz.: Samuel H., Margaret, John C., James, Fannie A., Bluford C., Thomas and Mary E. Samuel Greer was reared in Nelson County, Ky., where he married and soon after removed to Daviess County, Ky., and then to Ohio County, where he lived until his death; his widow continued to reside in Ohio County until her death on November 14, 1871. The grandfather, John Greer, was a native of Ireland and came to America before the Revolutionary war; fought with Washington until the close, when he assumed the peaceful life of a farmer; he was among the first settlers of Nelson County, Ky. Elizabeth, wife of John Greer, was a native of Scotland. When Bluford C. was six years old, his father died. The disadvantages contingent to a new country deprived him of an education, his assistance being necessary also to the support of the family of his widowed mother until the age of twenty-two, when he began life for himself, working by the month until the beginning of the war. He enlisted in November, 1862, in Company F, Twenty-sixth Kentucky Infantry, and served under Brig.-Gen. Van Cleve, in Gen. Buell's division; was engaged in the battles of Shiloh, Corinth, Perryville, Fort Anderson, Saltville (Virginia), Wilmington and Sugar Loaf Mountain, besides numerous skirmishes; he received an honorable discharge from the United States service in February, 1865, and returned home, raised a crop on his mother's farm, then farmed on shares—the next year with his brother-in-law; then returned home and farmed his mother's place until November 14, 1879, when he married Fannie Ann Rebecca, daughter of Joshua and Elizabeth (Kelly) Wade. They have been blessed with five children: Annie V., Morris L., Joshua A., Delilah E. and Minerva E., all of whom are living. After marriage, Mr. Greer continued to farm on the farm where he now lives, having a short time previously bought 214 acres; he cleared and put under cultivation seventy-five acres, which are well fenced and improved with good dwelling, barns and out-houses, all of which Mr. Greer has accumulated by his own labor and his wife's assistance. He was a member of the National Grange, and served in the capacity of treasurer of "Sawis Grove" Grange No. 744. In politics he is an independent Democrat. Mr. Greer takes a great interest in schools and in the education of his children.

JUDGE WILLIAM F. GREGORY was born in Boyle County, Ky., June 16, 1837, and is a son of Richard P. and Susan (Clark) Gregory. His grandfather, Godfrey Gregory, came from near Petersburgh, Va., to Washington County, Ky., about 1792. His maternal grandfather, Francis Clark, a native of Lynchburg, Va., who settled near Danville, Ky., was a large land owner, and opened the first salt wells in Kentucky. Richard P. Gregory, subject's father, was reared in Washington County, Ky., educated at St. Mary's College, Kentucky, and at his marriage settled in Boyle County, Ky., where he followed farming. He died in 1874. He had five children, four now living: Clark R., Allen K.; Richard P. (all living in Louisville), and William F. The last, who is the third child of the family, attended St. Mary's College, Marion County, and completed his literary education by graduating from the Kentucky Military Institute near Frankfort, in 1857. He then finished a course of law at the same institution. He was then appointed professor of mathematics and filled a chair two years and a half in that same college. He resigned his position and came to Hartford, where he engaged in the practice of law, and in 1874, was elected county judge over very strong opposing candidates. He was elected school commissioner without his solicitation, and served seven years. He was married, August 19, 1862, to Miss Zelma Berry, daughter of Dr. William J. Berry, now residing in Florida. She is a member of the Baptist Church. Their union has been blessed with four children: Lizzie, Roy, Annie and Parkie. Judge Gregory is a Democrat, and takes an active interest in his party. During the presidential campaign of 1876 he was a member of the State executive committee.

LOUIS G. HADEN was born in Louisiana, near Baton Rouge, July 14, 1846, and is a son of Robert H. and Jane E. (Curtis) Haden, the former of whom was a native of Kentucky, and the latter a native of Louisiana. They were of Scotch-Irish and French descent, respectively. Robert H. Haden received his early education in his native county. When a young man he removed to Louisiana, where he was married, and where he followed his trade (that of a house carpenter) for some eight years. In 1846 he returned to Franklin, Simpson Co., Ky., where he continued to follow his trade for some twenty years. He then engaged in farming in the same county for about ten years, when he removed to Muhlenburgh County, Ky., where he resided for some eight years; thence removed to Christian County, remaining about five years; thence in 1885, to Providence, Tenn., where he now resides. Mrs. Jane E. Haden departed this life November 20, 1871. She was a devoted member of the Baptist Church. Mr. Haden has been for many years a member of the Christian Church and was formerly a member of the S. of T., and of the I. O. G. T. Louis G. Haden received a good common school education in youth, and was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority, after which he continued to farm on the home place, on his own account, for several years. He then removed to Christian County, Ky., where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits for some four years. In March, 1882, he came to Rockport, Ohio Co., Ky., where he has since resided, and been engaged in the drug trade and in general merchandising with S. & M. J. Reid, under the firm name of Reid, Haden & Co. He was married March, 30, 1876, to Mollie A. Sharp, a native of Muhlenburgh County. No children have been left to them. Mr. Haden and wife are devoted members of the Christian Church. He was formerly a member of the I. O. G. T. In politics he is a Democrat.

CLARENCE HARDWICK, circuit clerk, was born in Hartford, Ky., January 3, 1851, the eldest of eleven children born to William and Sarah F. (Nall) Hardwick. The father was a merchant for thirty years in Hartford, and was well reputed for his sterling business qualities and strict integrity. His death occurred February 26, 1883. The mother was a refined, exemplary lady of high Christian character, and was for many years a member of the Baptist Church. Our subject early in life became self-supporting accepting the position of deputy circuit clerk under A. L. Morton. Here his attention to the duties of the office, efficient work, genial bearing, and care in the accommodation of the public, made his services indispensable, and won him great popularity throughout the county. He retained this position ten years, and in 1880 he was elected to the office for which his familiarity with the public records expressly adapts him, and gives to him, in general estimation, the honor of being one of the best officials ever in the county's employ. His wife was Miss Sallie McDaniel, the talented and accomplished daughter of the Rev. James S. and Mary J. McDaniel. They were married January 18, 1882, and are blessed with two children: James F. and Mary M.

ELI MILTON HART, Ohio County, was born December 10, 1824, in Boyle County, Ky., and at the age of twelve years, removed with his brother to Indiana, where he remained until 1845, when he settled in Hardin County, Ky., and located in Ohio County in 1872, where he now resides. His father, Charles Hart, a native of Mercer County, Ky., died in 1833, at the age of sixty years. He was the son of Charles Hart, Sr., one of the pioneers of Kentucky, a Revolutionary soldier, from North Carolina, who died in Mercer County, Ky., in 1837, at an advanced age. Subject's father married Sarah, daughter of John Meek, of Henry County, Ky.; she died in 1882, at the age of eighty years, and to their union were born Golden M., Esther L. (Lawson), Mary L. (Pierce), Henry H., Martha L. (Pierce), Margaret (Atherton), Eli Milton and Louisa G. (May). September 10, 1855, Eli M. Hart was united in marriage to Mary J., daughter of Meredith and Sarah B. (Wilkison) Arthur, of Hardin County, Ky. She was born July 16, 1835, and to them have been born Charles M. (deceased), William L. (deceased), Katie M., John B., Louisa G., Willie, Julia A., Meredith A., Eli O. and Mary B. Mr. Hart is a farmer and is successfully engaged in growing corn, hay and live-stock. In religion he is a Methodist and in politics a Democrat.

FRANCIS M. HATLER, Ohio County, was born September 26, 1848, in Warren County, Ky., and in childhood removed with his parents to Ohio County, where he has since resided. At the age of fourteen he enlisted in Company H, Twelfth Kentucky Cavalry, and was mustered out at the end of six months on account of his minority. In 1863, he re-enlisted in the Thirty-fifth Mounted Infantry and served one year. His father, Berry Hatler, was drowned in Green River in 1852. Berry's wife, Desdemona, daughter of John Minard, died in 1875, near Richland, Spencer Co., Ind. Their children are Lethia E. (Davis) and Francis M. December 5, 1869, Francis M. married Susan C., daughter of James B. and Mary E. (Hampton) London, of Ohio County; she was born January 3, 1851, and to them have been born James M., William W., Jessie E. Mary E., Annie and Nannie (twins and very much alike), Joseph, Lulie A. and Henry C. By industry and frugality, Mr. Hatler has acquired a competency, owning 185 acres of well-improved land, in good state of cultivation. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and is also identified with the Democratic party.

JOHN A. HAWKINS, farmer, Ohio County, was born near Knottsville, Daviess Co., Ky., July 28, 1838, and is the seventh of fourteen children, of whom may be mentioned Dr. James D. Hawkins, a practicing physician in Old Mexico; Upton W., at Cloverport, Breckinridge County; Mrs. Lucy A. Montgomery; Mrs. Amanda Graves, residing near Owensboro, Ky.; Joseph E., in Daviess County; Abiah Chamberlain, in Daviess County. Mr. Hawkins was the son of Aaron and Elizabeth (Madox) Hawkins, the former a native of Maryland, born in 1791, and the latter of Virginia, born in 1796, and removed to Knottsville, Daviess County, in 1820. Both his maternal and paternal ancestors removed to Tennessee about 1797 or 1798. J. A. Hawkins was brought up on a farm and, December 17, 1857, was married to Miss Elizabeth P., the only child of Madison and Mary Jane (Mudd) Crisp, of Marion County, where she was born September 2, 1839, and removed to Daviess County at the age of eighteen. Mr. and Mrs. Hawkins are the parents of eleven children, seven of whom are living: Aaron M. (married Mary Tina, the eldest daughter of Albert May; they have three children), John A., James D. (deceased), Mary Jane, Francis E., Martin Commodore, Joseph Franklin (deceased), Samuel Leslie and Ollie Hayden. Mr. Hawkins owns 246 acres of land, with good buildings and other improvements. He has acquired a good home by industry and economy, as he began with little or no money. He fills the office of overseer of roads and takes a deep interest in all matters pertaining to the best interests of the community.

PROF. WILLIAM BRAMWELL HAYWARD, Ohio County, may be justly classed among the efficient and prominent educators of the State of Kentucky. He was born June 20, 1832, in Monroe County, N. Y., and in 1852 removed to Louisville, Ky., since which time he has been principally engaged in promoting the educational interests of the State. He has taught in Jefferson, Shelby, Daviess, Grayson, Hardin, Meade, Ohio, Breckinridge and Hart Counties; was president of Salem College and also of Cloverport High School, both chartered institutions; was assistant elector for the State at large in the campaigns of 1868 and 1884, on the Democratic side, having served in his district in the same capacity in 1860, on the Douglas ticket; was a prominent candidate for superintendent of public instruction in 1883, being endorsed by every county, in which he canvassed, and many others. His father, Rev. Asahel Hayward, born July 6, 1802, in New York, was long a member of the Genesee Conference, located in McHenry County, Ill., in 1843, and died in Lyle, Mower Co., Minn., February 12, 1859. He was the son of a Revolutionary soldier, who was the father of ten children. Asahel Hayward married Eliza Wildman, of Truxton, N. Y., born August 16, 1805, of Revolutionary stock from Massachusetts, and died September 27, 1848, in Millville, Orleans Co., N. Y.; their union was blessed by the birth of Prof. William B., Hon. Wilbur M. and Henry W. (died in the army from Illinois). Asahel's second wife was Hannah M. Strickland, and their offspring are Alma L. and Alice E. (Ivison). Prof. Hayward was educated at Millville Academy, Orleans County, N. Y., Albion and Holly Academies, New York, and completed his course of studies at Beloit College, Wisconsin. He has instructed more than 4,000 students in Kentucky, many of whom have become prominent in the learned professions and in the various walks of life. He has been twice married; first May 13, 1858, to Priscilla Isabel, daughter of Mandeville and Eliza (Houseworth) Elston, of Simpsonville, Shelby County; born in 1837, of Virginia ancestry; died in 1862. Prof. Hayward married, January 18, 1863, as his second wife, Mary, daughter of Luther J. and Lucy M. (Clarkson) Talbott, of Grayson Springs, Ky., born February 14, 1840, and to them has been born one son—Wilbur Talbott Hayward—February 24, 1865. He is a student at law. During the past five years Prof. Hayward has been engaged in farming and stock raising, owning a fine farm of 500 acres of well-improved land in a good state of cultivation. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and in politics is identified with the Democratic party.

SAMUEL E. HILL was born January 30, 1844, in Morgantown, Ky., a son of Daniel S. and Malinda (Ewing) Hill, of Butler County, Ky. The father was a carpenter by trade, and in 1850 moved to Ohio County. In 1862 he was elected county judge, and died in May, 1865. The mother died in June, 1844. There were six children born to them, of whom our subject is the sole survivor. Samuel E. was principally reared in Hartford, where he received his education at the old Hartford Seminary. When sixteen years old he began working on a farm, and at the age of eighteen enlisted in Company G, Twelfth Kentucky Cavalry, Federal service, and at organization of the company was appointed first sergeant. His brother, John W., who was captain of the company and acting major, was killed at Knoxville, Tenn., while leading his battalion in a charge at the beginning of the siege. Samuel E., at the death of his brother, was elected captain over the lieutenant of the company, with only two dissenting votes, and was later breveted major. His commission as captain was issued January 18, 1864, a few days before he was twenty years of age; he was known as the "boy captain." He was after Morgan on his raid in Indiana, was in the east Tennessee campaign under Burnside; in the Atlanta campaign under Sherman, and at the Saltville raid and other severe engagements. He never missed a campaign with his company, or spent a day in the hospital. After his return from the war he began the study of law under Hon. D. H. McHenry, and graduated, in 1867, from the Louisville law school. He then returned to Hartford and opened a law office in partnership with Judge J. W. Kingheloe; this partnership terminated after five years. In 1873 he entered into partnership with D. H. McHenry, who recently retired and gave place to his son, the firm now being Hill & McHenry. In 1877 Mr. Hill was elected State senator, was chairman of the joint committee on education, and was a member of two of the law committees of the senate. In politics he is a Democrat. He is now and has been for many years past a member of the State and county committee. October 12, 1869, he married Naomi Baird, daughter of Alexander B. and Sallie M. (Barnett) Baird, of this county. To them have been born three children: Effie, Mary and Lizzie, all at home. Mrs. Hill is a Methodist and Mr. Hill leans to the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, has been twice high priest of his chapter and thrice master of his lodge.

ALFRED THOMAS HINES, Ohio County, was born November 5, 1816, in Millidgeville, Ga.; removed with his parents in 1818 to Warren County, Ky., where he grew to manhood; in 1839 located at Morgantown; in 1842 settled at Madison, Ind.; in 1852 removed to Woodbury, Ky., and in 1856 located at Hines' Mills, Ohio County, where he has since resided. His father, Thomas Hines, a native of Charlotte County, Va., died in 1861, at the age of seventy-four years; his father, Harvey Hines, was a native of Ireland. Thomas Hines married Sarah Ruddell, of Georgia; she died in 1843. To their union were born George R., Andrew H., Caroline (Carson), and Alfred Thomas Hines. The last named, in youth, was favored with a good education, and is a man of varied information. He has been twice married; first June 2, 1842, to Mary A., daughter of Francis Honore, of Butler County, Ky., born August 21, 1822; died July 7, 1849, and their union was blessed with the births of Pembroke and Matilda S., married to William R. Bean. March 25, 1852, Mr. Hines married Sarah J., daughter of Simeon and Elizabeth (Wade) Hines, of Butler County Ky., born January 23, 1834, and to them have been born Oscar T., Idie (Armendt), Ruddell W., George A., Alexander, Lula D. and Mattie L. Mr. Hines has long been a merchant, and owns and operates a mill and ferry on Rough Creek, and farms, owning 160 acres of very productive land. He lost nine slaves by the late war. He served six years as magistrate; was many years postmaster, and in 1880 was United States census enumerator, having H. F. Armendt as deputy. He is a member of the Methodist Church, and in politics is a Democrat.

THOMAS HENRY HINES, Ohio County, was born November 21, 1827, in Butler County, Ky., where he grew to manhood and in 1862 removed to Ohio County, where he has since resided. His father, Simeon W. Hines, was born near Richmond, Va., February 20, 1802; removed, at the age of fourteen years, with his mother to Boyle County, Ky., and in 1826 to Butler County, where he was for several years an active Methodist class leader, and died there February 26, 1872. He was the son of Henry Hines, a native of Ireland, a Virginia planter, who owned 105 slaves, and died about 1807, at the age of eighty-six years. Simeon W. was twice married; first to Elizabeth, daughter of William and Polley (Callicot) Wade, of Boyle County, born in 1815, and died in 1839. To their union were born Mary, William H., Thomas Henry, George A., John B., Sarah J. D. (married to A. T. Hines), Caroline C. (Wilson), James D., and Elizabeth W. (Acton). The children of his second marriage are Lucy A. (Talley), and Eliza W. (Leach). March 10, 1847, Thomas Henry Hines married Sarah A., daughter of Richard and Mildred (Cardwell) Moore, of Butler County, born February 26, 1832, and to them have been born Simeon W., Warren R., George W. Andrew J., William W., Sarah T. (Leet), James A., Virginia F., Samuel B., Thomas R., Elizabeth M. and Delila A. Mr. Hines was for many years extensively engaged in merchandising and dealing in tobacco. He has also been largely engaged in buying and selling real estate, at which he has been very successful, at present owning 2,500 acres of land, 600 of which are in good state of cultivation and 700 of fine cane pasturage, which affords ample winter food for a large number of cattle and mules. Mr. Hines is also an extensive money lender, and acted for some years as magistrate. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and in politics a Democrat. He lost six slaves by the late war.

JOHN BIRKS HINES, Ohio County, was born January 23, 1832, in Butler County, Ky., where he was reared and lived until 1862, when he removed to Ohio County, where he has since resided. His father, Simeon W. Hines, was born near Richmond, Va., in 1802, immigrated to Kentucky in 1812, where he served many years as magistrate, and died in 1870. He was the son of Henry Hines, who was born and died in Virginia. Simeon W. first married Elizabeth, daughter of William and Polly Wade, of Butler County; she died in 1840, and their offspring are Mary E., William H., Thomas H., George A., John Birks, Sarah J. (Hines), Caroline C. (Wilson), James D. and Elizabeth W. (Acton). To him by his second marriage were born Lucy A. (Talley), Eliza W. (Leach), Nancy W. and Fayette W. (drowned). John B. Hines married, October 18, 1855, Nancy A., daughter of Hardin and Fannie (Rone) Doolin, of Butler County, born August 24, 1839; died January 31, 1870, and from their union sprang George A. (deceased), John C., James D., Mary A. (Hoops), Joseph A. (deceased) and Emerliza (deceased). June 16, 1870, Mr. Hines was married to Rebecca A., daughter of Laban and Frances (Johnson) Wright, of Ohio County. She was born in 1845, and to them have been born Sarah E., Thomas H., Virginia W., Laban W., Willie A. and Rebecca F. Mr. Hines is a farmer, owning 215 acres of fair land in good condition. In politics he is a member of the Democratic party.

JOHN W. HINES, Ohio County, is a son of William H. Hines, a native of Kentucky, a boot-maker by profession; married Hester Ann Rone in 1840. He died in 1863, leaving seven children, of whom our subject, John W., is the second. William H. Hines, in 1861, entered the Federal army, with the rank of sergeant in Company B, Seventeenth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, served one year, and was discharged on account of ill health; afterward joined the Twelfth Kentucky Cavalry, in which he rose to the rank of first lieutenant, and while in service died at Louisville, Ky., in 1863. Simeon Hines, the grandfather of John W., was a native of Virginia. He died in Ohio County, Ky., in 1872, in the seventy-seventh year of his age. John W. Hines was born May 22, 1848, in Woodbury, Butler Co., Ky. During the absence of his father in the war, and after his death, until 1866, young Hines supported the family by his labor. After his mother's second marriage, he worked on the farm by the month and drove team for two years; then carried mail from Hartford to Cloverport on the Ohio River, and between Hartford and Point Pleasant on Green River, for one year. In 1870 he raised a crop of corn. January 15, 1871, he married Alice M., daughter of Philip and Martha Davenport. He then carried mail another year on the same route; then rented land and farmed one year, and in the fall of 1872 bought 100 acres, which he sold five years later, and bought 119 acres where he now resides; has sixty-five acres well fenced and in cultivation. He gives his exclusive attention to his farm and his stock, which is, probably, the best to be found anywhere in his vicinity. Mr. Hines has accumulated his property by good management and close attention to business, but attributes much of his success to the assistance of his wife. They are the parents of two sons, Vernon N. and Luther P., aged, respectively, ten and six years. Mrs. Hines is a member of the Baptist faith. Mr. Hines is in practice on the side of temperance, and is a Democrat, but occasionally votes for a Republican if he thinks him to be the best man for the place. Mr. Hines' mother, Mrs. Hester Ann (Rone) Hines, is still living.

PHILIP M. HOCKER was born October 2, 1827, where he now resides. He is a son of Philip, Sr., and Harriet (Redman) Hocker. The father was born in Montgomery County, Md., July 9, 1786, and when six years old was brought by his father to Kentucky, and located on the same farm where subject now resides. Mrs. Harriet Hocker lived to be ninety-four years old, and was a Methodist eighty-one years. Her husband, subject's father, died in October, 1851. They had seven children—all boys—who grew to manhood. Philip M. is the youngest, and remains at home with his parents. He owns 500 acres of land, partly improved, aside from town property and from a farm he gave his son; he also established another son in business. October 22, 1854, he married Dorcas E. Barrett, who died June 29, 1866, leaving two children: Lavega W. and John W. June 15, 1868, Mr. Hocker married Minerva E. Williams. They have two children: Harriet A. and Sallie D.

GEORGE B. HOCKER was born in Ohio County, Ky., in 1832. His father, Nicholas Hocker, a native of the same county, is still living, engaged in farming. His mother, Clarissa (Cooper), died many years since, leaving eight children. The ancestors, both paternal and maternal, were from Maryland. It is a family characteristic to belong to the Methodist Church, and vote the Democratic ticket. Subject's first undertaking for himself was rafting and cutting staves and hoop-poles, but soon after went to farming, to which he has given exclusive attention since, except a period of eight months in the mercantile business, in 1858, in Cromwell. His home farm consists of 185 acres, mostly cleared, with good residence, orchard and out-buildings, all the result of the industry and frugality of himself and wife. May 13, 1855, he married Miss Louisa, daughter of John W. and Cynthia (Coan) Ford. They are both Methodists, he holding the position of trustee. They have three children; Laslie F. (whose wife was Miss Ada L. Barnett), Minor W. (who has traveled extensively throughout the southwest) and Ella (at home).

RICHARD P. HOCKER, son of A. R. and Susan M. (Barrett) Hocker, was born in this county September 30, 1845. The parents were born and reared in Ohio County, but their parents were from eastern Maryland, and came to Kentucky about 1792. Richard P. was reared on a farm and had very limited school advantages, but by diligent study evenings and leisure hours gained sufficient education to enable him to begin teaching school in 1866. He continued teaching eight winter seasons, farming during the summer, and at the same time by continual study gained a thorough literary education. In 1875 he was elected a member of the State legislature, and re-elected in 1879. In 1884 he was nominated by acclamation for sheriff, and at the ensuing election was chosen for the office. His political preferment has been more the general voice of the Democratic party than his own seeking. For several years he has been in mercantile business at Beaver Dam, managing at the same time his farm of 151 acres. He was married, June 14, 1877, to Miss Oma Baker, daughter of I. H. and Charlotte (Render) Baker. Mr. Hocker is a member of the Methodist Church South, and his wife of the Baptist Church. To them have been born two children: Virgie and Clarence.

JAMES B. HOCKER, son of Henry Davidge Hocker, was born in Ohio County, Ky. His early life was passed on the farm, his education being limited to a short term each winter in such schools as were afforded under the shelter of the "old log schoolhouse" in his district. During the summer months he assisted in the farming operations at home. At the age of seventeen, he entered Hartford College, in which he graduated in the literary course, and at once entered the profession of teaching. His father, Henry D. Hocker, a native of Ohio County, married Harriet E. Coleman, October 1, 1858; they are the parents of nine children, of which number James B. is the third; born January 21, 1867. Henry D. Hocker is the sixth of a family of eight children born to Nicholas and Clarissa (Cooper) Hocker, of Ohio County; Nicholas D. Hocker is yet living, at the advanced age of seventy-six years. Weaver Hocker and Henry Cooper, ancestors of our subject, were natives of Maryland, and settled in Ohio County at an early day; they were farmers. Weaver Hocker died about the year 1818, aged nearly seventy years. Henry Cooper died in 1863, aged about eighty years. Those of the Hocker family who profess religion are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which Henry D. is a leader. All extend their influence to the temperance cause, both by precept and example.

ASA W. HODGES, farmer, is the son of R. S. and Mary Ann Hodges, the former of whom, was born in Franklin County, Va., in 1807, and removed with his father, Asa Hodges, to Sumner County, Tenn., about 1814. He was the eldest of nine children, only two of whom are living: Asa M. Hodges, a citizen of Alabama, and Alfred J., residing in Texas. R. S. Hodges was a farmer, and married in Sumner County, Tenn., in 1829, to Mary Ann Murphy. They removed to Ohio County, Ky., in 1847, and were the parents of nine children, six of whom are living in Ohio County. The eldest of these is the subject of this sketch—Asa W. Hodges, born October 3, 1830, in Sumner County, Tenn., where he received the first part of his school training, completing the same after his removal to Kentucky, at the age of seventeen. He resided first one mile and a half east and northeast of Cromwell, and in February, 1874, removed to his present location near Beaver Dam on the Chesapeake, Ohio & Southwestern Railroad. He has been twice married; first, to Martha Ann Flener, on December 23, 1858. This lady was the mother of three children, only one of whom is now living—James A., born October 31, 1859, and now residing in Butler County. Mrs. Hodges departed this life in February, 1863. March 10, 1865, Sarah T., daughter of Thomas J. and Sarah Blankenship, became his second wife. This union was blessed with seven children: Sally Mary, born March 3, 1868; John T., July 17, 1869; William R., September 22, 1871; Lutetia, May 5, 1874; Burchard, November 25, 1877; Peter Petre, July 1, 1879; Ira Wade, February 25, 1882. Mr. Hodges enlisted in Company B, Twelfth Kentucky Cavalry, August 22, 1862, and served three years. His principal engagements were Resaca, Lookout Mountain, Kenesaw, Missionary Ridge, Atlanta, Bean Station and many other places. He was always with his regiment, and a brave soldier. At one time a ball struck a sapling, which protected his life. He was never sick and never in the hospital.

JOHN D. HOLBROOK was born June 10, 1851, in Ohio County, Ky., and is a son of Robert and Frances M. (French) Holbrook. Robert Holbrook was brought to Kentucky in 1817, by his mother and step-father, from Russell County, Va, and located in the eastern part of the State. In 1838, Robert Holbrook moved to Ohio County. He was twice married; his first wife was Elizabeth Bell. John D. Holbrook was reared on a farm, and obtained a fair education, and at twenty-one began farming for himself. He then engaged in the tobacco business; at same time was constable; was deputy sheriff, under T. J. Smith; then went into business at Buford for three years; then bought his present farm of 250 acres, divided into farms, well improved with pleasant residences. He farms in connection with his tobacco business. November 30, 1875, he married Oma Fields, daughter of Joshua and Emma (Austin) Fields. This union was blessed with five children: Morton, Gilbert, Pearl, Vertie and John Pendleton. Mr and Mrs. Holbrook are members of the Baptist Church. Politically he is a Democrat, and served as magistrate four years and a half.

EDWARD CLARENCE HUBBARD was born near Chicago, Ill. His father, Theodore Hubbard, a physician, was a native of Vermont, and traced his ancestors to the Rev. Peter Hubbard, who immigrated to Plymouth Colony in 1639. His mother was Anna Ballou, a descendant of the famous Ballou family, among whom were Garfield and the Rev. Hosea Ballou. Theodore Hubbard and wife reached Chicago, Ill., in 1836, the former dying in 1872, and the latter still living as an old resident of that city. Edward C. was reared in Chicago, and graduated at the Chicago High School in 1859, and immediately entered business with his brother at Amboy, Ill., where he was located at the outbreak of the Rebellion. He entered the Thirteenth Illinois Infantry, May 24, 1861, as sergeant-major; acted as adjutant until his muster out June 6, 1864. He was with Fremont in the Missouri campaign; was at Pea Ridge with Curtis, whose command reached Helena, Mo., in July, 1862. Here the Thirteenth Illinois joined the Fifteenth Army Corps, First Division, Gen. Steele, First Brigade, Gen. F. P. Blair, and participated in the engagement at Chickasaw Bayou and surrender of Arkansas Post, and was with Sherman during the siege of Vicksburg, and held the extreme right of the Federal line. The regiment was with Sherman in his advance to Jackson, and returning participated in the battle of Lookout Mountain, Mission Ridge and Ringgold. Mr. Hubbard was never absent from his regiment during the war. In 1864 he returned to Chicago, served in the quartermaster's department until the close of the war, and engaged in mercantile pursuits until 1870, when he removed to Hartford, Ky., and entered into the practice of law, and became a leading lawyer in the Green River section of Kentucky. Mr. Hubbard is a Republican, and was a delegate to the Republican national convention of 1876, and also in the famous convention of 1880, in which he voted against Grant and the Unit rule notwithstanding his State instructions. He was temporary chairman of the anti-third-term convention at St. Louis, in 1880, and made the most noted speech at the great anti-Grant meeting held in Chicago, during the convention. In 1884 he was elector for the State at large and canvassed the State for Blaine and Logan. In 1867 he married Miss Lucy Shanks, daughter of Col. Q. C. Shanks, of the Twelfth Kentucky Cavalry. They have three children: Walter Q., now a student of St. Ignatius' College; Pauline and Mabel. Mr. Hubbard has the reputation of being a fine lawyer; is a gentleman of literary tastes and is the owner of a large library.

JOSEPH A. HUDNALL, Ohio County, was born in Warren County, Ky., March 4, 1826. He is the son of Renny C. Hudnall, a native of Virginia, who came to Warren County, Ky., when a small boy, and lived on a farm with his father until the year 1819, when he married Sallie, daughter of Joseph Taylor; she died in 1838, leaving a family of ten children: James E., Nancy, Elizabeth, Joseph A., William C., Mary J., Polly A., Isam C., John W. and Sidney Ann. Renny C. Hudnall's second marriage occurred in 1842, with Miss Leah Caroll, who departed this life in the autumn of 1869, leaving four children: Virginia, Catherine, Ellen and James. Joseph A. Hudnall was, at the age of fourteen years, "bound" to one Alfred Cherry, with whom he lived and worked on a farm for six years, and at the expiration of his "time" hired on a farm for one season; next year he boarded with a farmer and raised a crop; after which he kept "bachelor's hall," while he raised a crop of corn, and in the autumn, October 24, 1849, married Eliza Jane, daughter of Hardin Doolan, of Warren County, Ky. After marriage he continued to lease and rent land and farm until 1854, when he bought 125 acres of land in Warren County, which he sold in 1856, and bought 192 acres in Butler County, where he remained until 1869. In this year he removed to Ohio County, where he has ever since resided. He now owns 335 acres of well-improved land, with 150 acres fenced and under cultivation, and carries a yearly average of $1,200 in stock. Mr. Hudnall does not inherit any part of his possession, his energy and business tact having brought him to his present state of comfortable independence. Mr. and Mrs. Hudnall are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which Mr. H. holds the office of steward. He is also a member of Rochester Lodge No. 272, A. F. & A. M., in which lodge he has passed through all the honors. In politics Mr. H. is a Democrat, and takes an interest in the political issues of the day. Mr. and Mrs. H. are the parents of three children: Leander J., Sarah A. (deceased), and Francis R. Mr. Hudnall is temperate in habits but takes no position on the question of temperance.

ELIAS GESS HUNLEY, Ohio County, was born April 29, 1826, in Muhlenburgh County, Ky., where he grew to manhood, and 1857 removed to Ohio County, where he has since resided. His father, Wyatt P., was born in 1800; removed to Kentucky in 1824, and died in 1833. He was the son of Nehemiah Hunley, of Virginia, who settled on the land where Cincinnati now stands. His sons were Wyatt P., Robert, James, Thomas, Benjamin and Edmund. Wyatt P. married Martha V., daughter of Elias G. and Hannah (Vaught) Smith, of Muhlenburgh County; she was born in 1805, died in 1865, and their children are Elias G., Hannah E. (Glenn), Susan H. (Stum) and Sisera (Fulkerson). Mr. Hunley was married September 11, 1851, to Sarah E., daughter of David and Margaret (Reid) Shull, of Ohio County; she was born in 1831, and to them have been born Lizzie C. (deceased), Elias S. (deceased), Martha A. (Muir), David C., Wyatt P., Ophelia M. (Muir), James H., Susan F., Albina C. and Thomas E. Mr. Hunley is a farmer, having 130 acres of good land in a high state of cultivation. He is a member of the Methodist Church, and in politics a Democrat.

WILLIAM M. HUNTER was born in Muhlenburgh County, Ky., March 22, 1826, and is a son of Titus and Esther (Bell) Hunter, the former of whom was a native of Virginia, and the latter of Lincoln County, Ky. They were of Irish and Welsh descent, respectively. When only four or five years old, Titus Hunter removed with his parents to Green County, Ky., then almost an unbroken wilderness. Here, his father, Titus Hunter, Sr., located wild lands and improved a farm, upon which he resided until his death. Here Titus Hunter, Jr., received his early education. When a young man he removed to Muhlenburgh County, Ky., where he was afterward married, and where he bought a farm on which he resided for some twenty years. He then removed to Butler County, Ky., but after about two years he came to Ohio County, where he bought wild land near Cromwell and improved a farm, upon which he resided for some eight years. He then removed to Jackson County, Ill., where he resided until his death, which occurred August 17, 1864, about his seventieth year. William M. Hunter received such an education as the schools of the time afforded. He was employed on his father's farm until he was sixteen years old, after which he was employed as a laborer on a farm until he was twenty-two years old. He then bought sixty-two acres of wild land near Hogg's Falls, Ohio Co., Ky., where he has since improved the farm upon which he now resides, and to which he has added from time to time, now owning a well-improved farm of some 300 acres. He was first married, October 5, 1848, to Elizabeth W. Bell, a native of Muhlenburgh County, Ky. To this union were born eleven children, six of whom —three sons and three daughters—are living. Mrs. Elizabeth W. Hunter departed this life March 25, 1875. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Mr. Hunter was next married, in August, 1876, to Mrs. Martha H. (Bell) Balls, a native of Muhlenburgh County, Ky. Mr. and Mrs. Hunter are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South; he is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and a Republican.

CHARLES W. HUSSEY was born in Princeton, Ind., May 18, 1826. At the age of seventeen he removed to Louisville, Ky., where he completed his education, and learned his trade—blacksmithing. His parents were Richard and Effie (Mills) Hussey; the former was born in 1790, and the latter in 1791. His great-grandfather was English and lived until his one hundred and twenty-seventh year, and his paternal grandmother died at the age of one hundred and five. Our subject is the ninth of a family of thirteen children, whose names are as follows: Elbridge M., died in California; Julia Ann, residing at Winslow, Ind. (wife of James McConnell); Zachariah (deceased); James (deceased); George Buell (deceased); Alexander Hamilton (a mill owner at Caney, Grayson County): John Hubbard; Clara (wife of Samuel Beasley); Charles W. (our subject), Elizabeth Ann; Richard Perry; Effie Louisa (wife of James Mannon). Richard Hussey was intelligent and industrious and died April 13, 1851. His mother died in 1842. Charles W. Hussey was married December 31, 1850, to Miss Frances J. Mahoney, daughter of Benjamin and Jane Frances (White) Mahoney. She is the youngest of seven children—three of whom are now living. Mrs. Hussey was born in the county of Knox, Ind., April 4, 1830. Her parents were natives of Kentucky, and only resided in Indiana three years, where her father died in 1832. Her mother died in Kentucky in 1876. Mr. and Mrs. Hussey are the parents of five children: Alpha Lee, born April 22, 1864 and the wife of R. R. Condiff; James Austin, born January 16, 1866; Stonewall Jackson, born March 16, 1868; John C. Breckinridge, born June 14, 1869; and Keziah H., born November 16, 1871. Mr. Hussey has met with marked success in all his life work, both financially and otherwise. Besides a large, beautiful and commodious home in the town of Buford, he is the owner of a fine tract of 280 acres of land in two farms. In addition to this, he has a large amount of other valuable property. He and his family are members of the Baptist Church. He takes a deep interest in temperance and in the education of his children. Is a Democrat in politics and a useful member of society.

JAMES B. IGLEHART was born in Ohio County, September 28, 1842, and is a son of Henry D. and Amelia A. (Bennett) Iglehart, both natives of Ohio County, and of German and English descent, respectively. Henry D. Iglehart was married in his native county soon after attaining his majority, and soon after that event he removed to Daviess County, Ky., where he bought a farm, and resided for some three years. He then returned to Ohio County, and bought a farm near Point Pleasant, upon which he still resides. He is, and has been from early life, a member of the United Baptist Church. Mrs. Amelia A. Iglehart departed this life about 1852. She had been from her girlhood days a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. James B. Iglehart received a fair common school education in youth, and was employed on his father's farm until nineteen years old. In October, 1861, he enlisted in Company G, Seventeenth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry (Federal service), and served with that regiment in all its marches and engagements until April, 1862, when he was discharged on account of disability. He participated in the battles of Fort Henry, Fort Donelson, Shiloh, as well as other lesser engagements. After his return from the army he bought a partially improved farm of 110 acres near Point Pleasant, upon which he is successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits, having until recently made the culture of tobacco a specialty. For the past three years he has also been engaged in buying tobacco for L. M. Patterson, of Point Pleasant. The farm is now one of the best improved places in the county. He was married, November 15, 1863, to Premlia J. Humphrey, also a native of Ohio County, Ky. Mr. Iglehart and wife are members of the General Baptist Church, in which he has been for several years a trustee. In politics he is a Democrat.

REV. BENJAMIN T. IGLEHEART was born in Ohio County, Ky., February 17, 1835, and is a son of Jacob H. and Anna (Tichenor) Igleheart, the former of whom was a native of Baltimore, Md., and the latter of Ohio County, Ky. At about the age of twelve, Jacob H. came with his parents to Ohio County, Ky., where his father, Jacob Igleheart, Sr., bought wild land in the southwest part of the county on the Green River, and subsequently improved a farm, upon which he resided until his death. Jacob H. received such an education in youth as could be obtained at the schools of the Kentucky frontier. After attaining his majority he bought wild land near the old home place, and improved a farm, upon which he resided for some time—ten or twelve years. He then bought the farm of his father-in law on Walton's Creek, same county, and took care of his father and mother-in-law until their deaths. There he resided until his death, which occurred in 1876. He and wife were from early youth, devoted and consistent members of the General Baptist Church, in which church he was a regularly ordained minister for more than twenty-five years; he was also a member of the Masonic fraternity. Rev. Benjamin T. Igleheart received a fair common school education in youth, and was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority, after which he was engaged in buying tobacco for some four or five years. He then bought wild land on the Green River, where he improved the farm upon which he now resides, and where he has since been extensively and successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits. He was first married in 1860, to Miss Matilda C. Patterson, a native of Bullock County, Ky. To this union were born five children—four of whom are yet living. Mrs. Matilda C. departed this life in 1874. She was a devoted member of the General Baptist Church. Mr. Igleheart was again married, in 1876, to Mrs. Lucy A. (Tichenor) Tichenor, a native of Ohio County, Ky. One daughter, Eunice, has blessed their union. Mr. Igleheart and wife are devoted members of the General Baptist Church, in which church he has been a regularly ordained preacher for the past five years. In politics he is a Democrat, and is one of the enterprising and successful farmers and citizens of the county.

EUGENE P. JAMES was born in Ohio County, Ky., May 27, 1844, and is a son of Samuel L. and Martha P. (Wand) James, the former of whom was a native of Ohio, and the latter of Butler County, Ky. Both were of English descent. Samuel L. James was educated and married in his native county, where in early life he learned the carpenter's trade, which he still continues to follow. In 1856 he removed to Muhlenburgh County, where he now resides. He and wife are members of the Christian Church. He is also a member of the Masonic fraternity. The ancestors of the James family in America, were among the first settlers near Jamestown, Va. When a young man, the grandfather of Samuel L. became attached to a young lady named Mosby, whom he married against his parents' wishes; immediately after marriage they immigrated to the wilds of Kentucky, and from them a large family have descended. Eugene P. James received a good education in youth. At the age of ten years he was employed a salesman in the general store of his grandfather, Wand, of Paradise, where he remained for six years. In September, 1861, he enlisted in Company I, Eleventh Kentucky Volunteer Infantry (Federal service), and served with that regiment in all its marches and engagements until December, 1864, when he was discharged by reason of the expiration of his term of service. He participated in the battle of Stone River and the siege of Knoxville, all the battles of the Atlanta campaign and many lesser engagements. After his return from the army he engaged in mining and was soon advanced to the position of general superintendent of Gen. Buell's works at Airdrie, Ky., where he remained for several years. He has also held the position of superintendent of various other mines. In 1878 he engaged in general merchandising at Airdrie, and in 1880, he removed the stock to Rockport, Ky., where he continued the business in company with his brother, P. W. James, until the 1st of January, 1885. They engaged in the tobacco manufacturing business in 1884, in connection with merchandising, but are now exclusively engaged in the former business. Mr. James was married, November 28, 1867, to Sarah P. Kimmel, a native of Muhlenburgh County, Ky. Two sons and one daughter have blessed their union. Mr. James belongs to no church, but was formerly a member of the I. O. G. T., and is an earnest advocate of the temperance cause. In politics he is a Republican.

REV. BENJAMIN F. JENKINS, pastor of Cane Run, Mt. Pleasant, Zion, and Pleasant Grove Churches, Ohio County, is the youngest child of B. S. Jenkins and Miss Elizabeth T. Humphrey, and grandson of John S. Jenkins, who immigrated to Glasgow, Ky., about 1790, where he remained but a short time when he removed to Daviess County; and from thence to Meade County, where he reared a large family—nine children, of whom B. S. Jenkins, the father of Rev. B. F. Jenkins, was the sixth. He had four children: Mrs. Kitty A. Williams, John H., now in Washington, Ark.; Mrs. Sally Dowell, and Rev. Mr. Jenkins, who was born in Meade County. He received a good common school education, to which, later in life, he added a knowledge of many of the higher branches, including sufficient Latin and Greek to enable him to read and translate the New Testament in the original. He began the work of the ministry under the direction of the Gasper River Association of the United Baptist Church in 1865. Although not a regular graduate of the schools, yet, by diligent reading and study, together with a strong physical development, and a well balanced mind, he has become an accurate and logical reasoner, a clear and forcible speaker and an eminently successful pastor. At the breaking out of the war he enlisted in Company D, Seventeenth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry (Federal), and followed the fortunes of the Army of the Cumberland through all its important campaigns in Kentucky, Tennessee and Georgia, including the famous battles of Missionary Ridge, Chickamauga and Atlanta, doing his duty bravely for three years and four months. July 5, 1868, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth I. Arnold, second child of John H. and Altha Jane Arnold, the former of whom died August 15, 1874, leaving the widow and nine children. To Mr. and Mrs. Jenkins have been born six children: Susa E., born May 26, 1869; John A., September 4, 1871; Altha C., December 4, 1873; Laura D., August 7, 1876; Benjamin F., October 24, 1878; Broadus S., October 16, 1882. Mrs. Jenkins died October 17, 1882, and Mr. Jenkins married December 24, 1884, Miss Emma Miller, eldest daughter of J. C. and Frances Miller. She was born in Ohio County, March 14, 1857, and was educated in the common schools, and the seminary at Owensboro, Daviess County, to which place her parents removed in January, 1871. She has three sisters and two brothers, living with their parents. Besides Mr. Jenkins' labors in the ministry, he owns and manages a fine farm of 113 acres of land, well watered and timbered, three and one-half miles north of Cromwell.

THADDEUS S. JETT was born June 24, 1837, in Daviess County, Ky., and is a son of Richard C. Jett, a native of Stafford County, Va. Richard C. was twice married; his first wife, Lucy McCoy, a native of Virginia, bore him five children: William, John, Elizabeth (wife of James L. Estes), Harriet (wife of John P. Miller), and Jane (deceased wife of Richard Vaughan). His second wife was Susan Miller, born in Caroline County, daughter of William Miller, a Virginian also; her parents came to Kentucky, locating in Daviess County, when she was nine years old, where she was reared; there were twelve children by this second marriage, eight of whom lived to be grown and married, as follows: Thomas, married Miss Bavin; John, married Louisa Blincoe; Richard, married Margaret C. Carter; Mary A., wife of L. M. Burnett; David W., married Miss M. E. Pate; Sallie, wife of William E. Haynes; Thaddeus S., married Mary E. Willis, and Joe married Rill Morely. Subject's father first located in Daviess County; then in Hancock County, where he resided and farmed until his death, March 19, 1862. He and second wife were members of the Baptist Church, in which he held the office of deacon and moderator. For eight years he was sheriff of Daviess County, and also served as constable. His father, William Jett, was an officer in the Revolutionary war. He was twice married; subject's father was a son by his second wife, whose maiden name was Cole. Thaddeus was reared until fourteen years of age in Daviess County, when his father moved to Hancock County where he stayed on the farm until nearly twenty years old, when he began for himself by working at the blacksmith trade twelve months. Then farmed, and continued to farm in Hancock County until 1873; when he moved to Ohio County, and located at Haynesville, and now lives in the house built by his wife's grandfather, John Hames (better known as "Jack"), the first one in the town. He now owns forty acres where he now lives. February 29, 1872, he married Miss Mary E. Willis, sister of F. G. Willis, whose sketch is given elsewhere. They are the parents of three children: Mary H. (deceased), Emma, and David W. Mr. Jett is a Baptist and his wife a Cumberland Presbyterian. He has served as constable. In politics he has been a life long Democrat, but lately a Prohibitionist, and works for the advancement of prohibition.

JOHN H. JEWEL was born in Ohio County, Ky., near his present homestead. He is the son of David and Nancy (Freeman) Jewel, who were from Spencer County, and who were the parents of ten children. John H. began for himself at the age of twenty-one, farming; soon after he bought 105 acres unimproved, which he has increased until he now owns 211 acres, half under cultivation, and all fairly improved. February 8, 1866, Mr. Jewel was united in marriage with Louisa Nelson, which union has been blessed with four children: Willis B., Alice D., J. E. and Clemmie. Mrs. Jewel is a member of the Baptist Church. Mr. Jewel is a Democrat and opposed to prohibitory liquor legislation.

ELIJAH JOHNSON, farmer and carpenter, Ohio County, is the son of Edward Johnson, of Lynchburgh, Va., born in 1801, and removed to Kentucky in 1820, settling first in Henry County, but afterward went to Bourbon County, where, on December 23, 1828, he married Sallie Chinn, who was born in that county in 1798. They had two children: William, born in 1830, and died in 1843, in the State of Missouri, to which place his parents removed in 1842, and Elijah born in 1832. He was brought up in Missouri, Louisville and his own native county of Bourbon, his parents having returned to that place in 1846. He was liberally educated in the city of Louisville. He learned the carpenter's trade and became a skillful, industrious mechanic. May 9, 1849, he married Sarah F. Chinn, daughter of William Chinn, of Bourbon County. They had seven children: Lucy, wife of R. H. Hines, of Elm Lick, Ohio County; Mary S., wife of G. C. Pirtle, of Cromwell; William, deceased; Sarah M., wife of George Peters, of Beaver Dam; Nancy E., wife of James Peters, of Beaver Dam, and Thomas. Mrs. Johnson died in 1867, and he next married, in 1869, Mary E. Cox, daughter of William Cox, of Ohio County. Their children are James S. and Mary C. Mr. Johnson's father died in 1844. His mother still lives and has her home with her son. Her father, Elijah Chinn, was one of the first settlers of the State of Kentucky.

JOHN M. JOHNSON was born July 24, 1850, in Ohio County, Ky., where he has continued to reside. His father, John Johnson, was born in Marion County, Ky., 1813; removed with his parents, at the age of six years, to Ohio County, where he is still living. He was the son of Clem Johnson, a native of Virginia, who died about 1860. Subject's mother is Zemara, daughter of Caleb and Salley (Huff) Hale, of Ohio County, born 1817, now living. To her and her husband were born Charles W., Sarah E. (Crow), Calvin (dead), Martha (Eskridge), William T., John M., Josephine (Magan), Felix (dead), and Cicero. John M. enjoyed such educational facilities as the schools of the country afforded in his youth. He was married, December 23, 1875, to Bettie J., daughter of John T. and Margaret (Runner) Smith, of Fordsville, Ky. (born July 20, 1857), and to this union were born Lonnie, Ollie (dead), Myrtie M. and Iva L. For many years, Mr. Johnson was engaged in dealing in general merchandise, drugs and tobacco, and is at present a dealer in leaf tobacco, having been successful in his various enterprises. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and is identified with the Democratic party.

SAMUEL JONES was born May 3, 1825, in Bedford County, Tenn., where he grew up. In 1846, he removed to Johnson County, Ill., where he engaged in farming until 1857, when he located in Ohio County, Ky., where he now resides. In 1861 he enlisted in the Seventeenth Kentucky Infantry, in which he was chief musician until his discharge, December 5, 1862, for injuries received at Fort Donelson. In 1865 he removed to Coles County, Ill., where he remained eight years, when he returned to Ohio County, Ky., where he has since remained. His father, Rev. George Jones, a native of North Carolina, removed in childhood, with his parents, to Bedford County, Tenn., where he died in 1880, at the age of eighty-six years. He was a soldier under Gen. Jackson; he was the son of Hugh Jones, of North Carolina, also a soldier under Jackson; died 1835, aged ninety years. Rev. George Jones married Susan, daughter of John (a Revolutionary soldier), and Sarah Culver, of Overton County, Tenn. (born in 1801, and died in 1869), and their offspring are Leander E., Elender E. (Robinson), Benjamin F,, Samuel K., Sarah (Rol lins), Mary (Wilson), Nathan (died in the army), Rev. James H. (a soldier), and Hugh (died in the army). Samuel Kenaday Jones was married, March 10, 1847, to Lucy, daughter of Morton Carter, of Johnson County, Ill.; she was born in 1831; died in 1854. To their union was born one child—Sarah, of Vienna, Ill. Mr. Jones was next married, in 1859, to Sallie M., daughter of George and Mary A. (Bennett) Plummer, of Ohio County; she died November 20, 1884, at the age of forty-nine years; to them was born one child—Mary A., wife of Rev. J. D. Sharer, of Butler County. Mr. Jones was reared to farming, which he followed for many years, and in 1881 commenced merchandising at Rosine, Ky., in which calling he has met with fair success. He was burnt out at the recent fire, but has rebuilt and is now in business again. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in politics a Republican.

EZEKIEL V. KIMBLEY, Ohio County, was born in Muhlenburgh County, Ky., March 4, 1817, and is a son of Francis E., and Esther B. (Vallandingham) Kimbley, the formerof whom was a native of Kentucky and thelatter of Maryland, and were of German and English descent, respectively. At the age of thirteen, in 1804, Francis E. Kimbley removed with his parents from Nelson to Muhlenburgh County, Ky., then almost an unbroken wilderness. There his father, Andrew Kimbley, who had immigrated to America during the Colonial period, and served in the employ of the Continental government during the war of the Revolution, bought some 400 acres of wild land on the Green River, near the present village of Paradise, and subsequently improved a farm, upon which he resided until his death. There Francis E. was educated and married; after attaining his majority he bough wild land in the neighborhood of the old homestead and improved a farm, upon which he remained for many years; afterward he sold this place and bought another in Ohio County, upon which he resided until his death, which occurred in August, 1861, in his seventy-first year. He and wife were from early life members of the United Baptist Church. Ezekiel V. Kimbley received such an education in youth as the schools of the time afforded. He was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority, after which he bought 215 acres of wild land near Ceralvo, Ohio Co., Ky., and subsequently improved the farm upon which he now resides. In 1869 he left the farm and engaged in general merchandising at Ceralvo, in company with his son. Some five years later, they also engaged in the tobacco business in connection with the same. In the fall of 1884, he sold out the store and returned to the farm, but still continues the tobacco business in company with his son in connection with farming. For four years he held the office of police judge at Ceralvo. He was first married, in July, 1840, to Margaret Graves, a native of Muhlenburgh County, Ky. Six children were born to them, only one of whom, William A. J. is living. Mrs. Margaret Kimbley departed this life July 13, 1879. She was a member of the United Baptist Church for over 40 years. Mr. Kimbley was next married, May 1, 1883, to Mrs. Elizabeth (McConnell and Fulkerson) Dexter, also a native of Muhlenburgh County, and a daughter of James McConnell, who was one of the early pioneers of Muhlenburgh County, and was a veteran of the war of 1812, having gone into the services at the age of eighteen and served under Gen. Jackson at the battle of New Orleans and under Gen. Harrison at the battle of Tippecanoe. Mr. Kimbley and wife are and have been for many years, members of the United Baptist Church. Mr. Kimbley's paternal grandfather was a veteran of the Revolution. Mr. Kimbley is a Democrat.

ISAAC F. KIMBLEY, Ohio County. Among those who came to America from Germany prior to the Revolutionary war, was Andrew Kimbley, who settled on Bear Grass Creek, at the old fort near Louisville. He found the Indians troublesome and did some fighting with them, then became a Revolutionary soldier. After the war he removed with his family to Muhlenburgh County, near Green River, and engaged in farming. He reared a family of ten children, Jacob, the father of our subject, being the eldest. He was born——; was educated in the schools of that time, and was married in 1820, to Elizabeth McLaughlin, and in 1832, to Maria Hickson. He had in all nineteen children. Isaac F. was one of the children of the first wife, and was born November 8, 1821, in Muhlenburgh Country; when he was one year old, his father removed to Indiana, and died there in 1865, having spent twenty-nine years in the meantime near Fort Scott, Kas. Isaac F. remained in that State until he was twenty-two years old, when he returned to Kentucky. He was married January 1, 1848, to Julla Gill, who died September 10, 1857, His second wife, to whom he was married October 12, 1858, was Lucy Ann Curtis, who died in June, 1859; he married his third wife, Mary A. Shuley, in 1860; she died April 25, 1867, and Mr. Kimbley married his present wife, Matilda Coleman, daughter of Richard Coleman. His third wife bore him two sons; Charles Martin and Andrew J. Mr. Kimbley has been a life long Democrat. He is a member of the Grange, and owns a good farm near the town of Cromwell, where he has a wide reputation for honesty and integrity.

W. T. KING was born May 10, 1841, in Henderson County, Ky., the youngest child and only son of Felix G. and Mary (Jones) King. The father's parents were from Virginia, and settled at King's Ferry, opposite the city of Evansville, Ind., at a time when there were but three houses in that place. Felix G. King was the youngest of eight children; was twice married; the first wife, Miss Jones, was a sister of Col. James G. Jones, of Evansville, Ind., at one time attorney-general of the State, and colonel of the Forty-second Volunteer Infantry in the late civil war; she died in 1843. After the death of his wife, Mr. King engaged in mercantile business at Cromwell, Ohio Co., Ky., and married Miss Cynthia Angle, a kind, beautiful lady, of Sumner County, Tenn. His death occurred at Cromwell, in 1846. After the death of his father, W. T. was taken to Henderson County, Ky., and apprenticed to the tinner's trade, but ran away from his employer in 1850, after which he worked at his trade, at farming, and carried the mail from Rockfort to Rome, Ind.; clerked in the postoffice in Cannelton, Ind.; boated on the Ohio River, and traveled in the interest of the stencil engraving business in various places in Kentucky and Indiana; was in Cromwell, Ky., at the beginning of the war, and in August, 1861, enlisted in Company D, Seventeenth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and participated in the battles of Fort Donelson and Shiloh, and was transferred to Company H; made an orderly sergeant, and with Capt. R. M. Davis, was the first Federal soldier inside the Confederate works at Corinth, Miss. He was promoted first lieutenant of Company F, and honorably discharged in 1863. After returning from service he was engaged in contracting and building and farming in several places in Kentucky until 1870, when he was appointed assistant assessor of internal revenue, with Ohio, McLean and six other counties afterward added to his division, and moved to Hartford same year. In 1872 he was appointed deputy collector of internal revenue, and soon after appointed deputy United States marshal under Eli H. Murray, United States marshal of Kentucky. In this branch of the service he was noted for his bravery, and had eminent success in suppressing illicit distilling. So efficient was he that the last year he served he was allowed extra pay by Hon. B. H. Bristoe, secretary of the treasury. In 1877 he went into the hotel and livery business in Hartford, Ky., which latter he still conducts on a large scale in connection with selling wagons and agricultural implements. Mr. King is a descendant of Whigs, and is himself a zealous working Republican in politics. He was united in marriage with Miss Parmelia Nicholls, December 3, 1863. They have four children, viz.: Maggie E., who graduated with first honors from Hartford College, and now with her talented husband, Prof. J. D. Crow, is conducting the schools at Nacogdoches, Nacogdoches Co., Tex.; William M., and the twins, Lulie and Katie—the last three at home.

ROBERT E. KINNIMONTH, Ohio County, is the eldest of a family of five children, and was born October 12, 1855, in Warren County, Ky. He was brought up in Butler County, and received a fair education. His parents are David and Susan (Horton) Kinnimonth, the former a native of Pennsylvania, and reared in Warren County. His grandfather (now deceased) was Robert Kinnimonth, for many years a boatman on the Green River, and a contractor and builder of dams and locks on the same river. He built the locks at Rochester, Butler County. The names of his sister and brothers are as follows: Mrs. L. A. Bunch, Jasper H., Charles C. and William D. He was married September 17, 1882, to Eunice I, daughter of Nathaniel Shultz, and grand-daughter of Joseph Shultz, one of the oldest and most prosperous farmers now living in Ohio County. Mr. Kinnimonth's farm consists of fifty acres of land near the town of Cromwell, on the Green River. He is also an excellent mechanic and a good citizen.

HERBERT B. KINSOLVING was born in Hartford, Ky., October 19, 1860, and is the only child of the Rev. George W. and Tula (Benton) Kinsolving. George W. Kinsolving came with his parents, Jefferson and Mary (Abney) Kinsolving, to Caldwell County, Ky., from Virginia in 1849. He graduated from Cumberland College, Princeton, Ky., and soon after was appointed to the chair of mathematics in the same institution. He was ordained to the whole work of the ministry in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and at the breaking out of the war, was appointed chaplain of the Seventeenth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry. From severe exposure he contracted typhus fever, and after a lingering sickness of six weeks, died, while en route for home, at Ceralvo, Ky., in April, 1862. His wife survived him until August, 1866. She was a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and a daughter of Joseph T. and Matilda J. (Woodward) Benton of Ohio County, Ky. Our subject, when two years old, with his mother made his home with his maternal grandparents, to whose care his rearing was entrusted after his mother's death. He attended the local school until thirteen years of age, when he learned the printer's trade in the office of the Hartford Journal. Then he returned to school in Hartford, where he took a course in Greek and Latin, and in 1878 attended the Cumberland University at Lebanon, Tenn., where he completed his literary education. He then taught school in Daviess County, Ky., and during the time, while not engaged in the schoolroom, read law. In September, 1879, he was admitted to practice. In 1882, when less than twenty-two years of age, he was elected county attorney, his present official position. He stands six feet four inches in height, and although young in years and his profession, takes rank among the ablest and most promising members of the bar.

COL. JOHN JAY LAYTON, Ohio County. In the year 1720, the great-grandfather of this gentleman came to America from England and settled at Baltimore with a large family, of which Col. Layton's grandfather was the youngest. He was an officer in the French and Indian war, and was an officer at Braddock's defeat. He died at Spartanburg, and his widow removed with her family of five boys and six girls to what is now Garrard County, Ky., in the year 1800. William, the father of Col. Layton, was the youngest son, and was born in South Carolina in 1790. He became colonel in the militia, and in the war of 1812, went on foot on the ice on Lake Erie, to Malden, but the expedition was abandoned. He was a flat-boatman from Kentucky to New Orleans, and made ten trips, from eight of which he walked the entire distance home. He was married, in 1815, to Mary Ann Yater, by whom he had thirteen children. Of these Col. Layton is the eldest son, and only nine are now living, scattered all over different parts of the United States. Col. William died in 1866, and his wife in 1834. Both were well known in Kentucky, and were influential citizens. Col. John Layton was born January, 1821, in Garrard County. His early education was obtained in the rude log-houses, well known in Kentucky history. But he was ambitious, and by reading and hard study he obtained sufficient knowledge to teach school, and engaged in that profession from 1844 to 1852, and in time acquired an extended knowledge of many of the higher branches, including practical surveying. In 1846, he enlisted in Company B, First Kentucky Regiment, and was in Gen. Taylor's command in the Mexican war, and served with honor one year. Arriving home he continued teaching and also engaged in milling. March 17, 1851, he married Miriam Shrewsbury, daughter of Allen Shrewsbury, of Garrard County, born in 1834. They have two daughters — Mrs. William J. French, of Cromwell, the elder, and Miss Martha Boone Layton, the younger. In consequence of a fall on the ice caused slight dislocation of his hip joint, at the age of fourteen years Col. Layton became permanently lame, one limb being shorter than the other. On his enlistment many, including Col. Rogers, commanding his regiment, tried to persuade him to remain at home, but his intrepid bravery and remarkable energy enabled him to serve out his term of enlistment, while many who were physically strong failed in so doing.

CHARLES W. LAYTON, M. D., was born in McLean County, Ky., June 13, 1839, and is a son of William A. and Anna B. (Porter) Layton, both of whom were natives of Daviess County, Ky., and of English descent. William A. Layton was educated and married in that part of Daviess County, which afterward became McLean County, where he is still engaged in agricultural pursuits. He has held the office of magistrate in Daviess and McLean Counties for more than twenty years; he and wife are members of the United Baptist Church. Dr. Charles W. Layton received a good common school and academic education in youth, and was employed on his father's farm and at teaching until he was twenty-two years of age; in the meantime he had commenced the study of medicine and continued the same alone for several years. During the winter of 1861–62, he attended lectures at the medical department of the University of Louisville. He then returned to the home farm, where he remained, still pursuing his medical studies, until the close of the war. During the summer of 1866, he continued his studies under the preceptorship of Dr. G. W. Townes, of Greenville, Ky., and in the following winter took another course of lectures at the medical department of the Louisville University. In 1868, he commenced the practice of his profession at Paradise, Muhlenburgh Co., Ky., where he remained about one year; he then located at Rockport, Ohio County, where he has since practiced his profession with excellent success, having secured a large and lucrative practice. The Doctor is universally regarded by his professional brethren and others, as one of the leading physicians of the county; he graduated from the Cincinnati Medical College at Cincinnati, Ohio, with the class of 1872–73. The Doctor was married, August 25, 1870, to Josephine Robertson, of Paradise, Muhlenburgh Co., Ky. One son—Charles R., has blessed their union. The Doctor and wife are members of the United Baptist Church. He is a member of the K. of H. In politics a Democrat.

ALFRED K. LEACH, postmaster, Ohio County, is the son of John and Nancy Leach, natives of Kentucky, both now deceased. The father was born in 1802, and died in 1859, in Ohio County, Ky.; his parents came from Maryland, and the mother, whose ancestors were Germans, from Pennsylvania, died in 1881. Mr. Leach was born July 19, 1839, in Cromwell Precinct, and was educated at the common schools. He was the second of three children; his sister, Sarah Ellen, wife of James Gentry, a farmer in Cromwell, and a younger brother, George W. Leach. Their parents were farmers and members of the Baptist Church. Mr. Leach was married in 1875, to Alice Paxton, who died June 1, 1883, and he made her sister, Iduma, his second wife, September 25, 1884. He had by his first marriage two children: Mittie Birchie and Cora Ella. Mr. Leach enlisted in Company D, Seventeenth Kentucky, subsequently consolidated into Company H. On January 4, 1862, he entered the United States service, and served three years; was at Fort Donelson, Pittsburgh Landing and many other engagements. He came to Cromwell in December, 1865, and engaged in the grocery and hardware business, and was appointed postmaster. He now conducts one of the largest stores in town; he is a member of the Baptist Church, and in politics a life-long Democrat.

HENRY CLAY LEACH was born in Ohio County, Ky., December 1, 1845. His father, John Nelson Leach, was a native of Ohio County; followed the vocation of farming; died in 1863, aged fifty-six years, leaving twelve children; he was twice married; his first wife was Martha Taylor, who died in 1840. His second marriage was with Joanna Arnold, of Spencer County, Ky. The result of this marriage was nine children; Leonard Leach, father of John N., was a native of Maryland; he came to Kentucky in 1799, and settled in Ohio County, where he died in 1840. Henry Clay Leach, after the death of his father, remained with his mother, supporting the family by his labor until October 10, 1864, when he joined the Federal army; enlisted in Company D, Twenty-first Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, as a private, in which capacity he served until the close of the war; was engaged in the memorable battle of Nashville, Tenn., besides numerous other engagements and skirmishes. At the close of the war he returned to his home and resumed farming. Four years later he bought the homestead farm, to which he has since added 100 acres; he now owns 268 acres of land, 200 of which are well fenced and under cultivation, well stocked and well improved, with barns, dwelling, orchard, etc. Mr. Leach inherits no part of his possessions, but has made all by his own labor with the help and encouragement of his wife. In connection with his farm interests he gives some attention to the purchase and sale of cattle. In 1871 Mr. Leach united himself in marriage with Laura E., daughter of J. B. Taylor, of Ohio County. Their union has been blessed with one child. Mr. Leach was a member of the P. of H. In politics he is a Republican, and takes an active interest in the issues of the day.

LEONARD H. LEACH, son of Leonard and Mary (Cole) Leach, the former a native of Ohio County, born in 1802, and died of small-pox in 1842; the latter born in Ireland in 1805, and died in Kentucky in 1873. Of his father's family there are now living: John A. Leach, deputy sheriff, justice of the peace and assessor, a very prominent and influential man (the husband of Vitula Williams, by whom he has nine children); Rebecca J., wife of F. D. Sandefur (have three children), Mary A., wife of David Miller (have three children), and Margaret, wife of C. G. Crowder (have one child). Leonard H. Leach was born in Ohio County. On the 22d of December, 1863, he married Martha Ann, youngest child of S. G. and Frances Sandefur, both of whom died of small-pox. She has five children: Lewis Herbert (a teacher, now a student at Hartford College), Susan J., James Henry, Charles Arthur and Leonard Luther. Mr. Leach has been engaged in farming since childhood, and now owns a farm of sixty acres of good land, about three and one-half miles from Cromwell. He is a diligent reader, and has thus acquired a large amount of valuable knowledge, although his early advantages were limited. He and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He cared for his invalid mother fifteen years. He is a strong temperance man, and a member of the Republican party.

JAMES STONE LEE, Ohio County, was born May 8, 1831, in Coffee County, Tenn., where he grew to manhood. In 1851 he removed with his parents to Butler County, Ky., and in 1877 to Ohio County, where he now resides. His father, Jesse Lee, was born in 1808 in Kentucky; removed with his parents to Tennessee; was constable and sheriff of Coffee County, Tenn., and assessor for eight years in Butler County, Ky., and died in 1882. He was the son of Thomas Lee, a native of Virginia, who died about 1837 at the age of seventy-eight years. Jesse was twice married, first to Sarah E., daughter of James and Mary Stone, of Coffee County, Tenn.; she died in 1855, and to them were born Mary A. (Austin), one deceased brother, James Stone, Martha J. (James and Whitaker), Sarah E. (Pettigrew), Richard M., Thomas W., William F., Melinda (Fulton), Nancy C. (Sampson), Isabel (Hoops), Jesse B. and David H. By second marriage, Maria, Stephen A., Susan (Puckett), Alice, Daniel B., Andrew and Dora. James Stone Lee was married, November 1, 1854, to Sarah E., daughter of Robert and Nancy J. (Moore) Cardwell, of Butler County, born February 22, 1839, and from their union sprang Sarah Jane (deceased), born December 24, 1855; Mary Frances (Hunt), August 17, 1857; a son (deceased), born June 17, 1859; Nancy Victory, June 27, 1860; Anderson Monroe, May 19, 1862; George Brinton, September 20, 1864; John William (deceased), October 5, 1866; Luveny Angaline (deceased), October 22, 1867; James Washington (deceased), June 13, 1869; Eliza Florence, October 27, 1870; Jesse Leonadus, April 24, 1873; Leroy Tilden, March 9, 1876; Rinda Ann, January 19, 1879; Robert Estil (deceased), Jan-6, 1882. In 1861 Mr. Lee enlisted in Company C, Eleventh Kentucky Infantry, and was discharged at the end of eighteen months for disabilities. His three brothers served with him in the same regiment. His four brothers-in-law served in different Kentucky regiments. His grandfather Stone was a soldier in the Revolution. Mr. Lee is a farmer, and owns ninety-two acres of good land. In religion he is a Methodist, and in politics a Republican.

JOHN W. LEWIS, Ohio County, was born November 17, 1817, in Jefferson County, Ky.; removed with his parents to Meade County, where he was raised. His father, Lieut. Henry Lewis, one of a family of twelve sons and two daughters, a native of Culpeper County, Va., was a soldier in the war of 1812; removed to Kentucky about 1816, and died in Meade County in 1845. He was the son of Capt. William Lewis, a Revolutionary soldier, who died in Culpeper County, Va., in 1845, at the age of eighty-four years. He was of Welsh extraction. Henry married Nancy, daughter of John and Elizabeth Nall, of Washington County, Ky.; she died in 1846; their union resulted in the birth of John W., Catherine A. (Nall), Linda G. (Ditto), Sarah M. (Foreman), Emily (Lewis), Nancy A. (Compton) and James S. John W. Lewis has been twice married; first, March 2, 1847, to Omacinda J., daughter of William and Elizabeth (McFarland) Field, of Ohio County, born in 1835; died August 4, 1864, and to them were born Joshua F., Thomas L., Nancy E. (Coffey) and Henry W. July 17, 1866, Mr. Lewis married Beatrice, daughter of Willis and Louisa (McFarland) Field, of Daviess County; she was born in 1843 and to their union was born one son—John G. In 1837 Mr. Lewis commenced clerking in Hartford, and in 1839 entered into partnership with his employer in the mercantile business, in which he continued until 1848, and in 1861 he became a cashier of the Hartford Branch of the People's Bank of Kentucky, which was superseded by the National Banking System in 1865. He then again embarked in the mercantile business, which he continued for a period of ten years, and in 1876 located in Rosine, where he and his sons are now engaged in the milling business. He lost thirteen slaves by the late war, and in 1873 suffered heavily by the general depreciation of property. He has been for forty years a member of the Masonic fraternity, and was many times master of the lodge. In politics he is identified with the Democratic party.

HENRY J. C. LINDLEY was born in Ohio County, Ky., January 31, 1822, and is a son of Daniel and Sarah (McGill) Lindley, the former a native of New Jersey, and the latter of Virginia; they were of Scotch-Irish and Irish descent, respectively. Daniel Lindley received his early education in his native State. In his eighteenth year, in 1805, he came to Ohio County, Ky., then almost an unbroken wilderness. Here he was afterward married, and here he bought wild land near Conditt's Ferry, now Point Pleasant, and subsequently improved a farm to which he added from time to time until he was the owner of some 800 acres. Here he resided and was extensively engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death which occurred August 10, 1866, in his seventy-ninth year. He was for many years postmaster at what was known as "Lindley's Postoffice" since removed to Point Pleasant. He was a remarkable man for gathering and preserving old relics, having in his possession a pair of tongs, an adze, and several other articles brought by his great-grandfather from Scotland. His eyesight was unimpaired to the last, having been preserved, it is said, by keeping his eyebrows trimmed. His father, Jacob Lindley, was a veteran in the war of the Revolution." Mrs. Sarah Lindley departed this life September 2, 1825, in her thirty-seventh year. She was a devoted member of the United Baptist Church. Henry J. C. Lindley received a limited education in youth at the primitive schools of Kentucky; he has, however, acquired a fair business education by his own efforts. He has always resided on the old homestead, which he now owns, and to which he has added and now owns well-improved farms, amounting in the aggregate to about 1,000 acres. He is extensively and successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits and stock-raising, making the culture of tobacco a specialty, at which he is said to excel. He was married, September 8, 1846, to Ophelia M. Timmonds, a native of Ohio County. Two sons and one daughter have been left to them: Warren, Mary M. E. and Cincinnatus. Mrs. Lindley is a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Mr. Lindley belongs to no church, but holds to the doctrines of the Methodist Episcopal. At one time he was a member of the P. of H. In politics he is independent.

CAPT. ADAM LITER, Ohio County, was born in Bourbon County, Ky., July 14, 1822, and is the sixth of a family of seven children born to Henry and Mary (Ament) Liter, the former of Pennsylvania and the latter a native of Kentucky, and both of German descent. At a very early age, Henry Liter removed with his parents to Bourbon County, Ky., the whole country being at that time one vast, dense cane-brake. The family were among the earliest settlers of the county, and for protection against the Indians were obliged, with other families, to live in the fort at Bryant's Station some three years. Here his father, the grandfather of our subject, bought wild land some four miles from Bryant's Station, where he subsequently improved a farm, upon which he resided until his death, and reared a large family of children. Here Henry Liter received his education, and after attaining his majority he bought wild land near the old homestead, which he was obliged to pay for twice, in consequence of a defective title, as did also many of his neighbors; he afterward improved a farm upon which he resided until his death, which occurred in 1862 at the age of some eighty or ninety years. He was twice married, rearing a family of twelve children, eleven of whom attained manhood and womanhood. He was a life long member of the Presbyterian Church, in which he officiated as deacon for many years. Capt. Adam Liter received only a very limited education in youth, but has by his own effort since acquired a fair business education. He was employed on his father's farm until he was seventeen years of age, when he commenced to learn the stone-cutter's trade, but after a few months abandoned it and returned home. Soon after this he went to learn the confectioner's trade, serving an apprenticeship of three years, after which he followed the trade on his own account, at Madison, Ind., for five years, when he was compelled to abandon it on account of failing health, caused by inhaling the fumes of burning charcoal. He was then engaged in flat-boating for three years, running hoop-poles and staves down the rivers to New Orleans. This proving unprofitable, and becoming encumbered, he engaged in steam-boating on the Green River, at which he was eminently successful until the breaking out of the late civil war. He with his two boats was then pressed into the Government service. In 1862 he sold these boats, and in the following year, 1863, built two new ones, both of which were soon pressed into the Government service and transformed into war vessels in the tin-clad fleet. For these, however, he was handsomely remunerated. In 1864 he built another boat, which he sold soon after the war. The principal part of his steam-boating was on the Green River, from Bowling Green, Ky., to Evansville, Ind. He was, however, to some extent engaged in boating on the Wabash, Ohio and Mississippi Rivers. Before and during the war, bought four farms on the Green River, in Ohio County, near South Carrollton, aggregating about 1,000 acres. He was also the owner of some eight slaves. Soon after the close of the war he leased a coal mine near Spottsville, on the Green River, which he operated for about two years. In 1871 he settled on his farm near South Carrollton, upon which he now resides and where he has since been extensively engaged in farming and stock raising. He is one of the most successful farmers in the county, taking and reading several agricultural journals, and keeping fully abreast with all modern improvements. He was married July 15, 1846, to Sarah C. Foster, a native of Cincinnati, Ohio; three children were born to them, two of whom—sons—are now living. Capt. Liter and wife are members of the United Baptist Church. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., having three times passed all the chairs and is now a member of the Grand Lodge of the State of Indiana. He took his degrees in Morning Star Lodge No. 7, of Madison, Ind.; afterward helped to organize Madison Lodge No. 11, of same place, and still later helped to organize Crescent City Lodge No. 22, of Evansville, Ind., of which he is still a member. He is a Democrat.

WILLIAM LYONS was born March 3, 1847, in Hancock County, Ky., and is a son of Elias and Catherine (Newton) Lyons. The father was also born in Hancock County. He (the father) moved several times, and was in Missouri at the breaking out of the war, and served three years in the Confederate service; was taken prisoner at Monnego Springs, Mo., and confined in McDowels' prisons; while in the latter he died in 1863. William Lyon accompanied his father in all his moves, prior to and after his location in Missouri, but returned to Kentucky with his two uncles, who had gone after him. In 1867 he returned to Kansas and remained until 1870. November 9, 1871, he married Eda Willis, a sister of F. G. Willis, whose sketch is also given. They are the parents of five children: Jimmie, Mamie, Ollie, Alma and an infant. After marriage Mr. Lyons engaged in farming, milling and mercantile business. He is the owner of over 400 acres of land in good order, and principally made and improved by himself. He is a Democrat and a member of the Baptist Church. His wife is a Presbyterian.

HON. HENRY D. McHENRY, banker and lawyer, was born February 7, 1826, at Hartford, Ohio Co., Ky. His father, the Hon. John Hardin McHenry, was born October 13, 1797, in Washington County, Ky., and died at his residence in Owensboro, November 1, 1871. His father was the Rev. Barnabus McHenry, who emigrated from Virginia, and was one of the pioneer preachers of the Methodist denomination in the West; and his mother was the daughter of Col. John Hardin, who was killed while on a mission to the Indians in the Northwest Territory. He received a good education, chiefly under the instruction of his father; studied law under his uncle, the distinguished Martin D. Hardin, at Frankfort; obtained license in 1819, and began his profession at Litchfield in Grayson County. In 1821, Gov. Adair appointed him commonwealth attorney, and Col. Alnay McLean judge of the new Judicial District, consisting of the counties of Daviess, Henderson, Breckinridge, Ohio and Muhlenburgh. He at once removed to Hartford, and entered upon the duties of his office, resigning in 1839; in the following year was elected to the legistature; in 1845 was elected to congress from the Second Congressional District of Kentucky, as a Whig; in 1849 was elected delegate from Ohio and Hancock Counties to the convention which framed the present constitution of Kentucky, and, in 1853, after a residence of thirty-two years in Hartford, removed to Owensboro, where he continued to reside until his death. He had the unbounded confidence of his fellow citizens, and was regarded as one of the most able and successful lawyers, and best men of the day in the State; and probably traveled over a larger circuit, and did a more laborious practice than any of his cotemporaries. He was universally beloved. Mr. McHenry was married to Hannah Davis, and left seven children: Hon. Henry D., Col. John H. (of Owensboro), William H. and W. E. of St. Louis; L. S. McHenry of Louisville, and Mrs. Dr. Hale and Mrs. Robert Craig, of Daviess County. The eldest son, Hon. Henry D. McHenry, the subject of this sketch, received every advantage in his early education, one of his teachers being the late Frank Griffin, a distinguished scholar in his time, and finished his literary training at Transylvania University, at Lexington. He chose the law for his profession; studied with his father; graduated in the law department of Transylvania University, in 1845, and was admitted to the practice in his native town. He soon took a prominent position in his profession, and in 1851 was elected to the lower house of the legislature; in 1861 he was elected to the State senate, serving until 1865, when he was again sent to the lower house, and was chairman of the judiciary committee in both branches of the legislature. In 1867 he was Democratic candidate in the legislature for United States senator, but was defeated, by two votes, by Hon. Garrett Davis, of Bourbon County. In 1870 he was elected to represent his district in the Forty Second Congress, served on the Pacific Railroad committee, and took a strong part in the discussion before the house; in 1872 strongly advocated the establishment of a national educational fund, favoring the application of the proceeds of sales of public lands to the education of the people, and distinguished himself in his address on the famous civil rights question, taking the position that the bill was bad in its policy, untenable in its constitutional construction, and a clear infringment on the rights of States to local self government. In 1872 he was delegate from the State at large to the Baltimore Democratic Convention, and was elected member of the Democrat National Committee, and conducted the presidential canvass with such ability in Kentucky, as to bring about his reappointment on the national committee for the next four years at the convention in St. Louis in 1876, and was re-elected to the same position by the national conventions of 1880 and 1884, which position he still holds, and is now perhaps the oldest member of that committee. After the presidential election of 1876, he was one of the Democrats appointed to proceed to New Orleans for the purpose of investigating the election returns in that State. He was also appointed to superintend the counting of the votes of Kentucky. He has gained widespread reputation as a land lawyer, and has taken a prominent position for his great ability in general practice and is one of the most able, active and influential lawyers of his State. He is a pungent and forcible speaker, has an easy, ready command of language, is a man of fine financial and executive ability, and has a great diversity of knowledge, which he brings to his service in every emergency. He is largely interested in the coal interests on the Chesapeake, Ohio & Southwestern Railroad, holding the position of president of the McHenry & Rockport Coal Companies, and is an active worker in every enterprise looking to the public welfare, contributing in every way to the best interests of the community, in which he is one of the most influential and widely known members. Among his many diversified business interests is that of banking—he holding the position of president of the bank of Hartford. In person he is of admirable appearance, being fully six feet in height and agreeable and attractive in manners. Mr. McHenry was married, January 27, 1856, to Miss Jennie Taylor, daughter of Rev. James Taylor, of Hardinsburg, Ky., a lady of marked talents and rare accomplishments. She has written some exquisite poetry, and a fine collection of her poems, published in book form, has been widely circulated over the country. They have five children living: Henry, now practicing law; Godfrey T., in the bank; John J., civil engineer, in employ of government; Isabelle and Lemuel. Wife a member of Methodist Church.

AZARIAH PECK MADDOX, Ohio County, was born December 27, 1824, near Rockport, Ohio Co., Ky., where he was reared to manhood and has always resided (for ancestry, see sketch of Elder Maddox). Mr. Maddox has been twice married; first, May 6, 1846, to Berenice, daughter of Ellis and Nancy (Southard) Chapman, of Ohio County; she was born November 23, 1826, and died November 4, 1863. To their union were born the following named children: Robert W., Elijah C., Ephraim E. (deceased), Byram N., Joshua L., Amanda E. (deceased), Judson T. (deceased), John D., Ellis J., and James P. May 15, 1864, Mr. Maddox married Mrs. Elizabeth J., widow of William B. Chapman, and daughter of James M. and Seeanna (Borah) Rogers, of Butler County. Mrs. Maddox was born November 6, 1834, and has borne her husband the following children: Seeanna B. (Maddox), Mary E., Nannie J., Azariah L. and Otis P. By her first husband were born Ora E. (Maddox) and Martha C. (Loney). Mr. Maddox is a farmer, owning 279 acres of fine land in good condition. He is a member of the Baptist Church, and a Democrat.

ELDER DAVID J. K. MADDOX, Ohio County, was born May 10, 1836, on the place where he now resides near Rockport. His father, John Maddox, Sr., was born December 23, 1796, in Woodford County, Ky. He was a licentiate and great revivalist in the Baptist Church, extensively known, and died at this place June 10, 1876; he lost six slaves by the emancipation; he was the son of John Maddox, Sr., of Culpeper County, Va.; who removed to Kentucky when a young man; he was a soldier in the Revolution. He married Eleanor Aston; was an active Baptist, and died in Hamilton, Ky., in 1845, aged about eighty years. John Maddox, Jr., married Amelia B., daughter of Robert and Charlotte (Barnes) Render, of Ohio County; she died in 1875, at the age of seventy-five years. Their union was blessed by the birth of Mary B. (Rowe), Eleanor A. (Taylor), Azariah P., Elizabeth R. (Casebier), Susanna H. (Stroud), Paulina F. (Baker), Joseph L. R., David J. K., Charlotte J. (Tichenor), and Sarah C. (Brown). All were married and all were Baptists. In youth Elder Maddox had only such educational advantages as the schools of the country afforded, but by close application, laboring in the daytime, studying at night, preaching on Sabbath, he has acquired a large fund of information on ecclesiastical and literary subjects. March 9, 1856, he married Sallie A., daughter of Collier and Ann Tichenor, of Ohio County, born November 3, 1834. To their union have been born James E., John B., Anna B., Collier T., David L., Edgar D., Jared M. (deceased), William N., Albert L., Caperton C., Susan A. C., and Martha E. At the age of ten years, Elder M. joined the Missionary Baptist Church; was licensed to preach in 1859; ordained to the full work of the ministry in 1860, and has served as pastor of Rochester, West Providence (sixteen years), Pond Run, Paradise, Mt. Carmel, Beaver Dam, Central City, Woodward's Valley and West Point. He was moderator of the Gasper River Association for seven years, and during the time of his ministry has baptized about 800 and married 300 couples. Elder Maddox owns and cultivates the old family manor, consisting of about 300 acres of productive and well-improved land. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, also of the G. T.; was chaplain of the State Grange, and politically a Democrat.

GEORGE M. MARTIN, Ohio County, is the son of Nimrod Martin, of Shelby County, Ky., who was born in 1805, and removed to Indiana when he was but twelve years of age, and there remained until he reached the years of manhood. He then went into Ohio County, and was there married to Deborah Dobson, who was also a native of Shelby County, born in 1817, and married when but thirteen years of age. She died May 31, 1881, leaving eight children to mourn her loss: Matilda, wife of William Paris; Eli, married to Cassandra Taylor, subsequently to Sarah Dawson; Mildred, wife of Marion Jewell; George M., Mrs. Chloe Taylor and Mrs. Debbie Dodson. Our subject was married February 22, 1863, to Mary P. Taylor, daughter of Thomas L. and Sally (McCracken) Taylor. She is the seventh of a family of eleven children; was born in Ohio County, Ky., in May, 1839, where she received a common school education. They have three children: Kinch Hay, Homer and Charlie. They are members of the Bell Run Missionary Baptist Church; and he is a stanch Democrat. His farm consists of 122 acres of meadow, plough land and timber. He has good buildings and many other improvements, and has a coal-bank on his farm.

WADE N. MARTIN, Ohio County, was born in Butler County, Ky., June 26, 1827. His father, John Martin, was a native of Philadelphia, Penn., born in 1801; came to Kentucky with his parents in 1815; settled at Shakertown in Logan County, and in 1817 removed to Butler County, where he married Malinda Neal, in 1824. Seventeen children are the result of this union, of which number our subject is the third. John Martin died in Texas, in 1867. Subject's grandfather, John Martin, was a native of Ireland, born in 1765; was a sailor by occupation; he died in 1835, aged seventy years; he married Mary Graham, who died in Butler County, aged ninety-four. The maternal grandparents of our subject, George and Margaret (Tyler) Neal, were natives of North Carolina, and died in Kentucky at the advanced age of seventy-six and seventy-three years, respectively. Wade N. Martin remained with his parents until the age of fifteen, when he began to learn the trade of tanner, and worked three years with James Helm, of Morgantown. When he arrived at the age of eighteen, his father gave him his time. Wages were not over $7 per month, but for eight years he continued tanning when he could get work; in the meantime he made several trips in flat-boats on the river. April 11, 1850, he married Martha T. Harris, and three years later settled in Wayne County, Ill., where his wife, Martha, died, leaving one child—Corrinna, who died in the same year. In 1855 he removed to Ohio County, Ky., where he purchased a tannery and worked at his trade. His second marriage was celebrated December 30, 1855, with Jemima N. S. E. Hodges. This union has been blessed with eight children, seven of whom are living: George W., John W., Ransom B., Mary T., Martha F., Sina N., and Luella E. In 1874 Mr. Martin discontinued the tanning business, which he had followed successfully for twenty years, and gave his attention to trading in land and stock and tobacco, which he followed for some years. He owns about 1,500 acres of land in Ohio and adjoining counties. The home farm is well improved with good barns, orchard and dwelling. Mr. Martin began life without assistance, and has arrived at his present state of comfortable independence by his own energy. Mr. and Mrs. Martin and four children are members of the Baptist Church, in which Mr. M. holds the office of deacon; he takes a strong stand in favor of temperance, and voted with the old Whig party until 1854, since which time he has been a Republican.

LIEUT. ROBERT J. MASON, Ohio County, is the son of Robert C. Mason, who was born in Virginia in about 1812, and with his family removed to Oldham County, Ky., in 1837. He still lives at the latter place and is postmaster and Chapter Mason. He has a fine library, and is a scholarly gentleman. The mother of Lieut. Mason was born about 1802, in Culpeper County, Va., and died in January, 1881. Her maiden name was Frances Smith. Lieut. Mason was born in Madison, Va., April 12, 1829. He received his early training in the schools of Kentucky, which at that time afforded but meager advantages; he has acquired much by a later course of study and reading. At the age of twenty-one he commenced business for himself as farmer, carpenter and practical engineer. In 1864 he purchased a farm in McLean County, and improved it continuously until 1881, when he made an exchange and obtained a part of William Field's, consisting of 115 acres, all first class land with good improvements and a superior quality of spring water. Lieut. Mason was married October 4, 1866, to Mary E. Hall, eldest daughter of Isaac S. and Julia H. Hall, of Oldham County. The former died in 1871, leaving a widow and ten children; the latter still lives on the old place at Oldham. This union was blessed with one child—Isaac, born April 28, 1868. He is a student and teacher. Lieut. Mason is a member of the Blue Lodge of Masons and is one of the leading members of the community; takes a deep interest in temperance, education and all progressive movements.

CHARLES W. MASSIE was born November 18, 1845, in Bedford County, Va., and is the eldest of twelve children born to John and Theodocia Frances (Wade) Massie, both still living. John Massie was born in Amherst County, and his wife in Bedford County, Va., and followed the carpenter's trade until 1847, when he came West and located in Ohio County, Ky., where he engaged in farming, and worked at his trade eighteen years. He then moved to Daviess County, Ky., where he resided until recently, when he removed to Owensborough, Ky., and engaged in the tobacco business. He has been successful in his business career. He is a member of the Baptist Church. Charles W. was reared and educated in Ohio County, save a short time when he attended the Whitesville Seminary in Daviess County. At the age of nineteen he began for himself by farming, which he followed until 1876; while farming he began the study of law, at home, and after five years' study was admitted to practice, which he conducted in connection with farming until 1876, when he moved to Hartford and gave his exclusive attention to law. In August, 1882, he was elected judge of the county court, his present position. He still carries on the practice of law in other courts, and has a high standing as a judge and lawyer. October 20, 1864, he married Miss Martha S. Ford, daughter of David and Emily Ford, of Ohio County. By this union they have nine children: Elisha S., Nora H., Nancy E., Everett L., Zenobia, Mary T., Joseph B., James C. and John C. Judge Massie belongs to the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and his wife to the Baptist Church.

CHAMBURS I. MAXEY, Ohio County, was born in Warren County, Ky., July 15, 1851; he is a son of John J. and Elizabeth Maxey, both natives of Warren County. John Maxey, the father of our subject, was first married to Polly Bellar, in the year 1833; to them were born four sons; Calvin and Wilson (who died at an early age), William W. and John M., who enlisted in the civil war of 1861. William was killed in the battle of Shiloh, Tenn., in 1862. John J. Maxey's second marriage was with Miss Elizabeth Hudnall, April 2, 1844. Their union was blessed with thirteen children, nine of whom lived to be grown and married, eight of whom are living (1885): Prudence A., Ann H., Althea M., Julie E., Hesser C., Willie W., Chamburs I. and Warren W. Edward Maxey, the grandfather of our subject, was a native of Virginia, where he married Judy White, and removed to Kentucky in an early day. Chamburs I. Maxey, in 1872, began to work for himself; raised a crop of corn, and in the autumn of that year married Fannie R., daughter of Joseph Hudnall, of Ohio County. After marriage, Mr. Maxey rented land for one year, and in 1873, removed to Ohio County, and settled on his father-in-law's land, where he now resides. He has opened a nice little farm, well fenced and improved, and gives his entire attention to farming, in which he is successful, and is one of the rising young farmers of Ohio County. Mr. and Mrs. Maxey are the parents of three children: Joseph J. Minnie M., and Ida Pearl. Mr. Maxey and wife are members of the Presbyterian Church, and in politics Mr. Maxey is a Republican.

REV. MILBURN A. MAXEY was born March 7, 1848, and died November 6, 1884, aged thirty-six years seven months and twenty-nine days. He died of liver disease. He joined the Logan Presbytery of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, at Cavena, Hart Co., Ky., October, 1869. He went to Cumberland University in February, 1870. He was licensed to preach at Rockfield, Warren Co., Ky., on the 12th day of August, 1871, in his twenty-fourth year, and was ordained in 1872. He preached in Arkansas County, Ark., during the summer of 1872, and witnessed fifty conversions. He graduated in theology, in Cumberland University, in June, 1875, and began his active labors as a pastor in Christian County, Ky., where he continued to labor incessantly and with great acceptance and efficiency until he left there, nearly three years ago, and removed to Columbia, Tenn., where he labored until his death. In Columbia he was universally beloved by his church, and not only by his own church but by other denominations, and by outsiders generally. He had won a strong hold upon the affections of the people, both inside and outside of his church. He was a favorite with all classes. He was the friend of the poor man as well as the rich. He made no distinctions, and wherever suffering humanity called for assistance, like his blessed Master, he was ready to go and render any aid in his power. He was an uncompromising advocate of the truth, and it is believed that he would sooner have suffered martyrdom than to have sacrificed his conscientious convictions of truth and duty. He was sympathetic, tender and kind toward all with whom he came in contact. He was affable in his intercourse with men, and by his genial disposition won the affections of all he chanced to meet. But Brother Maxey's race is run. He has fought the last battle, and though he fell in the fight, yet he has triumphed over death, and has ascended to be forever with the Lord. He conversed freely before his death about his future prospects. On Tuesday afternoon, November 4, the substance of the following conversation took place: I said to him: "Brother Maxey, I did not get to go to our last meeting of Presbytery. You preached the opening sermon: what was your text?" "I preached twice. My text on Friday was John iii, 30: 'He must increase, but I must decrease.' My text on Sabbath was 2 Cor. iii, 18: 'But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord.'"

The Rev. T. J. Duncan (Methodist) said: "Brother Maxey, if you have anything to say to your wife, children, father, sister, or friends, you might say it now. We do not wish to alarm you, but the chances are against your getting well, and you should make any arrangements you might want to make now while you can." To this he replied: "This does not excite me. I am prepared for it." Then, addressing his father, he spoke of his life insurance policy, to the amount of $5,000, which he had carried until within a few months past, when he had to drop it on account of financial pressure. This, of course, is lost. What a warning to others, with a slight hint to churches to carry a policy on the life of their pastor for the benefit of his helpless family. Brother Maxey said, however, "I have been young, and though not yet very old, yet I have never seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread." Turning to the writer, he said, "Do you remember those sweet little songs we sang when your little Willie lay dying? Then you know the song 'Nearer, Dearer,'" and in a clear and very distinct voice he sang the chorus:

Nearer, dearer, I long to feel my Saviour,
Nearer, dearer, hour by hour.

His wife said, "If it should come to the worst, where do you want to be laid to rest?" He replied, "On that grand old hillside where I used to play in childhood, if it suits you all." Brother Duncan said, "But Brother Maxey, would you not like it better, if it suited all around, to be buried here in the midst of your flock, where they could watch over your grave and do you honor?" Finally he said, "I only wanted to 'honor my father and mother,' but if agreeable, let it be as Ida wishes it." His wife asked him for his favorite hymn. He replied, "All hail the power of Jesus' name." She then asked him for his favorite chapter. He said, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me bless his holy name." He then quoted many passages of Scripture and favorite verses of poetry. "When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee," was repeated frequently. Referring to his church, he said, "Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." And with many other words did he exhort us that evening. He lay quietly for some time repeating the precious Scripture promises, such as, "In my Father's house are many mansions," etc., "Lead me to the rock that is higher than I." At one time he said, "I wish that you all knew how easy it is to die." Then he said, "He will never leave me nor forsake me." Just before he died, his wife, bending over him, anxious to know if he were still conscious, and if he still recognized her, said, "Who is this talking to you?" He said, "It is my own sweet Ida." Then at last he said, "Farewell, farewell to all." We knew that his last moments were near, and we asked, "Is Jesus with you yet?" "O yes; he is with me all the time." "Do you suffer any pain?" "None at all. All is well with me forever." He then spoke of his dear departed loved ones, and said, "They have gone on before me, but I shall soon overtake them." And then with rapture he said, "I can almost hear the music of the angels on the other shore."

The burial services were conducted by the Rev. J. S. Grider, of Bowling Green, Ky., who gave a brief sketch of his life, and called our attention to 2 Tim. iv, 6–8: "For I am now ready to be offered," etc. The discourse was a masterly effort, eliciting the warmest expressions of commendation. Brother Grider was assisted by the Rev. T. J. Duncan, former pastor here of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and co-laborer here with Brother Maxey, who delivered an earnest and impressive address, indorsing Brother Maxey's work, and giving a brief history of his life since his coming to Columbia. He was followed by the Rev. W. C. Grace, pastor of the Baptist Church, who passed a high eulogy upon the deceased, and spoke in touching words also of his private relation to Brothey Maxey, and of his intercourse with him. The burial was at Rose Hill Cemetery, where he was interred by the K. of P. and the Masonic order. Here he sweetly sleeps beneath the waving pine and the vine-covered earth, waiting for theresurrection of the just. The fallen soldier sleeps on the field of battle, in companionship with the mighty dead—the Rev. S. G. Caruthers, the Rev. B. C. Chapman, and hosts of others eminent for piety. We can scarcely realize the fact that our comrade has fallen from our side, but it is so; Milburn A. Maxey is gone. He was our friend, our brother; true in life and faithful in death. Farewell, my true yoke-fellow. The bonds that bound us together in life shall not be sundered by death, for in the "bright forever," the "summer land of song," we expect to meet thee again. "Though lost to sight, to memory thou art dear," and we know that thou art only gone before, withdrawn for the present from our view, as the stars of night disappear from our view before the light of day. Yet we know that thou art not lost, but only gone before.

Gone, but not lost, our brother dear!
Gone home to glory and to God.
We meet to-day, and drop a tear
Where rests his body 'neath the sod.

Gone, but not lost; O no, not lost!
Although he fell in battle strife,
He fell a soldier at his post,
And now he wears a crown of life.

Gone, but not lost! just gone before,
Where Jesus and the angels dwell;
He rests in peace, his labor's o'er,
And we to-day his triumph tell.

Brother Maxey leaves a wife and three children to mourn their loss, one little daughter —Maud, by his first wife, and two little boys —Milburn and Herschell, by the last. O! thou God of the widow and fatherless, draw near to these, and comfort and protect them in this great loss! And may the father's fallen mantle fall eventually upon one or both of these dear little boys, and may they fill the vacancy made in the ranks of the ministry, and at last gather together with their sainted father in the realms of eternal day.

DR. JAMES W. MEADOR, Ohio County, was born November 6, 1838, in Breckinridge County, Ky., where he attained his majority, and in 1864, removed to Pattieville, Ohio County, where he has since resided. His father, Jubal Meador, a native of Bedford County, Va., was born February 26, 1800, and is now living in Breckinridge County, where he located in 1810. He is the son of William Meador, a soldier at Yorktown, in the Revolutionary war, who died in 1823. He was of English extraction. Jubal married Elizabeth, daughter of William Hanks, of Breckinridge County, Ky., and to them were born Eliza (Parson), Thomas, Margaret (Overton), William, John P., Rhoda (Carwile), Elizabeth (McCann) and Dr. J. W. Meador. Dr. Meador was married, in 1859, to America V., daughter of Samuel and Nellie (Maxwell) Matthews, of Ohio County; she was born June 2, 1839, and departed this life October 30, 1881. In 1861, Dr. Meador commenced the study of medicine, and in 1864 was with Dr. T. N. Warfield, of Cloverport, for seven months, and then located at Pattieville, where he practiced his profession four years. In 1868 he attended lectures at the University of Louisville, from which he graduated in 1869, and has since that time been successfully engaged in his chosen calling. He is an honored member of the Masonic fraternity, is connected with the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and in politics is a Republican. In 1873–74, and again in 1877–78, Dr. Meador was chosen by his fellow-citizens as their representative in the legislature of Kentucky.

WILLIAM MERCER, SR., & SONS, Ohio County, Ky. William Mercer Sr., was born in Northumberland County, England, December 28, 1819. In early manhood he engaged in business for himself in his native country, and remained in that country until 1854, when he immigrated to America, and settled in Schuylkill County, Penn., and followed mining. In 1869, he removed to Tuscarawas, Ohio, continuing in the same business, but soon after removed to Muhlenburgh County, Ky., and opened a mine at Mercer Station. He remained at the latter station until 1878, at which time he opened the Emporia Mine in Ohio County, Ky., near Beaver Dam, on the Chesapeake, Ohio & Southwestern Railroad. Mr. Mercer's first wife, Ann Stobs, of England, died in 1861, leaving a large family to mourn their loss: John James, died while in the army in 1865; he was a member of Company E, Forty-eighth Pennsylvania Regiment; Thomas, an engineer on the Chesapeake, Ohio & Southwestern Railroad; William and Walter, partners with their father in the Emporia Mine; the sixth son, Andrew, was killed in the above mine in 1881; Elizabeth, wife of Kinch Reno, conductor on the Chesapeake, Ohio & Southwestern Railroad. In 1865, Mr. Mercer married a most estimable lady, Mrs. Isabella Ingleby, a widow with three children. The fruit of this second marriage is one son—Ambrose. Mr. Mercer and his family are consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, strong temperance men and members of the Odd Fellow and Masonic fraternities. They are prominent in the community for their strict integrity and fair dealing, and well merit the success that has crowned their efforts.

HENRY S. METCALF, Ohio County, was born in the Precinct at Hines' Mill, near Rough Creek, March 22, 1821. His father, John Metcalf, was a man of great energy, and was by occupation a farmer. He died January 28, 1884, at the age of eighty years. His mother, whose maiden name was Charlotte Smith, a lady of fine culture and very industrious, died in 1854. They had amassed some property, and before the war, had owned a large family of colored people. They had nine children—seven daughters and two sons—of whom Mr. Metcalf is the third. His education in school was somewhat limited, but he has learned from observation and experience, and is a fine business man. He has been married three times; first in 1853, to Martha Mitchell, who died in 1855; second to Cordelia Phipps, who died in 1861, and he was last married April 21, 1867, to his present wife, Amelia C. Miller, youngest daughter of Joseph Miller, of Ohio County. She was born July 29, 1843. They have six children: Eulia C., John H., Maggie M., Charlotte, Abbie and Rose B. Mr. Metcalf enlisted, in 1862, in Gano's Squadron of Texas Cavalry, and was captured in Morgan's raid and imprisoned at Louisville, at Pomeroy, and afterward at Camp Chase, Ohio, from which place he was sent to Camp Douglas, where he made his escape. He was first lieutenant under Gen. Lyons, and served until the close of the war. He was one of the most active and brave soldiers in the confederate army.

WILLIAM PATON MEDKIFF was born July 2, 1845, in Ohio County, Ky., where he grew to manhood and where he still resides. His father, Thomas B. Medkiff, a native of Ohio County, died in 1853, aged about thirty-one years. He was the son Joseph Medkiff, an early pioneer, and many years a teacher in Ohio County, who died in 1852. His father was Franklin Medkiff. Thomas B. married Adeline, daughter of William and Hulda (Ross) Garth, of Shelby County, Ky., (now living, about sixty years of age); their union was blessed with William P., Henry C., Thomas B., John R. and Stephen A. (deceased). March 10, 1867, William P. united in marriage with Mary A., daughter of Thomas W. and Nancy (Wright) Wedding, of Ohio County, born March 23, 1847, and to her and husband have been born the following named children: Oscar H., Alphonso, Thomas P., Oria E., Joseph F., James E. and Allen W. Mr. Medkiff is a farmer, owning 185 acres of land in a high state of cultivation. At the age of fifteen years, he entered the service of his country, as a soldier in the Seventeenth Kentucky Infantry; in politics he is a stanch Republican.

JAMES BARDNEY MILLER, Ohio County, is the son of Jacob Miller and Martha (Whitlo) Miller. The father was born February 28, 1804, in Pennsylvania, and settled in Ohio County, Ky., about 1812. His father was John Miller, a Revolutionary soldier, who assisted in the erection of the old fort at Hartford. He lost an arm in the early Indian wars, and was instrumental in saving the life of Miss Anderson at the Hartford Fort, by shooting the Indian who was in the act of scalping the lady. He was well known in early history as a famous Indian fighter, and went by the name of "Tick-eye John Miller." He had three sons and three daughters; John, the eldest son, was in the battle of New Orleans; Jacob is the second son, and is now living at the advanced age of eighty-one. He has been known as a hunter of wild game. He was married, March 17, 1831, to Martha Whitlo, who was born February 12, 1810, and died in March, 1882. She was the mother of eleven children, of whom James Bardney, the subject, is the seventh. He was born on February 24, 1847, in Ohio County, and received a good common school education, and was married, November 7, 1869, to Nancy, the fifth child of Addison and Margaret (Riney) Lanum, of Marion County, Ky. who was born March 29, 1848, and came to Ohio County, Ky., at the age of six. Mr. and Mrs. Miller are the parents of seven children: Loretta, Martha Ann, Elgiva, Lydia (dead), Magnolia, Theola and James. Mr. Miller is trustee of schools and takes a deep interest in the education of his children.

JAMES MILLER, Esq., Ohio County, was born in Shelby County, Ky., November 25, 1821, and in 1824, his parents removed to Ohio County, Ky. His father was James Miller, a native of Culpeper, County, Va., born in 1789. His mother was Amy S. (Anderson) Miller, born in New Jersey in 1791. James Miller, Sr., was a farmer and cabinetmaker by occupation, and was deputy sheriff, assessor and magistrate in Ohio County many years, and resided near the Panther Creek Baptist Church. He died January 1, 1871; his wife, Ann (Stout) Miller, died three days later, January 4, 1871, and both were buried in the same grave in the Panther Creek Cemetery. The grandfather was Robert Miller, who died in Shelby County, Ky. James and Amy Miller were the parents of ten children, of whom our subject is the sixth. He was married November 7, 1847, to Malvina, fourth child of Hilary and Margaret Bell. Mrs. Miller was born December 11, 1824, in Daviess County, and died November 5, 1874. They had nine children, of whom six are now living. James H. died August 30, 1852; William E. died October 19, 1872; Estil died March 27, 1871; Margaret S., Francis, Virgil (married to Mollie C. Ford), Nathaniel C. (a professor of music at Sacramento, McLean County; he was educated at Valparaiso, Ind.), James B. and Susan D. Mr. Miller received a good education in the schools of Ohio County, and at the age of twenty-one purchased his present farm of 165 acres of excellent land with pleasant and commodious farm buildings. In 1874, he was elected to the office of justice of the peace, for Ohio County, in which office he is now serving his third term. He is a leading member of the Baptist Church, at Panther Creek. Is a strong temperance man; and has been a member of the different temperance organizations of the day. He takes a deep interest in all progressive movements. In politics he is a Democrat.

ELIJAH MILLER was born January 9, 1834, in Ohio County, Ky. His father, David A. Miller, was born August 19, 1801, in the same county, and is a son of David, Sr., and Dorcas (Holliday) Miller. David, Sr., was a native of Calvert County, Md., and came to Kentucky in 1798; his father, Joseph Miller, was a native of Ireland. Elijah Miller began farming, for himself at the age of twenty-one at which he has always been successful, now owning 456 acres of highly improved land, a large part under cultivation. September 28, 1856, he married Elvira Barrett, of Ohio County, daughter of Ignatius Barrett. They have seven children living: Lois B., William B., Louella, Richard P., David L., Marvin I., and Carrie—all at home. With his wife and three children, Mr. Miller is a member in good standing of the Methodist Church. In politics he is a Democrat and a supporter of the temperance movement, having at one time been a member of the G. T. and S. of T.

JOSEPH T. MILLER was born in this county October 14, 1840. His father, David A. Miller, was born in this county, but his ancestors were from Maryland, and came to Kentucky about 1795. David A. Miller has given special attention to farming, in which he has been successful, having acquired 2,000 acres of land, which he has divided principally among his children; he is still living in the enjoyment of perfect health at the advanced age of eighty-four years. His wife, Maria (Williams) Miller, died in January, 1881. They were long members of the Methodist Church, and were parents of ten children, all of whom lived to be grown. Joseph T., next to the youngest child of the family, received his early training at district schools, and finished his education at the Hartford Seminary. He was student of medicine under Dr. John E. Pendleton, of Hartford, and after three years' attendance at the Jefferson Medical College, at Philadelphia, graduated therefrom in 1870, when he returned to Hartford, where he has since practiced. He is a member of the McDowell Medical Society, and has a large practice. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity and in politics a Democrat. May 6, 1880, he married Miss Jennie Short, of Rumsey, McLean Co., Ky., daughter of Col. William and Elizabeth (Green) Short. Mr. and Mrs. Miller are members of the Methodist Church. They have three children: Lizzie S., David G. and Joseph T.

JAMES P. MILLER, Ohio County, was born October 6, 1850, and is the son of William and Elizabeth (Leach) Miller, and grandson of Andrew B. Miller, who came from Larue County, Ky. His parents died when he was quite young. His father had three brothers, who were ministers of the gospel: Richard H., Allen B. and Andrew J. Miller. The first died in Ohio County, June, 1879, and the last in Henderson County, Ky., in 1883. Allen B. is now pastor of the Second Baptist Church at Evansville, Ind. Mr. Miller has two sisters in Ohio County, near Rosine; one brother in McLean County, and one in Brown County, Tex. Mr. Miller was married January 1, 1877, to Sally A. Paxton, daughter of John H. and Margaret (Ross) Paxton, born March 28, 1854. They have three children: Norma, Cleburn and Bernice. Mr. Miller is a successful farmer. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity and is at present master of Cromwell Lodge No. 420; has been a Mason thirteen years. In politics is a Republican and Prohibitionist.

DRS. G. F. and J. J. MITCHELL, physicians and surgeons of Beaver Dam, Ohio Co., Ky., are the sons of Dr. James A. and Jane Mitchell. The father was born in Maryland about 1792, and immigrated to Kentucky in 1817. He was a remarkable man in many ways. He was educated for the Roman Catholic priesthood, and a graduate of St. Mary's College, Georgetown, Ky., but at the age of thirty-three he renounced the faith of that church, and became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and subsequently a local minister of the same body. He followed the profession of teaching for thirty years, and was eminently successful. He also practiced medicine for some years previous to his death, which occurred September 7, 1875; his wife died in June, 1873. They were the parents of sixteen children, of whom eleven are now living: William C., a farmer residing in Breckinridge County, Ky.; B. A., a tobacco merchant in Hancock County; A. G. and T. G., farmers in Hancock County; George F. and J. J., the subjects of this sketch; Rev. F. A., a clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Louisville, Ky.; Mrs. N. R. Williams, Mrs. Phelon, of Terre Haute, Ind.; Mrs. Eliza Peterson and Mrs. Lucretia Elliott. The parents first settled in Breckinridge County, Ky., and in 1840 removed with their family to Hancock County, where Dr. G. F. Mitchell was born September 27, 1843, and Dr. J. J. Mitchell, April, 1847. Both received a liberal education in their father's school, and both graduated at the Louisville Medical University. Dr. George F. was first married to Susan D. Fisher, a daughter of Stephen Fisher; she died in 1869, leaving one son. The Doctor was next married to Amelia Josephine Duke, daughter of William and Julia Duke, of Ohio County. This union is blessed with a son also. Dr. J. J. Mitchell was married, in 1868, to Edna D. Jarnette, of Hancock County. They have had four children, three of whom died in September, 1884. Dr. G. F. Mitchell and family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, while Dr. J. J. and family belong to the Baptist Church. These brothers were among the first to settle at Beaver Dam, on the completion of the Chesapeake, Ohio & Southwestern Railroad through the town in 1871. They have a fine practice throughout the county, and have achieved an enviable reputation for their skill in the practice of medicine as well as for their attainments in the knowledge of medical science.

JOHN H. MONROE, though a young man, has developed unusual ability as a tradesman, and is the junior member of the firm of J. B. Monroe & Co., engaged in a general merchandise trade at Horton, Ky. At the age of twenty years, young Monroe engaged in the timber business and stave-cutting, which he continued for one year, after which he traveled for pleasure one year, visiting many important and interesting points in the South and West; then entered into the mercantile trade, which now occupies all his attention. Mr. Monroe had fair advantages in education, and his mind is well stored with the learning of books, as well as with that of practical life. His father, John J. Monroe, is a native of Kentucky, and is yet living, aged fifty-six years. His grandfather was born in Virginia, and moved to Ohio County, Ky.; died at the age of sixty-five years in Ohio County. Charlotte (Stevens) Monroe, the wife of John J. Monroe, died in 1881, at the age of forty-nine years, leaving eight children, of which number the subject of our sketch is the fourth. His grandfathers, Andrew Monroe and Henry Stevens, were both natives of Ohio County, Ky. John H. is politically a Democrat, and takes a strong position in favor of temperance. He was born in 1861.

MRS. NANCY I. MONTAGUE, Ohio County, is the widow of Archibald P. Montague, who was born in Granville County, N. C., February 1, 1831; removed to Kentucky at the age of twenty years, and passed the remainder of his life in Warren, Logan and Ohio Counties of this State. Prior to his death, which occurred in April, 1881, he was a leading merchant of Cromwell. He was an intelligent, enterprising and thorough business man, and was an extensive dealer and farmer. Mrs. Montague is the youngest daughter of Joseph and Altah (Miller) Leach, both sincere and devout Christians; her father was a Methodist class leader, and stood high in the community. He was a native of Maryland, born in 1796, and died in 1864. Her mother was born in 1795, and died August 11, 1865. Mrs. Montague was born in Cromwell Precinct, December 7, 1832, and was educated in the common school of that place. She is blessed with six children: Charles C., a merchant of Delaware, Daviess County; Aralta, wife of Cicero Sutton, of Fordsville, now editor of the Breckinridge News; Joseph Samuel, in business with his brother at Delaware; Archibald A., Edwin Asbury and Willie Cartwright. Mrs. Montague owns a beautiful home in the town of Cromwell, overlooking the Green River. She is a consistent member of the Baptist Church, as was also her husband, he having been a deacon in the same church.

JOHN WILSON MOORE was born January 15, 1839, in Morgantown, Butler Co., Ky. The parents of our subject were natives of Virginia, and were of Irish descent. The mother died in 1861, leaving a family of eight children, our subject being the third. The father survived until 1866, and died in Butler County. John W. Moore had no advantages of early education until the age of eighteen; he assisted in the farm work at home during the summer season, spending a short time at such schools as the county afforded in the winter months. At eighteen he engaged as clerk in a dry goods store, where he remained for several years, and at the beginning of the civil war in 1861, joined the army; enlisted in Company C, Eleventh Kentucky Volunteers; after a service of eight months was discharged by reason of general disability for the service; came home and resumed farming, which he continued until 1881; then took a mail route between Beaver Dam, Ohio County, and Rochester, Butler County, which has held for four years, in which time he has failed on but four trips and never was behind time. He superintends his farm, which is operated by his son. His first purchase of land was in 1867; sold out in 1878, and settled on the farm of 100 acres where he now resides, forty acres of which are under cultivation, and improved with good fencing, dwelling, barns and orchard. April 6, 1863, he married Eliza Jane Brown, of Ohio County; to their union eight children have been born, six of whom are living: James L., Mary A., Kittie A., Julia B., Minnie and Anna L. Those deceased are Maggie J. and Gabrielle T.; the second and fifth. Mr. and Mrs. Moore are active and consistent members of the Christian Church. The son, James L., is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Mr. Moore is a Republican.

ROBERT Y. MOREHEAD was born in Muhlenburgh County, Ky., November 19, 1858, and is a son of John W. Morehead, Jr., who was also born in Muhlenburgh County, Ky., in 1831. He was a practicing physician for some twenty-eight years, and was also engaged in agricultural pursuits. He married Mary E., daughter of J. M. D. and Sarah A. (Roark) Martin, of Greenville, Ky., who was born in 1837, and is yet living. To this union were born Robert Y., Sarah A. (Stokes), Alfred H., Nannie E. (deceased), and Minnie. Dr. John W. Morehead, Jr., departed this life June 27, 1882. His father, John W. Morehead, Sr., was born in Virginia in 1801, and removed to Kentucky when a young man, where he died in 1831. He was the son of Henry Morehead, a native of Ireland. Robert Y. Morehead received a good business education in youth. He grew to manhood in his native county, and in 1880 removed to Rockport, Ohio County, where he has since resided. In 1882 he embarked in the hotel business at Rockport, in which he has met with encouraging success. To this he has recently added the grocery trade, at which he is also doing a flourishing business. He married Bettie, daughter of Jacob A. and Sue W. (Martin) Anthony, of Ohio County, Ky.; she was born May 26, 1861. One daughter gladdens their home—Ora Belle. Mr. Morehead is a member of the K. of H., and in politics a Democrat.

JOHN P. MORTON, Ohio County, is a son of Jesse and Sally (Paxton) Morton; the former was born in Ohio County about 1815, and died in 1845; the latter was born in 1820, reared in Ohio County, and died in 1843. Both grandparents, Thomas Morton and Sally Paxton, were natives of Virginia, and immigrated at an early day to Ohio County. John P. Morton was brought up by his uncle, Richard L. Morton. His early advantages for securing an education were limited, but by his own indefatigable efforts, he has placed himself among the solid men of the county. He enlisted in Company B, Seventeenth Kentucky Federal Infantry, and served his country faithfully three years. He was engaged in the battles of Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Missionary Ridge, Chickamauga and many others. He was always with his regiment, and always ready for duty; an honorable, trustworthy and gallant soldier. After leaving the army, May 20, 1866, he was married to Ella Austin, youngest daughter of Thomas O. Austin. She was born in Hartford Precinct, January 31, 1850. They have seven children: Thomas J., Jasper, Luelva, Lida, Berta, Laura and Fannie. Mr. Morton owns 135 acres of good land, on which is located a coal mine. He is justice of the peace, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, a stanch Republican, and an intelligent and influential citizen.

JAMES S. MORTON, M. D., was born in Hartford, Ky., May 24, 1828. His father, Isaac Morton, came to this county with his parents from Maryland when a child; was reared here, and for many years was in mercantile business in Hartford. His wife was Sarah H. (Shanks) Morton, of Bullitt County, Ky. James S. was the third child in a family of ten children. At twenty years of age he began the study of medicine, and eight months later attended the Louisville Medical College, graduating therefrom in 1850. He located in Mount Vernon, Ill., where he practiced two years. He then went to California, and engaged in mining interests and the practice of his profession for seven years. He then came to Livermore, Ky., and practiced till September 22, 1861, when he, with two others, raised Company C, Ninth Kentucky Infantry, Confederate service. He was commissioned second lieutenant, and was afterward elected captain of cavalry, but resigned, went into the ranks; was then appointed assistant surgeon, and was again commissioned lieutenant. He served till the close of the war; participated in the battle of Chickamauga, Atlanta campaign, etc. At the close of the war he resumed the practice of his profession at Hartford, Ky., where he has since remained. He is now, and has been for ten years past, county physician, and is a member of the board of health.

TIMOLEON MORTON, Ohio County.

This section contains many fine large farms, owned and occupied by men of education and intelligence, whose enterprise and influence raise farming to a profession. Prominent among this class is Mr. Morton; he owns a beautiful home and a farm of 170 acres of land, two miles northwest of Cromwell. He was born in this county in 1834, and educated in the common schools, and at the seminary and college at Hartford. He was under the tutorship of Prof. Frank Griffin, one of Kentucky's best teachers. His father, Richard L. Morton, was born February 6, 1801, and died February 23, 1872. His mother, whose maiden name was Fanny Stroud, was born March 26, 1806, and died February 3, 1860. They were industrious and enterprising people, who accumulated a fine property, and became leading and influential citizens. Mr. Morton was married, in 1869, to Charlotte C. Turner, a daughter of Dr. Southall Turner, now deceased. Mrs. Morton was born in Greenville, Muhlenburgh County, June 25, 1848, but was brought up in Ohio County. Mr. Morton enlisted in an independent company, First Kentucky Cavalry, which was consolidated with Col. Helm's command, who was afterward brigadier-general and commander of the division. He followed the fortunes of his command under Wheeler and Gen. Forrest and Wade Hampton, until the close of the war. When Jeff Davis left Richmond, his regiment was called to assist in escorting the president of the Confederacy through the South. At Washington, Ga., Mr. Davis left his escort, and two or three days afterward was captured by the Federal troops. Mr. Morton has been deputy sheriff; has followed the lumber business some years, and now, after a residence of twelve years on his present farm, is one of the most prominent and wealthy farmers in the county.

DAVID MORTON, Ohio County, was born December 20, 1842, in Owensboro, Ky., where he was reared to manhood; removed to Memphis, Tenn., in 1861; enlisted in 1862, in Company A, First Kentucky Confederate Cavalry; was captured on Morgan's raid in Ohio, and remained a prisoner of war eighteen months, and served in the cause until the surrender of the Southern armies. He was an escort to Jefferson Davis in his flight while in North and South Carolina. His father, David Morton, Sr., a native of Maryland, became a successful merchant at Hartford, Ky.; was among the first to engage in the mercantile business at Owensboro, and died in 1858, aged about seventy-two years; he was the son of Richard Morton, of Maryland. David, Sr., married Margaret Daniel; she was born in Hardinsburgh, Ky., and died about 1844, at the age of forty years. To their union were born William, Mary, Sarah (Compton), James D., Margaret (Owen), Emma (Priest), Samuel and David (our subject). David Morton was favored with an excellent education, and is still a student and reading man. He was married, February 27, 1867, to Melvina, daughter of Eilbeck and Lucy (McFarlen) Barron, of Daviess County, Ky.; she was born July 4, 1845, and to her and husband have been born the following named children: Emma Priest (deceased), Lucy Barron, Margaret, David and Belle Griffith. Mr. Morton was, for many years, employed as a clerk on the river, and was three years engaged in merchandising. In 1877 he located at Sulphur Springs, Ohio County, and is now proprietor of the White Sulphur Springs Hotel, at this famous health resort. He is superintendent and one of the owners of these medicinal springs. He is also acting in the capacity of deputy clerk. In religion, Mr. Morton is a Baptist. He is also a member of the Masonic fraternity, and in politics a stalwart Democrat.

LOUIS C. MORTON was born in Ohio County, Ky., January 24, 1850, and is a son of Thomas R. and Nancy B. (Rhoades) Morton, natives of Ohio and Muhlenburgh Counties, Ky., respectively. Thomas R. Morton was educated in his native county, and married in Muhlenburgh County. In early life he learned the blacksmith and gunsmith trades, which he followed, in connection with farming, all his life. He was, for several years, deputy sheriff of Ohio County. His death occurred February 12, 1875, in his sixty-fifth year. He belonged to no church, but was a member of the Masonic fraternity. Louis C. Morton received a good common school education in youth, and was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority. He then bought a farm near Centretown, upon which he still resides, and where he has been extensively and successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits and stock-raising. He also owns and operates one of the best coal banks in the county. Nos. 11 and 12 here coming together, give him a solid vein of coal nine feet thick. He was married, October 21, 1873, to Mary A. Rowe, a native of Ohio County, Ky. One son has blessed their union: Erni M. Mr. Morton and wife are devoted and consistent members of the United Baptist Church. In politics, he is a Democrat.

JUDGE BENJAMIN NEWTON was born

April 8, 1831, in Washington County, Mo. When two years of age he moved with his father's family to Ohio County, Ky., where, by attending the district school and studying at home, he secured a fair education. Living on a farm, he acquired a knowledge of farming, which he began on his own account when twenty years of age. He now owns 220 acres of land, 170 acres of which are under cultivation, principally devoted to corn and tobacco. December 23, 1852, he was united in marriage with Helen Mary Chinn, of Ohio County, a daughter of Elijah and Elizabeth (Smith) Chinn, by whom he had four children, two of whom—Elizabeth, wife of Samuel J. Richerson, and Frances, wife of John Blair—are now living. Judge Newton is a Baptist, and his wife a member of the Christian Church. Mr. Newton was orderly-sergeant in Company I, Tenth Kentucky Confederate Mounted Infantry, and was with John Morgan's command in their celebrated Christmas raid on the Louisville & Nashville Railroad. He was taken prisoner in Cumberland County, Ky., and, after being exchanged, returned to service; was in the battle of Missionary Ridge with the First Kentucky Infantry Brigade; again joined Morgan, and was, on the 9th of June, 1864, cut off at Mount Sterling, Ky., and in October, 1864, he took the oath of allegiance at Louisville, Ky.; returned home, never having really desired to enter the service. Politically, he is a Democrat; for twelve years was county magistrate, and four years county judge. Since 1870 he had advocated prohibition, though subordinating it to his political views. The paternal grandfather of Judge Newton was William Newton, who moved from Virginia to Daviess County, Ky., about 1812. His maternal grandfather was Capt. Benjamin Fields, a Virginian, who came, when a young man, to Danville, Ky., and there married Mildred Slaughter, again moving, about 1790, to Daviess County. He acquired a large amount of property throughout the State, and was sheriff of Ohio County before Daviess was cut off. He had eight children, Elizabeth being the first white child born in Daviess County; she married Col. William Newton, of Daviess County, Ky. The father of Benjamin Newton, James Newton, was born in Culpeper County, Va., and there lived until the age of eighteen, when, being apprenticed to his brother-in-law, Simmons, he removed, in 1805, to Bourbon County, Ky., and worked at the millwright trade until 1813, when he enlisted in the war of 1812, and was adjutant to his regiment, which was stationed near Detroit. Soon after the close of the war he went to his father, in Daviess County, Ky., where he remained until 1816, when, with his brothers, William and Jesse, he went to Ohio County, where they bought 1,000 acres of land on Rough Creek, now known as the old Newton Mill site, and erected a saw and grist-mill, he running the mill for seven years, when his health failed. He went to Washington County, Mo., and for six years engaged in mining; he then returned to Kentucky and went to farming, which he continued until his death. He was, for many years, magistrate of the county. In 1817 he was married to Frances Field, a daughter of Capt. Ben. Field (whose sketch is given in connection with Charles L. Field). By her he had twelve children, as follows: Louisa (now dead), first wife of Thomas S. Marshall, who now lives in Marshall County; Mildred F. (now dead), wife of William Wells, of Shelby County; Jesse (now dead), of Ohio County; Dr. James F., of Bardstown, Ky., Edwin (now dead), of Ohio County; Benjamin (our subject), Washington County, Mo.; Martha (now dead), wife of William Turner, of Virginia; Dr. Isaac, of Arkansas; Franklin, a Presbyterian minister, of Ohio County; Sarah S., wife of John McCormick, of Ohio County; Emma, wife of W. P. Ewell, of Daviess County, and Elizabeth, wife of B. F. Graves, of Ohio County. Mr. Newton and his first wife were members of the Baptist Church. His second wife was the widow of Pe Rote, of Henderson County; she was a Catholic. He died in January, 1867.

GEORGE W. NEWTON, born in Bowling Green, Ky., February 22, 1859, is the son of Hiram and Calline Kite Newton, who had a family of sixteen, he being the twelfth child. His parents died in 1865, both in the same week, of flux disease, leaving him when but five years old. His mother's request was that his aunt, Martha Smith, of Hardin County, Ky., should take and keep him until of age. He lived with her up to 1869, when she died. He then returned to Bowling Green and entered college for six years, living with his brothers at that place. After his career in college his health was very poor. He next went to the country and worked on the farm for three years, and in 1880 came to Cromwell, Ky., where he bought out a drug store from Dr. Patterson and was captivated by one of Cromwell's intelligent young ladies, and March 27, 1884, he was married to Souri Tilford, daughter of W. G. Tilford. His mother, Calline Kite, born in Warren County, Ky., in 1810; his father, Hiram Newton, in 1801, was a farmer, and well educated.

SOURI TILFORD NEWTON was born in Grayson County, Ky., March 10, 1862, and in 1863 was brought to Cromwell, Ohio County, Ky. Her parents being landlord and lady, she was reared from infancy in their hotel at Cromwell until March 15, 1882; then moved in the country on a farm a mile from town, making her home in town during winter seasons; was educated at Cromwell schools, and in January, 1881, was fascinated by George W. Newton, their introduction being a very romantic one. She was the seventh of sixteen children, and March 27, 1884, at 8:30 o'clock, P. M., she was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to George W. Newton. There were eighteen in family—all are deceased except nine. Her mother, Mary Elizabeth Sublet, was born in Green County, Ky., March 18, 1836; then moved to Warren, where she lived until her marriage to W. G. Tilford, who was born in Missouri, September 20, 1830, and in 1831 moved to Grayson, Ky., and on April 28, 1851, was married to Mary Elizabeth Sublet; then moved to Cromwell, where he still lives. He is farm man, log man and tobacco merchant; they never knew sorrow until death entered their home, and took heir beloved mother from them; she died October 11, 1884, leaving husband and eight children to mourn their loss.

MRS. CATHARINE O'BRIEN, Ohio County, is the sixth daughter of Jeremiah and Mary Donnelly, and was born in the south of Ireland, county of Tipperary, July 20, 1833. Her father died in Ireland, in 1839; her mother died in 1842, while visiting her son, John R. Donnelly, a well known contractor of St. Louis. The members of her father's family were Eliza, wife of William Currin; Mary, wife of Thomas Kavanagh; Ellen, wife of William Kenrick; Hanora, wife of J. P. Hoolohan, a contractor in St. Louis; Bridget, wife of John Hickey, a contractor of the same city; Jeremiah, mason and stone-cutter, and Edward R. Donnelly, a well known marble-cutter, residing at Hartford, Ohio Co., Ky. Mrs. O'Brien was married, January 18, 1849, to Michael O'Brien, who was also born in Ireland, in 1823, and was for many years a prominent contractor and builder. He immigrated to Lynchburgh, Va., in 1857, and became a railroad contractor. At the close of the war, in 1865, he moved his family to Mount Sterling, Ky., and took a contract for railroad bridges at Richmond, Ky. He finally made his home at McHenry, in October, 1872, and while fulfilling a contract on the Cincinnati Southern Railroad, in the endeavor to save the life of a friend, he received a fatal blow, October 18, 1873. He was a master mechanic of good education, and well known for his generous qualities. Mr. and Mrs. O'Brien were blessed with nine children: Jeremiah, a miner, married Lydia Morris, who died and left one daughter; John, also a miner, married Sytha Pender (deceased), left three children; David, machinist, in East St. Louis, married to Mary Sharp; William S., deceased; Ellen, wife of William Gallagher, has five children; Edward, now in Washington Territory; Lizzie, deceased; Michael, a miner; Belle Katie, wife of E. F. Render, of whom mention is elsewhere made. After her husband's death, Mrs. O'Brien took charge of the boarding house for the McHenry coal mines, which business she continued nearly five years. She is a member of the Catholic Church, and a lady of many Christian virtues, of great industry and energy.

JAMES A. PARK was born April 7, 1838, in Ohio County, Ky., and is a son of John F. and Nancy (Anderson) Park. The father came with his parents to Kentucky in 1836 from Allegheny County, Penn. He was a school-teacher by profession; when a young man went to Indiana, where he married; returned to Kentucky and taught school until his death November 19, 1876. His widow is still living. Both the paternal and maternal grandfathers of James A. were in the Revolution; the first, Joseph Park, with Washington, and the latter, —— Anderson, on his staff. James A. Park was given a good education under his father's tuition, and taught school for ten years, after becoming of age. In March, 1863, he enlisted as private in Company D, Twenty-sixth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and served until the close of the war; he participated in the battles of Nashville, Saltville (Va.) and other sanguinary contests. In 1876 he was appointed government guager and storekeeper, and held the office four years. Since 1876 he has given his attention to farming and lumber business. He owns 710 acres in four farms, a good per cent of cleared and fertile land, under cultivation. Mr. Park was united in marriage with Josephine Craig, January 25, 1859, which union has been blessed with thirteen children. He is a strong temperance man, a Republican, and as such was elected magistrate. He and family are members of the Methodist Church.

WILLIAM H. H. PARK brother of James Park, whose sketch is given, was born January 30, 1841, in Ohio County. He received a good literary training under his father, and began the study of medicine, but at the breaking out of the late civil war, he enlisted in Company K, Thirty-fifth Kentucky Mounted Volunteer Infantry; was sergeant of his company, and after serving sixteen months was honorably discharged, when he returned home and has since given his attention to farming, now owning a fine farm of 217 acres, which he is rapidly improving. He married Hannah Jane Lintley, of Ohio County, Ky., October 23, 1873. They are the parents of four children: Mary M., Viola G., John L., James C. He is a Republican and favors local option. Mrs. Park isa Methodist.

JONATHAN H. PATTERSON, Ohio County, was born in Spencer County, Ky., December 16, 1816, and is a son of Jonathan and Rebecca (LaPhawn) Patterson, the former a native of Pennsylvania, and the latter of Kentucky, and of Irish and French descent, respectively. When a young man, Jonathan Patterson came from Pennsylvania to Kentucky, where he was afterward married. Soon after that event he bought wild land in Spencer County, Ky., where he subsequently improved a farm, upon which he resided for many years. In 1854 he sold out and removed to Muhlenburgh County, Ky., where he bought another farm upon which he resided until his death which occurred on his seventy-sixth birthday. He was a member of Dunker's Church, and his wife of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. His father, William Patterson, was a veteran of the Revolutionary war, having served under Gen. Washington in that struggle, in one of the battles of which he received a severe wound. Jonathan H. Patterson received such a common school education as the times afforded. He was employed on his father's farm, until he attained his majority, after which he was employed as a laborer on a farm for about eight years. He then bought a partially improved farm of 100 acres, upon which he still resides, near Condit's Ferry, now Point Pleasant. He was married in 1847, to Mary O. Mathues, a native of Spencer County, Ky. Mr. Patterson and wife are members of the United Baptist Church. Politically he is a Democrat.

LANGSTON M. PATTERSON, Ohio County, was born in Spencer County, Ky., August 15, 1831 and is a son of Archibald and Deborah (Bridewell) Patterson, a sketch of whom will be found elsewhere in this volume. Langston M. Patterson received a common school education, and remained on his father's farm until he reached his majority, after which he farmed on his wife's place in Jefferson County, Ky., for four years; he then bought a farm in McLean County, remaining four years. In 1866 he sold his farm in McLean County and came to Point Pleasant, Ohio County, where he engaged in general merchandising and in the tobacco trade, erecting a large stemmery at that place. After about twelve years he discontinued the mercantile business but still continued the tobacco business in connection with farming, owning a well improved farm, near Point Pleasant, of about 180 acres. He was married May 16, 1854, to Susan A. Farnsley, a native of Jefferson County, Ky. Two sons and two daughters have blessed their union: Bion M., Ada L., Ethel M. and Leon L. Mr. Patterson is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. In politics he is a Democrat.

BEVERLY N. PATTERSON, M. D., was born in Logan County, Ky., August 7, 1834. His father, Robert Patterson, was also a native of Logan County; was born in 1802, and died in September 1864; he married Elizabeth Simmons; who still lives in Logan County on the old Patterson homestead. The grandfather of our subject was Robert Patterson, a native of Ireland, born in Londonderry in 1760, and immigrated to America and made his home in Virginia, in 1774. Later he removed to Logan County, Ky., thence to McCracken County, where he died in October, 1834. In the war of 1812–14, he served as a volunteer on the Canadian frontier, and later commanded a company in the battle of New Orleans, and afterward rose through merit to the rank of colonel. Dr. B. N. Patterson, at the age of eighteen, took up the profession of teaching, reading medicine at the same time; this he continued for five years, then, by reason of failing health gave up teaching, and went to Texas, where he continued his medical reading until 1861. In 1864 he completed the medical course in the University of Kentucky, at Louisville, and at once commenced practice in Ohio County, Ky. Since 1864 he has followed his profession in connection with trading in tobacco and superintending his farm of 225 acres of well improved land, lying in Ohio County. April 6, 1865, he was united in marriage with Agnes Gentry, of Ohio County. Their marriage has been blessed with three children: Ara E., Solon N. and Minnie E. His wife is a member of the Baptist faith; one daughter is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Dr. Patterson is a member of Cromwell Lodge No. 420, of the A. F. & A. M., and has passed all the honors. In politics Dr. Patterson is a Democrat.

GEORGE W. PATTERSON, Ohio County, was born in Bullitt County, Ky., January 25, 1840, and is a son of Archibald and Deborah (Bridewell) Patterson, natives of Kentucky, of Irish and French descent, respectively. Archibald Patterson was married in Spencer County, and after that event he bought wild land in the same county, where he commenced to improve a farm. Soon afterward, however, he lost the farm through a defective title. He then removed to Meade County, Ky., where he bought a farm upon which he resided for several years, when he sold out and removed to Jefferson County, Ky., remaining three years. In March, 1855, he came to Ohio County and bought a farm near Point Pleasant, upon which he resided until his death in August, 1876, in his sixty-seventh year. He was to some extent engaged in the live-stock trade, having, in early life driven two droves of horses and mules to Georgia; he also taught school in early life. He and wife were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. George W. Patterson received a fair common school education and was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority, after which he leased and rented lands for four years. He then bought a partially improved farm of 160 acres, near Point Pleasant, upon which he still resides, and where he is extensively engaged in aggricultural pursuits. The farm is now well improved, he also owns valuable property in Dallas, Tex. He was married, December 25, 1866, to Rebecca A. Patterson, a native of Spencer County, Ky. One son and one daughter gladden their home—Effie D. and Elio T. Mr. and Mrs. Patterson have been for many years members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in which he has held various official positions. He is a Democrat.

DR. JOHN WILLIAM PATTON was born December 23, 1835, in Daviess County, Ky., and is the eldest of ten children born to Thornton and Rebecca (Jones) Patton, both natives of Virginia. Thornton Patton, in 1805, the year of his birth, was brought to Kentucky, by his parents, John and Delilah (Vance) Patton, who settled in Allen County, where they resided until their death. In 1830 Thornton Patton came to Ohio County, and engaged in the distilling business with his brother, John Patton. Here he married the daughter of James and Sallie (Sims) Jones, and soon after removed to Indiana; returning, settled in Ohio County where he died. At seventeen, Dr. J. W. Patton began working at the wheelwright trade, which he continued until his marriage with Malinda Hoover, December 7, 1859. He then engaged in farming and rafting on Rough Creek and Green River, at which he lost his health. He then studied medicine and managed the farm. He took a course of lectures at Louisville University and graduated in 1875, and practiced and farmed since. In business matters he has been very successful, having by personal efforts acquired a fine farm of 237 acres and other valuable property. Dr. and Mrs. Patton have six children living: Cicero M., Sarah F., James L., Mary A., Delilah A. and Clayton A. The Doctor is a Baptist and in politics a Democrat.

JAMES H. PATTON was born February 22, 1839, in this county, and is the third of a family of ten children born to Thornton and Rebecca (Jones) Patton. The father was born in Allen County, Ky., a son of John Patton, a native of Virginia, who came to Kentucky in 1800. The mother, when eleven years old, came with her father, James Jones' family to Kentucky; she died January 28, 1882, and her husband December 30, 1884. They were members of the United Baptist Church. Our subject has been a farmer since boyhood. When of age he worked out by the month, and worked for others for some nine years. With his earnings he bought a small farm which he improved, then sold out and bought his present farm consisting of eighty acres of fertile land, principally under cultivation. He was married to Miss Lucy C. Coleman, October 27, 1870, daughter of Frank and Sarah E. (Bennett) Coleman, of Ohio County. By this union they have one child—Ada R. Mr. Patton is a Mason, and in politics a Democrat. His wife is a Methodist.

JOEL PAYTON, Ohio County, was born October 3, 1835, in Grayson County, Ky., where he grew to manhood, and in 1880 removed to Ohio County, his present place of residence. His father, Samuel Payton, was born in 1815, in Grayson County, and is still living there. He is the son of Elisha Payton, of Virginia, a Revolutionary soldier in Gen. Green's command, who died in Grayson County, in 1840. Samuel married Elizabeth, daughter of Edward and Ruthie (Harrel) Deweese, of Grayson County; born in 1817, died in 1882, and from their union sprang Joel, Ellen (Young), Eliza A. (Young), Harriet (Young), Gracie (Young), Ruthie (Young), Isaac, Mary (Wilson), Virgil J., Julia A. (Green) and Eveline. Joel Payton was married, December 22, 1859, to Jane E., daughter of William and Susana (Shane) Patterson, of Grayson County, born July 5,

Jno E. Pendleton M.D.

1838, and to them have been born William T., Samuel H., Robert B., Henrietta, John W., Elizabeth, Joel H., Daniel B. and Mollie. Mr. Payton is a farmer, having sixty-three acres of good land in fair condition. In politics he is a Democrat.

WILLIAM DAWSON PEMBERTON, of Ohio County, was born December 16, 1847, in Ohio County, Ky. At the age of eleven years moved with his parents to Green County, where he grew to manhood, and in 1869, returned to Ohio County, where he has since resided. His father, John Y. Pemberton, a native of Green County, was born March 9, 1822, and died April 5, 1860. He was the son of Lewis Pemberton, who died about 1852. John Y. married Mary A., daughter of John and Sallie (Wright) Smith, of Green County; she was born August 9, 1826, and died September 24, 1874, and their union was blessed by the birth of William D., John S. and James T. In youth, William D. received a common school education. He was married April 12, 1872, to Talitha, daughter of Green C. and Mary (Payne) Wilcoxson, of Green County, born July 3, 1850, and to them one son—Noah Lee—was born, March 10, 1873. Mr. Pemberton is a farmer, owning 120 acres of well-improved land, in good condition and in a high state of cultivation. Mr. P. is a Democrat. Mrs. Pemberton is a member of the Methodist Church.

DR. JOHN E. PENDLETON, a lineal descendant of one of the oldest and most respected families of Virginia, was born September 1, 1831, in Washington County, Ky. His paternal grandparents, John and Sarah (Banks) Pendleton, came to Kentucky from Culpeper County, Va., in 1780, and located in Lincoln County. The children of these grandparents were Micajah, Tinsley, Richard, James and four girls, one of whom, Malinda, married Thomas Scott, of Pendleton County, Ky. Micajah lived and died at Independence, Mo., at the age of eighty-two. His children were Frank Pendleton, now deceased, and three daughters. Tinsley lived and died in Lincoln County; James now resides at Independence, Mo., and is more than eighty years of age, and is the father of twelve sons, all now grown, and respected citizens of Jackson County, Mo. The four daughters all lived and died in Kentucky. Dr. Richard, father of the subject of this sketch, began the practice of medicine in Washington County, Ky., in 1829, and in 1833 moved to Henry County, and died in the same year from over exertion in behalf of those afflicted with cholera. His age was twenty-six years. He was a member of the Methodist Church. Sarah Banks Pendleton, the grandmother, lived to the advanced age of ninety-six years. John Pendleton, the grandfather, was descended (as is proved by Rev. Philip Slaughter in his History of St. Mark's Parish, Culpeper County, Va.), from Dr. Pendleton, who, with his brother, an Episcopal minister, came from England in 1640, and settled in Virginia. Rev. Slaughter connects the Pendleton with the Virginia families, Spottswood, Slaughter, Strother, Taylor, Gaines, Carpenter, Preston and Garnett. Dr. John E. Pendleton, who was but two and one-half years of age at the death of his father, returned with his mother and only sister, Naomi (now wife of Dr. H. C. Allin), to the residence of his maternal grandfather, Maj. Ed Berry, of Washington County, where he continued to reside until twenty years of age. His mother, Mary Berry Pendleton, died at the age of thirty-three years, when he was but seventeen years of age. While in Washington County Dr. Pendleton obtained a fair education, Prof. Boyle having been his preceptor at one time. At twenty years of age he removed to Hartford, Ohio Co., Ky., and began the study of medicine with Dr. William J. Berry, his maternal uncle. He then attended the medical university of Louisville, from which school he graduated in 1854, and immediately began the practice of medicine at Hartford, and, in 1857, took two terms of medicine at Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia, and resumed the practice of medicine in 1861. In the fall of the same year he raised a company of soldiers in Ohio and Muhlenburgh Counties, and entered the Confederate service as their captain in the Ninth Regiment, First Kentucky Brigade. He was soon promoted to surgeon of the regiment, and successively as surgeon of the brigade, and chief surgeon of Gen. John C. Breckinridge's command. When Gen. Breckinridge became secretary of war he was placed with Gen. William T. Martin's division, and was shortly afterward appointed medical adviser in Lieut.-Gen. Wheeler's corps with which he remained until the close of the war. During these years he served as surgeon upon the fields of Shiloh, Corinth, Vicksburgh, Baton Rouge, Stone River, Shelbyville, Farmington, Atlanta, New Market, Strawberry Plains, etc. He was with Wheeler in his march, following Sherman to the sea. He surrendered at Charlottesville, N. C., with the regiment, in 1865. He returned home immediately, and began the practice of medicine at Hartford. His residence at Hartford, known as Hillside, is a handsome brick structure in the suburbs, in a large yard beautifully ornamented with shrubbery. Dr. Pendleton is a Royal Arch Mason, and a member of I. O. O. F., holding chief offices in both orders; is a member of the McDowell Medical Association, American Medical Association, and Medical Examining Board of the district. March 1, 1855, he married Margaret, daughter of John G. and Emily A. Nall, of Hartford. John G. Nall was born in Washington County, Ky., in 1809, and is closely related to the Nalls in Hardin and Nelson Counties. He died in 1856. Emily A. Nall was the daughter of Charles Henderson, who was for fifty years circuit and county clerk of Ohio County, Ky. Charles Henderson was born in Virginia in 1781, and was closely related to Thomas Jefferson. He died in 1871 at the age of ninety years. His children were Beverly, Emily A., Jennette, John, James, Elizabeth, Thomas and Gabrielle, all now deceased but James and Jennette. The children of John G. Nall and Emily A. Nall are Laura, wife of Frank J. McLean, both now deceased; Margaret, first wife of Dr. Pendleton; Charles G., at one time clerk of Dixon County court; Eugene, residing at Jeffersonville, Ind.; Ida, present wife of Dr. Pendleton, and John B. Nall, editor Farmer's Home Journal, Louisville, Ky. The children of John E. and Margaret Pendleton are Laura Gray, wife of Howard Gray, of Louisville, Ky.; Mary, wife of H. P. Taylor, of Hartford; Charles M. Pendleton, an attorney at the Hartford bar; John E. and Eugene Banks, who are together in Cherokee, Kas., in the drug business. In July, 1869, Margaret Pendleton died, and in 1871 Dr. Pendleton married Ida a younger sister of his first wife. Tula is their only child.

JOHN WILLIAM PETTY, Ohio County, was born May, 1831, in Henderson County, Ky., where he grew to manhood, and in 1858 removed to Ohio County; in 1871 to Sedgewick City, Kas.; in 1874 to Bell County, Tex., and in 1883 returned to Ohio County, Ky., where he has since resided. His father, Francis M. Petty, a native of Cumberland County, Ky., was born in 1803, and died in 1862. He was the son of Capt. Francis Petty, seven years a Revolutionary soldier, and commissary of Gen. Washington's Army, who presented him a Royal Arch masonic apron, now in the possession of the family. He died in 1848, in Ohio County, aged one hundred and two years. Francis M. married Lucy, daughter of Benjamin and Mary (Bugg) Wall, of Henderson County, Ky., born in 1810, and died in 1858. To them were born John William, Ottaway S., Benjamin P., Henry C., Mary J. (Tate), Sarah A. E. (Chambers), and Angelina D. (Day). John William Petty was married January 9, 1858, to Nancy, daughter of James and Sallie (Leach) Gentry, of Ohio County, born in March, 1842, and from this union sprang Alonzo and Francis M. Mr. Petty is a farmer, having 111 acres of good land in a high state of cultivation. In politics he is identified with the Democratic party.

FRANCIS M. PHARIS, Ohio County, was born December 8, 1842, in Jackson County, Tenn., where he grew to manhood, and in the war of 1865 removed to Ohio County, Ky., where he has since resided. His father, Isham Pharis, a native also of Jackson County, Tenn., died in 1857, aged fifty-one years. He was the son of James Pharis of Virginia, a soldier in the war of 1812, who died in 1840, aged about seventy years. Isham married Adeline Sanderford; she died in 1854, and their children are Shelby, Jackson, Warren, Francis M., Sampson, Elizabeth (Burgis), Martha (Keeth) and Janie (Cale). Francis M. was married October 3, 1863, to Leetha, daughter of George W. and Lucinda (Willoughby) Wade, of Jackson County, Tennessee; she was born July 4, 1843; to them have been born Taswell (deceased) Oreann L. (Mason), Luella, Cineler A. Isham, James S., Martha J., and Lucinda A. Mr. Pharis owns his farm of 111 acres of fair land. He is a carpenter and cabinet-maker of unusual skill, and his residence is furnished with fittings of his own ornate handiwork, that are matters of pleasure and surprise to the beholder. Mr. Pharis is a licentiate in the United Baptist Church.

FERDINAND W. PIRTLE is a descendant of the Rev. John Pirtle, who was born in Berkeley County, Va., November 14, 1772, and who, immediately after his marriage to Amelia Fitzpatrick, of Hampshire County, Va., came to Washington County, Ky., where he brought up a large family of children. John Pirtle, in 1809, with his family, united with the Methodist Church, and the same year was licensed to preach. He was a man of vigorous mind and gained celebrity throughout the State in his calling. He took a deep interest in the education and training of his children, two of whom, the Hon. Judge Pirtle, and Rev. Claibourne Pirtle, rose to distinction in the State, and all of whom occupied influential positions in society. His son, John Pirtle, Jr., father of our subject, was born in Washington County, Ky., was given a thorough education and chose farming in preference to public life. He was twice married; his first wife was Miss Clarissa Roberts, who died leaving six children. His second marriage was to Mrs. Sallie Sublett, nee Pemberton, who bore him five children. When thirty-seven years old he moved to Ohio County, Ky., where he taught school and was county surveyor. He devoted much of his time to the building up of the Methodist Church. He died September 6, 1878. Ferdinand W., the third child of the family, was reared on the farm, and educated principally under his father's tuition. At twenty-one years of age he hired out by the month, and soon after learned the tanner's trade, and buying out his employer, continued the business, in connection with farming, about eight years, three years of this time being spent in Grayson County, Ky. He then gave his attention to farming and stock-dealing and deals on a large scale in staves and hoop-poles for the New Orleans market. He has a finely improved farm of 450 acres. March 17,1857, he was married to Miss Elizabeth Renfrew, daughter of Russell and Artemesia (Edwards) Renfrew, of Butler County, Ky. By this union, they have eleven children living, viz.: William N., Artie B. (wife of John W. Tabor), James E., Viola, John R., Eva, Paris E., Robert L., Georgie, Mattie and Henry M. Mr. and Mrs. Pirtle are members of the Methodist Church, in which he has been steward for twenty years; politically he acts with the Greenback party and favors local option.

TIMOTHY CARPENTER FROGGE PIRTLE was born in Ohio County, near Hartford, January 24, 1857, and was educated in Hartford College under the principalship of Prof. Frank Griffin, and received a liberal culture. He was brought up on a farm and removed to Cromwell in 1870, where, for a time, he again worked on a farm, but subsequently sold goods for R. J. & N. C. Daniel, and then went into business for himself. He was married July 19, 1877, to Victoria Potts, daughter of William H. and Elizabeth Potts, of Cromwell, born in February, 1859. They have three children. Mr. Pirtle is the son of John and Sally Ann Pirtle, both twice married. There were three sets of children, sixteen in all, our subject being the youngest. John Pirtle died in September, 1876, at the age of seventy-two years; he was an educated man, and had been county surveyor for twelve years. He was for many years a school teacher and was deputy sheriff under Rev. James S. Coleman, now a distinguished minister of the Baptist Church. His widow resides near South Carrollton; they were sincere and devout Christians and members of the Southern Methodist Episcopal Church, and were prominent and influential in the county. The grandfather, Rev. John Pirtle, was a pioneer missionary of the Methodist Episcopal Church, having emigrated from Virginia to Washington County about 1790. He was well known in that early day as a hard-working, self-denying, talented minister. The late Hon. Henry Pirtle, chancellor of the Louisville Chancery Court and professor in the Louisville Law School, was also his son. Mr. Pirtle owns a beautiful and costly home on one of the bluffs overlooking the town of Cromwell and the Green River. He is a man of sterling business qualities and has met with marked success in his undertakings.

COL. WILLIAM H. PORTER, Ohio County, is a son of William and Nancy Porter, the former a soldier under Harrison, at the battle of Tippecanoe, and afterward one of the first settlers of Morgantown, where he was a merchant many years in partnership with a cousin, James A. Porter, who was murdered on the Mississippi, above Natchez. Mr. Porter died at New Orleans, in 1838. Mrs. Nancy Porter died March 12, 1884, at the advanced age of eighty-six years. They had a large family, all now deceased but one brother—Egbert O. Porter, and Mrs. Permelia Taylor, both living in Ohio County. Col. Porter was born in Morgantown, September 15, 1818, and was educated in that place and Russellville, under the principalship of Marmaduke Morton, of Logansport, who was president of the bank in the same town, and now clerk of the court in Russellville. He was surveyor thirty years, and county surveyor eight years. He was married, December 20, 1838, to Hannah Lee, daughter of William and Sarah Lee, the latter one of the first settlers in Ohio County, and was some time in the old Hartford fort. Col. Porter's grandfather was Col. John Porter, who came to America from Ireland, and settled in Morgantown in 1787; he became a popular and leading citizen, and twice represented his county in the Kentucky legislature. Col. Porter served his country faithfully all through the Mexican war, being a member of Company F, Fourth Kentucky Regiment, Capt. D. C. McCrary—Col. John S. Williams —and was all through the campaign with Gen. Scott as sergeant. In the civil war he served seven months with the commission of major in the Twelfth Kentucky (Federal) Cavalry. He was crippled at that time, but saw much service afterward in the Home Guards: first as captain and finally as colonel of the regiment. He now owns a farm of fifty acres one mile and a half from Cromwell, and is well-known throughout the county. He is a fine scholar, both Latin and English. His uncle, Oliver Cromwell Porter, built the first house in Cromwell, in 1835. The town was then called Porter's Landing. This uncle also represented Butler County in the Kentucky legislature. The following incident in regard to one of the early settlers is related: James Tyler, an illiterate man, attended school with his own children, finally became county judge, and at the time of his death had the finest library in Butler County.

JOHN WALKER RAGLAND may justly be placed among the active and successful business men of Ohio County, having by industry and frugality risen from poverty to wealth. He was born March 26, 1834, in Smith County, Tenn.; removed with his parents to Butler County, Ky., and in 1860, located in Ohio County, where he has since resided. His father, James Ragland, was born in 1801, in Halifax County, Va.; removed to Smith County, Tenn., in 1833, was a life long Methodist, and died in Butler County, Ky., in 1878. He was the son of Walker Ragland, of Virginia, who died about 1815. James married Mary J., daughter of John Easley, of Halifax County, Va., born December 10, 1809, and still living, and their offspring are Susan E. (Tuck), John Walker Ragland, Lorenzo L., William H., Sarah A. (Martin), Stephen C., Mary M. (Cohron), James A., Thornton E. and Eliza J. (Turner). Mr. Ragland was married, December 11, 1855, to Anna E., daughter of John and Frances (McKinney) Herrold, of Butler County, born April 22, 1839, and to them have been born John M., Lorenzo D., Stephen M., Sallie J., Nancy J., Thomas A., Susan M., Helen, Laura B., Thornton W. and Elizabeth F. Mr. Ragland is a farmer, stock-dealer and general trader, owning fifteen farms, aggregating about 2,000 acres of fair land, and much valuable timber, and has erected one of the best farm residences in the county. He is a strong Methodist, a member of the A. F. & A. M., and in politics is identified with the Democratic party.

MOSES SMITH RAGLAND, was born January 26, 1845, in Simpson County, Ky., and at the age of seven years removed to Ohio County, where he has since resided. In 1861, he enlisted in Company B, Seventeenth Kentucky Infantry, and was mustered out of service with the regiment at the end of three years and four months. His father, Robert P. Ragland, a native of Logan County, Ky., died about 1857, at the age of forty years. He was the son of Samuel Ragland, of Virginia, and died in 1853. Robert P. espoused Sarah, daughter of Moses Caudill, of Simpson County, now living at the age of sixty-five years, and their marriage resulted in the birth of Moses S. and Mary R. (Allen). In youth Moses Smith Ragland received but a limited education, but he has since improved his opportunities, until he now successfully manages an extensive business with commendable skill. He was married November 22, 1865, to Margaret A., daughter of Walker and Minnie (Smith) Daniel, of Ohio County; born in 1850, and to them have been born Robert W., Meletta M., Ulysses G., Ida, John H., Sarah M. (deceased), Ira and Malcolm. In 1876 Mr. Ragland commenced business at Rosine, as general merchant, and, notwithstanding a loss of $5,000 by fire, has been successful. He is also engaged in dealing in leaf tobacco and general trading. In politics he is a stanch Republican.

JAMES RALEY, Ohio County, was born January 18, 1818, in Warren County, Ky., and in 1819, removed with his parents to Ohio County, where he now resides. His father, Jonathan Raley, was a native of Maryland, and came in childhood with his parents to Kentucky, where he died in 1834, at the age of fifty-six years. He was the son of John Raley, who died in Marion County, Ky. Jonathan married Nancy Cook, who was reared in Philadelphia and died in 1850, aged about sixty-six years, and from their union sprang Benjamin, Rebecca (Leach), John, Mary (Wilson), Sophrona (deceased), Nancy (Wilson), William, Elizabeth (Ward), James, Thomas, (deceased), Christiana (Adams) and Sallie (Steel). James Raley was married, August 2, 1838, to Sallie, daughter of Samuel and Winnie (Lee) Wilson, of Ohio County; she was born November 24, 1818, and their union has been blessed by the birth of Thomas B. (deceased), Jonathan S. (a Federal soldier in the late war), Mary E. (Black), James H., Hester A. (Davis) Bartinit, Sylvester B., David T., Timothy M., Sarah P. (Faught) and Julia F. Mr. Raley was a farmer until 1862, when he commenced merchandising, and in 1873, located in Rosine, and has been very successfully engaged in general merchandising and dealing in leaf tobacco. The style of the firm is now Raley & Son, the junior member, Timothy M. holding the position of postmaster. Mr. Raley has held the positions of chairman and treasurer of the board of trustees of the village since the incorporation of Rosine. In 1882, Mr. Raley suffered a loss of $4,000 (less. a partial insurance), by the burning of his store, which he immediately rebuilt, and established business again. In religion he is a Methodist Protestant, and in politics a Republican.

JOHN L. RALPH is a descendant of Thomas Ralph, who came from England and settled in Virginia, where he died. His son, John L., Sr., was bound out to a farmer, served his time, and when of age came to Henry County, Ky., and there married, and in 1827 came to Ohio County, and located in what is known as the Ralph Settlement; here he died in 1857; his widow in 1870. They were Methodists and the parents of six children—three living. John L., subject, was born October 8, 1824, in Henry County, Ky., reared on a farm, and July 10, 1845, married Matilda A. Midkiff, of Ohio County. She passed away September 26, 1855, leaving four children. February 12, 1856, he married Aera M. B. Midkiff, a sister of his first wife. To them were born four children. Mr. Ralph is one of the most successful farmers in his neighborhood, having over 900 acres of productive land with many valuable improvements, residences, orchards, hedges, etc., etc., wholly the result of indefatigable industry and careful management, and frugality of himself and wife. They have given, aside from what they now own, 400 acres to four children. They are members of the Methodist Church.

GEORGE W. REID was born in Marion County, Ky., March 10, 1845, and is a son of John and Margaret (Furgison) Reid, the former a native of Maryland, and the latter of Kentucky, both of whom were of English descent. At about the age of fourteen, in 1814, John Reid removed with his parents to what is now Marion County, Ky., then almost an unbroken wilderness. Here he was educated and married, and after attaining his majority, bought wild land, where he subsequently improved a farm, upon which he resided until 1855, when he sold out and came to Ohio County, Ky., and bought a farm near Point Pleasant, upon which he resided for several years, but afterward sold his place and made his home with his children until his death, which occurred in September, 1876, in his seventy-sixth year. He and wife were, from early childhood, members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. George W. Reid received a fair common school education in youth, and was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority. He then bought a part of the old homestead, upon which he remained about four years. In the spring of 1873 he sold the old place and bought the farm of 145 acres near Hogg's Falls, upon which he now resides, and where he is successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits, making the culture of tobacco a specialty. He was married, November 25, 1869, to Mattie A. Ross, a native of Ohio County, Ky. Two daughters bless their home: Effie M. and Gertie. Mr. Reid and wife are members of the church, he of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and she of the United Baptist. He is also a member of the Masonic fraternity. In politics he is a Democrat.

MOSBY J. REID was born in Ohio County, Ky., December 16, 1846, and is a son of Remus G. and Margaret (James) Reid, both of whom were natives of Ohio County, Ky. Remus G. Reid was educated and married in his native county, where he was engaged in farming and various mechanical pursuits until his death, which occurred February 10, 1881, in his sixty-sixth year. Mosby J. Reid received a fair common school education in youth, and was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority. He then taught during the winter and farmed during the summer season for some four years. After that he was employed as a salesman in a general store at Rockport for two years, when he engaged in the drug trade and general merchandising at the same place on his own account in company with his cousin, Sutton Reid, under the firm name of S. & M. J. Reid, which business he continued for about four years. In March, 1882, he formed a partnership in same business, at same place, with his cousin, Sutton Reid, and L. G. Haden, under the firm name of Reid, Haden & Co. They carry a well selected stock amounting to about $5,000, and their average annual sales will reach $12,000 or $13,000. They are also largely interested in the sewing machine and musical instrument business. Mr. Reid has, by his own exertions since he became a man, added constantly to his education, and is also an extensive, close and careful reader; and has for several years been a regular correspondent of both the local papers and the Courier-Journal. He was married Mary 1, 1878, to Nettie Miller, a native of Ohio County, Ky. Three children—one son and two daughters—gladden their home: Mabel, William G. and Cora. Mr. Reid belongs to no church, but is an earnest advocate of the temperance cause. In politics he is a Democrat, and is one of the enterprising and successful business men of the town and county, as well as one of its most respected citizens. Mr. Reid's paternal grandparents, James Reid, and Delila (Clutter) Reid, came from Culpeper County, Virginia, in 1803. Mr. Reid's mother's grandfather, James, and grandmother, whose maiden name was Mosby, also came from Virginia.

JOHN RENDER was born October 20, 1816, in Ohio County, where he has always resided. His father, Robert Render, Jr., a native of Culpeper County, Va., removed with his parents to Ohio County, Ky., when a young man, where he died in 1862, at the age of eighty-six years. He was the son of Robert, Sr., of Virginia, who died about 1825. Robert, Jr., married Charlotte, daughter of Joseph Barnes, of Ohio County; she died in 1844; their offspring are Millie B. (Maddox), Joseph (deceased), Sallie (Chapman), Polly (Austin), Ellen (Reid), Robert, John, Elizabeth (Mason), Joshua L. and Charlotte (Baker). Subject was married January 17, 1839, to Jane, daughter of Jonas and Sarah (Bennett) Tichenor, of Ohio County, born February 11, 1818, and this union was blessed by the birth of Robert B., Alfred M. and Lowery J. Lowery J. was born October 10, 1847, and October 1, 1875, married Laura J., daughter of Charles and Martha (Forrest) Hunter, of Ohio County; born October 20, 1855, and from this union sprang Cordelia (deceased), Ethel Ada, William C. (deceased), and Myrtie Lee. Mr. Render is a farmer, owning 230 acres of well-improved land in a good state of cultivation. He is a member of the Baptist Church and independent in politics.

JOSHUA L. RENDER, farmer and merchant. Among the earliest settlers in Ohio County, was Robert Render, a prominent and useful member of society, an influential member of the Baptist Church—with a record of forty-two years. He was born in 1775, in Virginia, in what was then known as Render's Settlement. His wife was Charlotte Barnes, a native of Maryland. Mr. Render was a notorious hunter. He had ten children, who have all passed "over the river" except the subject of this sketch, and a brother, John, also living in Ohio County. Joshua L. Render was born in the town of McHenry, November 26, 1821. His early advantages were somewhat limited, but he has acquired a good business education, and may be called a self made man. He was married on the 27th of February, 1845, to Margery Jane, second daughter of Maj. Richard M. Taylor, of Ohio County, and the issue of this marriage was six sons and five daughters: Charlotte (deceased), Vitulla (deceased), Robert T., Elijah, John C. Breckinridge, Cetha Alice, Bettie, Mary, Joseph, Henry Lee and Richard Taylor, all of whom live in the county of Ohio, and are successful farmers and respected citizens. Several years ago an extensive deposit of coal was discovered on Mr. Render's farm, for which he received a royalty, and the revenue received has been considerable. The family are members of the Baptist Church.

GEORGE W. RENDER, farmer, Ohio County, Ky., is the son of Thomas and Annie (Phipps) Render, grandson of George Render, and great-grandson of Robert Render, who immigrated to Ohio County, Ky., the latter part of last century, and were among the first settlers of this county. George Render was born near Green River, in what is now called the Rockport Precinct, in Ohio County, January 28, 1824. There were five members of his father's family, two of whom are now deceased. His father died in 1828, and his mother about 1835. Mr. Render was married March 27, 1847, to Dorcas Barnes, daughter of Weaver Barnes; she was born August 29, 1826. They have seven children: Richard, Elizabeth A. (wife of W. T. Maddox, they have a family of seven children, and reside in Texas), Elijah Franklin, of McHenry; Eliza Jane (wife of Perry D. Maddox, also of McHenry), Bell (wife of William H. Burton), Selah C. (wife of R. P. Roll, of McHenry), James W. Mrs. Render died October 3, 1883; she was an estimable lady, and a member of the Baptist Church, as is also our subject. The members of this family are well known throughout the country and are industrious and earnest people. The children are comfortably settled and are all doing well. Mr. Render originally owned 400 acres, a part of which he has since divided among his children. He has a pleasant and beautiful home, and is the principal owner of the land on which the McHenry coal mine is located. In politics, Mr. Render is a Democrat.

WILLIAM P. RENDER, was born in Ohio County, March 16, 1841, and is a son of Robert Jr., and Amelia B. (Pender) Render, both of whom were natives of Ohio County, Ky., and of English descent. Robert Render, Jr., was married soon after attaining his majority, and soon after that event he bought wild land near the present village of Centretown, where he subsequently improved the farm upon which he resided until his death, which occurred September 20, 1852, in his thirty-ninth year. He was one of the most thorough farmers in the neighborhood, and made the culture of tobacco a specialty, at which he was said to excel; on one occasion his tobacco was awarded the first premium at New Orleans. His father, Robert Render, Sr., came with his parents, who were among the earliest pioneers of Ohio County, from Virginia to Kentucky when he was only a small boy; he was, in his day, one of the wealthiest, as well as one of the leading representative men of Ohio County, owning several hundred acres of land and some forty or fifty slaves. He was a member of the United Baptist Church, and of the Gasper River Association, being moderator of the latter body for some twenty-eight years. William P. Render received a fair common school education in youth. He was employed on his father's farm until he was twenty years of age. In November, 1861, he enlisted in Company G, Seventeenth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry (Federal service), and served with that regiment in all its marches and engagements until July 12, 1862, when he was discharged on account of disability. He participated in the battle of Fort Donelson. After his return from the army he taught for a time and then farmed on his grandfather's place for one year. He then moved to the farm near Point Pleasant, where he now resides, and where he has since been successfully engaged in farming and stock raising. He now owns well-improved farms, amounting in the aggregate to some 700 acres. He served for four years as a magistrate, and, in 1883, was the Republican candidate for representative in the State legislature from Ohio County. His great grandfather, on his mother's side, was a veteran in the Revolutionary war, having served for three years and a half under the immediate command of Gen. Washington, for whom he cooked for a time. Mr. Render was married February 11, 1864, to Mary Tichenor, also a native of Ohio County. Seven sons and one daughter have been left to them. Mr. Render and wife are members of the United Baptist Church, in which he has been deacon for the past ten years. In politics he is a Republican.

ELIJAH FRANKLIN RENDER, Ohio County, Ky., was born in McHenry, March 15, 1853, and is the son of George W. and Dorcas Render, the former still living, and the latter deceased. Mr. Render received a good common school education. He was married, June 10, 1880, to Belle O'Brien, born July 7, 1865, the daughter of Michael and Catharine O'Brien, who came to McHenry when the daughter was but ten years old. She is the youngest of eleven children, eight of whom are living. Her father died in 1877. Her mother lives at McHenry. Mrs. Render is a member of the Catholic Church; they have one child—Charles E. Mr. Render is a practical miner, and the owner of the old homestead which was in possession of his father, grandfather, and great-grandfather, who emigrated from Maryland late in the eighteenth century. The biography of the father is given elsewhere, as also that of Mrs. O'Brien, mother of Mrs. Render. They are of strong temperance principles. Mr. Render has been quite successful in business.

VIRGIL RENFROW, Ohio County, may justly be placed among the most successful farmers and stock-raisers in the county. He was born October 22, 1837, in Butler County, Ky.; in 1839, removed with his parents to Grayson County where he grew to manhood, and in 1859, located near Hines' Ferry, Ohio County, where he now resides. His father Russell Renfrow, a native of Trigg County, Ky., was born in 1811; removed to Butler County in childhood and died October 8, 1884. He was the son of Mark Renfrow, who died in 1858. Russell Renfrow married Artemesia, daughter of James and Nancy (England) Edwards, of Grayson County; she was born in 1813, and died in 1862. To their union were born Edward C.; Virgil; Elizabeth (Pirtle), James M., died May 6, 1880; Mark, Nannie (Wallace), Amanda (Rowe), Sallie T. (Johnson), Nellie (Rowe), Robert, died June 2, 1882, and Mattie (Furgerson). In youth Virgil Renfrow received a good business education. He was married December 24, 1863, to Martha J., daughter of William and Julia A. (Neely) Duke, of Ohio County; she was born January 27, 1842, and to them have been born Romney, Arta A., Sallie M., Claude and Willie Pearl. Mr. Renfrow is a successful farmer and stock-raiser, owning 600 acres of well-improved and productive land, in good condition and in a very fine state of cultivation. In politics, he is identified with the Republican party.

MARK RENFROW was born March 23, 1843, in Grayson County, Ky., where he was reared to manhood, and in 1867, removed to Ohio County, where he has since resided. For genealogy, see sketch of Virgil Renfrow, in this work. Mr. Renfrow procured a common school education in youth, and has not neglected reading in later years. September 18, 1871, he was married to Mary J., daughter of Andrew and Mary L. (Miller) Crow, of Ohio County, born February 4, 1849, and their union has been blessed by the following named children: Andrew R., Sallie E., Mary and Ivan. Mr. Renfrow is a farmer, owning 320 acres of fine land in a high state of cultivation; in politics he is a Republican.

WILLIAM H. REYNOLDS was born September 7, 1834, in Caroline County, Va., and is a son of John A. and Maria F. (Brooks) Reynolds. The father and mother were both natives of the same county in Virginia. They moved to Kentucky in 1836; located in Ohio County, in the vicinity of where William H. now resides. The father was a carpenter and millwright by trade, which he followed in connection with farming. He and wife were both members of the Baptist Church, and both are deceased. They had seven children—William H. is the eldest. He was reared on a farm, and by improving the school facilities the times afforded, together with close application to home study, he has acquired a fair literary education. He left home at twenty-five years of age, bought a farm of 100 acres, all in timber, which he cleared, set out an orchard, built a house, etc., and later sold, and bought the place where he now lives. He owns 135 acres well improved, with fine house, etc. January 2, 1859, he married Mary M. Carter. They have ten children living, viz.: Frances M., Sarah A. (wife of James Morman), Anna E., Laura F., William F., Millard, Lorian, Hettie, Alford and Rosie. Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds are members of the Baptist Church, as are also their three eldest children; in this church Mr. Reynolds is a deacon. Politically he is a Democrat, and takes an interest in all public improvements.

DANIEL JAMES RHOADS, Ohio County, is the son of Riley and Nancy (Jones) Rhoads, the former a native of Muhlenburgh County; born in 1807. While yet in his infancy his parents removed to Warrick, Ind., where they settled among the Indians. About the close of the last century, his great-grandfather came to Hartford, Ohio County, and assisted in building the first fort established there, and was engaged in many Indian wars. Mr. Rhoads is the third of ten children, eight of whom are now living. He was born April 9, 1834. His father was at that time a farmer in Indiana, having gone to that place about seventy-three years since; he was the first to join the Washingtonian Society in Warrick County; he died in 1872. Mr. Rhoads' mother was distinguished for perseverance and industry, and for the faithful performance of Christian duty; she and her husband were both members of the Methodist Episcopal Church; she was born in 1811, and is still living at Boonesville, Ind. Mr. Rhoads received his education in an old log-schoolhouse, at the last named place. In the spring of 1860, he removed to Muhlenburgh County, Ky., and was there engaged in farming during seven years. He then entered into partnership with his uncle, Peter H. Baker, in the nursery business, under the firm name of Baker & Rhoads. This business was continued nine years. He is now extensively engaged in the fire and life insurance business. March 27, 1861, he married a second cousin, Rachel V. Rhoads, a native of Muhlenburgh County, born June 30, 1844. They have had eight children, seven of whom are living. Mr. and Mrs. Rhoads are members of the Beaver Dam Baptist Church, which was organized in 1798, and was for a long time attended by people from a great distance; women and children often walking from Hartford to this church. At the breaking out of the war, in 1861, Mr. Rhoads took the part of the Union and became a firm Republican, although his grandfather was a slaveholder, and had at that time thirty or forty slaves. Mr. Rhoads is a man of exemplary habits. In his boyhood he became one of the first cadets in a boys' temperance society, and has never used either whisky or tobacco. Many incidents of the early life of Mr. Rhoads' ancestors are worthy of note. Henry Rhoads, fifteen years old, a brother of Mr. Rhoads' grandfather, wandered nine days at one time through the woods. A company from the fort took this boy, Henry, along on a hunting trip, to carry in the game. They killed a bear, and, loading it on to the horse started the boy for home. He got lost, and becoming tired, he lay down to rest and soon fell asleep. The horse, in the meantime, started for home and left the poor boy to wander around until relief should come. He lived on frogs, and when found was insane, and had to be run down. He was so bewildered he did not know his father or mother, and had to be guarded several days. D. J. Rhoads" father and mother saw the first steamboat on the Ohio River, and were filled with terror. The grandfather relates that in the earthquake of 1812, people thought the world was coming to an end, and all were on their knees praying for mercy; at another time the falling stars had the same effect. In 1816, the cold was very severe, with ice every month in the year, and all came near starving. In the early settling of Warrick County, Ind., they had lynch law, but after a few years Daniel Rhoads, and others, organized a court, and Daniel Rhoads was judge of the first court held in Warrick County, which court was held in his house.

PROF. McHENRY RHOADS was born July 27, 1858, in Muhlenburgh County, Ky., and is the seventh of eight children (two boys and one girl now living) born to Absalom J. and Tabitha R. (Dennis) Rhoads, natives of Muhlenburgh County. Absalom J. Rhoads was a son of Solomon Rhoads, who was born in Bedford County, Penn., in 1774, and came to Kentucky at the age of thirteen; married Rachel Johnson, of Logan County, whose mother was Rachel Boone, a first cousin of Daniel Boone; she was born in North Carolina, in 1779, and came with her parents to Logan County, Ky. Solomon Rhoads was a son of Henry Rhoads, who was born in Germany, in 1739. Henry, with two brothers, came to America about 1757, and settled in Bedford County, Penn. In 1760 he married Elizabeth Stoner, of Maryland. He fought for his adopted country through the great struggle for Independence, under the leadership of Gen. Muhlenberg. After the war for liberty, having lost heavily in the cause, he, with his two brothers and their families, came to Kentucky, and stopped first at Bardstown; leaving their families there they set out in the wilderness to select a site to build a town. The place selected was at the falls of the Green River, where they started a town and named it Rhoadsville; after three years peaceable possession, an action was entered in the Ohio circuit court, styled "John Hanley vs. Henry Rhoads and others," for the possession of the land on which the town stood. The suit was gained by the plaintiff. Henry Rhoads, with a few friends, then removed to Barnett's Station, on Rough Creek, where he lived five years, in which time the present town of Hartford was laid out and a few houses built. He then moved to Logan County, and settled; after a residence of five years he moved five miles west, where he owned 7,000 acres of military land; he represented the county in the legislature of Kentucky, in 1798, on its formation as a county, and named it in honor of Gen. Muhlenberg. He reared a large family; one daughter, Elizabeth, married Jacob Vanmeter, from which union has sprung many of the leading and influential families of western Kentucky. After an eventful and useful career, Henry Rhoads died at the age of seventy-five years. Prof. McHenry Rhoads was reared on a farm, and at the age of eighteen years entered the West Kentucky College, and graduated with high honors in the spring of 1880. Having shown his superior qualities during his collegiate years, he was, in the same spring, tendered the professorship of natural science in the college from which he graduated, which he accepted, and filled with marked ability until the spring of 1885, with the exception of one year as professor of science in Hartford College. In May, 1885, he was elected to the vice-presidency of Hartford College and Business Institute, which he accepted, and, in September of the same year, he entered upon his duties as professor of natural science and literature. He received the honorary degree in 1883. Prof. Rhoads is a popular educator, and in his profession ranks with the foremost instructors of the State.

JOHN C. RILEY was born May 14, 1849, in McLean County, Ky. His father, William Riley, was born and reared in Daviess County, Ky., where he died in 1863. Subject's paternal grandfather's name was Lewis, and his father came from Ireland. The mother of subject was Eliza Tanner, of McLean County. She is still living, and with her husband, is a member of the United Baptist Church. They were parents of six children, three now living: John C., Seth and Samuel. John C.'s father died when he was quite young, which threw much of the care of the family upon him, and which deprived him of a thorough education. He left home at the age of nineteen, and worked for a dealer in tobacco. With his earnings he was enabled to attend school, and thus qualified himself for teaching. After teaching four years he bought a farm, and October 10, 1872, married America Bell, of Ohio County. In 1878, he bought his present farm of 176½ acres of fertile land, now mostly in cultivation and well stocked. He also has a large tobacco house on his place, and is quite an extensive dealer in leaf tobacco. He is a Democrat, and is a member of the Hartford Chapter, R. A. M. The children are named as follows: Augustus B., Bertha A., Rolly and Wallace.

SYLVESTER W. ROBERTSON was born December 13, 1844, in Ohio County, Ky., where he now resides. His father, James Robertson, was born in 1806, in Ohio County, a physician, died in 1875. He was the son of Samuel, of Virginia. James married Elizabeth, daughter of Philip and Sally (Taylor) Fulkerson, of Ohio County, born in 1812, and still living, and their offspring are Sarah J. (Fulkerson), Margaret (Wakeland), Philip, Samuel J., Mary (Fulkerson), Sylvester W., Melvina, Elizabeth and William B. Sylvester W. was married October 28, 1869, to Sophronia, daughter of Thaddeus M. and Sally A. (Morton) Baker, of Ohio County. She was born in 1848, and to them have been born Charley L., Fanny A. and Nelly. Mr.

Robertson is a farmer, owning 100 acres of good land in a fair state of cultivation. He and wife are members of the Baptist Church. In politics he is a stanch Republican.

JOHN BUTLER ROGERS was born in Ohio County, September 1, 1851, where he was reared and still resides. His father, William L. Rogers, also born in Ohio County, died February 26, 1876, aged fifty-four years. He was the son of Jonathan Rogers, a native of Maryland, many years a magistrate in Ohio County. William L. married Magdaline, daughter of Samuel and Elizabeth (Borah) James, of Ohio County, now living, aged fifty-eight years. Their offspring are Sarah E. (Jarnegin), John B., Joanna (Blankinship), Cyrus J., Emerson E., Joseph B., James L., Lavega, Alfonso and Alonzo (twins). April 9, 1874, John B. married Mary C., daughter of Martin and Martha A. (Leach) Coleman, of Ohio County, born May 4, 1852, and to them have been born Floyd (deceased), Effie and Latnie. Mr. Rogers labored on the farm until twenty-five years of age, and then for three years engaged in blacksmithing, after which he served as deputy sheriff four years. In 1883, he commenced dealing in leaf tobacco in Rosine, as a member of the firm of Ragland & Co., in which he has met with encouraging success. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, of the Baptist Church, and of the Republican party.

CHRISTOPHER C. RONE, Ohio County. The ancestors of this gentleman came from Holland in an early day, and settled in Virginia, and established for themselves and their descendants an honored and respected name. His father, George Washington Rone, was born July 15, 1815, on Bull Run Creek, Butler County, and passed his youth and early manhood on his native place. He was a prosperous, observing and well-informed farmer, and died April 14, 1885. The mother of Mr. Rone, whose maiden name was Eliza Neel, was born February 4, 1817. After receiving a fair education she married, and became the mother of nine children: George Washington, of Warren County, born September 3, 1836, has a family of eleven children; Mrs. Rebecca Shields, born July 1, 1838, has three children; Mrs. Erinda Ann Butler, August 15, 1840, one child; Virgil Crittenden (deceased), born December 23, 1842, one child; Commodore Perry, March 15, 1844, three children; Mrs. Mary Ann Gott, May 15, 1846, two children; Christopher Columbus (subject), born March 22, 1849, and married January 8, 1868, to Eliza Shultz, youngest daughter of Matthias Shultz, and grand-daughter of Joseph Schultz, one of the oldest settlers of Ohio County, a most prosperous citizen, now living at an advanced age, and surrounded by a numerous family of children and grandchildren. Mr. and Mrs. Rone have four children living: Lelia I., December 3, 1869; Robert E., September 18, 1871, died August 20, 1873; Hallie B., November 3, 1873; Tilden, July 9, 1876; Edna A., November 23, 1878 (deceased, November 2, 1883), Lena E., March 10, 1882 (died July 22, 1883), and Ira, born April 9, 1884. The schools of Kentucky did not afford the best educational facilities in his youth, but Mr. Rone made the best of them in Warren County, where he was born and brought up. He has always been a farmer, but at different times has also engaged in trading, milling, etc. After his marriage he removed to Ohio County, but in 1872 he returned to his father's farm in Warren County, and remained five years. He then returned to Ohio County, and has since remained on his farm of 240 acres, located near Green River, six miles southwest of Cromwell. He has an abundance of timber and water, his farm is well stocked, and has good buildings. Mr. Rone is a member of the Christian Church, and is a young man of enterprise, industry and intelligence.

GEORGE ROWE, Ohio County, was born May 1, 1816, in Ohio County, and is a son of Edmond and Mary (Phipps) Rowe, the former a native of Virginia, and the latter of Maryland. At the age of eighteen or ninteen years, about 1800, Edmund Rowe removed with his parents to Ohio County, Ky., then almost an unbroken wilderness, where they were among the first settlers. There his father, George Rowe, bought wild lands, near the present village of Centretown, and subsequently improved a farm, upon which he resided until his death. He was a veteran of the war of 1812. Edmund Rowe received his early education in his native State. He was married soon after the family removed to Kentucky, and soon after that event he bought wild land in the southwest part of Ohio County, where he improved a farm and resided for several years, when he sold out and again bought wild land in the same county, on a part of which the village of Centretown is now situated. Here he improved another farm, upon which he resided until his death, which occurred October 10, 1854, in his seventieth year. Both he and wife were members of the United Baptist Church. George Rowe received such an education in youth as could be obtained at the schools of that time; he has, however, since acquired a fair business education by his own efforts. He was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority. His father then gave him 100 acres of wild land near Centretown, adjoining which he also bought a partially improved farm; upon this farm, which is now well improved, he still resides, and here he has the most of his time been extensively and successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits. In 1857 he embarked in the mercantile business at Centretown, continuing the same for about five years. In 1870 he removed to Hartford, where he was successfully engaged in the hotel business until January, 1874, when he returned to his farm in Centretown, upon which he has ever since remained. Mr. Rowe has never been an office-seeker but has held several minor offices. He was married, July 15, 1841, to Miss Sallie Render, also a native of Ohio County, and a daughter of Joshua and Mary (Jackson) Render, who were among the early settlers of the county. To Mr. and Mrs. Rowe have been left five sons, all of whom are now grown up. Mr. Rowe and wife have been from early life members of the United Baptist Church. He is a Democrat.

WILLIAM L. ROWE was born in Ohio County, Ky., July 20, 1841, and is a son of George and Sallie (Render) Rowe, a sketch of whom will be found elsewhere in this volume. William L. Rowe received a good common school and academic education in youth, and was employed on his father's farm until he was sixteen years old. He then began teaching and taught for a time, after which he was employed as a salesman in a general store at Centretown, remaining one year. After that he attended an academy at Campbellsville, Ky., for one session, and was engaged in teaching until he attained his majority. He then went to Hartford, where he engaged in the dry goods trade on his own account, and continued the same at the same place for two years, after which he was engaged in the same business at Centretown for another two years. He then removed to Greenville, Muhlenburgh Co., Ky., where he was engaged in the milling business for two years, after which he returned to Ohio County and farmed for a year, and was then engaged in milling at Hartford for another year, after which he again embarked in the dry goods trade at the same place, which he continued only a short time. After this he was employed in teaching and farming and the hotel business for several years. In 1882 he bought the farm near Point Pleasant, upon which he now resides, and where he is successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits. During the years 1876–77 he held the office of county school commissioner of Ohio County. He also served as magistrate or justice of the peace in the same county for four years. In 1882, he was appointed county road and bridge commissioner, serving two years. He was married, July 21, 1864, to Sallie M. Austin, also a native of Ohio County, Ky., and a daughter of Rev. James F. Austin, whose parents were among the early pioneers of the county. One son and two daughters gladden their home: Alice J., Lelia and Edwin L. Mr. Rowe and wife are members of the United Baptist Church, in which he was deacon for several years. He is a Democrat.

GEORGE R. SANDERS, M. D., Ohio County, was born in Wilson County, Tenn., February 14, 1836, and is a son of Samuel and Mary (Sanders) Sanders, natives of Virginia and Tennessee, respectively. At a very early age Samuel Sanders removed with his parents to Tennessee, where he was educated and married, and where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits for several years. About 1838, he removed to Logan County, Ky., where he bought wild land, and subsequently improved a farm, upon which he resided some twenty years, when he sold this place and bought another in the same neighborhood, upon which he still resides. Both he and wife have been from early life devoted members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, in which he has been a ruling elder for the past thirty-five or forty years. He is also an earnest advocate of the temperance cause. Dr. George R. Sanders received a common school education in youth, and was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority. He then engaged in the grocery trade at Gordonsville, Logan Co., Ky., continuing the same for some six years, after which he went to Owensboro, Ky, where he was engaged in the same business for nearly two years. He then commenced the study of medicine, under the preceptorship of Dr. D. W. Crittenden, of Gordonsville. In 1867, he commenced the practice of his profession in Butler County, Ky., where he remained two years. He then removed to Centretown, Ohio County, where he has since continued to practice his profession with excellent and abundant success. The Doctor has been for the past eight years postmaster at Centertown. He is an extensive and careful reader, and is well informed on ancient and modern history. He has also devoted considerable attention to literary pursuits, having been for several years a regular contributor to local papers. He was married, in 1861, to Miss Bettie Campbell, a native of Wilson County, Tenn. Three sons and two daughters have been left to them. The Doctor and wife are devoted members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. He is a Democrat, and a leading physician, surgeon and citizen.

SAMUEL F. SHARP, Ohio County, was born April 4, 1843, in Daviess County Ky., and is a son of William T. and Nancy (Shoemaker) Sharp. William T. came with his father, Allen Sharp, to Daviess County, Ky., from Breckinridge County, Ky. He was twice married, the last time to Mrs. Susan J. Simmons, nee Bozarth; one child resulted from this union. At eighteen years of age, Samuel F. contracted for his time at $200, which in two years he had paid, aside from buying a horse and laying in a year's supply of clothing and provisions, preparatory to farming, having rented a small place. The first year, by sleeping in an open cabin on straw, doing his own cooking, and working day and night, he cleared $1,375. His health failing, he spent a large part of the first year's earnings. Soon after he built a cabin on a small tract of timber land he had bought while he kept "bachelor's hall," cleared the land, working part of the time for his brother-in-law. He has been successful, and is now worth $15,000. His fine farm of 220 acres he generally keeps in grass for stock feed—cattle and hog dealing and trading, being his principal business. October 19, 1871, he was united in marriage to Susan J. Hardisty, daughter of George and Matilda J. (Church) Hardisty, of Daviess County. Four children are living: Nancy Jane, Samuel F., Mary M. and Emma F. Mrs. Sharp is a Catholic; Mr. Sharp is a temperance Democrat.

WILLIAM HENRY SHERROD was born March 8, 1836, on the place where he now resides, in Ohio County, Ky. His father, Robert Sherrod, was born March 9, 1808, in Todd County, Ky., where he was reared and where he lived until 1835, when he located on Green River, Ohio County, where he died February 4, 1878. He was a successful farmer. He was the youngest son of Robert Sherrod, a native of North Carolina, a pioneer of Todd County, who died in 1836, aged about seventy-three years. Robert Jr., was married April 11, 1832, to Margaret, daughter of Aaron and Judy (Stom) Smith, of Muhlenburgh County; she was born November 28, 1811, and is still living, and to them were born Sally A. (Taylor), William Henry, Thomas H., Lucinda C. (Jackson), Harrison W., Virgil P., Amanthis W. (Cundif) and Eliza J. (Smith), all living. William H. enjoyed good educational advantages in his youth. He has remained unmarried, having on hand the management of the homestead, consisting of 264 acres of well-improved and productive land. On the farm is an abundance of superior coal, easy of access. Mr. Sherrod is a member of the Masonic fraternity and in politics a Democrat.

WILLIAM HENRY SHIVELY, Ohio County, is the son of John L. B. and Sarah (Jordan) Shively, the fomer born near Louisville, Ky., in 1811; the latter in South Carolina, in 1813. The parents removed to Daviess County, Ky., when quite young. William Henry is the fourth of nine children, seven of whom are living: James H., William Henry, Mrs. S. E. Roach, Mrs. M. A. E. Bowman, Mrs. George N. Bowman, Sarah L. (wife of Samuel Norris), and Georges S. William H. Shively was born in Daviess County, May 6, 1837, and married, January 26, 1860, Susan Fuqua, by whom he had four children: Capitola, Laura Frances, John William and James Louis. Mrs. Susan Shively departed this life, October 14, 1869. Mr. Shively married as his second wife, Mrs. Sarah Ellen Burks, the widow of John Wesley Burks, and daughter of David and Elizabeth (Mosely) Westerfield. She had four children by her former husband: Joanna Florence, wife of William H. Howard; Daniel J. Burks; Olivia, wife of John Greer, and Benjamin Franklin Burks. Mr. and Mrs. Shively are the parents of one son—George Everett Shively. Mr. Shively enlisted in the Federal army, Company A, Twelfth Kentucky Cavalry, and served three years, most of the time in Sherman's army. December 15, 1864, he was taken prisoner near the Salt Works in Virginia. Mr. Shively's farm consists of 130 acres of good land with first-class improvements, etc.; he and his wife are members of the Baptist Church. In politics he is a Republican. The grandfather, Philip Shively, was a colonel in the war of 1812, and had command of a regiment at New Orleans. The great-grandfather, Christian Shively, was a native of Pennsylvania, and removed to Kentucky at an early date; he died while reading the Bible, at the advanced age of one hundred and six years.

WILLIAM D. SHREWSBURY, Ohio County, was born in Warren County, Ky., April 23, 1847, and is the youngest of fourteen children born to William and Rhoda (Shrewsbury) Shrewsbury, both of whom were natives of Virginia and of English descent. William Shrewsbury was educated and married in his native State, Virginia. Soon after attaining his majority, he engaged in general merchandising at the Kanawha Salt Works, continuing the same for some three years; he afterward opened up what was known as the Shrewsbury Salt Works, on the Kanawha River, and soon after took in his brother, Charles, as a partner. After several years, in consequence of reverses, he became heavily involved, and was compelled to sell the works and other property at a sacrifice. He built the famous stone house, which served as a fort for the Confederate forces during the battle of the Kanawha Salt Works. In 1844 he removed with his family to Warren County, Ky., where he was engaged in general merchandising for a time, and afterward in farming in the same county. In 1852 he came to Ohio County, Ky., and bought a farm on the Green River, opposite South Carrollton, upon which he resided until his death, which occurred in the early part of October, 1882, in his eighty-ninth year. He and wife were from early life members of the United Baptist Church, in which he officiated as deacon for many years. William D. Shrewsbury received a good common school education in youth, and was employed on his father's farm until 1881. His father then gave him a part of the old homestead, to which he has added other lands, now owning a well-improved farm amounting to 180 acres, where he is successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits and stock-raising. He was married September 12, 1878, to Mahala A. Wilhite, a native of Daviess County, Ky. One son and one daughter have been left to them: Earnest W. and Fannie. Mr. Shrewsbury and wife are members of the United Baptist Church. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, having held various official positions in his lodge; he also belongs to the K. of H., and is a Democrat.

GEORGE C. SHULTZ was born in Ohio County, Ky., June 11, 1834. His father, Matthias Shultz, was born in the same county, as was also his mother, Margaret (Sheppard) Shultz. Matthias Shultz, the grandfather of our subject, was a native of Virginia, and was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. George C. resided in Ohio County, until the death of his father, in 1846, after which, for two years and a half he carried mail and drove stage between Russellville and Nashville; then, for a short time carried mail from Cross Plains to Clarksville on the Cumberland River. Returned to Ohio County, but soon rambled into Indiana, thence to Illinois, and again returned to Ohio County, Ky., and worked on a farm by the month, until 1857; October 11, of the same year, he married Samantha Taylor, and shortly after removed to Arkansas, where he remained eighteen months; returned to Ohio County, Ky., and bought 104 acres of land, and farmed until the beginning of the war, at which time he owned 369 acres of land, which he sold, and entered the Federal army as a sutler, which he followed for a short time; bad health compelled him to sell out and return home, after which he bought 150 acres of land, and farmed in connection with selling groceries, keeping a tavern and a ferry at Rochester, on Green River; afterward traded out for 165 acres of land, where he now lives. Mr. Shultz's farm of 350 acres is well improved, with 200 acres well fenced and in cultivation, and well stocked with mules and horses, cattle and sheep, in which he carries an average of $3,000. Mr. Shultz has attained to his present success through his own efforts, and with the help of his wife. They have been blessed with nine children: Mary E., Cornelia O. (wife of James Davenport), George W., Joseph C., James R., Bernard (deceased), Claude (deceased), Edna B. and Eben G. Mr. S. was a member of the P. of H., in which he took an active part. In politics he is a Democrat, and has held the office of school trustee for many years; he extends his influence to the temperance cause. Mr. and Mrs. Shultz are members of the Christian Church, in which Mr. S. has held the office of deacon for many years.

THOMAS J. SMITH was born September 10, 1835, in Ohio County, on a farm near Fordsville, and is a son of David L. and Delilah (Mills) Smith, both natives of Ohio County. In 1863, the family moved to Warrick County, Ind., where they now reside. The father is of Irish and the mother of German descent, she is a Baptist and he a Methodist. They are the parents of eight children—four girls and four boys—seven now living: Thomas J., Elizabeth N., wife of J. W. Sharp, farmer in Ohio County; James H. (deceased), Charlotte, wife of T. J. Lowe, farmer of Ohio County; David L., sheriff of Ohio County; Nancy J., wife of George W. Small, of Warrick County, Ind.; Mary L., wife of Peter Egnew, of Spencer County, Ind., and Harvey M., farming in Warrick County, Ind. Subject's father was a Whig, later a Know-nothing, and now a Republican. Thomas J., the eldest of the family, was reared on a farm in this county, and at the age of twenty-two began life by teaching the district school, which he followed six or seven winter seasons, farming for himself in the summers. He was then elected constable for two years, and followed farming until 1872, when he was elected sheriff of the county two successive terms of two years each, which was the limit of the law. He then returned to his farm, where he remained until 1882, when he was elected county clerk for a term of four years, and now holds that position. February 21, 1877, he married Miss Nannie E. Norris, daughter of Robert and Elizabeth (Edwards) Norris, of Daviess County, Ky. By this union they have three children living: Jessie T., Mary and Daisy—all at home. Mrs. Smith is a Baptist. Mr. Smith is a Mason, Royal Arch Chapter, and has served in every position in that fraternity; he is also an Odd Fellow. In politics he is a Democrat.

DAVID L. SMITH, brother of T. J. Smith, and county clerk, was born May 13, 1844, in Ohio County, Ky., and was reared on a farm. At the age of eighteen years he enlisted as a private in Company E, Twelfth Kentucky Cavalry, under Capt. Henry M. Bennett, August 22, 1862, and was mustered out in September, 1865. He was under Burnside in the campaign in eastern Tennesssee, and was in the siege of Knoxville for twenty-one days. He was an escort at Gen. Schofield's headquarters, and in this capacity was in the battle of Resaca, Kenesaw Mountain, siege of Atlanta and other engagements of the command. He was twice wounded. At Bean's Station, east Tennessee, he was shot in the side during the battle fought there, and at the battle of Fairgarden, in east Tennessee, about two months after, was shot through the neck. After the war he went to his father at Warrick County, Ind., and attended school some time, then returned to Kentucky, and attended school in Ohio County. He then engaged in farming with his brother-in-law, T. J. Lowe, for two years. Then, after farming for a time with his brother, he bought the old homestead, and engaged in farming for himself for five years. He then sold out and moved to within three miles of Hartford, where he lived until elected sheriff of the county, in August, 1880, for a term of two years. He was re-elected for a second term in 1882, which is the limit allowed by law. March 14, 1867, he married Miss Susan T. Ambrose, of Ohio County, daughter of Preston and Adaline (Lowe) Ambrose, of this county. By this union they have seven children: Antha, Ida, Oma, Carrie, Jessie, Walter B. and Clarence—all at home. Mrs. Smith is a Methodist. Mr. Smith is a strong temperance man, and during the existence of the G. T., was a member of that order. He is a member of the G. A. R. Post No. 4, of Hartford.

GEORGE N. SMITH, Ohio County, is the son of James and Altha Smith, who settled here in 1840, having come from Carroll County, Ky., where the father and mother were born. The grandfather, James Smith, was from Maryland, and the maternal grandfather, William P. Fant, was from Virginia. George N. was born in Carroll County, in 1832, and was brought up in Ohio County, where he engaged in farming. He was married to Naomi Stevens on the 4th of September, 1856. She was born in Ohio County, August 8, 1838, and is the fourth daughter of Dennis and Henrietta Stevens. They have ten children: Elvis Thomas married Nora Williams—they have one child; Mary Helen married Samuel S. Stevens—one child; Janette, married to William Stevens—two children; Sarah Elizabeth, the wife of Phegm Stevens—one child, Anna G., James D., George N., Altha, Ellis and Naomi. Mr. Smith owns a very fine farm, one mile and a half from Beaver Dam, consisting of meadow and plow land, with timber sufficient for all needful purposes. Mr. Smith and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and are worthy descendants of the ancient family to which they belong.

JOSEPH H. SMITH, Ohio County, was born May 26, 1840, in Schuylkill County, Penn., where he grew to manhood, and in 1872 removed to Ohio County, Ky., where he has since resided. His father, James Smith, a native of Scotland, died in 1861 at the age of sixty years. His mother, Agnes Smith, died about 1878, aged seventy-four years. Their children are Agnes (Cox and Washington), John, James, Mary (Lewis), William, Jane (Welch), Joseph H., Margaret (McKachney), Robert (died in the army), and Sidney. Joseph H. enlisted in the Fifth Pennsylvania Regiment at the first call for three months' men in the late war, and then re-enlisted in the One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Regiment, in which he engaged in many battles, and was promoted to the rank of fourth sergeant at Fredericksburgh, for rescuing and bearing the colors off the field. He was married, in 1866, to Diana, daughter of Richard Platt, of Pennsylvania; she was born in 1841, and to their union were born Joseph, Sallie and Agnes I. Mr. Smith is a practical engineer; engaged in the coal mines at Echols since 1872. He is a Presbyterian in sentiment, a Republican in politics, and a member of the K. of H.

JOHN K. SMITH, Ohio County, was born in McLean County, Ky., November 20, 1856, and is a son of John E. V. and Elizabeth B.

(Kimbley) Smith, both of whom were natives of Muhlenburgh County, Ky., and of English descent. John E. V. Smith was educated and married in his native county, where he was for a time engaged in farming. Soon after his marriage he removed to Ohio County, Ky., and bought a farm on the Green River near Ceralvo, where he remained until 1848, when he removed to McLean County. In 1858 he returned to Ohio County, and repurchased his old farm upon which he resided until in September, 1883, when he sold the farm and bought property in the village of Centretown, where he now resides. He is a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, also of the Masonic fraternity. Mrs. Elizabeth B. Smith departed this life May 30, 1883, in her sixty-seventh year. She also was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. John K. Smith received a good common school education in youth, and was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority. In the spring of 1882 he went to Morganfield, Union Co., Ky., where he was employed as a salesman in a dry goods house for a time. He then returned to Ohio County, and in February, 1884, opened a general store at Centretown, in company with S. W. Jones. The business is being conducted under the firm name of Jones & Smith. They carry a well selected stock in their line, amounting to some $2-500, and their average annual sales will reach $7,000 or $8,000. Mr. Smith was married, November 1, 1882, to Miss George A. Caldwell, a native of Union County, Ky. Mr. Smith and wife are members of the church, he of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and she of the United Baptist Church. He is a Republican.

RICHARD HENRY STEVENS, farmer, Ohio County, is the youngest son of Richard and Susan (Taylor) Stevens, and grandson of John Stevens and Richard Taylor, both natives of Maryland, who immigrated to Kentucky about 1809. Mr. Stephens was born in Steventown or Stevens' Mill, Ohio County, June 15, 1833. He was brought up in the place of his nativity, with limited educational advantages in youth, his father having died of cholera, March 7, 1833, and his mother February 17, 1849, leaving nine children, five of whom are now deceased. Mr. Stevens was married in 1855 to Mary Jane Taylor, by whom he has four children; Richard, married to Miss Hayes, and residing in Palo Pinto County, Tex.; Susan A., wife of J. D. Hocker, of Ohio County, has two children; Jeannette and Mary E. Mrs. Stevens died in December, 1868, and our subject next married Mrs. Lizetta Piner, who has five children: Adina, Lina, Otie, Alice and John Walker. Mr. Stevens owns a good farm with necessary buildings, stock, etc., and is a successful farmer and a leading citizen of that vicinity. An active and faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Providence. In politics Mr. Stevens is a Greenbacker.

REV. JAMES C. STEWART was born February 3, 1813, on Green River, in Ohio County. His father, Alexander Stewart, came to Kentucky when a boy, and first located at Fort Hartford, Ohio County; then at Fort Vienna, where later in life he married Elizabeth Downs, whose father, William Downs, was killed by the Indians. Rev. James C. Stewart has always resided in Ohio County, never having been outside of its limits. By diligent study he acquired a good education for the times. At twenty-one he located on 100 acres of the 300-acre farm, where he now resides, and on which he has made all the substantial improvements. May 28, 1835, he married Judah Row, daughter of Thomas and Margaret (Brown) Row. To them were born twelve children, six now living. Mr. Stewart has spent thirty-seven years of his life in the ministry in the United Baptist Church, and retired only two years ago; during the years of his ministry he married 319 couples. At an early day he was a captain of State militia, and has been trustee of schools. Politically he is a Democrat.

LAFAYETTE SUBLETT, Ohio County, was born October 29, 1834, in Logan County, Ky. He received a good common school and academic education. His father was Prof. Samuel D. Sublett, a native of Virginia, born in 1791, and removed to Logan County, Ky., at the age of twelve years; was a gentleman of fine scholarship, and followed the profession of teaching the most of his life in Logan, Warren and Daviess Counties, Ky., and also in Missouri; he taught in the common schools and in the higher institutions of learning; was a sincere and devout Christian, and a member of the Baptist Church until his death, which occurred in 1861. Subject's mother was born near Danville, Ky., February 1, 1795; she was the daughter of John S. Jackson, for many years a prominent citizen of Warren Township; she died in 1859. Lafayette Sublett removed to Owensboro, Daviess County, with his parents in 1850, and subsequently to Whitesville in the same county, and finally to Ellis Precinct, Ohio County, where he now resides and owns a beautiful farm of 108 acres with an excellent home. He was married, January 10, 1864, to Margaret Russell, of the State of Missouri, formerly of Marion County, Ky. Mrs. Sublett was born August 18, 1848, and educated in Springfield, Washington County, and in Daviess County, Ky. Mr. Sublett is an intelligent and prosperous farmer.

JOHN T. SUTTON was born in Ohio County, Ky., February 7, 1838. His parents were William and Catherine Ann (Ralph) Sutton The grandfather, James Sutton, came to Kentucky at an early day; lived in Ohio County, where he died, leaving a family of four children: Martha, Jane (wife of David Lake), James C. and Amanda (wife of Thomas Greer), are all living. John T. Sutton never had any opportunity for schooling. His father died when he was only nine years of age, leaving him the only support of his family. He continued to support them until his mother's marriage to David Westerfield, February 3, 1852, when Mr. Sutton commenced for himself. At the age of sixteen he bought a crop of tobacco, and the next year bought sixty acres of land on time, and continued farming to the present time. He married Amanda Westerfield, February 23, 1855. Mr. Sutton has added to his farm until he now owns about 200 acres, with about 100 acres under cultivation, all of which he has acquired through his own exertions and industry, and with the help of his wife. They are the parents of ten children, nine of whom are now living: James William, Mary Elizabeth, Sarah Adeline (wife of Richard Bennett), Virginia Ann, Nathaniel E. L., Adam Forrest, Frances Belle, Alexander, Susan Alice and John J. D. Mr. Sutton enlisted in 1862, in Company E, Tenth Kentucky Cavalry, and served under John Morgan for three years until the close of the war in 1865; was with him during his raid through the North, and was engaged in many fights and skirmishes. He was first taken prisoner in the fall of 1862, kept three months on Johnson's Island and exchanged at Vicksburg. While with Morgan at Cheshire, Ohio, he was taken prisoner, and for nineteen months was kept in Camps Chase and Douglas; was taken out to be exchanged, and while out made his escape and returned to Kentucky. In politics Mr. Sutton is a Democrat. Mrs. Sutton and three daughters are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Sutton is a member of Joe Ellis Lodge No. 473, A. F. & A. M. He was a member of the order of P. of H., taking an active part in the organization of Bell Run Lodge, in Ohio County, Ky., and also of Grange No. 744, in the same county, in the year 1874, in which orders he served as Master.

Mr. Tabor is a successful farmer and stock-raiser, owning 332 acres of good and productive land, well improved and in a fine state of cultivation. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church; was formerly an old line Whig, and is now a Republican.

JOHN ALEXANDER TAYLOR, Ohio County, is the son of John and Elizabeth Taylor, and grandson of Harrison Taylor. He was born in Ohio County six miles east of Hartford, on the 15th of October, 1812, and received such an education as the schools of his early youth afforded, but by reading, observation and close application to business principles, he has added largely to his general fund of information. At the age of twenty years he commenced flat-boating out of Rough Creek, Green River, Ohio and Mississippi to New Orleans, and continued in that business fourteen years; made ten trips to New Orleans, buying up produce and selling it in that city. At the close of the war he became a cattle drover in the northern part of the State, and is well known throughout that section. At the age of twenty-four Mr. Taylor married Elvira Stevens, third daughter of Richard Stevens; they were the parents of six children, only three of whom are living: Josephine, wife of James M. Rogers, living near; Susan E., a teacher, and Millard Fillmore. Mrs. Taylor died in 1865 and Mr. Taylor married, in 1868, Charlotte Stateler, a daughter of J. P. Stateler and a grand-daughter of Stephen Stateler, a native of Pennsylvania and one of the first settlers of Ohio County. Mrs. Taylor was born May 31, 1835. Mr. Taylor owns a fine farm of more than a hundred acres of choice land, and his home is one of the neatest in the county; he was a member of the old Whig party and voted for Bell and Everett, and is now a Democrat; at the close of the war he was elected sheriff of Ohio County, and filled that office creditably for two years. He is a man of sterling worth and integrity.

SQUIRE L. TAYLOR, was born September 4, 1827. His father, Thomas Taylor, came to Ohio County from Fairfax County, Va., with his parents, when a young man. He first married subject's mother, Sallie McCracklin, who bore him twelve children, ten of whom are living; his second wife was Cassandra VanCleve. To them were born one child. The father and the family were Baptists, and he was a comfortable farmer; he died in 1880. Squire L. attended subscription schools until of age, when he began working for himself by the month, continuing for five years. He now owns 335 acres of land, well improved, and having one of the finest residences in the county, all of which is the result of industry, economy, and the good management of himself and wife. December 9, 1851, he married Mary E. Sinnett, daughter of Joseph and Sarah (Sturman) Sinnett, of Daviess County, Ky. They are the parents of three children living: Joseph T., Basil and Theodore. Mr. Taylor is a Democrat, and with his wife a member of the Baptist Church.

A. DONNIE TAYLOR, Ohio County. The father of this gentleman, Melvin Taylor, was a native of Butler County, born in February, 1832, and when very young removed with his parents to Ohio County, where he grew to manhood, married and engaged in farming. His first wife, Martha Taturn, died January 1, 1866, leaving six children, of whom there are now living the following: Loomis B., Robert C., A. Donnie, Cesney F. and Millie T. Four years later Mr. Melvin Taylor married, as his second wife, Margaret Comer, a daughter of Samuel Comer, formerly of Tennessee. She died in 1871, and he then married Fannie Murphy, daughter of William Murphy, who also died in 1881. A. Donnie Taylor was born August 9, 1858, at the old homestead near Cromwell; educated in the common schools, and commenced business as a salesman for a marble firm, and subsequently engaged in the mercantile business in the town of Prentiss. October 4, 1883, he married Jeffie, youngest daughter of Tolbert Robertson, Esq., of Rockport, Ohio County, where she was born August 31, 1860, and liberally educated. Their union was blessed with one child—Mary C. Taylor. Several years since, Mr. Taylor's father purchased a steam-mill in Logan County, and four years later removed it to the mouth of Indian Camp Creek, in Butler County. He finally sold out his interest there, and erected a steam-mill, where his son, A. D. Taylor, is now a partner in business. He has for many years owned a fine farm near Cromwell; is a justice of the peace, and a highly respected citizen. Father and son are stanch Republicans, and with their families are members of the Baptist Church.

WILLIAM A. TAYLOR was born in Ohio County, Ky., March 9, 1836, and is a son of John A. and Sally (Melton) Taylor, both of whom were natives of Kentucky, Ohio County, and of English descent. John A. Taylor was educated and married in his native county. Soon after attaining his majority he bought wild land near Hartford, and subsequently improved a farm, upon which he resided for a number of years. In about 1834 he sold this place and again bought wild land in same county near Point Pleasant, where he improved another farm, upon which he resided, and was engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death, which occurred September 26, 1868, in his seventy-first year; he died while in Illinois on a visit, and his remains were brought and laid to rest on the old homestead. He was also to some extent engaged in flat-boating on the Green, Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, shipping produce to New Orleans. His wife died September 4, 1864, in her sixty-fourth year. They were from early life members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. He was also a member of the Masonic fraternity, and was for several years deputy sheriff of Ohio County. William A. Taylor received such an education in youth as could be obtained at the primitive schools of the Kentucky frontier; he has, however, by his own exertions, obtained a fair businesss education. He was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority; his father then willed him the old homestead, upon which he remained for fifteen years. He then sold the home place and bought another farm, in same neighborhood, upon which he now resides, and where he is extensively engaged in farming and stock-raising, and deals quite extensively in live stock. In addition to his farm, he and his cousin, Harry Taylor, of Hartford, own some 2,200 acres of grazing lands on Rough River, all fenced. Mr. Taylor was married, July 20, 1865, to Martha E. Conditt, a native of Ohio County, Ky. Four children blessed this union, three of whom (all sons) are living. Mr. and Mrs. Taylor are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. In politics he is identified with the national Greenback party.

VIRGIL TAYLOR, Ohio County, is of a prominent family. Indeed few families can boast a longer lineage, or a more respected ancestry than the Taylor family. In the later part of the last century the great-grandfather, Harrison Taylor, with eight sons and four daughters, their wives and husbands, came from Virginia to Kentucky. He was one of the most peaceable of men, respected by all, and known far and wide as "honest old Taylor at the mill." He bought the farm and settled on the place where Hamilton Barnes now lives; he was born August 11, 1735, and died November 22, 1811, in the seventy-seventh year of his age. His wife was born September 5, 1742, and died August 5, 1812, in the seventieth year of her age. His son, Richard Taylor, the grandfather of subject, was a man of intelligence, enterprise, wealth and influence, and was elected a representative to the legislature from Ohio County, in 1819, and held other public positions. Virgil Taylor was born July 14, 1837, on the old homestead one mile and a half from Beaver Dam. His parents were Richard and Sarah (Stevens) Taylor; his father was born in Virginia July 28, 1798, and died September 27, 1840. His mother's ancestors were from Maryland; she died August 25, 1876; they were members of the Methodist Church, and to the end of their lives, were faithful and consistent Christians. Mr. Taylor was married, January 10, 1860, to Acantha A. Taylor, eldest and only living daughter of Benjamin D. Taylor. She was born March 28, 1839, and received a good common-school education. Mr. and Mrs. Taylor have one child—Era, born May 11, 1872. They are also members of the Methodist Church. Mr. Taylor owns 1,000 acres of land, and is one of the prosperous farmers of the county.

MRS. SARAH A. TAYLOR, Ohio County. On what is now the western half of the town of Beaver Dam, the ancestors of this lady settled nearly a century ago. Her great-grandfather brought his family to this place from Pittsburgh, Penn., where her grandfather, Henry Coleman, was born. Her grandmother's maiden name was Delila Hocker, and her parents were Davadge and Jemima (Addington) Coleman. Mrs. Taylor was born April 11, 1838, near the present site of the depot in Beaver Dam, and is the youngest of three children. Of the other two, Mary Catherine died in infancy, and Henry Davadge also died in early life. Mrs. Taylor's father was born in 1816, and died in 1839. Her mother died in 1872. This family were among those who organized the Beaver Dam Baptist Church, and were well known for their social position and influence throughout the county. Mrs. Taylor was married to James H. Taylor, eldest son of John A. Taylor, September 12, 1855. This union has been blessed with seven children, two of whom, Robert Emmett and Henry Davadge, now reside in Texas. The others live in Kentucky, viz.: John, Nora, a teacher; Sally May, wife of William Berry, they have one child—Estis and Mildred Maud. Mr. Taylor died January 22, 1872. He was highly respected in the community for his industry, strict integrity and Christian virtue. He left his widow with a large family of young children to bring up and educate. She has discharged the trust with great fidelity, and her family are among the most honored and respected in the community. They own a beautiful farm and home overlooking the railroad, one mile and a half from Beaver Dam on the Chesapeake, Ohio & Southwestern Railroad.

RICHARD STEVENS TAYLOR, Ohio County, is the son of Richard Taylor, whose father, also named Richard, immigrated to Ohio County from Virginia about the latter part of the eighteenth century. The country was then a wilderness, and they were obliged to clear the land, where they established their home. The father of our subject was born on the old homestead on the 28th of July, 1798. The mother died August 25, 1876. They were both sincere Christians, and for many years members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which faith they died. R. S. Taylor was born at the same place, one mile and a half from Beaver Dam, October 10, 1834. He married, on September 30, 1869, Mary L. Wise, daughter of H. P. Wise, a native of Carroll County, Ky., whose ancestors were Virginians. This union was blessed with four children: Alice M., William B., Sarah Elizabeth and Henry Ewell. Mrs. Taylor was born June 8, 1849. Mr. Taylor is a prosperous and enterprising farmer, and an honored member of one of the most numerous and influential families in Ohio County. He owns a fine farm, with good buildings and choice stock.

LEONARD L. TAYLOR was born in Ohio County, July 5, 1838. He is a son of Richard C. Taylor, who was born in Frederick County, Va., in 1802, and died in 1882, having served in the ministry of the Presbyterian Church for nearly forty years. In 1824 he married Susannah Leach, who died in 1883, leaving a family of ten children: Septimus, Christian, William H., Mary J., Rebecca C., Nancy C., Leonard L., Hugh W., Elizabeth I. and Josephine A. The grandfather of our subject, William Taylor, was a native of Virginia, came to Ohio County in 1802, where he died in 1840. Leonard L. Taylor, following the custom of the county, remained with his parents until the age of twenty-one years, at which time he apprenticed himself to a blacksmith and worked for about a year; then, in September, 1861, he joined the Federal army; enlisted in Company D, Seventeenth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, in which he rose to the rank of sergeant; was engaged in the battles of Fort Donelson, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Dalton, Kenesaw, Resaca, Kingston, Atlanta, Jonesboro and Nashville. At Missionary Ridge he received a severe gunshot wound in the left shoulder; after a service of three years and four months he received an honorable discharge and returned to Ohio County, and began farming. December 6, 1867, he joined himself in marriage with Susan L. Williams, of Ohio County; to this union were born six children, four of whom are living: Annie M., Ulysses S., Titus N. and Mary J. In 1869, Mr. Taylor bought 216 acres of land, where he now resides, and has since added about forty acres; has 100 acres under cultivation, well fenced and well improved with good dwelling, barns, orchard, etc.; carries an average of $1,000 in stock. Mr. Taylor has accumulated his possessions without help other than that afforded by a frugal wife. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, while Mrs. Taylor holds to the Baptist faith. In politics Mr. Taylor is a Republican and takes a lively interest in the political issues of the day. He is a member of the A. F. & A. M., and has passed through all the honors to the master's chair. Mr. Taylor is temperate, and lends his influence to the temperance cause.

S. CALVIN TAYLOR was born in Ohio County, Ky., March 22, 1847. His parents, Tobias W. and Artemisa (Chapman) Taylor, were both born and reared in Ohio County. Richard M. Taylor, the grandfather of S. C. Taylor, was a native of Virginia, and removed to Ohio County, Ky., where he married Delilah, daughter of Tobias Wise, about 1820. The mother of S. Calvin Taylor died in 1858; his father afterward married Elizabeth Taylor, who died November 13, 1866. In 1867 he married Mrs. Sophia Walton, who died in 1877. His fourth marriage was with Mrs. Catherine L. Hunsaker, who survives him, he having died July 6, 1879, leaving five children, of whom our subject is the eldest. S. Calvin Taylor from the time of his birth until the age of thirty-two resided on his father's farm, prior to this time he had bought a half interest in 300 acres of land lying in Muhlenburgh County, Ky., and on the Green River. He has throughout his life followed the vocation of a farmer, and by industry and close application to his business now owns 328 acres of good land, 178 acres of which lie in the State of Texas, and are well under cultivation, 150 acres lie in Muhlenburgh County, 75 of which are under cultivation. He carries an annual average of $3,000 in stock, including horses, mules, cattle, etc. Mr. Taylor is unmarried and resides on the home farm, which he superintends for his mother. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and a Democrat.

THE THOMAS FAMILY is descended from Christopher J. Thomas, a gentleman of English extraction, who came to this county from Henrico County, Va., in 1828, and brought up a family consisting of four boys and one girl. David E. Thomas was born in Virginia in 1814, where his education was acquired. He assisted his father in opening and improving a farm after coming to Kentucky, and at twenty-one years of age, engaged with his brother in saddlery business in Hartford, and continued the business by himself until his death in 1885. He was married May 12, 1840, to Miss Mary A., daughter of Arthur and Mary (Graver) Wallace, of Ohio County. Mrs. Thomas, with her husband, early united with the Methodist Church, and being left a widow with a family of eight children, her life has been one of great care and labor, and to her kind nature and moral precepts is largely due the prosperity of her children, seven of whom are still living: Sarah A., wife of James H. Martin, of Eatontown, N. J.; John C.; Mary J., widow of J. H. Harper, now teaching in the public schools of Hartford; E. Peter; Fannie E., wife of E. W. Johnson, Terre Haute, Ind.; Kate, wife of W. H. Owen, of Owensborough, Ky., and David E. The eldest son, John C., learned the saddlery trade with his uncle and, in 1853, was given a half interest in the business. Soon after he bought the entire stock, and a year later formed a partnership with his brother, E. Peter; they were afterward joined by their brother, David E., and have since continued in the business together. The second son, E. Peter, was born December 20, 1846. By great application, perseverance and study, and seven years' attendance at school, he acquired a good practical business education. November 23, 1875, he married Miss Carrie Jarboe, a Catholic lady, who survived but six years; she left two children: James P. and Mary J. His second marriage was October 31, 1883, to Miss Esther Woodward, a member of the Baptist Church. The third son, David E., was born January 15, 1854, learned the saddler's trade with his brothers, and is still associated with them in business. He was married, October 31, 1878, to Miss Mamie, daughter of W. H. and Caroline (Barrett) Williams, of Hartford. They have been blessed with two children, one son, Tyler Griffin and one daughter, Mary Caroline. These three brothers comprise the firm of Thomas Bros., which ranks with the best in the county in business prosperity. In 1876 they bought a light stock of second-hand groceries at their present stand and combined these with their saddlery stock with an aggregate value of $235.35, their first day's receipts were $6.35.

JAMES A. THOMAS was born March 2, 1823, in Henrico County, Va., a son of John and Anna (Ellis) Thomas. John Thomas was a native of the same county, where he was reared, farming being his occupation. In 1827 he moved his family West, locating in Ohio County, Ky, two miles north of Hartford, where he purchased a farm, and lived until his death in 1835. His wife died in May, 1846. She was a Presbyterian. They had seven children, two now living, James A., and Peter, the eldest, a saddler in Bowling Green, Ky. James A. is the youngest child in the family, and was reared and educated in this county. His education was acquired by home study, and a few days each year at a subscription school. At fifteen years of age he took charge of the farm, and supported his mother and sisters. When eighteen years old, he began flat-boating to New Orleans, which he followed six years, farming at the same time. When he was twenty-four years of age his mother and sister died, and he came to Hartford from the farm, and engaged in the saddlery business. He furnished the capital, hired a workman, and carried on the business successfully fifteen years. He has been engaged in mercantile business with Mr. Hardwick, and, in 1865, gave up his saddlery and other partnership business relations, and gave his entire attention to mercantile business. During this time he has given a great deal of attention to the tobacco business; he is also engaged in farming. He is one of the solid men of the county, and has made all by his own industry. December 14, 1868, he married Miss Mary Platt, of Springfield, Ky. They have four children living: Owen J., Stella, Ettie and an infant. Mrs. Thomas is a member of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Thomas is a Mason, and in politics a Democrat. He has been school trustee and town trustee. He was a quartermaster of the Twelfth Kentucky Cavalry in the Federal service, during the war, and served nine months in 1862–63.

CHRISTOPHER THOMAS is a son of William and Sally (Jackson) Thomas, and grandson of Massie Thomas, a soldier in the American Revolution seven years, also wounded in the same war. He was a native of Virginia, came to Kentucky at an early period, and settled in Ohio County. His grandmother lived to the advanced age of ninety-three years, and was never ill until the day of her death. There were of his father's family thirteen children, ten of whom are living in Ohio County, except Benjamin who resides in Texas. Among those of his father's family may be mentioned Mrs. Jane Austin, widow of the Rev. James Austin, a celebrated Baptist minister; Mrs. Martha Miller, of Hartford; Mrs. E. Shultz, Mrs. David Miller, Mrs. R. Render, Mrs. Peter Walker, Mrs. Dr. Chapman and Mrs. Amanda Austin. William Thomas, father of subject, was a man of considerable wealth and influence, and died in 1862. Christopher was born in Beaver Dam, August 13, 1835, and received such advantages as were afforded by the public schools, and in November, 1857, he married Harriet Kuykendall, the youngest daughter of Matthew Kuykendall, of Butler County. The result of this union was eight children: William, Dora, Florence, Emma J., Robert J., Chistopher, Martha and Harriet (deceased); of these two are married; Dora,. wife of Washington Rone, and Florence of R. H. Hampton. Mrs. Harriet Thomas departed this life September 16, 1872, and December 20, 1875, Mr. Thomas was united in marriage to Mrs. Sally Taylor, widow of Moses Taylor, and daughter of Matthias Shultz, and granddaughter of Joseph Shultz, one of the oldest and most respected citizens of Ohio County. This lady was born March 16, 1850, in Cromwell Precinct, Ohio County. Her children by her first husband are Cynthia E. Taylor, Cyrus L. Taylor and Timous N. Taylor. Mr. Thomas was for many years a prosperous farmer and dealer in leaf tobacco. He has met with severe reverses of fortune, but is now dealing quite extensively in tobacco; his farm and home are nicely located on the north bank of the Green River, about two miles west of Cromwell. Mr. Thomas is known for his enterprise, generosity and strict integrity. His own and his father's family are members of the Baptist Church.

JAMES WILLIAM THOMAS was born May 13, 1857, in Ohio County, Ky., where he has always resided. His father, Henry L. Thomas, a native of Marion County, Ky., was born in 1834, and is still living; he is the son of William Thomas, of Maryland, who is also living at about the age of seventy-five years. Henry L. was first married to Lucinda, daughter of James and Sallie (Leach) Gentry, of Ohio County; she died May 16, 1857, aged twenty-two years, the mother of one child, our subject—James W. Henry L.'s second wife is Sarah Dockery, and their children are John H. and Lucinda F. (Burkley). In youth, subject was favored with such educational advantages as the schools of the time afforded. He was married, December 18, 1879, to Sarah E., daughter of Noble and Chloe A. E. (Acton) Bean, of Ohio County; she was born January 3, 1858, and this union was blessed by the birth of Frank (deceased) and Myrtie E. Mr. Thomas is a farmer, owning eighty-five acres of fair land, well improved, and in a good state of cultivation. He is an active Methodist, and votes the Democratic ticket.

GEORGE BELL THOMSON was born February 14, 1855, on the place where he now resides, in Ohio County, Ky. His father, Harry Thomson, a native of Woodford County, Ky., was born January 8, 1808; removed to Ohio County in 1827, where he acted in the capacity of magistrate for many years; represented his county twice in the legislature of the State, and died July 31, 1877. He was twice married: his first wife was Mahala Harris, and their children are as follows: Richard B., and Josephine (deceased). He afterward married Elizabeth, daughter of Col. Robert and Mary (Monroe) Bell, of Ohio County; born in 1820, and died in 1861, and to them were born James P., Mary A. (Felix), Geraldine, Margaret B. (Hammons), George B., and Inez (Wright). Mr. Thomson enjoyed excellent educational advantages at the Hartford High School, and at the A. & M. College at Lexington. He has taught eight public schools, five of which have been home districts. He was married, January 3, 1880, to Elton, daughter of William H. and Sable (Brock) Lyons, of Hancock County, Ky., born August 6, 1864. Mr. Thomson has been for two years successfully engaged in the sawmill business. He is also a farmer, having 126 acres of fair land, in a good state of cultivation. In politics he is a Democrat.

SILUS N. TICHENOR was born in Ohio County, Ky., December 24, 1836, and is a son of Collier and Anna (Tichenor) Tichenor, natives of Nelson and Ohio Counties, Ky., respectively. Collier Tichenor was educated and married in his native county, where, in early life, he was engaged in the flouring and carding-mill business to some extent, in connection with farming. His father, Daniel Tichenor, owned one of the first horse mills in Nelson County. About 1830, Collier Tichenor removed with his wife and family to Ohio County, where he bought a partially improved farm near the present site of Point Pleasant, upon which he still resides. Mrs. Ann Tichenor departed this life in March, 1872; from early life she was a devoted member of the United Baptist Church. Mr. Tichenor is also a member of the same church. Silus N. Tichenor received his education at the early schools of the neighborhood. He was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority. His father then gave him ninety-seven acres of wild land near Centretown, which he improved, and where he resided about three years. He then bought and moved onto a farm near Point Pleasant, upon which he now resides, and where he is extensively and successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits. He was married, May 24, 1870, to Charlotte J. Maddox, a native of Ohio County, Ky. One son and three daughters have blessed their union, all of whom are living. Mr. Tichenor and wife have been from early life members of the United Baptist Church. In politics, he is a Democrat.

JAMES A. TICHENOR was born in Ohio County, Ky., August 17, 1846, and is a son of Collier and Anna (Tichenor) Tichenor. James A. Tichenor received a common school education in youth. He now resides on the home farm, where he has always been employed, in Ohio County, and is extensively engaged in agricultural pursuits. He was married, May 23, 1876, to Eliza A. Brown, a native of Ohio County, and a daughter of Allen and Isabel (Sapp) Brown, who were among the early settlers of the county. One son and two daughters have blessed this union, all of whom are living. Mr. and Mrs. Tichenor have been, for many years, devoted members of the United Baptist Church. In politics he is a Democrat, and is one of the enterprising farmers of the county.

JOHN W. TICHENOR was born in Ohio County, Ky., March 21, 1847, and is a son of Sanford and Nancy J. (Wade) Tichenor, natives of Ohio and Lincoln Counties, respectively. Sanford Tichenor was educated and married in his native county. After attaining his majority, his father gave him 105 acres of wild land, near Conditt's Ferry, now Point Pleasant, where he improved a farm, upon which he resided until his death, which occurred September 18, 1882, in his sixty-fifth year. For several years he was an officer in the State militia. He and wife were members of the United Baptist Church, in which he officiated as deacon for many years. He was also a member of the Masonic fraternity. Mrs. Nancy J. Tichenor is yet living, and resides on the old homestead. John W. Tichenor received a good common school education in youth; he lives on the farm upon which he has always resided. Soon after attaining his majority, however, his father gave him a farm of 100 acres in the same neighborhood, which he still owns, and to which he has added other lands. Mr. Tichenor is yet unmarried; he is a member of the United Baptist Church. In politics he is a Republican, and is an enterprising and successful farmer.

SQUIRE W. TICHENOR was born in Ohio County, Ky., September 14, 1849, and is a son of Sanford and Nancy J. (Wade) Tichenor, a sketch of whom will be found elsewhere. Squire W. Tichenor received a good common school education, and was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority. His father, at his death, willed him a farm near Point Pleasant, being a part of the old home farm, and other lands, amounting to about 100 acres. He now lives, however, on his brother's farm, in the same neighborhood. He was married December 13, 1874, to Maria Tichenor, also a native of Ohio County, and a daughter of Alney and Amelia (Rowe) Tichenor, a sketch of whom appears in this volume. Two daughters bless their union: Gerda M., and Willie L. Mr. Tichenor is also a teacher of vocal music, having been engaged in that profession a part of the time, in connection with agricultural pursuits, since 1871. He and wife have been for many years members of the United Baptist Church, in which he has held various official positions. He is a Republican and an enterprising farmer and teacher.

LAVEGA W. TICHENOR was born in Ohio County, Ky., December 25, 1851, and is a son of Alney and Amelia (Rowe) Tichenor, both of whom were natives of Ohio County, Ky. Alney Tichenor was educated and married in his native county. After attaining his majority he bought a partially improved farm, near Conditt's Ferry, now Point Pleasant, moved into a log-cabin and subsequently improved a farm, upon which he resided until his death, which occurred in October, 1858, in his forty-fifth year. He and wife were from early life members of the United Baptist Church, in which he was a deacon for many years. Lavega W. received only a limited common school education in youth. He has always resided on the old homestead farm, having bought the interest of the other heirs after his mother's death, which occurred in July, 1878, in her sixty-third year. Here Mr. Tichenor is extensively and successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits. He was married, October 11, 1876, to Mary M. E. Lindley, also a native of Ohio County; one daughter gladdens their home—Georgie E. Mr. Tichenor and wife are members of the United Baptist Church. He was also at one time a member of the P. of H. In politics, he is independent.

HENRY TINSLEY, Ohio County, was born in Muhlenburgh County, Ky., July 21, 1836, and is a son of James and Martha (Martin) Tinsley, the former of whom was a native of Virginia and the latter of Lexington, Ky. They were of Irish and Scotch descent, respectively. When only a small boy, James Tinsley removed with his parents to Muhlenburgh County, Ky. There his early education was received, and there also he was married. After attaining his majority, he first engaged in teaming from the falls of the Ohio, now Louisville, and the Yellow and Red Banks, now Owensboro and Henderson, to Muhlenburgh County. This he continued for several years, or until the locks and dams were built on the Green River. He then bought the interest of the other heirs in the old homestead where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death, which occurred March 5, 1855, in his sixty-third year. Mr. Tinsley was for many years a captain in the Kentucky State militia. He and wife were for many years members of the Old School Presbyterian Church. Henry Tinsley received a good common school education in youth. After his father's death, which occurred in his nineteenth year, he took charge of the homestead farm with his mother, where he remained for eleven years. He then sold out and bought another farm in the same neighborhood, where he remained about two years, when he again sold out and removed to Hogg's Falls, Ohio County, where he erected a steam grist and saw-mill, which he continued to operate until 1874, when he sold the mill and removed to Ceralvo, same county, where he has since been successfully engaged in the drug trade, and for the past five years has conducted the business successfully without the sale of ardent spirits in any shape or form. In the early part of 1861, he enlisted as a private in Company H, Eleventh Kentucky Volunteer Infantry (Federal service), and served with the same in all its marches and engagements until the latter part of April, 1862, when he was mustered out by reason of disability; he advanced through all intermediate grades to that of second lieutenant. He was married, November 6, 1863, to Caroline E. Salsburg, a native of Cincinnati, Ohio, and a daughter of David and Rebecca (Campbell) Salsburg, natives of Philadelphia, Penn., and Cincinnati, Ohio, respectively. One son and one daughter have been left to them: Henry S. and Annie L. Mr. Tinsley and wife have been from early life members of the Old School Presbyterian Church, in which he has been a ruling elder for the past thirty years. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, having held various official positions, and is at present W. M. of his lodge. He is an earnest advocate of the temperance cause. In politics he is a Republican.

DANIEL F. TRACY was born May 24, 1842, in Jeffersonville, Ind. His father, John P. Tracy, was a wagon maker, from Oneida, N. Y., and in 1840, with just a kit of tools came West, and located at Jeffersonville, Ind. There he afterward married Eliza Beck, carried on his trade in Louisville and Owensboro, and in 1853, came to Hartford, where he died February 19, 1877. He was twelve years jailer of the county; was a Royal Arch Mason, Hartford Lodge No. 156, and a member of the I. O. O. F. HON. E. DUDLEY WALKER was born at Hartford, Ky., January 29, 1827, son of Richard L. Walker, who was a prominent merchant of Hartford. Richard L. Walker was a native of Washington County, Ky., and, when a young man, clerked three years at Hardinsburgh, after which he came to Hartford, and engaged in mercantile and milling business until his death, September 15, 1857. His wife was Miss Mahala Harris, of Breathitt County, Ky., who died June 29, 1860. They had five children, three now living: Martha, wife of Dr. W. J. Berry, who served two terms as State senator and one as representative from Ohio County, now residing in Florida; E. Dudley and Dr. W. L. D. Walker, of Logan County, Ky. Our subject was given a thorough literary training, and at seventeen went to Independence, Mo., and read law in the office of Robert G. Smart. At eighteen years of age he was admitted to practice, and soon after returned to Hartford, where he has achieved distinction as a criminal lawyer. Though making the practice of criminal law a specialty, he is retained in almost every case of prominence before the court of the county. In 1857, during the Know-nothing excitement, he was elected to the State senate, though opposed to Know-nothingism. He was the youngest member of the senate during his term. In 1860, during the Douglas campaign, he was Democratic elector for the Second Congressional District. In 1878 he was indorsed by a large part of the State press for governor, but declined to allow his name to be presented to the convention. In his business career he has been eminently successful. In August, 1857, he was married to Miss Elvira English, daughter of Maj. Robert English, a merchant of Hardin County, Ky., who held various positions of trust and honor, among which were those of sheriff and representative. By this union were born five children: Logie (wife of J. E. Rowe, of Hartford), Lizzie C., Lulie, Lidie and Robert D.

SAMUEL WALLACE was born April 25, 1825, near Hartford, Ohio Co., Ky., and in 1860, located two miles south of Rosine, where he now resides. His father, Charles Wallace, was born in Baltimore, in 1777; married April 16, 1797, to Nancy, daughter of Joseph and Ann Benton, of Montgomery County, Md.; removed to Ohio County, Ky., in 1798; built the first court house and jail in Hartford; constructed, on Rough Creek, the first water-mill in Ohio County; opened his house to public preaching; with his two eldest sons made many trips on flat-boats to New Orleans, and returned on foot through the Indian country; he died October 14, 1838. Nancy (Benton) Wallace, his wife, was born January 24, 1783, and died September 17, 1856. Charles Wallace and wife were early and zealous members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and opened their dwelling house for public preaching before the days of churches in Ohio County. All of their sons and sons-in-law were Whigs, and when the late war broke out all of his sons and sons-in-law then living (only two dead) were Union men. Charles Wallace furnished one son, thirteen grandsons and one great-grandson to the Union army, and not one to the Confederate army; he also furnished ten grandsons that married granddaughters, to the Union army. Not one of the whole number, twenty-three, was directly killed, but several died while in the service. Charles Wallace's children are fourteen in number, and their grandchilden 103. All of his children could read and write and some of them were very good scholars for that day. Mrs. Nancy Wallace saw the descendants of thirteen of her children. The names of the children born to her and husband are as follows: Joseph, born in Ohio County, 1799; Benjamin, John, Talbott, Mary A. (deceased), Betsey (Benton) and Polly (Stephens) twins, Franklin, Washington, Nancy (Baird), Eliza, (Crawford), Minerva (Casey), Finis B., and Samuel, our subject. Charles Wallace was the second son of Robert and Violet (Burett) Wallace, who were natives of County Longford, Ireland, and immigrated to Baltimore, Md., in 1776. Robert was the eldest son of Arthur and Peggy (Johnson) Wallace, of County Longford, Ireland. Samuel Wallace, in youth, received a limited education, but has ever been a student, and by continued application has secured a large fund of general information. He has been thrice married; first December 4, 1845, to Elizabeth, daughter of Richard and Ellen (Tabor) Pendery, of Daviess County (she was born in 1833 and died in 1851; her family are now extinct); his second marriage took place November 25, 1852, to Eleanor M., daughter of John D. and Ellen (Hopkins) Tabor, of Hardin County (born December 30, 1829; died February 18, 1856); their union was blessed by the birth of Nancy E. (Crowder) and Amos P. July 31, 1857, Mr. Wallace married Rebecca J., daughter of William J. C., and Betsey (Howard) Stewart, of Ohio County (born May 2, 1838), and to them have been born Richard H., Amanda C. (Davis), Charles F., John G., Margaret E. (Craig), Henry E., Effie M. and Lena A. Mr. Wallace is a farmer, owning eighty-six acres of land in a reasonable state of cultivation. He is a Republican.

JOHN WALLE, Ohio County, was born

October 4, 1833, in Bavaria, Germany; at the age of fourteen years, he immigrated to the United States, and located at Calhoun, Ky., remaining there until 1861, when he removed to Ohio County, where he has since resided. His father, Nicholas Walle, died in 1880, near Munich, at the age of eighty years. His wife was Catherine Bender, now living in Bavaria at the age of eighty years. Their children are John, Barbara (Braun), Nicholas, Andrew, Matthew and Mary A. John Walle had good educational advantages while in Germany. He was married January 22, 1859, to Lucy A., daughter of Elijah and Albina (Hunt) Mosley, of McLean County, Ky., born in 1841, and this union has been blessed by the birth of Laura C., Mara A., Henry H., Sallie T., Eldridge T., Ellear M. and Thomas L. (deceased). Mr. Walle is now superintendent of the large stave yards at Horton, and is also keeping a boarding house at that place. He is a Democrat. His wife is a Methodist.

BARNETT C. WARDEN was born July 26, 1828, in Ohio County, Ky., near Centreville, where he grew to manhood. His father, Evan Warden, was born in 1798, probably in Nelson County; removed with his parents in early childhood to Ohio County; he died in 1877, a devoted Baptist. He was the son of Joseph, a native of Ireland; a public man in Ohio County; died about 1848, aged over seventy years. Evan married Jane, daughter of James and Jane (Howel) Blevins, of Ohio County; she was born in 1802, and died in 1878. Their children are Sarah J. (Fields), Mary (Robertson), Barnett C., Martha A. (Bosquitt) and Garner (Rowe). Barnett C. was married June 9, 1850, to Catherine A., daughter of John and Margaret (Daviss) Collins, of Muhlenburgh County; she was born February 10, 1832, and to them have been born Jane Arabelle (Kimbley), Virgil Luther, Margaret Cordelia (Chinn), Shelby Daviss, Bettie May (Fulkerson), Laura Ellen, Edwin Earley and Mary Pearl, all living. Mr. Warden acted as constable nearly ten years; was deputy sheriff one term; was for eight years employed at a good salary by a large tobacco firm of New York, to superintend their business in this section. He declined the nomination of sheriff of the county; laid off the town of Centreville and was the first merchant there. Mr. Warden is a farmer, owning 100 acres of productive land in good condition and highly cultivated. He is a Democrat. His wife is a Baptist.

THOMAS E. WEBB, third child of Achilles and Cornelia A. (Barnett) Webb, and was born in this county, September 7, 1849. His father is still living, and is a prosperous farmer of Ohio County. His grandfather, George Webb, was an early settler in Hartford, for many years engaged in mercantile business at that place. Thomas E. was reared on a farm, and received his education at neighboring schools. December 22, 1874, he was married to Miss Palestine, daughter of John and Emily Shown, of Ohio County. He then engaged in farming, which has been his main occupation through life, and a year later located on fifty acres, a part of his present farm, when all in timber. This place he cleared, improved and added to, and now has sixty acres under cultivation. He has been unaided in his acquirement of property, and gained all by the industry and frugality of himself and wife. He is a Cumberland Presbyterian, and in politics a Republican. Mr. and Mrs. Webb have been blessed with the following children: Luther H., Clara E., Marsha O. and Alice.

THE WEDDING FAMILY. Thomas Wedding, a native of Maryland, was born of English parentage; served as soldier in the Revolutionary war; immigrated to Kentucky in 1811, where he died in 1838, aged over seventy years. His son, George Wedding, was born in Charles County, Md., in 1786; removed to Nelson County, Ky.; located in Ohio County in 1815, where he served as magistrate and high sheriff for many years, and died in 1854. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Michael Runner, of Nelson County; she died in 1828. Their children are Mary E., George R., Robert G., Mark, Thomas W., Harriet (Pattie), Washington and Maria (Davison). Thomas W. Wedding was born July 20, 1822, in Ohio County, and October 19, 1845, was married to Nancy, daughter of William and Julia (Harris) Wright, of Ohio County; she was born July 19, 1825, and to them were born Hannibal, Mary A. (Medkiff), Martha J. (Shook), Isaac N. (deceased), John T., Robert (deceased), Amanda R. (Smith), James and Ida (Acton). John T. Wedding was born February 17, 1855, in Ohio County, and in 1865, removed with his parents to Spencer County, Ind., where he remained seven years, and then returned to Ohio County, where he has since resided. He was married, October 19, 1876, to Martha J., daughter of Thomas W. and Ellen (Hale) Acton, of Ohio County; she died November 9, 1882, aged twenty-four years. To their union were born Charles Lee and Roscoe. Mr. Wedding is a farmer, and owns sixty-one acres of land in a high state of cultivation. He is a member of the Christian Church, and in politics a Republican.

DR. SYLVESTER JEROME WEDDING, Ohio County, was born September 29, 1849, near Barrett's Ferry, Ohio Co., Ky. His father, Robert G. Wedding, also a native of Ohio County, was born in 1818; he is a carpenter and was magistrate for many years, and is still living. He is the son of George Wedding (see sketch). Robert G. married Mary A., daughter of Caleb and Sallie (Huff) Hale, of Ohio County; she was born in 1823, and died August 11, 1866, and from their union sprang Josephine (Duff), Elizabeth (Harrison), George C., Sylvester J., Winfield S. (deceased), Robert R., Thomas J., Mary H. (Haffey) and John S. R. Dr. Wedding received his education chiefly from Prof. Hayward. December 30, 1875, he was married to Susan W., daughter of John A. and Nancy J. (Barnett) Bennett, of Ohio County, and to them have been born Albert Byron and Leslie Everett. In 1869, he commenced the study of medicine with Dr. J. W. Meador, of Ohio County; in 1876, located and practiced at Fordsville. In 1879 he attended lectures at the medical department of the University of Louisville, where he graduated in 1881. In 1882, he engaged in the practice of his profession, and located at Rosine, where he has since met with much success. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in politics a Republican. He is United States examining surgeon for pension claimants.

JACOB WELLER was born April 11, 1830, in Germany, and is a son of Jacob and Elizabeth (Wolfe) Weller. The father was a farmer and carpenter. Jacob went to school about eight years in Germany, after leaving which, about 1845, he came to the United States, to Pittsburgh, where he learned the wagon-maker's trade, and worked as a journeyman in Pennsylvania, Ohio and Virginia, when, in 1850, he moved to Louisville and carried on his trade three years, and then came to Buford, Ohio County, and continued the same trade. January 31, 1856, he married Matilda Hoover, daughter of Jonathan and Mahala A. (Roach) Hoover, of Ohio County. Immediately after he settled on 220 acres of timber land, which now forms part of the home farm. He has 700 acres of land, 300 of which are in cultivation. There are three dwelling houses—his own, a fine residence—four orchards, numerous barns and other improvements. The farm is heavily stocked with cattle, sheep, hogs, etc., in which he makes a specialty of dealing. This large property is the result of economy, keen trading and good management. Mr. and Mrs. Weller are the parents of nine children, viz.: John H., an attorney of Hartford bar; Jacob R., farming; Mary L., George A., Sallie A., James T., Ada B., Alverda E. and Eliza M. Mrs. Weller is a Baptist, Mr. Weller takes a great interest in educational matters, and favors prohibition.

JOHN C. WESTERFIELD was born October 9, 1832, in Ohio County, and is the eldest son in a family of seven children born to Cornelius and Rebecca (Cooper) Westerfield. The father was born in Shelby County, Ky., where he was principally reared, but when a young man came with his parents, Cornelius, Sr., and Elizabeth Westerfield, to Ohio County, and located about six miles from where John C. now resides, and there opened a farm from the timber, and reared a family of thirteen to full maturity. Of his children, subject's father was at one time a large land owner and did an extensive business in tobacco, in which later he met with heavy financial reverses, and at the time of his death, in 1872, was in reduced circumstances, but paid all indebtedness and stood in high esteem with all who knew him. His seven children: Sarah A. (wife of Cole Fuqua), John C., Jacob H., Julia M. (wife of Leonard Hoover), William H., Joseph C. and Uriah J., are all living. The father's second wife was Mrs. Sallie Langley, nee Johnson. This union was blessed with four children, three of whom are living: Sarah J. (wife of Mr. Baxter), Marsilla and Richard. Owing to the financial embarassment of his father, and the large family to maintain, John C.'s early life was spent in the hard, arduous routine work incident to the life of a farmer boy in a new country; and in consequence of this and the poor educational facilities the time afforded, he was deprived of the advantages of a thorough school training, and his education was acquired by home study at such odd times when not employed, thus securing a fair literary and business education. He was thrown on his own resources, without capital, save his personal energy and a determination to succeed. He has succeeded financially and socially. His first undertaking was that of farming, going in debt for 104 acres where he now lives. He had then only two and a half acres cleared, and a little log-cabin. November 26, 1857, he married Martha M. Magan, daughter of Hudson and Nancy A. (Wade) Magan, of Richmond, Va. They have been blessed with ten children, eight of whom are living: Francis N., married to Lucy E. Taylor; Jacob M., John C., Joseph U., Samuel B., Aretus A., Gilbert D. and Omah F. After marriage, Mr. Westerfield settled on the home place, clearing, improving, building and buying additional tracts from time to time, until he now owns 375 acres of land, 200 of which are under cultivation, with a fine frame residence, commodious and convenient barns, two orchards, the farm under fence and the entire place being one of the best improved, best arranged and neatest in the county. The prosperity of Mr. Westerfield is attributable to his indefatigable industry and to his wife's frugality, encouragement and devoted nature. They are both members of the Baptist Church, as are also the elder members of the family. Mr. Westerfield is a member of the Masonic order, Joe Ellis Lodge No. 473, and was its first Master. He favors temperance and has lived a life consistent therewith. Politically he affiliates with the Democratic party. Mr. Westerfield supported both his father and father-in-law in their old age until their death.

WILLIAM H. WESTERFIELD was born December 14, 1842, in this county. He was reared on the farm, attended the district school, and gained a fair business education. When eighteen years of age he began life for himself by raising a crop of corn, and has given his entire attention to farming. After raising the first crop on his father's farm, he worked out by the month for part of the crop, saving his earnings, with which he made the first payment on his present farm, and bought 115 acres, all in timber. He has seventy-five acres cleared; he also built his present fine residence, one of the best in the county, set out the orchard, built barns, fenced, etc. He was twice married: first to Josephine Burks, Ohio County, who bore him five children, two living: Charles L. and Mary R. His second wife was Mrs. Nancy Stewart, nee Chapman. They have two children: Clarence and Herbert. Mrs. Westerfield has two children by her former husband: Millie and Benjamin F., all at home. Mr. and Mrs. Westerfield and their older children are members of the Baptist Church. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity Joe Ellis Lodge No. 473, and has passed all the chairs. Politically he is a Democrat. In 1864, in the spring, he enlisted in Company A, Eighth Kentucky Volunteer (Confederate) Mounted Infantry, and served under Forrest. About the last of the war, at Selma, Ala., he was taken prisoner, and about fourteen days later was paroled, at Montgomery, Ala., 684 miles from home, to which he walked, and started on 25 cents.

URIAH J. WESTERFIELD, Ohio County, Ky. Among the prominent and influential families of Kentucky, that of Westerfield is widely known, and our subject, a man of fair business and literary ability, is an honored member of the old house. He is the son of Cornelius and Rebecca (Cooper) Westerfield; the former a native of Mercer County, born July 21, 1805, and was twice married; first to Miss Cooper, a South Carolina lady, born in 1808, who bore him nine children, and died in 1860. Mr. Westerfield then married the Widow Langley, who became the mother of three children. The grandparents were Cornelius and Elizabeth (Bruce) Westerfield, who came from Maryland many years ago. A number of incidents are related of their early life in their rude log-cabins, without nails or iron of any kind. A bear once crowded into the door, when Mrs. Westerfield was alone, and made off with a large quantity of meat. The great-grandfather, with one of his children, was killed by Indians while on the road to Kentucky. Uriah J. Westerfield was born May 5, 1852. He had few opportunities for obtaining an education, and at the age of sixteen began working for himself. He has been industrious and persevering, and without other capital than his own determined efforts has worked himself up to his present position of success. October 17, 1872, he married Laura A. Hunter, the eldest of seven children, whose parents were H. J. and Martha Hunter, both of whom are now living at Pleasant Ridge, Ky. Mrs. Westerfield was born in Daviess County, December 21, 1855, and educated near Whitesville. They have three children: Eva, born December 11, 1875; Cora Dena, December 12, 1878; and Noel H., May 24, 1884. Both are members of the Baptist Church, and Mr. Westerfield belongs to the Masonic fraternity, as do also three of his brothers. Jacob H., William H., and Joseph C., brothers of Mr. Westerfield, served in the Confederate army in the late war, the former having been lieutenant under Colonel Shackett, in Gen. Forrest's command, with whom he served three years, subsequently was with Gen. Wharton, under Wheeler. Mr. Westerfield has a fine farm of 144 acres, mostly improved, well watered and timbered, with good buildings, stock, etc.

W. H. WILLIAMS was born January 25, 1818 in Williamsburgh, Hampshire Co., Mass., son of Gross and Mary (Washburn) Williams, both born and reared in Williamsburgh, Mass. Gross Williams was born January 31, 1771, and carried on mercantile business in his native town for thirty-three years. He was also engaged in farming, and ran a distillery. His wife was born December 29, 1775. They had twelve children—eight sons and four daughters. Our subject, in 1835, came to Moscow, Ky., where he clerked in a store for fifteen months. He and a partner then started a trading boat, stocked with dry goods, groceries, etc., ran it on the Yazoo and other streams, and sold out in the summer of 1837. Mr. Williams then returned to his native town and in September of that year, in company with Edward Kingsley of the same town, came to Pittsburgh, Penn., where they fitted out and stocked a boat called the "New York Trader," with which they traded down the Ohio to Green River, taking in on the way, a partner, Mr. Rector. They traded along Green and Pond Rivers, spending the winter of 1838-39 at Island Ford. They bought the keel boat "Fair Play," at Louisville, and continued trading on the Green River and its tributaries several years. They removed the goods from the boat to a store at Wolf Lick, and loaded the boat with produce, which they sold at Memphis, Tenn., where they arrived about May 1, 1844. They loaded their boat there with corn, cotton, etc., which they sold in New Orleans. Returning to Wolf Lick, they removed the goods from the store to Rumsey, and after running several flat-boats South, the firm dissolved partnership, Mr. Williams commencing business for himself at Rumsey. In 1849, he removed to Calhoun, Ky., where he carried on business until 1868, having H. D. Barrett as partner from 1852. Mr. Williams was postmaster at Calhoun from 1849 to 1864, when he resigned. In 1868 he built a tobacco factory, and carried on the tobacco business till the fall of 1871, when he came to Hartford, Ky., where he engaged in the general mercantile and tobacco business until the fall of 1876, when he closed out his business. In November 1878, he commenced the present business under the firm name of W. H. Williams & Son. In 1854, Mr. Williams married Miss C. M. Barrett, daughter of W. S. Barrett, of Hartford. They had two children. Mrs. Williams died in 1862. In 1865 Mr. Williams married Miss Sarah A. Barrett, sister of his first wife. By this union there are three children.

GROSS B. WILLIAMS, junior member of the firm of Williams & Son, was born October 31, 1855, in Calhoun, McLean County, Ky., and a son of W. H. Williams. When seven years old, at the death of his mother, he lived for a time with an aunt in Hartford, attending school there and at Calhoun, completing his education by attending the Owensboro High School three years. He has been engaged with his father in his various business interests, and received a very thorough mercantile training. In 1878 he formed the present partnership with his father. He married Miss Jennie T. Eskridge, September 10, 1879, daughter of Elijah R. Eskridge, of Hardinsburg, Ky. To them have been born three children: Guy E., Lyman G. and Louis H. Mr. and Mrs. Williams are members of the Methodist Church South. Mr. Williams is an active Sunday-school and temperance worker. He is also the founder of the famous Red Front Grocery and Provision Store and does a mammoth business. He is a firm believer in printer's ink.

EDWARD R. WILLIAMS was born April 9, 1848, on the place where he now resides, in Ohio County, Ky. His father, James W. Williams, was born in 1808, in Muhlenburgh County; at the age of two years he removed with his parents, and located on the place where our subject now resides, and died in 1875. He was the son of Edward, who was born in Virginia, was a wagoner in the Revolution and died in 1834. The family are of Welsh descent. James W. married Sally, daughter of Rudolph and Sabsey (Ried) Yonts, of Muhlenburgh County; she was born in 1810, and still living; to them was born one son—Edward R., born November 22, 1871. He married Catherine H., daughter of William and Ellen (Fulton) Davenport, of Ohio County; born November 17, 1847, and to them have been born James W. L., Robert H., Shelby J. and Edward C. Mr. Williams is a farmer, having 250 acres of good land in fair condition and in a high state of cultivation. He is a member of the Baptist Church and independent in politics.

HON. JESSE S. WILLIAMS. Among the many prominent families of Ohio County, none are more widely known, or more highly respected than the Williams family, who came originally from Maryland; the grandfather of our subject came from that State to Ohio County, toward the close of the last century. The parents were Jeremiah and Cynthianna (Morton) Williams; the former born in 1810, and died December 26, 1879; the latter still lives at the old homestead in Ohio County, where Hon. Mr. Williams was born May 24, 1845. He is the seventh of twelve children, of whom ten are now living. He received a thorough common school education, and on arriving at manhood turned his attention to agriculture. He now lives on a farm located on the high road leading from Beaver Dam to Hartford, it consists of a fine tract of land, in a good state of cultivation, well timbered and watered, with a fine large residence, good barns and other buildings. Mr. Williams has met with marked success in all his undertakings, and commands the respect and esteem of the community. In 1881 he was elected to the lower house of the Kentucky legislature and for two years filled that position with honor and distinction, and was elected August 3, 1885, to a second term.

SAMUEL A. WILLIAMS was born April 21, 1854, this county, and is a son of Jeremiah and Cynthia A. (Morton) Williams. Subject improved the advantages of the district school and acquired a fair education. At twenty-two he left the farm, and engaged in business, opening a general store at McHenry's Station, continued four years, when he was burned out with a loss of $3,000, having no insurance. He immediately rebuilt on a more extensive scale, and ten months later sold out and after a short time with his brothers (in the hardware and grocery business), opened his present furniture establishment, occupying a store room (which he owns), of 40x80 feet, and is heavily stocked with all grades of furniture. Just north of his store is situated his large cottage residence. His wife was Miss Carrie Gibson, of Hartford. They were married May 28, 1879, and have two children: Owen and Bessie. The parents are Baptists.

THOMAS WILLIAMS was born October 29, 1832, in Ohio County, and is the second child in a family of nine children born to David and Rebecca (Downs) Williams. The father was born in the same county; was a successful farmer and a member of the Baptist Church; his father was Evans Williams, from Virginia. Thomas Williams' grandfather, Rev. Thomas Downs, was forty years pastor of the Owensboro and Greenbrier Churches. After becoming of age, Mr. Williams flat-boated to New Orleans for five years, and has since farmed with good success. He located in the woods; has cleared ninety acres, built a large, neat residence, set out an orchard and made many other lasting improvements. He owns over 200 acres of land. He was united in marriage, April 5, 1858, with Bettie Downs, daughter of William C. and Penelope (King) Downs. They have seven children. Mr. Williams, his wife and elder children are members of the Baptist Church. Politically Mr. Williams is a Democrat and Prohibitionist. He is a Mason.

FELIX G. WILLIS was born October 29, 1839, in Ohio County, and is the third child in a family of five children born to James W. and Edy (Haynesville) Willis. The father, at the age of twelve years, came from Logan County with his father, David, in 1824, locating near where our subject now resides. James W. was a merchant, and opened the first store in Hinesville; was for many years deputy county clerk and magistrate; with his wife he was a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. His death occurred August 6, 1874. His widow is still living at the age of sixty nine years. Felix G. was the only son and was given a good education. At twenty-two years of age he began farming for himself, and in 1871, bought his present farm of 200 acres in timber, which is now improved with orchards and a large, neat residence, etc. He was married, December 17, 1860, to Nancy Rhodes, daughter of G. W. and Lucy (Dawson) Rhodes, of Daviess County, Ky. Three children have been born to this union: Ettie J., Nonie, Minnie. The children are now attending the Van Horn Institute, at Slaughterville, Ky. The parents take a special interest in the education of their children. Mr. Willis and one daughter are members of the Presbyterian Church, in which Mr. Willis is an elder: his wife is a Baptist. Mr. Willis affiliates with the Democratic party, and is known as a temperance man.

ANSEL WILSON was born October 8, 1834, in Ohio County, Ky., where he has his residence. In 1861, he enlisted in Company E. Seventeenth Kentucky Infantry, and remained in the service three years and four months. His father, Christopher C. Wilson, was born in 1811, in Grayson County, and is now living. He is the son of John Wilson, whose wife was a Blaine. Christopher C. married Ursula, daughter of John P. and Patsey (Pool) Wilkinson, of Breckinridge County; she was born in 1813, and is still living. Their children are Ansel, Mary J. (Renfrew), John H., James O., Joseph P., Martha (Stinson), Sarah P. (English), Frances A. (Bland), Margaret, Narcissa (Green), Thomas B. and Andrew J. Ansel Wilson has been twice married; first, November 30, 1854, to Harriett, daughter of Cobb and Lydia (Day) Stinson, of Grayson County (born in 1836, and died August 6, 1855). He was next married, September 18, 1856, to Cinderella, daughter of Andrew and Susan (Edwards) McEntire, of Grayson County; she was born September 12, 1838; their children are Ellen T. (deceased), Carson C., William E. (deceased), Amanda F., John, Melvin, Susan T., Alvin, Thomas, Rosine, Charles W., Warren B., Arty M. and Ernest.

Mr. Wilson is a successful farmer, having 571 acres of productive and well-improved land in good condition and in a high state of cultivation. He is also engaged in distilling. Mr. Wilson has worked his way up from a small beginning to a comfortable competency. He is a member of the Christian Church and a stanch Democrat.

SAMUEL MARTIN WILSON was born March 17, 1836, in Ohio County, Ky., where he has always had his residence. In 1861, he enlisted in Company H, Seventeenth Kentucky Infantry, and was discharged in 1864, on account of wounds. His father, James Wilson, born in 1804, in Shelby County, removed with his parents in childhood to Jefferson County; then in 1816, to Bullitt County, and in 1822, to Ohio County, where he now resides with Samuel M. (the subject); he is the son of Samuel Wilson, a native of Virginia, born in 1772 and died at this place in 1835. James married Susana, daughter of Robert and Diana (Etherton) Howard, of Ohio County; she was born in 1806, and died 1870; their children are: Samuel M., Elizabeth (Duke and Landrum), Diana T. (Hughs and Knox), and Robert N. (died in the army); Mary J. (Daniel and Hoover) was born of a former marriage. Samuel M. was married November 13, 1855, to Elvira J., daughter of David and Polly (Tootle) Liles, of Ohio County; she was born September 2, 1834, and to them have been born John G., Diana (deceased), James R., William W. (deceased), Mary E., George W., Susan S., Henry B. (deceased) and Anna Belle. Mr. Wilson is a farmer, having 250 acres of fair land in a high state of cultivation. He has been for twelve years a deacon in the Baptist Church, and in politics is a stanch Republican.

JOHN CALVIN WILSON was born in Ohio County, May 27, 1842, and is a son of John Wilson, who was born in the same county and died in 1846, leaving ten children, John C. being the youngest. The mother, Mary (Albin) Wilson, departed this life in 1881, aged seventy-five years. After the death of his father, subject remained on the farm with his mother until he arrived at the age of fourteen, after which he worked on a farm by the month until September 13, 1861, when he joined the Federal army, enlisted in Company A, Seventeenth Kentucky Volunteers, and served as a private until the close of the war. He was engaged in the battles of Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Chickamauga, Kenesaw Mountain, Missionary Ridge, Dalton, Atlanta, Ga., and Duck River, Tenn; received an honorable discharge January 23, 1865, and immediately returned home and resumed farming. February 1, 1866, he was married to Martha (Liles) Miller; by her first marriage, Mrs. Wilson is the mother of five children: Mary J., William O., Martha E., Joseph L., and Josiah. Her marriage with Mr. Wilson has been blessed with four children: Herbert S., deceased, John W., Melzona B., and Ada V. In 1881, Mr. Wilson bought 100 acres of land, where he now resides, and has seventy-five acres well fenced and under a fine state of cultivation, and has recently erected a new barn for the accommodation of stock, to which he gives some attention. Mr. Wilson is a Republican; was a member of the P. of H. Mrs. Wilson and two daughters are members of the Baptist Church. The early education of our subject, owing to the disadvantages of a newly settled district, was limited to a few weeks each year, for about four years, but he has attained a fair business education through close application to the business of life, and has acquired all his property by his own efforts and those of his wife.

DANIEL WISE was born in Ohio County, Ky., March 11, 1817, and is the tenth child in a family of twelve children, born to Tobias and Mary (Grigsby) Wise, both of whom were natives of Pennsylvania, and were of German and Scotch-English descent, respectively. Tobias Wise received his early education in his native State, and when a young man immigrated to Kentucky, then an almost unbroken wilderness. He first settled in Shelby County, but afterward removed to Muhlenburgh, and from thence to Ohio County, where his death occurred in 1855, at the ripe old age of eighty-seven years. During his whole life he was engaged in farming, in connection with various mechanical pursuits. He was also a practical flat-boat pilot, having made numerous trips down the rivers to New Orleans before the days of steamboats, always accomplishing the return journeys on foot. He served under Gen. Harrison during the Indian wars in the Northwest territory, and participated in the battle of Tippecanoe. He and wife were members of the Baptist Church. Among the early settlers of Kentucky were the Grigsbys; soon after their settlement, the maternal grandmother of our subject was slain by the Indians, and her son, Reuben Grigsby, retained a prisoner among them for seven years. Daniel Wise, the subject of our sketch, received such an education in youth as could be obtained at the old field schools of the Kentucky frontier; he has, however, by his own exertions acquired a fair practical business education. He was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority, after which he traveled through the Middle States for about a year. He then returned to Ohio County, Ky., where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1855; he was then employed as foreman during the construction of the Airdrie Iron Works for some three years, after which he again engaged in farming, and was also the land agent for R. A. Alexander, until the breaking out of the war, since which time he has been engaged in constructing and running flour and grist-mills in Ohio and neighboring counties. On the 1st of January, 1885, he, in company with his brother, James Wise, bought the flouring-mills at Rockport, Ky., which our subject is now managing with good success. Mr. Wise officiated as constable in Ohio County for two terms: from 1851 to 1854. He was first married, July 16, 1840, to Amelia Brown, also a native of Ohio County, Ky. To this union were born nine children, four of whom, all sons, are living. Mrs. Amelia Wise departed this life November 3, 1868; she was a devoted member of the Baptist Church. Mr. Wise was next married December 24, 1870, to Mrs. Lizzie (Smith) King, a native of Pennsylvania. Four sons have blessed their union, only one of whom, Malcolm S., is now living. Mrs. Lizzie Wise died September 1, 18—; she was also a consistent member of the Baptist Church. Mr. Wise is a member of no church or secret order, but holds to the doctrines of the Baptist Church, and of ancient craft Masonry; he is a Republican.

HENRY P. WISE, Ohio County, is the son of Philip and Mary (Davis) Wise, and grandson of Henry Wise, who came from Pennsylvania, and landed at the mouth of Bear Grass Creek, where Louisville now stands, and where the father of our subject was born, March 12, 1800, and remained until 1812, when he was bound to Charles Hardin, at the town of Ghent, but shortly bought his time and set up in business for himself. He was a sober, industrious man, and a member of the Christian Church; he died in February, 1877, and his wife in October, 1843. Henry P. Wise was born in Gallatin, now Carroll County, in November, 1823. In 1842, he removed to the vicinity of Hartford, and there married on the 2d of December, 1847 Elizabeth Valentine, a native of Sumner County, Tenn., born June 27, 1829, and youngest daughter of William Valentine, who was born in the same county in September, 1805, and died January 1, 1879. Her mother was born February 11, 1807, and died in March, 1878. They have six children: Mary, wife of R. S. Taylor, a farmer, has four children; Sarah Aerata, William B., married to Vitulia Baker, two children; Philip, married to Almeda Shields, one child; George, married to Mary Ann Taylor, and Belle. Mr. Wise is a carpenter by trade, first learned the tanner's trade. He has a beautiful home on the banks of Green River, in the town of Cromwell; the owner of four fine farms, and is marshal of the village. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity; Mrs. Wise is a member of the Eastern Star. He and his family, as well as the parents on both sides, belong to the Christian Church. His first vote was for Henry Clay, and he belonged to the party called the Clay Emancipationists. He is now a Republican. Mr. Wise is related to the Wise family of Virginia, and to a numerous and honored family in Kentucky. On his mother's side he is a descendant of Col. John Davis, who distinguished himself in the battle of New Orleans.

MARION YATES was born in east Tennessee, January 13, 1836, and is a son of Reuben and Millie (Hughes) Yates. The father removed from North Carolina to Grainger County, Tenn., about 1810; he had eight children, six of whom are now living. Marion Yates' advantages for an education were poor, never having had much schooling, but he has acquired a good business education by his own efforts. At the age of fifteen he was left the care of a widowed mother, a sister and brother, and continued to support them until his marriage, September 5, 1859, to Nancy A., daughter of John P. and Mary (Tittsworth) Baxter, and removed from east Tennessee to Ohio County, Ky., where he engaged in farming, renting for the first year; then bought 185 acres with slight improvement, and continued to farm and to add to his farm until he now owns 230 acres, with about 100 acres under cultivation, and well fenced, all of which Mr. Yates has acquired by hard labor and the assistance of his wife. Mr. and Mrs. Yates have been blessed with six children, all of whom are now living: John R., Parthena A. (wife of Temple Yates), Mary Ellen (wife of John W. Christian), Alonzo F., Dorotha and Luinna. Mr. Yates is in politics a Republican, and served as deputy sheriff under Mr. Smith from 1881 to 1885. Mrs. Yates and some of the children are members of the Baptist Church. Mr. Yates is a member of the Joe Ellis Lodge No. 473, A. F. & A. M. He takes no stand on temperance, but is temperate in his habits.

UNION COUNTY.

HON. WILLIAM FRANKLIN BERRY was born in Union County, Ky., May 24, 1828, is the second child of Martin M. and Rachel F. (Anderson) Berry, and is of English extraction. The Berry family came to America some time in the last century, and settled on what was originally known as the Fairfax Grant, in Virginia, where the paternal grandfather of our subject was born about 1760, and about 1795 came to what is now Union County, Ky. (then Henderson County), and here, in 1805, the father of Mr. Berry was born. The subject of this sketch, at the age of twenty-three, began the mercantile business at Morganfield, and there remained about seven years, and then removed to Uniontown, and engaged in the tobacco business. In 1868 he began the study of law, and two years later was admitted to practice in the courts of Union and adjoining counties. Since 1872 he has been continuously engaged in the practice of his profession. Politically he is a Democrat, and was elected in 1881 to represent Union County in the general assembly of Kentucky. The marriage of Mr. Berry occurred March 24, 1857, to Miss Anne L. Berry, daughter of Philander and Lavinia Berry. They have five children, as follows: Henry E., Willis A., Philander, John J. and Noel A. The parents of Mr. Berry are still living. Mrs. Berry is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

KEN. CHAPEZE, attorney at law, was born in Bardstown, Ky., in 1838, and is a son of Benjamin and Elizabeth (Shepherd) Chapeze, and is of French extraction. The paternal grandfather was born in Paris, France; came to America at the commencement of the Revolutionary war, in which he was a noted surgeon. The father of our subject was born in Bardstown, Ky., in 1787. There was perhaps no man in central Kentucky who was more prominent, or enjoyed a more extended acquaintance than did the famous lawyer, Benjamin Chapeze. He practiced law at Bardstown and Elizabethtown, and in 1839, while defending a man the third time for murder, at Elizabethtown, he was taken suddenly ill, and expired in a few days. The subject of this sketch is one of ten children, and, in his early life, was obliged to support his mother. In early life he was a road-wagoner, and by this means he paid his way at school. In addition to attending school at Bardstown, he spent some time at St. Mary's College, in Marion County, Ky. He borrowed books and read law under Phil Lee and William Weston, and was admitted to the bar at Shepherdsville, Ky., in 1857, and there remained until 1864, when he came to Union County, and here has continued the practice of his profession. He is one of the most successful practitioners at the Union County bar. He was elected county attorney of Bullitt, in 1858. He was married in 1868, to Miss Virginia Hancock, of Henderson, Ky. The union has been blessed with five children, viz.: Louisa (deceased), Ken, Ben, Elizabeth and Mary. He is a Democrat, and Mrs. Chapeze is a member of the Catholic Church.

JUDGE JOHN S. GEIGER, Union County, was born in Louisville, Ky., March 27, 1818, son of Frederick and Sarah Geiger, whose maiden name was Brengman. The Geiger family are of German origin. The father of Mr. Geiger was born in Hagerstown, Md., in 1783, and his death occurred about 1845. His paternal grandfather came to Kentucky about 1789, and was a companion of the celebrated old pioneer, Daniel Boone; was a soldier in the war of 1812, and commanded a company of mounted riflemen at the battle of Tippecanoe. The early life of Judge Geiger was spent in attending school at Louisville, Ky., and subsequently at the Indiana University, at Bloomington. After completing his school work, he began the study of the law under the instruction of Judges Henry Pirtle and Hon. James Speed, who was afterward Lincoln's attorney-general. During the winter of 1840–41, Judge Geiger took the law course at the Transylvania University, at Lexington, Ky. In 1841 he came to Union County, and immediately engaged in the practice of his profession. In 1856 he was elected by the Democrats of Union County to the office of clerk of the circuit court, which position he successfully filled for seven years. In 1866 he was elected county judge of this county, and re-elected to the same office in 1870. After the war, Judge Geiger was, in 1871, indicted in the United States district court, at Paducah—Judge Ballard presiding—for high treason, making treasonable speeches in 1862. This indictment was nolle prosequied by Col. Wharton, United States district attorney. While judge of the county, he, for almost three years, edited the Union County Advocate, the first newspaper that Morganfield ever had. Judge Geiger was married, in 1841, to Miss Laura C. Hughes, of Bloomington, Ind. Their union was blessed with seven children, viz.: Elizabeth, James, Arthur (deceased), Douglas, Ellen, Frank (deceased) and Hattie. Mrs. Geiger died July 10, 1882. Judge Geiger is a Democrat, and has always advocated the interests of his party; he is a Mason, and for many years was master of the Morganfield lodge. Since 1849 he has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

CHRISTOPHER C. HARRIS, Union County, was born in Allen County, Ky., February 15, 1840, is a son of Amos and Nancy (McReynolds) Harris, is the youngest in a family of eleven children, and is of English-Irish origin. The father of Mr. Harris was born in Loudoun County, Va., in 1790, and his mother in Allen County, Ky., in 1802. The father came to Kentucky at twelve years of age, and here lived until his death, which occurred in 1874. Christopher C. Harris remained at home and assisted his father on the farm until his nineteenth year, when he came to Morganfield, Union County, and was engaged in the grocery business, being now the second oldest merchant in the town. He is the senior member of the firm known as Harris & Waller; this partnership was effected in 1880, and the firm has about $7,000 invested in the business. The marriage of Mr. Harris occurred in May, 1860, to Miss Virginia Cowgill, of Union County. To the marriage was born one child. Mrs. Harris died in August, 1864, and the following year, in November, Mr. Harris was married to Miss Rhoda Markwell, of Union County. They have one child—Jennie G. Mr. Harris is a Democrat. In 1864 he was made a member of the I. O. O. F., at Morganfield Lodge No. 37, and he and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. The McReynolds family came from Maryland about 1785.

W. O. HAYNES, attorney at law, Union County, was born in Daviess County, August 12, 1852, son of James H. and Mary P. (Miller) Haynes. Mr. Haynes is the second of a family of three children and is of German-Welsh origin. The father of subject was born in Ohio County, Ky., in 1821. His grandfather was Charles E. Haynes, who was a Virginian, but came to Kentucky and died in Ohio County. Mr. Haynes spent the first years of his life working on the farm for his father, and attending school. He spent four years at Bethel College, at Russellville, Ky., from which institution he graduated in 1878, and in 1881 received the degree of A. M. He was also in 1878 a member of the Yale College Sumner School of Geology in the State of Kentucky. After Mr. Haynes completed his school work he taught for a time and was principal of the Union Academy at Morganfield. In 1880 he began the study of the law, and the following year was admitted to the Union County Bar. In 1884 he formed a partnership in the law practice with Judge Geiger. Mr. Haynes is a Royal Arch Mason and a Democrat.

THOMAS JEFFERSON SHOEMAKER, M. D., Union County, was born in Spencer County, Ky., June 5, 1837, a son of John and Ruth (Offutt) Shoemaker, and is of German-English extraction. His father was born in Pittsburgh, Penn., in 1787, and his mother, Ruth C. Offutt, in the State of Maryland in 1801. The ancestors of Dr. Shoemaker came to America from Germany. His father's death took place in Spencer County, Ky., in 1852. The boyhood of our subject was spent in attending the common schools and St. Mary's College, in Marion County, after which he taught school for some years, and was one of the most successful teachers of his day. In 1862 he began the study of medicine in the office of Drs. R. D. Spaulding and William A. Jones. He attended the Medical department of the University of Louisville, 1863–64, and 1865 he received a diploma from the Kentucky School of Medicine, and one (a diploma) from the University of Louisville, Ky., 1868. In 1865 he began the practice of his profession at Morganfield, and here has since continued. He was married, June 4, 1866, to Miss Frances E. Payne, of Waverly, Ky., daughter of John and Jane Payne. Of eleven children born to this union, only six are living. Dr. Shoemaker is a Democrat and a member of the Catholic Church; through his untiring energy he has made life a success.

WEBSTER COUNTY.

DR. LORENZO A. ARCHIBALD was born April 11, 1844, in Nova Scotia, where he grew to manhood. In 1868 he removed to Robard's Station, Ky., and in 1869 came to Slaughterville, where he still resides. His father, Dr. David Archibald, of Nova Scotia, was born in 1799, and for the past twelve years has been a revenue collector there. He is the son of Isaac, a native of England. David was twice married, first to Miss Sallie Thompson, a native of Scotland. Their children are Silas, Melville, subject, and Edwin; by his second marriage: Sarah and Wilbur. In youth, Lorenzo A. was favored with a classical education and is a man of extensive reading. He was married, September 15, 1875, to Miss Miranda (born in 1857), daughter of Joel Parker, of Webster County, Ky., and to their union have been born Ralph P., Sudie C. and David W. Our subject in youth commenced the study of medicine with his father, and in 1869 attended lectures at Louisville Medical College, where he graduated in 1872. Since that time he has been successfully engaged in the practice of his chosen profession. Dr. Archibald is a member of the Christian Church.

JOHN G. BAILEY was born July 28, 1833, in Hopkins County, Ky., and is a son of John and Martha (Sisk) Bailey. Both his parents were born in Granville County, N. C., and came to Hopkins County when young. The father died in 1833. The mother died August 8, 1872, aged eighty years. Our subject, at the age of seventeen years, entered the circuit clerk's office at Madisonville as deputy, and held that position six years. During this time he also studied law and was engaged in merchandising about two and one-half years. In 1856 he obtained a license to practice at the bar, and since January 1, 1859, has been actively engaged in the practice of law. He has held the office of county clerk of Hopkins County, also county attorney and county judge of Webster County. June 10, 1868, he came to Dixon, where he has since resided. He was married, September 18, 1860, to Miss Adeline McElroy of Union County. This union has been blessed with two sons and two daughters. Mr. Bailey has been a member of the Masonic fraternity for the past thirty years, and has taken ten degrees, including the order of High Priesthood.

H. C. BAILEY, Webster County, is a native of Hopkins County, Ky., was born January 3, 1841, and is a son of Richard and Lutitia (Yeager) Bailey. He is the twelfth of a family of fourteen children, and is of English origin. His forefathers came from Virginia to Kentucky, and were among the early settlers of this State. His father was born in Virginia, and lived in the pioneer times and ways of his native State. Before H. C. had attained his majority, he began life for himself; he clerked in a store for some time and afterward taught one public school, at Dixon, which was the first public school at the county seat of Webster County. In September, 1861, he enlisted in the Confederate army, Company A, Eighth Kentucky Infantry, and served fourteen months, during which time he was a prisoner of war seven months, having been captured at the battle of Fort Donelson. In 1863 he went to Illinois, and after remaining two years, returned to his native county. He was married, in 1869, to Miss Frances J. Parker, of Slaughterville, Ky. Mrs. Bailey was born March 6, 1852. This union has been blessed with five children, viz.: Blondle, born July 20, 1870; Gratz, January 3, 1872; Froy, December 25, 1874; Clyde, December 8, 1877, and Joel, August 3, 1879. In 1869 Mr. Bailey came to Webster County, and settled on a farm five miles southwest of Sebree, where he resided ten years, and then removed to his present place of residence in Sebree. He now owns 750 acres of land, and is one of the leading farmers of Webster County. He is a Democrat and cast his first presidential vote for Seymour. He is a Mason.

G. W. BAILEY was born in Hopkins County, Ky., April 4, 1848, and is a son of G. W. and Elizabeth (Winstead) Bailey. The Bailey family came originally from Virginia, and the ancestors of our subject settled in Hopkins County, Ky., where the father lived until just before the war, when the family removed to Webster County. G.

W. remained at home and helped his father on the farm until his twenty-second year, when he went to Hopkins County, and commenced farming for himself. He remained in that county five years, then came to Webster County, and continued farming for four years, then sold his farm and engaged in the livery business in Sebree, to which place he had removed. He ran this business for some time, then abandoned it and took up his present business, dealing in fine wines and liquors. As a farmer he was successful, and the same may be said of him as a business man. Mr. Bailey was married, May 7, 1873, to Miss Mattie Moore, of Hopkins County, Ky. They have five children: William, Floy, Linnie, Claude and Myrtle. Mr. Bailey is a Democrat.

JAMES BAKER was born January 8, 1816, in Hopkins, now Webster County, Ky., a son of Miles and Fannie (Jenkins) Baker, natives of North Carolina. About 1803 his parents immigrated to Christian County, where they remained five or six years, after which they removed to Hopkins County. The father died in January, 1870, aged eighty-four years, and the mother in 1872, at the age of eighty-four years. James was reared on his father's farm, and at the age of twenty years assumed charge of the farm, and raised one crop. The following year he bought 150 acres, and continued farming. He kept adding other lands until he owned 1,000 acres, part of which he has divided among his children. He now owns 241 acres of well-improved land. He was married, in 1835, to Sarah Price, of Hopkins County, who died in 1864. This union has been blessed with eleven children, six of whom are now living—five sons and one daughter. Mr. Baker is a life-long member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

W. T. BAKER was born August 7, 1841, in Hopkins, now Webster County, Ky., and is a son of James and Sarah (Price) Baker. He was reared on his father's farm, and in 1865 bought 164 acres of land, on which he at once settled and continued farming. He has since increased his lands, and now owns about 500 acres, largely improved. He was married, in 1865, to Fannie Givens, of Webster County. This union has been blessed with six daughters. Mr. and Mrs. Baker are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

GEORGE M. BAKER was born January 23, 1844, in Hopkins, now Webster County, Ky., and is a son of James and Sarah (Price) Baker. In 1864 he made an extended tour through Montana, Idaho, California, and other Western States. The following year he returned to Webster County, and engaged in school teaching. In 1869 he opened a general store in Dixon, and continued business there about three years. In 1873 he visited Texas, where he remained about four months, after which he returned and engaged in agricultural pursuits on the farm where he was born. He came to his present farm in 1882; this farm consists of 520 acres. He also owns 147 acres adjoining this farm on the north. Mr. Baker was married, October 8, 1873, to Jennie Rice, of Hopkins County; she died January 3, 1882, leaving five children—three sons and two daughters. His second marriage was in April 1883, to Mary K. Rice, of this county. One son has blessed this union. Mr. and Mrs. Baker are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

JAMES W. BARNHILL was born in Hopkins County, Ky., December 16, 1848, a son of James B. and Emma (Wynns) Barnhill, both natives of North Carolina, and of English descent. He was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority, when his father gave him a part of the old homestead, upon which he erected a house and engaged in farming until May, 1883, when his house was destroyed by fire He then left the farm which he still owns and came to Providence, where he now resides. In 1884, he erected a new and commodious hotel at Providence. It is a neat, snug building, conveniently located and elegantly furnished with all modern improvements, while the table is always furnished with the best the market affords. It is universally conceded by the traveling public to be one of the very best hotels in western Kentucky. Mr. Barnhill and his estimable wife are well qualified for the position of landlord and landlady. Mr. Barnhill represents the old reliable Continental Insurance Company of New York. He was married, March 7, 1872, to Miss Annie M. Eades, a native of Muhlenburgh County, Ky. They have one son—Claude H. Mr. and Mrs. Barnhill are members of the United Baptist Church. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and in politics a Democrat.

JOHN A. BASSETT, M. D., was born in Bracken County, Ky., March 18, 1841, son of Elijah and Mary O. (Pearl) Bassett, the former a native of Bracken County, Ky., the latter of Fauquier County, Va., and both of English origin. Elijah Bassett was married in his native county. When a youth, he was employed in the county clerk's office with Gen. Payne, for several years. When he attained his majority he was appointed deputy sheriff under his father, and held that position about four years. In 1841 or 1842 he moved to Hopkins County, Ky., where he bought a farm, and engaged in farming for five or six years. In 1847 he returned to Bracken County, and was appointed sheriff, which office he held for several years. He then engaged in general merchandising and in the tobacco business at Brookville, until December, 1855, when he again removed to Hopkins County, Ky., where he engaged in farming until 1862. He then came to Providence, Webster Co., Ky., where he resided until his death in October, 1864, in his fifty-second year. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity. Our subject, at the age of eighteen, commenced the study of medicine, under his uncle, Dr. James Bassett, of Providence, and while pursuing his medical studies taught school a part of the time for about three years. In the winter of 1863, and 1864, he attended the Missouri Medical College at St. Louis, Mo. In 1864, he returned to Providence, where he has since practiced his profession. He graduated from the medical department of the University of Louisville, with the class of 1874–75. The Doctor was also interested in the drug business at Providence for about two years. He was first married December 31, 1868, to Miss Virginia F. Wetzell, a native of Providence, who bore him two children, one of whom—a daughter—is now living. Mrs. Virginia F. Bassett died January 20, 1871; she was a member of the United Baptist Church. Dr. Bassett's second marriage was, November 13, 1872, to Miss Martha F. Givens; a native of Hopkins County, Ky. Six children have blessed their union, of whom three sons are now living. The Doctor and wife are members of the United Baptist Church. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, Select Master's degree, and has served his lodge as W. M. and in various other official capacities. He is a Democrat.

JOHNSON H. BEARD, Webster County, was born in North Carolina, July 15, 1834, to Louis and Rachael P. (Troy) Beard, natives of North Carolina, and of German and Scotch-Irish descent. Louis Beard was educated and married in his native State, where he learned the saddler's trade, which he followed for a number of years, and then learned the tanning business, and for some time conducted a tannery. In 1847 he removed to Mississippi, where he died in January, 1863, in his seventy-fourth year. Both the grandfathers of our subject were soldiers in the war of 1812, and his grandfather Beard also of the Florida war. Johnson H. Beard, at the age of fifteen, commenced to learn the carpenter's trade, serving an apprenticeship of six years with his brother, Alexander Z. Beard. He followed his trade in Mississippi until 1872, when he removed to Kansas, where he remained nearly two years; in January, 1874, he came to Providence, Webster Co., Ky., where he has ever since been employed at his trade. In January, 1883, he was appointed postmaster, which office he still holds. In the fall of 1863, he enlisted in the Confederate service, and served in the quartermaster's department until the close of the war. He was married in November, 1861, to Miss Sarah F. Sanders, a native of Mississippi. Six children have blessed their union, of whom two sons and three daughters are living. Mr. Beard was for two years police judge at Providence, and for the past three years has held the office of deputy county clerk. He and wife, and eldest daughter, are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He is also a member of the Masonic fraternity, having advanced to the R. A. degree. He is an earnest advocate of the temperance cause, and in politics a Democrat.

CHARLES F. BEESON was born in Hopkins County, Ky., March 20, 1841; a son of William and Deborah (McCulley) Beeson, both natives of the "Old Dominion," and of English and Irish origin, respectively. William Beeson, when a young man, removed to Hopkins County, Ky., and bought a partially improved farm near Madisonville, upon which he resided, with the exception of four or five years, until his death. He was married in Hopkins County. For many years he engaged in flat-boating down the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, shipping live stock and produce to New Orleans and other points along the rivers. For several years he carried on the tanning business, but for the last ten years of his life was employed in farming exclusively. He died in 1848; he and wife were members of the United Baptist Church. Charles F. remained on the home farm with his mother, who is still living and is residing with him, until he was twenty years old. He then came to Providence, Webster Co., Ky., where for several years he was engaged in the live stock trade, and afterward for about ten years, in the tobacco business, in connection with the stock business. In 1876 he erected a tobacco stemmery at Providence, and has since been exclusively engaged in the tobacco stemming business. He was married, January 24, 1872, to Miss Laura Rudy, a native of Henderson County, Ky. They have two children: Mary and George

DR. A. E. BENTLEY was born April 10, 1840, in Staffordshire, England, and is a son of William H. and Eliza (Astle) Bentley, both natives of the same place. The father, who was engaged in manufacturing, died in 1862, aged forty-nine years. The mother still resides in England. Our subject, at the age of sixteen, entered Queen's College, Birmingham, and graduated with honors at the age of twenty-one; he then came to America, and, after remaining about six weeks, returned and arranged his business in England. In a few weeks he returned to New York City, where he engaged in the practice of medicine about five years. During that time he had acquired a fortune by speculating. On account of his mother's illness, he returned to England, and during his absence his entire fortune was swept away by bank failures in New York. On his return to this country he learned, for the first time, of his misfortunes, and concluded to go to New Mexico; there he remained about eighteen months engaged in the practice of his profession, and acquired from the proceeds of his practice, solely, a herd of about 300 head of cattle and mules, valued at about $12,000. While driving this herd to the States, and when near the Kansas line, he was surprised by the Indians, who took all the stock and killed all the herders. The Doctor, having a fleet horse, escaped, and proceeded to Fort Lyon for protection. This horse he exchanged for passage to Kansas by stage, and thence by rail to Philadelphia. In 1868 he came to Webster County, Ky., where he has since been actively engaged in the practice of his profession. Since September, 1883, he has been a resident of Dixon. Dr. Bentley was married, in 1868, in Philadelphia, to Mrs. Hernandez, of Savannah, Ga., who died in April, 1875, leaving two daughters. His second marriage was in February, 1876, to Margaret Bowles, of Christian County. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

CHARLES A. BEYMER was born July 6, 1855, in Huron County, Ohio, where he grew to manhood, and in 1873 removed with his parents to Webster County, Ky., the place of his present residence. His father, Edmund Beymer, a native of Guernsey County, Ohio, was born in 1833, is a skilled workman, and is engaged in his calling, which is that of a carriage trimmer and saddler. Edmund is the son of William Beymer, who was the son of Gen. Simon Beymer, of the Revolutionary war. Edmund espoused as his wife, Mary, daughter of James and Eliza (Marsh) Kirkpatrick, of Guernsey County, who was born in 1834, and is now living. Their union was blessed with the following named children: Charles A., Walter E., Clara B. (Cobb), Emma A. (Kenyon), Nellie M., Winifred, Myrtie B. and Gracie M. Charles A. was favored with good literary advantages, having been educated at the high school, located in Bellevue, Ohio, and is well versed in the literature of the day. He is engaged in the profession of farming, and chiefly in the cultivation of wheat and tobacco. His parents are Methodists, and his father is a Republican.

E. G. BISHOP, editor of the Webster County Record, was born September 28, 1857, in Hopkins County, Ky. His father, Isaac W. Bishop, who was a surveyor by profession, and who also engaged in agricultural pursuits, died in 1876, aged fifty-seven years. E. G. was reared on his father's farm, and, at the age of thirteen, commenced to work at the printing trade at Greenville, and followed this trade most of the time until 1880, when he established his present paper, which now has a circulation of about 1,100.

ANDREW J. BRAME was born June 18, 1830, in Person County, N. C. He is a son of Thomas and Nancy (Royster) Brame. His father was born in Virginia, and his mother in Grandville County, N. C. About 1838 the family immigrated to Kentucky, and settled in Christian County; two years later they moved to Hopkins (now Webster) County, and engaged in farming. The father died in 1874, aged eighty-three. The mother died about 1835. Andrew J. was reared on his father's farm, and at the age of twenty-one he rented a farm, and later bought a farm of seventy-eight acres. He now owns 248 acres of land, largely improved, all of which he has earned by constant attention to business and good management. He was married, in 1857, to Nancy Cavanah, of Webster County. She died in December, 1878, leaving one son and four daughters; Mary Alice is since deceased. His second marriage was in April, 1879, to Mrs. Osborn, formerly Mary Frazer, of Webster County. Mr. Brame has been a life long and consistent member of the United Baptist Church.

GREGORY BRILL was born November 25, 1835, in Prussia, and is a son of Michael and Katie (Gaul) Brill. The father was born in Bavaria, and died in 1867, aged sixty-three years. The mother was born in Germany, and died in 1874, aged sixty-six years. At the age of fourteen, our subject commenced learning the milling business with his father, and followed that business in his native country until 1870. He then came to America, and located at Mount Vernon, Ind., where he worked at the milling business seven years. In 1877, he came to Dixon, and bought the mill then situated on the creek. In 1883, he moved the mill to its present location, where he has since been successfully engaged in the business. He was married, in 1860, to Katie Traudt, of the city of Steinau, Germany. This union has been blessed with eight children, of whom—five sons and one daughter—Philip, Donat, Charles, William, Henry and Louisa, are now living. Mr. Brill is a member of the Catholic Church.

WILLIS CORNELIUS BROOKS, Hopkins County, was born January 3, 1859, in Webster County, Ky., and in 1860 removed with his parents to Hopkins County, Ky., where he still resides. His father, Absalom Brooks, a native of Virginia, died in 1860, at the age of forty-eight years. He married Susan C., daughter of George W. and Elizabeth (Winstead) Bailey, of Hopkins County, and to this union was born our subject, as above. After the death of her husband, Mrs. Brooks married Alfred Owen, and from this union sprang one child—Bettie J. She was next married to James Moore, and to them were born Roland and Maud. W. C. Brooks was married, February 27, 1879, to Miss Kittie, daughter of John and Annie (Davidson) Murphy, of Hopkins County (born August 29, 1859), and they have been blessed with two children, viz.: Basil M. and Mamie Y. Mr. Brooks is a farmer, possessing 180 acres of good land, in a high state of cultivation. In politics he is a Democrat.

DR. JOHN LE MASTER BURDON, a native of Butler County, Ky., was born November 2, 1843; removed with his parents to Jefferson County, where he grew to manhood, and in 1882, settled in Hopkins County, where he now resides. His father, Ahaseurus Burdon, also a native of Butler County, died in 1876, aged about sixty-seven years. He was the son of Dr. Benjamin Burdon, who died in 1863, aged over eighty years. Subject's father espoused in marriage Mary A., daughter of Adam Razor, of Jefferson County, and their children are Mary E. (Wiseheart), subject, James W., Laura V. (Wiseheart), Willis C. and Cassie (Morehead). Dr. Burdon was favored with a classical education, and has devoted much time to literary pursuits. He was married, September 28, 1865, to Miss Julia A., daughter of Samuel and Kittie (Schemmehorn) Blair, of Jefferson County (born in 1838), and from this union sprang Samuel A., Edward C., Laura V. and Ella. In 1873, subject commenced the study of medicine with Dr. N. A. Kitchell, of Robard's Station; graduated at the Kentucky School of Medicine, Louisville, in 1875; practiced at Robard's Station until 1882, since which time he has been successfully engaged in the practice of his profession at his present location. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and a Democrat.

DR. GEORGE W. CAMPBELL, Webster County, was born December 28, 1822, in Sumner County, Tenn., a son of Colin and Martha (Parish) Campbell. The father died in 1860, aged seventy years. The mother was born in Virginia, and died in 1855, aged fifty-five years. George W. was reared on his father's farm, and at the age of twenty-five commenced the study of medicine, under Dr. N. L. Porter, continuing his studies three years, after which he attended the Louisville University. In 1852 he came to Hopkins (now Webster County), and located on the farm which he now owns, and where he has since lived. This point was long known as Carlow, where a tavern was kept for the accommodation of travelers, the stages making their headquarters there. A post-office and store was also kept there a short time. Mrs. Ruby then owned the premises. Dr. Campbell now owns this old landmark, which is devoted to stock raising, agricultural pursuits and the practice of medicine. He was married, in 1853, to Miss Albina King, of Hopkins County. This union has been blessed with nine children—four sons and five daughters. Dr. Campbell served in the Mexican war during 1846–47. He is a member of the I. O. O. F.

JAMES M. CHANDLER was born August 13, 1827, in Person County, N. C., and in 1829 removed with his parents to Hopkins (now Webster) County, Ky., where he has since resided. In 1861 he enlisted in Company A, Eighth Kentucky Infantry, in which he remained for more than three years. His father, Washington Chandler, a native of Person County, N. C., died in 1878, at the age of seventy-five years. He was the son of John, of North Carolina, and married Lethey, daughter of William and Polly Morrow, of Person County, who died in 1854. This union resulted in the birth of Rebecca (Mitchel), James M., William M., Mary A. (Hobgood), Sarah J. (Shelton), and Stephen. December 22, 1848, James M. married Margaret J., daughter of Alexander and Bethany (Phillips) Ramsey, of Webster County, born January 30, 1831, and to them have been born Mary E. (Jenkins). Alexander W. (deceased), Sarah J. (Presley), Margaret A., James M., Jr., William T., Laura J., Queen L. and Orlando S. Mr. Chandler is a farmer, having 150 acres of fair land, in a good state of cultivation. In politics he is a Democrat, and a part of his family are connected with the Methodist and a part with the Baptist denominations.

WILLIAM M. CHANDLER was born in Person County, N. C., January 16, 1829. He is of English descent and the son of Washington and Letha (Morrow) Chandler. The ancestors of subject were all natives of North Carolina. His father was born in 1803 and his mother in 1806. The Chandler family landed in Hopkins County, Ky., January 25, 1829, after a lengthy trip from North Carolina. When subject attained his majority, he began farming. In 1850 he came to what was then Henderson (now Webster) County. For thirty-three years he was a tiller of the soil. In 1882 he came to Sebree and engaged in the milling business, which he still continues. He purchased what is known as the Singer Mill, which is one of the best in the county. It has a capacity of about twenty barrels of flour and will grind 150 bushels of corn per day; it is in good running order and is worth $5,000. Mr. Chandler was married in 1849, to Miss Eliza J. Parker, by whom he had eight children, four of whom are living. Mrs. Chandler died in 1867, and the following year Mr. Chandler married Miss Bettie Isbell, and to this union have been born six children, two of whom survive. Mr. Chandler is a Democrat, and he and wife are members of the Regular Baptist Church, of which he has been a member for thirty-three years.

JAMES M. CLARK was born March 25, 1828, in Union, now Webster County, Ky., and is a son of James and Rebecca (McGill) Clark. The father was born in Christian County, and died of cholera in 1832. The mother died in April, 1845. Our subject was reared in Illinois, and at the age of nineteen, he commenced to learn the blacksmith trade, also the wagon-making trade, both of which he followed for twenty-five years. For fourteen years of this time, he carried on the business in Dixon. December 20, 1873, he came to his present farm, consisting of 258½ acres. He has recently disposed of a farm of sixty-four acres. He was married November 29, 1855, to Lovis Womack, of Union County, who died in the spring of 1872, leaving eight children—four sons and four daughters. His second marriage was December 10, 1872, to Margaret J. Herrin, of Webster County. This union has been blessed with three sons and one daughter. Mr. Clark is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and of the Masonic fraternity.

GILBERT N. CLARK was born March 21, 1830, in Hopkins County, Ky. At the age of twenty, he hired out and worked at farm labor about six years. He then bought 167 acres of land and continued farming. He purchased land from time to time, and has owned as high as 1,000 acres, part of which he has given to his children. He now owns about 500 acres, which is well-improved. He was married, in 1854, to Catharine Q. Orsburn, of Henderson County, who died in 1868, leaving three sons and two daughters. His second marriage was in 1869, to Louisa Womack, of Webster County. This union has been blessed with five children, four living—two sons and two daughters. Mr. and Mrs. Womack are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Mr. Clark professed a hope in Christ in September, 1849, and in August, 1851, joined the General Baptist Church, of which his wife is also a member; his first wife, Catharine Q. (Orsburn) Clark, lived and died a consistent member of the Methodist Church.

WILLIAM B. CLARK was born March 9, 1835, in Hopkins County, Ky., and is a son of John and Elizabeth (Henson) Clark. The father was born in Hopkins County and died in the fall of 1834. The mother was born in North Carolina, and is now living in Hopkins County. William B., at the age of seventeen years, hired out by the month and worked at farm labor about three years. He then bought a farm of 145 acres where he now lives. He added other lands, as his means would allow, and now owns 472 acres. He has also given his son 172 acres of land. Mr. Clark has, by his own hard work and close attention to business, acquired this valuable property. He was married, in 1856, to Amanda E. Moorehead, of Union County. They have seven sons and three daughters. He is a member of the Free Will Baptist Church.

JUDGE P. D. CLAYTON, Webster County, was born December 25, 1811, in Person County, N. C., and is a son of Richard and Nancy (Day) Clayton, both natives of the same county and State. Richard Clayton was a farmer, and in 1813 moved to Sumner County, Tenn., and there remained until March, 1835, when the family came to Hopkins County, Ky. He died in 1854, aged seventy-three years. His wife died October 26, 1836, aged fifty years. Our subject had general charge of his father's farm from the time he was eighteen years until he was twenty-seven, when he married Miss Nancy E. Cox, of Hopkins County, August 22, 1839. She was born in Hopkins County, December 8, 1816. He continued farming until 1852, when he engaged in merchandising in Vanderburgh, and continued that business there until 1857, when he disposed of his stock. He then handled tobacco one year; in 1859, he served as deputy sheriff, and in 1860 was appointed United States enumerator. In August, 1860, he was elected county clerk, and re-elected in 1862, but on account of military interference failed to qualify. He was admitted to the bar in 1862, and in 1866 was elected county judge, which office he held one term. He was a member of the building committee in the construction of the Webster County court house. In 1875, he was appointed master in chancery, which position he has since honorably filled. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and of the Christian Church.

RICHARD FRANKLIN COFFMAN was born March 6, 1834, in Webster County, Ky., where he was reared until 1847, when he removed to Hopkins County, and in 1864 returned to Webster County, his present home. His father, John Coffman, a native of Boyle County, Ky., was born in 1805, and removed with his parents to Hopkins (now Webster) County, in 1808, where he recently died. He was the son of Henry Coffman, a native of Virginia, who died here about 1832, and who was the son of Isaac Coffman, of Pennsylvania. John married Elizabeth I., daughter of Howell Cobb, of Webster County; she is now living at the age of seventy-two years, the mother of the following children: William H., subject, Sarah C. (Girod and Orton), Mary E. (Nance), James P., David H., Theodore W., Leah F. (Slaton), Thomas J., Benjamin C. and Medora J. (Smith). April 20, 1864, subject was married to Miss Annie E., daughter of William H. and Lucy (Finch) Ogden, of Webster County, born May 3, 1841, and to them have been born William W., Mary O. (deceased), Benjamin F. and Mamie F. (twins), Elizabeth, John F., Edward and Jesse H. For many years subject has been engaged in general merchandising and tobacco dealing on a somewhat extensive scale, and although he commenced at the bottom, he has amassed a handsome property. During the late war he held the rank of major. He is a Royal Arch Mason and Council in the K. of H. He is a Methodist, and superintendent of the Sabbath-school. In politics an old line Whig, but has acted with the Democratic party since the war.

JAMES PERRY COFFMAN, Webster County, was born January 8, 1840, in Hopkins County, Ky., and in 1855 removed to near Ashbysburgh, where he remained until 1872, when he located in Slaughterville, where he has since resided. He is the son of John and Elizabeth I. Coffman. He was married, January 16, 1862, to Miss Mary L., daughter of William R. and Louisa (Carlisle) Smith, of Webster County (born August 11, 1845), and this union has been blessed with the birth of Edward W. (deceased), Ida K. Roberts S., Carrie, Minnie, James T., May and Annie G. In 1861 Mr. Coffman commenced business as a general merchant and tobacco dealer at Ashbysburgh, where he remained until 1872, when he removed to Slaughterville. On account of reverses he failed in business in 1874, but is now once more on his feet, and prosecuting his business with encouraging success. He is a Royal Arch Mason, a Methodist and a Democrat.

PROF. WILLIAM S. COLEMAN was born in Hopkins County, Ky., December 25, 1844, a son of John M. and Martha A. (Oates) Coleman, natives of Kentucky, of Irish and English descent, respectively. He received his early education at the common schools and academies of his native county, and afterward attended the Greenville College, of Greenville, Ky., for four years and a half. His early life, until he was twenty years old, was passed on his father's farm near White Plains, Ky. In 1869 he came to Providence, Webster Co., Ky, where he has since been successfully engaged in teaching. In 1876 he erected the north wing of the Male and Female Academy of that place. This being insufficient, however, to accommodate the rapidly increasing numbers who came to the institution, he, in 1882, in company with Prof. Shelby Hicks, built the south or main wing of the academy. This is one of the most thriving institutions of learning in western Kentucky, the average number of young ladies and gentlemen in attendance being about seventy. In 1884 Prof. Coleman erected a large and commodious brick boarding house near the academy, which will accommodate about twenty boarders. It is well furnished and is situated on the top of an eminence commanding a full view of the town and surrounding country. Prof. Coleman has spent the greater part of his life either as a student or teacher; he is at present local correspondent of four or five newspapers. He was married, December 28, 1871, to Miss Maria A. Givens, a native of Hopkins County, Ky., and a daughter of Thomas K. Givens. Two sons have blessed their union, John G. and William C. Mr. and Mrs. Coleman are members of the United Baptist Church. In politics he is independent.

JOSEPH CORBETT, Providence, Webster Co., Ky., was born at Fourstones, Northumberland Co., England, September 22, 1829, a son of Joseph and Mary (Elliot) Corbett, both natives of England. Joseph Corbett, subject's father, was educated and married in England, where in early life he learned the blacksmith's trade, which he afterward followed in the town of Fourstones, with the exception of the last ten years of his life. He died in 1864 in his eighty-second year. He served for a time in the English militia. Both he and wife were devoted members of the Church of England. Our subject, at a very early age, commenced learning the blacksmith's trade in his father's shop, and at the age of twenty-one years he left home and went to Newcastle-on-the-Tyne, and was employed in Robert and William Hawthorn's locomotive shops, adjoining George Stephenson's shops, the inventor of the first railway locomotive engine; there he worked for one year. He then went to work in Abbot's shops, at Gateshead, for one year, in the blacksmith department, and was next employed in the Central Railroad shops, Gateshead, and there he remained until July 1, 1854, when he immigrated to the United States. After arriving in this country he went to Pittsburgh, Penn., and obtained work in a steamboat shop, and while working there was employed by the Hon. John Bell, of Tennessee, to work for him at his mines in Crittenden County, Ky., to keep his engines in repair and do the work necessary for the mines in the blacksmith department. He worked for Bell three years or more; in 1859, he came to Providence, Webster Co., Ky., where he opened a shop of his own and remained until 1867, manufacturing buggies, wagons, plows, etc., and horse-shoeing. He then went back to Crittenden and Union Counties, where he was engaged in the coal business until the fall of 1875, when he moved to a farm in the northwestern part of Webster County, which he had bought several years before going on it. There he followed his trade, in connection with farming, until the fall of 1879, when he sold the farm and moved back to Providence, where he opened a blacksmith and wagon shop, and has since been doing a thriving business. He also owns a well-improved farm, one mile east of Providence. He was married, in 1861, to Miss Mary R. Henderson, a native of what is now Webster County, Ky., who died in 1862. She was a devoted Christian. Mr. Corbett's second marriage was May 17, 1868, to Mrs. Esther E. Melloy, a native of Manchester, England. Her first husband, Samuel Melloy, a machinist, erected the first locomotive that ran on the Lebanon Valley Railroad, in the Reading locomotive shops, Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Corbett are parents of seven children, five of whom—four sons and one daughter—are living. Mrs. Corbett had two sons by her former marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Corbett are members of the Church of England. He is a Democrat.

POWHATAN J. COUCH was born October 24, 1839, on the place which he now owns and where he still resides, in Webster County, Ky. He is the son of James D. Couch, who was born in 1803, in Albemarle County, Va.; was reared in Buckingham County, in the same State, removed to Hopkins County, Ky., in 1834, and died in 1866. He was the son of Daniel, a native of Virginia, who died about 1809. Daniel's father, James Couch, was born in England. James D. married Mary A., daughter of John and Mary (Anderson) Couch, of Buckingham County, Va., (born 1814 and now living), and from this union sprang: Powhatan J., Apollas J., Warren L., Arabella S. (Bailey), Leander J., Mary E. (Jenkins), Ida A. (Qualls) and Olive. On January 31, 1866, Powhatan J. married Mary C., daughter of Thomas and Pernettie (Jackson) Browder, of Hopkins County (born January 12, 1846, died April 17, 1879), and to them were born Joe D., Apollas J., Sallie B., Mary P. and Elizabeth C. Our subject is a successful farmer, owning 225 acres of valuable and productive land, in good condition and in a high state of cultivation. He also manages his mother's farm of 250 acres. Mr. Couch is connected with the K. of H., is a member of the Christian Church, and is identified with the Democratic party.

L. J. COUCH, M. D., was born in this county, near Slaughterville, in 1847, and is a son of James D. and Mary (Couch) Couch. He is the youngest son of a family of eight children, and is of English descent. His father was born in Buckingham County, Va., in 1803, and his mother is a native of the same State. About 1843 the family emigrated from Virginia to Webster County, Ky., where the father died. In 1870 our subject began the study of medicine in the office of Dr. Jenkins, of Hopkins County, and afterward attended lectures at the Louisville Medical College. In 1874 he entered the Jefferson Medical College, at Philadelphia, and graduated from that institution in 1875. He immediately commenced the practice of his profession in Webster County, Ky., and in 1876, came to Sebree, where he has since remained in active practice. Dr. Couch was married, in 1881, to Miss Sallie Chandler, of Webster County, Ky., a daughter of William Chandler. They have one child, John. Dr. Couch is a Mason and a Democrat.

PETER COUNTZLER, Webster County, was born in Pittsburgh, Penn., September 1, 1838, is a son of Anthony and Mary (Falkenstein) Countzler, and is of German descent. At the close of the Revolutionary war, the ancestors of our subject came to America and settled in Pittsburgh, Penn. Subject's parents immigrated to Kentucky, when he was very young, and settled in Henderson County. He learned the carpenter's trade under his father, and at the age of twenty-one years, began life for himself. He worked at carpentering for a number of years, locating first at Uniontown, Ky., then at Shawneetown, Ill., and subsequently at Evansville, Ind. In 1864 he came to Webster County, Ky., and for four years clerked in the store of T. J. Jackson. In 1871 he came to Sebree and engaged in the furniture and undertaking business for three years. He then added drugs, groceries and hardware, and still continues in this business. He is one of the pioneer merchants of Sebree, and has been one of the most successful. When he came here he had but $800 and is now worth at least $8,000. He was married in 1871 to Miss Sarah Brooks of Webster County, daughter of W. H. and Jane (Walker) Brooks. They have three children, viz.: George E., Mary J., and Katherine. Mr. Countzler is a Mason and a Democrat. Mrs. Countzler is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

D. H. CREWS, Webster County, was born January 17, 1840, in Henderson, now Webster County, Ky. He is a son of Williamson and Margaret (Marks) Crews. Both parents were natives of Virginia, and immigrated to Kentucky in 1811. The father engaged in farming, and for many years was a minister of the Baptist Church. He died in April, 1880, aged eighty-seven. Subject's mother died in 1880, aged eighty-four. D. H., at the age of twenty-one, bought 100 acres of land and engaged in farming; he added at different times other lands, and owned as high as 600 acres. In 1880, he disposed of his land and engaged in merchandising at Poole's Mill, where he has since been doing an extensive business. Mr. Crews was married in 1861 to Matilda J. Liles, of Webster County. They are members of the Baptist Church. Mr. Crews is a member of the Masonic fraternity. From 1869 to 1875 he held the office of magistrate.

W. D. CROWLEY is a native of what was formerly Hopkins County, Ky., born October 16, 1832, and is a son of Edmund and Clementine (Marks) Crowley. He is the eldest son of seven children, and of Irish and English descent. His father was born in Kentucky, and his mother was a Virginian. The Crowley family has been known in Kentucky for more than half a century, and took an active part in the early improvement of the country. The father of our subject died in 1861. In 1859, W. D. settled where he now resides; he now owns more then 200 acres of land, and his farm is in a good state of cultivation. He raises grain, stock and tobacco. He was married, in 1859, to Miss Mary A. Thompson, a native of Missouri. This marriage has been blessed with seven children: Francis M., Martha J., Edmund J., Clementine, Julia, Ada, and Anna P. (deceased). Mr. Crowley is a Republican, and held the office of constable for some time in his district.

EDMUND G. CROWLEY, Webster County, born August 31, 1838, in what was formerly Hopkins, now Webster County, Ky. He is the third son of Edmund and Clementine (Marks) Crowley, and is of Irish-English extraction. At eighteen years of age began life for himself, and for one year worked in a saw-mill; the next year he worked on the farm for an elder brother, and the third year worked at the carpenter trade. From then until the present time he has been farming for himself. He was married October 17, 1860, to Miss Virginia E. Johnson, a native of Todd County, Ky., and a daughter of Albert A. and Elizabeth Johnson. They have one child, viz.: Emily J. In 1866 Mr. Crowley settled where he now lives, in Webster County; he has 102½ acres of land and 175 acres in Henderson County. As a farmer he is one of the most enterprising and successful. He is a Democrat. Mr. and Mrs. Crowley are leading members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. In 1868 he became a member of the Masonic fraternity. His present residence was built in 1880.

C. A. DORIS was born December 16, 1860, in Providence, Webster Co., Ky., and is a son of M. C. and Elizabeth (Doris) Doris. M. C. Doris, subject's father, was born in North Carolina, and in his youth came to Kentucky. He held the office of circuit and county clerk of Webster County; he died in 1869. Our subject, at the age of sixteen years was appointed deputy county clerk and held that office acceptably until August, 1882, when he was elected clerk, which position he now holds. His long continuance in office is ample proof of his efficiency.

WILLIAM G. DUNCAN was born February 11, 1847, in Henderson County, Ky., and is a son of Absalom and Elizabeth (Robbins) Duncan. The father was born in North Carolina and now resides in Henderson County, of which the mother is a native. Our subject, at the age of eighteen, commenced farming on his own account. He first purchased thirty-six acres and added other lands as his means would allow; he now owns a farm of 132 acres, on which he resides and which is one of the best improved in this locality; he also owns four houses and lots at Robards' Station, Henderson County. Mr. Duncan was married, in 1865, to Louisa Cavanaugh, of Henderson County; this union has been blessed with six children, one son and four daughters are living. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

ISAIAH EAKINS is a native of Henderson County, Ky., born December 12, 1819, and is a son of George and Sarah E. (Melton) Eakins. He is the sixth of a family of ten children, and is of Irish-English descent. The paternal grandfather of subject was born in the Emerald Isle and came to America in the last century. Subject's parents were born in Rutherford County, N. C., his father was born in 1776. In 1811 the Eakins family immigrated to Kentucky and settled in Henderson County, where the parents of our subject died. They were among the first settlers of that county and were thoroughly acquainted with the pioneer ways of Kentucky. Isaiah remained on the farm until his twenty-sixth year, when he commenced life for himself. In 1845 he settled on his present place, where he has since resided. In addition to the old homestead of 200 acres, nearly all of which is in a high state of cultivation, Mr. Eakins has 150 acres southeast of Sebree. He was married, in 1849, to Miss Mary E. Long, a native of Hickman County, Ky., and a daughter of John and Priscilla (Wright) Long, who are of German extraction. By this union ten children have been born: Alphonso D., Rosultha G., Claudius W., Down C., deceased, Theodo D., Zach D., Adell, Minnie I., Anna E. and an infant that died unnamed. Mr. Eakins is a Democrat, but takes no active part in politics. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

REV. ALGERNON EDWARDS is a native of Kentucky, born May 5, 1826, in what is now Webster (formerly Henderson) County, Ky. He is one of a numerous family descended from Capt. James M. Edwards, of Revolutionary fame, and is of English extraction. He is the representative of a long line of ancestry, and for two centuries, at least, the Edwards family has been known in America. The father of this reverend gentleman was born in Virginia, and came with his parents to Jefferson County, Ky. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, and one of the prominent early day men of the State. In 1825 the Edwards family came to what is now Webster County, and made a settlement near where our subject was born, and where he has since resided. Mr. Edwards has long been a tiller of the soul, and is known as one of the best farmers in his neighborhood. He now has 140 acres of well-improved land. In 1855 he was licensed to preach, and since that time has been preaching more or less in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of which he is a member. He was married, May 12, 1848, to Miss Lucy Ann Sandefur, of Henderson County. This union was blessed with nine children, six of whom survive: Decolor, Florence, Laura, Taylor, Barnett and Bell. Mr. Edwards was formerly a Whig, but is now a Democrat.

JAMES W. FRANKLIN was born June 19, 1854, in what is now Webster County, Ky., and is a son of Dr. A. W. Franklin, a native of Virginia, who, at the age of about two years, was brought by his parents to Spencer County, Ky. In youth he received a good common school education; taught school; took up the study of medicine and soon took up the medical profession, which he followed until his death, which occurred in 1864, aged sixty-two years. The mother, Mary E. (Asher) Franklin, is a native of Caldwell County, and is living with her son on the farm. Our subject owns the homestead, consisting of about 200 acres, where he resides. He was married, on October 17, 1874, to Nancy Mitchell, of Webster County. Three sons and two daughters have blessed their union.

THOMAS K. GIVENS was born in Hopkins County, Ky., January 24, 1819, a son of James K. and Margaret P. (Given) Givens, the former a native of Virginia, the latter of Kentucky, and of Irish extraction. James K. Givens, at the age of fourteen, in 1811, came with his parents to what is now Hopkins County, Ky., then a part of Henderson County, where his father, Thomas Givens, bought a partially improved farm, upon which he resided, with the exception of a very few years, until his death. James K. was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority, when his father gave him 150 acres of wild land adjoining the old homestead, where he improved a farm upon which he resided until his death in March, 1855. To this farm he added until he had about 400 acres of land. He was a member, first, of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and afterward of the United Baptist Church. Thomas K. was employed on his father's farm until he became of age, when he bought a partially improved farm in Hopkins County, upon which he resided about twelve years. He then sold out and came to Webster County, to Providence, where, in 1856, he engaged in the tobacco business, which he has since followed in connection with farming. He owns two large tobacco stemmeries, one of which he built in 1866 and bought the other in 1878. For the past fourteen years he has also been engaged in the general mercantile business, most of the time in company with his son, Henry Givens, under the firm name of T. K. Givens & Son. In 1872 Mr. Givens made a trip to California, and in 1875 he, in company with his cousin, John W. Givens, spent three months in Europe, visiting the principal cities and places of interest in England and on the continent. He and his cousin, John W., each own a one-third interest in two stock ranches and other lands in Texas, amounting to 7,500 acres; they have also several hundred head of horses, cattle and mules. They also each own an interest in three or four coal mines, besides several hundred acres of valuable coal lands. Their coal is of a very superior quality, being pronounced, by good judges, superior to any found west of Pittsburgh, Penn. Mr. Givens was first married, January 12, 1841, to Miss Margaret Hunter, a native of Pennsylvania, who died in April, 1845; she was a member of the United Baptist Church. Mr. Givens' second marriage was October 26, 1846, to Miss Judith B. Gist, a native of Clark County, Ky. Ten children are the fruit of this union, nine of whom—three sons and six daughters—are living. He and wife are members of the United Baptist Church. He is now the oldest member of the church in Providence. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and in politics he is a Democrat.

HENRY GIVENS was born in Hopkins County, Ky., April 6, 1849, son of Thomas K. and Judith B. (Gist) Givens. He received a good education, and is a graduate of the Commercial College of Louisville, Ky. He was employed on his father's farm and in his father's stemmery, until he attained his majority, and soon after became a partner with his father in the tobacco business. In 1872, he became a partner with his father in the general mercantile business at Providence, Ky., under the firm name of T. K. Givens & Son. They carry a large and general stock, amounting to about $20,000, with annual sales of about $40,000. Mr. Givens was married, December 28, 1876, to Miss Aggie Rice, a native of Hopkins County, Ky., and a daughter of K. G. Rice. By their union were born two sons and one daughter, all living. Mrs. Aggie Givens died in August, 1882. She was a member of the United Baptist Church. Mr. Givens' second marriage was, January 1, 1884, to Mrs. Byrde (Pike) Murphy, a native of Springfield, Tenn. Mr. Givens is a member of the United Baptist Church, and his wife of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He is a Democrat.

JOHN W. GIVENS was born near the Tradewater, in Hopkins County, Ky., February 4, 1830, and is the only surviving one of nine children born to Jack and Patsey (Given) Givens, the former a native of Virginia, and the latter of Lincoln County, Ky., and of Irish and English origin, respectively. Jack Givens, about 1810, removed to Kentucky, and bought wild land near Providence, in what is now Webster County, but was then a part of Henderson County, where he improved a farm, upon which he remained ten years. He then sold out and bought wild land on the Tradewater, in what is now Hopkins County, Ky., which he improved and where he resided about ten years. He traded the place for another near Providence, upon which he resided until his death, in 1836, aged forty-four years. He was married in 1816. He was a veteran in the war of 1812, and served under Gen. Hopkins. His father, Thomas Givens, was a graduate of the University of Dublin, Ireland, who in early life immigrated to the colony of Virginia, and served with distinction in the Continental army, during the Revolutionary war. Mrs. Patsey Givens, subject's mother, died August 29, 1884, aged eighty-eight years. She was a devout Christian, a member of the Primitive and afterward of the United Baptist Church. Our subject remained with his mother on the home farm, until 1850, when he started for California, accomplishing the entire distance on foot, driving an ox team across the plains. Four months were consumed in making the journey. In California he was engaged in farming and mining for three years. In 1853, he returned to Kentucky, and bought a farm near Providence, where he has since been extensively engaged in farming. He now owns improved lands in Webster and Hopkins Counties amounting to 1,000 acres. Since 1854 he has also been extensively engaged in the tobacco business, and has one of the largest stemmeries in the county. He and his cousin, Thomas K., each own one-third interest in the following property: two stock ranches and other lands in Texas, amounting to some 7,500 acres. On one of these ranches they have several hundred head of horses, cattle and mules. They have also four coal mines, and several hundred acres of valuable coal lands near Providence. In 1875 they spent several months in Europe together. Mr. Givens was married, December 22, 1853, to Miss Judith N. R. Wier, a native of Henderson County, Ky., only child of Gen. William R. and Amelia (Green) Wier, early settlers of Hopkins County, both natives of Virginia. To this union were born two children, one now living—Amelia R., now Mrs. T. O. Sugg; Mrs. Judith Givens died May 5, 1864; she was a member of the Christian Church. Mr. Given's second marriage was April 27, 1866, to Miss Maggie R. Ross, native of Union County, Ky., a daughter of Charles B. and Charlotte (Ashby) Ross, early settlers of western Kentucky, the former a native of Maryland, but reared in Philadelphia, the latter a native of Winchester, Va. Mr. Ross graduated at Philadelphia, and was a lawyer by profession. Mr. and Mrs. Givens have three sons: Ross, James M. and Stuart. In early life Mr. Givens joined the Christian Church; he and wife are now, however, members of the United Baptist Church; he is also a member of the Masonic fraternity, R. A. degree, and is a Democrat.

P. H. GRIFFIN, M. D., was born in Ireland, in March, 1856, and is a son of Jeremiah and Sarah (O'Brien) Griffin. His parents immigrated to America when he was but a child, and settled at Corydon, Henderson Co., where P. H. received his literary education, and afterward taught school for five consecutive school years. In 1873 he began the study of medicine under Dr. J. M. Powell, at Corydon, Ky. During the winter of 1878 and 1879 he attended medical lectures at the University of Louisville, Ky., and the following year attended the Missouri Medical College, at St. Louis, from which he graduated with honors; the same year he came to Sebree, and began the regular practice of medicine, which he has since continued with success. He is one of the leading members of the McDowell Medical Society, of which he was treasurer for 1884.

WILLIAM H. GRIFFITH is a native of Macon County, Tenn., born January, 1848, and is the eldest of a family of six children, born to Byron and Maria (Rison) Griffith, of Welsh origin. His father was born about 1821, in Jackson County, Tenn., and his mother was a native of Huntsville, Ala. His great-grandfather Griffith, was born in Wales, and when five years old, was kidnapped and brought to America. At the early age of fifteen years our subject enlisted in Company B, Thirty-seventh Kentucky Mounted Infantry, and after a faithful service of almost two years, was honorably discharged in January, 1864. He then worked on a farm for one year; afterward clerked in a store for the same length of time, and then for one year traveled through the country selling clocks for the firm of Moore Brothers. In 1867 he came to Petersburgh, where he has since resided. Mr. Griffith was married, in 1868, to Miss Ellen Wise, a native of Jefferson County, Ky., born January 3, 1850, and who came to what is now Webster County when about one year old. This marriage has been blessed with six children: Frank, Charles, Effie, Roy, Guy and Edward. Mr. Griffith advocates the principles of the Greenback party for all national issues. He erected the first business house in Sebree. Mrs. Griffith is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

JUDGE L. B. HALL was born May 4, 1842, in Hopkins, now Webster County, Ky., and is a son of Eli L. and Margaret (Wagner) Hall. His father was born in Virginia, and in 1839 immigrated to Kentucky, settling in Hopkins County, where he engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death, September 14, 1865. The mother was born in South Carolina, and died in August, 1875. Our subject was reared on his father's farm. He enlisted in 1861, in Company A, Eighth Kentucky Infantry, Confederate States army. Two years later this regiment was mounted and placed under command of Gen. Forrest, and served to the end of the war. He then returned to Webster County, and soon after bought a farm of 350 acres, seven miles southeast of Dixon. This farm he has since improved and is now one of the best stock farms in the county. In 1878 he was elected county judge, was re-elected in 1882, and has since creditably filled that position. Judge Hall was married, in 1867, to Miss Martha Williams, of Webster County. This union has been blessed with eight children—four sons and four daughters. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity. He and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

C. C. HARDWICK, Webster County, was born March 31, 1829, in Madisonville, Ky., and is a son of John D. and Nancy (Gordon) Hardwick. The father was born in Montgomery County, Ky., and in 1803 he moved to Madisonville, where he carried on the tailoring business and also kept a hotel. He died in 1875, aged seventy-three years, The mother was born in Henderson, now Hopkins County, Ky. Her father, John Gordon, was the first county surveyor of Hopkins County, and surveyed the town of Madisonville. She died in 1855, aged forty-eight years. Subject, at the age of twenty-three was appointed postmaster of Madisonville, and held that office four years. He next served four years as deputy sheriff. In 1860 he was appointed United States census enumerator. He afterward followed farming four years, and for the past twenty-one years, has been engaged in merchandising in Dixon, except two years spent elsewhere. He was married, December 14, 1848, to Catherine Rutherford, of Christian County, who died in 1857, leaving one son. His second marriage was, November 22, 1859, to Addie Henson, of Crittenden County, Ky. This union has been blessed with eight children—five sons and three daughters. Mr. and Mrs. Hardwick are members of the United Baptist Church. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity and I. O. O. F.

ELLIS HEARIN was born July 23, 1839, in what is now Webster County, Ky. At the age of twenty-one years, he bought 100 acres of land, and engaged in farming on his own account; continued to increase his possessions and now owns about 320 acres of land, about one-half of which is in cultivation. He has just completed a comfortable residence at a cost of about $1,000. Mr. Hearin was married, in 1864, to Elizabeth A. Russell, of Webster County, Ky., and to them have been born seven sons and two daughters.

JAMES J. HICKS was born in Person County, N. C., September 2, 1820, to William and Elizabeth (Lumsford) Hicks, both natives of North Carolina, and of English descent. William Hicks was educated and married in his native State, where he owned a farm upon which he resided most of his life, but was not himself engaged in farming. At the age of twenty-five, he began the study of medicine and afterward practiced that profession for many years. Later in life, he became quite a politician, and at one time was sheriff of Person County. His death occurred February 19, 1849, in his eightieth year. He and wife were life long and devoted members of the Primitive Baptist Church While he was sheriff he lost all his property in consequence of having levied on some negro property, without taking the property in possession, or taking a delivery bond. James J. Hicks, the youngest of his father's family, was employed on his father's farm until he was twenty-two years old. He was then employed at overseeing in North Carolina for two years, after which, in 1846, he came to Kentucky, where he was engaged in the same business for some four years. He then bought a partially improved farm in Henderson (now Webster County), upon which he resided for twenty-three years. In 1873, he sold this place and bought another, two miles north of Providence, where he was extensively and successfully engaged in farming and stock raising until the fall of 1884, when he sold out and removed to Providence. He was married, November 10, 1842, to Miss Anna Peed, a native of Person County, N. C. Ten children were the fruit of this union, of whom three sons and three daughters are living. Mrs. Hicks is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Mr. Hicks belongs to no church, and in politics, is a Democrat.

SHELBY HICKS was born in Henderson County, Ky., January 15, 1854, a son of James J. and Ann (Peed) Hicks, natives of North Carolina, and of English descent. James J. Hicks was married in his native State, where he was engaged in farming for many years. In 1845, he removed with his wife and family to Henderson County, Ky., where some few years later he bought a farm, which was afterward cut off into Webster County, upon which he remained until 1874, when he sold out and bought a farm near Providence, where he still resides. Our subject received an excellent education at Lincoln University, in Illinois, and was employed during the summer season on his father's farm until he was sixteen years old, after which he taught and attended school until he was twenty-two years old. He then engaged as a salesman in a drug store at Providence, Ky., for one year, after which he engaged in the drug business on his own account at Cynthiana, Posey Co., Ind. for two years. For the past four or five years he has been engaged with Prof. W. S. Coleman at Providence, Ky., where they are conducting the Providence Male and Female Academy. The buildings, which are large and commodious, are situated on the top of a hill near the town, and are furnished with all modern appliances, and an excellent library. Prof. Hicks was married, December 26, 1883, to Miss Sallie C. Givens, daughter of T. K.

Givens. Mr. and Mrs. Hicks are members of the United Baptist Church. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and is now, and has been for several years, secretary of his lodge. He is a Democrat.

HARVEY B. HOLLOMAN was born in Hopkins County, Ky., November 18, 1840, to Miles B. and Amanda (Headley) Holloman, natives of North Carolina and Virginia, and of English descent. When only ten or twelve years old, Miles B. Holloman came with his parents to what is now Hopkins, but was then a part of Henderson County, Ky., his parents being among the first settlers of the county. His father bought wild land in the western part of the county and improved a farm, upon which he resided until his death. On this place Miles B. was employed until he attained his majority, and in this county he was educated and married. His father gave him a tract of wild land some two miles south of Providence, which he improved and resided upon until his death, March 4, 1852, in his forty-third year. Harvey B., at the age of fifteen, commenced to learn the carpenter's trade, and served an apprenticeship of five years in Providence, which has been his home ever since, with the exception of three years. At the age of twenty he commenced at the trade on his own account and has been so employed ever since. For the past ten years he has been contracting. He was first married, in 1862, to Miss Mary J. Kirkwood, a native of Hopkins County. Two children, Everett G. and Mary J., were the fruit of this union. Mrs. Mary J. Holloman died in 1865, and Mr. Holloman was next married, in 1867, to Mrs. Joanna E. (Kirkwood) Washburn, also a native of Hopkins County, and a sister of his former wife. They have no children. Mrs. Holloman is a member of the Baptist Church. Mr. Holloman is a Democrat.

STEPHEN R. HORNER, Webster County, was born in Orange County, N. C., February 13, 1838, and is a son of Jacob and Elizabeth (Murdock) Horner. He is the sixth in a family of nine children, and is of German-Irish origin. In 1857 he began serving a three-years' apprenticeship to the harness-making trade, and afterward continued that business and farming in his native State until 1867. He then came to Webster County, Ky., and for thirteen years has been a resident of Sebree. On coming to this place he opened a boot and shoe store, and also carried on harness-making. In 1875 he engaged in general merchandising, which he has since continued. When Mr. Horner began business at Carlow, Webster Co., Ky., in 1867, he had only $70 to invest, and now he is estimated to be worth about $10,000, he worked at the saddle and harness business there four years, and then came to Sebree, Webster Co., Ky., about 1871. He is one of the oldest merchants in Sebree, and is doing a fine business. He was appointed postmaster at Sebree in 1877, and still retains that position. He was married, in 1866, to Miss Martha J. Bolin, of North Carolina. He is a Mason and a Democrat. Mr. and Mrs. Horner are members of the General Baptist Church.

T. J. JACKSON was born January 12, 1826, in Hopkins County, now Webster County, Ky., and is a son of Beckley and Martha (Brown) Jackson, natives of Mecklenburgh County, Va. In 1815 the family came to Kentucky, and located about eight miles north of Madisonville, where the father died in 1860, aged seventy-five years. T. J. was reared on his father's farm and at the age of twenty-one opened a store at Carlow with a capital of $400, and also took charge of his sister's (Mrs. Ruby) farm, his store being on her premises. In 1856 he moved to his present location and continued merchandising. He purchased 100 acres of land, and from time to time has added other land, and now owns about 1,250 acres, about 850 acres of which are improved, giving employment to twelve or fifteen hands. He is extensively engaged in raising and handling fine stock. Mr Jackson has been eminently successful in business, having acquired a fortune of over $100,000. He was postmaster at Carlow for many years. After the completion of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, the office was discontinued on account of the transfer of the stage route. He was married, in 1856, to Miss E. J. Morrow, of Hopkins County. This union has been blessed with ten children, six of whom—three sons and three daughters—are living. He is a member of the Masonsic fraternity and I. O. O. F.

BENJAMIN C. JAMES, Jr., was born in Hopkins County, Ky., November 29, 1844, and is a son of Benjamin C. and Jane E. (Bone) James, natives of Virginia and Tennessee, and Scotch-Irish descent. When a small boy Benjamin C. James, Sr., was taken by his parents to Tennessee, where he was educated, married, and where he was engaged in farming several years. Later he moved to Hopkins County, Ky., where he bought a farm and resided until his death in 1846. He also followed wagon-making to some extent in connection with farming. Benjamin C. James, Jr., remained with his mother on the farm, and at Providence, until 1879. He and his brother-in-law owned a farm one-half mile northwest of Providence, where they were also engaged in agricultural pursuits for several years. In 1880 he moved to the farm where he now lives, some three miles northeast from Providence, which he had bought some time before. Mr. James was surveyor of Webster County for four years, from 1870 to 1874. He was married December 18, 1879, to Miss Helen T. Rice, a native of Webster County, Ky. One son—Thomas C.—was born to this union. Mrs. Helen T. James departed this life February 11, 1882. Mr. James is an earnest advocate of the temperance cause, and in politics is a Democrat.

BENJAMIN JENINGS was born in what is now Webster County, Ky., October 10, 1825, and is one of eight children born to Louis and Nancy (Martin) Jenings, natives of Virginia and North Carolina, and of Irish and English descent. When only a small boy Louis Jenings was brought by his parents to Caldwell County, Ky. There his father, James Jenings, who had served under Gen. Washington, participated in the battles of Lexington, Bunker Hill, and many others; located a military grant and improved a farm, upon which he resided until his death. After attaining his majority, Louis came to what is now Webster County, where he bought a partially improved farm near Providence, upon which he resided until 1860, after which he made his home with his children until his death, October 9, 1865, in his eighty-fifth year. Benjamin Jenings was employed on his father's farm until he was sixteen years old, when he was employed as a laborer on a farm for several years. He then bought a partially improved place two miles west of Providence, upon which he still resides. He was married, in 1850, to Miss Elizabeth Howard, a native of Webster County, Ky. They have no children. Mrs. Jenings is a devoted member of the United Baptist Church. Mr. Jenings is a member of the I. O. O. F., and an earnest advocate of temperance. In politics he is a Democrat.

WILLIAM HALL JENKINS was born November 23, 1853, at Salubria Springs, Christian Co., Ky., and in 1858, was taken by his parents to Hopkins County. His father, Rev. Dr. Warren L. Jenkins, a native of Hardin County, Ky., was born in 1811, removed with his parents in 1825, to Montgomery County, Ill.; was a member of the Illinois conference, a legislator in Wisconsin, a pioneer at Mt. Pleasant, Iowa; next lived in Huntsville, Ala., then went to California in 1850; settled in Sumner Co., Tenn., in 1851, and then in Hopkins County, Ky., in 1858, where he died in 1875. He was a brilliant man, an erudite scholar, made his mark wherever he lived, and was extensively lamented in death. He was the son of Jehu Jenkins, a native of Pennsylvania, who married Hannah Buzan, of Hardin County, Ky., in 1804, and died at Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, in 1859, at the age of seventy-five years. Dr. Warren L. first married Elizabeth A. Killingsworth, of Montgomery County, Ill., to whom were born Laura A. (Lander), Celeste I., Ellen L. and Thomas B. His second wife was Miss Thankful, daughter of Gen. William and Mary (Alexander) Hall, of Sumner County, Tenn., and from this union sprang the subject of this sketch. Gen. Hall was a pioneer Indian fighter in Tennessee, where his father and two brothers were killed by the savages. He was governor of the State and a member of congress. Our subject was married, April 23, 1874, to Miss Mary E., daughter of James D. and Mary A. Couch, of Webster County (born, February 29, 1852), and to them have been born Mary T., Ellen D., William H., Jr., and Thomas S. Our subject is engaged in farming, and acting as insurance agent. He is a member of the A. F. & . A. M., a Methodist and a Democrat.

J. A. JUSTICE, Webster County, was born February 24, 1846, in Robertson County, Tenn., a son of Jack A., and Susan (Ficer) Justice, natives of the same county. The father was engaged in farming and trading, and died in 1854, aged thirty-three. The mother is still living in her native State. Our subject at the age of seventeen, hired out on a farm, where he remained one year, and from his earnings was enabled to attend school; he continued at farm work in the summer, and attended school in winter, and later he taught school, after which he took up the study of medicine, under the preceptorship of Dr. J. T. W. Davis, of Robertson County; after a year's study, the profession became distasteful and he again returned to farming and trading for a year, he then engaged in merchant milling for about two years, after which merchandising was added to the business. Two years later he sold out his interest in the mill, and continued merchandising. February 4, 1875, he came to his present locality, and opened a small store, which he has increased into a large and flourishing business, carrying a stock of from $8,000 to $10,000. Mr. Justice was appointed postmaster in 1877, which office he still holds. He was married in the spring of 1868, to Miss Elizabeth T. Walker, of Cheatham County, Tenn.; one bright daughter gladdens their home. Mr. Justice, by strict attention to business, has risen to be one of the wealthiest and most respected men in the county.

LEWIS KORB, Webster County, was born in Bavaria, March 7, 1837, is a son of Lewis and Rachael (Krever) Korb, and is of German descent. His paternal grandfather was a school teacher in the employ of the Bavarian government. When subject was quite young, his parents left their native country and came to America, and for a time stopped at New Orleans. From there they moved to Cincinnati, Ohio; thence to Ripley County, Ind., where our subject lived and farmed until 1869, when he came to Webster County, Ky., settled at Slaughterville, and engaged in the milling business. In 1880 he came to Sebree, where he continued the milling business, and has been very successful. The mill, which was erected in 1881, has a capacity of twenty-five barrels of flour per day, and cost about $5,000. In 1884 Mr. Korb discovered the Chalybeate Spring on his premises. This spring has already attained quite a reputation, and is becoming famous for the medicinal qualities of its waters. The water has been analyzed by E. S. Wayne, a Cincinnati chemist, and found to contain: Carbonate of iron 2.774; sulphate of lime, .072; carbonate of lime, 1.213; carbonate of magnesia .045; carbonate of sodium .280; total 4.384. Mr. Korb was married, in 1858, to Miss Louisa Snyder, of Ripley County, Ind. They have five children: Louisa R., Anna B., Lizzie, Jacob J., and Allie. Mr. Korb is a Democrat and is now police judge of Sebree. Mr. and Mrs. Korb are members of the Lutheran Church.

W. C. LISMAN was born in Hopkins County, now Webster County, Ky., on Deer Creek, and is a son of John and Martha (Cavanah) Lisman. The father was born in Indiana in 1795, and at the age of fifteen years moved to Henderson County, Ky., where he followed the blacksmith's trade for about nine years, after which he removed to Hopkins County. There he carried on his trade until forced to abandon it on account of old age. He died in Henderson County, in 1866. Subject's mother was born in North Carolina in 1800, and died in 1866. W. C. Lisman came to his present location when about twenty years old, and opened a blacksmith shop which he ran about three years, when he was forced to give up the trade on account of ill health. He then bought seventy acres of land and engaged in farming. He has kept adding to his possessions, and has owned as high as 800 acres of land. He now owns about 600 acres, about one-half of which is fenced. He began life with nothing, and by his own energy and close attention to business has placed himself in comfortable circumstances. He was married, in March, 1841, to Mary Rice, of this county. Eleven children have blessed this union, of whom eight are now living—four sons and four daughters. Mr. and Mrs. Lisman are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, of which he became a member as early as 1844.

JOHN P. McGAW was born in Carroll County, Miss., May 15, 1860, to John R. and Martha A. (Boothe) McGaw, natives of South Carolina and Mississippi, and of Irish and English descent, respectively. John R., at the age of thirteen, moved with his parents to Mississippi, where he was afterward married, and where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1871. He then came to Webster County, Ky., where he bought a farm, on which he resided until his death, in 1878. He served for some two years in one of the Mississippi regiments, Confederate service, during the late civil war, participating in several of the leading battles. He was, at the time of his death, a magistrate. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity, and of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. John P. McGaw still resides on the home place with his mother, and now owns part of the farm. He has held the position of school trustee, and is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. He is yet unmarried, and in politics, is a Democrat.

JAMES L. MELTON was born in what was formerly Henderson, now Webster County, Ky., March 19, 1823, and is a son of Samuel N. and Sarah (Mooney) Melton. He is the fourth in a family of nine children, and is of German-English descent. His parents were both natives of North Carolina, but in early life immigrated to Kentucky. The father of subject proved to be a valuable acquisition to the pioneers of western Kentucky; he manufactured salt at what is still known as Knob Lick and Highland Lick, and was one of the first salt manufacturers in this part of the State. The pioneers came for miles to exchange venison hams for salt, and he carried on quite an extensive traffic in this line. The regular price for salt was $1 per bushel. He died at Highland Lick about 1836, and the mother of our subject died near the same place some time afterward. James L. has been a farmer from boyhood. In 1849 he settled where he now resides, and now owns 600 acres of good land, the greater part of which is in a high state of cultivation. He was married, June 26, 1851, to Miss Elizabeth Humphrey, a native of Muhlenburgh County, Ky., daughter of Rawley Humphrey. This marriage has been blessed with ten children: Samuel W. (deceased), Sarah J., John W., Mary D. (deceased), Andrew J., Rawley E., James M., Elizabeth A., Vitula and Thomas J. Mrs. Melton died August 24, 1882. Mr. Melton is a Democrat, and is one of the few now-living that have spent more than fifty years in what is now Webster County.

JAMES MELTON was born January 19, 1849, in what is now Webster County, Ky., and is a son of R. A. and Sarah A. (Shelton) Melton. The father was born in Henderson County, Ky.; he died May 3, 1879, aged sixty-three. The mother was born in North Carolina; she died in April, 1883. Our subject owns his present farm, which consists of 144 acres of land. He was married, in 1870, to Catherine Mabery, of Webster County; she died April 11, 1877, leaving three children: John T., born July 10, 1871; Samuel R., born December 15, 1873; and Jennie B., October 6, 1875. Mr. Melton's second marriage, in March, 1878, to Mary Mitchell, of Webster County. There is one son living by this union—James J., born September 20, 1882.

JOSEPH MITCHELL was born January 17, 1848, in what is now Webster County, Ky. He is a son of Joseph B. and Sarah E. (Barnes) Mitchell, natives of North Carolina. January 1, 1840, they immigrated to Union County, and engaged in agricultural pursuits. The father died October 25, 1871, aged fifty-four. The mother was born January 5, 1818, and is now living with her son Joseph, who was reared on this farm. In youth the latter received a good common school education, and is well informed on all topics of the day, he now owns this farm, consisting of 146 acres, about one-half of which is improved. He is a consistent member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

JOHN MONTGOMERY, JR., was born in what is now Webster County, Ky., October 4, 1828, a son of Samuel and Rebecca B. (Givens) Montgomery, natives of Kentucky, the former of Franklin and the latter of Lincoln County, and of Irish descent. When six or seven years old, about 1804, Samuel Montgomery removed with his parents to Henderson County, Ky. After a very few years the family came to what is now Webster County, where his father, John Montgomery, Sr., bought wild land, near Providence and improved a farm, upon which he resided until his death. He served under Gen. Anthony Wayne during the Indian wars in Indiana, and was wounded in the left arm in one of those engagements. Samuel received his early education and was also married in Webster County. After attaining his majority he bought wild land adjoining the old homestead, and improved a farm upon which he resided until his death in 1862, in his sixty-seventh year. He engaged in flat-boating on the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers for several years; shipping live stock, tobacco and produce to New Orleans. In the spring of 1815, just after the battle of New Orleans, he made a trip down the rivers with a flat-boat to New Orleans, and accomplished the return journey on foot in sixteen days. He and wife were life long members of the United Baptist Church. Our subject was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority, and in April, 1852, started for California, accomplishing the entire distance on foot, driving an ox team. Four months were consumed in making the journey. In California he was engaged in farming for four years, and returned to Kentucky in 1856. He then bought a farm near Providence, and was engaged farming and flat-boating to New Orleans for several years. In 1864 he embarked in the general mercantile business at Providence and continued for ten years. During most of this time he was also engaged in the tobacco business, which he carried on until 1882, when he retired from active business. He erected the buildings and founded the home school and normal institute of Providence, where Mrs. Montgomery is and has been for years engaged in teaching. Mr. M. was married in January, 1858, to Miss Linda M. Parker, a native of Webster County, Ky., who bore him eight children, five of whom—three sons and two daughters—are living. Mrs. Linda M. died October 8, 1870. She was a member of the United Baptist Church. Mr. Montgomery's second marriage was, December 20, 1871, to Miss Myra A. Woodward, a native of Davidson County, Tenn. He and wife are members of the United Baptist Church; he is a member of the Masonic fraternity, having advanced to the S. M. degree of the council. In politics he is a Democrat.

THOMAS G. MONTGOMERY was born June 26, 1831, in what is now Webster County, Ky., but was then a part of Hopkins County, and is a son of Samuel and Rebecca B. (Givens) Montgomery. He was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority, after which he bought a partially improved farm, a part of his grandfather's old farm, upon which he still resides, and to which he has continued to add from time to time, now owning well improved farms amounting, in the aggregate, to 400 acres. For the past twenty-two years he has been quite entensive ly engaged in the live stock trade, and during the war he was engaged in the tobacco business to some extent. In 1857, in company with a younger brother, he manufactured a flat-boat load of staves, and ran them down the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers to New Orleans in the following year. Mr. Montgomery was never sued in his life, neither has he ever been a witness or grand juror. He was married, November 31, 1853, to Miss Martha E. Hunter, a native of the town of Providence. Nine children were the fruit of this union, of whom five sons and two daughters are yet living. Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery are members of the United Baptist Church. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, having advanced to the Royal Arch degree, and is at present W. M. of his lodge. In politics he is a Democrat.

SIDNEY CARTER MOORE, Webster County, was born September 25, 1826, in Person County, N. C., where he was reared to manhood; he removed to Hopkins County, Ky., in 1850, and in 1852 came to Webster County, where he now resides. His father, Richard R. Moore, a native of North Carolina, died about 1836, at the age of forty-five years. He was the son of John Moore, of North Carolina. Richard R. married Elizabeth, daughter of Samuel Evans, of North Carolina, and to them were born David R., Thomas E., subject and William P. Subject's mother subsequently married Samuel Yarbrough, and to them were born DeWitt C. and Elizabeth (Jones). October 21, 1847, our subject married Miss Ann J., daughter of John and Sarah (Davies), Lunsford of Person County, N. C., (born August 14, 1831); this union has been without issue, but Mr. Moore is rearing two orphans: Mary Adelia and Irwin M. Vaughan. Subject followed farming very successfully until 1863, since that time he has found profitable employment as merchant, broker, general trader and real estate agent, all of which have contributed to a handsome competency. In politics he is a Democrat, and the family are members of the Christian Church.

DR. W. I. MOORE was born November 6, 1844, in Union, now Webster County, Ky., and is a son of A. M. C. and Amanda (Eddings) Moore. The father was born in Muhlenburgh County, and died in 1870, aged fifty. The mother was born in Union County, and died in 1877, aged fifty. Our subject was reared on his father's farm and received a good literary education; he commenced the study of medicine at the age of eighteen, and three years later studied under the preceptorship of Dr. Jeff Holeman, after which he went to Louisville, and entered the Kentucky School of Medicine, from which he graduated in 1870; he also received an honorary degree from the University at Louisville; he then located in Clayville, where he has since been actively engaged in the practice of his chosen profession. The Doctor has lost but fifty days' practice since coming here. He has held the office of deputy county clerk the past fourteen years. He is secretary of the Webster County Medical Association, and is chairman of the board of health in the county at this time, and has been a member of the United Baptist Church sinee the age of eighteen, and is now moderator of that body. The Doctor was married in 1867, to Miss Penelope J. Hammack, a native of Union County. Three sons and two daughters have blessed their union. Respective ages: Mary, sixteen, May, 19, 1885; Lorney, eleven, March 3, 1885; Bain, nine, March 3, 1885; Leula, four, January 30, 1885; Steven Compton, born, April 4, 1885.

DR. DAVID MOREHEAD is a native of Union County, Ky., born November 30, 1821, and is a son of Enoch and Elizabeth (Parrick) Morehead. He is the second of a family of eleven children, and is of Scotch-English origin. His parents were born in Rutherford County, N. C.; his father was born in 1799. Our subject's paternal grandfather was a Virginian, and a soldier in the Revolutionary war. The early life of Dr. Morehead was spent on the farm. By great diligence, and through his own efforts, he secured a fair common school education, and 1841, began reading medicine; he studied alone for some time, but afterward continued the study and commenced to practice under the instruction of Dr. Rufus Linthicum. In 1858 he began to practice on his own account, and has since been a successful physician. In 1859 he settled where he now resides. He was married May 6, 1841, to Miss Elizabeth N. Grayson, a native of Rutherford County, N. C., and a daughter of Joseph and Lettice Grayson. This union has been blessed with seven children: Letitia J., William W., Celia E., Samuel J., Enoch R., James D. and Joseph D. Dr. Morehead is a Democrat. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, having united with that denomination in 1836. He is a Mason and an Odd Fellow.

Yours Very Respectfully
W. J. Moore M.D.

WILL A. MORROW was born October 2, 1825, in Person County, N. C., and is a son of John and Mary (Winstead) Morrow, both natives of the same county and State. About 1840 the family came to Hopkins County, now Webster County, and settled on the farm now owned by T. J. Jackson. The father died in November, 1876, aged eighty-two. The mother died in 1850, aged fifty. Our subject was reared on his father's farm, and in 1857 moved to his present farm, which then consisted of 162½ acres of land. This he has since increased to 286 acres, largely improved. He was married, in 1864, to Sarah T. Cox, of Hopkins County. This union has been blessed with eight children—five sons and three daughters.

CAMPBELL T. MOUNTS was born December 3, 1846, in Brooke County, W. Va., and in 1859 removed with his mother to Hopkins (now Webster) County, Ky., where he still continues to reside. He is the son of Daniel S. Mounts, who was born in 1805, in Ohio County, W. Va., and died in 1857. Daniel S. was the son of Providence Mounts, a native of Virginia, born near Washington, D. C. His father was a Frenchman. Subject's mother, Temperance Mounts, of Brooke County, W. Va., was born in 1812, and after the death of her husband, had the care and responsibility of the family thrown onto her hands, and is now enjoying an honored old age. To her and her husband were born Indiana (Pratt and Hendricks), John M., Mary V. (Crowley), Campbell T., Temperance R. (Parker) and Taylor D. Campbell T. married, October 28, 1879, Sudie, daughter of Joel Parker, of Webster County. Mr. Mounts is a successful farmer, having 718 acres of fair land, in good condition and in a fine state of cultivation. In his political sentiments he is a Republican.

GEORGE W. NALL was born December 12, 1834, in Hopkins County, Ky., and is a son of George W. and Margaret (Holeman) Nall. The father was born in Hopkins County, and died October 31, 1882, aged eighty-three; the mother was born in Caldwell County, February 27, 1804, and died in 1854. Our subject in youth received a liberal education; at the age of twenty he settled on a tract of 100 acres of land given him by his father, and has since increased this land from time to time, to about 400 acres, and it is one of the best improved farms in his locality. In 1882 he built a barn 60x80 feet, at a cost of about $2,000; this barn is said to be the best arranged of any in this part of the State. Mr. Nall was married, in March 1856, to Martha Banks, of Union County; she died in January, 1867, leaving three sons and three daughters. October 30, 1867, Mr. Nall married Sarah E. McClellan, of Webster County. Two sons and four daughters have blessed this union.

ALEXANDER NISWONGER was born in Webster County, Ky., November 16, 1860, to John H. and Letitia (Coffman) Niswonger, natives of Ohio and Kentucky, and of German descent. John H. Niswonger received a good classical education in youth in his native State, where he was engaged in teaching for several years. About 1848 he removed to Henderson County, Ky., where he taught for a number of years; afterward he removed to what is now Webster County, where he was married and engaged in farming for several years. In 1872 he removed to Hopkins County, and bought a farm near Nebo, upon which he still resides; he and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Alexander Niswonger assisted on his father's farm until he attained his majority, after which he farmed a part of the home place on shares for one year. In 1882 he came to Providence, where he has since been successfully engaged in the drug business, and general merchandising. He carries a well selected stock of goods in his line, amounting to about $1,000; his annual sales amount to about $6,000. Mr. Niswonger is yet unmarried. In politics he is a Democrat.

WILLIAM S. NORTHEN was born in what is now Webster County, Ky., July 17, 1852, and is a son of Thomas Y. and Rebecca (Kennada) Northen. He was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority, after which he bought some fifty acres of wild land of his father, near Providence, which he has since improved and now owns, and to which he has added from time to time, now owning a well-improved farm of 230 acres. He is also quite extensively engaged in stock raising. He was married, October 7, 1874, to Miss Eliza G. Thomas, a native of Hopkins County, Ky. Two sons and two daughters gladden their home. Mr. Northen is a member of the Primitive Baptist Church, and in politics a Democrat.

JOHN W. ORSBURN was born in what is now Webster County, Ky., July 5, 1828, son of Randolph and Frances (Mooney) Orsburn. He is one of a numerous family, and is of Scotch-Irish descent. His father was a North Carolinian, born in Rutherford County, October 13, 1795, and his mother was born in the same county, in 1799. The Orsburns came originally from Scotland. Subject's father emigrated from North Carolina to Henderson County, Ky., in 1818, and died in 1868. The mother of our subject died four years before his father's death. Mr. Orsburn, on coming of age, began farming for himself, and has since continued that occupation, save a short time when he resided in Sebree. His farm which is one of the finest in Webster County, is located about three miles, west of Sebree, and contains 550 acres. He was married, April 24, 1851, to Miss Nancy S. Whitsell, a native of Hopkins County, Ky., born July 23, 1832. The Whitsell family came from Georgia. To Mr. and Mrs. Orsburn have been born eleven children: Arbelia, Mary F., Anna C., Lynn B., Sallie F., Donia E., Luke T., John G., Charles M., William R. and James M. Mr. and Mrs. Orsburn are members of the Christian Church. For fifty-six years, Mr. Orsburn has resided near where he was born, and is one of the few men, now living, who have resided in Webster County for more than a half century. He is a Democrat.

R. M. ORSBURN is a native of what was formerly Henderson County (now Webster), Ky. He was born November 5, 1841, to Randolph and Frances (Mooney) Orsburn (see sketch of John W. Orsburn). Subject is the youngest of a family of thirteen children. At the age of twenty-one, he began life for himself, and in 1869 settled where he now resides, where he has one of the finest farms in Webster County. The farm contains 206 acres, and is well improved. In March, 1864, he married Miss Nancy E. Allen, a native of Webster County. This union has been blessed with five children, viz.: David R., Dora, Minnie, Viola and Antonie. In 1861, Mr. Orsburn enlisted in Company C, Tenth Kentucky Cavalry, Confederate States army. He was discharged in 1863, and since then has continued farming. He is a Democrat, and cast his first presidential vote for Seymour. Mr. and Mrs. Orsburn are members of the General Baptist Church. For forty-two years, he has been living within a short distance of his birth place.

ISAAC OSBURN was born June 22, 1820, in Spencer County, Ky., and was reared in Nelson County. He opened a blacksmith shop in Providence, and carried on business there about fourteen years. He then moved to Madisonville, where he carried on the same business for about fifteen years. In 1874 he came to Dixon, where he has since been engaged in the blacksmithing business. He was married to Sallie Bailey, a native of Hopkins County, July 2, 1847. This union has been blessed with four children. His son, John L., became a partner in the business with him in 1876. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

FRANK A. OWEN was born May 16, 1845, in Madisonville, Ky., in 1853 removed with his parents to Uniontown; in 1856 to Hopkins County; in 1859, to Dallas, Tex., and in 1861 returned to Kentucky, where he enlisted in the Eighth Kentucky Infantry, Confederate States army. In 1862 he entered the Tenth Kentucky Cavalry, Confederate States army, in which he remained until the close of the late war. In 1865 he commenced business as a commercial traveler from Evansville, Ind., in which he was successful, and in 1882 located at Slaughterville, engaging in the grocery business, in connection with which he has established a successful trade in the field, seed and grain business. His father, Dr. Abraham B. Owen, a native of Union County, was born in 1811, and died in 1872. He was the son of Joseph, who was born in 1773, and who died in 1829. Joseph's father was Brackett Owen, of Prince Edward County, Va., a Revolutionary soldier, who removed to Kentucky, and located near the present town of Shelbyville in 1783. He was the son of David D. Owen, a native of Wales. Brackett Owen's children were Capt. Jacob, born in 1763, died in 1804; Nancy O. Given, 1765, died 1805; Capt. John, 1767, died in 1822; Col. Abraham, 1769, died in 1811; Maj. David, 1771, died 1832; Joseph (as above); Robert 1774, died 1856; William 1776, died 1856; Jesse 1778; Sarah O. Glass, 1780, died 1837, and Samuel 1782. Dr. Abraham B. Owen espoused in marriage Rachel F., daughter of John and Nancy (Allin) Browder, of Hopkins County (born in 1821, now living), and their offspring are Frank A., Dr. Abraham M., Dr. John E. and Dollie E. (Owen). In youth Frank A. received a good English education, and by a liberal course of reading and application is possessed of a varied fund of general information. He first married, November 5, 1873, Josie, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Babcock) Haff, of Evansville, Ind. (born 1846, died July 22, 1874). April 14, 1880, he married Ida A., daughter of Richard M. and Keturah (Dixon) Allin, of Henderson, Ky. (born December 19, 1857), and to them have been born Allin Browder, Ruth Fayon and Frank A. The children of Joseph, the son of Brackett Owen, were Nancy (Blue), Lewis, Austin, Permelia, Valentine, William W., Elizabeth O. (Sweatman), Henry H., Abraham B., Jane O. (Smith), Paulina O. (Kinkead), Joseph and Robert. The Owen family have participated largely in the wars of the country and have figured extensively in the battles of the Republic.

JAMES D. PALMER, Webster County, county surveyor, was born December 31,

J. H. Parker

1832, in Henry County, Tenn. He is a son of John L. and Martha (Doris) Palmer, natives of Kentucky. At an early day they moved to Tennessee, and remained until 1840, when they returned to Kentucky and settled in what is now Webster County. In 1846 the father left for Texas, but died on the way, aged forty-four. The mother died in 1859, aged forty-eight. Our subject in youth received a good education. At the age of eighteen he taught one session, after which he took up surveying, which profession he has since followed, and on the organization of Webster County, he was appointed surveyor; after serving ten years he resigned, but is now serving his third term. He owns a farm of eighty acres, one mile northeast of Providence, on which he resides. He was married, in 1863, to Martha J. Mooney, of Webster County. Five sons and one daughter have blessed their union.

GEORGE PARKER was born January 11, 1825, in North Carolina, and at about the age of nine he came with his parents to what is now Webster County. After the death of the father, he with his brother, Westley, took charge of the farm; there he remained till the age of twenty-three, when he settled on 100 acres of land which he had purchased. He continued in agricultural pursuits and from time to time purchased other lands, as his means would allow, and now owns 954 acres, about 400 of which are improved. Mr. Parker has acquired this valuable property by attending strictly to business and judicious management. He was married, in 1847, to Isabella Gooch, of Hopkins County. This lady died in February, 1864, leaving five sons. Mr. Parker's second marriage was in March, 1865, to Delia F. Ruby, of Webster County. This marriage has been blessed with four sons and three daughters. Mrs. Parker is a member of the Christian Church, having joined this body at the age of sixteen.

JOHN H. PARKER, Webster County, was born in Person County, N. C., November 28, 1835, son of Jonas and Ruth (Tapp) Parker, the former a native of Virginia, the latter of North Carolina, and both of English descent. Jonas Parker, while yet a young man, immigrated to North Carolina, where he married and engaged in the pursuit of farming until the year 1837, when he with his then large family of five sons and five daughters immigrated to Kentucky, where he opened a settlement in the great wild forest, now near Dixon, the county seat of Webster County. Three years later he died at the age of fifty, leaving his wife and ten children, besides a number of colored servants, to mourn his loss. He and his wife were members of the Primitive Baptist Church. John H., the subject of this sketch, was the youngest of the family, and being only five years old at his father's death, was brought up entirely by the Christian efforts of his widowed mother. He received a liberal education in the common and graded schools, and was also a student in Center College, of Danville, Ky., in the years of 1854 and 1855. At the age of twenty commenced teaching, which he continued for three years to the great satisfaction of his employers and his own educational improvement. Just at the opening of his last school he was married, February 18, 1858, to Miss Sallie F. Johnson, a native of Webster County, and the youngest daughter of Jack and Polly Johnson, who were early pioneers of this country. At the close of this school he and his loving young bride removed to her mother's, who was then a widow, living near Shiloh Church, same county, and being placed in charge of her farm and servants, pursued the life of a quiet and happy farmer for three consecutive years until, during the last year, the unhappy and unholy war broke out between the North and South. Being strong sympathizers with the South, they quickly decided to move southward with their effects, especially their slaves, which they did, stopping near Gallatin, Sumner Co., Tenn.. and remaining in that State nearly two years. During this time he sold the most of his slaves for good prices in gold. At this crisis of the war, believing that the thing was "all up" with the South, he, with his young family—minus the slaves—removed back to their State and located at Providence, on New Year's Day, 1865, where he engaged in the mercantile business, which he still pursues, handling almost every line known to the trade. He now has a large two-story house, consisting of eight store-rooms, in which he carries a stock of $30,000—annual sales average $60,000. He also deals in leaf tobacco and owns the best stemmery and factory in the Green River Country. At the present time he owns and operates a skating rink and opera house combined. He and his wife are zealous members of the Christian Church. They have buried five children, and have five now living—three sons and two daughters. Their sons are Christian named (in the order of their ages) John Y., Joseph and Tom. The eldest, now called "Bud," is twenty years old, and is the book-keeper for the firm. The daughters, Fannie and Ruth, possess rare beauty and intelligence and are both gifted in music. They are now in Hamilton College, Lexington, Ky., where they will complete their education. Mr. Parker is not known as a politician, but is a true and consistent Democrat.

JOHN C. PARKER was born November 21, 1845, in Hopkins County, now Webster. He received a good literary education in his youth, and, in 1863, enlisted in Company A, Eighth Kentucky Mounted Infantry, Confederate States army, and after being in the service three months, was accidentally wounded in the hand; he then resigned, returned home and attended school one year, after which he taught school, in all about two years. In the fall 1867, he bought from his father 126 acres of land, and now owns 236 acres, mostly improved. He was married, November 6, 1866, to Miss Mattie Tapp, who was born in Henderson, now Webster County. This union has been blessed with six children—two sons and four daughters. They are members of the Christian Church. Mr. Parker is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

HON. WILLIAM RANDOLPH PARKER, Webster County, was born May 5, 1849, in Henderson County, Ky., where he grew to manhood, and in 1866 removed to Webster County, his present home. His father, Joel Parker, a native of Granville County, N. C., was born in 1824, came to Kentucky with his parents, and is still living. He is the son of Jonas Parker. Joel has been twice married: first to Sarah A., daughter of Randolph Osborn, of Henderson County, and from this union sprang our subject, Fannie (Bailey), Susan (Mounts), Miranda (Archibald), and Joel. By his second marriage with Queen Chandler, nee Bailey, were born three children; two died in infancy, and Pearl is still living. W. R. Parker was married, March 27, 1876, to Miss Tempie R. Mounts, of Webster County, (born in 1849), and to them have been born two children: Gem and Otto. Mrs. Tempie R. Parker died April 16, 1885. Mr. Parker has served one term in the State legislature and for many years been active as a constable, deputy clerk and chairman of the board of trustees of his village. He is a merchant and general trader, in which fortune has favored him. He is a Royal Arch Mason and politically a Democrat.

JOHN W. PATTERSON was born October 30, 1849, in Metcalfe County, Ky., where he grew to manhood; in 1871 he removed to Greenville, Mo., and in 1872 came to Webster County, Ky., where he has since resided. His father, Black M. Patterson, also a native of Metcalfe County, was born in 1821, and is now living here. He is the son of John Patterson, a Virginian, and a soldier in the war of 1812. Black M. married Polley B., daughter of William B. and Amy (Price) Rodgers, of Adair County, Ky. (born in 1831), and to them were born subject, Thomas B., Sarah A. (Brooks), Amanda L. (Brooks), Susan (Prather), James N., Elloye (deceased), Fannie B. and Bennett M. April 13, 1881, subject was married to Mary E. (born, October 15, 1853), daughter of J. M. Nisbett, Esq., of Madisonville, Ky., and this union has been favored with one child—William Nisbett. Mr. Patterson is successfully engaged in manufacturing wagons and carriages, under the style of the "Slaughterville Manufacturing Company," and is the inventor of Patterson & Jones' platform buggy spring. He is a member of K. of H., a Methodist, and in politics a Prohibitionist.

THOMAS B. PAYNE was born in Maury County, Tenn., February 2, 1843, a son of Cornelius and Lousia A. (Walton) Payne, natives of Virginia. Cornelius Payne was married in his native State, where he was engaged in merchandising for many years. About 1817 or 1818 he moved to Tennessee, where he engaged in teaching in connection with farming until 1850, when he moved to Logan County, Ky., where he farmed about five years. In 1855 he removed to Hopkins County, and bought a farm near Nebo, where he remained about fourteen years. He then sold out and bought another farm in the same neighborhood upon he which resided until his death in September, 1876, in his eighty-eighth year. He and wife were life long members of the Primitive Baptist Church, of which he was a regularly ordained minister for more than half of a century. The paternal grandfather of our subject was a veteran of the war of 1812. Thomas B. was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority, and then farmed the home place on shares until 1869, when he engaged in general merchandising at Providence, Webster Co., Ky., where he has since been in business. He carries a stock of about $8,000, and is doing a flourishing business, with yearly sales of about $20,000. When he opened his store at Providence he also engaged in the hotel and livery business there; still carries on the latter business but gave up the hotel in June, 1884. In 1877 he erected a large tobacco stemmery at Providence, and has since been extensively engaged in the tobacco trade in connection with his other business. He is also engaged in farming to some extent. He was married, February 24, 1864, to Miss Isabella E. Herrin, a native of Webster County, Ky., and daughter of Jackson Herrin, one of the earliest pioneers of what is now Webster County. Seven children have been born to them, four of whom—two sons and two daughters—are living. Mr. Payne is a Democrat.

PROF. HENRY PETRY was born in Brown County, Ohio, June 28, 1859, and is a son of John and Elizabeth (Roser) Petry, the former born in Buffalo, N. Y., of German parentage, and the latter born in Bavaria. When a small boy John Petry removed with his parents to Newark, Ohio, where his father, Henry Petry, Sr., engaged in mercantile pursuits. In early life John Petry learned the shoe-maker's trade, which he has since followed with the exception of the last ten years, when he has been engaged in farming. In 1856 he removed to Ripley, Brown Co, Ohio, where he remained until 1882, when he removed to Mason County, Ky., where he now resides. Both he and wife are members of the Lutheran Church. He is a member of the I. O. O. F. Our subject received a good common school education in youth, and graduated with high honors from the scientific and training departments of the National Normal University of Lebanon, Ohio, in August, 1883. He also graduated at the head of his class from the business and commercial department of the same institution in June, 1882. While employed on the old homestead farm, he was the inventor of an improved farm gate, and secured a patent for the same June 10, 1879. It is said to be one of the best farm gates ever invented. In the fall of 1883, he was employed in the Madisonville Normal School and Business College, remaining one year. In August, 1884, he came to Providence, Webster Co., Ky., where he is at present employed in the Home School and Normal Institute. In politics he is a Democrat, and is an earnest advocate of the temperance question.

WILLIAM W. POOLE was born November 9, 1822, in Nelson County, Ky., to John and Jane (Hueston) Poole, natives of Ireland and Pennsylvania. In 1826, they came to Henderson (now Webster) County, Ky., and purchased several hundred acres of land in the locality of what is now known as Poole's Mills. The father, who was a millwright, was born in 1776 and died in 1862, aged eighty-six; the mother was born in 1784 and died in 1878, aged ninety-four. Our subject was reared on his father's farm, and, in 1855, engaged in merchandising at Poole's Mill; this he continued until 1873, since which time he has been engaged in farming. He was appointed postmaster in 1855, and this office he has since held. He owns 200 acres, which include part of the present site of Poole's Mill, and which was part of the farm formerly owned by his father. Mr. Poole was married, in 1860, to Miss Ann E. Stephens of Henderson County. This union is blessed with seven children—three sons and four daughters. Their eldest son, John V., is now attending college at Valparaiso, Ind., with a view of perfecting himself in the study of languages, although he makes mathematics his favorite study.

J. A. POWELL, Webster County, was born in Henderson County, Ky., May 8, 1835, son of Thomas W. and Elizabeth (Dorsey) Powell. He is the eldest in a family of twelve children, and is of English descent. His paternal grandfather, Harrison Powell, emigrated from the Carolinas to Kentucky in a very early day. The Powells have been long and extensively known in Kentucky, and have held the first official positions in the State. When J. A. attained his majority he engaged in the mercantile business in Corydon, Henderson Co., Ky., remained there four years, and then for eleven years followed farming. In 1879 he came to Sebree, and engaged in merchandising and dealing in tobacco. In the store he does a business of $30,000, annually, and in 1884 he did a tobacco business of $41,000, handling 565,000 pounds of tobacco. In this article he has traded extensively for fourteen years. In 1879 Mr. Powell erected his present residence, one of the finest in Sebree. He was married, in 1858, to Miss Paulina D. Williams, of Jefferson County, Ky. They have three children, viz.: Florence, Samuel F. and Henry. Mr. Powell has been successful and is worth about $50,000. He is a Democrat; he and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

J. D. PRICE was born March 29, 1836, in Hopkins, now Webster County, Ky., and is a son of Thomas and Delaney (Nichols) Price. The father was born in 1790, in North Carolina, and about 1812 came to Kentucky, and located in Hopkins County. He died October 24, 1872. The mother was born in North Carolina in 1800, and died July 27, 1872. J. D. was reared on his father's farm and at the age of twenty-two assumed control of the farm, and afterward removed to his present farm, then consisting of 290 acres. He now owns about 440 acres, largely in cultivation, which he acquired solely by his own exertions. He was married, January 7, 1858, to Mary A. Wallace, of Union County. They are life long and devoted members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, of which Mr. Price is a deacon.

THOMAS E. PRICE was born October 17, 1838, in Hopkins, now Webster County, Ky., and is a son of Thomas and Delaney (Nichols) Price. He was reared on his father's farm; at the age of twenty-one years engaged in farming on his own account, which occupation he has since continued. He now owns 543 acres of land, of which 150 acres are improved. He was married, in 1860, to Sarah J. Wallace, of Webster County, and to them have been born eleven children, seven of whom are living—three sons and four daughters. Mr. and Mrs. Price are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

DR. B. H. PRICE was born September 14, 1853, in what is now Webster County, Ky. He is a son of James and Martha (Sprague) Price both of whom were natives of Union County, Ky. The father died in 1855, aged thirty-eight years, and the mother in 1854, aged thirty-six years. Dr. Price was reared by his grandfather, Erven Price, until he was twelve years old, after which he remained with his guardian until the age of eighteen. He then went to Texas, where he remained some eighteen months. On his return he entered a school at Clay, taught by Prof. W. P. Hanner, where he remained two years, acquiring a good literary education. He then commenced the study of medicine, under the preceptorship of Dr. Jeff Holman, of that place; after one year he attended the Louisville Medical College during the session of 1879-80. He then returned to Clay, where he has since been actively and successfully engaged in the practice of his profession. He was married, October 7, 1881, to Miss Grace Watson, a native of Webster County, Ky. One bright daughter gladdens their home.

CHARLES H. PRIDE, Webster County, was born November 23, 1839, in Logan County, Ky. He is a son of James S. and Eliza (Crawford) Pride. The father was born in Tennessee, but now resides in Union County. The mother was born in North Carolina. She departed this life in May, 1849. Our subject was reared on his father's farm, where he remained until the age of thirteen, at which time he commenced to learn the blacksmiths' trade, which he has since followed with good success. He is regarded by good judges and experts, as the best horse-shoer in the State. In 1864 he removed to Clay, where he has since resided, and where he owns a comfortable residence. He is an earnest advocate of the temperance cause, and is one of the enterprising mechanics and respected citizens of the town and county. He was married, in 1861, to Mary J. Potts, of Union County, Ky.; she died in March, 1878, leaving seven children—four sons and three daughters: Sarah I. Pride, J. C. Pride, H. L. Pride, Thomas M. Pride, C. W. Pride, A. L. Pride and E. B. Pride. He was next married, in October, 1878, to Miss Susan A. Rigsby, also a native of Union County, Ky. Two sons have blessed their union: Miles Ira Pride and Cleo Ray Pride. Mr. and Mrs. Pride are members of the United Baptist Church.

REV. BENJAMIN B. PULLAM, Webster County, was born October 9, 1828, in Union County, Ky., to Thomas and Prissie (Skinner) Pullam, natives of South Carolina and Kentucky, respectively. Prisla was born April 27, 1800. At the age of fourteen Thomas Pullam came with his parents to Union County, Ky., where his father, John Pullam, bought wild land, and improved a farm. He had volunteered his services durring the war of 1812, but died in camp of measles before getting into active service. After attaining his majority, young Thomas engaged in agricultural pursuits on his own account. He bought wild land and improved some three or four different farms in Union, Crittenden and Webster Counties. He was born in 1795 and died July 20, 1878 in his eighty-third year. Benjamin B. Pullam was employed on the home farm until he was twenty years old, after which he was employed at various pursuits several years. In 1861 he bought wild land near Providence, where he has since improved the farm upon which he now resides. He was first married, in November, 1849, to Miss Mary Patten, a native of Union County, Ky.; she died March 25, 1851. Mr. Pullam was next married, March 2, 1856, to Miss Nancy A. Dorris, a native of Hopkins County, Ky. They have no children. Mr. Pullam and wife are members of the Primitive Baptist Church, in which he has been a regularly ordained minister for a number of years. In politics he is a Democrat.

SQUIRE JAMES HENRY QUALLS was born April 2, 1836, in Granville County, N. C., and in 1858, came to Webster County, Ky., where he has since resided. His father, James Qualls, a native of North Carolina, was born in 1810, and died at this place in 1872. He was the son of William Qualls, who was born near Richmond, Va.; he died about 1865, at the age of eighty years. Subject's mother, Judith, daughter of Elias Ross of Granville County, N. C., was born in 1810, and is still living. To her and husband were born Richard C., Allen F., and subject. Our subject was married, February 14, 1861, to Miss Louisa M., daughter of William and Frances (Fowler) Qualls, of Hopkins County (born in 1845), and from this union sprang, Richard W., Judith F., Thomas F., Augustus H., George W., Mary M., James W. and Nellie Pearl. In 1878, Mr. Qualls was elected magistrate, which position he still retains. He is a farmer, owning about 260 acres of fair land in a good state of cultivation. From the bottom round of the financial ladder, Squire Qualls has worked his way up to a comfortable competency. In politics he is a Democrat.

JOHN WESLEY REYNOLDS was born November 23, 1835, in Hopkins County, Ky., where he grew to manhood, and in 1860, removed to Slaughterville, his present place of residence. His father, Sebron Reynolds, a native of Culpeper County, Va., was born in 1792, and at the age of twelve years, removed with his parents from Oglethorpe, Ga., to Hopkins County, Ky., where he died in 1858. He was born blind, and unassisted for twenty years, superintended a horse mill. His father, Thomas, the son of Richard, a Virginian, married Sarah Williams, of Hopkins County, and their offspring are subject, Martha J. (Stiman), Sarah L. (Crowley), and Nancy L. John W. Reynolds was united in marriage, December 25, 1863, to Miss Mary E. (born in 1846), daughter of Henry A. and Mary E. (Reynolds) Prahter, of Hopkins County, and to them have been born Warren L., Henry C., John W., Jr., Hallie E. (deceased), Timothy F., Mary A., Sarah J., Thomas B. and Fredonia D. Since 1860 Mr. Reynolds has been successfully engaged in general merchandising, to which he has added drugs. He has, all his life, been an invalid, but has given close attention to his business, from which, in twenty years, he has lost but few days. He is a Methodist and a Democrat.

J. L. RICE, Webster County, was born July 1, 1835, in Hopkins County, Ky., now Webster County. He is a son of James R. and E. V. (Nichols) Rice, natives of Bertie County, N. C. About 1820 the family immigrated to Kentucky, and located four miles from Dixon, there the father died September 7, 1852. Our subject was reared on his father's farm, and at the age of fifteen assumed general charge of the place, and continued its management until he was nineteen years old. He then bought a farm of 115 acres, which he afterward increased to 250 acres, and continued farming until 1867, when he sold this farm and moved to Providence, where he was largely engaged in the tobacco business about four years. In 1873 he came to Dixon, and with the exception of four years, has since been engaged in the tobacco business at that point, handling now about 250,000 pounds a year. He was married, in 1853, to Martha Givens, of Hopkins County, who died in May, 1860, leaving three daughters. His second marriage was, in 1867, to Ann B. Gist, of Hopkins County. WILLIAM G. RORK, Webster County, was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, January 23, 1859, and is a son of Wesley and Rachel (Bacon) Rork. He is the youngest of a family of ten children, and is of Scotch-Irish descent. The Rork family came from the "Emerald Isle" to America at an early date. The father of our subject was born where the Queen City of Ohio now stands, and afterward owned the land on which the principal part of the city has been erected. When William G. was nine years of age, he removed with his parents from Cincinnati to Sonora, Hardin Co., Ky., where he remained until he was nineteen years of age. In 1878 he went to Montgomery, Ala., and engaged in railroading in the South five years. He then went to Louisville, Ky., and continued the same business there until 1883, when he came to Sebree, Webster County, and is now employed by the Louisville & Nashville Railway Company at this place. In the hotel business Mr. Rork has proved himself competent, as his success testifies. On coming to Sebree, he took charge of what is known as the Commercial House, which he conducted until April, 1884, when he became the proprietor of the Sebree Springs Hotel, and now has both houses under his management. During the summer of 1884 he had an average of 100 guests daily. Mr. Rork was married, October 27, 1881, to Miss Lula Brown, of Green County, Ky., daughter of C. T. and Hattie Brown. Mr. Rork is a Democrat, and he and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

tucky. The father died in 1864, aged sixty-four years. The mother died in 1880, aged seventy-four. George H. was reared on his father's farm and received a good common school education. In 1856, he attended the Bethany Academy in Caldwell County, and later he attended the old Cumberland College at Princeton one session, after which he returned to the farm and taught school in the fall and winter for about six years. During that time he had provided himself with law-books, and was engaged in the study of the law. In 1865, he was elected justice of the peace, and re-elected to that office, which he held until 1874, when he moved to Dixon, where he has since been engaged in the practice of the law. He represented Webster County in the legislature in the sessions of 1877–78. Mr. Towry is an advocate of the Greenback ticket, having become identified with that party in 1877. He was a delegate in May, 1884, to the national convention at Indianapolis. Much of his time he is devoting to delivering speeches, and otherwise advancing the interest of the Greenback party. He was married, in 1864, to Miss Jane O'Neal, of Crittenden County, who died in 1871. His second marriage was in September, 1872, to Miss Lue J. Deal, of Union County. This lady is a member of the Christian Church. Mr. Towry is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

ALLEN WATSON was born in Davidson County, Tenn., April 3, 1832, to William and Ara (Fipps) Watson, natives of South Carolina and Philadelphia, Penn. They were of Irish and German descent, respectively. William Watson, at the age of sixteen, in about 1796, removed with his widowed mother to Tennessee, where he was afterward married, and engaged in agricultural pursuits until the fall of 1848, when he came to what is now Webster County, Ky., but was then a part of Union County, here he bought a farm upon which he resided until his death, March 10, 1872, in his ninety-second year. Allen Watson was employed on his father's farm until of age, after which he and his brother farmed the home place on shares for a time. He then bought a farm in what is now Webster County, Ky., upon which he resided until the fall of 1879, when he sold out and bought his present farm. He was married, in September, 1854, to Miss Fannie Harmon, a native of Hopkins County, Ky. Eight sons and four daughters have blessed their union, all yet living. Both Mr. Watson and wife are members of the United Baptist Church. In politics he is a Democrat.

B. WATSON was born July 26, 1840, in Spencer County, Ky. He is a son of John and Elizabeth (Lindle) Watson, both natives of Kentucky. In 1852 they removed to Union County, and engaged in agricultural pursuits; they now reside in Clay. Our subject, at the age of twenty, commenced to work at the carpenter's trade, and at the breaking out of the war he entered the Federal army, in which he remained three years. On his return from the army, he engaged in the tobacco business, and in this he has since been identified. He employs about twenty-five hands, and handles annually about 250,000 pounds. Mr. Watson was married, January 14, 1863, to Elizabeth Davis, of Webster County. One son gladdens their home. Both are consistent members of the United Baptist Church.

DR. HARMAN H. WHITSON was born June 24, 1834, in Wilson County, Tenn., where he lived until 1850, when he removed with his parents to Logan County, Ky.; remaining three years, he returned to Tennessee, and in 1857 came to Kentucky again. His father, John Whitson, a native of Coffee County, Tenn., removed with his parents to Wilson County in infancy, was a gallant soldier in the war of 1812, and died in 1869, at the age of seventy-five years. He was the son of Abram Whitson, a soldier of the Revolution. John Whitson married Susan, daughter of Isaac Green, of Tennessee. She died in 1850. Their offspring are James, Elijah, Elisha, Franklin and our subject. H. H. Whitson was married, August 19, 1857, to Miss Annie E., daughter of Robert and Ann (Dearing) Moore, of Muhlenburgh County, Ky. (born August 19, 1837), and to them have been born David W., Jennie (deceased) and Robert H. In 1854, Mr. Whitson commenced the study of medicine with Dr. Matthew Cowan, of Cole's Ferry, Tenn., and in 1857, graduated at Nashville, after which he located at Pond River Mills, Ky., where he soon established a good and lucrative practice, which he retained until 1882, when he located at Slaughterville, his present place of residence, where he is meeting with encouraging success. Dr. Whitson is a member of the Masonic fraternity, also of the K. of H. In religion he is a Baptist, and in politics a Democrat.

D. C. WHITTINGHILL was born in Hancock County, Ky., March 18, 1854, a son of David and Margaret (Phillips) Whittinghill, natives of Ohio County, Ky., and of German and Irish descent. David Whittinghill was married in his native county, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits, in connection with the ministry, until 1864, when he removed to Hopkins County and bought a farm four miles west of Madisonville, upon which he still resides. He has been a regularly ordained minister of the Missionary Baptist Church for the past twenty-five or thirty years. Mrs. Margaret Whittinghill departed this life April 7, 1881, in her fifty-ninth year. She was from her girlhood a devoted member of the Missionary Baptist Church. D. C. Whittinghill (our subject) received a good common school and academic education in his youth, and also attended the Bethel College of Russellville, Ky., for a time. He was employed on his father's farm until he attained his majority. He then taught a five-months' term of school, after which he engaged in farming on his own account for three years. He was then engaged in the lumber business at Madisonville for two years, and in the grain trade for one year at the same place. In May, 1883, he came to Providence, where he has since been employed as agent for the Louisville & Nashville Railway, and in the grain trade, at which he is doing a thriving business. Mr. Whittinghill is yet unmarried. He is a member of the Missionary Baptist Church, and in politics a Democrat.

SYLVESTER H. WILLIAMS was born in Henderson County, Ky., April 30, 1819, to Burle and Zillotis (Sugg) Williams, the former of whom was a native of North Carolina, and the latter of Virginia, and of English descent. Burle Williams, when a young man, came with his parents to Henderson County, Ky. Here his father, James Williams, who was among the earliest settlers of the county, bought wild land and improved a farm. In that county Burle was afterward married, and there he bought a farm, upon which he resided until 1821, when he sold out and removed to Graves County. Here he bought another farm, upon which he resided until his death, in 1829, in about his fiftieth year. Sylvester H. Williams received a fair common school education in youth. After his father's death he made his home with his uncle, Robert Robertson, who resided near Providence, until he was sixteen years old. He then went to Providence, where he was employed for one year at the cabinet business, after which he learned the saddler's trade, following the same for about four years. After this he was engaged in the grocery trade at Providence for some six or seven years. In 1850 he bought 190 acres of wild land three miles northeast from Providence, where he has since improved the farm, upon which he now resides, and to which he has added from time to time, now owning well-improved farms amounting to about 1,100 or 1,200 acres. Here he is extensively and successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits and the live stock trade. He was first married, in 1847, to Miss Prudy Kennadey, a native of what is now Webster County, Ky. To this union were born three children, only one of whom—Henry B.—is now living. Mrs. Prudy departed this life in January, 1863. Mr. Williams was next married, in September, 1863, to Miss Sallie J. Bassett, a native of Hopkins County, Ky. Three sons and three daughters have blessed their union. Both Mr. Williams and wife are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. He is also a member of the Masonic fraternity, and in politics is a Democrat.

JAMES C. WILLIAMS was born May 20, 1824, in what is now Webster County, and is a son of Stephen and Lucy (Curry) Williams. The father was born in Christian County, was a saddler, and died in 1832, aged forty-five. The mother was a native of Kentucky, born in Union County, and died in 1853. Our subject, at the age of twenty-five, settled on his present farm, consisting of 400 acres, 200 of which were in the old homestead. Mr. Williams now owns one of the best improved farms in this locality, all of which he has secured by his own management, and attention to business. He was married, in 1854, to Nancy K. Kuykendall, of Union County; this union has been blessed with three children, one son and one daughter living. Mr. and Mrs. Williamson are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

J. A. WILLINGHAM was born in Fulton County, Ky., in 1858, son of P. M. and S. D. (Milner) Willingham, and is of Irish-English lineage. The paternal grandfather of Mr. Willingham was the Hon. A. H. Willingham, who was many times elected to the Kentucky senate; died July 28, 1882. The parents of our subject are natives of southern Kentucky. J. A. was educated in the Louisville schools, and in 1875 began the general merchandise business at Curdsville, Ky., where he remained only a short time. He then came to Sebree and continued the same business. The firm is known as P. M. Willingham & Son, and has a capital of about $13,000 invested in the business in Sebree. They make a specialty of dress goods and ladies' fine shoes. Mr. Willingham is a Democrat, and is one of the leading young business men of Webster County.

BUSH D. WINSTEAD, of Webster County (deceased), was born in Hopkins County, Ky., in July, 1837. Soon after the formation of Webster County, he was elected circuit clerk, which position he held one term, he being the first circuit clerk of the county. He also held the office of deputy sheriff. He was engaged in merchandising in Clay, and at the time of his death he was merchandising at Vanderburgh. He died January 17, 1867. He was married, January 20, 1858, to Judith A. Ruby, who was born in Hopkins, now Webster County, September 3, 1839. This union has been blessed with six children—five sons and one daughter. Mrs. Winstead owns a farm of 106 acres where she resides, two miles and a half north of Dixon. Her son, Finis, superintends the management of the farm. Mrs. Winstead is a member of the Christian Church.

HENRY H. WISE is a native of Jefferson County, Ky., was born January 26, 1832, and is a son of Henry and Rachael (Russell) Wise. He is the eighth of a family of fifteen children, and is of Scotch-German descent. His father was a native of the territory that now composes Indiana, and was born in 1800. His mother was a Kentuckian, born in 1801. They came to what is now Webster County in 1853, and here his mother died in 1855, and his father in 1869. The paternal grandfather of subject was a native of Germany, came to this county in very early times and took an active part in the Revolutionary war. When H. H. had gained his majority he came to Webster County and made settlement near where he now resides, and in 1861 removed to his present place. He owns 330 acres of well-improved land, and raises stock, grain and tobacco. Mr. Wise was married, December 21, 1857, to Miss Abigail Orsburn, a native of Henderson County, Ky. To them have been born eight children: Samantha A., Delia A., Arrend J., Henry B., Sarah C., Mattie F., Lillie M. and Daisy D. Mrs. Wise died February 10, 1883; she was a consistent member of the General Baptist Church for many years, having joined that denomination in 1858. Mr. Wise has been a member of the same church since 1855. He is a Democrat.

OLIVER C. WOMACK was born November 12, 1812, in Rutherford County, N. C. In November, 1815, the family came to Union County, Ky., where the father died about 1827. Oliver C. then commenced to learn the carpenter trade, which he followed about four years. He then took up the blacksmith trade and followed that about eighteen years, since that time he has been engaged in farming. In 1861, he came to his present farm, which consists of 164 acres with about ninety-six acres in cultivation. He was married, August 9, 1832, to Easter Mooney, of Hopkins County; she died in 1844, leaving five children—two sons and three daughters. His second marriage was in 1846, to Mrs. Wagner of Hopkins County, who died in 1852, leaving two children—one son and one daughter. His third marriage was in 1860 to Elizabeth J. Wilson, of Webster County. This union has been blessed with six children, of whom four are living, two sons and two daughters. Mr. Womack is a life-long member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

JOHN J. WOODSON was born in Hopkins County, Ky., June 3, 1839, a son of Samuel S. and Mary G. (Cox) Woodson, natives of Virginia and of English descent. Samuel S. Woodson, at the age of fifteen, in 1825, removed with his parents to what is now Hopkins County, but was then a part of Henderson County. There his father, Samuel Woodson, bought wild land near Madisonville, and improved a farm, upon which he resided until his death. After attaining his majority Samuel S. Woodson bought a partially improved farm in the western part of Hopkins County, upon which he resided for some eighteen years. He then came to Webster County and bought a farm near Providence, upon which he resided until his death in October, 1864, in his fifty-fourth year. He was also quite extensively engaged in the tobacco business. He was a member of the S. of T. and he and wife of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. John J. Woodson, was employed on the home farm until he was eighteen years old, after which he attended school for about two years. He then engaged in the general mercantile and tobacco business at Providence for some four years, and then in the stave business for two years. He next followed the carpenter's and painter's trades for some seven or eight years. In the fall of 1879 he again engaged in the general mercantile trade at Providence, where he has since been doing a flourishing business. He was for several years a magistrate. He was married, in February, 1865, to Miss Georgie A. Dudley, a native of Caldwell County, Ky.; four sons and three daughters have blessed their union. Mr. Woodson and wife are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. He is also an earnest advocate of the temperance cause, and in politics is a Democrat.

JOHN D. WYNNS was born in Hopkins County, Ky., November 18, 1848, a son of John D. and Sarah A. (Bruce) Wynns, natives of North Carolina and of English descent. John D. Wynns, subject's father, when a boy, came with his parents to Hopkins County, Ky., where he was married and where he was mainly engaged in farming all his life. For several years he owned a steam saw and grist-mill, which he operated in connection with farming. He was for several years a justice of the peace. He died in October, 1857, aged thirty-six years. He and wife were members of the United Baptist Church. Our subject, after his father's death, remained on the home farm with his mother until he was fifteen years old. He then farmed on shares for about five years, and in the early part of 1870, bought a farm of his own between Providence and Nebo, Hopkins County. In the fall of 1872 he went to Kansas, where he located a claim, but in 1873 returned to Kentucky and engaged in the grocery and hardware business at Providence about a year. He then engaged in the drug business at that place and has since carried on that business. For the past five years his brother, George W., has been a partner in that business, which is conducted under the firm name of J. D. Wynns & Bro. They also carry a line of hardware and groceries, their entire stock amounting to about $6,000; their annual sales about $15,000. Mr. Wynns was married, October 6, 1875, to Miss Eliza G. Givens, a native of Hopkins County, Ky. Four daughters have been born to them—all living. Mr. and Mrs. Wynns are members of the United Baptist Church; he is also a member of the Masonic fraternity, in which he has held several official positions, and has advanced to the Royal Arch degree. He is a Democrat.
